A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION

Upon the BOOKS of Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, Job and Psalms.

WHEREIN

The TEXT is Explained, some Controversies are Discussed, sundry Cases of Conscience are Cleared, and many Remarkable Matters hinted, that had by former Interpreters been pretermitted.

In all which divers other Texts of Scripture, which occasionally occurre, are fully Opened, and the whole so intermixed with pertinent Histories, as will yield both pleasure and profit to the Judicious Reader.

By JOHN TRAPP, M. A. once of Christ-church in Oxford, now Pastour of Weston upon Avon in Gloucestershire.

LUKE 24. 44, 45.

And he said unto them, These are the words which I spake unto you while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the Law of Moses, and in the Prophets, and in the Psalmes concerning me.

Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the Scripture.

LONDON,

Printed by T. R. and E. M. for Thomas Newberry at the three Golden Lions in Cornhil, near the Royal Exchange, and Joseph Barber at the Holy Lamb in the New Rents in St. Pauls Church-yard. 1657.

To the Worſhipful his much Honoured Friend,

EDWARD LEIGH

of RUSHIL-HALL in Stafford-ſhire,

Eſquire,

Maſter of ARTS, of both

UNIVERSITIES

HONOURED SIR,

BEſides the much help, I confeſſe, (and not now the firſt time *)to have had from your learned Lucubrations already extant, thoſe many real Courteſies lately done me (a meer ſtranger) in mine eldeſt ſonne, (whom you have freely beneficed, and fairely encouraged,) call hard upon me for a grateful acknowledgement. And foraſmuch (as like another Nicias,) you are known to be φιλεξελ. Yea, (as that renowned Richard de Bury) Extatico quodam librorum amore potenter abreptus, ſo that you may well ſay, as that Emperour once did of himſelf, Quidam equis, hi avibus, nonnulli feris delectantur, Ego vero inde uſque à pueritiá librorum cupiditate arſi. I cannot bethink me of a fitter Patron then your worthy ſelf, nor yet of a better Preſent then this of a Book; beſeeching you to own it and honour it with your kinde acceptance, as a token of my true reſpects, and a teſtimony of my cordial thankfulneſſe. I need not here, for an Apologie, tell you Sir, what Seneca ſaith, There's no Book ſo bad, but ſome Commodity may be gotten by it. Let it be (for me) a praiſe proper to Hippocrates, that in his Aphoriſmes, there is οὐδὲν μικρὸν οὐδὲν καταφρονητέον. Let Scaliger ſay of Virgil, (and Lipſius as much of Tacitus) E cujus ore nil teniere excidit. Ariſtotles Rhetorick, ſaith one, is ſufficiene

*See my Notes on the New Teſt paſſim.

Stobæus Serm. 117.

Hic fuit epiſc. Dunelmenſis. An. Dom 1333.

Julian ep. ad Ecdicium.

cient to make both a Scholar and an honeſt man. His Politicks Tully calleth Aureum flumen orationis, for the purity of the ſtile, and precious neſſe of the matter. Averroes admireth and extolleth him above meaſure, in whatſoever he hath written. And yet others, no leſſe judicious, deem that his deep Theoremes of Philoſophy, as they make men learned, ſo ſeldom better, and oftentimes worſe, meer Atheiſts. Sure it is, that compared with the holy Scriptures, they are but ſtraminea candela, a ruſh-candle, that yieldeth but a ſmall light, and is quickly out. To the Law therefore, and to the Teſtimony, ſaith that Evangelical Prophet, (that is, to the Old Teſtament and the New, as ſome ſenſe it) If any ſpeak not according to this Word, it is becauſe there is no light in them: As if any, either by ſpeaking or writing bring the leaſt light to theſe ſacred Oracles, (Quæ & latent & lucent) They are not to be defrauded of their due commendation. This you have done (worthy Sir) in all your Theological Treatiſes (which are auro contra non cari) Your elaborate Annotations on the New Teſtament eſpecially. On the Old Teſtament alſo we hope to ſee you ſhortly; and are ſo far from cenſuring you for thruſting your Sickle into our Harveſt, that we all highly accept and applaud your learned Labours; heartily wiſhing you length of days, and help from Heaven, for the compleating of ſo good a work. Deus præcepit nobis, ut diſcamus non argutias Platonis, nec verſutias Ariſtotelis, ſed doctrinam Filii Dei. Hereunto therefore we do humbly crave and call for your utmoſt furtherance, which ſhall be nothing at all to your hinderance at the laſt: for beſide the reward of eternal life, aſſured you by Chriſt our Ἐργοδιώκτης, Scientiarum ea vis eſt ac natura, ut quo plus doceas, ac alteri de tuo largiare, eò ditior ac doctior fias; there is no loſſe in laying out your talent. Your much deſired Commentaries, now in the Preſſe, (as is reported) and which you are yet further preparing for the publike, will be moſt welcom to the world; and I wiſh they may take as well as did Aretius his Examen Theologicum, printed twelve times in three yeares. As for theſe, or any other of mine, let them veil, and ſtrike ſale to yours, whereever they meet them, and let me be ever reckoned, among many others,

Bern.

Bodin. Theat. Nat. p. 9.

SIR,

An Admirer of your indefatigable induſtry and rare abilities,

Welford, Sept. 8. 1656.

JOHN TRAPP.

Viro Ornatiſſimo, Affini amantiſſimo doctiſſimóque, D. JOHANNI TRAPPO.

Nimirum ſolvenda fides. At quomodo carmen
Panxerit exaret cui vena, & Muſula muta eſt?
Qui Conſorte tori (quâ non præſtantior unquam, Et quâ ter fueram quatuor per luſtra beatus.)
Ereptâ, Niobes poſſim nunc eſſe maritus,
Expectes ut læta canam? Lapideſcere cœpi
(Proh dolor!) infelix. At feliciſſimus idem, Quòd ſic Uxori Monumentum fio ſepultæ.
Ut præſtem promiſſa tamen (quæ debita dicunt, Et ſolvi par eſſe,) ciens in carmina Muſam, Exigis. An Lapis emittat, chariſſime, vocem?
Imò, ais, hoc uſu venit ut Monumenta loquantur.
Viciſti, experiar. Doleo tantum eſſe dolorem
Ut calamum impediat cupientem promere laudes
Et meritis ſe implere tuis. Tu voce diſertâ Me propè confectum reficis, prohibéſque ſepulcro.
Tu mea damna doles, & tanquam propria defles.
Méque, mihi ereptæ, quæ te ſic jure colebat,
Dum recolis raros mores, ſolaris abundè.
Sic facis & Scriptis. O quæ mihi Pharmaca præbent
Quæ priùs edideras, queis Sacra Oracula pandis, Et quibus ut grandi Theſauro Eccleſia gaudet!
Dicere ſunt ea viſa, Hinc lucem & Pocula Sacra
Hinc pete qui impenſè luges, mentèmque ſerena,
Ecce profundemus ſolatia ſumma jacenti.
Hæc quaque quæ celeri video jam ſubdita Prelo,
Ut mihi prævideo pariter Medicamina, cunctis
Sic & Symmyſtis gratiſſima credo futura.
Altera jam Pentas facilem ſe præbet, & offert
Quas modò condiderat dias ditiſſima gazas.

Geſtat & Ornamenta quibus non anteà fulſit.
Cultior incedis ſolito divine Sacerdos,
Tuque acris Princeps, & tu fidiſſime cuſtos
Virginis egregiæ, quæ utroque miſella Parente
Orba, in te Patruele utrumque (ô fauſtà!) parentem Repperit. Oſtentant veſtri nunc quanta libelli!
Jobe, tua ſumpſit ſibi jam nova cornua Moſes,
Quòd tibi ſors præſens melior ſit ſorte priori.
Mulcet inauditâ mentes dulcedine Pſaltes.
Jam nil triſte ſonat Teſtudo Regia: at ode Quæ modò lugubris jacuit nunc lætatriumphat,
Arte tuâ hæc facilè præſtas, clariſſime Trappe.
Cui, vite eximiâ ſobole octuplicíque beato,
Neſtoreos exopto annos, illámque ſalutem
Quæ mihi dum vixi fuit, at cum Conjuge (vitæ Quæ mihi vita fuit) dulci cum Conjuge fugit.

Barfordiæ Aug. 28. 1656.

Tuus, Siquis Sim.

THO. DUGARDUS.

AN

AN

ALPHABETICAL Table

Of all the Principal things contained in this whole

WORK.

A.

Absolution Ministerial. page 293
Accepting persons. b 123
Admonition: the fruit of it. 721
Adultery: costly a. 120. punished. 265,266.
Affliction: God afflicteth in measure a. 89. and for good. b.9. crosses come thick, b.11. prepare for them, b.12. See God in them, b. 16. praise him for them ib accept of them, b.24. affliction shewes a man, b. 39, 40 it comes not by chance, b.50. maketh a man blessed, b.56. is a mercy to be tried b. 74 the best may suffer deeply, b.90 and are then subject to be slighted, b. 11. crosse providences for our good, b. 204. how to finde out the cause of crosses, 290. the benefit of affliction, 313. chuse it rather then sin, 316. good men censured for their afflictions, 694. afflictions teach us, 882. edge of prayers, 902.
Affection carrieth men. a. 166
Allegories frothy. 351
Ambition: punished, a. 149. ruined. a. 156. is all for it self. ib.
Amen: how to be used 695
Angels: how they are Gods servants, b.6. servants, b.45. their office, b.6. their comparative impurity, b.45. guard of Angels. 804
Anger: an ill Counsellour. a. 164. 169 unreasonable, a. 109. moderate it, ib. furious described, 569. 'tis a madnesse, b. 162. a shame, 278. fury is fiery, 775
Antipathies in nature. 342
Antiquitie of what Authority. b.77,78
Apparel: costly. a. 178. gorgeous. a.156. b.109.
Atheisme. 604. Atheists bald conceits of God, a 99 Pliny an Atheist. ib. And Aristotle. 913
Augustines wish. a.148

B

Backbiting. p.605
Beauty: compleat, what. a.114,116
Blasphemy; of Papists a.149. of Hacket. b. 23. abhorred, b.6. punished, b 84. Blasphemy of Caligula. 592
Body: of man, a fabrick, b.19. a house of clay, b.4. of wonderful formation. 914
Books: lost. a.193
Brotherly unity rare, b.4. happy. ib

C.

Calamities; good men may taste of common calamities. a.118
Calvins censure of Luther. 299. how he was confuted by Farrel. 305
Censurers shall be censured. b.7
Chaldee Paraphrast on Job, who and of what credit b.2
Chambones Conversion. 293.29
Charitie thinketh the best. b.14
Childe-birth a wonder. 335 76
Children: provides for them, b.3. good and bad children, 899 900. good are a great blessing, b.92 and b.59. Gods grace in them. 58
Chiromancy. 32
Christ: our Surety, b.157. he reigneth and governeth, a.155. his humanity exalted, b. 825. his Kingdome and Priesthood, 853. his Kingdome everlasting, 922. he is a Suretie of a better Testament, 888. his Sacrifice and Intercession, 36 kisse him, 568 he was deserved for a time, 62 he is our pattern. 651. his outward and inward beauty, 702.703. his Deity, 704. fulnesse sweetnesse, ib. the dream of his earthly Kingdom. 7
Chronicles: use of them. a.125.1
Clouds: wonder of them. 3

Comfort: all is from God, b.72. receive it, b.141. divine comforts, b.151. worth of an able Comforter. 292,252
Communion of Saints. 337
Confession of sin; confesse with aggravation. a.33. b.294. mince not, 274. how to confesse, 661 deal ingenuously, 746. confession hath pardon. a.81
Conference profitable, b.39. forcible. b.67
Conflict of flesh and Spirit. b.28
Conscience: terrours of it, b.6. b.144.145. confidence of a good conscience. b.119
Confidence; carnal miscarrieth, a.181. See Trust.
Constancy in Mordecai. a.150
Constantines donation. a.175
Contentious desire the last word. 219
Courtiers: pious. a.155
Covetousnesse cruel, a. 137. unsatisfiable, b.182. its meed. 181
Counsellours: evil seduce, a.152. good a happinesse, a.155. how such should be qualified. a.110
Courage. a.171
Cruelty of Turkes, b.75. of Archb. Hatto, a.62. Immane cruelties. a.129,130,132
Crown of life unloosable. b.168
Curiosity dangerous. b.903
Cursers accurst, 851. curse not another, b.273. shall be punished. b.270
Curates and Substitutes. b.11
Cyrus: whence so called. a.1.

D

Dancing: mixt condemned. a.107
Davids Physicks, 833. his love to Gods Law, 885 his health-cup. 871
Day-river in Peru, 739
Death: terrible to wicked; a.166. sudden, b.189. some that died sinning. b.217
Deformity despised, 825. yet preferred. ib.
Deluges. b.113
Depopulatours unblest. b.147
Desertion: what to do in that case, b.127. see 128 876,600,724.
Doeg a Leper. 726
A dog King of Denmark. 303
Dreams dreadful, b.73. Pilates wives dream. 290
Drunken tospots. a.161

E.

Eagle: see 342.343. how she reneweth her youth. 831
Earth: how it is founded. 328
Eclipse dismal. b.89
Education. a.13
Elephant: wonder of him. 348.349,350
Elihu described: 279. He was not Balaam, ib. but a Moderator ib. wronged by Gregory, 280 he was an excellent Orator 312
Eliphaz, who b.37. his vision. 42
Q. Elizabeths clemency. a.2
Envie: poison of it, a.48. 'tis divelish, b.9. mischief of it. b.49
Envy not wickeds prosperity. a.160,677
Esther: mystery of that book, a.104. Esthers dresse and addresse to the King, a.148. her policie commended, 148.149. activenesse for God. a.191
Extortioners described. b.211,212
Eyes: abuse of them, a.116. watch over them, 262 eyes full of cruelty. a.168
Ezra's learning. a.1.24

F.

Face: of Malefactours covered, why, a.166. the contrary is,
Faith, force of it, a.144. long tried, it flaggeth, b.27. yet will hang on still, b.124. faithful men faile. a.99
Family, a good Master of a family, b.826. sincere, 827
Famine, misery of it. b.57
Fasting, force of it, a.30. and 139. and 145. long fasts, ib. fasting praised. 672
Fatal day. a.176
Fear: of God, filial, a.23. and b.2.577. and servile a.22. panick terrour, a.182. be not terrified, 596 causelesse feares. 729
Feasting, holy. a.189,188
Few saved. a.93.94
Firmament. 324
First-fruits. a.93
Formality rejected. 719
Forefathers: sin not wth them. 841
Fowles are foolish. 310
Fountaines: their perennity. 834
Flattery, court-parasites, a.108. flatterers meed, b.121. a flatterer boxt. 285
Fret not against God. 307
Friends: few fast friends, b. 24. many false, b.65, 694. quarrel with faults, not with friends. b.65

G.

God: his dear respect to his, a.8. his great goodnesse, a.86. he disposeth of Kingdomes, a.87. how he is moved, b.18. he useth the wicked as his rods, and why, b.20. his prisoners, b.34. he filleth all places, b.86,87. cannot be overpowered; b.87. is incomprehensible, b.104,325,913. his wisdom unsearchable, b. 105. his strength and wisdom, b.114. he pulleth down and setteth up Kings, 116. infatuateth the wise, ib. his care of his afflicted; b.152. his greatnesse is not believed, 289 he pardoneth abundantly, 295. he gets not by us, 308. his gentlenesse, 326.327,343. his power and will to help his, 357. his patience, 584. he seeth all, 243. his knowledge, 597. his Justice, ib. rich mercy, 643. his Attributes, 802. his truth our greatest comfort, 872. his care of his 894. his Omniscience, 912. there is no standing before his Justice. 919. he loveth to retaliate, a.167, 168. he fulfilleth his Promises, a. 194. he is most profited by our services. b.195
Godlinesse profitable to all. 361,362
Good for evil. 583

Good

Good in bad places. b.2
Goodneſſe communicative. 230
Grace prevents our obedience. a.86
Grave our long home. b.15
Great mens good examples 885. they have great temptations, a.158. their thoughts periſh, 924. ſome great ones hanged, a.168. raiſed from ſmall beginnings, a.169 bear with their imperfections, a.172. they ſhould be good. a.193

H.

Halleluiah the great, which. b.837
Heart: wrought by God. a.147
Hate of Haman and Judas. a.189
Heires may fail. a.151
Hiſtorians falſe. a.172
Honour a great Nothing. a.157
Happineſſe true, wherein. 562
Hagarens who. 797
Hawk deſcribed. 342
Hear and judge. b.112
Heaven, its height, b.104. its happineſſe, 611. contemplate it. 587
Healthing condemned. a.106
Heathen Sages. 280
Hell; its darkneſſe, b.31. where it is. b.104
Hereticks ſtiffe, b.67. they would make God a Partner, b 103 they are confident. 306
Henry 8. a Nullifidian. 241
Honorius, his doting on a bird, 352
Holineſſe, honour of it, b.108. holineſſe and righteouſneſs. 276
Hope, groundleſſe, b.66. deceiveth, b.88. hope of hypocrites. b.109. hope eaſeth croſſes. b.153
Hoſpitality. 274
Horſe, how uſeful. 340,341
Houſes falling ſlew many, b 13. build not overſtately. 232
Humility of Saints. 344
Humble exalted. 925
Humiliation. b. 54. ſubmit to God. b.51
Husbands honour their wives. 112
Husbandry honoured. b 3.
Hypocriſie mercenary, b.7. all the wicked are hypocrites, b.79. hypocrites deſcribed, b.125. they heap up wrath, 314 ſerve themſelves, 359. perſevere not in prayer, and why, 230. delight not in God. 229

I.

Jehovah, how written. 798
Jeruſalem, whence and where, a.3. its praiſe, 710 center of the world. 777
Jeſuites, their craft. b.142
Idolomany. b 866
Jewes: generally hated, a.118. their harſh cenſure of Moſes and Job, b.26. they are infatuated, b.55. their errour, 85. their rage, 273. baniſh't out of the world, 258. they are great Artiſts, b.909. their daily benedictions, 921. their country how ſo fruitful. 926
Image-worſhip, b 44. 868. hate it. 608
Infants no Innocents b,220. fooles. b.34
Injuries, diſſemble them. 685,686
Job, an excellent man, b. 1,7,8. his Hiſtory no fable or parable, b.2. by whom written, ib. his patience, b.12. not ſtupid. 13. his tongue ſpared, and why, 21. his wife a vexation to him, 22. yet might be a good woman, ib. his friends godly men, 25. how they handled the matter, ib. his book in Hexameters, 28. tired out by a dull Doctour, 31. how long he was afflicted, 69. he was a great Philoſopher, 96. his out burſts, 99. 127. he denied not the divine Providence, 112. he doubted not of the Reſurrection, 71. he knew Chriſt a Mediatour, 155. his ſquinzey, 74. his age, 364 his ſatiety of life, ib. he was a pattern of the rule, 208. the worth of his hiſtory, 326. the middle of it. 200
Joy: ſpiritual is our ſtrength, a. 79. temporary joy, b. 82. 177,178. unſound, a.152. mixt, ib. ſpiritual joy, 663.664. difference of that of Saints and ſinners. a.179
Juſtifie God. a.90
Juſtified perſons happineſſe, 660. ſuch are alſo ſanctified. 660
Iron and braſſe whence. 235

K.

Keckermans Swan-like Song. 874
Kings reviled, 300. that ſin puniſh't. ib.
Knowledge is ſweet, 891. notional knowledge unprofitable, b 60. experimental knowledge. 358

L.

Labour overcometh all difficulties. 238
Laughter lawful. 251
Law delivered in Sinai, 84. good, ib. its foure teeth, 337. Jewes great reſpect to it. 720
Liberality. b.6.168,169
Liberty ſweet. a.90
Life, full of changes, a.81. miſerable, b.31. yet a mercy, 31. ſoon loſt, b.46. miſerable, b 50. our time is ſet, b.69. life is but a turne, 900.901. life ſweet, b.19. ſhort and wretched, b.130 precious, a.176. ſome that were very long-lived. 714,715
Light-behaviour to be ſhunned. 251
Light: of what uſe. 329
Lightening, whence and why. 320
Lying: ſhun it, b 102. Artiſts at it. b.120
Lithgow's Inquiſition-tortures. 633
Look upward. b.894
Lottery. a.130
Love God entirely, 615. and the Saints by a ſpeciality 608
Luſts, tough, a.101. coſtly, a.132,140. ſhun fleſhly luſts. 262
Luther reſolute, not infallible. b.157

M.

Magiſtrates muſt fear God, a.74. look to their underofficers, a. 135. leave open acceſſe to themſelves, a.142,143. they have great temptations, a.150 they they are gods, and how, 795. their duty, 248. 249. See great men.

Majesty of true piety. *a.*182
Man; wonder of his formation, b.914. a vile creature, 220.221. miracle of mans make, b.95.96. he is a Microcosme. 588
Man-worship. *a.*81
Manna, what and whence. 786
Masse, whence so called. 725
Massacre; French, whence. *a.*129
Marry with discretion. *a.*92
Maximinus slain sleeping, b.163. and his son. 165
Meek men are docible. 642. & contra. 739
*Merits disclaimed, a.*101. Merit-mongers misery, b 88. abhor that doctrine. 830
Meroz cursed. 851
Meteors to be marked, 318. to be marvelled at, ib. and 323
Mistakes among friends. b.103
*Ministers, blessed for their holy boldnesse, a.*30. *few good, a.*40.41. have oft bad children. 41. their maintenance begrudg'd them, a. 98. must be faithful. *a.*143
*Mocking; cruel, a.*51. punished, a 56. God appeareth for his mocked 696. See b.102.604.
Mony, matter of it precious and vile, 234.235. 'tis most mens study, 241. love of it pernicious. 236,237
Morning, fittest for prayer. 576
Mordecai *who, a.*194. his constancy. *a.*150
Mortification, practise of it, 713. *let it be speedie, a.*185. thorough. 187
Moses praised. b.825
*Murther crieth for vengeance, a.*133. descried by a dog, b.59. self-murther, b.35,36. ready rode to hell. ib.
Musick; Temple-Musick antiquated. 930

N.

National sins. *a.*64
*Nature, Book of Nature, a.*83. b.621.622. Naturalists to be prized. 335
Naughty nature soon seen, 738. Natural man hollow, b.106. wilde, ib.
Nehemiah his book is the last of the Old Testament. *a.*102
Nightingale sings uncessantly. 309

O.

Oath; a private Oath may be taken. b.155
Obey God *rather then man, a.*127. obedience universal, 876. 883. obedience of faith. 360
Obstinacy senseless, b.64. resisteth God, b.146.147 unconsellable. 739
Old age good, b.60. foolish, 113. must prepare to die, b.156. 'tis dangerous. 767
One for first. *a.*1.
Oppression accursed. b 179,181,182
Opportunity to be taken. *a.*163
Ordinances, wicked banished. 874
Original sinne, b.131. filthinesse, 143. a filthy fountain. 723
Orphans provided for. *a.*116
Ostrich described. 339.340

P.

Parents wicked woful legacy to their children, b.191. they are parricides. 339,340,79 *
Passions transport the best. b.871. b.35. chide them down. 697
Patience fained and unfained, b.16. whence, ib. in sickenesse. b.70
Peacock praised. 339
Perfection, Christian perfection. *b.*2
Perjury punished. 606
Pellicans errour. *a.*192
Persian Monarchy and superstition. *a.*2
Persecution, cruel. *a.*135,136
*Persecutours shall perish, a.*169. soon confounded, b.41.567,585
Philip of Spaines diseases. b.21
Piaculars, and Scape-goat. *a.*190
Plague: a good man may die of it. 903
*Poors complaints heard by the great Turk, a.*138. right the poor, 765. penury, b.145. feed and clothe the poor. 926
Pleasures sinful to be shunned. b.189
Pliny an Atheist. *b.*199
Politicians frustrated. *b.*54
Powder-plot discovered. *b.*117
Pope, his polling England, *a.*91. popish piæ fraudes, *b.*122. Pope, a grosse hypocrite. 303
*Prayer, beg grace, a.*92. *easie accesse to God, a.*143 *hands held out in prayer, b.*106, *prescribe not to God, b.*126. *fall not from affections of prayer, b.*139. *power of joynt prayer. a.*145. *ask enough, a.*148. *ask in Gods own words, a.*149. it causeth joy, 582. how to know that it is answered, ib. lift up the heart in prayer, 641. pray to God alone, 656. keep times of prayer, 733. shun customarinesse, ib. prayer short and pithie, 736. ply the prayer-hearing God, 751. sin hindreth the success of prayer, 755. it speedeth a battel, 780. flattering devotion, 788. pray for the publike, 895. 'tis incense, 917. indent not with God. 171
Praise God to the last gasp, 923. unsatisfiably, 927 *with ravishment, a.*188. how Angels praise God. 927
*Preferment, befalleth the poorest oft, b.*600 *a.*126 it puffeth them up, ib. it is from God, b.53. and why, ib. *it is oft for a mischief, a.*151. be humble under it, ib. it is of God. 779 Prepare to serve God. *b.*5.
Prognostication. 325
Promise, keep promises. *a.*171
*Prosperity, of the wicked, b.*188. prosperity-proselytes, a. 180. *it maketh men worse, a.*88. *'tis sometimes in wrath, a.*334. *'tis like light, and how, b.*162. wickeds prosperity stumbled at. 771
Promises, pray them ever. *a.*2
*Providence divine; doubted of, b.*10. denied by Epicurus, 845. questioned, 771. Gods Providence in

in the creatures,336. he provides for mans safety, 334. for young ravens, 335. observe Providences. 117,119
Provocations are blasphemy. a.86
Proud persons abased, 348. rich and proud, 774. prides picture, a.17. Spanish pride. a 3
Preaching what. a 82
Profess truth boldly. a.20
Psalmes of degrees what. 892. Psalm 119. praised b.876. sung by good souldiers. 929
Publike-spirited, a. 139, 141. & contra. 144
Punishment of sin, 263. in kinde, 591. See, b.49
Purgatory exploded. b.171.902
Purpose of sin punished. a.85
Printing, when first invented. b.172

Q.

Queens, some good. a.191

R.

Rain sent by God, b.52. 318. procured by prayer. 319
Rainbowe, wonder of it. 323
Ranters blaspheme Christ. 288
Ravens young. how fed. 925
Rawlins (Martyr) resolute. a.150
Reading, some thereby converted. a.153
Reformation of Religion succeeded. a.96
Renting of garments used by Heathens also. b.26
Repentance best remedy, 221. see it described, 358 practised by Theodosius, and Hen 4. 721. press men to repent more. 344
Report, do things of good report. a.18
Reproach for Christ is glory. 276
Reproof friendly, b.38. wisht and well taken, 918 accept it, 275. harsh reproof is fruitlesse, b.138 lost. b.166
Reservednes discreet. a.148
Resurrection asserted, b.100. see b.133.134,135; 173,174.175
Revenge is barbarous, 273. sweet, 272. but pernicious, ib. see a.177
Reward, Persian Kings rewarded bountifully, a.154. God much more, ib. & b. 22. 362. yet his service is held unprofitable. b.190
Restitution. a.65
Riches, why called goods, a. 6. they are too much loved, ib. part with them for Christ, 7. temporals are transitory, 331. slight them, 589. the soul resteth not in them, 685. hang loose to them, 688 once they were not so admired, a 63. uncertain. 64 rich wretches, b.33. die nevertheless, ib. See Money, World.
Rome, no peace with Rome. a.14

S.

Sabbath, when first given, a.85. sanctifie it. a,109 profaned, a.99. that sin punished, 26. & 100. See b.29. 805
Saints, their safety, 648.712. they have their interchanges. a.174
Sanctius his fooles bolt. 282
Sanders famished. 727
Satan, his malice, a,19. he is restlesse, b.7. 17. 565. so are his impes, ib. he is chased away by the Scripture. 756. he is a jugler. a.180
Scripture, read chapters also, full of names and numbers, a.10. search the Scriptures, b.562. Scripture-comforts at death, 578. Scriptures commended, 623.624,625. Scripture stumbled at, 806.809. the summe of them, 902. the longest verse in them, a.174. read in an unknown tongue, 175. high esteem of them. 209
Security carnal, 655. punished in Saints, a.87. See spiritual security.
Self, self-denial difficult, 705. self-examination, 574. self-love hideth sin, 274. self-sufficiency a fancy. 348
Self-defence lawful, a.176. self-conceitednesse, b 94. and 178
Sensualists. 350
Separatists, holy ones. a.91
Servant, a good one described. a.140
Sickness useful. 291,787
Silence commendable, 283. Silentiaries, 574 sinful silence. a.162
Sympathize with Gods afflicted, a.46. pray for such, 47. See b.910.
Sinne shall be once punished, a. 184. and in kinde, a.177. 'tis toilsom. b.40. 'tis a bitter-sweet, b. 80. mischievous, 308. sin repeated is thereby aggravated, 344. God perfectly hateth it, 576 its issue bitter, 581. its stench, 603. hate it, 823 our sins are innumerable. 626
Slander, a.131. deprave not mens speeches, b.139. 140. banish slanderers, 827. how men slander, 727 Saints shall be slandered. b.196,197
Shepherds Calender. 319
Sleep, Gods gift. a.153
Snow: wonders in it, 321. its use to the earth. b.926
Slavery grievous. a.90
Solitarinesse to be well managed. b.30
Sorrow, godly hath comfort. b.898
Soul-murther. 729
Speech shewes a man, b.121. thundering speeches, 347
Spirit, gift of it, a.86. good. 920
Spiritual things are best, 574. 575. soul-satisfying. 609
Starres, Pleiades & Orion allegorized, 332.333. Judiciary Astrology decried. 333
Stembach a mad Sectary. 338
Sun-light. 325

T.

Taciturnity, a.122, See silence.
Tale-bearers pick-thanks. a 128
Teares, a.139. their power, a.170. good men full of teares. 60
Thanksgiving, how God is to be praised. a.82. thankfulnesse described, 589. 'tis a sacrifice, 765. perpetuate the memory of mercies. a.190,191

Theo-

Theodosius his repentance. 878
Thunder, terrour of it, 319.320.653. thunder and lightening. 244
Time, alwayes wearing. 673
Tythes. *a.*93
*Tongue: lasheth, b.*58. *mischief of it. b.*102. look to it, 664. speak discreetly, 221. *talkative who, b.*161
*Treason. a.*123. *detected and punished. a.*125. treachery in a friend. 732. treachery requited. 729
Trinity 665. acknowledged by a Rabbi. 756
*Trust in God a.*12. fixeth the heart, 866. Gods truth our comfort. 872
Trust the best sacrifice, 872. Christian confidence. 637.706
Truth hath many cold friends. *a.*141

V.

Vashti faire, but foolish. *a.*108
Vajezatha's malice. *a.*184
Vespasians forged miracles. *b.*924
Victory is of God. *b.*921
Visions true and delusory. b.43
Vnicorn, wonder of him. 338
Vnite against the common adversary. *a.*182
Vprightnesse is honourable. 276
Vnreasonable are unsatisfiable. *b.*176
Vnteachablenesse. 663
*Vnthankfulnesse, a.*17. kindnesse cast away on the unthankful. *a.*165
Vowes, use of them. *a.*37,38
Vulgar Translation taxed. *b.*173
Vulture described. 343

W.

Whale, the wonder of him 351. God much seen in him, 352. a huge whale taken near Antwerp. 353
*Wicked, are vile, b.*162. *their woe, b.*163.164 they are ever posting to hell, 301. they are fruitlesse, 564. their plots overturned, 566, 567. they are hateful, 674. turned out of Gods house, 874. in the Saints is no way of wickednesse. 913. a wicked man described. *a.*163
*Will of God, done against mens will. a.*158. will for deed. *a.*172
Will. Rufus, his death. *b.*184
Wilde-asse, wonders in him. 336,337
Wisdom, true is from heaven, 28. got only by prayer, 239. cannot be bought, ib. and 240. prize it. 242
Windes. 324
Witney's tragi-comedy. *a.*13
*Wives, must honour husbands. a.*111. *false and faithful. a.*124. *they are to be born with, b.*23. gently reproved, ib. Valadaura's *kinde wife, b.*170 *wives submission, a.*147. a good wife, 900. Ahashuerus was uxorious, 185. mischief of it. ib.
Womens vanity, *a.*119.
Wood-offering. *a.*92
Worthy walking. *a.*71
Works of God, search them. 854
Works, good satisfie not for bad. 264
*World, glory of it transient, a.*150.156. world full of miracles. 335. of miseries. 799

X.

Xerxes his ambition lost him. *a.*193

Y.

Young men ripe betime, 280. youthful pranks dear paid for. *b.*177

Z.

*Zeal, a.*33. *the fire of it, a.*98. counted madnesse, ib. See 278.279,288.
Zion what. 571
Zophars loquacity and tartnesse. b 101

ERRATA.

Some faults escaped in the first Account, beginning at EZRA.

PAge 5, l, 38. for Magnites r. Magnetes, p, 13. l, 45, for Halegons r. Halcyons. p, 14, l, 43, for ensnared r, ensnarled, p, 28, l, 38, for patet r, latet, p, 35 l, 6, for inrited and incited, r, incited and enticed, p 42, marg, for act r. Art, p, 56. l, 53, for virium r, vitium. p, 57, l, 33, for works r, mocks, p, 58, l, 2, for good r, God. ib, l, 55. for but of r. by, p. 60, l, 17, for dicitur r, discitur, p, 71 l, 35, for die r, do, ib. l, 24, dele life, p, 73, l, 1, for held r, need. p. 98 l, 9, for grasse r, brasse, ib, l, 39. for ministery r, injustice, p, 107, l, 56, for Pluto r, Plato, p, 111, l, 1, for uncondemn the Queen heard r, condemn the Queen unheard. p, 114, l, 57, for speaking r, seeking, p, 133. l, 3, for this r, the.

Some faults escaped in the second Account, beginning at JOB.

PAge 21, l, 9 for briar, r, tria, p, 26, l. 7, r, Rubicon, p, 42, l, 41, for repealed r, repeated p, 52, l, 13, for membra r, membra, p, 64, l, 46 for venit r, vivit, p. 93 l, 21, for vires r, vices, p, 146, l, 26, r, incurvicervica, p, 153. l. 42, for breath r, breach, p, 193, l, 15, r, insuperabilis. p, 161 l. 45. for sighted r. sligbted. p. 251, l. 30. for fractus r, fructus. p. 299. l. 32. for cannot do, r, cannot but do. p. 322. l. 5. for Vorster, r, Vortex. ib. l. 10. for Illebius r, Illebius. p. 340, l, 48. for house r. horse. p. 563. l. 53. for Gain r. Gaius. p. 570. l. 15. 16. for leuiter r. leviter. p. 573. l. 2. r. denigrated p. 611 marg. for Vers r. Peiv ib. l. 29. for hurt r. heart. p. 619. l. 39. for flexible r inflexible. p. 634. l. 16. for similate r, imitate. p. 655. l. 54. for Enn. r. Sun. p. 676 l. 3. for some r. same. p. 721. l, 50. for last evil. r. lost jewel p. 723. l. 3. for whole evil in man r. whole man in evil. p. 739 l. 17. r. persuaseris. p. 741. l. 1. for with r. to p. 746. l. 12, for that is r. that trust him. p. 788. l. 9. for flutter r. flatter. p. 821. l. 40, r. Metuendus. p. 827. l. 38. r. Helluones. p. 841. l, 47. for Ile bear r. See here. p. 846. l. 23. r. five. p. 847. l. 47. for obsesse r. obsessi. p. 851. l. 7. r. immites. p. 881. l. 49. r. terere. ib. 50. r. protelare. p. 884 l. 18. r. tempore tecta. p. 886. l. 6. for reference r. reverence. p. 887. l. 15. r. guerras p. 894. l, 3. r, bilioſi, p, 894, l, 42. for ſcil, r ſic.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the BOOK of EZRA.

CHAP. I

Verſe 1. Now in the firſt year of Cyrus King of Perſia,]

Ver. 1. NOw] Heb. And; for the former Hiſtory, recorded in the Chronicles, is continued by Ezra that ready Scribe, and perfect in the Law, Chap. 7. 6. Yet not ſo prompt or perfect can I deeme him, as that he ſhould, by memory, reſtore the Bible that was burnt, together with the Temple, by the Babylonians. And yet that was the opinion of many Ancients, grounded upon ſome paſſages in that Apocryphal Eſdras. We reade alſo of one Johannes Gatius Ciphaleditanus, who, out of the vaine confidence of his learning and memory, was wont to give out, that if the Holy Scripture ſhould be loſt out of the world, he would not doubt (by Gods grace) to reſtore it whole again. Of Cranmer indeed (a far better man, and a profounder Divine) it is ſtoried, that he had got moſt of the New Teſtament by heart. And of Beza, that being above eighty years of age, he could ſay perfectly without book, any Greek Chapter in Saint Pauls Epiſtles.

Irena. Tertull. Clem. Alexi Hieron. Aug. Euſeb. Alſted. Chron pag. 267. Acts & Mon.

M. Leigh. A not. on John 5.39.

In the firſt year] Heb. In the one year. The Hebrews oft uſe One for Firſt. So do alſo the Apoſtles in Greek, Matth. 28. 1. John 20. 1, 19. 1 Cor. 16. 2. Rev. 6. 1. One, being the firſt number; neither was it without a myſtery that Pythagoras bade his Scholars ever to have reſpect, εἰς μοναδα: as Moſes alſo his, ſaying, Hear O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, Deut. 6. 4.

Of Cyrus] Heb. Coreſh, ſo named by God above an hundred years before he was born, Iſay 40. 28. and ſo honoured by the Perſians (as the founder of their Monarchy) that they liked the better of all that were Hawk-noſed, like unto him. The Perſian word ſignifieth a Lord, or great Prince, as Hen. Stephanus noteth: and thence the Greeks have their Κῦρος, Authority, Κύριος, Lord: and We our word Sir, as ſome will have it. Plutarch in Artaxerxes ſaith, that the Perſians call the Sunne Cyrus. And it may very well be ſo, for the Hebrews alſo call the Sunne חרס Cheres, from its gliſtering brightneſſe.

See the like Joſiah, 1 Kin 13. 3.

Peacham.

King of Perſia] So he had beene above twenty years before this, and done many great exploits: but this was the firſt year of his Empire, of his Coſmocratie, of the Monarchy translated from the Babylonians to the Perſians. The greateſt Kingdomes have their times and their turnes, their riſe and their ruine, when they ſhall live by fame onely. Perſia, having oft changed her Maſters ſince Cyrus, remaineth a flouriſhing Kingdome to this day; but wholly Mahometan. Which abominable ſuperſtition the Turks received from them, when in the year 1030. they won that Countrey under their Sultan Tangrolipix. Where it is hard to ſay (ſaith mine Author) whether nation loſt more, the Perſians by the loſſe of ſo great a Kingdome, or the Turks by embracing ſo great a vanity. To this day they acknowledge the Perſians better Mahometans then themſelves; which maketh the Turks farre better ſouldiers upon the Chriſtian then upon the Perſian.

Turk. Hiſt. bl. 5.

Blounts Voy. nto the Leu. ag. 81.

That the Word of the Lord] For, it was He that ſpake by the mouth of his holy Prophets, Luke 1. 70. and his word cannot be broken, John 10. 35. for he is the God of Amen, asthe Prophet David ſomewhere calleth him; and all his promiſes are the iſſue of a moſt faithful and right Will void of all inſincerity and falſhood, Prov. 8. 8.

Pſal. 31. 5.

By the mouth of Jeremy] That admirable Preacher (as Keckerman calleth him) that moſt eminent Prophet (as another) with whoſe writings, about this very reſtauration, Daniel conſulted, and therehence collected, that the time was come, Dan. 9. 2. which put him upon that heavenly prayer: for he knew that Gods promiſes muſt be put in ſuit; and and it was to him that the Angel afterwards ſaid, I came for thy word, Dan. 10. 14. God will come, according to his promiſe, but he will have his peoples prayers lead him. This liberty here granted to the Jewes, after ſo long captivity, was the fruit of many prayers, founded upon the promiſe, Jer. 25. 12. and 29. 10.

De Rhet. Eccleſ

Might be fulfilled] As indeed it was exactly by the death of Belſhazzar ſlaine by Cyrus, who ſucceeded him, Dan. 5. 30. In that night was Belſhazzar ſlaine, becauſe then exactly the ſeventy years were ended. So, for the ſame reaſon it is noted, Exod. 12. 40, 41. that at midnight the firſt-borne of Egypt were ſlaine, becauſe juſt then the four hundred or four hundred and thirty years foretold were expired. So punctual is God in keeping his word. It is not here, as with men, A day breaketh no ſquare, &c. for he never faileth at his time.

The Lord ſtirred up the ſpirit] It was the mighty and immediate work of God (in whoſe hand are the hearts of all, both Kings and Captives, Lords and Loſels) to bring this wiſe and great Prince, in the very firſt entrance into his Monarchy, before things were fully ſettled, to diſmiſſe ſo great and ſo united a people (in reſpect of their cuſtome and religion) and ſo given to inſurrection (as was generally held) into their owne Countrey, with ſuch a faire and full Patent. This was the Lords owne work, and it was juſtly marvellous in the eyes of his people; who could hardly believe their owne eyes, but were for a while, like them that dreame. Then was their mouth filled with laughter, and their tongue with ſinging, &c. Pſal. 126. 1, 2. Then was the great power and goodneſſe of God, in ſtirring up Cyrus to do this, acknowledged. Then alſo was the Kings clemency and courteſie no leſſe cried up and magnified then was that of Flaminius the Roman General at Athens, where for delivering them from ſervitude, he was little leſſe then deified: Or, that of our Queene Elizabeth, who for her merciful returning home certaine Italians that were taken priſoners in the eighty eight Invaſion, was termed Saint Elizabeth, by ſome at Venice: Whereof one told the Lord Carleton (afterwards Viſcount Dorcheſter) being there Embaſſadour, that although he were a Papiſt, yet he would never pray to any other Saint, but that Saint Elizabeth.

That he made Proclamation] Heb. He cauſed a voice to paſſe] ſc. by his Meſſengers and Miniſters. The Poſts went out, being haſtened by the Kings commandment, Eſth. 3. 15. even thoſe Angarii. The Lord Chriſt alſo proclaiming liberty to the captives, and the opening of the priſon to them that are bound, Eſay 61. 1. cauſeth his Word to run and to be glorified, to ſpread like a Sun-beame, as Euſebius ſaith the Goſpel did at firſt; to be carried as on Eagles wings, or on Angels wings, as it was thorough all Chriſtendome, when Luther firſt ſent forth his book De Captivitate Babylonicâ, of the Babyloniſh Captivity.

And put it alſo in writing] That it might be poſted up, and every where publiſhed. Vox audita perit: littera ſcripta manet, Chriſt hath written for us alſo the great things of his Law; And ſhould they then be counted a ſtrange thing? Hoſ. 8. 12. See the Notes there. His Goſpel likewiſe he hath written to you that beleeve on the name of the Sonne of God, 1 John 5. 13. and ponder his Paſſion eſpecially which is therefore ſo particularly ſet downe by four faithful Witneſſes, that men may get it written not on the nailes of their hands hands (as one once did) but upon the tables of their hearts, there to abide as a perpetual picture; Non ſcripta ſolùm, ſed & ſculpta, as He ſaid; that we therein beholding, as in a glaſſe, the love of our Lord, might be changed into the ſame image, till our hearts became a very lump of love to him who loved us, and waſhed us from our ſinnes in his owne blood, and made us Kings and Prieſts unto God and his Father, Rev. 1. 5, 6.

Sphinx Philoſ.

Ver. 2. The Lord God of heaven hath given me] This good language Cyrus might well learn of Daniel, who flouriſhed under his reign; Dan. 6. 28. & probably acquainted him with the propheſies that went before of him, Iſa. 44. 28. and 45. 1. Jaddus the High-Prieſt did the like (many years after) to Alexander the Great: who not only thereupon ſpared the Jewes, but highly honoured them, as Joſephus relateth. Here then we ſee this Potentate of the earth giveth unto the Lord the glory due unto his Name; Pſal. 29. 1, 2. acknowledging him the bleſſed and onely Potentate, 1 Tim. 6. 16. One that both is in the heavens, and alſo doeth whatſoever he pleaſeth, both in heaven and in earth, Pſal. 115. 3. and 135. 6. The God of heaven, ſaith He, hath given me all the Kingdomes of the earth. This was farre better then that of Alexander the Great, whom when Lyſippus had pictured looking up to heaven with this Poſie, Iuppiter aſſerui terram mihi, tu aſſere cœlum, &c. Alexander was ſo delighted with it, that he proclaimed that none ſhould take his picture but Lyſippus. Plin. lib. 6. cap. 16.

All the Kingdomes of the earth] i. e. Many of them, ſo that he was Αυτοκράτωρ a mighty Monarch, an abſolute Emperour. But to be μονοκράτωρ ſole Lord of the whole world, was never yet granted to any: though the great Cham of Cataia is reported to cauſe his Trumpets to be ſounded, every day aſſoone as he hath dined, in token that he giveth leave to other Princes of the earth (whom he ſuppoſeth to be his vaſſals) to go to dinner. Heyl. Geog. And the proud Spaniard (who affecteth to be Catholick Monarch) was well laughed at by Sir Francis Drake and his company, for his device of a Pegaſus flying out of a Globe of the earth ſet up in the Indies with this Motto Camd. Eliſ.

——— totus non ſufficit orbis.

But he affecteth an univerſal Monarchy: and ſo perhaps did Cyrus, which maketh him here ſpeak ſo largely.

And he hath charged me] Et ipſe commiſit mihi, ſo Junius rendereth it. The word ſignifieth to viſit one, either for the better or the worſe. But according to the Chaldee and Syriack uſe, it ſignifieth to charge or command, as it is here, and 2 Chron. 36. 22. fitly rendered. But how knew Cyrus this charge of Almighty God, otherwiſe then by books? Like as Daniel (who probably ſhewed him thoſe Propheſies of Eſay concerning him) underſtood by Jeremy 25. 12. and 29. 10. that the ſeventy years captivity were accompliſhed: and by Ezekiel, chap. 31. 1, 2, 3. &c. (which he had read, likely, and revolved) he was the better able to give a right interpretation of Nebuchadnezzars dreame, Dan. 4.

To build him an houſe at Jeruſalem] i. e. To rebuild that which had beene once built by Solomon (whence Hegeſippus, not having the Hebrew tongue, will have Hieruſalem ſo named quaſi ἱερὸν Σολόμωντος Solomons Temple) a ſtately houſe indeed, and one of the ſeven wonders of the world. For albeit it was but one hundred and twenty foot long, and fourty foot broad; whereas the Temple at Epheſus was two hundred fourty and five foot long, and two hundred and twenty foot broad: Yet for coſtly and choyce materials, for curious and exact workmanſhip, for ſpiritual employment, and for myſtical ſignification, never was there the like edifice in the world. And happy had it beene for Cyrus, if laying aſide all his warlike expeditions and atchievements, he had wholly applyed himſelf to the building of this holy houſe, and to the ſtudy of thoſe things, that there he might have learned for his ſouls health.

Jeruſalem which is in Judah] Jeruſalem was part of it in Judah, and part in the tribe of Benjamin. The houſe here mentioned (viz. the Temple) ſtood in Benjamin, as was foretold it ſhould by Moſes, four hundred and fourty years before it was firſt built by Solomon, Deut. 33. 12. And of Benjamin he ſaid, The beloved of the Lord, that is, Benjamin his darling, ſhall dwell in ſafety by him, and the Lord ſhall cover him all the day long, and he ſhall dwell betweene his ſhoulders, that is, betwixt thoſe two mountains, Moriah and Sion, wherein the Temple was built. Now becauſe Benjamin was the leaſt of all the tribes of Iſrael, and becauſe ſo much of it as lay within Judah (Joſh. 19. 1, 9.) was comprized under Judah (1 Kings 11. 13.) therefore is the Temple here ſaid to be in Jeruſalem which is in Judah. Hereby alſo this Jeruſalem in Judah is diſtinguiſhed from any other Jeruſalem; if there were any place in the world ſo called beſides. We reade of Pope Sylveſter the ſecond (who ſold his ſoul to the Devil for the Popedome) that ſaying Maſſe in a certaine Church in Rome, called Jeruſalem, he fell ſuddenly into a Fever, whereof he died, the Devil claiming his owne: For the bargaine betwixt them was, that he ſhould continue Pope, till he ſang Maſſe in Jeruſalem: and now intellexit ſe à Diabolo amphiboliâ vocis circumventum: little dreamt the Pope of any other Jeruſalem but this in Judah, and this coſt him his life, Anno Dom. 1003. Euſebius telleth us that Montanus the Hæreſiarch called his Pepuza and Tymium (two pelting pariſhes in Phrygia) Jeruſalem; as if they had beene the only Churches in the world. Hofman the Anabaptiſt had the like conceit of Straſburg in Germany; and Becold of Munſter; both which places they called the new Jeruſalem.

Funcc. Chronol. Jacob. Reu. pag. 109.

Lib. 5. cap. 17.

Hiſt. David. Georg. p. 3.

Ver. 3. Who is there among you of all his people] Many there were among them that affirmed deeply of being the people of God, who yet (tanquam monſtra marina) paſſed by this Proclamation with a deaf eare; and preferring haram domeſticam ara dominica a ſwineſty before a Sanuctary, choſe rather to abide in Babylon, and there to dwell amongſt plants and hedges, 1 Chron. 4. 23. making pots for the Kings garden, then to go up to Jeruſalem. So that, beſides this O yes, by the King, God was faine to cry, Ho, Ho, come forth and flee from the Land of the North: Deliver thy ſelf, O Zion, that dwelleſt with the daughter of Babylon, Zech. 2. 6, 7. Ariſe ye, and depart: for this is not your reſt, becauſe it is polluted: it ſhall deſtroy you even with a ſore deſtruction, Mic. 2. 10. Look how the Eagle hath much ado to get her young ones out of the neſt, pricking and beating them with her wings and talons; ſo was it here: and neither ſo could the Lord prevaile with the moſt of them, being as loth to depart, as Lot was out of Sodom, vel canis ab unctio corio, or a dog from a fat morſel.

His God be with him] And then he needs no better company, no greater happineſſe: for he is ſure of a confluence of all comforts, of all that heart can with, or need require. Tua præſentia, Domine, Laurentio ipſam craticulam fecit dulcem, ſaith an Ancient, Thy preſence ſweeteneth all our occurrences. This was therefore a good wiſh of King Cyrus; neither did he therein any diſſervice to himſelf; for God hath promiſed to bleſſe thoſe that bleſſe any of his, Gen. 12. 3. and not to let a good wiſh to ſuch go unrewarded, 2 Cor. 13. 9.

Aug.

Let him go up and build, &c.] As God had charged him, verſe 2. ſo doth he them. And it is as if he ſhould have ſaid with that Father. Unleſſe I ſtir up your hearts, as the Lord hath done mine, unleſſe I lay Gods charge upon you to ſet ſtrenuouſly upon this ſervice of his, Vobis erit damnoſum, mihi periculoſum. Timeo itaque damnum veſtrum, timeo damnationem meam, ſi tacuero. If now you go not up upon ſo great encouragement, God will ſurely bemeet with you.

Bern.

He is the God] The onely true God, John 17. 3. none like him, Mic. 7. 18. The Lord your God is God of Gods, and Lord of Lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, Deut. 10. 17. Is it not fit therefore that he have a Temple, a place of divine worſhip, which the Heathens deny not to their dunghill-deities?

Which is in Jeruſalem] That City of the great King, where he kept his Court, and afforded his ſpecial preſence, not of grace onely in his Ordinances, but of glory alſo ſometimes in his holy Temple, 2 Chron. 5. 14. as in another heaven.

Ver. 4. And whoſoever remaineth in any place where he ſojourneth] Heb. Gar-ſham. A name that Moſes gave his eldeſt ſonne borne in his baniſhment; for he ſaid I have beene a ſtranger in a ſtrange land, Exod. 2. 22. Theſe poore captives had beene longer ſo then Moſes in Midian, and met with more hard meaſure, Pſal. 137. 1, 8. But as thoſe who are borne in hell know no other heaven (as the Proverb is) ſo fared it not with a few of theſe; loth to be at the paines, and run the hazard of a voyage to the holy Land. A little with eaſe is held beſt. Let us who are ſtrangers here, haſte homeward, heaven-ward. Some of theſe poore Jewes had a minde to returne; but wanted meanes. For theſe neceſſitous people the King takes care and courſe here, that they be ſupplied and ſet forward on their journey after a godly ſort, or worthy of God, (as Saint John phraſeth it, 3 John 6.) who elſe will require it.

Let the men of his place] Whether Jewes or Proſelytes, brethren by race, grace, or place onely.

Help him with ſilver] Heb. Give him a lift out of the duſt, as Job's friends did him off off the dunghill: as Joseph did his brethren when he filled their bags, and returned them their moneys; And as all Christians are bound and bid to support or shoar up their weaker brethren, 1 Thess. 5 14. Αντέχεσθε τῶν ἀσθενῶν.

With silver and with gold] These are notable good levers at a dead lift in this present world, where money beares the mastery, and answereth all things: a satisfactory answer it giveth to whatsoever is desired, or demanded: He that helpeth a man therefore in his necessity with silver and gold, is a friend indeed. Let a man make God his friend, and then (saith Eliphaz,) the Almighty shall be his gold, and he shall have plenty of silver, Job 22. 25. Jacob shall be sure of so much as shall bring him to his journeys end, a sufficiency (if not a superfluity) of all things, needful to life and godliness. Eccles. 10.19.

And with goods] Heb. Recush (whence haply our English words Riches and Cash) chattels, movables, gathered substance, as the word signifieth, which whosoever he was that first called substance, was utterly mistaken; sith wisdome onely (that is, godliness) is durable substance, Prov. 8. 21. Wealth is but a semblance, Proverbs 23. 5. 1 Corinth. 7. 31. And he that first called Riches Goods, was a better husband then Divine. But it may be thought, the most are such husbands: sith the common cry is, Who will shew us any good? a good booty, a good bargaine, a good beast, &c? That one thing necessary that is both Bonum hominis, The good of man, Micah 6. 8. and Totum hominis, The whole of man, Eccles. 12. 13. lieth wholly neglected by the most. Psal. 4. 6.

And with beasts] Those most serviceable creatures both ad esum & ad usum, for food and other uses, as Sheep, Horses, Camels, Dromedaries, swift, patient, painful.

Besides the free-will-offering] Which the King presumeth all Gods free-hearted people (Voluntieres, every soul of them, Psal. 110. 3.) will be most forward unto, in so good a work, so acceptable a service. God straineth upon no man, Exod. 25. 2. and 35. 5. Lex quærit voluntarios, The Law calleth for Volunteires, saith Ambrose. See Esay 56. 6. and 2 Cor. 8. 12. and 9. 7. and learne to come off roundly and readily in works of Piety and Charity: for else all's lost; sith Virtus nolentium nulla est, unwilling service is nothing set by. See Lev. 5.6, 12. and 14.10; 21, 30. In Psal. 1.

That is in Jerusalem] This City he so often nameth, that he may seeme delighted with the very mention of it: and to be of the same minde with those pious captives, that vowed to preferre Jerusalem (that joy of the whole earth) before their chief joy, to make it ascend above the head of their joy, as the Hebrew hath it. Psal. 137.6.

How then should it chear up our hearts to think of heaven, and that we are written among the living in Jerusalem, Esay 4. 3? fellow-citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of heaven, Eph. 2.19?

Verse 5. Then rose up the chief of the fathers] Those, who are therefore crowned and chronicled in the next Chapter. Those Magnates Magnites, that drew on others by their example. Those Viri gregis, he-goats before the flocks, men of publike places and authority, active for Reformation, who hearkened to that divine call, Jer. 50. 8. Remove out of the middest of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Caldeans, and be as the he-goats before the flocks. These Nobles arose, being rowsed and raised by that Noble Spirit of God, Psal. 51. 12. that Kingly spirit, the Chaldee rendereth it; such as was found in Araunah that famous Jebusite, 2 Sam. 24. 23. with Zech. 9.7. and is a quickening Spirit in every good soul, causing them to make riddance, as Baruc did, Nehem. 3. 20. and to take long strides toward heaven, as Jacob did toward Padan-Aram: for, Nescit tarda molimina Spiritus sancti gratia, The Spirit of grace knoweth no slow paces; but is quick of dispatch. Up get these Chieftains when once they hear, Surge, age, Summe Pater, as one said once to the Bishop of Rome, exciting him to make warre upon the Turk. Gen. 29. Ambrose. Mantuan.

And the Priests and the Levites] Fit it was that these should be of the first and forwardest at Temple-work: whose proper employment it was to teach Jacob Gods judgements, and to put incense before him continually, Deut. 33. 10. to wait at the Altar, and to be partakers with the Altar, 1 Cor. 9. 13.

With all them whose spirit God had raised up] Not of Judah and Benjamin onely (those best of the Tribes, and truest to their Princes and principles) but also of Ephraim and Manasseh, 1 Chron. 9. 3. with Ezek. 37. 16, 17, 21, 22. even as many of the Israelites, as were acted by Gods Spirit of judgement and of burning, Isa. 4. 4. firing them up to an holy contention in so noble and necessary a businesse, and leading them into the land of upright-uprightneſſe, Pſal. 143. 10. The fruit of this good Spirit is in all goodneſſe and righteouſneſſe and truth, Epheſ. 5. 9. the work of it upon the ſonnes of God who are led by it, Rom. 8. 14. is not onely an external invitation by the Word and Sacraments, or a meere moral perſwaſion (Cyrus his Proclamation here would have availed but little with this people, if God had not moved their hearts) but an effectual drawing of the heart whereby operating irreſiſtibly the ſinner is converted: and whereby cooperating infallibly he perſevereth in grace unto the very end, John 6. 44. This conduct of the holy Spirit we muſt both earneſtly beg with David, Pſal. 143 10. and as carefully obſerve and obey his motions, as ever David did the out-goings of God in the tops of the mulberry trees, 1 Chron. 14. 15. for theſe are the ſound of his goings, and the footſteps of his Anointed, Pſal. 89. 51.

To build the houſe of the Lord] This was that they aimed at, rather then their owne liberty. Choice and excellent ſpirits can eaſily drowne all ſelf-reſpects in the glory of God. It was the care of thoſe good people in Joels dayes, that there might be a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the Lord their God, what-ever became of their owne Carcaſſes, Joel 2. 14. And when the daily ſacrifice ceaſed by the tyranny of Antiochus, they looked upon it as an abomination of deſolation, Dan. 9. 27. The Jewes at this day are very earneſt to be rebuilding the deſtroyed Temple at Jeruſalem, out of their blinde zeale: but they have neither any Cyrus to encourage them (Julian the Apoſtate once did, in ſpight to the Chriſtians, but it came to nothing) nor the Spirit of God to excite them to ſuch an unwarrantable work.

Verſe 6. And all they that were about them] Both their countreymen the Jewes (that thought not good to go themſelves, or not yet, till they ſhould ſee further; there is none ſo wiſe as the ſluggard, Prov. 26. 16.) and others of the neighbourhood: for the Egyptians may lend Jewels to the Iſraelites, dogs may lick Lazarus his ulcers, and the earth may help the woman, by opening her mouth, and ſwallowing up the flood caſt out after her by the Dragon to drown her, Rev. 12. 16.

Strengthened their hands] Which elſe, for want of ſuch ſupport, would have hung down, and their feeble knees buckled under them, ere they had come to their countrey: neither could they, without ſuch ſupplies, have ſo comfortably carried on the work they went about. For, if wiſdome be a defence, or a ſhadow, to thoſe that have ſeene the Sunne (as in the former verſe) and are ſcorched with the heat of it, ſo is money too, ſaith Solomon, Eccleſ. 7. 12. and though Wiſdome without wealth is good, yet it is better with an inheritance, verſe 11. which is not only an ornament, but an inſtrument of vertue. When men go on Virtute duce, comite fortunâ, then it is well with them, as it was with good Joſiah, Jer. 22. 15, 16. But Agur would not be poor, leſt he ſhould be put upon ill courſes, Prov. 30. 9. put to his ſhifts Poor Hagar, when the water was ſpent in the bottle, caſt the childe under the ſhrubs, Gen. 21. 15.

With veſſels of ſilver, with gold, with goods, and with beaſts] See the Note on Verſe 4. Theſe are things that men do not uſually ſo eaſily part with to others, till they needs muſt. Euclio in the Comedian ſits abrood upon his heaps and hoards, and will not be drawn off. Shall Nabal take his bread and his fleſh, and give it to thoſe he knows not, 1 Sam. 25? Miſers will as ſoon part with their blood as their good: whence the Chaldees call their money Dam, that is, blood. Many a man ſhewes himſelf like the Corniſh-chough, which will ſteale a piece of money, and hiding it in ſome hole, will never help her ſelf or any other with it afterwards. Hermocrates being loth that any man ſhould enjoy his goods after him, made himſelf by his Will, heir of his own goods. Athenæus telleth of one, that at his death devoured many pieces of Gold, and ſewed the reſt in his coat, commanding that they ſhould be all buried with him. But theſe in the text ſeeme to have beene of the race of thoſe Perſians ſpoken of, Iſa. 13. 17. which regarded not ſilver, and as for gold they cared not much for it. Or, if they were Proſelytes to the Church, then they had learned (with Tyrus now alſo converted) to give over heaping and hoarding of wealth, and therewith to feed and cloath Gods poor Saints, and ſo to furniſh them for their journey to their Fathers houſe, that they may eat ſufficiently, and have durable cloathing, Iſa. 23. 18. This was Gods work upon their hearts; And Quando Chriſtus magiſter, quàm citò diſcitur quod docetur? Whereunto may be added, that Cyrus, who ſet forth this Edict, as he was an abſolute Sovereigne, (and ſo his word went for a law) ſo he was a gracious and courteous Prince, ita ut Patris nomen meruerit, ſo that he merited the name and title of Father of his Countrey, and might command any thing of them.

Auguſtin.

And with precious things] Even the very beſt of the beſt they had. The word ſignifi-

eth

eth praſtantiſſimum & pretioſiſſimum in quocunque genere fructuum, metallorum, gemmarum, veſtium, the choyceſt and chiefeſt of all kinde of commodities. For the purchaſe of the pearle of price, the wiſe Merchant makes a thorough ſale of all. Barnabas parteth with his lands, Zacheus with his goods, Matthew with his meat, the Centurion with his money, to build thoſe Synagogues that wicked Antiochus had thrown down, and theſe in the Text, with their moſt precious things, to reedifie that Temple that Nebuchadnezzar had burnt. Such as Eleazar gave to Rebecca and her brother Gen. 24. & ſuch as Jehoſaphat gave his younger ſons, 2 Chron. 21. 3.

Beſides all that was willingly offered] A free-will offering then there was (as verſe 4.) brought in by Gods willing people, Pſal. 110. 3. that wait for Gods Law, as Eſay 42. 8. and hold with that Ancient, that it is nimis anguſta innocentia, ad legem bonum eſſe, to do no more ſervice to God then needs muſt to get ſo much grace onely as will keep life and ſoul together, (that is, ſoul and hell aſunder,) this they judge to be a low and unworthy ſtraine of ſome good people. David voweth free-will-offerings often, and could beteeme God a great deale more love and ſervice then he is able to performe to him. Thoſe good ſouls, Zach. 8. 21. call upon themſelves and one another, to be continually going before the Lord, and to ſeek the Lord of hoſts, I (ſaith each for himſelf) will go alſo. Hannah went up with her husband every year to the Feaſt: ſo did the Virgin Mary to the Paſſeover with her Sonne Jeſus: yet none were expreſſely commanded ſo to do but males; and thoſe alſo nothing under twenty years of age, as fit to be numbered, Exod. 30. 14. So thoſe amongſt us that hear week-day-Sermons, as Mary did, Luke 10. 42. and many other good people in our Saviours dayes, Luke 19. 47, 48. and 21. 37, 38. Hereby we ſhall ſhew our love, and do a ſervice highly accepted in heaven. Pſal. 5. 6. 1 Chr. 29, 8, 9. 1 Sam. 1. 4, 21. Luke 2. 41, 42.

Verſe 7. Alſo Cyrus the King brought forth the veſſels] For example to others, & juſſit, & geſſit, he did himſelf what he commanded to be done, and ſo became a living Law, a walking Statute. So Juſtinian would not put the veſſels of the Temple (taken by Titus) and recovered from Genſericus into the publike treaſury, but reſtored them.

Which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth] With profane and ſacrilegious hands, ſome of theſe ſacred veſſels and utenſils of the Temple, he had cut in pieces, 2 Kings 24. 13. and others he carried away, 2 Chron. 36. 7. whole and entire. This he did out of covetouſneſſe (that auri ſacra fames) and in ſcorne of all religion (rather then hatred of the Jewiſh ſuperſtition, or to avenge the quarrel of Gods Covenant) like as for the ſame reaſon his ſucceſſour Cambyſes deſtroyed the Egyptian Idols. Virg. Iſa. 10.

And had put them] There was a ſweet providence in that: to the end that being there reſerved, they might in due time be reſtored (as here they are) to the houſe of God at Jeruſalem. And although that was a moſt unfit place to keep them in (for what agreement hath the Temple of God with Idols?) and Belſhazzar moſt profanely abuſed them, Dan. 5. 2. in that drunken feaſt of his (hence he is called the feſtival King, Ezek. 21. 5. 6.) yet being ſanctified againe, and dedicated to the true and firſt owner, the God of Iſrael, they might lawfully be made uſe of. Not only things indifferent abuſed, may yet be uſed in the ſervice of God (as thoſe ſix water-pots were by our Saviour, John 2. though they had beene ſuperſtitiouſly abuſed for private purification) but alſo Idolatrous things and places. As Gideon took the Bullock appointed for Baal and the Grove, and offered the Bullock with that wood in ſacrifice to the Lord, Judg. 6. 26. The like the Bethſhemites did by the Philiſtines Cart and Kine. The Mount of Olives was ſhamefully abuſed to idolatry by Solomon and others, ſo that it was called The Mount of corruption, 2 Kings 23. 13. and yet was it our Saviours uſual Oratory, or place of Prayer. 2 Cor. 6. 16.

In the houſe of his Gods] Bel and Nebo, Eſay 46. 1. Theſe were Babylons chief gods. The Original of Bel is ſaid to be this: Ninus having made an Image of his father Belus, all that came to ſee it were pardoned for all their offences: whence in time that Image came to be worſhipped, and then afterwards a multitude more; Inſomuch as, that in Heſiods time the number of Heatheniſh gods was grown to thirty thouſand. And in China at this day ſome tell us that there are no fewer then an hundred thouſand Idols. τρὶς χίλιοι εἰσὶν, &c. Heſ.

O curas hominum! O quantum eſt in rebus inane!

Εἷς μόνος θεὸς θεός, &c.

Gods theſe Mawmets are called here; not becauſe they were ſo, (for there is one God onely, ſaid Pythagoras, and other Heathens) but becauſe Nebuchadnezzar falſely held them ſo. Like as elſewhere the gods of Damaſcus are ſaid to have ſmitten Ahaz, who therefore ſacrificed to them, 2 Chron. 20. 23. not as if thoſe Idols were any thing in the world, world, or could do any thing at all to him, Jer. 10.5. 1 Cor. 8. 4. but onely that he conceited ſo; and that the devil (who is εἰδωλοχαρὴς, as Syneſius truly ſaith) abuſed his credulity.

Ver. 8. Even thoſe did Cyrus King of Perſia] ſo ſtiled, becauſe though he was Monarch of many Countries, yet Perſia was his hereditary Kingdom, and Perſepolis the place of his reſidence: which great City was afterwards burnt by Alexander the Great, at the motion and by the requeſt of a baſe harlot.

By the hand of Mithridath the treaſurer] Heb. Gizbar; Inde Gaſpar, ſaith one. Mithridates King of Pontus was famous in after-ages, or rather infamous for his craft in ſaving himſelf, and his cruelty to the Roman Merchants, trading thorow his territories, killing fourſcore thouſand of them with one letter.

Val. Max.

And numbred them unto Shezbazzar] Joy in tribulation; this is the ſignification of the word: A fit name for a Prince, who ſhould be Deliciæ orbis, as Titus the Emperour, of whom it is ſaid, that he never ſent away any ſuitor ſad or diſcontented: and remembring on a day that he had not done any poor man good, he cried out to his friends, Hodie non regnavimus: Amici, diem perdidi, accounting that day loſt wherein he had not ſhewed ſome man courteſie. Such a gracious Prince was Job, chap. 29. 12. I delivered the poore that cried, ſaith He, and the fatherleſſe, and him that had none to help him. The great Turk ſtileth himſelf The worlds refuge: profeſſing that all that lament unto him ſhall have redreſſe and ſuccour. James the fifth of Scotland was called The poor mans King, for his readineſſe to right and relieve the afflicted. Zerubbabel, however he came by this name Shesbazzar (for that he was the man I take for granted, Ezra 5. 16. with chap. 3. 8. Zech. 4. 9. though Junius think otherwiſe) he deſerved it doubtleſſe: and of him it might well be ſaid, as the Hiſtorian doth of Probus the Emperour, Si probi nomen non haberet, habere cognomen poſſet, pity he had beene called any thing but Probus, ſo honeſt a Prince he was: think the like here. The Parliament here held Anno 1376. was called The Good Parliament: and another not long after Parlamentum benedictum, The bleſſed Parliament. God grant us ſuch a one next; for at preſent we are without any, but not without cauſe to cry out, as thoſe in Jeremy, chap. 8. 20, 22. The harveſt is paſt, the Summer is ended, and we are not helped. Is there no balme in Gilead? is there no Phyſician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered? We looked for peace, but no good came: and for a time of health, and behold trouble, ver. 15.

Nemine à ſe dimiſit triſtem. Sueton.

Grand. Sign. Seraq 148.

Vopiſcus.

Speed. 723.

This was written, May 28. 1653.

Verſe 9. And this is the number of them] Had they not beene things of great price and uſe, they would not have beene numbered, Cant. 6. 8. The Queenes and Concubines are numbered how many; but not the Virgins, that bring not forth fruit to God. Men uſe not to count how many pibbles they have in their yard, or piles of graſſe in their field, as they do how many pence in their purſe, or ſheepe in their fold. When the Great God ſhall count his peoples flittings, bottle up their teares (as ſweet water) book up their ſighs (as memorable matters) Pſal. 56. 8. ſhall we not ſay of them as the Jewes did of Lazarus, when Jeſus wept, Behold how he loves them? When the very haires of their head are all numbered, Matth. 10. 30. ſo that not one of them falleth to the ground without their heavenly Father, what ſtore think we, ſetteth He by their perſons, by their performances? I know thy work, and thy labour, Rev. 2. 19. I pitie this people, they have beene with me now three dayes, and faſting they are, and farre from home, and faint they may, if ſent away empty, Matth. 15. 32. Lo, is not this a wonderful condeſcenſion, that Chriſt ſhould conſider tantus tantillos & tales, and reckon every circumſtance of their ſervice ſo particularly and punctually, that he might give to every man according to his works? Oh his Jewels, his book of remembrance, &c. Mal. 3. 16, 17! See the Notes there.

Thirty chargers] Serving to hold ſuch parts of the Sacrifices as were to be eaten by the Prieſts and others.

Nine and twenty knives] Sacrificing knives, richly hafted.

Verſe 10. Thirty baſins of gold] Theſe were to hold the ſprinkling-water, or blood.

And other veſſels] Of ſundry ſorts, whereof ſee 1 Kings 7. 50.

Verſe 11. All the veſſels of gold and of ſilver] Thoſe beſt of mettals, and therefore fitteſt for his uſe and ſervice, who is Good, Pſal. 106. 1. Better, Pſal. 108. 9. Beſt, Phil. 1. 23. Goodneſſe it ſelf, Matth. 19. 17. Whoſe great purſe is the Earth, with All that is either on it or in it, Pſal. 24. 1. whoſe great ſtorehouſe are the Stars and Planets, the Sun eſpecially making theſe mettals, and cauſing plenty, Deut. 28. 12. Let us laviſh out of the the bag, and when we have honoured the Lord with the Beſt of our beſt, cry out with David, Of thine owne, Lord, have we given thee, and with Juſtinian, dedicating a very rich Communion-table, τὰ σὰ ἐκ τῶν σῶν σοὶ προσφέρομεν ὁ δῶρος αὖ τῷ &c. 1 Chron. 29 : 6 Cedren.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. Now theſe are the children of the province]

THat is, of Judæa now a Province, though formerly a Princeſſe; now ſolitary and tributary that was once populous and great among the Nations, Lam. 1. 1. Medinah: the word here rendered Province, ſometimes ſignifieth Metropolis, aliis jus dicens, a place that giveth Lawes to other places, and ſo Judæa in her flouriſh had beene. See chap. 4. 20. But now it was otherwiſe, and ſo it is at this day, not onely with Judæa, but with other renowned Empires and Kingdomes not a few, all which (together with moſt of thoſe Churches and places ſo much mentioned in Scripture) are ſwallowed up in the greatneſſe of the Turkiſh Empire. That Medina a City in Arabia (where Mahomet lieth buried, & where his Sepulchre is no leſſe viſited then is Chriſts Sepulchre at Jeruſalem) holdeth this Medina in hard ſubjection; making her children pay for the very heads they weare; and ſo grievouſly afflicting them, that they have cauſe enough to take up a new Jeremies Elegie over their doleful captivity. Shindler.

That went up out of the captivity] That lifted themſelves in Babylon, to go up. Which if any failed to do, (as by comparing verſe 5. of this chapter, with Nehem. 7. 10. it appeareth ſome did) it was becauſe either they changed their minds, or their lives, before they came there. When that Noble Marqueſſe Galeacius Caracciolus ſet forward for Geneva, ſome of his moſt familiar friends promiſed and vowed to accompany him thither; But divers of them, when they came to the borders of Italy, turned back again, &c. and ſo might many of theſe ingagers, magis amantes mundi delicias, quàm Chriſti divitias, & graviorem ducentes jacturam regionis, quàm religionis. His life by Crashaw.

Which had beene carried away] But had Gods promiſe, that they ſhould returne, be built up, planted, and not rooted out, Jer. 24. 6. and his command to marry and beget children, Jer. 29. 6. which ſhould inherit the promiſes; for they are good ſure-hold.

Whom Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon] That Metus Orbis, & flagellum Dei, as Attilas King of Hunnes proudly ſtiled himſelf, that is, The Terrour of the world, and ſcourge in Gods hand. See Eſay 10. 5. That, Ira Dei & Orbis Vaſtitas, as Tamerlan loved to be called, The wrath of God, and ruine of the world. Gualth. in Hab. 2. Eucholc.

Had carried away to Babylon] As to his Lions-den, Nah. 2. 10. but God ſent from heaven and ſaved them with ſuch a mighty ſalvation, as eclipſed that deliverance out of Egypt, Jer. 23. 7, 8.

Every one unto his City] Appointed him by the preſent Governours. For during their abode in Babylon Judæa lay utterly waſte and uninhabited. The Land kept her Sabbaths, reſting from tillage, and God by a wonderful providence, kept the roome empty till the returne of the Natives.

Verſe 2. That came with Zerubbabel] That famous Prince of Judah, chap. 1. 8. Governour of Judah, Hag. 1. 1. who was borne in Babylon, and accordingly had a Babylonian name. His hands laid the foundation of the ſecond Temple, his hands alſo finiſhed, Zech. 4. 9. whence ſome conclude that the Lord gave him a life much longer then ordinary. His children ſhall not to bed, till their work be done.

Jeſhua] This was that Jehoſhuah the High Prieſt, the great aſſiſtant of Zerubbabel in building the Temple, chap. 5. 1. Hag. 1. 14. Theſe were thoſe faithful Witneſſes of God in their generation, as before them had beene Moſes and Aaron, Elijah and Eliſha, and as after them Paul and Barnabas, Luther and Melanchthon, Oecolampadius and Zuinglius, &c. Chriſt ſent out his Diſciples by two and two: for two is better then one, and why? See Eccleſ. 4. 9, 10, 11, 12.

Nehemiah, Saraiah, Reelaiah, Mordecai] Not that famous Nehemiah, nor that renowned Mordecai ſo much ſpoken of in the book of Eſther, but others of the ſame name. Reaſons ſee in Maſter Pembles Period of the Perſian Monarchy, pag. 30, 31.

Bilſhan, Miſpar, Biguai, Rehum, Baanah] Theſe were all of them Guides and Gover-nours to the reſt, eminent and eximious. To whom in Nehemiah is added a twelfth man, Nahumani by name, who better bethought himſelf belike: and having anſwered with that young man in the Goſpel, and ſaid, I will not, yet afterwards repented and went. Nunquam

Mat. 21. 29, 30. ſerò, ſi ſeriò. This was better then thoſe many that anſwered and ſaid, We go, Sir, and yet went not.

The number of the men of the people of Iſrael] The former were Names, men of renown in the Congregation (confer Acts 1. 15. Rev. 3. 3.) The reſt that follow are but Numbers, οἱ πολλοί. Nos numeri ſumus, &c. men of common condition, the Many, who are ſet down in the ſequel of the chapter.

Ver. 3. The children of Paroſh] Queſtion is here made by ſome, whether this and other like Chapters that are nothing but names and numbers, ſhould be read in courſe, ſith they may ſeeme to be of no great uſe to us? To this Chryſoſtome anſwereth, In ſacris libris nihil contemnatur aut obiter prætereatur, etiamſi nomina recenſeantur, that is, Let no part of holy Scripture be ſlighted or skipped over, no, though we meet with nothing but names onely. But foraſmuch as there is never a leaf, nay, line, nay, letter in Gods book, that is not pure, precious, and profitable, Prov. 30. 5. Pſal. 12. 6. 2 Tim. 3. 16. (The Rabbines have a ſaying, that there is a mountaine of ſenſe hanging upon every apex or tittle of the Word of God) therefore muſt we reade all in obedience to Him, who hath written for us theſe excellent things in counſel and knowledge, Prov. 22. 20. and if any thing be yet hid, God ſhall reveale even this unto us, Phil. 3. 15. Joſeph underſtood not his owne dreames at firſt, till he ſaw his brethren proſtrate before him; Then Joſeph remembred the dreames that he dreamed of them, Gen. 42. 9. The Diſciples conceived not, beleeved not many things done by and to their Maſter, till he was glorified, and they farther illightened, John 2. 22. and 12. 6. Surely if Hippocrates could ſay of Phyſick, that ἔστιν μικρὸν, ἐστὶν καταφρονητέον. there was nothing to be accounted little in it, nothing contemptible; how much more may we ſay the ſame of Divinity, and of the Scriptures?

Verſe 43. The Nethinims] i. e. Deodati, men given to God, devoted to the ſervice of his houſe. Theſe were thoſe Gibeonites that, having ſaved their lives by a lie, were made drawers of water to the Temple for a puniſhment. God made this croſſe a mercy; for the nearer they were to the Church, the nearer to God. Their employment was to Joſh. 9. 21. miniſter to the Levites, as the Levites did to the Prieſts: and this gave them occaſion to partake of the things of God, and to behold his face in righteouſneſſe.

Verſe 55. The children of Solomons ſervants] Theſe alſo were ſtrangers, that had beene employed by Solomon, and becoming Proſelytes, were incorporated into the Common-wealth of Iſrael. God is no reſpecter of perſons, Acts 10. 33. He takes where he likes; ſtrangers ſhall ſit downe with Abraham, Iſaac and Jacob, when the children of the Kingdome ſhall be caſt out, Matth. 8. 11, 12. Solomons ſervants may have a name and a naile in Gods houſe, when his ſonnes may be excluded. Jether an Iſhmaelite, 1 Chron. 7. 17. may become an Iſraelite, 2 Sam. 17. 25. and Araunah the Jebuſite, an exemplary Proſelyte, Zach. 9. 7.

Verſe 59. And theſe were they which went up from Telmela Tel-harſa Cherub, &c.] Places in Chaldæa, where theſe Jewes were ſcattered; as at this day their poſterity are up and downe in Turkie, and ſome parts of Chriſtendome, a diſ-jected and deſpiſed people.

Verſe 61. And was called after their name] After the name of his wives father, that Noble Gileadite; as holding it a greater honour to be allied to Barzillai, then to be looked upon as a Prieſt. It was therefore juſt upon ſuch proud and inſolent people, that as they had once ſcorned the Prieſthood, ſo the Prieſthood ſhould now ſcorne them.

Verſe 62. But they were not found] They could not prove themſelves to be of the ſeed of Aaron: and were therefore worthily turn'd off. So ſhall all be at the laſt day, that are not written among the living in Jeruſalem, that are not regiſtred in the Lambs book of life, that have beene aſhamed of Chriſt and of his words, Mar. 8. 38.

Verſe 63. And the Tirſhata ſaid unto them] i. e. Zerubbabel the chief Magiſtrate, a man of great power, and no leſſe courage, who would not be guilty of paſſive injuſtice.

That they ſhould not eate of the moſt holy things] Make a gaine of the Prieſthood, which they had ſleighted when nothing was to be got by it. Now they ſhould neither do the work, nor have the meanes. Cajetan commenting upon Matthew, then when the French ſouldi-ſouldiers brake into Rome, and made a ſcorne and prey of the Popiſh Clergy, acknowledgeth that it was a juſt hand of God upon them, becauſe they were growne unſavoury ſalt, good for little elſe, but to look after the rites and revenues of the Church.

Till there ſtood up a Prieſt with Urim and Thummim] That is, Never, or not in haſte. Some faint hopes the Governour might have that ſuch an Ephod with Urim and Thummim, as was now burnt or otherwiſe loſt, might be had againe; but it ſeemed not very likely. The great High-Prieſt was now at hand, and the Ceremonials to ceaſe ſhortly.

Verſe 64. Fourty and two thouſand] Ten or twelve thouſand whereof ſeeme to be of the ten tribes that were firſt carried captive, and together with Judah and Benjamin made up that Δωδεκάφυλον Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, Acts 26. 7.

Verſe 65. Beſides their ſervants, &c.] Their Maſters neceſſary inſtruments, καὶ ὅλως ἐκείνων ſaith Ariſtotle, and wholly at their command. See Prov. 12.9,

Two hundred ſinging men and ſinging women] That ſang at feaſts and funerals. See Eccleſ. 2. 8. Theſe perhaps might have beene as well ſpared. Nam ad quod proſunt ejuſmodi artes, (ſaith one?) & quis ejuſmodi hominum eas profitentium uſus, niſi ut aliis ſint oneri, & cibum potumque egenorum, ſicut locuſtæ, prærodant atque conſumant? Funccius.

Verſe 68. And ſome of the chief] And but ſome. All were not alike enlarged, or enabled.

Verſe 69. They gave after their ability] Men muſt take heed they ſtretch not beyond the ſtaple, and ſo marre all. But few are herein faulty: Few Macedonians, that, to their power and beyond, are willing of themſelves, &c. 2 Cor. 8. 3. Rari quippe boni.

Threeſcore and one thouſand drams of gold] That is, nineteene thouſand ſixty two pounds ten ſhillings.

And five thouſand pounds of ſilver] i. e. Fifteene thouſand pounds ſterling, Theſe ſummes of money, together with the coſtly Prieſts garments, though they fall far ſhort of what was provided and given in Davids dayes, 1 Chron. 22. and 29. towards the building of the firſt Temple; yet, conſidering the minde of this poore people, and their ſmall ability, this gift was as great in Gods account. See Luke 21. 1, 2. The widows mite was beyond the rich mans magnificence; becauſe it came out of a richer minde.

Verſe 70. And ſome of the people] For not halfe of them, as may be probably thought, returned: but condemned the reſt of raſhneſſe and weakneſſe, to their no ſmall prejudice.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. And when the ſeventh moneth was come]

HEb. And the ſeventh moneth approached; a moneth of many feſtivities, Levit. 23. 24, 27, 34. 1 Kings 8. 2. and ſo, to the good, a foretaſte of eternal life, where it ſhall be holiday every day, where they have no reſt (and yet no unreſt) praiſing the God of heaven, for heavens happineſſe, Pſal. 136. (the ſame that theſe good ſouls ſang together, verſe 11. of this Chapter) God is praiſed five and twenty times for his mercies: but the concluſion is, O give thanks unto the God of heaven, &c. Chriſt hath caſt up ſuch a cauſway to it, that we may well travel thither from all coaſts, as theſe Jewes did to Jeruſalem from all their Cities. Rev. 4.

As one man to Jeruſalem] There to ſerve the Lord with one ſhoulder, Zeph. 3. 9. neither counted they it any trouble to travel thither, though they were ſcarce yet warme in their neſts, as we ſay.

Then ſtood up Joſhua] Miniſters, of all others ſhould be moſt forward and forth-putting: ready preſt and prepared to every good work, as patterns to the people, who are led more by their eyes then by their ears, &c.

And Zerubbabel the ſonne of Shealtiel] Theſe two ever went hand in hand: and hence the work ſo proſpered in their hand. It muſt needs be ſo (ſaid Queene Elizabeth once to the Suffolk-gentlemen who came to meet her with their Miniſters by their ſides) where the Word and the Sword go together.

And builded the Altar of the God of Iſrael] Which therefore, in their father Jacobs ſenſe, Gen. 33. 20. they might ſafely have called El, Elohe-Iſrael, that is, God, the God of Iſrael, Iſrael, putting the ſigne for the thing ſignified. Thus alſo the Arke is called Gods face, Pſal. 105. 4. Yea, even God himſelf, Pſal. 132. 5.

As it is written in the Law of Moſes] This was the rule they wrought by. God requireth to have a reaſonable ſervice, Rom. 12. 1. ſuch as whereof we can render a reaſon out of his Word; he hateth a Samaritan ſervice, John 4. 22. and will not endure Popiſh Will-worſhip: Who required thoſe things at their hands, their Altars, Crucifixes, Penances, Pilgrimages, &c? The whole number of the Beaſt is but the number of a man, Rev. 13. 18. Men will have it ſo, and this is the ſumme of all Popiſh religion. All their ſuperſtructions are humane inventions.

Moſes the man of God] The Prophet, the Law-giver, a man of much communion with God above any other, Num. 12. 8. One calleth him heavens Chancellour.

Verſe 3. And they ſet the Altar upon his baſes] Upon the old foundation in the Prieſts Courts, being glad of any place, where to worſhip God joyntly and publikely: for Temple, as yet, there was none. Our worſhip-ſcorners are rightly ſtiled by one, The laſt brood of Beelzebub.

For fear was upon them] Though that was a lewd ſpeech of the Poet Statius, Primus in orbe Deos fecit Timor, It was timorouſneſſe that firſt made men religious; yet there's no queſtion, but fear of danger driveth men to God, as it did theſe here. Their malignant neighbours bandying and bending their forces againſt them, make them haſten up an Altar, that they might get God on their ſide, and run to him reconciled, what ever evil ſhould befall them. Be not thou a terrour to me Lord, ſaith holy Jeremy, chap. 17. 17. and then I fear no creature. Let us ſing the 46. Pſalme (ſaid Luther once in a great ſtrait) and then let the Devil do his worſt. What time I am afraid, I will truſt in thee, Pſal. 56. 3. Some read the text thus, Though fear was upon them, yet that hindered not their ſetting up Gods Altar: but they brake through all diſcouragements, and did their duty. It is well obſerved that the very light of Nature taught Heathens, that the ſervices they performed to their gods with peril and hazard to themſelves, were beſt accepted. Caius Fabius ventured thorough the enemies camp to offer a ſolemne anniverſary ſacrifice, and returned in ſafety: ſatis ſperans (ſaith the Hiſtorian) propitios fore Deos, quorum cultum ne mortis quidem metu prohibitus intermiſiſſet, truſting that in ſuch a caſe his gods would ſecure him. When Numa (the ſecond King of the Romanes) heard, as he was ſacrificing, that the enemies were coming, he made this anſwer, At ego rem divinam facio: If God be for us, who ſhall be againſt us?

Εγὼ δὲ θύω. Plur.

And they offered burnt-offerings thereon] That their ſinnes might be expiated, and their perſons protected. The Ceremonial Law was Chriſt in figure, it was their Goſpel.

Verſe 4. They kept alſo the feaſt of Tabernacles] Or boothes, built of boughs or branches of thick trees, Nehem. 8. 15. in a grateful memorial of Gods gracious preſervation of them in the Wilderneſſe, where they dwelt in tents or tabernacles. It ſignified alſo (the Prophet Zachary being interpreter, chap. 14. 16, 17, 18, 19.) that the remembrance of our redemption by Chriſt, ſhould be perpetuated with all ſpiritual gladneſſe.

By number, according to the cuſtome] There is an elegancie in the Original; the Book of God hath many ſuch, as I have elſewhere noted.

As the duty of every day required] Heb. The matter of the day in his day. Here we are all travellers, having no certaine habitation, Heb. 11. 13. ξενῶται, 1 Cor. 4. 11. Let us account duty a debt, and be daily doing at it. Let us keep holy day, keep the Feaſt, 1 Cor. 5. 8. Let us be in the feare of the Lord all the day long, Prov. 23. 17.

ἑορτάζωμεν.

Verſe 5. And afterward offered] Finding a flote of holy affections in their hearts, they paſſed from one good exerciſe to another, and were indefatigable in the Lords work. David finding ſuch an heat and height in his people, prayes God to keep it ever in the imagination of the thoughts of their hearts, which he knew well to be fickle and falſe, 1 Chron. 29. 18.

Both of the new-moones] Kept in thankfulneſſe to God for their time renewed upon them, from moneth to moneth, and his mercies every morning, and moment.

And of all the ſet-feaſts of the Lord that were conſecrated] By an holy reſting both from corporall labour, and from ſpirituall idleneſſe.

A free will offering] See the note on Chap. 1. 4.

Ver. 6. From the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth] Which was the feaſt of blowing of trumpets, ſignifying the juſt mans joyfulneſſe, and ſerving to put life and ſpirit into them.

Began

Began they to offer.] And ſo held on: for this moneth had as many feaſts in it as were celebrated in all the yeare beſides: So as the Sabbath was the Queen of dayes, ſo was this of moneths. See the note on verſe 1. Regina dierum.

But the foundation of the Temple.] Heb. Of the Kingly Palace, aula baſilica, uſed here and elſewhere for the place where Gods honour dwelleth. God is a great King, Mal. 1. 14. and requires to be ſerved like himſelfe.

Was not yet laid] Heb. Was not yet founded. Nevertheleſſe they would be worſhipping God as they could at an Altar, till they had a Temple. All the power of Perſia could not keep God and Daniel aſunder: the trade of godlineſſe never ſtandeth ſtill. Demoſthenes could ſay that an heart beautified with piety, juſtice and modeſty, is the beſt Temple, and to God moſt acceptable. Dan. 6. Contra Ariſt.

Verſ. 7. They gave mony alſo unto the Maſons and Carpenters.] Who uſually get it and eate it, laying up little: their life is called the life of their hands, becauſe maintained by the labour of their hands: day-wages they muſt have, or they cannot ſubſiſt; and theſe good Jews ſpared for no coſt, but gave mony out of the bag freely to theſe workmen. Idolaters care not what coſt they caſt away upon their dumb idols: Deum alienum dotant, ſo ſome read that text, Pſal. 16. 4. The Turkiſh Stately Moſchees, and Popiſh Baſilicæ ſtuffed with vowed preſents and memories (as they call them,) are things known to all. When the famous Artificer Phydias adviſed the Athenians to make the ſtatue of Minerva rather of marble then of ivory, 1. Becauſe more durable; this paſſed with allowance, 2. Becauſe leſſe chargeable; this they abhorred, and bade him ſay no more of ſuch a matter. Eſ. y 57. 10.

And meat, and drink, and oile] More prized by the Tyrians and Sidonians then money, becauſe their Countrey was nouriſhed by this Countrey, Acts 12. 20. as being barren, and not bringing forth proviſion enough for themſelves. Diogenes deeply taxed the folly of his Athenians, that prized money ſo much, and bread-corne ſo little: when as the life of man could be without that, but not without the other.

To bring Cedar-trees] Smooth and durable, and every way fit for faire buildings: and therefore made choice of by God himſelf, 2 Sam. 7. 7. by Solomon for the firſt Temple, 1 Kings 5. 6. and by theſe Jewes for the ſecond. The Temple of Diana at Epheſus was likewiſe built of Cedar: as the Devil affecteth to be Gods ape. Vitruvius.

To the Sea of Joppa] This was an haven-towne, Joſh. 19. 46. Acts 9. 43. Jon. 1. 3. and hath its name à pulchritudine & elegantiâ, from its beauty and bravery, ſuch as draweth love and liking. It might have beene called The faire havens, as well as that place nigh unto the City of Laſea, Acts 27. 8. which retaineth the ſame name unto this day.

According to the grant] Or licenſe, which they took in the largeſt extent, as we alſo ought to do Gods gracious promiſes. Promiſſa ſunt amplianda; and we muſt labour to ſee our own names written in them.

Verſe 8. To ſet forward the work] To urge the continuance of it to the end, as the word ſignifieth; to encourage and call upon the workmen to haſten and go thorough-ſtitch: to be as ſo many Ἐπιστάται, that the buſineſſe might go on end, and come to a good upſhot.

Verſe 9. Then ſtood Jeſhua] Not the High-Prieſt, but another, a Levite.

The ſonnes of Henadad with their ſonnes] A generation of godly and active men in the things of God, See Nehem. 3. 18. 24. and 10. 9. Grace is not hereditary, the white Halegens hatch black young ones: Heroum filii noxæ. Nevertheleſſe, nurture helpeth nature: and good men ſtrive to mend that by education, which they have marred by propagation. They cocker not, but correct their children; they pray for them, and drop good principles into them; they ſmooth them as arrowes, Pſal. 128. 3, 4. getting off the knottineſſe of their nature; and leave not till they ſee them the work of Gods hands, ſo as to ſanctifie the holy One of Jacob, and to feare the God of Iſrael, Eſay 29. 23. Theſe ſonnes of Henadad, as they attended upon the Temple-work, ſo themſelves were as the poliſhed corners of the Temple, Pſal. 144. 12.

Verſe 10. With trumpets] Theſe were uſed on all occaſions of rejoycing.

With Cymbals] Inſtruments of a ſhrill ſound, uſed alſo by the Heathens at offering of their ſacrifices. So, in Imitation of the Urim and Thummim, Exod. 28. 30. the Egyptian High-Prieſt wore about his neck a ſapphire-ſtone, which was called Ἀλήθεια. Satan Dei Mimus, ut & Memus. See before verſe 7. Ælian. hiſt. ult.

After the ordinance of David] He very much added to the Church-muſick. He likewiſe wiſe anticipated the age of the Prieſts, entring into their ſervice five yeares earlier then the Moſaical appointment.

Verſe 11. And they ſang together by courſe] Amant alterna Camœnæ: Antiphonies are of ancient uſe.

In praiſing and giving thanks] Men praiſe God for his excellencies, thank him for his benefits.

Becauſe he is good] So they ſang Davids Pſalmes a good warrant for us ſo to do. Heretofore happy were they held, that could found out aliquid Davidicum: Now ſome have found out new inventions.

Verſe 12. Who were ancient men] From ſeventy years of age, and upwards: for it was but threeſcore years before this, that the Temple was burnt.

Wept with a loud voice] Conſidering the diſproportion. Let us do the like, when we compare our ſtate of Creation with our ſtate of Corruption.

Verſe 13. The noiſe of the ſhout of joy from the noiſe, &c.] Nam partim jubilabant, partim ejulabant. Our joyes while we are here, will be mixt joyes. Let thoſe that would have joyes unſpeakable, ſtir up ſighes unutterable.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. Now when the adverſaries of Judah]

ARrouſed by thoſe loud acclamations and out-cries, chap. 3. 12, 13. Theſe adverſaries were thoſe Samaritans, chap. 3. 3. a kinde of mongrels that wore Religion as a cloak, which they either put on, or threw off at pleaſure, and as occaſion required. Satan (ſaith one) doth not alwayes appear in one and the ſame faſhion: but hath as many ſeverall ſhapes as Proteus among the Poets. Here he pretends devotion to his miſchievous deſignes, but was fruſtrated.

That the children of the captivity] Iſtos deportatos, by way of contempt as Junius rendereth it: As if the Jews were therefore hated of God, becauſe they had beene tranſported, captivated. Tully paſſeth the ſame cenſure of them in his Oration, pro L. Flacco: Iſta gens quàm chara diis immortalibus eſſet docuit, quòd eſt victa, quòd elocata, quòd ſervata. It appears how dear to God they be by their oft-captivities.

Verſe 2. Let us build with you] Craftily and treacherouſly do they offer their coſt and paines, ut illis intermixti perſonas committerent, atque ita opus interverterent, ſaith one well; that mingling with them, they might ſet them together by the eares, and ſo put a ſtop to the work. Thus Julian, to ſpight the Chriſtians, firſt ſet the Jewes awork to rebuild their Temple: and when that would not be, he called home the Arian-Biſhops out of baniſhment, to breed new broyles in the Church. The Jeſuites have a practice at this day, of running over to the Lutheran Church, pretending to be Converts, and to build with them: but it is onely to keep up that bitter contention that is betweene the Calviniſts and the Lutherans. And what ill offices they do amongſt us at this day to heighten our diviſions, and hinder the Reformation (by their wiles, much enſnared and hindered) good men are very ſenſible of. The Lord detect and defeat them.

Socrat. Theodor.

For we ſeeke your God, as ye do] Nay, not as ye do. See 2 Kings 17. 32, 33, 34. they feared the Lord, not filially, but for his Lions: as the old Romanes worſhipped their Veiones, leſt they ſhould hurt them: and as the Caffrani (a people in India) worſhip Devils in moſt terrible figure, that they may not puniſh them.

Since the dayes of Eſar-haddon] Sonne and ſucceſſour to Sennacherib, 2 Kings 19. 37. grand-ſon to Salmaneſer: after whom, it ſeemes, he brought a new colony into the Land of Samaria, who proved deadly enemies to Gods people.

Verſe 3. But Zerubbabel and Jeſhua] Jeſhua would be one to keep them out, though they ſlighted him in their application to Zerubbabel and the chiefe of the fathers, verſe 2.

You have nothing to do with us] You ſhall neither conquer us, nor compound with us. This was right Roman reſolution. They were wont to ſay of cowards in Rome, that there was nothing Roman in them. I can never ſufficiently admire (ſaith one) the ſpeech of bleſſed Luther, who (though he was very earneſt to have the Communion adminiſtred in both kinds contrary to the Doctrine and cuſtome of Rome,) yet he profeſſeth, if the Pope

(as

(as Pope) commanded him to receive in both kinds, he would receive but in one kinde; leſt he ſhould ſeeme to receive the mark of the Beaſt. As for theſe Reconcilers, and Moderatours (ſaith another learned man) were they the wiſeſt under heaven, and ſhould live to the worlds end, they would be brought to their wits end, before they could accompliſh this works end, to make a reconciliation betwixt Rome and us. They have nothing to do with us to build an houſe unto our God. From ſuch ſtand off, ſaith the Apoſtle, 1 Tim. 6. 5. Say to them (when they offer their coſt and ſervice) as here. Pura Deus mens eſt: procul, ô procul eſte profani. This was one of thoſe ancient Lawes of the twelve tables among the Romanes, Impius ne audeto placare donis iram deorum, Let no profane perſon preſume to think to pacifie the gods with their pains, or preſents.

But we our ſelves together will build, &c.] This, the adverſaries call combination, conſpiracy, faction, ſedition, &c. See verſe 13. But what ſaith Tertullian? Cùm boni, cùm probi coeunt —— non eſt factio dicenda, ſed curia. Et è contrà, illis nomen factionis accommodandum eſt, qui in odium piorum & proborum conſpirant. When good men get together, and hold together, it is not to be called a faction, but a Court. As on to'ther ſide, they are to be counted factious, who conſpire againſt the godly, as theſe Malignants in the Text did. Apol. adverſ. gent. nuni. 520.

As King Cyrus, &c.] They had good authority for what they did, and they hold them to it.

Verſe 4. Then the people of the land] Who the nearer they came unto a conjunction with the Jewes in matters of Religion, the deeper hatred they bare them. Thus at this day, a Jew hates a Chriſtian worſe then he doth a Pagan; ſo doth a Turk hate a Perſian worſe then he doth a Chriſtian; a Papiſt, a Proteſtant, worſe then he doth a Turk: a Formalliſt, a Puritan, worſe then he doth a Papiſt. Odia Theologica ſunt acerbiſſima.

Weakened the hands of the people of Judah] Diſcouraged them all they could, endeavouring to transfuſe (as it were) a dead-palſie into their fingers, that they might ſurceaſe, or, at leaſt, ſlack their paines. Well might Solomon ſay, Wrath is cruel, and anger is outragious: but who can ſtand before envie? ſurely the venome of all vices is found in this ſharp-fanged malignity.

And troubled them in building] Heb. Kept ade about them, and terrified them. This was to do the work of their father the Devil, that troubler of Gods Iſrael (ad injuriam inferendam totus comparatus) ſet upon't to vex ſuch as begin but to build the Tower of godlineſſe, and to hinder them to the utmoſt. ὁ πονηρὸς?

Verſe 5. And hired Counſellours againſt them] But good Counſellours would not have beene hired, either to bolſter out a bad cauſe, or to out-face a good; to juſtifie the wicked for a reward, or to take away the righteouſneſſe of the righteous from him. There is a notable inſtance of this in Papinian a Pagan Counſellour. Thou mayeſt (ſaid he to Antoninus the fratricide,) command my neck to the block, but not my tongue to the barre. I prize not my life to the pleading of an ill cauſe. Theſe ſordida poſcinummia in the text, were none ſuch. Some think they were Courtiers and Counſellours to the King: ſuch as by whom the King was even bought and ſold, as Aurelian the good Emperour was; who might know nothing but as his Counſellours informed him. This made Alphonſus King of Arragon ſay, that Kings were herein moſt miſerable, that whereas they abounded with all things elſe, the truth of matters they could ſeldome come by. Spartian.

All the dayes of Cyrus King of Perſia] Who warring abroad, committed the government of his Kingdome to his ſonne Cambyſes a light and lewd loſſel, eaſily prevailed with to hinder ſo good a work.

Even untill the reigne of Darius] i. e. Of Darius Nothus (ſay ſome) the ſonne of Artaxerxes Longimanus (named verſe 7.) the father of Artaxerxes Mnemon. But they do better in my opinion, that underſtand the text of Darius Hiſtaſpis, who ſucceeded Cambyſes, and married his ſiſter; ſeeking to ingratiate with the people by ratifying whatſoever Cyrus had decreed, and this of the Temple among the reſt. See chap. 6.1. Pemble.

Verſe 6. And in the reigne of Ahaſhuerosh] That is, of Cambyſes, who is alſo called Artaxerxes in the next verſe: for theſe two names were given to many Kings of Perſia, like as Pharaoh was to the Kings of Egypt, as a title of honour. Ahaſhuerosh ſignifieth an hereditary Prince. Daniel calleth him the Prince of the Kingdome of Perſia. chap. 10. 13. becauſe he was Viceroy in his fathers abſence. Infamous he is for many lewd pranks (as that he killed his brother, and then his owne ſiſter, after he had firſt married her, and made a Law that any man might do the like) yet was he not ſo ungracious a ſonne to Cyrus, as our our Henry the ſeconds eldeſt ſonne was; whom he not onely crowned King during his owne life, but alſo, to do him honour at his Coronation, renounced the name of a King for that day, and (as Sewer) ſerved at the table. For which he was thus requited, My father ſaid he, is not diſhonoured by attending on me; for I am both a Kings and a Queens ſon, and ſo is not he.

In the beginning of his reigne] As loth to loſe time (Eſau began in the very womb to perſecute Jacob) and as taking their fitteſt ſeaſon, for granting of ſuits.

Wrote they an accuſation] Heb. a Satanical ſuggeſtion, a diabolical accuſation, hatcht in hell, and dictated by the Devil. He it is that acteth and agitateth the Saints adverſaries and accuſers; ſitting upon their tongues and pens, and ſetting an edge on them.

Verſe 7. And in the dayes of Artaxerxes] This ſeemes to be Cambyſes his Perſian name, as Ahaſhueroſh was his Chaldee name. It is as much as Bellator egregius, an excellent warriour. So Scipio was called Fulmen belli, the light-bolt of warre: Bajazet the great Turk, Gilderun, or lightning: Albert, Marqueſſe of Brandenburg, was called Achilles Teutonicus. Our black Prince was ſo named, not of his colour, but of his courage, and of his dreaded acts in battel: for he aſſailed no Nation which he over-came not; he beſieged no City which he took not. Cambyſes had great ſucceſſe in his wars, and added Egypt, and other Countries, to the Perſian Monarchy.

Turk. Hiſt.

Bucholc.

Speed.

Wrote Biſhlam Mithredath] Theſe were the King of Perſia's Toparches or Deputies, beyond the river Euphrates.

Written in the Syrian tongue] Called alſo the Chaldee, Babyloniſh and Aſſyrian; commonly ſpoken by the Jewes, who in the ſeventy years captivity loſt the purity of their owne language; like as the Latines alſo did, when the Gothes, Vandals and other barbarous Nations over-ran them, and mingled with them.

And interpreted in the Syrian tongue] i. e. with Syrian characters, Et Scriptura & lingua erat Syriaca, ut ſine interprete in aula regis intelligeretur, ſaith Shindler. It was ſo written that it might be underſtood at Court without an interpreter.

Verſe 8. Rehum the Chancellour] Or Preſident of the Councel. It is of the Chaldee termination: the whole hiſtory alſo following to chap. 6. 19. is Chaldee, tranſcribed, as ſome think, out of the rolls and regiſters of the Chaldees, and here inſerted.

Verſe 9. The Dinaites and the Apharſathkites, the Tarpalites] This was not unity, but conſpiracy of a rabble of rebels againſt God and his people. So Pſal. 83. 5, 6, &c. They have conſulted together with one conſent, they are confederate againſt thee. The Tabernacles of Edom and the Iſhmaelites of Moab, and the Hagarenes, &c. A whole legion of Devils could agree to enter into one poore man, to vex him; and to act as one, in that poſſeſſion.

Verſe 10. The great and noble Aſnapper] Some great Commander under the Aſſyrian Monarch. There is, they ſay, a greatneſſe Belluine, and a greatneſſe Genuine. Aſnapper, notwithſtanding his big-ſwoln titles, might be rather great then good; and more notable, then noble. Nobilitas ſola eſt atque unica virtus.

Juvenal.

On this ſide the river] That ancient river- the river Euphrates, which the more I ſee, the more I admire, ſaith one.

Verſe 11. Thy ſervants] Not thy ſubjects onely, but thine Officers.

Verſe 12. The rebellious and bad City] After ſo many years, doth Jeruſalem rue one perfidious act of Zedekiah: and having once beene treacherous, it ſtill hears, The rebellious and bad City, as if it had beene a very πανηγυρις, a profeſſed Sanctuary of roguery, (as the Jeſuites ſay of Geneva) and as Florus ſaith of the Temple at Jeruſalem, that it was impiæ gentis arcanum.

And have ſet up the walls thereof] This was no leſſe falſe then ſcandalous. But malice careth not how true the accuſation is, but how miſchievous.

And joyned the foundations] Chald. ſewed together. Or, rather theſe falſe-informers had ſewed a lie together with great Art, that it might ſeeme a truth, Pſal. 119. 69. The proud have forged a lie againſt me, aſſuunt mendacium mendacio, they have taught their tongues to ſpeak lies, Jer. 9. 5. and are Artiſts at it.

Verſe 13. Be it knowne now unto the King] q. d. This is no light buſineſſe, but of greateſt importance: and therefore fit to be noted and noticed.

Then will they not pay tole, tribute, &c.] This is an old device of the Devil and his Impes, to repreſent Gods people to the world as Antimagiſtratical, and diſturbers of the publike peace.

peace. Thus they dealt by the Primitive Chriſtians, who were the Emperours beſt ſubjects, and yielded them greateſt reſpect and profit. Thus Francis King of France pretended and profeſſed to the Princes of Germany (whoſe friendſhip he deſired) that he purſued the Lutherans with fire and ſword, for no other cauſe but for that they were Levellers, and enemies to civil government. This drew from Calvin (who was then but twenty five years of age) that golden book of his Inſtitutions of Chriſtian Religion, to free the Reformed Churches of that ſlurre and ſlander. The like was ſuggeſted by the Arminians in the Low-countries, and by the Epiſcopal party here. It was in Tacitus his time, unum crimen eorum qui crimine vacabant, the onely fault of ſuch as were indeed without fault.

And ſo thou ſhalt endamage the revenue] Diminiſh the annual Entrado's of the crowne which are well called the Kings ſtrength here; becauſe if theſe faile, little good can be done, either at home or abroad. Henry King of Navarre (afterwards King of France) was wont to ſay, that he was an husband without a wife, a ſouldier without money, and a King without a Kingdome. What would the King of Spaines greatneſſe ſoon come to, were it not for his yearly incomes, his mines of America?

Verſe 14. Now becauſe we have maintenance from the Kings Palace] Chaldee. Are ſalted with the ſalt of the Palace, Salarium de regis palatio percipimus, have our ſalary from the Court, as Junius rendereth it. The great uſe of ſalt makes it here put for all kinde of commodity: like as bread is called panis, as if it were τὸ πᾶν, The all, and whole of our ſuſtenance, Deut. 8. 3.

And it was not meet for us to ſee the Kings diſhonour] Chald. Nakednеſſe, privities, which uncovered, cauſe contempt, as it befell Noah in his drunkenneſſe: and the King of Spaine, when by Queene Elizabeth proclaimed Bankrupt.

Therefore have we ſent and certified the King] As knowing that Beneficium poſtulat officium; Bounty commands duty. Ingratitude is a monſter in nature, a ſoleciſme in good manners, &c. Lycurgus would make no Law againſt it, becauſe he held that none could be ſo unreaſonable, as to be guilty of it. Yet Alphonſus complained of his ungrateful Courtiers; and ſo did Frederick the third, Emperour of Germany. Queen Elizabeth alſo ſaid, that in truſt ſhe had oft found treaſon. That traytor Parry had vowed her death, although he had beene condemned for burglary, and ſaved by her pardon. Speed.

Verſe 15. In the book of the Records] Chald. Of the Remembrances, that is, the Chronicles uſual in all Kingdomes.

And that this City is a rebellious City] See the Note on verſe 12. and learne, that fidelity to governours is ever both ſafe and honourable. Zedekiah's falſifying his oath to the King of Babylon, was the overthrow of that Common-wealth. See what God himſelf ſaith, not without great indignation, Ezek. 17. 18. Seeing he (Zedekiah) deſpiſed the oath, by breaking the Covenant (when loe he had given his hand) and hath done all theſe things, he ſhall not eſcape.

Verſe 16. We certifie the King] They doubt not of audience, whileſt they ſang a ſong of Utile; which therefore they thus ſet on with more confidence then charity.

Verſe 17. Peace, and at ſuch a time] As the Latines ſaluting ſay, Ave, or Salve, the Greeks χαῖρε, ſo the Hebrews and Syrians ſay, Shalom lach, that is, Peace be to thee. The Turks ſalutation at this day alſo is, Salaum aleek; the reply Aleek Salaum, Peace is a complexive bleſſing. Hieron. Blount.

Verſe 18. Hath beene plainly read before us] This in the general was commendable: but he ſhould have reſerved (as Alexander uſed to do) τὸν ἑτέρωθεν, One eare free; and have heard both parties.

Verſe 19. Hath made inſurrection againſt Kings] Chald. Lift up it ſelf againſt Kings. Pride is painted with a triple crowne on her head; Upon the firſt whereof is written Tranſcendo; upon the ſecond, Non obedio; upon the third, Perturbo. Wat Tyler the rebel dared to ſay, that all the Lawes of England ſhould come out of his mouth. Speed.

Verſe 20. Beyond the river] Euphrates the boundary of Solomons Empire, 1 Kings 4. 21, 24. as it was alſo promiſed, Geneſis 15. 18. Exod. 23. 31. Deut. 11. 24. Joſhuah 1. 4.

Verſe 21. Give you now commandment] Chald. Make a Decree: which yet did but carry on Gods Decree: for while perſecutors ſit backward to his command, they row forwards to his Decree.

Verſe 22. Take heed now that ye faile not] This was to ſpurre a free-horſe: like as letters were ſent from King Philip and Queene Mary to Biſhop Bonner, complaining that Hereticks were not ſo reformed as they ſhould be, and exhorting him to more diligence.

Eucholcer. Why ſhould dammage grow] Take heed of that howſoever. Multi reges graviorem ducunt jacturam regionis, quàm religionis, &c.

Bern. Acts & Mon. 1562. Verſe 23. They went up in haſte] Perurgente diabolo, the Devil driving them, and their owne malicious diſpoſitions egging them thereunto. So, when Queene Mary lay a dying, Harpsfeild Arch-deacon of Canterbury being at London, made all poſt-haſte home to diſpatch thoſe Martyrs, whom he had then in his cruel cuſtody. So ambitious are wicked men of hell, they take long ſtrides, and mend their pace, as if they feared, leſt it ſhould be taken up before they come thither.

Verſe. 24. Then ceaſed the work of the houſe of God] And now the adverſaries have got the ball on the foot, thinking to carry the game before them: But the triumphing of the wicked is ſhort, Job 20.5. and that they proſper at all in their deſignes, it is non ad exitium, ſed ad exercitium Sanctorum; not for the ruine of the Church, but for the exerciſe of the faith and patience of Gods people.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. Then the Prophets]

HE that is now called a Prophet, was before-time called a Seer, 1 Sam. 9. 9. becauſe his eyes were illightened, Num. 24. 3. and he ſaw viſions of God, Ezek. 1. 1. Dan. 1. 17, Prophets they were afterwards called, that is, Interpreters of Gods will by his command, Exod. 7. 1. Aaron thy brother ſhall be thy Prophet, that is, thine Interpreter. By the mouth of theſe holy Prophets God ſpake to his people in all ages, Luke 1. 70. Yet not without ſome intermiſſions of Propheſie, as the Church complaineth, Pſal. 74. 9. till that Cathimath Chazon (as the Jewes call it) the ſealing up of Propheſie, which they place betweene the Prophet Malachi, and John Baptiſt, who was more then a Prophet. The Original word Nabi, ſignifieth one that, from the inward counſel of God uttereth Oracles.

Haggai the Prophet] Who was not an Angel incarnate, as Origen and Hierom held; but a young Saint (as Epiphanius deſcribeth him) and might therefore well be an old Angel, if he lived to be old. See more of him Hag. 1. 1. with the note there.

Juvenis admodum ex Babylone profectus eſt Hieroſolymam, &c. Epiph. lib. de Proph. vit.

And Zechariah the ſonne of Iddo] That is, of Barachiah the ſonne of Iddo, Zech. 1. 1. See the Note there. Theſe two God ſent within two moneths one of another, in the eighteenth year of the peoples returne out of Babylon; which fell out to be in the ſecond year of the reigne of Darius Hyſtaſpes, and in the three thouſand four hundred fourty and fourth year of the world, according to Funccius his Chronology. Chriſt uſually ſent his Prophets and Apoſtles by couples, for mutual comfort, and greater confirmation.

τὰ τῦ Θεῦ πρεσβύτερος ἢ τὰ τῶν ἀνθρώπων. Herodot. Mat. 22. 21. Propheſied unto the Jewes] Who had brought a judgement of ſore famine upon themſelves by their ſlackneſſe and backwardneſſe to rebuild the Houſe of God, Hag. 1. 4, 6. See the Notes there; and learne of the Heathen Hiſtorian, to preferre Gods intereſt before thine owne, or elſe to look for his curſe. For he is a great King, and ſtands upon his ſeniority, Mal. 1. 14. he will have us firſt to ſeeke his Kingdome, Matth. 6. 33. and to give unto God the things that are Gods, or we ſhall hear of him, to our ſmall comfort.

In the name of the God of Iſrael] Who both authorized and enabled them: God ſendeth none whom He gifteth not. The Apoſtles alſo were Embaſſadours in the ſame name, 2 Cor. 5. 20. and ſo, Collegues to the Prophets, Luke 10. 16. (See 1 Pet. 1. 12.) Angels admiring the matter o their Ambaſſie, and their happy harmony.

Even unto them] Who yet were very little amended by their ſeventy years captivity. Afflictions (Gods hammers) had but beaten upon cold iron, (as it were) as appears by this Hiſtory, and by the Propheſies of Haggai and Zechariah; whom for his labour and love to their ſouls, they afterwards ſlew betwixt the Temple and the Altar, Matth. 23. 35. ſerving him as Hercules did his Tutour Linus, whom, for a few ſharp words given him, he knockt on the head. Or, as their Anceſtours did the Prophet Eſay, whom they ſawed aſunder (ſaith Hierome out of the Rabbines) becauſe he had called them Princes of Sodom, and and people of Gomorrah, Esay 1. 10. This is the worlds wages to faithful Ministers.

Hoc ictu ceu didactro accepto Linus mortuus eſt. Buchol.

Verse 2. Then rose up Zerubbabel] Called before, Shazbazzar, the Tirshata. Philo calleth him Barachias. Men in those dayes had sundry names; which must be noted, or else confusion will not be avoyded; according to the notation of Zerubbabels name. It is said of him, that he brought back part of the people in the seventeenth year of his age; that he continued Governour fifty eight years (some say many more:) and that he began to make use of the Ministery of these Prophets in the thirty fourth year of his life. His rising up here implieth his forwardnesse, speed, and diligence in the work. Alienus à confusione, ut quidam perhibent.

And Jeshua the sonne of Jozadak] Colleague to Zerubbabel, and ἀμφοτερόπους, as Aaron was to Moses. This Jehoshua or Jeshua began his office of High-Priest in the yeare of the world 3428. and held it thirty six years, eight whereof were spent in an Embassage to Darius King of Persia, say Historians.

And began to build the house of God] i. e. They went on with the building, begun before, chap. 3. 10. and not forbidden by the King of Persia to be finished, onely he commanded them to desist from building the City, chap. 4. 12, 21. It was therefore the peoples sloth and self-seeking that kept back the work. See the Notes on Hag. 1. 2, 4.

And with them were the Prophets of God helping them] Verbo & opere, saith Junius: both by word and deed. The words of the wise are as goades, Eccles. 12. 11. pricking men forward to duty: and especially when themselves set sides and shoulders to the work, as haply these Prophets did, for the peoples greater encouragement. Exemplis sciolà hac ætate magis ædificant Ministri, quàm concionibus.

Verse 3. At the same time] So soone as ever they began but to build Gods house, they meet with opposition, which is still Evangelii Genius, saith Calvin, the bad Angel that haunts the cause of God, and dogges it at the heeles. Satan, out of his inveterate envie and enmity, can in no wise brook the propagation of the Truth, and dilatation of Christs curtaines. No sooner is Israel out of Egypt, but Pharaoh pursueth them. No sooner had Ezekiah kept that solemne Passeover, but Sennacherib comes up against him. Esau began to justle Jacob in the womb, that no time might be lost: and when he set his face homewards, Laban followes him with one troop, Esau meets him with another: both with hostile intentions. Dreame not of a delicacie in Gods wayes, but suffer hardship, as a good souldier of Jesus Christ.

And their companions] Cum collegio suo, Jun. a company of caytives combined to do mischief. See chap. 4. 9. with the Note.

Who hath commanded you to build this house?] Their owne houses they builded, and were never once questioned. All the while our Saviour lay in his fathers shop, and medled onely with carpenters chips, the Devil and his impes never troubled him; but when he was entering upon his Ministery, he is sharply assaulted in the Wildernesse. And when he took upon him to purge the Temple, and better informe the people, presently the Grandees came upon him as he was teaching, and said, By what authority doest thou these things? and who gave thee this authority? Matth. 21. 23. Like unto these were the questions put by the Papists to those noble Reformers, Luther, Zuinglius, &c. Farellus was, at his first coming to Geneva, more harshly handled, and by the Bishop and his Clerks thus accoasted: Quid tu, diabole nequissime, ad hanc civitatem perturbandam accessisti? What a Divel makest thou here, to make this disturbance, &c. and so was driven out of that City, where afterwards he wrought a glorious Reformation. Sculset. Annal.

Verse 4. Then said we unto them] We (Tatnai, Shether-Boznai and their companions) thus said, and thus enquired: see verse 16. and be sensible, how wicked men conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity, and their belly prepareth deceit, Job 15. 35. Not their heads onely are hammering it, but their bellies are hatching it: they take a kinde of contemplative kinde of pleasure in their wily projects, as the Epicure doth in his dainties, he delights to be acting them over aforehand.

What are the names of the men] They that are minded to do mischief unto others, will do what they can to know their names. I have heard of one (saith Master Fox) who being sent to the Christian Congregation in Queene Maries dayes in London to take their names, and to espy their doings, yet in being amongst them was converted, and cried them all mercy. Tremellius readeth this text otherwise, Then answered we them thus, and [told them] what were the names of the men, who builded this building. He meaneth, as I conceive, We were not ashamed or afraid to make them a round and ready answer, and to give them the names of our chieftains, Zerubbabel, Jeshua, Haggai, Zechariah, &c. This was Acts & Mon. fol. 1881.

better then that of thoſe cold friends to Religion, 1 Kings 18. 11. who (when the Prophet had ſaid, If the Lord be God, follow him) held their peace, and thought it good policy to reſerve themſelves. Better alſo then that of the bondſlaves of Antichriſt, who receive his mark in their hand, the which they may, as occaſion ſerveth, cover or diſcover. Rev. 13. 16. The ſervants of the God of heaven and earth (ſuch as were theſe in this Chapter, verſe 11.) receive his mark in their foreheads, where it may be ſeene and read of all, Rev. 7. 3. The Primitive Chriſtians were called in deriſion Confitentes: and Chryſoſtome ſaith of them, that they would not be kept from viſiting the Martyrs in priſon, tametſi multis terroribus, &c. though they were much threatened, and puniſhed for ſo doing.

Hom. de 2. Martyr.

Verſe 5. But the eye of their God was upon the Elders] Not the eye of his general providence onely (which like unto a well-drawne picture viewеth every one that cometh in to a roome) but the eye of his ſpecial grace and favour, Pſal. 34. 15. He looked upon them; as afterwards the Sonne of man ſtood and looked upon Saint Steven combating with his cruel perſecutors, and clapt him on the ſhoulders, as it were, ſaying, Cheare up, Vincenti dabo, &c. Acts. 7. 56. They alſo looked up to him, and were lightened: and their faces were not aſhamed, Pſal. 34. 5. Yea, they were ſteeled, as it were, and made more mettle-full: like as Moſes and Micaiah when they had once ſeene God in his favour, they cared not for the menaces of angry Monarchs.

That they could not cauſe them to ceaſe] Saints dare undertake and undergo any thing for the glory of their God. The heavens ſhall ſooner fall then I will go againſt my conſcience, ſaid that Martyr. In nothing be terrified by your adverſaries, Phil. 1. 28.

Till the matter came to Darius] Nor then neither; for he encouraged and furthered them, chap. 6.

And then they returned anſwer] Or, Then anſwer was returned from the Court, and the Jewes had a ſufficient authority for what they did.

Verſe 6. The Apharſachites] That is, Perſians, ſent as deputies by the King of Perſia, to ſee the peace kept, and good orders obſerved.

Verſe 7. All peace] See the Note on chap. 4. 17. Peace is a complexive mercy——Pacem te poſcimus omnes. It is well with Bees, when they make a noiſe in their Hive: but with men, when they are at quiet in their hearts, in their houſes, and in the publike.

Verſe 8. To the houſe of the great God] So they ſtile him, becauſe the Jewes called and counted him ſo. The Lord your God, ſaith Moſes, is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty and a terrible, &c. Deut. 10. 17. He is Fortiſſimus Maximus, as Tremellius there renders it: yea, he is a degree above the ſuperlative. Not onely is God great as here, greater, Job 33. 12. Greateſt, Pſal. 95. 3. but Greatneſſe it ſelf, Pſal. 145. 3. and to him all other Gods (whether Deputed or Reputed) are but deaſtri, deunculi, diim inorum gentium, petty deities, poor buſineſſes.

Verſe 9. Who commanded you] Chald. Who hath made you a Decree? See the Note on verſe 3.

Verſe 10. We aſked their names alſo] See verſe 4.

That were the chief of them] For the rude multitude follow as they are led. And as in a beaſt, the whole body goeth after the head, ſo do moſt people after their Rulers and Ringleaders: hence that ſeverity of God, Num. 25. 4. Take all the heads of the people, and hang them up before the Lord againſt the Sunne.

Ver. 11. We are the ſervants of the God of heaven] And in that reſpect, higher then all the Kings on the earth, Pſal. 89. 27. (for all his ſervants are ſons, heirs of God, and coheirs with Chriſt, Rom. 8. 17.) who have held it no ſmall honour to be called his vaſſals. See how bold theſe brave men beare themſelves upon this relation to the God of heaven and earth, and how courageouſly they ſtand to their work, and ſtout it out with their adverſaries. See Prov. 28. 1. with the Note.

Theſe many years ago] Five hundred at leaſt.

Verſe 12. But after that our fathers had provoked] Sinne is the make-bate that ſets heaven and earth at oddes, and hurleth confuſion over the whole creation, Eſay 59. 2. Num. 11. 31. there were more remarkable expreſſions of Gods anger upon mans ſinne in the dead body of a man, then of a beaſt: One made uncleane but till the evening, the other for ſeven dayes.

He gave them into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar] This is ſtill the property of ſinne unpardoned, to raiſe the Poſſe comitatus, all the armies of God againſt the ſinner.

Ver. 13.

Verſe 13. But in the firſt year of Cyrus] See chap. 1. verſe 1. with the Notes.

Verſe 14. The Temple of Babylon] For there alſo was a Temple built for Bel. Facium & veſpa favos: ſimia imitantur homines. The Devil will needs be Gods Ape, and affecteth to be ſemblably worſhipped.

Verſe 15. Take theſe veſſels, go, carry them] Go thy ſelf in perſon; and ſee that all things be well carried there: This pleaſed Zerubbabel well; it confined him to live in that element where he would live: as if one ſhould be confined to Paradiſe.

Verſe 16. Then came the ſame Sheſhbazzar] All this is truly and fairly related (as was likewiſe that of Doeg to Saul, againſt Abimelech) but with no good intent. Now to ſpeak the truth, not for any love to the truth, nor for reſpect to juſtice, nor for the bettering of the hearer, or of the offendor, but onely to incenſe the one, and prejudice the other: this is plaine ſlandering.

And yet it is not finiſhed] And all by reaſon of ſuch ill-conditioned perſons as your ſelves, who retarded it.

Verſe 17. Now therefore if it ſeeme good] Verba hyſſina.

Whether it be ſo.] They ſuppoſed it was nothing ſo, and hoped that theſe Jewes would be found falſaries, but it fell out farre otherwiſe: like as Saint Pauls perſecutions at Rome fell out rather unto the furtherance of the Goſpel, then elſe, Phil. 1.12.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. Then Darius the King.

Darius Hyſtaſpes, who ſucceeded Cambyſes; being choſen by the Princes of the Perſians, as ſaith Herodotus. Plato commendeth him for a reſtorer of the Perſian Monarchy, much defaced under Cambyſes. Howbeit he diſcommendeth him for this, that he bred not his ſonne Xerxes ſo well as he might have done, and further teſtifieth, that to him it might be ſaid, O Darius, how little care haſt thou taken to ſhun Cyrus his ſlackneſſe? for thou haſt bred Xerxes every whit as ill, as he did Cambyſes. In Thalia lib. 3. de Legib.

Ω' Δαρεῖε σὺ δὲ τὸν Κύρου χαλὸν ἐκ ἐμαθες,

In the houſe of the Rolles] So called, becauſe rolled up together, volumes rolled up, like the web upon the pinne.

Verſe 2. And there was found at Achmetha] Or Echatana. This was occaſioned by the malice of the Jewes adverſaries; and proved a great furtherance to the finiſhing of the Temple. Sic canes lingunt ulcera Lazari. All things work together for good to them that love God, Venenum aliquando pro remedio fuit, ſaith Seneca. Rom. 8. 28.

Verſe 3. The height thereof threeſcore cubits] Yet was it leſſe then Solomons Temple, Hag. 2. 3. Ezra 3. 12. Solomons cubits therefore were longer (likely) then theſe here mentioned.

Verſe 4. Out of the Kings houſe] i. e. Out of the royal revenue in thoſe parts, chap. 7. 20. Herodotus teſtifieth, that Cyrus and Darius (who married his daughter Atoſſa, and made him his patterne for imitation) were highly honoured among the Perſians for their Kingly munificence: God hath threatened that the Nation and Kingdome, that will not ſerve the Church, ſhall periſh: yea, thoſe Nations ſhall be utterly waſted, Eſay 60. 12. See verſe 12. of this chapter.

Verſe 5. And alſo let the golden and ſilver veſſels] This was decreed, and this was done accordingly, chap. 1. 7, 8. Let good reſolutions be put in execution: purpoſe without performance, is like a cloud without raine; and not unlike Hercules his club in the Tragedy, of a great bulk, but ſtuft with moſſe and rubbiſh.

Verſe 6. Be ye far from thence] i. e. Come not at them, to hinder them at all. Thus, though the Churches enemies bandy together and bend all their forces againſt her; yet are they bounded by Almighty God (who ſaith unto them, Be ye farre from thence) as is the raging ſea, Jer. 5. 22. Surely (ſaith the Pſalmiſt) the wrath of man ſhall praiſe thee: the remainder of wrath ſhalt thou reſtraine, Heb. gird, that is, keep it within compaſſe, as with a girdle. The Septuagint render it thus, The remnant of wrath ſhall keep holy-day to thee, that is, it ſhall reſt from working, or acting, how reſtleſſe ſoever it be within.

Verſe 7. Let the work of this houſe of God alone] Meddle not, make no diſturbance: this was doubtleſſe an hard task to them; for their ſpirits were irked, as Moab; Numb. 22. 3. and

3. and their fingers even itched at these builders. They sleep not, except they may do mischief, Prov. 4. 16.

Ver. 8. Moreover I make a Decree] So did some of the Heathen Emperours for the persecuted Christians, Charles the fifth for the Lutherans (at the motion of Albertus Archbishop of Ments, and Ludovicus Palatine of Rhine) and Henry the third of France for the Protestants: which yet was but sorrily observed though sworne to. It is written by an Italian (no stranger to the Court of Rome) that their Proverb is, Mercatorum est, non regum stare juramentis, that it is for Merchants, and not for Kings to keep to their oaths.

Verse 9. Of the God of heaven] Heathens have this notion by nature, that God is the God of heaven, and that there He is, as in his place: howbeit we must not conceive that God is commensurable by any place, sith he filleth all places, and is every where all-present, totally present whersoever present: but in heaven is his glory most manifested, and on earth is he alone to be worshipped.

Verse 10. That they may pray for the life of the King] For God, at his pleasure, cutteth off the spirits of Princes, Psal. 76. 12. he crops them off with ease, as one would do a flower; slips them off, as one would do a bunch of grapes; as he dealt by Alexander the Great, Attilas that Terrour of the world, and King Henry the second of France, who upon the marriage of his sister to the King of Spaine, was so puffed up, that he called himself by a new title, Tres-heureuse Roy, the thrice-happy King. But (to confute him) in solemnizing that marriage, he was slaine at Tilt, by the Captaine of his guard (though against his will, but not without Gods determinate counsel) in the very beginning of his supposed happinesse. Death is the onely King, against whom there is no rising up. The mortall sythe is master of the royal Scepter (saith one) and it moweth downe the Lilies of the Crowne, as well as the grasse of the field: pray therefore for the life of the King, saith this King here; let the Priests shout and say, Let the King live for ever, Nehem. 2. 3. Prov. 3.

And of his sonnes] Some of whom had soone died, say some: He therefore calleth for prayers for the preservation of the rest.

Verse 11. Let timber be pulled downe from his house] 1. Let his house be pulled down for a penalty. The Popish Councel of Tholouse called together against the Albigenses (those ancient Protestants) made this cruel constitution, We decree that that house, wherein is found an Heretick, be pulled down to the ground. 2. Let that timber be set up for a gibbet, and let him be hanged thereon] Chald. destroyed. Compare that of the Apostle 1 Cor. 3. 17, If any man destroy the Temple of God (which Temple ye are) him shall God destroy: and let those look to it who turne it into a den of theeves, into a brothel-house, slaughter-house, pest-house of noysome lusts, qui podicem ex ore faciunt, by their unsavory speeches, and moile themselves worse then by tumbling in a jakes.

Verse 12. And the God that hath caused his name] i. e. his Word and true worship, Acts 9. 15. Psal. 138. 2. Mic. 4. 5. 1 Kings 5. 3, 5.

Destroy all Kings and people] A dreadful curse, and such as God saith Amen to. Let all persecutors, and Church-robbers look to themselves. Gods hand hath ever beene very heavie upon such and their posterity. See Prov. 20. 25. with the Note.

Let it be done with speed] It hath beene too much retarded and delayed already: Let it now be expedited. David made haste and delayed not to keep Gods Commandments, Psal. 119. 60. And Austin crieth out, Nimis serò te amavi Domine. It was a great burden to his good soul, that he began no sooner to love God. He resolveth therefore to redeeme time, and to redouble his diligence, not leaving till his soul was turned into a lump of love. Morus novissimè omnium germinat, & tamen parit inter primas. The Mulberry-tree buds last, but fruits with the first.

Verse 13. So they did speedily] This they did, because they durst do no otherwise: their obedience was wrung out of them, as verjuice is out of a crab, or as distilled water is forced out by the heat of the fire. Thus some performe duties, and yet hate them, part with sins, and yet love them. Shew the malefactour the rack, and he will say or do any thing. This is, to feare God for his Lions, as those Mongrels did, 2 Kings 17. 33, 34. timore servili, mundano, which yet may addere alas, lest they fall under the lash, the correction of the Law, for refusing the direction thereof. Bedz.

Verse 14. And Artaxerxes] This is Xerxes (called also Ahashuerosh, husband of Esther) or, as some think, Artaxerxes Longimanus, the sonne of Xerxes by Esther; by whom whom the Temple finiſhed before, might be much beautified, and, haply, enlarged alſo.

Verſe 15. And this houſe was finiſhed] About fifteene years after that the foundation had beene laid, or twenty at moſt. The Jewes therefore either were out in their account, John 2. 20. Fourty and ſix years was this Temple in building; or elſe they meant it of Herods Temple, which was long in building and beautifying, whereby he ſought to ingratiate with the Jewes, which yet he could never do.

Verſe 16. Kept the dedication —— with joy] So they did at the dedication of the firſt Temple, 2 Chron. 7. 10. God had required all his worſhips to be celebrated with joy, Deut. 12. 7. and made it a condition of an acceptable ſervice, Deut. 26. 14. Sacrifices offered with mourning were abomination, Hoſ. 9. 4. yea, accurſed by God, Deut. 28. 47. What a general joy was there at Samaria, when Chriſt was firſt preached and beleeved on amongſt them, Acts 8. 8. when they firſt became Gods building, 1 Cor. 3. 9. a Temple for God to dwell in and walk in, 2 Cor. 6. 16? The like was at Bern, at Geneva, at Zurick, when the reformed Religion was firſt received amongſt them. They cauſed (for joy thereof) the day and yeare to be engraven in a pillar in letters of gold, for a perpetual memory to all poſterity. Like as at Heidelberg, Anno, 1617. in the Calends of November, they kept, for three dayes ſpace, an Evangelical Jubile, for joy of the Reformation begun by Luther, an hundred years before. Acts & Mon. Vita Parei operib. præfix.

Verſe 17. An hundred bullocks, &c.] This little, (in compariſon of what was done at Solomons dedication, 1 Kings 8. 63.) was highly accepted in heaven: as was likewiſe Noahs ſacrifice, which yet could not be great: becauſe that after a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy, and their deep poverty abounded unto the riches of their liberality (2 Cor. 8. 2.) which, ſaith Ariſtotle, is not to be meaſured by the worth of the gift, but by the will of the Giver, See the Note on chap. 2. 6. Οὐ τῷ πλήθει τῶν διδομένων, ἀλλὰ τῇ τῶν διδόντες ἕξει. Ariſt. Ethic. lib. 4.

Twelve he-goates] A fit creature for a ſin-offering, becauſe naſty, unruly, &c.

According to the number of the tribes of Iſrael] All whom (whereſoever diſperſed) they remember in their prayers; as we ſhould likewiſe do all the Iſrael of God, in all places.

Verſe 18. For the ſervice of God] According to that, Exod. 12. 25. Ye ſhall keep this ſervice, where the ſame word is uſed, that elſewhere ſerveth to ſet forth their ſervile ſervice, their bondage in Egypt. God lets them know that they muſt ſerve ſtill, though another Maſter, and after another manner. So Chriſt calleth upon his, to take his yoke upon them: Free though they be, yet they muſt not look to be yokeleſſe, lawleſſe, awleſſe, but to ſerve God with reverence and godly fear, Heb. 12. 28. Gnabhodah.

As it is written in the book of Moſes] Moſes then was the Pen-man of the Pentateuch, and not Ezra, as ſome have ſaid; grounding upon that Apocryphal Eſdras.

Verſe 19. And the children of the captivity] So the returned captives are called, Firſt, to keep ſtill afoot the remembrance of their late miſery, leſt they ſhould deſpiſe the chaſtening of the Lord, Heb. 12. 5. Secondly, to inmind them of that ſignal mercy of their returne to their owne Countrey. Hence doth the Evangeliſt Matthew ſo oft mention their tranſportation to Babylon, and rings it in the eares of his ungrateful Countrey-men, Mat. 1. 11, 12, 17.

Kept the Paſſeover] In remembrance, that the puniſhing Angel paſſed over their Anceſtours in Egypt, Exod. 12. and for confirmation of their faith in Chriſt the true Paſchal Lamb. Haſt thou eſcaped a danger? offer a Paſſeover. Hath Chriſt delivered thee from the wrath to come? keep the Feaſt with the unleavened bread of ſincerity and truth, 1 Cor. 5. 8.

Upon the fourteenth day of the firſt moneth] See Exod. 12. 2. with the Note.

Verſe 20. Were purified together] Miſery had framed them to unanimity. See 2 Chron. 29. 34.

All of them were pure] Ritually at leaſt, if not really.

And killed the Paſſeover] i. e. The Paſchal Lamb, whereof ſee Exod. 12. with the Notes.

For all the children] See the Note one verſe 19.

And for themſelves] For they alſo were ſinners, and needed a Saviour, Heb. 7. 27. That Popiſh Poſtiller was utterly out, when from Exod. 30. 31, 32. he will needs inferre that Prieſts, when once apointed with the holy oile, were thenceforth Angels, Spirits, not having humane fleſh, or infirmities.

Verſe

Verſe 21. And the children of Iſrael] The whole community, of what Tribe ſoever.

And all ſuch as had ſeparated themſelves] Who were the better to like, becauſe not Proſperity-proſelytes, (ſuch as came in (not a few) in Solomons time; but the Jewes were very careful how they received them, as Joſephus relateth.

From the filthineſſe of the heathen] Who had filled the Land from one end to the other with their uncleanneſſes, Ezra 9. 11. Great ſins do greatly pollute.

To ſeek the Lord God of Iſrael] To ſeek not his omnipreſence (for that none need to do, ſith he is not farre from any one of us, Acts 17.)but his gracious preſence. And ſuch a ſeeker is every good ſoul, *Pſal.*24.6. This is the generation of them that ſeek him, that ſeek thy face, that is Jacob.

Did eate] Edebant, id eſt, credebant, for even Chriſt their Paſſeover was ſacrificed for them, 1 *Cor.*5.7.

Verſe 22. And kept the feaſt of unleavened bread] See 1 Cor. 7. 8. and Exod. 12. 35. with the Notes.

Seven dayes] This began on the fifteenth day,and laſted till the one and twentieth day, Num. 28. 16, 17. Exod. 34. 25.

With joy] See the Note on verſe 16.

For the Lord had made them joyful] Given them cauſe of joy, and an heart enlarged accordingly, a mind right ſet for the purpoſe. Saint James his word εὐθυμεῖν, chap. 5.13. ſhewes, that all true mirth is from the rectitude of a mans minde, which God onely giveth.

And turned the heart of the King, &c.] It is He alone that gives favour, that frameth mens opinions and affections, that maketh a good mans enemies to be at peace with him.

To ſtrengthen their hands] As verſe 8.And this did more ennoble him, then all his warlike atchievements.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. Now after theſe things.

AFter that Zerubbabel had done his devoir in building the Altar and Temple, Ezra, (according to the notation of his name) began his, and became a ſingular helper of the afflicted Church of God, as appeareth in this Chapter,and thoſe that follow.

In the reigne of Artaxerxes] ſc. Longimanus, Eſters ſonne, and the ſame that thirteene years after ſent Nehemiah to Jeruſalem, Nehem. 2. whileſt Ezra was yet alive, Nehem. 8. 1.

Ezra the ſonne of Seraiah] That is, the grand-ſonne: for Seraiah was ſlaine,when Jeruſalem was laſt taken, 2 Kings 25.18,21.

Verſe 2. The ſonne of Shallum] See 1 Chron. 6. 7, 8, 9, 10. Of thoſe two books of Chronicles this ſame Ezra is held to be the Pen-man: and it is not improbable.

Verſe 3. The ſonne of Meraioth] Here's a great heap: ſix of Ezra's anceſtours (likely for brevity ſake) being overskipped.

Verſe 4. The ſonne of Zeraiah, &c.] Theſe might be (as one ſaith of Jeſſe the father of David) Viri boni & honeſti; minus tamen clari, good men, but obſcure.

Verſe 5. The ſonne of Aaron the chief Prieſt] Ezra then was ex genere pontificio (as thoſe, Acts 4. 5.) non tamen pontifex. The title of chief Prieſt is never given unto him.

Verſe 6. This Ezra went up from Babylon] Together with many others, who were moved thereunto by his example, and authority. He was (as one ſaith of Tiberius) imperio magnus, exemplo major. Great men are Looking-glaſſes, according to which moſt men dreſſe themſelves: let them look to it therefore, and ſhine as Lamps. Paterc.

And he was a ready Scribe] Or a nimble Text-man: his office was to write out copies of the Law, and to interpret it. He wrote (ſay ſome) the Hebrew Bible out in Chaldee letters (the ſame that we now call Hebrew, the ancient Hebrew characters remained with the Samaritans) for the uſe of his Countrey-men returned out of Chaldea. He firſt ordained (ſay others) the Vowels, Accents and Maſoreth. A great Scholar he was, and excellent-cellently well ſeene in Scripture-learning: to which all other skill is but ſtraminea candela, a ruſh-candle, a ſmall light that ſerveth but to light men into utter darkneſſe. Be wiſe, be learned, ſaith the Pſalmiſt: but withall Serve the Lord with feare, Kiſſe the Sonne, &c. Otherwiſe ye may be as learned as Varro that general Scholar; as Albertus magnus, quem nihil penitùs fugit, omnia perfectè novit, who knew whatſoever was knowable, as one ſaith of him: or as Toſtatus (otherwiſe called Abulenſis) qui omnium ſcientiarum doctrinarumque arca fuit & emporium, ſaith he that writeth his life; who was a living library: and yet ye may periſh everlaſtingly. The Jewes called their learned men Scribes, as the Perſians did theirs Magi; the French, Druides; the Indians, Brachmanni, &c. But he that is not a Scribe inſtructed, and inſtructing others to the Kingdome of heaven, Matth. 13. 52. ſhall hear, Where is the wiſe? Where is the Scribe? Where is the diſputer of this world? Sapientes ſapienter in infernum deſcendent. Pſal.2. Balt. Exner. Bonoſius. 1 Cor. 1.20. Aug.

Which the Lord God of Iſrael had given] The Moral Law, with his owne immediate mouth (ſo that he might ſay with Joſeph, Gen. 45. 12. Behold, your eyes ſee that it is my mouth that ſpeaketh unto you) the other Lawes he ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediatour, i. e. of Moſes, Gal. 3. 19. Hence Joſephus calleth the Jewiſh politie a Theocratie: and Proſper thinketh, that they were called Judei, becauſe they received jus Dei, the Law from God. But we can give a better derivation from the Hebrew, viz. Jewes, i. e. Confeſſours, ſuch as were thoſe above, chap. 5. 11.

And the King granted him all his requeſt] Giving him more and greater things then he durſt deſire. So great facility and flexibleneſſe found He in this King, that he needed onely to aske, and give thanks: as it is ſaid of Tiberius, that he never denied his favourite Sejanus any thing; but oft-times prevented his requeſt, and avowed that he deſerved much more.

According to the hand of the Lord his God upon him] i.e. his ſweet and ſingular providence, ever watching over, and working for thoſe that are good, 2 Chron. 19. ult. Such may well ſit and ſing as one did once

Una eſt in trepida mihi re medicina, Jehovæ
Cor patrium, Os verax, omnipotenſque Manus.

Verſe 7. And there went up ſome of the children of Iſrael] And but ſome; for many choſe rather to continue in the Land of their captivity, though God by his Prophets, and the King by his Proclamation had cried out, Ho, Ho, come forth, &c.

Deliver thy ſelfe O Zion, that dwelleſt with the daughter of Babylon, Zech.2.6,7. See the Note there.

And the Nethinims] See the Note on *chap.*2.43.

Verſe 8. And he came to Jeruſalem in the fifth moneth] So that they were four moneths in coming: and that which upheld them was, that they ſhould ſhortly ſee the face of God in Zion, Pſal. 84. 7. Popiſh Pilgrims, though they have many a weary ſtep, and meet with much hardſhip, beſides loſſe of their eſtates, yet ſatisfie themſelves in this, We have that we came for, viz. the ſight of ſome dumb Idoll. What then ſhould not we do or ſuffer to ſee God in his Ordinances, in holy Aſſemblies?

Verſe 9. According to the good hand of his God upon him] See the Note on verſe 6. In all thy wayes acknowledge God, and he ſhall direct thy paths, Prov. 3. 6. Commit thy way unto the Lord, truſt alſo upon Him, and he ſhall bring it to paſſe, *Pſ.*37.5 Holy Ezra had experimented all this (as alſo had Eliezer, Gen. 24.) and therefore aſcribeth his good ſucceſſe to Gods good providence.

Verſe 10. For Ezra had prepared his heart] Which, without due preparation, would not have beene drawne to any good. See 1 Sam. 7. 3. Job 11. 13. Amos 4. 12. An inſtrument muſt be tuned, ere it can be plaid upon: ſowre wines need good ſweetening.

To ſeek the Law of the Lord] To dive into the very boſome and bottome of it. Qui nucleum vult, nucem frangat. The Rabbines have a ſaying, that there is a mountaine of ſenſe hanging upon every tittle of Gods Law.

And to do it] His knowledge and practiſe ran parallel, and mutually transfuſed warmth into one another. He was not of thoſe Oratours blamed by Diogenes, for that they ſtudied benè dicere, non benè facere, to ſpeak commendably, but not to live accordingly. He kneww ell that his forefathers (the High Prieſts) had Pomegranates for ſavour, as well as bells for ſound.

And to teach in Iſrael] He knew the truth of that Hebrew Proverb, Lilmod Lelammed, Men muſt therefore learne, that they may teach others; and not bury their talents, leſt the canker of their great skill prove a ſwift witneſſe one day againſt them.

Verſe 11. Even a Scribe of the words of the Commandments] This ſheweth Ezra was not an ordinary Scribe (called a Scribe of the people) nor a publike Notary, or Kings Secretary, ſuch as were called for, Eſth. 3. but Scriba ſacer, legis peritus, & interpres, a Teacher of the words of the Commandments of the Lord and his Statutes to Iſrael. This is an high and honourable employment.

Ver. 12. Artaxerxes King of Kings] This is a very high ſtile for any mortal wight: yet ambitiouſly aſſumed by Monarchs and Emperours. It is indeed the proper title of Jeſus Chriſt, who hath upon his veſture, and upon his thigh a name written, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords: Kings and caytives, Lords and loſſels are all his underlings and vaſſals, as thoſe good Emperours Conſtantine, Theodoſius, and Valentinian uſually called themſelves. This Name of the Lord Chriſt is ſaid to be written, 1. On his Veſture, that all may ſee it and ſubmit to it. 2. On his thigh, where hangs his ſword, to ſhew his abſolute and illimited Empire, got out of the hands of his enemies with his ſword and with his bow, Pſal. 45. 5. By me Kings reigne, ſaith He, Prov. 8. 15. And Nebuchadnezzar is made to know as much, Dan. 4. 35. who once vain-gloriouſly vaunted, that his Princes were altogether Kings, Eſay 10. 8. Maximilian Emperour of Germany alſo ſaid of himſelf, that he was a King of Kings, but in another ſenſe: for every of my ſubjects (quoth He) will be a King: and ſay I what I can, they will do what they liſt.

Socrates.

Fohan. Manl. loc. com. p. 586.

Of the God of heaven] See the Note on chap. 5. 11.

Verſe 13. And of his Prieſts] ſc. The God of heavens Prieſts, verſe 12. and therefore honoured and reſpected by this great Monarch; ſo was Samuel by Saul, Jaddus by great Alexander; the Bardes (anciently) here in Albion by the greateſt Commanders.

Which are minded of their owne free-will] He would compel none: neither doth Almighty God. His people are all Voluntieres, Pſal. 110. 3. Eſay 56. 6. he findes them not ſo, but makes them ſo; and accounts that Virtus nolentium nulla eſt. Lex voluntarios quærit. God accepts a free-will offering, and commands us to come off roundly and readily in his ſervice.

Ambroſ. in Pſ. 1

Verſe 14. And of his ſeven Counſellours] Without whom the King did nothing of moment. This King was better affected to his Councel then his father Xerxes had beene, of whom it is ſtoried, that in his expedition againſt Greece, he called his Princes together, as if he would have beene adviſed by them, but ſpake to them to this purpoſe: Leſt, ſaith he, I ſhould ſeeme to follow mine owne counſel, I have aſſembled you. And now do you remember, that it becomes you rather to obey, then adviſe.

Val. Max. l. 9 c. 5

To enquire concerning Judah] So Saint Paul ſent to enquire what was yet lacking in the faith of the Churches.

According to the Law of thy God] Which is not onely recta, but regula, the rule and rudder. Thoſe that walked by this rule, Ezra was to cheriſh, and to puniſh ſuch as did otherwiſe, being cuſtos utriuſque tabulæ.

Which is in thine hand] Which thou art ſingularly skilled in, and much exerciſed about it: that thou mayeſt both obſerve it thy ſelf, and alſo preſerve it from other mens violations.

Verſe 15. Which the King and his Councellours have freely offered] This King as he had beene well bred by his Mother Queene Eſther, ſo he had (likely) beene well inſtructed by Ezra in the knowledge of the God of heaven (as he calleth him) whoſe ſervice he thus promoteth. So Origen wrought much upon Alexander Severus the Emperour by his ſound doctrine and holy converſation: but eſpecially upon his mother Mammæa who became a great friend to the perſecuted Chriſtians.

Verſe 16. And all the ſilver and gold that thou canſt finde] And gold-thirſty Babylon was not without great ſtore of both; could the owners but finde in their hearts to part with it to ſo pious an uſe: Some did, and the rather becauſe the King and his Councel began to them.

With the free-will offering of the people] Gods ſelect people, of whom Moſes ſingeth, Happy art thou, O Iſrael! Who is like unto thee O people! Deut. 33. 29.

Verſe 17. That thou mayeſt buy ſpeedily] Illicò. God is himſelf a pure act, and hateth dulneſſe in duty. What thou doeſt, do quickly, ſaid Chriſt, even to the very Traytour that did ſeek and ſuck his blood.

Verſe

Verſe 18. And whatſoever ſhall ſeeme good to thee, &c.] The King knew them to be faithful and wiſe ſtewards (ſuch as Hanani was, Nehem. 7. 2.) and therefore leaveth much of the money to be beſtowed as they pleaſed.

Verſe 19. The veſſels alſo, &c.] How naturally ſeemeth this King to care for the ſervice of God! and what pity is it that he ſhould ſo oft call Him Your God, and Thy God, and not owne him for his! So hard a thing it is to relinquiſh that vaine converſation that people have received by tradition from their fathers. I will never forſake the Religion that I have received from my fore-fathers, ſaid Tully; And the Monarch of Morocco told the Engliſh Embaſſadour, that he had lately read Saint Pauls Epiſtles, and liked them ſo well, that were he now to chuſe his Religion, he would, before any other, embrace Chriſtianity. But every one ought, ſaid he, to die in his owne Religion: and the leaving of the faith wherein he was borne, was the onely thing that he diſliked in that Apoſtle.

Verſe 20. And whatſoever more, &c.] What could this King ſay more to ſeale up his good affection to the work in hand? Shall not this liberal Heathen riſe up in judgement and condemne ſuch hold-faſts amongſt us, ſuch miſerly money-hoarders, as have no quick-ſilver, no currant money for God or any good uſes; but are, the richer the harder, as Dives?

Verſe 21. Let it be done ſpeedily] Without ſhucking and hucking, without delayes and conſults: I, even I will have it ſo, ſaith the great King: diſpute not therefore, but diſpatch: Quod ego volo, pro canone ſit, as Conſtantius the Emperour ſaid to Paulinus, Lucifer, and other diſſenting Biſhops.

Verſe 22. Unto an hundred talents of ſilver] This was no ſmall ſumme. How chargeable was the ſervice of God heretofore, to what it is now? and yet how heavily do men come off, when to expend, though but a very ſmall ſumme that way. Ad quid perditio hæc? To what end is this waſte? is the common cry in this caſe. Surely Pagans and Papagans who laviſh money out of the bag without meaſure, dotantque Deos alienos (as ſome read that text, Pſal. 16.3.) ſhall have an eaſier judgement then ſuch pinch-penny profeſſours.

Verſe 23. For why ſhould there be wrath] Heb. Boyling or foaming anger, great indignation, as it is rendered, and made the utmoſt degree of the divine diſpleaſure, Deut. 29. 28. Of all things God cannot endure to be ſlighted, and to have his ſervice neglected: this, blinde nature ſaw, and was therefore ſedulous herein to prevent wrath. Ariſtotle hath this divine precept, Πρῶτα θεῖων ἐπιμέλει. Make Religion thy firſt and chief care, that thou mayeſt proſper, &c. Let our worſhip-ſcorners look to it: do they provoke the Lord to wrath? are they ſtronger then He? will they bring Gods vengeance upon us all? Ariſt. polit. l. 7. c. 8.

Againſt the Realme, the King and his ſonnes] For God is higher then the higheſt, and will raine downe indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguiſh upon every ſoul of man that doth evil, or that neglecteth to do good: for not-ſerving of God, not-ſacrificing is a ſin, Mal. 3. 18. Eccleſ. 9. 2. And ſin doth as naturally draw and ſuck judgements to it, both perſonal and publike, as the loadſtone doth iron, or Turpentine fire. Rom. 2. 8, 9.

Verſe 24. And alſo we certifie you, that touching any of the Prieſts,] Theſe he taketh ſpecial order for, that they be freed from publike payments: and the like care was taken by our Anceſtours for the Miniſters of the Church of England, as appeareth by Magna Charta, chap. 14. Their maintenance is of the Law of Nature, Gen. 47.22. Jezabel provided for her Prieſts; Idolatrous Micah for his Levite; the Papiſts for their ſhavelings, granting them many and great immunities, and being ſo free to them, that there was need of a Statute of Mortmain providing that men ſhould give no more to the Church. But tempora mutantur, &c.

Verſe 25. And thou Ezra] Qui monet ut facias, &c.

After the wiſdome of God that is in thine hand] That is in thine heart and life. Sapientia eſt vel {codicibus} {cordibus}

Ezra had both theſe, being a thorough wiſe man.

All ſuch as know the Lawes of thy God] Elſe how ſhall they ſee them duly executed? How ſhall they be as ſo many living Lawes, walking Statutes? How ſhall they teach in the Cities of Judah, as Jehoſaphats Judges did, 2 Chron. 17. 7, 9. and as it followeth here, And teach ye them that know them not; How can the people performe their duty, which they are ignorant of?

Verſe 26. And whoſoever will not do the Law of thy God.] In the firſt place, and then the Kings Law, as it is ſubordinate and ſubſervient to Gods. Obediemus Atridis honeſta

In Iphigenia. mandantibus, non aliter, ſaith He in Euripides: If the King command honeſt things, we will obey him; otherwiſe not.

Let judgement be ſpeedily executed upon him] Let this be noted againſt thoſe that hold, that Magiſtrates have nothing to do with men in matters of Religion. Artaxerxes here interpoſeth, and Ezra bleſſeth God for it. See Dan. 3. 29. Deut. 13. 6. Rom. 13. 4. 1 Pet. 2. 13, 14.

Verſe 27. Bleſſed be the Lord God] Deo gratias is ever in a good mans mouth. The Leo Modena Jewes at this day are bound to ſay an hundred Benedictions every day; and more as occaſion requires.

Verſe 28. And hath exerciſed mercy unto me] ſc. By making uſe of my ſervice, for the promoting of his. Any employment about God, is an high preferment, and ſo to be eſteemed; yea, it is a mercy, and ſealeth up farther mercie.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. Theſe are now the chief of their fathers.

THe chieftaines of thoſe that went up with Ezra, beſide thoſe that went up at firſt with Zerubbabel.

Verſe 2. Of the ſonnes of Phineas] The ſonne of Eleazar, the ſonne of Aaron, that renowned Zelot, with whom, and his ſeed after him, God gave a Covenant of peace, even the Covenant of an everlaſting Prieſthood, Num. 25. 12, 13.

Daniel] Not the Prophet Daniel, Gods darling, Dan. 9. 23. but another of the ſame name, which might be ſome help to him.

Of the ſonnes of David] ſc. Of David the King. See 1 Chron. 3. 22.

Verſe 3. Of the males an hundred and fifty] Great account was made of males under Blounts voyage. the Law, more then of the females: and ſo there is to this day among the Jewes, who hold women to be of a lower creation, made onely for the propagation and pleaſure of man, &c. This their conceit is their folly, yet their poſterity approve their ſayings. He did better who ſtiled woman the ſecond Edition of the Epitome of the whole world. Sure it is, that ſoules have no ſexes; and in Chriſt, there is no reſpect had more to the male then female, Gal. 3. 28.

Verſe 4. Of the ſonnes of Pahath-Moab] Haply ſo called, becauſe ſome of his progenitours had dwelt in Moab. He was a Covenanter, Neh. 10. 14.

Verſe 5. The ſonne of Jahaziel] The father is named, but not the ſonne: but why, who can tell? Et patet & lucet pagina ſacra.

Verſe 6. Of the ſonnes alſo of Adin] A Covenanter too, Neh. 10. 16.

Verſe 7. Jeſhaiah] Of the ſame name, but not the ſame man that is mentioned, verſe 19.

Verſe 8. The ſonne of Michael] A name afterwards given to Jeſus Chriſt, Dan. 10. 13. Rev. 12. 7. ſignifying, Who is as God? Hence ſome conceive, that it is not ſo fit to call a childe Michael, Emmanuel, &c.

Verſe 9. Obadiah the ſonne of Jehiel] This Obadiah, (as alſo Zechariah, verſe 11. and Azgad, verſe 12.) ſealed the Covenant, Nehem. 10. not without oath, and execration. It is both lawful, and in ſome caſes needful, for good people, ſolemnely to binde themſelves to bounden duties. Hereby, ſaith a grave Divine, as true intention, earneſt deſire, prudent jealouſie and holy zeale are manifeſted, ſo is a dull ſpirit much quickened, and the weak, wayward, revolting fleſh bridled and curbed: yea, and bound to her good behaviour.

Verſe 10. The ſonne of Joſiphiah] See verſe 5.

Verſe 11. Zechariah the ſonne of Bebai] See verſe 9.

Verſe 12. And the ſonnes of Azgad] See verſe 9.

Verſe 13. And of the ſonnes of Adonikam] Some of his ſonnes went up before with Ze- Poſteris poſterioribus Tremel rubbabel, ch. 2. 13. Theſe not till now, together with Ezra. They might want either age or hearts to go at firſt with their brethren. Second thoughts are beſt many times: and Numquam ſerò, ſi ſeriò. That ſonne in the Goſpel, who being bidden go work to day in the Vineyard, anſwered and ſaid, I will not, but afterwards repented, and went, wanted not his commendation, Matth. 21. 29. A learned man deſcanteth thus upon this Text: The lot of Adonikam was below his brethren, becauſe he was the laſt that ſet foot forward toward their returne.

com-

Verſe 14. And with them ſeventy males] The whole company conſiſted of one thouſand four hundred, ninety and ſix males: a good addition to thoſe that went up before with Zerubbabel; yet nothing ſo many as might have beene, but that they wanted hearts.

Rari quippe boni, numero vix ſunt totidem, quot Juvenal. Sat. 13.
Thebarum portæ, vel divitis oſtia Nili.

Verſe 15. And I gathered them together to the River] There was their firſt Rendevous, at the meeting of two Rivers; whereof that Countrey was full, Pſal. 137. 1 and therefore fertile as the Garden of the Lord, whereof it was a part, as moſt Geographers are of opinion.

And there abode we in tents] Glad we had our faces ſet toward Zion (going weeping, &c. Jer. 50. 4, 5) and our backs upon Babylon; of which we might well ſay, as the Philoſopher afterwards did of Athens, that it was a pleaſant place to travel thorough, but not ſafe to dwell in.

And found there none of the ſons of Levi] None but what he afterwards ſent for; no voluntiers: this was lamentable, that Levites ſhould be ſo backward to ſo good a buſineſſe. Here was nomen inane, crimen immane.

Verſe 16. Men of underſtanding] Of ſpecial note for their wiſedome and eloquence: ſuch as could preſent to the people good matter well habited, and could well expreſſe their expoſitions of the Law; being themſelves wiſe, and willing to wiſe others, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth, Dan. 12. 3. Men of underſtanding and ready to inſtruct many, Dan. 11. 33. Such a man as this, is worth his weight in gold.

Verſe 17. At the place Caſiphia] Where it may ſeem that there was a Colledge of Levites, and Iddo was their Preſident.

And to his brethren the Nethinims] Who were now become men of Mark, brethren to Iddo, and much ſought for by Ezra: ſee Chap. 2. 43. for the ſervice they did about Gods houſe.

Verſ. 18. And by the good hand of God upon us] God was in all this good mans thoughts: he ſet upon every paſſage, (as the Ancients did upon every ſpecial piece of work they did) Θεὸς, Θεὸς. This was the onely way to make his journey comfortable thus to converſe with God all along, & Paradiſum mente deambulare, as Hierome counſelled the young Hermite, aſſuring him that ſo long as he had Paradiſe in his mind, and God in his apprehenſions, tamdiu in eremo non eſſet, ſo long he ſhould not be in a deſert. Pauſanias.

They brought us a man of underſtanding] The Hebrew word Shacal ſignifieth three things, 1. To underſtand. 2. To inſtruct. 3. To proſper. Thoſe that underſtand themſelves, and teach others, ſhall do much good to themſelves and others. See the Note on verſ. 16. This egregiè cordatus homo was Sherebiah, as it followeth here, and Sherebiah or, even Sherebiah, confer Neh. 8. 7. and 9. 4, 5.

Verſ. 19. And Haſhabiah] A man ready to every good work, Neh. 3. 17. and 10. 11. and that's no ſmall commendation.

Verſ. 20. Whom David and the Princes had appointed i.e. continued, confirmed, and ordered them: for they were firſt appointed aud deſigned to that ſervice by Joſhuah; and thence called Nethinims.

All theſe were expreſſed by Name] Verbis non ſolùm diſertis, ſed & exſertis.

Verſe 21. Then I proclaimed a faſt there] A day of reſtraint from food, fine cloathes, and other delights of life. There is a three-fold-faſt, ſaith One; from meat, from mirth, and from ſin: this laſt crownes all. Unleſſe God ſees turning, he ſees no work in a faſt, ſaith another, deſcanting upon that Text, Jon. 3. 10. God ſaw their works, that they turned. Of a Faſt ſee the Notes on Joel 2. 12.

That we might afflict our ſelves before our God] Not outwardly onely (that's but the ſhell Iſ. 58. 3.) but inwardly, alſo, for that's the kernel of this exerciſe, Jer. 16. 29. which elſe is but bodily, and profiteth little; ſomething, it may, as it did Ahab: But if rightly performed, though it weakeneth the body, yet it ſtrengtheneth the ſpirit, making it vigorous and victorious.

To ſeek of him a right way for us] To edge our prayers and give wings to them: for faſting ſting inflameth prayer, and prayer ſanctifieth faſting: hence they go coupled for the moſt part, *Luk.*2.37. *Matth.*17.21. 1 *Cor.*7.5. And ſurely, if with faſting and prayer we can ſeek of God direction and protection as here, we ſhall ſpeed of both.

And for our little ones] Theſe ſhould be a main part of our care, to lay up prayers for them, to commend them to Gods ſafe-keeping, foraſmuch as puerilitas eſt periculorum pelagus, Little ones are liable to a thouſand deaths and dangers.

And for all our ſubſtance] Our ſtock and our ſtore, all the goods that we have got and gathered together. Our Engliſh word Riches anſwereth to the Hebrew Recuſh.

Verſ.22. For I was aſhamed] Heb: I bluſht and was abaſht, I knew not how to put on the face to do it, neither could I bring my mind to crave a convoy, though it might have been of great uſe to us: leſt the name of God ſhould thereby be diſhonoured, and his excellencies queſtioned. It is the ingenuity of Saints to ſtudy Gods ends more then their own, and to be far more troubled when any thing croſſeth him, then when themſelves are croſſed or diſappointed. Propter te Domine, propter te, is the good mans Motto. Choice and excellent ſpirits are all for God, whatever becometh of themſelves.

Verſ.22. Becauſe we had ſpoken to the King, ſaying] They had ſpoken good of Gods Name, and amply ſet forth his power, providence, goodneſſe, and other Attributes, being no whit aſhamed ſo to do before Kings, as *Pſal.*119.46. ſo did Chryſoſtome, Baſil, Latimer, Lambert, John Colet, Dean of Pauls, and Founder of the Free-ſchool there. He, for the bold and faithful diſcharge of his duty, in a Sermon before Hen. the eighth at the ſiege of Tournay was called to his trial by the Kings Counſellours: but the iſſue proved happy: for he gave ſo great content to the King, that he taking a cup of Wine ſaid, Deane, I drink to you: let every one take whom he will for his Confeſſour, you ſhall be my Doctour. Holy Ezra found no leſſe favour with this mighty Monarch, whom he had well informed in the manifold excellencies of God, as appeareth by this and ſundry other preceding paſſages.

M. Clark in his Life.

The hand of our God is upon all them, &c.] To hide them in the hollow of it till the indignation be overpaſt, to hold them by their right hand, and ſo to guide them by his Counſel, that he may afterwards take them to his glory, *Pſal.*73.23,24.

But his power and his wrath] Id eſt, His powerful wrath, his anger armed with power; for vanæ ſine viribus iræ; But who knoweth the power of thine anger, ſaith Moſes? even according to thy fear ſo is thy wrath. Let him fear thee never ſo much, he is ſure to feel thee more, if once he fall into thy fingers; into that mighty hand of thine (as St. James ſtileth it) before which ten thouſand Kings cannot ſtand. Let God-forſakers therefore do as thoſe Elders of Iſrael did, 2 Kings 10.3,4,5.

Pſal 90.11. Jam.4 10,

Is againſt all them that forſake him] Such are all they, 1. That forſake not their ſins, Job 20.17. *Iſa.*55.7. 2. That know not God, *Iſa.*1.3,4. *Eph.*4.18. 3. That truſt to idols, or creature-comforts, arm of fleſh. 1 Kings 9.9. *Joſh.*24.20. *Jer.*2.13. 4. Church-forſakers, and Apoſtates, *Heb.*10.25,38. God hath againſt all theſe, and will conſume them after that he hath done them good; *Joſh.*24.20. *Pſal.*73.27. 1 *Chron.*28.9. *Jon.*2.8. *Jer.*17.13. *Deut.*31.16. 2 *Chron.*12.5. and 15.2. and 24.20.

Verſe 23. So we faſted] They put their holy reſolution into execution: purpoſe without practiſe is like Rachel, beautiful, but barren.

2 Sam. 1.22. And beſought our God for this] And they had it, Verſe 31. For faſting and prayer are like Jonathans bow and Sauls ſword, that never turned back, or returned empty. God is a liberal Rewarder of all ſuch as in this ſort diligently ſeek him, *Heb.*11.6. 2 *Chron.*15.2. He will turn their faſting into feaſting, their prayers into praiſes, *Ezek*36.37. *Zech.*8.19. They ſhall have out their prayers either in mony, or monies-worth: either in the very thing they deſired, or at leaſt ſtrength to ſtay themſelves upon God, with good aſſurance that his grace ſhall be ſufficient for them, and that he will be their ſhield, and their exceeding great reward.

Verſe 24. Then I ſeparated twelve] I ſingled them and ſet them apart for this great truſt, vide cui fidas.

Sherebiah, Hoſhabiah] Heb. With Sherebiah, Hoſhabiah, (men of known integrity, Verſ. 18.19.) and ten of their brethren with them] four and twenty in all, a complete company of faithful Truſtees.

Verſe 25. And weighed unto them] Heb. I ſcaled it out unto them: Cyrus taled it out to Zerubbabel. Chap.1.8,9, &c.

And his Lords] Called Mighty Princes, Chap.7.28. ſee *Iſa.*10.8.

And

And all Iſrael there preſent] Heb. There found at that time, or that had found in their purſes, found in their hearts.

Verſe 26. Six hundred and fifty talents of ſilver] That is, 243750 pounds ſterling.

An hundred talents] That is 37500 pounds ſterling.

Verſe 27. Of a thouſand drammes] 312 pounds and 10 ſhillings. The Hebrew (or rather Chaldee) word here rendred a Dramme ſeemes to be taken from the Greek word δραχμή.

And two veſſels of fine Copper] Ex orichalco præſtante, Of ſome choyce mixt mettle, Auro contrà non caro.

Verſe 28. Ye are holy to the Lord] Heb. Ye are holineſſe unto the Lord: and muſt ſanctifie the holy God in righteouſneſs, Eſa. 5.16.

The veſſels are holy alſo] Id eſt, ſet apart to ſacred uſes, and therefore to be kept carefully, uſed reſpectively. The Turks ſpare and keep better then ordinary, thoſe very Aſſes of theirs that have been uſed for carriage to Mecha, where their Mahomet lyeth buried: Neither will they put paper to any baſe uſe, becauſe that both the Name of God, and the Mahometan Law are written upon the like. Grand Sign. Serag.

Verſe 29. Watch ye] with utmoſt care, and ſolicitude, as the word ſignifieth. How much more ſhould we watch and trebble watch, (as Luk. 12.37,38,43.) to keep our veſſels (bodies) in ſanctification and honour, Not in the luſt of concupiſcence, &c? eſpecially ſince, Adverſus majora vigilantibus quadam in cautis minutiora ſurrepant, and Satan worketh ſtrongeſt on the fancy, when the ſoul is ſleepy, or a little drowſy. Watch ye therefore and keep: This leſſon had need to be often rung in our ears. Aug.

Verſe 30. So took the Prieſts and the Levites] The great charge committed to them, and laid upon them, did not weaken, but waken their heroik ſpirits.

Tu non crede malis, ſed contrà audentior ito.

Verſe 31. And of ſuch as lay in wait by the way] Enemies they had not a few (when was it otherwiſe?) but ſome, that purpoſely way-laid them; but were defeated by a gracious providence. So were the Manichees who lay in wait for Auſtin: and thoſe that purſued Jewel about the beginning of Q. Maries Raign, as he was going from Oxford to London. Both theſe had been caught, and made a prey to their Enemies, but that they loſt their way; What ſaith the Prophet? As Birds flying, ſo will the Lord of hoſts defend Jeruſalem (like as when the young are in danger of the kite, the Bird flies to ſave them) defending alſo, he will deliver it and paſſing over, he will preſerve it. M Clarks Lives.

Verſe 32. And abode there three dayes] For neceſſary refreſhment, after ſo long a journey. The body is the ſouls ſervant, and muſt therefore be kindly and fairely dealt with, ut ſit par negotio, that it may be neither above not below its buſineſſe; but even with it, meet for it. Corpus ſive corpor, quaſi cordis por, id eſt, puer, ſive famulus.

Verſe 33. Now on the fourth day] Viz. of their fifth moneth. After a ſhort repoſe they ſet cloſe to work. To recreations God allowes men to ſtoop for their bodyes ſake, as the Eagle to the prey: or as Gideons Souldiers to ſoop their handfull, not to ſwill their belly full.

Verſe 34. By number and by weight, &c.] In reference to this Text, Let thy confeſſion be full, ſaith a reverend man: bring out thy ſins as thoſe in Ezra did the veſſels of the Temple, by number and by weight, 1. By Number, Lev. 16.21. Aaron was to confeſſe over the ſcape goat all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael. 2. By weight he was to confeſſe all their trangreſſions in all their ſins: that is, laying open how many tranſgreſſions were wrapped up in their ſeveral ſins, and their circumſtances.

Verſe 35. Alſo the children of thoſe that had been] In token of preſenting their bodies a living ſacrifice, holy and acceptable to God their Deliverer, Rom. 12.1. Let us that are freed from ſins ſlavery, become the ſervants of righteouſneſſe, Rom. 6.18. and being delivered from the hands of our Enemies, ſerve God without fear in holineſſe and righteouſneſſe all the dayes of our lives, Luk. 1.74.75.

Verſe 36. And they furthered the people] Heb. They gave them a lift, lent them an helping hand: not out of love to the work, but for fear of the King, and in purſuance of his commands and commiſſions. Thus the Devil and his impes ſometimes do Gods will, though with an ill will, Pſal. 119.91. They continue this day according to thine Ordinances: for all are thy ſervants. How much better were it to work from a right principle, not by conſtraint, but willingly, not for fear of wrath, but of a ready mind, to love to be Gods 1 Pet. 5.1

ſervants,

ſervants taking hold of his Covenant, Iſai.56.6. and ſaying to him, as the people did to Joſhua, Chap.1.16. or as the Rulers and Elders to Jehu, 2 Kings 10.5. We are thy ſervants, and will do all that thou ſhalt bid us?

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. Now when theſe things were done.]

HEre are poſt maxima gaudia luctus, Heavens joyes are without meaſure or mixture: But this preſent life is overſpred with ſins and miſeries, as with a filthy morphew. Of good Ezra we may ſay as Pliny doth of Metellus; Metellus infelix dici non debet, felix non poteſt, Unhappy we may not call him, happy we cannot: witneſſe the dolefull diſcourſe of this Chapter. Lib.7.c.47.

The Princes came unto me] The better ſort of them that were ſenſible of the abuſes crept in, and deſired a Reformation. For ſome of the Princes alſo and Rulers had their hands elbow-deep, in the wickedneſſe complained of Verſe 2.

οἱ πολλοὶ The people of Iſrael] The Many, the common ſort, that ſhallow-braind, but many-headed Beaſt, that loves to follow the herd and do as the moſt do, though thereby they be utterly undone for ever.

And the Prieſts, and the Levites] This was much: for theſe knew the Law, and made their boaſt of it, *Rom.*2.18.23. They could not be ignorant of the unlawfulneſſe of this mixing themſelves in marriage with Heathens not proſelyted. Now ſins againſt knowledge and conſcience are of a double dye, of a crymſon colour: and make a great breach, a deep gaſh in a mans ſpirit. Eſay 59.11,12. What was it that brought ſuch roarings and troubles on them, and that, when ſalvation was looked for? Our iniquities teſtify to our faces, and we know them.

Have not ſeparated themſelves] The ſeparation of the Saints from the wicked is a wonderful ſeparation, *Exod.*33.16. ſuch as was that of light from darkneſſe in the creation. God hath brought them out of darkneſſe into his marvellous light. Why then ſhould they be unequally yoked together with unbeleevers? what communion hath light with darkneſſe, &c? 2 *Cor.*6.14. 1 Pet.2.

Doing according to their abominations] How ſhould they chuſe but do ſo, when ſo matched and married? what's the reaſon the Pope will not diſpenſe in Spain or Italy, if a Papiſt marry a Proteſtant? yet here they will, but in hope thereby to draw more to them. The brown bread in the Oven will be ſure to fleece from the white, not that from it. So in married couples: ſeldome is the worſe bettered by the good, but the contrary. Seē Nehem. 13.26.

Verſe 2. For they have taken of their daughters] Taken them for wives: which was flatly forbidden, *Deut.*7.3. and a reaſon given, *ver.*4. from the evil effect of ſuch unbleſt marriages. This abuſe Malachi complaineth of, *chap.*2.11,13. whom ſome make to be the ſame man with Ezra.

ψυχρὸν φαγεδαίνισμα. For themſelves and for their ſons] Whom they herein helped to a cold arm-ful, (as Lycophron calleth a bad wife:) or rather to an unnatural heat, worſe then that of a quartan ague, as ſaid Simonides: as bad as that of an evil ſpirit, ſaid another Heathen.

So that the holy ſeed] Id eſt, The children of Iſrael, who were all federally holy at leaſt, *Deut.*7.6. as are alſo all the children of Chriſtian Parents, 1 *Cor.*7.14.

Hath been chief in this treſpaſſe] Which they think audaciouſly to bear out with their big looks, to obtrude and juſtify to the World this moſt malapert miſdemeanour, becauſe it is facinus majoris abollæ, the fact of a great one. Juvenal.

Verſe 3. I rent my garments and my mantle] In token of his deep and down-right humiliation, indignation, deteſtation of their dealings herein.

And pluckt off the hair of my head, and of my beard] To ſhew how paſſionately grieved and offended he was. The raging Turk did the like at the laſt aſſault of Scodra: being extremely vexed at the diſhonour and loſſe he had received there. But what followed? In his choler and frantick rage, he moſt horribly blaſphemed God: whereas holy Ezra, though he ſat aſtonied till the Evening ſacrifice, yet then he poureth forth his ſoul in an heavenly prayer, verſe 5,6: Turk.Hiſt.

And ſate down aſtonied] As one that hath neither life nor ſoul, (as we ſay) that can neither ther ſay nor do for himſelf, being wondrouſly amazed, aſtoniſhed, or deſolate, as David had been, *Pſal.*143.4. The true Zealot, as his love is feryent, his deſires eager, his delights raviſhing, his hopes longing, ſo his hatred is deadly, his anger fierce, his grief deep, his fear terrible, &c. Zeal is an extreme heat of all the affections, *Rom.*12.11. boyling-hot, hiſſing-hot, as the Greek importeth. ζέοντες.

Verſe 4. Then were aſſembled unto me] It was ſoon noyſed and noticed among the godly party, how exceedingly Ezra was troubled: they therefore trouble themſelves, as our Saviour is ſaid to have done *John.*11.33. and as Paul felt twinges when others were hurt. Who is offended ſaith he, and I burn not? Sheep when frighted, will get together; Swine, when lugged, will grunt together. What ſhould Saints do, (in caſe of National ſins or judgments) but aſſemble and tremble together, as here, but vow and perform Reformation to the Lord their God, as in the next chapter? 2 Cor.11.29.

Every one that trembled at the words] At the judgements of God whileſt they yet hang in the threatnings. To ſuch looketh the Lord, with ſpeciall intimations of his love, *Iſa.*66.2. When as thoſe that tremble not in hearing, ſhall be cruſhed to pieces in feeling, ſaid Mr. Bradford the Martyr.

That had been carried away] But had not learned by the thing that they had ſuffered, were as bad as before, if not worſe, having loſt the fruit of their afflictions. This is fearful: a ſad ſigne of an incorrigible caſtaway, *Jer.*6.30. παθήματα μαθήματα.

Untill the Evening-ſacrifice] This time of the day good people uſually took to pray at: that, together with the ſacrifice, their prayers might come up for a memorial before God in thoſe pillars of ſmoke, *Cant.*3.6. *Act.*10.4. See *Luk.*1.10. *Act.*3.11.

Verſe 5. I roſe up from my heavineſſe] In affliction, ſc. of ſpirit, wherewith his heart was leavened and ſowred, as Davids was, *Pſal.*73.21. Imbittered as Peters, Matth.26. ult. powred out upon him as Jobs, *chap.*30.16. He did really afflict himſelf with voluntary ſorrowes for the tranſgreſſions of his people.

And having rent, &c] See *ver.*3.

I fel upon my knees] This geſture did both evidence, & encreaſe the ardency of his affection.

And ſpread out my hands] With the palmes open toward Heaven in an having craving way, as Beggers. This was the Jewiſh manner of praying, and it was very becoming.

Verſe 6. And ſaid, O my God] This was a prayer of faith, and founded upon the Covenant, that bee-hive of Heavenly honey, as One well calleth it.

I am aſhamed and bluſh] Sin is a bluſhful thing and hales ſhame at the heeles of it, *Rev.*3.17. Therefore when a man hath committed a ſin, he bluſheth: the blood as it were, would cover the ſin. But he is paſt grace that is paſt ſhame, and can bluſh no more then a ſackbut. Illum ego periiſſe dico cui periit pudor. Salluſt.

For our iniquities] He maketh himſelf a party, becauſe he was one of the ſame Community with them that had done that evil. He alſo knew himſelf to have an hand if not upon the great cart-ropes, ſet upon the leſſer cords that might draw down divine vengeance upon the Land. Hence he includeth himſelf after the example of Daniel, *chap.*9.5.

Are increaſed over our heads] As an overwhelming flood, *Pſal.*38.4. That threateneth to go over our ſoules too, *Pſal.*124.4. and to ſink them in the bottomleſſe lake, that lowermoſt part of hel imported by that ה locale (as Hebricians Note) *Pſal.*9.17.

And our treſpaſſe is growen up unto the Heavens] So great is our guilt, that it is gotten as high as Heaven, that is, as high as may be. For beyond the moveable Heavens, Ariſtotle (Natures beſt Secretary) ſaith there is neither body, nor time, nor place, nor vacuum. See *Revel.*18.5. with the Note. Mans ſinne defileth even the very viſible Heavens, which muſt therefore be purged with the fire of the laſt day. Yea it pierceth into the Heavens of Heavens, & maketh a loud out-cry in Gods eares for vengeance, *Gen.*4.10. & 18.20. De Cœlo Text.99.

Verſe 7. Since the dayes of our Fathers] Confeſſion with aggravation is that happy Spunge, that wipeth out all the blottes and blurres of our lives: for, if we confeſſe our ſinnes, and therein lay load enough upon our ſelves, as Ezra here, & Daniel doth *c.*9.5. (mark how full in the mouth theſe good men are, out of the abundant hatred of ſin in their hearts) God is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins, &c. 1 John 1.9. But in confeſſion we muſt not extenuate or excuſe: every ſin, muſt ſwel as a toad in our eyes, and we muſt ſpet it out of our mouthes with utmoſt indignation, ſhewing the Lord the iniquity of our ſin, the filthineſſe of our leudneſſe, the abomination of our provocations, Rom.7.13. Thus if we weigh our ſinnes in a true balance, and put in ſo many weights, as to bring to a juſt humiliation, to a godly ſorrow; then it will prove a right Apology, the ſame that the Apoſtle maketh a Chennir. Exam. fruit and ſigh of ſound repentance 2 *Cor.*7.11. qua magis deprecatione conſtat, quàm depulſione criminum, ſuch an Apology as conſiſteth rather in deprecating, then defending.

We have been in a great treſpaſſe unto this day] And ſo there hath bin a concatenation, a continued ſeries of our ſinnes from one generation to another. We are a race of Rebels, a ſeed of ſerpents, &c.

And for our iniquities have we, our Kings and our Prieſts] Our National ſinnes have produced National plagues; which yet we have not improved to a publike or perſonall reformation. Many hands have drawn the cable with greateſt violence: the leproſy hath over-run the whole body: there is (as Phyſicians ſay of ſome diſeaſes) corruptio totius ſubſtantiæ, a general defection, a conjuncture, of all perſons, in all ſins and miſeries, which like cloudes cluſter together, and no clearing up by repentance.

And to confuſion of face,] So that we are a ſcorn to our Enemies, and a terrour to our ſelves, in a low and lamentable condition.

Verſe 8. And now for a little ſpace] Heb. point, or moment of time. God let looſe his hand for a while, and gave them ſome little liberty, to make them inſtances of his mercy, who had been objects of his wrath: but nothing would mend them and make them better.

And to give us a nail] that is, ſome ſettlement, ſome ſubject of hope, and ſupport of faith. He ſeemeth to allude to ſuch nailes as wherewith they faſtened their tents to the ground (Jael drove one of thoſe Tent-nails thorough Siſera's Temples, and laid him ſafe enough) or elſe to thoſe nailes that, driven into pales, do faſten them to their nailes.

That our God may lighten our eyes] Id eſt, Chear up our hearts, and ſo clear up our eye-ſight: which, when the ſpirit is dejected, grows dim, for want of ſpirits. Profectò oculis animus inhabitat, ſaith Pliny; Truly ſo it is, that the heart dwelleth in the eye: there it ſitteth and ſheweth it ſelf pleaſed or diſpleaſed with whatſoever occurrences. And as a looking-glaſſe is the eye of art: ſo is the eye the looking-glaſſe of nature.

Lib. 2. cap. 32.

And to give us a little reviving in our bondage] Not light onely, but heat alſo by the beames of his pleaſed countenance, which is better then life. The life of ſome kinds of creatures is meerly in the Sun. In Winter they lie for dead: in Summer, they revive. So it is with the Saints: all their comfort conſiſts in Gods grace and favour. They look unto him and are lightened, *Pſal.*34.5. he hideth his face and they are troubled; their breath is taken away, they die and return to their duſt, *Pſal.*104.29. Theſe captives in Babylon lay for that time as dead and buried, Eſay 26.19. God opened their graves, and cauſed them to come up out of their graves, and brought them to the land of Iſrael. Ezek.37.13. For his favour is no empty favour: It is not like the Winter-ſun that caſts a Goodly countenance when it ſhineth, but gives little comfort and heat. He is the Father of lights, and the God of all grace and conſolation, &c. he gives all things needful to life and godlineſſe, ſo that to have ſinned againſt ſo good a God, to kick againſt ſuch tender bowels, was a further aggravation of their ſinne: and ſo it is here uſed and urged.

Verſe 9. For we were bondmen] Heb. ſervants; and ſo wholly and onely at the pleaſure of another: for a ſervant is not ἀυτόματος, ſaith Ariſtotle, one that moveth abſolutely of himſelf: but he is the Maſters underling and inſtrument, καὶ ὅλως ἐκείνου, wholly at his diſpoſe. The Saints may ſay all as much. We were bondmen, ſlaves to ſin, drudges to the devil, driven about by him at his pleaſure, having as many Lords as luſts, *Tit.*3.3. and thereby expoſed to a thouſand miſchiefes and miſeries: The Heathens Piſtrinum, the Turks Gallyes, Bajazets iron Cage, the Indian mines are nothing to it. This we ſhould frequently recognize; and remembring that our God hath not forſaken us in our bondage, but brought us from darkneſſe to light, and from the power of Satan unto God, that we might receive forgiveneſſe of ſin, and inheritance among them which are ſanctified; we ſhould bluſh and bleed in the ſenſe of our unthankfulneſſe, ſaying as *ver.*14, ſhould we again break thy Commandements, &c?

Act.26.18.

Yet our God hath not forſaken us in our bondage] As he may ſeem to do his priſoners of hope, when he leaves them in the Enemies hand, or under ſome preſſing affliction, and ſeemes to forget them, that they may the better remember themſelves. But God had remembred theſe returned captives in their low eſtate; for his mercy endureth for ever: And had redeemed them from their Enemies, for his mercy endureth for ever; Pſal. 136. 23, 24. Their ſin therefore was the greater, ſith againſt ſo much mercy: and God might juſtly have ſaid unto them as *Ezek.*22.20. I will gather you in my anger & in my fury, and will leave you there. A grievous judgment indeed! for wo be unto you when I forſake you, *Hoſ.*9.12. Lord leave us not, *Jer.*17,17. Forſake us not utterly, *Pſal.*119.8.

To

To give us a reviving] See *Ver.*8.

To ſet up the Houſe of our God, and to repaire,&c] He reciteth and celebrateth Gods favours to that people,not in the lump onely and by whole-ſale, as we ſay: but entreth into particulars,and reckoneth them up one by one:ſo doth Moſes,Exod.18.8.So doth David, *Pſal.*136. So muſt we,that we may ſhame and ſhent our ſelves as here for our unthankfulneſſe:and be inrited and incited thereby to better obedience.God, for this cauſe, crumbleth his mercies unto us (ſaith One:) we have his bleſſings by retail, that we may make our utmoſt of them.

And to give us a Wall] Protection and ſafegard,as the Walles of Sparta was their Militia,and the Walls of England, is our Navy. They had the fence of the King of Perſia's favour. They had alſo Gods providence as an hedge or wall of fire round about them, *Zech.*2.5. See the Note there.

Verſe 10. And now Our God what ſhall we ſay after this?] q.d. We have nothing to ſay for our ſelves,wherefore thou ſhouldſt not preſently pronounce againſt us,and execute upon us the ſentence of utter rejection. We are even ſpeechleſſe, excuſeleſſe, and muſt needs conclude.It is the Lords mercy that we are not conſumed,that we are at al on this ſide hell:it is becauſe his compaſſions fail not, *Lam.*3.32.

For we have forſaken thy Commandements] Better then this Ezra could not have ſaid for himſelf and his people,whileſt he thus confeſſeth ſin,and putteth himſelf into the hands of juſtice,in hope of mercy.In the courts of men tis ſafeſt to ſay,Non feci,I did it not (ſaith Quintilian.)But in our addreſſes unto God, 'tis beſt to ſay,Ego feci, miſerere;I did it,oh be merciful unto me O God, be merciful unto me.Per miſerere mei,tollitur ira Dei.

Verſe 11. Which thou haſt commanded us by thy ſervants the Prophets] Whoſe office it was to expound the Law to us, and to apply it to our conſciences. This although they have done daily and duely,yet we have not been kept within the bounds of obedience,but have flown againſt the lights,(as Bats uſe to do,) and ſinned preſumptuouſly. Thus he aggravateth their ſin, by every circumſtance. And this is right confeſſion, ſuch as the School-men have ſet forth in this Tetraſtick.

Sit ſimplex,humilis confeſſio,pura,fidelis,
Atque frequens,nuda & diſcreta,lubens,verecunda,
Integra,cordata, & lachrymabilis,accelerata,
Fortis & accuſans,& ſe punire parata.

Is an unclean Land] Becauſe inhabited by an unclean people, who are acted and agitated by an unclean ſpirit,and do miſerably moil themſelves in the filthineſſe of leudneſſe, which defileth a man worſe then any leproſie, then any jakes, *Mar.*7.23. Mr.Aſcham, (School-maſter to Q.Elizabeth)did thank God,that he was but nine dayes in Italy,wherein he ſaw, in that one City of Venice more uncleanneſſe and licentiouſneſſe, then in London he ever heard of in nine years.

With the filthineſſe of the people of the Lands] Thoſe Canaanites were very Borborites, ſhameleſſe ſinners before the Lord; who therefore rooted them out, and cauſed their Land,when it could bear them no longer,to ſpew them out. Sin is filthineſſe in the abſtract. St.James calleth it,The ſtinking filth of a peſtilent ulcer,and the ſuperfluity or garbage of naughtineſſe, *Jam.*1.21. It is no better then the Devils excrement: it ſets his limbes in us, and drawes his picture upon us:for malice is the Devils eye, oppreſſion is his hand,hypocriſy is his cloven foot,&c,Great ſins do greatly pollute. purulæ.

Which have filled it from one end to another] Hath over-ſpred it as a deluge, over-run it as the Jeruſalem-Artichoke doth the ground wherein it is planted: turned it into the ſame nature with it ſelf, as copres which will turn milk into ink:or leaven which turneth a very Paſſeover into pollution. See *Mich.*1.5.with the Note.

Verſe 12. Now therefore give not your daughters] unleſſe ye have a mind to pitch them into hell-mouth. See *ver.*2.with the Note.

Nor ſeek their peace or their wealth for ever] For they were devoted by God to utter deſtruction:and therefore Iſrael might have no intercourſe with them. The Jewes at this day count and call us Canaanites,Edomites, &c. and hold it an almeſdeed to knock us on the head.The beſt among the Gentiles, ſay they is worthy cui caput conteratur tanquam Serpenti to be killed up as a Serpent. Tacitus long ſince obſerved of them, that as they were very kind to their own, ſo to all others they bare a deadly hatred. Thrice a day in Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 5. p. 5. their prayers, they curſe us Chriſtians, and in Polony (where they have a toleration) they print baſe and blaſphemous things againſt Chriſt and Religion.

That ye may be ſtrong] viz. by my preſence amongſt you, and providence over you: for cui adhæreo, præ eſt, as Q. Elizabeth could write: how much more may God Almighty, He whom I favour is ſure to prevail.

And eat the good of the Land] The beſt of the beſt, the fineſt Wheat, the choyſeſt fruit, and thoſe a pledge and fore-taſt of the happineſs of Heaven, where there is nec fames, nec faſtidium, (as one ſaith) neither lack nor loathing, neither meaſure, nor mixture, but ſweeteſt varieties, felicities, eternities.

Prov. 13. 22. And leave it for an inheritance] perſonal goodneſſe is profitable to poſterity: the righteous ſhall leave inheritance to his childrens children. God never caſteth out his good tenants; nor leaveth his ſervants unprovided for. See Pſal. 103. 17. and 112. 1, 2.

Verſe 13. And after all that is come upon us] Affliction, like foul wheather, cometh before it is ſent for: yet not, but of Gods ſending: and then it is ever either probational, as Jobs; or Cautional, as Pauls prick in the fleſh; or penal, for chaſtiſement of ſome way of wickedneſſe, as here.

For our evil deeds] Theſe he thanketh, (as well he might) for all their ſufferings: ſin is the mother of miſery, and hales hell at the heeles of it.

Seeing that thou our God] Our God ſtill, and this is the ſixth time that he hath ſo ſtiled Him in this holy prayer, beſides three times My God. Theſe are ſpeeches of faith, and refer to the Covenant, that pabulum fidei food of faith. When ye ſtand and pray, beleeve; when ye humble and tremble before God, keep up your faith ſtill. Seneca. Nihil retinet qui fidem amiſit, loſe that and loſe all. Take away the iniquity of thy ſervant, ſaith David, 2 Sam. 24. 10. 'Tis as if he ſhould ſay, I am thy ſervant, Lord, ſtill, though an unworthy one. And to prove himſelf ſo, he addeth, For I have done very fooliſhly. I confeſſe it Lord, that thou mayeſt cover it. Homo agnoſcit, Deus ignoſcit. This he beleeves, and ſpeeds: when Judas confeſſing (but withal deſpairing) miſſeth of mercy.

Haſt puniſht us leſſe then our iniquities deſerve] Heb. Haſt withheld beneath our iniquities. The juſt hire of the leaſt ſin is death in the largeſt ſenſe, Rom. 6. 23. What then might God do to us for our many and mighty ſins, or rather, what might he not do, and that moſt juſtly? How great is his mercy which maketh him ſay, Jeruſalem hath received at Gods hand double for all her ſins, Iſai. 40. 1, 2. Too much, ſaith God there: too little, ſaith Ezra here: and yet how ſweetly and beautifully doth this kind of contradiction become both!

And haſt given us ſuch deliverance as this] A fruit of free mercy, and calls hard for duty. Gods bleſſings are binders: and every new deliverance calls for new obedience, Servati ſumus ut ſerviamus.

Verſe 14. Should we again break thy Commandements] There is ſo much unthankfulneſſe and diſingenuity in ſuch an entertainment of mercy, that holy Ezra here thinkes that Heaven and Earth would be aſhamed of it.

And joyn in affinity with the people of theſe abominations] Eſpecially when we may hear God himſelf ſcreeching out as it were thoſe words of his, Oh do not this abominable thing! Save your ſelves from this untoward generation, &c!

Wouldſt thou not be angry with us?] Id eſt, Chide us, ſmite us, and ſo ſet it on, as no creature ſhould be able to take it off? Sin may move God, when we ask bread and fiſh to feed us, to anſwer us with a ſtone to bruiſe us, or a Serpent to bite us. Shun it therefore as a Serpent in your way, or as poyſon in your meats. Pſal. 2. 12. Kiſſe the Son, leſt he be angry, and ye periſh from the way, &c.

So that there ſhould be no remnant] So that our late preſervation ſhould prove but a reſervation to further miſchief, as was Sodoms, Senacheribs, Pharaohs.

Verſe 15. O Lord God of Iſrael] So called, becauſe he is their portion, they His, Deut. 32. 9. He had avouched them for his: and they him interchangeably, Deut. 26. 17, 18. Seneca could ſay, that the baſeſt people (meaning the Jewes) gave Lawes unto all the World: that is, had the true God, Creatour of all, for their God.

Thou art righteous] In all thy judgments inflicted upon us: or, thou art faithful and true in thy promiſes: but we have forfeited thy favour, and deſerved deſtruction.

Behold we are before thee in our treſpaſſes] Or guiltineſſes, which is that iniquity of ſin (as David calleth it, Pſal. 32. 5.) whereby the ſinner is bound over to condigne puniſhment.

For

For we cannot ſtand before thee] But muſt needs causâ cadere, being ſelf condemned, and ſuch as muſt needs ſubſcribe to thy perfect juſtice in our own utter deſtruction.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. Now when Ezra had prayed.]

HAD preſented himſelf as a Suppliant, and opened his cauſe to God the Judge, appealing to him, that he might determine.

And when he had confeſſed] And begged pardon: deprecating the divine diſpleaſure, as the word ſignifieth. Hithpallel.

Weeping]Of this we read not in the former chapter, but of other effects of his paſſion, as renting his garments, tearing off the hair of his head and beard, &c. His ſorrow at firſt might be above tears, which afterwards came guſhing out amain, as the blood doth out of a Wound, but not till it hath firſt run back to the heart, to bear the newes to it, as I may ſo ſay. It is ſaid of Athanaſius, that by his tears, as by the bleeding of a chaſt vine, he cured the Leproſy of that tainted age. May we not ſay the ſame of this good man?

And caſting himſelf down before the houſe of God Where all might ſee him, that their eyes might affect their hearts, and contribute ſome tears of compunction and compaſſion toward the filling of Gods bottle, as they had done ſins toward the filling of his bag.

Of Men, Women, and Children] Anaſhim, Venaſhim, &c. A Woman is a man, cut ſhort by the head, 1 Cor. 11. 3. Here was a general meeting of all Sexes and Sizes joyned together, to cut ſins cart-ropes.

And the people wept very ſore] They could not waſh their hands in innocency, they therefore waſhed them in tears: they knew, that as the ſins of the old World, ſo of this little World, needeth a deluge. Their ſins therefore are as ſo many Hazaels to them: their hearts as ſo many Hadad-rimmons, the place they made to become a very Bochim, they wept with a great weeping, and ſo vented their ſins at their eyes, as ſick people do their ill humours at the pores of their bodies.

Verſe 2. And Shechaniah the ſon of Jehiel] Egregie cordatus homo, A prudent and a pious man, one that had feeding lips, and a healing tongue, one that knew how to time a word, and to ſet it upon the wheels. Eſay 50. 4. Prov. 25. 11.

Anſwered and ſaid unto Ezra] Such words as were uttered more from the bowels, then the brain: and thereby proved ſo effectual.

We have treſpaſſed againſt our God] His father Jehiel had taken a ſtrange Wife, ver. 18. 26. ſo perhaps had he himſelf: or if not, yet he might fear wrath, becauſe of the ſame body politike with thoſe ſinners againſt their own ſouls. God, he knew, might well draw blood of the arm for the cure of the head; as Theodoret ſaith he did when he ſlew Pharaohs firſt-born.

Yet now there is hope in Iſrael, &c.] Hope that the people will repent, and hope that God will have mercy, upon their repentance. Supereſt ſperare ſalutem, If it were not for hope, heart would break. God having opened a door of hope, let us go boldly to the Throne of grace; what ſhould hinder?

Qui nil ſperare poteſt, deſperet nihil.

Caſt not away your confidence which hath ſo great recompenſe of reward: but caſt Anchor within the veil, and wait for day, as Paul did in the Ship-wrack, See Eſay 50. 10.

Verſe 3. Now therefore let us make a Covenant] And ſo tye our ſelves thereby, to the better abearance: that we ſlip not collar, that we detrect not the yoke of Gods obedience, Deut. 10. 20. Cleaving to God with full purpoſe of heart will require ſwearing. Broken bones muſt have ſtrong bands to cloſe them. Tottering houſes muſt be crampt with iron barres, or they will ſoon down. If the vowes of God be upon us, if we be Covenanters, it will help againſt the fickleneſs of our falſe hearts: which cannot but know that if God ſhall be All-ſufficient to us, we muſt be Altogether his, Cant. 2. 16. His is a Covenant of mercy, even the ſure mercies of David; ours is a Covenant of obedience to him, in every part and point of duty.

To put away all the Wives] This Jewes might do in this, and ſome other caſes. So did Romanes alſo with this onely bill of divorce, Res tuas tibi habeto, Take what is thine own, and be packing. But Chriſtians may not do thus, becauſe of difference in Religion: 1 Cor. 7. *ver.*12. Whatever ſome late upſtarts have printed and practiſed to the contrary.

And ſuch as are born of them] The children of thoſe ſtrange Wives, perſiſting in their paganiſme. Theſe children though diſinherited, yet were not to be altogether deſerted, but nouriſhed, and nurtured alſo in the fear and admonition of the Lord, *Eph.*6.4. Proving if perad venture, God will give them repentance to the acknowledging of the truth, &c. 2 *Tim.*2.25.

According to the counſel of my Lord] Termes full of hearty reſpect, and humble ſubmiſſion. He calles Ezra My lord, as Hannah did Eli, with an eye to his dignity, and authority, both as a Prieſt, and as a Commiſſioner from the King of Perſia. At Venice every ordinary Mechanike is called Magnifico. At Vicenza in Italy the common title to a common Gentleman is Signor Conte, as much as My Lord Earle. But Ezra was every way honourable and deſerving: titles of honour were not worthy of him.

And of thoſe that tremble at the Commandement of our God] A periphraſis of a truly pious perſon, ſc. ſuch a one as feareth God and keepeth his Commandements. And this is the Man alone that is fit to judge of caſes of conſcience, and to comfort the feeble minded. Now although the comfort given by Gods Miniſters (ſuch as Ezra was) be ordinarily moſt effectual (as is the bleſſing of Parents, who are in Gods Room) yet others alſo (that are conſciencious and experienced perſons, that tremble at the Commandement of God, as here) may give excellent counſel and comfort in ſuch a caſe. But how like the motion of a Puppet, the language of a Parret is the beſt diſcourſe (in this ſubject of conſcience) of the not-intereſſed man.

And let it be done according to the Law] Which, though it take no direct and expreſſe order in this caſe, yet by due deduction and juſt inference it was determined both here and in Nehemiah, *chap.*9.2. that thoſe ſtrange Wives ſhould be put away.

Verſe 4. Ariſe] Surge age Summe Pater, ſaid Mantuan to the Pope, exciting him to take Arms againſt the Turk: to the ſame ſenſe Shechaniah here to Ezra: or rather as Jehovah to Joſhuah chap.7.10. Get thee up: why lyeſt thou here on thy face?

For this matter belongeth unto thee] Who haſt both an heart to do it, as appeares by thine humiliation, and alſo power in thine hand, as witneſſeth thy commiſſion.

We alſo will be with thee] Every man muſt ſhew himſelf forward to further the work of Reformation, moving regularly within his own ſphere, and trading every talent for that end and purpoſe.

Be of good courage and do it] Theſe were verba non inflantia, ſed inflammantia. And thus may one by his hearty good counſel, become an Angel, nay a God to another. Senarclæus, in an Epiſtle to Bucer, telling how John Diazius the Martyr diſcourſed unto him the Night before, he was butchered by the appointment of his own Brother Alphonſus, hath this notable expreſſion; Ego verò illius oratione ſic incendebar, &c. I was ſo inflamed with his words, as if I had heard the Holy Ghoſt himſelf ſpeaking unto me.

Verſe 5. Then aroſe Ezra] According to the counſel of Shecaniah, *ver.*4. How forcible are right words; Job 6.25. One ſeaſonable ſpeech falling upon a prepared heart, hath oft a ſtrong and ſweet operation; as that ſimilitude uſed by Peter Martyr, reading upon the firſt to the Corinthians had upon Galeacius Caracciolus that Noble Italian convert: & as ſome ſpeeches of Staupicius, had upon Luther; who was likewiſe much confirmed and cheared up by conference with an old Prieſt at Erford; who largely diſcourſed about juſtification by faith, and explained the Articles of the Creed to him.

Life of Luther by Mr. Clark.

And made the chief Prieſts, the Levites, and all Iſrael to ſwear] Ὁρκος, ὁρκόω. An oath is a fence: and, added to a vow or covenant: it, doth notably conduce (as a holy exorciſm) to conjure down our rebellious wills, and as cords or chains to hamper our treacherous hearts, that they backſlide not like backſliding heifers. Moiſt bodies (as water) muſt be put into cloſe Veſſels: ſo muſt mans heart be bound together by ſtrongeſt helps, and reſolutions. Neither caſt we any new ſnare hereby upon our ſelves, (1 *Cor.*7.35) but rather a new provocation to the payment of an old debt we owe to God. Such was that of Jacob, Gen.28.20. and 31.13. of David, Pſal.119.106. Of the Nazarites, Num.6.2,3. Rechabites, Jer.35.6. This ſhewes a very earneſt deſire to obey: it ſharpneth alſo our prayers, and diſhearteneth the Devil: who ſeeing us thus peremptory and reſolute, will deſpair, and depart.

Then

Then Ezra rose up from before the House of God] Where God had promised to hear prayers for Christs sake, whereof that house was a type. See ver. 1.

And went into the chamber of Johanan] As a fit meeting-place, where they might consider, consult and give counsel. Over the Counsel-chamber at Venice is written, Let nothing be done here against the Weal-publike. A Professour of the Turks Law proclaimeth before they advise or attempt ought, That nothing be done against Religion. Over the Town-hall in Zant are set these two Verses in letters of gold.

Hic locus odit, amat, punit, conservat, honorat,
Nequitiam, pacem, crimina, jura, bonos.

Think the same we must needs of this holy Conclave or Council-chamber, where the Sanhedrin was present, and Ezra President.

He did eat no bread, nor drink no water] Though fasting and faint with much mourning, yet no food would down with him, till he had gone thorough-stitch with the work. It was his meat and drink to do the will of his Heavenly Father. So it was good Jobs, chap. 23.12. and our Saviours, Matth. 21.17,23. It was then, when disappointed of a breakfast at the barren Fig-tree, and coming hungry into the City, he went not into a Victualling-house, nor into a Friends house to refresh himself: but into Gods House, where he continued teaching the people all that day.

For he mourned because of the transgression] It was not then a natural abstinence, arising from sickness, nor a civil for healths sake, or for some other wordly respect: but a Religious fast, which is usually to be held out a whole day, usque dum Stellæ in Cœlo apparent. (as an old Canon hath it) till the Stars appear, in the sky: yet so as that nature be chastised, not disabled for duty.

Verse 7. And they made proclamation] Heb. They caused a voyce to passe, viz. by an Herald or Cryer.

That they should gather themselves together] And so the guilty might be brought to their answer, in that general assembly.

Verse 8. And that whosoever would not come, &c.] Lawes, if they be not penal and compulsory, will soon be slighted by lawlesse, aweless persons. Howbeit, Flies must not be killed upon mens browes with beetles? peccadillo's must not be punished, as haynous crimes. Draco made it capital to be idle, to steal pot-hearbs, &c. Of his Lawes Aristotle saith that they were not worthy remembrance, but onely for their over-great severity, Ezra's Laws were more mild.

All his substance shall be forfeited] This to men of their mettle, was a forcible motive. When some have a losse in their riches, it is as it were raked out of their bellies: a piece of their very heart goes with it, Job 20.15. and they are filled with unmedicinable sorrowes, Eccles. 5.

And himself separated from the Congregation] Banished the Land, or at least cast out of the Church. Wo be to those that separate themselves, Jude 19. Cainites you may call them, Gen. 4. 16. Our Church-forsakers, Worship-scorners, that last brood of Beelzebub.

Verse 9. Within three dayes] They durst not outstand their time, because their estates were at stake. Why is there not the like care taken, and speed used to make peace with God, sith for ought we know 'tis now or never, to day or not at all? Is it nothing to lose an immortal soul? why then cry we Cras Domine? why stand we trifling and baffling from day to day, till it be all-too-late? Remember the foolish Virgins, and be wiser.

It was the ninth Moneth] Which was the Moneth of May, saith Diodate; counting September for the first, after the manner of the Persians, Esth. 2.16. and this great rain, being out of the accustomed season, was somwhat prodigious, & seemed to portend Gods wrath, as 1 Sam. 12.17. Others make it to be in December the deep of Winter: which though it be an ordinary time of raine (whence in Greek also it hath its name χεῖμα, and in Latine Hyems) yet these showers were extraordinary, more like spouts then showers, and thence the peoples fear much increased by their guilt: for as no body is without its shadow so is no sin without its fear, quia nec sine conscientia sui, because it cannot shake off conscience. Tertul.

Verse 10. We have trespassed] We have disloyally or rather sacrilegiously trespassed, by by transgressing the Covenant. Other mens sins are rebellions against God, but the Saints sinnes are treacheries. Let the Philistins bind Sampson, it will be nothing so grievous to him, as that his brethren should do it. Mens offences are much increased by their obligations.

To increase the trespasse of Israel] To adde to the heap which thereby is grown as high as Heaven, *chap.*9.6. and calls hard for fire from thence, *Psal.*11.6. to revenge the quarel of the Covenant. Draw water therefore before the Lord, as those did, 1 Sam. 7.6. Yea poure out your hearts before him. God is a refuge for us, *Psal.*62.7.

Vomitus sordiũ animæ. Naz.

Verse 11 Now therefore make confession] This is the souls vomit: which is the hardest kind of Physick, but healthsomest. This the Devil knowes, viz. that there is no way to purge the sick soul but upwards, by casting out the vicious humour wherewith it is clogged: and therefore he holds the lips close, that the heart may not disburden it self by so wholesome evacuation. Confession must follow upon conviction, as here: and be followed by reformation.

And do his pleasure and separate, &c.] For they that confesse and forsake not their sins are onely dog-sick. When they have disgorged their stomacks, and got a little ease, they will be as bad as before. Wicked people make account of confession, as drunkards do of vomiting: that they may adde drunkennesse to thirst. But the man that shall have mercy must both confesse and forsake, *Prov.*28.13. Open a veyn, and let out his bad blood.

Verse 12. Then all the Congregation answered and said with a loud voyce] But not with a true heart, *Heb.*10.22. For within a few years they returned to their vomit again.

As thou hast said, so must we do] These were good words, and not unlike those of Lælius in Lucan spoken to Cæsar.

Jussa sequi tàm velle mihi, quàm posse, necesse est.

But many of these fair promisers turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their Fathers they were turned aside like a deceitful bow, *Psal.*78.57. Look how a rotten bow, though otherwise fair, when an Arrow is drawn to the head, and both eye and arrow is leveld to the mark, yet it miscarryeth: So do the desires, purposes and promises that unsound hearts conceive in their afflictions, and under just convictions.

Nulli rei natus nisi pœnitentiæ. Tert. de pœn.

Verse 13. Neither is this work of one day or two] No more is repentance, that first and continual work of every Christian. This made Tertullian say, that he was born for nothing else but for repentance. Surely as in a Ship there is continuall pumping, and as in a Beggers coat continual piecing; so in the best soul there wants not matter of daily repenting: this House must be every day swept; this Candle-stick every day scoured. Besides, some sins are past in time, that are not past indeed, if we dwell not in the undoing and reversing of them. The best of these hereafter mentioned, were to begin a new their repentance, because they had not considered their marrying of strange Wives.

For we are many that have transgressed] Heb. We have multiplyed to transgresse. The comfort is, that God will in like sort multiply to pardon, if we return unto him: that's the expression, Esay 55.7.

Verse 14. Let now our Rulers of all the Congregation] Our Sanedrim or seventy Seniors, See *Deut.*17.9. Let there be a matrimonial Consistory erected, and matters in question orderly heard and determined.

Until the fierce wrath of God] We must not think that he will cease pursuing us, till the Traytours head be thrown over the Wall, till there be a thorough reformation. One Abimelech left alive, may be the death of Gideons 70 sons: so may one sin favoured, be thine utter undoing.

Verse 15. Onely Jonathan the son of Asahel and Jahaziah] These two Priests onely, of all the company, had kept themselves unspotted, and so were fit to be employed in the work in hand. Diaconos paucitas honorabiles fecit, saith Hierome, of his times. The paucity of good Deacons hath rendred them honourable. And I do not think, saith Chrysostome, that among the Clergy there are many that shall be saved. Clerus Britannicus stupor mundi: and yet there never wanted amongst us those dehonestamenta Cleri, that might give some occasion to black-mouthed Campian to tell the World. Ministris eorum nihil vilius, Many of their Ministers are most base.

Hier. Epist.

D. Hall.

Camp. Ra.

Verse

Verſe 16. And the children of the captivity did ſo] Appointed ſuch a courſe ſhould be taken. And ſo it was a plain Plebiſcitum, and accordingly executed.

Verſe 17. By the firſt day of the firſt moneth]So that it was not the work of one day or two, as ver. 13. but of full three moneths, and yet they were not ſlothful in that buſineſs, but fervent in ſpirit ſerving the Lord. In the work of repentance take time enough, dig deep enough by thorough humiliation; leſt the fall of the houſe be great. The Engliſh are not ſick ſoon enough, ſaith One, and they are well too ſoon: This is true of their minds, as well as of their bodies.

Verſe 18. And among the ſons of the Prieſts, &c.] What a ſhame was this, and a ſtain to their cloth? Theſe mens white ephods covered foul ſinnes: whereas they ſhould have been careſull to have kept all clean: as that Eleazer was of whom it is ſtoried, that he would not do any thing that might ſeem to be ſinful, becauſe he would not ſpot his white head.

Of the ſons of Jeſhua the ſon of Jozadak] This good High-prieſt had ſons none of the beſt. White Halcyons hatch black young ones. Caligula fuit optimi Viri Germanici filius. Eli his ſons were ſons of Belial. Samuels were little better: and yet it is not likely that he was faulty in that indulgence, for which his own mouth had denounced Gods judgements againſt Eli. When Ceſar Borgia Duke of Valence invited his Nobility to a Feaſt, and after Dinner cut off their heads, Pope Alexander (who was his Father) hearing of it ſmiled and ſaid, his Son had ſerved them a Spaniſh trick. When Petro Alingi Farneſis had committed an unſpeakable Violence on the perſon of Coſmus Chærius, Biſhop of Fanum, and then poyſoned him, he received no other Chaſtiſement of his Father Pope Paul the third, then Hæc vitia me non commonſtratore didicit, he never learned theſe faults of his Father. Good Jeſhua had better bred his children, then thus to break out into an open violation of that Law, which they could not but know, and ſhould have obſerved. But God will ſhew, that grace is by gift, not inheritance: and men will ſhew, that though nourture may ſomewhat amend nature, yet it is grace alone that can keep us within the bounds of obedience.

Verſe 19. And they gave their hands,] Id eſt, They plighted their troth, and aſſured the aſſent of their hearts, 2 Kings 10.15.

That they would put away their Wives] Though as dear to them haply, as was George Carpenters (Martyr) burnt at Munchen in Bavaria: My Wife and Children, ſaid he, are ſo dear unto me, that they cannot be bought from me for all the riches and poſſeſſions of the Duke of Bavaria: but for the love of my Lord God I will willingly forſake them. Let us do ſo by our dilecta delicta, our deareſt, and moſt delicious ſins. Act. & Mon. 806.

They offered a Ram of the Flock] This ſhewes that they ſinned againſt knowledge: for for a ſin of ignorance the oblation was not a Ram, but a goat.

Verſe 44. And ſome of them had Wives by whom they had Children] Who yet for all that were put away, together with their children, ver. 3. The Hebrew hath it thus, And there were of them Women, & they had put forth ſons, or expoſed their ſons to do as they might, or to be diſpoſed of by the Judges: as that good Woman who told Bonner, that if he burnt her, ſhe hoped he would keep Faith, Hope, and Charity (thoſe were the names of her three daughters) No by my troth will not I, quoth the Biſhop: Ile meddle with none of them. Act. & Mon.

A

COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the BOOK of Nehemiah.

CHAP. I.

Ver. 1. The words of Nehemiah.]

OR, The deeds, for he was good at both, & ſo a ſingular comfort to his Country-men, according to the notation of his Name Nehemiah, Id eſt, The comfort or reſt of the Lord. Here-hence alſo ſome inferre, that Nehemiah himſelf was the Pen-man of this Book (and not Ezra, as the vulgar Latine, and many ancients would have it) like as Julius Cæſar wrote his own acts; and by a more modeſt Name, called his book Commentaries, and not Hiſtories: yet did it ſo well, ut præripta non præbita facultas ſcriptoribus videatur, (ſaid Aulus Hirtius,) that Hiſtorians had their work done to their hands: He wrote with the ſame ſpirit he fought, ſaith Quintilian.

So did Alexander Severus and M. Aurelius Emperours.

Eodem animo dixit, quo bellavit, lib. 10.

And it came to paſſe] This Book then is a continuation of the former: Nehemiah being a third inſtrument of procuring this peoples good, after Zerubbabel, and Ezra; and deſervedly counted and called a Third Founder of that Common-wealth, after Joſhuah, & David.

In the moneth Chiſleu] In the deep of Winter; then it was that Hanani and his brethren undertook their journey into Perſia, for the good of the Church.

In the twentieth year] Sc. of Artaxerxes Longimanus, thirteen yeares after Ezra and his company firſt came to Jeruſalem, Ezra 7.8. with Nehem. 2.1.

I was in Shuſhan the palace] Id eſt, In the palace of the City Suſan: this Suſan ſignifieth a Lily, and was ſo called, likely, for the beauty and delectable ſite. Now it is called Vahdac of the poverty of the place. Here was Nehemiah waiting upon his office, and promoting the good of his people. Strabo and others ſay, that the Inhabitants of Suſia were quiet and peaceable: and were therefore the better beloved by the Kings of Perſia, Cyrus being the firſt that made his chief abode there, in Winter eſpecially: and that this City was long, and in Compaſſe 15 miles about.

Nomine tu, quin ſis naturâ Gratius, ac te Gratius hoc Chriſti gratia præſtet, Amen.

Verſe 2. Thus Hanani] A gracious man, according to his Name; and zealous for his Coun-

Countrey; which indeed is a mans ſelf; and therefore when our Saviour uſed that proverb Phyſician heal thy ſelf, the ſenſe is, heal thy Countrey, Luk. 4.23.

Out of my brethren] Not by race, perhaps, but ſurely by grace, and place: a Jew, and that inwardly, and therefore entruſted after this, by Nehemiah with a great charge, Neh. 7. ver. 2.

Came he, and certain men of Judah] Upon ſome great ſuit likely, for their Countrey; becauſe they took ſo long and troubleſome a journey in the Winter, not without that Roman reſolution of Pompey in like caſe, Neceſſe eſt ut eam, non ut vivam. Whatever their buſineſſe was, theſe men had better ſucceſſe then afterwards, Philo the Jew and his Colleagues had in their Embaſſy to Cajus the Emperour: who caſt them out with contempt, and would not hear their apology againſt Appion of Alexandria, their deadly Enemy.

And I asked them concerning the Jewes] The Church was his care: neither could he enjoy ought ſo long as it went ill with Zion. He was even ſick of the affliction of Joſeph; and glad he had got any of whom to enquire: he asked them, not out of an itch after newes, but of an earneſt deſire to know how it fared with Gods poor people, that he might cum ſingulis pectus ſuum copulare, as Cyprian ſpeaketh, rejoyce with them that rejoyced, and weep with thoſe that wept, Rom. 12.15. a ſure ſigne of a ſound member.

Which were left of the captivity] One of whom he well knew to be more worth then a rabble of Rebels, a World of wicked perſons: As the Jews uſe to ſay of thoſe ſeventy ſouls that went down with Jacob into Egypt, that they were better worth, then all the ſeventy Nations of the World beſides.

Verſe 3. Are in great affliction and reproach] The Church is heir of the Croſſe, ſaith Luther: and it was ever the portion of Gods people to be reproached, as David was by Doeg with devouring words, Pſal. 52. Their breath as fire ſhall devour you, Eſay 33.10. Eccleſia eſt hæres crucis.

The Wall of Jeruſalem alſo is broken down] So that theeves and murtherers came in, in the Night, ſaith Comeſtor here, and ſlue many of them.

And the gates thereof are burnt with fire] They were burnt by the Chaldeans, and never yet repaired. And to keep a continual great watch was too great a charge and trouble.

Verſe 4. And it came to paſſe when I heard] It was not without a ſpecial providence that theſe good men thus met, and by mutual conference kindle one another: and that thereby God provided a remedy. Things fall not out by hap-hazard, but by Gods moſt wiſe diſpoſe and appointment.

That I ſate down and wept] He was even preſſed down with the greatneſſe of his grief, whereto he gave vent by his eyes, Zeph. 3.17,18. God promiſes much mercy to ſuch to whom the reproach of the ſolemn aſſemblies was a burden. Nehemiah cannot ſtand under it, but ſits down and weeps. Expletur lachrymis, egeriturq; dolor, Ovid.

And mourned certaine dayes] Viz. For three moneths ſpace: for ſo long he was preparing himſelf to petition the King, chap. 2.

And faſted and prayed] This was a ſure courſe, and never miſcarried, as hath been noted, Ezra 9.

Before the God of heaven] With face turned toward his holy Temple, 1 Kings 8.44,48. with heart lifted up to the higheſt heavens, thoſe hills whence ſhould come his help.

Verſe 5. I beſeech thee O Lord] Annah Jehovah: An inſinuating preface; whereby he ſeeketh firſt to get in with God ſpeaking him faire; as doth likewiſe David, in a real and heavenly complement, Pſal. 116.16. Obſecro Jehova, I beſeech O Lord, (I am thy ſervant, I am thy ſervant, the ſonne of thy handmaid) break thou my bands. So the Church, Eſay 64. 9. Behold, ſee we beſeech thee, we are all thy people.

The great and terrible God] A great King above all gods. Ἀξιωματικώτατος ὄντως ὁ Βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν, ſaith a Greek Father; glorious in holineſſe, fearful in prayſes, doing wonders, ſaith Moſes in one place: as in another, The Lord our God is God of gods, and Lord of lords; a great God, a mighty and a terrible. Verè verendus & venerandus. Thus Nehemiah begins his prayer, and counts it a great mercy that he may creep in at a corner, and preſent himſelf before this moſt Majeſtick Monarch of the world, with greateſt ſelf-abaſement. Exod. 15.11. Deut. 10.17.

That keepeth covenant and mercy] That he may at once both tremble before him and truſt upon Him: he deſcribeth God by his Goodnes, as well as by Greatnes, and ſo helpeth his own faith, by contemplating Gods faithfulneſſe and loving-kindneſſe. God hath hitherto kept Covenant with heaven and earth, with nights and days, Jer. 33. 20, 25. that one ſhall ſucceed the other: and ſhall he break with his people? No verily. Be ſure to keep faith in heart, or you will pray but poorly. And for this, learn in the preface to your prayers to propound God to your ſelves in ſuch notions, and under ſuch tearms and titles as may moſt conduce thereunto; pleading the Covenant.

That love him and obſerve his Commandments] That love to be his ſervants, Eſay 56. 6. that wait for his Law, Iſa. 42. 4. that think upon his Commandments to do them. Pſal. 103. 18.

Verſe 6. Let thine eares now be attentive, and thine eyes open] Should not God ſee, as well as hear, (ſaith a Divine) his children ſhould want many things? We apprehend not all our wants: and ſo cannot pray for relief of all. He of his own accord (without any Monitour) is wont to aid us. The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous: and his eares are open to their prayer. Pſal. 34. 15.

That thou mayeſt hear the prayer of thy ſervant] If not ſecundum voluntatem, yet ad utilitatem: but uſually God anſwereth his ſervants prayers, fitting his mercy ad cardinem deſiderii, as here; and letting it be unto them, even as they will.

Aug. Confeſſ. l. 5. c. 8.

Which I pray before thee now day and night] Chriſt requireth his ſervants and ſuppliants to pray and not faint, Luke 18. 1. Ordinarily, morning and evening without faile; Extraordinarily, oftner. The Jewes divide their day into Prayer, Work, and Repaſt: neither will they omit prayer for their meat, or labour. The Mahometans what occaſion ſoever they have, either by profit or pleaſure, to divert them, will pray five times every day; and upon the Friday, (which is their Sabbath) ſixtimes. Va torpori noſtro! how few and feeble are our prayers for our ſelves and for our brethren in diſtreſſe; who have for that cauſe an unanſwerable action againſt us!

Grand Sig. Seraglio. 181.

And confeſſe the ſinnes of the children of Iſrael] This He did more fully and at large, then is here ſet downe: and he fitly beginneth with Confeſſion: that having gotten off the guilt of ſinne, he might with more courage and comfort deprecate wrath, and beg mercy.

Which we have ſinned againſt thee] There lay the pinch of his grief, that they ſinned againſt ſo good a God.

Both I and my fathers houſe have ſinned] Hic igitur Lyra deliravit, Lyra is out when he ſaith here, that Nehemiah confeſſed his owne ſinnes, but onely as a member of the ſame body, he himſelf being innocent. Comparatively innocent he was doubtleſſe; but that he was not without ſinne, and ſuch ſinnes as he had cauſe to confeſſe to be God-provoking ſinnes, is clear by this very text. He was ſenſible of his owne ſinnes, and of other-mens ſinnes too. The ſinnes of our Anceſtors not bewailed and diſclaimed, are ſet upon our ſcore, Dan. 5. 22.

Verſe 7. We have dealt very corruptly] Heb. Corrupting we have corrupted our ſelves againſt thee. Or, We have bound over our ſelves unto thee to be puniſhed for our ſinnes. Of confeſſing with utmoſt aggravation, and laying load upon our ſelves, ſee the Notes on Ezra 9.

And we have not kept the Commandments, nor Statutes, nor Judgements] i. e. Neither the Lawes Moral, Ceremonial, nor Judicial. We have broken all thy bonds, and caſt thy cords from us.

Verſe 8. Remember I beſeech thee the word] It befalleth not the Lord to forget or remember (to ſpeak properly) for all things are preſent with him. Nevertheleſſe Metaphorically God is ſaid to do both; as when, being provoked by the horrid ſinnes of the Jews, he ſo puniſhed them as if he had forgotten that they were his people, or that he had ever made them any promiſes. And in this caſe God gives his Prophets and praying people leave to be his Remembrancers, Eſay 62. 6, 7. Ye that are the Lords Remembrancers, keep not ſilence, and give him no reſt till he eſtabliſh, and till he make Jeruſalem a praiſe in the earth. This, Nehemiah doth here moſt vigorouſly, and ſped accordingly: Let us do likewiſe. Caſt the labouring Church into Gods everlaſting armes, and inmind him of his promiſes: burden him with them, as that Martyr ſaid; put them into ſuit, they are nigh the Lord day and night, 1 Kings 8. 59. Say, remember thy word unto thy ſervant, whereupon thou haſt cauſed me to truſt. And in the want of other Rhetorick urge this with repetition, Lord thou haſt promiſed, thou haſt promiſed, &c. He loves to be urged with his word, to be ſued upon his Bond, &c.

Pſal. 119. 49.

The word that thou commandedſt, &c.] The threatening is alſo to be acknowledged Gods word, as well as the promiſe; and the uprightneſſe of our hearts is, to be approving by (beleeving) the one, as well as the other. Sower and ſweet make the beſt ſawce, promiſes and menaces mingled, ſerve to keep the heart in the beſt temper, as Nehemiah's was.

Verſe 9. But if ye returne unto me] By ſinne men do wickedly depart from God: as by Repentance, they return unto him, and cloſe with him.

And keep my Commandments] Evangelically keep them: for with a legal obedience none can: our ſhort legges and purſie hearts cannot hold out here.

And do them] Or at leaſt, be doing at them, do them as we can: ſi præcepta faciamus, etiamſi non perficiamus, ſufficit.

To the uttermoſt part of heaven] That is, of the earth, which ſeemes to our eye terminated with the heaven, and covered as with an half-globe. Jewes are a diſ-jected people to this preſent: and a fearful inſtance of Gods heavy indignation againſt ſinne. Joſephus ſaith that in his time, they were grown ſo wicked, that if the Romans had not deſtroyed and diſperſed them; without doubt either the earth would have ſwallowed them up, or fire from heaven have conſumed them.

Yet will I gather them from thence] Elſe not: Gods promiſes are with a condition, which is as an Oare in a Boat, and ſterne of a ſhip; and turnes the promiſe another way.

Verſe 10. Now theſe are thy ſervants and thy people] And therefore thou art concerned, in point of honour, to ſee to them, and to work for them, as every Maſter will do for his ſervants, and King for his ſubjects. Otherwiſe, the neighbour-Nations our enemies may poſſibly ſay as Aigoland King of Saragoſſa in Aragon did; of whom it is reported, that he long time made Charlemaine beleeve that he would be baptized. And when he came for that purpoſe to the French Court, and ſaw many Lazars and poor people expecting alms from the Emperours table, he asking what they were? was anſwered, that they were the ſervants and people of God. On theſe words, he ſpeedily returned: deſperately proteſting that he would not ſerve that God, which could keep his ſervants no better. Turpine.

Whom thou haſt redeemed by thy great power] And wilt thou part with thy purchaſe, or obſcure the glory of thy conqueſt over the gods and people of Egypt, by leaving this thy people deſtitute?

Verſe 11. O Lord I beſeech thee] He ends as he began, ſee verſe 5. praying in the Holy Ghoſt, whoſe creature prayer is.

And to the prayer of thy ſervants] Whoſe neceſſities prick them on to prayer in all places; and who pray for the peace of Jeruſalem unceſſantly, Pſal. 137.

Who deſire to fear thy name] The whole life of a true Chriſtian is nothing elſe but ſanctum deſiderium, ſaith Auſtine, an holy deſire. Willing to live honeſtly, Heb. 13. 18. wiſhing well to an exact keeping of Gods Commandments, Pſal. 119. 4, 5. affecting that perfection, which yet we cannot effect.

Proſper I pray thee] Proſperity given in as an anſwer to prayer is very ſweet: as the cipher when it followeth the figure, addes to the number: though it be nothing in it ſelfe.

For I was the Kings Cup-bearer] And ſo might take molliſſima fandi Tempora, my fitteſt opportunity to beſtead my people.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. And it came to paſſe in the moneth Niſan]

TIme and place is to be regiſtred of ſpecial mercies received. This ſhall be written for the generation to come: and the people which ſhall be created ſhall praiſe the Lord, Pſal. 102. 18.

In the twentieth year of Artaxerxes] Sirnamed Longhand, as our Edward the firſt was called Long-ſhanks, and another Longeſpee or Long-ſword. This Long-hand is renowned for the faireſt among men in that age: and no wonder, if he were (as is generally thought) the ſonne of that faireſt Eſther. Μακρὸς χ'ρ. Omnium hominum pulcherrimus. Æmil. Prob.

That wine was before him] There was a feaſt, as verſe 6. Not by chance, but by Gods providence: who of ſmall occaſions worketh greateſt matters many times; as he put ſmall thoughts into the heart of Ahaſhueroſh for great purpoſes, Eſth. 6. 1.

And I took up the wine, &c.] As Eſther was come to the Kingdome, ſo Nehemiah to this office, for ſuch a time as this, Eſther 4. 14. Though he were a priſoner, a ſtranger, one of another Religion, yet is he the Kings Cup-bearer and taſter: an office of great truſt, and credit. This was a ſtrange work of God, to cauſe heathen Princes thus to favour the Religion that they knew not; and to defend that people, which their ſubjects hated.

Now I had not beene before-time ſad in his preſence] Princes are uſually ſet upon the merry pin; and all deviſes are uſed by Jeſters and otherwiſe, to make them merry: no mourner might be ſeen in Ahaſhueroſh his Court, Eſth. 4. 4. But good Nehemiah had been, for certaine moneths ſpace, afflicting his ſoul, and macerating his body, as in the former Chapter: Hence his preſent ſadneſſe, which the King (being a wiſe man, and a loving maſter) ſoon obſerved.

Verſe 2. Wherefore the King ſaid unto me, Why is thy countenance ſad?] Some would have chid him, and bid him be packing, for they liked not his looks; there might be treaſon hatching in his heart: he was a man of an ill aſpect. But love thinketh no evil.

Seeing thou art not ſick] Sickneſſe will cauſe ſadneſſe in the beſt. Thoſe Stoicks that ſaid a wiſe man muſt be merry, though ſick, when ſickneſſe came, were convinced, ſe magnificentiùs locutos eſſe quàm verius, that they ſpake rather bravely, then truly. And therefore Cicero to a merry life requireth three things. 1. To enjoy health. 2. To poſſeſſe honour. 3. Not to ſuffer neceſſity. Faith in Chriſt is more to the purpoſe, then any, or all of theſe. Tull.

This is nothing elſe but ſorrow of heart] The heart commonly ſitteth in the countenance, and there ſheweth how it ſtands affected. Momus needeth not carp at mans make, and wiſh a window in his breaſt that his thoughts might be ſeene: for, a merry heart maketh a chearful countenance: but by ſorrow of heart, the ſpirit is broken, Prov. 15. 13. The Hebrews ſay, that a mans inſide is turned out and diſcovered, in oculis, in loculis, in poculis, in his eyes, purſe, and cup.

Then I was very ſore afraid] Grieved before, now afraid. Thus, aliud ex alio malum: fluctus fluctum trudit, One ſorrow followeth another, and a Chriſtians faith and patience is continually exerciſed. But in the multitude of Nehemiahs perplexed thoughts within him, Gods comforts refreſhed his ſoul, Pſal. 94. 19. He caſts his ſuit or his burthen upon the Lord, Pſal. 55. 22. and doubteth not, but he will effect his deſire.

Verſe 3. And I ſaid unto the King] After he had pull'd up his beſt heart, and recovered his ſpirits, he declareth unto the King the cauſe of his ſadneſſe. How ready ſhould our tongues be to lay open our cares to the God of all comfort, when we ſee Nehemiah ſo quick in the expreſſions of his ſorrow to an uncertain ear.

Let the King live for ever] i. e. Very long. Let him not ſuſpect by my ſadneſſe, that I have any evil intent or treaſonable deſigne againſt him: for I heartily wiſh his welfare. It was not Court-holy-water (as they call it) wherewith he here beſprinkleth his Prince; it was not counterfeit courteſie; ſuch as was that of Squier the Traytor, Anno 1597. ſent by Walpoole the Jeſuite, to poyſon the pummel of Queen Elizabeths ſaddle, when ſhe was to ride abroad: which alſo he did (but without effect) ſaying chearfully at the ſame time, God ſave the Queen. Saluta libenter is by many practiſed, from the teeth outward, but by Nehemiah, heartily. Speed.

Why ſhould not my countenance be ſad?] In time of common calamities there is juſt cauſe of a general ſadneſſe, ſhould we then make mirth? Ezek. 21. 10? The Romanes ſeverely puniſhed one that ſhewed himſelf out of a window with a garland on his head in the time of the Punick warre, when it went ill with the Common-wealth. Juſtinus the good Emperour of Conſtantinople, took the downfal of the City of Antioch by an Earth-quake, ſo much to heart, that it cauſed him a grievous fit of ſickneſſe, Anno Dom. 527. When Pope Clement and his Cardinals were impriſoned by the Duke of Burbons men in Saint Angelo, Ceſar in Spain forbad all enterludes to be plaid, &c. In France, the Duke of Burbon was condemned of treaſon, his name and memorial were accurſed, his armes pull'd down, his lands and goods confiſcated. In England King Henry was extreamely diſpleaſed. Cardinal Wolſey wept tenderly, and emptied the Land of twelve hundred thouſand pounds to relieve and ranſome the diſtreſſed Pope. Func. Chron. Speed. 1027.

When

When the City, the place of my fathers ſepulchers] A good argument to an Heathen, who ſet great ſtore by (as now the Papiſts keep great ſtir about) their burial-places; as if one place were holier then another for that purpoſe; a meer deviſe to pick poor mens purſes.

And the gates thereof are conſumed with fire] The Jews at this day, when they build an houſe, they are, ſay the Rabbines, to leave one part of it unfiniſhed, & lying rude, in remembrance that Jeruſalem and the Temple are, at preſent, deſolate. At leaſt, they uſe to leave about a yard ſquare of the houſe unplaiſtered, on which they write in great letters that of the Pſalmiſt, If I forget Jeruſalem, then let my right hand forget her cunning, Pſal. 137. or elſe theſe words, Zecher Lechorban, The memory of the Deſolation. Hiſt of Rites of Jews by Leo Moden.

Verſe 4. Then the King ſaid unto me] Some think that Nehemiah looked thus ſad before the King on purpoſe, to make way to this his requeſt.

For what doeſt thou make requeſt?] Not for any other honour or great office about the Court, or in the Countrey: nor for any private friend, or the like, but the good of the Church. Thus Nebridius in Hierome (though a Courtier and Nephew to the Empreſſe, yet) never made ſuit but for the relief of the poor afflicted. Thus Terence, that Noble General under Valens the Emperour, being bidden to aske what he would, asked nothing but that the Church might be diſempeſtered of Arians. And when the Emperour, being himſelf an Arian, tore his Petition, he ſaid he would never aske any thing for himſelf, if he might not prevaile for the Church. Tom. 1. Ep. 6. Theodor. l. c. 32.

So I prayed to the God of heaven] Darting up an ejaculation, a ſudden and ſecret deſire to God, to order and ſpeed his Petition. Begin all with prayer; and then expect a bleſſing. Call in the Divine help, if it be but by darting out our deſires to God. Thus Moſes cryed to God, yet ſaid nothing, Exod. 14. 15. Hannah was not heard, and yet ſhe prayed. Auſtin reports the cuſtome of the Egyptian Churches, to pray frequently and fervently, but briefly, and by way of ejaculation, ne fervor langueſceret, leſt their heat ſhould abate. Crebras habere orationes, ſed breviſſimas & raptim ejaculatas.

Verſe 5. If it pleaſe the King] Silken words muſt be given to Kings, as the mother of Darius ſaid: neither muſt they be rudely and roughly dealt with, as Joab dealt with David, 2 Sam. 19. 5. who therefore could never well brook him afterward, but ſet another in his place. Ἢ ἥδιστα, ἢ ἥκιστα.

And if thy ſervant have found favour] Pellican obſerveth here, that Nehemiah was a great favourite of this Kings: as appeareth in that having ſo many Nobles, he choſe him to this Office, rather then any of them. He therefore pleads it as a pledge of further favour: ſo may we with God, as being no ſmall favourites in the beloved One, Epheſians 1. 5.

That thou wouldeſt ſend me unto Judah] Not only give me leave to go, but alſo ſend me with a Commiſſion to be Governour. This was a bold requeſt, but modeſtly propoſed, and eaſily obtained. The King is not he that can deny you any thing, Jer. 38. 5. Love is liberal, charity is no churle.

Verſe 6. And the King ſaid unto me] He yeelds for the thing, only indents for the time: as being loth to deny Nehemiah his ſuit, and yet as loth to forgo ſo faithful a ſervant. Ipſe aſpectus viri boni delectat. Senec.

The Queene alſo ſitting by him] And aſſiſting his cauſe likely. Some think this was Eſther the Queen-mother. But the Hebrew word here is, Wife: Now the Kings of Perſia were noted for uxorious.

For how long, &c.] The departure of a dear friend is ſo grievous, that Death it ſelf is called by that name.

So it pleaſed the King to ſend me] As a Governour, chap. 5. 14. This was the fruit of prayer, and therefore ſo much the ſweeter.

And I ſet him a time] ſc. Twelve years, chap. 5. 14. But more probably a ſhorter time at firſt.

Verſe 7. Moreover I ſaid unto the King] He taketh further boldneſſe upon the former encouragement: ſo may we with Almighty God, the Sunne of our righteouſnes, the Sea of our ſalvation. Conclude as ſhe did, A company comes. God never left baving, till Abraham left begging.

Let letters be given me to the Governours] Thoſe neareſt neighbours, but greateſt enemies.

That they may conveigh me over] He committed himſelf to God, and yet petitions the the King for a Convoy. In all our enterprizes God is so to be trusted, as if we had used no means: and yet the means is so to be used, as if we had no God to trust in.

Epit Hist. Gall c.114.

Verse 8. Keeper of the Kings forrest] Heb. Paradise; probably so called, for the pleasantnesse of it. The French Protestants called their Temple or Church at Lyons, Paradise Davids delight, *Psal.*27, and 84.

Of the palace that appertained to the house] Id est, To the Temple, which is called The house, by an excellency: as the Scriptures are called the Bible, that is, the Book, as being the onely best Book, in comparison whereof all other books in the World are no better then wast paper.

And for the house that I shall enter into] Id est, A dwelling house for my self, when once the publike is served. Junius understands it of a Common-hal or Shire-house, wherein he might sit and judge causes brought before him.

And the King granted me] It was but ask and have, and so it is betwixt God and his people. When there was a speech among some holy men, what was the best trade? One answered, Beggery: it is the hardest & richest trade. Common beggery is indeed the poorest and easiest; but prayer, he meant. A courtier gets more by one sute oft, then a tradesman or merchant, haply with twenty years labour: so doth a faithfull prayer, &c.

According to the good hand] He calleth him, his God, as if he loved or cared more for him then for the rest of the World. It is the property of true faith, ἰδιοποιεῖσθαι to make all its own, that it can lay hold upon. See the Note on Ezra 7.6.

*Vers.*9. Then I came to the Governours] Josephus saith, that the next day he took his journey and delivered his letters to Saddeus Governour of Syria, Phœnicia and Samaria. A strange example, saith one, to see a Courtier leave that wealth, ease and authority that he was in, and go dwell so far from Court in an old, Torn, and decayed City, among a rude poor people, where he should not live quietly, but toyl and drudge like a day-labourer, in dread and danger of his life. But this is the case of earnest, and zealous men in Religion, &c.

Now the King had sent Captains] This was more then Nehemiah had desired: and as much as he could have done for the greatest Lord in the Land. God is likewise usually better to his people, than their prayers: and when they ask but one talent, he (Naaman-like) will force them to take two.

Verse 10. When Sanballet the Horonite] That is, the Moabite, Isa.15.5. Jer.48.3,5.34. His name signifieth, saith one, a pure Enemy: he was come of that spiteful people, who were anciently irked because of Israel, Num.22.3,4. or did inwardly fret and vex at them, as *Exod.*1.12. who yet were allied unto them, and did them no hurt in their passage by them, yea had done them good by the slaughter of the Amorites, their encroaching Neighbours.

And Tobiah the servant] A servant or bond-slave once he had been, though now a Toparch, a Lieutenant to the King of Persia. Now such are most troublesome, *Prov.*30. *ver.*22.

Asperius nihil est humili, cùm surgit in altum.

Dio. lib.60. Rer. Rom. Ἀφορητός ἐστιν εὐτυχῶν μαστιγίας.

Heard it] As they might soon do by means of their Wives, who were Jewesses. And the Jewes to this day are generally found the most nimble and Mercurial wits in the World. Every Visier and Bassha of State among the Turkes useth to keep a Jew of his private counsel: whose malice, wit and experience of Christendome, with their continual intelligence is thought to advise most of that mischief, which the Turk puts in execution against us.

Blounts Voy. P.114.

It grieved them exceedingly] Heb. It seemed to them an evil, a great evil: It displeased them sore, and vexed them at the very heart, such was their spleen and spite. Envy is a deadly mischief: and because it cannot feed upon other mens hearts, it feedeth upon its own; drinking up the most part of its own venome. The envious man is not like the mayd in Avicen, who feeding upon poison, was her self healthy; yet infected others with her venemous breath: But like the Serpent Porphyrius, which is full of poyson, but, wanting teeth, hurteth none but himself: or as the hill Ætna, &c.

That there was come a man to seek the welfare, &c.] This they looked upon with an evil eye, and were vexed. Invidia Siculi, &c. Who can stand before envy, Prov.27.4? It espieth ſpieth with great grief the ſmalleſt things the good mandoth or hath? and is therefore abſolutely the beſt thing to clear the eye-ſight, ſaid Actius Sincerus a Noble-man, to King Frederike.

Verſe 11. So I came to Jeruſalem] Thither God brought him as on Eagles wings; maugre the malice of his Enemies. The Jewes had great reaſon to rejoyce, and to welcome him with great ſolemnity; which yet they did not, for ought we read: but that, he taketh not for any diſcouragement; his reward was with God. He was of another ſpirit then his Countrey-men, who were all for their own ends, and intereſts, and little cared for the publike.

And was there three dayes] Reſting his body (Quod caret alterna requie, &c. See the Note on Ezra 8.32.) But caſting about in his mind how beſt to effect that he came for, and to perſwade with others to joyn with him. And now he found that he was come from the Court to the Cart, from a pleaſant life, to a careful and cumberſome. Ovid.

Verſe 12. And I aroſe in the night] His cares would not ſuffer him to ſleep (Ου χρὴ παννύχιον, &c.) but up he gets, and about the Walles: taking the Night, as fitteſt for ſecrecy, and ſafety. Homer.

I and ſome few men with me] He went not alone, leſt he ſhould fall into ſome danger of life, Væ ſoli: Nor yet with many, leſt he ſhould make a diſturbance, and bewray his counſel. Be wiſe as Serpents. Matth. 10.

Neither told I any man what God had put into my heart] That the thing was of God, he nothing doubted: hence his fervour in following it: he knew there was a curſe to thoſe that do the Lords work negligently. That he might not be defeated of his purpoſe, he telles no man. He that would have his counſel kept, let him keep it to himſelf. Hardly ſhall a man meet with ſuch a Counſel-keeper as he was, who being upbrayded with his ſtinking breath, anſwered, that he had kept his friends ſecrets committed to him ſo long in his breaſt, that there they rotted: and thence was the unſavourineſſe of his breath.

Si ſapis, arcano vina reconde cado.
Qui ſapit, arcano gaudeat ipſe ſinu.

Neither was there any beaſt] For the avoyding of noyſe.

Verſe 13. By the gate of the valley] By which men went into the Valley of Jehoſhaphat, Joel 3.2,12. The Septuagint call it Portam Galilæ; the gate of dead mens ſculles; becauſe that way they went out to Golgotha.

Even before the Dragon-well] So called, either becauſe ſome venemous Serpent had been found there; or becauſe the waters ran out of the mouth of a braſen Serpent; or becauſe they ran creepingly, ſoftly, as the waters of Siloe, Iſa. 8.6.

And to the Dung-port] Where was their common dunghil: a Voyder to the City: near whereunto ran the Brook Cedron, or the Town-ditch.

And viewed the Walls of Jeruſalem] Junius rendreth it, Ubi effringebam de muris, Where I brake off a piece of the Wall: ſc. that I might try the ſoundneſſe or unſoundneſſe of that which remaineth of it, that I might know whether it needed to be all pulled down, or whether it might be built upon. Our Tranſlatours read it, ſober, not ſhober; and thence the different interpretation.

Which were broken down] Aſher hem perutſim: Hem with an open Mem which is not uſual; to ſet forth (as ſome think) the rupture and openneſſe of the Walles, ſo much bewailed by this good man in this chapter. חם pro חם

Verſe 14. Then I went to the Gate of the Fountain] Or Well-gate; where was great plenty of Water-ponds, Watering-places, &c. Junius ſaith it was that, whereby men went out to the pool of Siloah, and Rogel.

And to the Kings-pool] The Water-courſe made (or repayred at leaſt) by King Hezekiah, 2 King. 20.20.

But there was no place for the beaſt, &c.] There was ſo much rubbiſh, and ſuch ruines: This was the fruit of ſin, which makes of a City an heap, (as the Prophet ſpeakes) and hurleth ſuch confuſion over the World, that had not Chriſt (our true Nehemiah) undertaken the ſhattered condition thereof to uphold it, it had ſurely fallen about Adams ears.

Verſe 15. Then went I up in the night] Sc. by Moon-light; for the Moon is Miſtreſſe of the Night, Pſal. 136.9. by the brightneſſe ſhe borroweth from the body of the Sun, which the Moon receiveth and reflecteth, like a looking-glaſſe.

And viewed the Wall] That which was left of it, τὸ λειφθὲν as Scaligers Epitaph is, Scaligeri quod reliquum eſt, Scaligers reliques.

And entred by the Gate of the Valley] Where he firſt went out: ſo he walked the round, not caring to obſerve that Rule of Pythagoras, Eâdem viâ quâ progreſſus fueris ne regredi-are, Go not back the ſame way thou cameſt forth.

Verſe 16. And the Rulers knew not whither I went] Taciturnity, in ſome caſes, is a vertue: and every thing is beautifull in its ſeaſon. There is a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak, Eccleſ. 3.7. And he is a truly wiſe man, that can diſcern his ſeaſon for both. Diſcamus priùs non loqui, ſaith Hierome, Let us firſt learn not to ſpeak, that we may afterwards open our mouths and minds with diſcretion. Silence is by Solomon firſt ſet before ſpeaking, and firſt takes its time and turn, as it did here in Nehemiah the prudent. See the Note on *ver.*12. The word here rendred Rulers is rather Chaldee, then Hebrew.

Nor to the Nobles] Heb. White ones. Among the Jewes great men affected to go in white, as among the Romans in purple or ſcarlet. Hence Pilates Souldiers clad Chriſt in purple: Herods in white, *Luk.*23.11. *Mat.*27.28.

Nor to the reſt, &c.] So, as to aſk their adviſe.

Verſe 17. Then ſaid I unto them] Then when I ſaw it a fit ſeaſon to ſay it. It is an excellent skill to time a word, *Iſa.*50.4. To circumſtantiate it aright, *Prov.*25.11. That it may run as upon wheels: Nehemiah's words do ſo, notably. Verba priùs ad limam revocata, quàm ad linguam, words well weighed ere uttered. Neſcit pœnitenda loqui qui proferenda priùs ſuo tradidit examini, He cannot but ſpeak wiſely, who ſpeaketh warily.

Jeruſalem lyeth waſt] Id eſt, open to the ſpoyler: as the Pope made account this Land was in Henry the eighth his time, when he had given it primo occupaturo, to him that ſhould firſt invade and ſeize it.

Come and let us build, &c.] With forces united, with one ſhoulder, Multorum manibus grande levatur onus.

That we be no more a reproach] Quàm multa quàm paucis! How much in a little! ſaid Tully of Brutus his Laconical Epiſtle: and the like may we ſay of this pithy and pathetike ſpeech. Thoſe that love to hear themſelves talk, (ſaith a reverend Man upon this Text) and with many words to colour their ill meaning, may here learn how a ſimple ttuth plainly told in few words, worketh more in good mens hearts, then a painted tale, that hath little truth, and leſſe good meaning in it. An honeſt matter ſpeaketh for it ſelf, and needeth no colouring: and he that uſeth moſt flattering and ſubtle words maketh wiſe men miſtruſt the matter to be ill. A few words well placed are much better then a long unſavoury tale. Thus he. B. Pilkington.

Verſe 18. Then I told them of the hand of my God] Id eſt, of his gracious providence in proſpering me in all.

As alſo the Kings words] Which were likewiſe very gracious, and comfortable. Now he that hath both God and the King on his ſide, what would he have more?

And they ſaid, Let us ariſe and build] So forcible are right words, delivered in a mild and moderate manner, as here. Let us riſe, ſay they. Let us linger no longer, but ſpeedily fall to labour: and recover that with our diligence, that our Fathers loſt by their diſobedience.

So they ſtrengthened their hand for this good work] They took courage, and went an end with it. So much good may one man of place, power and zeal do for the Church, by ſtirring up to love and good works. It is ſaid of the precious ſtone Pyrites, that it puts not forth its fiery power, till well rubbed: and then it is ſo hot, that it burneth ones fingers.

Verſe 19. But when Sanballat the Horonite, &c.] At firſt theſe men were ſad: but now mad with malice. Wicked men grow worſe and worſe, in pejus proficiunt, but they ſhal proceed no further: for their madneſs ſhall appear to all men.

And Geſhem the Arabian] Lieutenant of Arabia for the King of Perſia He alſo joyns himſelf to the two former to hinder the work in hand. Such oppoſition met Luther with, when he began to reform. The Pope excommunicated him: the Emperour proſcribed him: Henry King of England, and Lewis King of Hungary wrote againſt him: but the work went on, nevertheleſſe, becauſe it was of God.

They laughed us to ſcorn and deſpiſed us] As a company of Fools, that could never effect effect what we attempted. So Eraſmus, and Sr. Tho. Moor thought to have moekt the Lutherans out of their Religion. Notum eſt Eraſmi dicterium, Qualem a ſe derisũ Capito ſure ſperat? &c. This the Scripture calleth Cruel mocking; and ranketh it with bloody perſecution. Indeed the favourableſt perſecution (ſaith One) of any good cauſe, is the laſh of lewd tongues; whether by bitter taunts, or ſcurrilous invectives: which it is as impoſſible to avoyd, as neceſſary to contemn, &c. Bravely contemn (ſaith another Worthy) all contumelies and contempts for thy conſcience; taking them as crowns and confirmations of thy conformity to Chriſt. H.b.11 36.

And ſaid, what is this thing that ye do?] Scoffingly they ſaid it: like as Pilat ſaid to our Saviour, What's truth? Oh how eaſie is it to wagge a wicked tongue? One while they charge this people with folly, another while, with treachery. If to accuſe a man onely were ſufficient to make him guilty, none ſhould be innocent. Nihil tàm volucre quàm maledictum, nihil facilius emittitur. Cic.

Will ye rebel againſt the King? This was ever, ſaith Lipſius, Unicum crimen eorum, qui crimine vacabant, The onely and ordinary charge laid upon the moſt innocent. Elius is a Troubler, Jeremy a Traytour, Paul a Peſt, Luther a Trumpet of rebellion, all the Orthodox, Antimagiſtratical. To colour the maſſacre of Paris, and to excuſe it to the World, there was coyn ſtamped in the forepart, whereof (together with the Kings picture) was this inſcription, Virtus in Rebelles Valour againſt the Rebels, and on the other ſide, Pietas excitavit juſtitiam, Piety hath excited Juſtice. In Tacit.

Verſe 20. Then anſwered I them, and ſaid unto them] He would not honour them ſo farre, as to tell them of the Kings licence, but ſhapes them a ſharp anſwer, and ſhakes them up as having nothing there to do. This was true Chriſtian courage, this was right; and much better then rayling for rayling: for that were but lutum luto purgare, to waſh off one dirt with another. Camd. Eliz. Fol. 163.

The God of Heaven] Who doeth whatſoever he pleaſeth in Heaven and earth: who looketh and laugheth at your malice.

He will proſper us] He will break his Heavens, and come down amongſt us, and give good ſucceſſe. O the force of an heroick faith! Though ſenſe ſayes, It will not be, Reaſon, it cannot be; yet Faith gets above and ſayes, It ſhall be: God will proſper us. It eates its way thorough the Alpes of whatſoever difficulties.

But you have no portion] Nothing to do here, neither ought you to interpoſe in aliena republica, as buſy braggers and quarellers: meddle where you have command.

Nor right] Sc. Of intereſt or any good deſert.

Nor memoriall] Or enrollement there, as free deniſons: therefore we neither accept you as Friends, nor fear you as Enemies, &c.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1. Then Eliaſhib the high Prieſt roſe up.]

HE was firſt, as fit he ſhould, for example ſake; Miniſters muſt be patternes of piety: they have many eyes upon them, and every thing in their practiſe ſhould be worthy imitation. This Eliaſhib was grand-child to Jeſhua, chap. 12. 10.

With his brethren the Prieſts] Who were before fearful, or forgetful; till inminded and excited by Nehemiah: who, as a Lyon, became Captain to this Hoſt of Harts, and atchievd great matters. So ſtrong and ſo ſweet an operation hath a ſeaſonable exhortation, when it falleth on a prepared heart, and it ſet on by God. Plut.

And they built the Sheep-gate] And reaſon it was, ſaith an interpreter, that as they were Shepherds to the people, ſo they ſhould build the Sheep-gate which was at the Eaſt-end of the City where the Temple was, where the Sheep came in, that were offered in ſacrifice, and whereof they had their parts, according to the Law. This Gate may well be compared to Chriſt Jeſus, who ſought the loſt Sheep, and was ſacrificed as a Lamb, and is the Gate whereby onely we enter, and his Shepherds muſt be the builders of it, and bring the people into the fold. B. Pilkington

They ſanctified it] Id eſt, beautified it, and then conſecrated it by their prayers and devotions. This was Prieſt-like, and probably, hereupon followed that miracle of an Angels deſcending, at their ſeveral ſolemn feaſts, into the pool of Bethesda (which was neer to this Gate), and where they waſhed their ſacrifices) and healing all diſeaſes, John 5. 4.

Even unto the Tower of Meah] Or the Centenary Tower, ſo called for its hundred pinacles, haply: or, becauſe an hundred cubites high.

Verſe 2. And next unto him builded the men of Jericho] And are thereby here eternallized for their forwardneſſe.

Claros inter, habent nomina clara, viros.

Though they dwelt fartheſt off, yet they were of the firſt that came to work. Jericho was the firſt City that Joſhuah overthrew for their wickedneſſe, and curſed him that ſhould rebuild it. Now it is the firſt that cometh to help forward this City of God. So great is the change, when God turneth peoples hearts. Our Fathers were as barbarous and brutiſh as the very Scythians: their Religion was a mere irreligion and worſe, till Chriſt came amongſt us, and gave us the preheminence: For beſides that England was the firſt of Ennead. 7. l. 5. all the Provinces that publikely received the Goſpel (as ſaith Sabellicus,) our Conſtantine hath been reckoned the firſt Chriſtian Emperour, our Lucius the firſt Chriſtened King, and our Henry the eighth the firſt that brake the neck of the Popes uſurped authority. As we were the firſt that ſubmitted to that man of ſin, ſo were we of the firſt that caſt him off a-Lucan. gain; & although we are penitùs toto diviſi orbe Britanni, yet we have been hitherto famous all the World over for our faith and forwardneſſe in Gods ſervice, though of late we have run retrograde, to the reproach of our Nation. Diogenes in a great aſſembly going backward on purpoſe, and ſeeing every one laughing him to ſcorn, asked them aloud, if they were not aſhamed ſo to do? ſith he went backwards but once, when they did ſo continually. Oh let it not be ſaid of us, as once of Jeruſalem, that we are ſlidden back by a perpetual back-ſliding, that we hold faſt deceit, and refuſe to return, Jer. 8. 5. This is to be worſe, then wicked Jericho, &c.

Builded Zaccur] whoſe memory therefore is bleſſed, when the name of the wicked ſhall rot, Prov. 10. 7.

Verſe 3. But the fiſh-gate] That ſtood toward the Sea, and let in fiſhermen, as the men of Tyre, chap. 13. 16, 19.

Did the ſonnes of Haſſenaah build] Whether this Haſſenaah were a man, or a City, it appeareth not.

Verſe 4. Meſhullam the ſonne of Berechiah] This Meſhullam was one of thoſe men of underſtanding made uſe of by Ezra, chap. 8. 16.

Verſe 5. The Tekoites repaired] The common ſort of them: for the Nobles refuſed. The leſſer fiſhes bite beſt: the poor are goſpellized, Mat. 11. 5. deſtined to the diadem, Jam. 2. 5.

But their Nobles put not their necks] So haughty they were and high-minded, they thought it a buſineſſe below their greatneſſe; Somewhat of that profane Earle of Weſtmerlands mind, who ſaid that he had no need to pray to God: for he had tenants enow
1 Cor. 1. to pray for him. Not many mighty, not many Noble, ſaith the Apoſtle: Well if any. The Lion and Eagle were not for Sacrifice; as the Lamb and Dove were. Yet the old Nobility of Iſrael were forward with their ſtaves of honour, and are therefore famous, Numb. 21. 18.

To the work of their Lord] Though they knew him to be Lord of Lords, who are all his vaſſals and underlings; and by ſpecial relation, Their Lord, ſo avouched by theſe his holy-day-ſervants; yet ſo ſtiffe-necked were they, that they would not ſtoop to his ſervice, but cryed out, as the Popiſh Clergy do, Domine, nos ſumus exempti, we may not work, we will not contribute.

Verſe 6. Moreover the old gate] Famous only for its antiquity: like as many old books are monumenta adoranda rubiginis, of more antiquity then authority: and as that Διοπετὲς. Image at Epheſus, that was ſaid, but falſely, to have fallen down from Jupiter: ſo the covetous Prieſts perſwaded the credulous people, Acts 19. 35. The Rabbines ſay, that this was a gate ever ſince the time that David took Zion from the Jebuſites, Quis hoc credat, niſi ſit pro teſte Vetuſtas?

Verſe 7. Unto the throne of the Governour] i. e. Of the King of Perſia's Vice-roy, who had there his Throne, or Tribunal. But to what an height of pride were the Biſhops grown, that ſate in Thrones, and from on high deſpiſed their fellow-ſervants! this was their ruine, God putteth down the mighty from their Throne, and exalteth them of low degree, Luke 1. 52.

Verſe 8. Of the goldſmiths ——— the ſonne of one of the Apothecaries] Theſe were even

ever thriving trades; They both had wealth, and hearts to part with it, upon ſo good a work. Difficile eſt animos opibus non tradere, &c. Martial.

Unto the broad wall] Which haply, for the thickneſſe of it, was left undemoliſhed by the Caldeans.

Verſe 9. Ruler of the half-part of Jeruſalem] Which being part in Judah, and part in Benjamin, had two General Rulers, ſee verſe 12.

Verſe 10. Even over againſt his houſe] Thither he was aſſigned, probably, becauſe there he would build the ſtronger, for his own ſecurity.

Verſe 11. The ſonne of Pahath-Moab] This man might be a Moabite by ſtock or deſcent, and an Iſraelite by Religion: like as Jether was by nature an Iſmaelite, 1 Chron. 7. 17. but by his faith an Iſraelite, 2 Sam. 17. 25.

And the tower of the furnaces] That had furnaces or ovens under it: like as the library at Bonony hath a victualling-houſe, and a wine-cellar. In commendation of which ſituation Cardinal Bobba conceited that he had very wittily (indeed wickedly) applied that text, Prov. 9. 1, 2. Wiſdome hath builded her houſe, ſhe hath alſo mingled her wine, ſhe hath alſo furniſhed her table.

Verſe 12. Shallum the ſonne of Aalloeſh] Some read it the ſonne of an Inchanter, or Conjurer: and tell us, that Conjuring was a common thing among the Jews, as Acts 13. Elymas, and elſewhere the ſonnes of Sceva, &c. But Shallum (if ever any ſuch) forſook that Science (as did afterwards alſo Cyprian) to become a Chriſtian.

He and his daughters] Either finiſhing what their father (now dead) had begun; or parting with their portions toward the repair of the wall: and haply laying their own hands to the Lords work.

Verſe 13. The valley-gate] See chap. 2. 13.

And the inhabitants of Zanoah] Together with Hanun their Governour. Not Prieſts and Levites only, but the great men in every Countrey, yea and the Countrey-people too, muſt work at Gods building. Every one muſt be active in his own ſphere; not live to himſelf, but help to bear the burthens of Church and Common-wealth —— tori natum ſe credere mundo, as Cato did. Lucan.

Verſe 14. But the dung-gate repaired Malchiah the ſonne of Rechab] That is, of the noble family of the Rechabites. A Ruler he was, and yet diſdaineth not to repair the dung-gate: All Gods work is honourable. Angels are Gods executioners, as at Sodom: Magiſtrates and Miniſters muſt do their utmoſt by diſcipline and otherwiſe, to cauſe the falſe Prophets (that filth) and the unclean ſpirit to paſſe out of the Land, as by a dung-gate, Zech. 13. 2. Every man muſt ſweep his own door, that we may have a clean ſtreet.

Verſe 15. He built it, and covered it] A Chaldee word. This people in their captivity, though they had not loſt the uſe of their native tongue, yet they had got a tincture of the Chaldee; and of the Hebrew and Chaldee came the Syriack, the mother-tongue in Chriſts time, as appears by Talitha kumi, and other-like paſſages.

And unto the ſtairs] By theſe David deſcended into the lower City; and, ſuitours aſcended to his Palace. This is allegorically applyed by ſome to Chriſt (the true Jacobs ladder, John 1 ult.) who came down and humbled himſelf to the utmoſt; that we by him might have acceſſe, with ſucceſſe, in all our ſuits.

Verſe 16. Over againſt the ſepulchers of David] His burying-place: the Jews had their ſepulchers ready made, as the old Prophet, 1 Kings 13. 30. Joſeph of Arimathaea, &c. So had the Emperours of Conſtantinople, their tomb-ſtone preſented them on their Coronation-day. Charles the fifth, Emperour of Germany, five years before his death, cauſed his ſepulcher to be made, with all things appertaining to it neceſſary for his burial. Another great Prince began his tomb, and left it unperfect; commanding a ſervant once every day to mind him of finiſhing it. The Thebans had a Law, that no man ſhould ſet up an houſe for himſelf to dwell in; but he ſhould firſt make his grave. David, it ſeems, had his choyce of ſepulchers; not far from the wall of the City of David.

Unto the pool that was made] With great art and coſt by King Hezekiah, 2 Kings 20. 20.

And unto the houſe of the mighty] Where Davids Mighties, or the Warders of his City lodged; or where youth were trained up and taught to handle their armes.

Verſe 17. After him repaired the Levites] Who therefore were not beggerly (as many would make Miniſters in our dayes, if they might have their will) but had ſomewhat to ſpare for pious uſes. For when they are ſaid to repair, the meaning is, they bore the charge of the work, and took care that it was done.

Verſe 18. The Ruler of the half-part of Keilah] This was that City reſcued by David from the Philiſtines, and yet falſe to him, 1 Sam. 23. 12.

Verſe 19. Another piece] Or, a ſecond meaſure; that is, he repaired two parts, ſaith Pellican: Lyra and others think it to be meant of the ſecond ward and wall which was called Secunda, where the Levites, Prophets and Students dwelt; their College or School is called Miſhne or a ſecond part, 2 King. 22. 14. which the Targum interpreteth, an Houſe of learning.

Domus doctrina.

Verſe 20. Earneſtly repaired the other piece] Or a ſecond piece, as ver. 19. He did two pieces, whiles others were about one. A ready heart makes riddance of Gods work. He burſt out in a heat (ſo the Heb.) being angry both at himſelf and others, that had done no more: and in an holy fume, finiſhed quickly, kindling himſelf from other mens coldneſs, and quickning himſelf from their ſlothfulneſſe.

Se accendit.

Lucan. ---Sic Cæſar in omnia præceps
Nil actum credens, dum quid ſupereſſet agendum, Fertur atrox.---

Verſe 21. Even to the end of the houſe of Eliaſhib] A ſmall praiſe ſaith One, if the houſe were not of ſome greatneſſe. Eliaſhib was high Prieſt, and dwelt like himſelf, in a fair large houſe.

Verſe 22. The men of the plains] Of the plains of Jordan ſaith the Vulgar: but better underſtand it of the plain Countrey round about Jeruſalem, as chap. 12. 28.

Verſe 23. Over againſt their houſe] See the Note on ver. 10.

Verſe 24. Unto the turning of the Wall] Namely, from the South-ſide to the Eaſt: which turning came with the corner inwards into the City, according to the natural ſcituation of the rock, and the valley.

D. Odat.

Verſe 25. Over againſt the turning] Of theſe turnings, there were many, as appeareth above.

The Kings high houſe] In Spain, not only doth the King dwell in a ſtately high Palace, but alſo the higheſt room in every great houſe is his; and he muſt be payd for it.

That was by the Court of the priſon] Here Jeremy was priſoner, more then once, Jer. 32. 2. and 38. 7, 13. And therefore other good people that came after him thither, might be as well apaid as Dr. Taylour Martyr, who bleſſed God, that ever he was fellow-priſoner to that earthly Angel (as he called him) John Bradford. Or, as that other good Woman, who rejoyced that ſhe might have her foot in the hole of the Stocks, in which Mr. Philpot had been before her.

Verſe 26. Moreover the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel] Of Nethinims See Ezra 2. 43. Their work was to carry Wood and Water to the Temple: Therefore, they dwelt near the Water-gate, for their own conveniency.

Verſe 27. After them the Tekoites] The people whereof had repaired before ver. 5. now alſo the Prieſts, but not the Nobles: they continued ſtill ſtout and ſtiffe-necked, as ver. 5.

Verſe 28. From above the Horſe-gate] So called, ſay ſome, becauſe there they were wont to diſmount, leaving their Horſes. When the King himſelf came, he muſt alight, and go afoot into the Temple. The great Turke at this day, when he entreth into his Moſchee for devotion-ſake, alighteth and layeth aſide all his State, and goeth in alone.

Verſe 29. Shemaiah the ſonne of Shechaniah] Egregie cordatus homo, Ezra 8. ver. 16.

Verſe 30. After him repaired Hananiah] Or, After me: Nehemiah, doubtleſſe, did his part, and a large one too, See chap. 16. and 4. 16. but he omitteth, out of his modeſty to ſet down how much. In the Hebrew Text it is, After me: but in the Margin, After him. The reaſon is given by ſome to be this; that Nehemiah might moſt covertly ſet forth his own work, to avoyd all ſhew of vain glory.

And Hanun the ſixth ſon of Zalaph] Not the eldeſt, but the beſt of all the brethren. There muſt be no ſtraining courteſy who ſhall begin: nor muſt men fear for their forwardneſſe to be ſtiled Seraphical and ſingular. If Hanun were alone, it was a ſhame for his brethren to ſuffer him to be ſo.

Verſe

Verſe 31 After him] Or, After me, See *ver.*30.

Over againſt the Gate Miphkad] The Judicial-gate ſaith the Vulgar: the Gate, of Commandement ſaith Junius; probably where the Sanhedrin ſate.

Verſe 32. Unto the Sheep-gate] Here they began, and here they end, having repaired round, and thereby obtained a good report, being here regiſtred and renowned. Thoſe that have an hand in building the ſpiritual Jeruſalem, ſhall be ſurely crowned and chronicled. Their names ſhall be written in the Book of Life, where no Devil can ſcrape them out. Up therefore and be doing worthily in Ephrata, that ye may be famous in Bethlehem. To them who by patient continuance in well-doing ſeek for glory and honour and immortality, ſhall be eternal life, *Rom.*2.7. Ruth 4.11.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1. But it came to paſſe.]

THE Devil and his Impes have ever been utter Enemies to Reformation. So do ſavage beaſts briſtle up themſelves, and make the moſt fierce aſſaults, when they are in danger of loſing the prey, which they had once ſeized on. Jabeſh Gilead would ſend in none to help the Lord againſt the mighty, *Judg.*21.9. No more would Meroz, chap.5.23. Joſiah met with much oppoſition: ſo did St. Paul wherever he came, to ſet up Evangelical and ſpiritual worſhip; which is called a Reformation, Heb.9.10. All the World was againſt Athanaſius in his generation, and Luther in his: rejecting what they attempted, with ſcorn and ſlander. Here it is quarrel enough to Nehemiah and his Jewes, that they would be no longer miſerable. They were not more buſie in building, then the Enemies active in deriding, conſpiring, practiſing to hinder and overthrow them. A double deriſion is here recorded: and both as full of miſchief, as prophane wit, or rancoured malice could make them.

He was wroth] Heb. He was enkindled, and all on a light fire: he was as hot as Nebuchadnezzars Oven, huge hot [he took great indignation] and was ſo unreaſonably enraged, as if he would have fallen forthwith into a phrenſy or apoplexy; as that Roman Emperour did, by raging at his ſervant. He was grieved before, *chap.*2. but now he was madded.

And mocked the Jews] By word and geſture, fleering and jeering, flouting and ſcoffing at them, as the Phariſees alſo did at our Saviour, *Luk.*16.14. Davids Enemies at him, upon their ale-bench: Sr. Tho. Moore and other learned Papiſts, at the new-Goſpellers. See *chap.*2.19. This might have diſmayed theſe poor Jewes, and put them out of countenance, for our nature is moſt impatient of reproaches, there being none ſo mean, but thinks himſelf worthy of ſome regard: and a reproachful ſcorn (ſuch as theſe here) ſhewes an utter diſreſpect, which iſſueth from the very ſuperfluity of malice. If God had not ſtrengthened them, ſaith One, it would have made them leave their work, and run away.

Verſe 2. And he ſpake before his brethren] Id eſt, before his companions and complices who would ſecond him and ſay the ſame, his Aiones, and Negones, as one calleth ſuch.

And the Army of Samaria] The Garriſon-ſouldiers, or thoſe that lay there billetted, to obſerve the people.

What do theſe feeble Jews?] Theſe beggerly ſhiftleſſe Fellowes, theſe Aſinarii, (as Mclon and Appion of Alexandria diſgracefully called the Jews;) like as Tertullian telleth us, that the Pagans painted the God of the Chriſtians with an Aſſes head, and a Book in his hand: to note that they were ſilly and deſpicable people. B. Jewell in a Sermon of his, citeth this out of Tertullian, and addeth, Do not our adverſaries the like at this day againſt all that profeſſe the Goſpel?

Will they fortify themſelves?] Heb. Will they leave to themſelves, ſc. any thing to truſt unto? Junius rendreth An ſinerent eos? ſhould they, (ſc. the Officers and Souldiers) ſuffer them thus to do?

Will they ſacrifice?] Sc. at the dedication of their new Walles? Will they do this all at once? and think they without more adoe, to have the liberty of their Sanctuary.

Will they make an end in a day?] It ſhould ſeem ſo by their Citò, Citò, quick diſpatch of their parts and task, &c.

Pre-

Sil.Ital. Præcipita tempus: mors atra impendet agenti.

Will they revive the Stones, &c.] Stones they want for their new wall: where will they have them? will they glew together the old Stones, and revive them out of the rubbiſh? will they do this? or, what will they do?

Verſe 3. Now Tobiah the Ammonite] This was one of Sanballats good brethren, ver.2. A Bird of the ſame feather, a loaf of the ſame leven, his fellow-ſcoffer, and ſo homine pejor, ſaith Chryſoſtome; worſe then a man; as the ſcoffed that beareth it well, is Angelis par, ſaith he, an Angels peere.

Even that which they build, if a Fox go up, &c.] It was ſome ſuch bitter jeer that Remus uttered in contempt of Romulus his new wall, and was knockt on the head for it. Hæ ſannæ leniter volant, non leniter violant.

Verſe 4. Hear, ô our God] Theſe mocks and menaces lay ſo heavy upon Nehemiah's ſpirit, that he could not eaſe himſelf, but by breathing heaven-ward; and turning them over to God to take an order with them. His prayer is not long but full: A child may not chat in his Fathers preſence: his words muſt be humble, earneſt, direct to the point, avoiding vain babblings, and tedious prolixities.

For we are deſpiſed] Heb. We are contempt in the abſtract. Not vilified we are onely, but nullified, as a company of οὐδενοὶ No-bodies. So Paul (the moſt precious man upon earth) and his companions (the glory of Chriſt, and a Royall diadem in the hand of Jehovah) were looked upon as the filth of the World, & the off-ſcouring of al things, 1 Cor.4. What matter is it then what becometh of us? We have a God to turn us to, and Demetrius hath teſtimony of the truth: that's enough; let Diotrephes prate, what he pleaſeth.

Eſay 62.3.

2 Joh.

Prov.3.34. And turn their reproach upon their own heads] Surely God ſcorneth theſe Scorners, ſaith Solomon: that is, ſaith Rabbi Levi upon that Taxt, he caſteth them into ſome calamity, and ſo maketh them a laughing ſtock, to thoſe whom they have laughed at. God loves to retaliate, to pay men home in their own coyn. Thus he dealt by Appion of Alexandria: who ſcoffing at Religion, (and eſpecially at circumciſion) had an ulcer the ſame time, and in the ſame place. The like ill end befell Julian the Apoſtate, whoſe daily practiſe was to ſcoffe at Chriſt and his people. Diocleſian the Emperour (as Volaterran writeth) had a Jeſter called Geneſius, who uſed to make him merry at meales, and, amongſt their deviſes, would ſcoffe and ſquib at Chriſtians: But God plagued him for example of others. And the like he did to Morgan that mocking Biſhop of St. Davies: to John Apowel who derided William Mauldon for his devotion: and laſtly, to one Lever of Brightwel in Barkſhire, who ſaid that he ſaw that ill-favoured knave Latimer when he was burned at Oxford: and that he had teeth like an Horſe. But the Lord ſuffered not this ſcorn and contempt of his ſervant to paſſe unpuniſhed. For that very day, and about the ſame hour, that Lever ſpake theſe words, his ſon wickedly hanged himſelf, ſaith mine Authour. Lege, cave.

Joſephus.

Act.& Mon. fol.1902. Ibid.1906.

And give them for a prey, &c.] A heavy curſe, and, as not cauſeleſſe (againſt implacable Enemies to God and goodneſſe) ſo nor fruitleſſe. Wo be to ſuch as againſt whom the Saints moved with a zeal of God, ſhall imprecate vengeance. God uſually inflicteth what they denounce againſt his and their irreconcilable adverſaries. Fire proceedeth out of their mouths, &c. *Revel.*11.5.

And cover not their iniquity] O fearful imprecation! Surely if they onely are bleſſed whoſe ſin is covered *Pſal.*32.1. What ſhall become of thoſe that are in a contrary condition? If pardon of ſin be ſuch a voluminous mercy, as having many other mercies bound up with it, think what a miſery it is to have ſin imputed; and get a cover ſpeedily, for that abominable filth, and, to God himſelf an eye-ſore.

For they have provoked thee to anger, &c.] This was it that Nehemiah ſo ſtomacked: and that drew from him theſe dreadful imprecations, viz. Gods glory, and not any ſelf concernment: He hated and curſed non virum, ſed virium, &c.]

Verſe 6. So built we the Wall] This followed upon his prayer, as a gracious anſwer to it: the people were encouraged, and the Wall finiſhed. Faithful prayer is never ineffectual. Reproaching is an heart-breaking, *Pſal.*69.20. but ſo long as a Chriſtian can pray, he is not without his cordial. I came for thy prayer, Dan.10.1.

And all the Wall was joyned together] Not with gold indeed (as Caſſiodorus ſaith, the Walls of Suſa in Perſia were) but with that which was better then gold, faith in Gods goodneſſe, and zeal of his glory.

Vnto

Unto the half thereof] Unto half the height: for they could not do all at once: neither can we in the ſpiritual building: but grow up and increaſe with the increaſe of God. Col. 2. 19.

For the people had a minde to work] And the more minde, becauſe they met with ſo much oppoſition. A free ſpirit is moſt ſeen (ſaith one) when there be moſt rubs in the way: when he that moves by outward poyſes, will ſtick and be dull: As when a bowle runs up an hill, every rub ſlugs it; but when down hill, a rub quickeneth it.

Verſe 7. And the Arabians and the Ammonites] A rabble of Malignants meet and make head. Sanballat, by the help of Tobiah, had now gotten a great band of ſouldiers, and ſpecially of Arabians, Ammonites, and Aſhdodites, to fight for him againſt this feeble folk, but yet armed with God, and that had him for their champion. So we may ſee how readily one wicked man will be drawn to help another: and how the wickedneſſe of one will infect another that will give eare to it. Read Pſalm 83. 6,7,8. Rev. 16. 16, 17, &c.

Heard that the walls of Jeruſalem were made up] Heb. That health (or as the old Tranſlation hath it, a ſalve) aſcended upon the walls. A Metaphor from Chirurgeons, who when they heal wounds by ſalves or plaiſters joyne the fleſh together again, which before was cut in ſunder: ſo the breaches of the walls, which afore lay gaping open, were joyned together, and made ſound, as though it were one entire wall, & quaſi tota moles in tantam magnitudinem ex unico ingenti lapide tam magnificè conſurgeret.

Then they were very wroth] That old enmity, Gen. 3. 15. ſtirred in them, and they were ſoon kindled; Satan being the bouteſeau, or kindle-coale. See verſe 1.

Verſe 8. And they conſpired all of them together] All of them, and together: and yet this was not Unity, but Conſpiracy: Such as is that among Devils, Mark 5. 9. among Antichriſtians, Rev. 17. 13. among Turks, who have as little diſſenſion in their Religion, as any. But well may that garment have no ſeame, that hath no ſhape. The army of Niniveh was quiet, Nah. 1. 12. no falling out, nor complaining in their hoſts: hence their King marched on, paſſed thorough. But ſo did not theſe conſpiratours, becauſe they met with thoſe that were no leſſe well combined, and far better reſolved then themſelves. The Thebanes had a band of men they called Sacra Cohors, conſiſting of ſuch onely as were joyned in the bonds of love, and reſolved to live and die together. Theſe Jewes under the command of Nehemiah were none other, and were therefore inſuperable. ἱερὸς λόχος. Athen. l. 3.

To come and to fight] To turn their works into knocks.

And to hinder it] Heb. To make an errour in it. The Hebrew word is uſed both of the errour of the heart, and of the foot, Eſay 63. 17. Pſal. 119. ult. It may be rendered here, to hinder him, to make an errour in him: to make Nehemiah at a ſtand, or rather to run away, to creep into corners, and give over the work.

Verſe 9. Nevertheleſſe we made our prayer unto God] Who is the Saints ſanctuary of ſafety, their preſent help in time of trouble. Prayer to him is an anchor in all ſtorms, and a ſalve for all ſores; yea, it healeth not only body and ſoul, but even hard ſtony walls, verſe 7. Provided that we judge our ſelves in prayer, and commit our cauſe to God to be judged by him, as the Hebrew word here importeth. Thus did the children of Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſeh, when to fight againſt the Hagarens. Thus did Jabiz, and Jehoſaphat, and Conſtantine, and Theodoſius, and that late victorious King of Sweden, of whom it is ſtoried in his life, that he would pray a ſhipboard, aſhoare, in the field, in the middeſt of a battle; as if prayer alone were the ſureſt piece of his whole armour. נתפלל Euſeb. lib. 4. Ruffin. lib. 2. cap. 23. Mr. Clark.

And ſet a watch] According to that of our Saviour, Watch and pray, Luke 21. 36. and that of the Heathen, Admota manu invocanda eſt Minerva: Ora & labora, pray, and then uſe beſt policy: firſt conquer heaven, and then preſume of earths conqueſt.

Againſt them] Or, over-anent them, at the workmens elbowes, and in the face of the enemies.

Verſe 10. And Judah ſaid] Here was ἐμπόδιον, impedimenti domeſtici: aliud ex alio malum, a worſe diſcouragement then the former. Judah (the chief labourers) begins to murmur and mutiny, to faint and fall off. A perillous practiſe in ſuch a dangerous time, and enough to have undone all: as one coward in an army, breaking the array and running away, may ſet the reſt a running, and the day be thereby loſt. Lo, this was Judah, whoſe ſcutcheon was a Lion: but here unlike himſelf.

The ſtrength of the bearers of burdens is decayed] Very ſpecious reaſons: they alledge:

ledge: their ſhoulders aked, their ſtrength was gone, there was no end of their pains-taking, their work grew upon them, &c. The truth was, deerat ignis, deerat animus, they were weary of well-doing, and not valiant for the truth, Jer. 9. 3. More like they were to thoſe fugitives of Ephraim, Judg. 12. 4. then the Lions of the Tribe of Judah. Nehemiah therefore might well have ſaid to them as Alexander once did to a faint-hearted ſouldier of his, that was of his own name, Either leave off the name of Alexander, or be valiant. So, either hold out, and bear up under your burdens, or be Judah no more.

So that we are not able] Never was any thing too hard for Alexander; becauſe he never held any thing impoſſible to be effected.

Verſe 11. And our adverſaries ſaid] But their plot was ſome way diſcovered, and ſo prevented. Detexit facinus fatuus & non implevit, ſaith Tacitus of one in his time. So the Gun-powder-traytours betrayed themſelves; and all came to light, though they had digg'd as low as hell to hide their counſels from the Lord.

They ſhall not know, neither ſee] But what ſhall he do who is Omniſcient and ὀλοβλεπτος, All-eye? whoſe providence is like a well-drawn picture that vieweth all that comes into a roome.

Till we came into the middeſt among them] Either in the night undiſcerned; or by day, but unarmed, and not as enemies: for the Florentine Secretary, though not yet (nor of many ages after) born into the world; yet the good of this world was as great a Maſter then, as afterwards.

And ſtay them, and cauſe the work to ceaſe] The craft of the Churches adverſaries is never but accompanied with cruelty: and their cruelty is ſeldome without craft. The Devil lends them his ſeven heads to plot, and his ten hornes to puſh: but in the thing wherein they deale proudly, God is above theſe cruell-crafties.

Verſe 12. And it came to paſſe, that when the Jewes which dwelt by them ſaw] Their brethren from abroad gave the workmen intelligence; and this was a very friendly office: for præmonitus præmunitus, premonition is the beſt means of prevention. It is the property of a brother, though at other times not ſo kinde, yet in affliction and extremity, to finde nature working in him, and to do his beſt. See Prov. 17. 17. with the Note.

They ſaid unto us ten times] i. e. often-times, Gen. 3. 41. Num. 14. 22. The Lord knoweth how to deliver his, as he did David from Saul, Peter from the Jewes, Acts 12. Paul from thoſe Conſpiratours, Acts 23. and this ſinful nation oft from the blood-thirſty Papiſts. Maſſes were ſaid in Rome for the good ſucceſſe of the Catholike deſigne (the Powder-plot:) but no prayers in England, for our deliverance: and yet they were defeated (Sorex ſuo periit indicio) and we delivered. Admirable mercy.

From all places whence ye ſhall returne, &c.] Some read it thus, And it came to paſſe, when the Jewes which dwelt beſide them, came and told us of their practiſes ten times out of all places, whence they came unto us, I ſet in the low places &c. And here, I cannot tell, ſaith one, whether theſe Intelligencers be worthy more praiſe, or diſpraiſe. It was their duty to have come home, ſtood in ſtormes, and help to build Jeruſalem. But God which turneth our negligence and fooliſhneſſe to the ſetting forth of his wiſdom and goodneſſe, gave them a good will and boldneſſe to further that building as they might. Thus God uſeth the ſervice of all men and creatures to the comfort of his people.

Verſe 13. Therefore I ſet in the lower places] I took them off their work, and appointed them to ſtand upon their guard; appointing them their ſeveral ſtations, and giving them orders.

I even ſet the people after their families] Or, according to their kindreds: for he knew that Nature will move one kinſman to be truer to another in all dangers, then a ſtranger: and that one kinſman will open his grief to his friend, and take comfort at his hand, rather then to him whom he knoweth not. Hence Nehemiah in policy ſorted his ſouldiers after this ſort.

With their ſwords, their ſpears, and their bowes] Theſe were the ancient weapons of war: neither had Death yet learned to cut his way thorough a wood of men, but of the mouth of a murthering piece. Whether the Emperour Wenceſlaus did well or ill in executing Barthold Swarts for inventing Gun-powder Anno Domini 1378. I determine not.

Verſe 14. And I looked, and roſe up) Et vidi, & ſurrexi, & dixi, ſo the original ginal runs. He saw the enemy a coming, he started up; and he made this excellent exhortation: which puts me in minde of that which one once said of Julius Cæsar, If you had never known him to have been a souldier; yet hear him but speak only, and you will conclude him to be one.

Si acta ejus penitus ignorasses, per linguam tamen militem esse diceres.

And said unto the Nobles] In a short, but pithy Oration: such as was that of Joab, 2 Sam. 10. 12. (of which Pellican saith, Non potuit vox duce dignior cogitari, as brave a speech as a man could make) Or that of Hunniades about to joyne battel with the Turks (see Turk. Hist. fol. 272.) Or lastly, that of the Prince of Orange at the battel of Newport; where they had the Sea on one side, and the Spaniards on the other. If, said he, you will live, you must either eate up these Spaniards, or drink up this Sea. So here, Either you must fight lustily, or all you have is forfeited assuredly.

Be not ye afraid of them] Away with that cowardly passion, which unmans a man, & rectam tollit de cardine mentem, robs him of all power and policy.

Remember the Lord] Whom he that feareth needs fear none else: The name of the Lord is a strong tower, &c.

Who is great and terrible] For the defence of his people, and offence of his enemies. The Lord is a man of war, Exod. 15. 3. Yea, he alone is a whole army of men, Van and Reare both, Esay 52. 12. And may better say to his souldiers then Antigonus did to his, when they were afraid of the enemies numbers, How many do ye reckon me for?

And fight for your brethren] Whether by Race, or Religion.

Your sonnes and your daughters] Those φίλτατα, as the Greeks call them, Charissimi; as the Latines, dearest pledges.

Your wives and your houses] In the last Commandment houses are set first before wives, because a house is to be first provided; neither will a wise man take a wife before he hath an house. Here wives are set before houses; because far more precious, and a maine part of a mans self, Ephes. 5. 28. House and riches are the inheritance of the fathers, but a prudent wife is of the Lord, Prov. 19. 14. She was one of the first real and royal gifts bestowed by God upon Adam. By the way note, that if men may fight for their civil right to their houses and lands, have they not as good warrant to fight for their Religion, especially since they have the Lawes of the Land for it; and besides, a civil right at least to the outward peaceable profession and practise of it? The Athenians themselves (though their Religion was no better then superstition, Acts 17. 22.) Yet they bound themselves by a publike and solemne oath, to defend it to the utmost. The words of the oath were these; I will fight for the Temples and holy rites, both alone, and with others.

Ἀμυνῶ δὲ καὶ ὑπὲρ ἱερῶν καὶ ὑπὲρ ὁσίων καὶ μόνος καὶ μετὰ πολλῶν.

Verse 15. And it came to passe when the enemies heard] This rumour was enough to affray these no lesse (now) timorous then (before) temerarious Samaritans: Great bragges they made at first what they would do; but now that they see they are defeated of their purpose, they are creast-fallen, and have no minde at all to advance. So that to these may be fitly applyed that which Guicciardine saith of Charles the eighth King of France in his expedition against Naples, that he came into the field like thunder and lightning, but went out like a snuff: more then a man at first, and lesse then a woman at last.

And God had brought their counsel to nought] According to that of the Psalmist, The Lord bringeth the counsel of the Heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect. The counsel of the Lord standeth for ever: the thoughts of his heart to all generations, Psal. 33. 10, 11. Here good men may learn, saith One, not to go nakedly, without weapons for their own necessary defence: and much lesse, said I, without their spiritual weapons (whether defensive, as the shield of faith, the breast-plate of righteousnesse, &c. or offensive, as the Sword of the spirit the Word, and the darts of prayer) lest they be surprized and subjugated by that old manslayer. Eph. 6.

That we returned all of us to the Wall] Not to the Tavern to tosse pots (saith One) and boast of their great Victory: but in the fear of God they return to the Walls, and every man falleth to his work again. All Histories declare, that the greatest Kingdoms, when they fell to idlenesse and luxury, then they lost their former glory faster then they won it. The Turkish Empire is thought to be on the declining hand, because their late Emperours do far degenerate from their warlike progenitours, their Souldiers generally give themselves to unwonted pleasures, their ancient discipline of War is neglected, rebellions raised, &c. Turk. Hist.

Verſe 16. And it came to paſſe from that time forth] As it is ſtoried of that peerleſſe Q. Elizabeth, that in times of greateſt Peace, ſhe ever made preparation for War: ſo did this incomparable Nehemiah; ſtill fearing ſome new practiſe, and not knowing what thoſe reſtleſſe heads were even now a hammering.

That the half of my ſervants wrought in the work] No ſervants they were for Nehemiah, if they would not work. He was an active man himſelf, trading every talent: and thoſe about him muſt all be active. One would wonder how this Courtier ſhould become on the ſudden ſo cunning a Souldier, and ſhould marſhal his men ſo skilfully, ſetting the younger before to bear the brunt of the battel, and the Elders behind to direct and encourage, according to that of the Poet.

Ἔργα νέων, βῦλαι τ' ἀνδρῶν, ἰυχαί τι γερόντων.

But it was his God that inſtructed him to this diſcretion and taught him, Eſay 28. 26. and he might well break out and ſing with David, Bleſſed be the Lord my ſtrength, which teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight, Pſal. 144. 1. Quando Chriſtus Magiſter, quàm citò dicitur quod docetur? ſaith Auſtin. Gods Scholars muſt needs be exact in a ſhort ſpace.

And the habergeons] Theſe were armour for back and breaſt. In the Chriſtian Panoply there's no mention of armour for the back (though there is for the breaſt;) becauſe a Eph. 6. Chriſtian Souldier ſhould never flie, but be like Androclid, whom when one derided, becauſe, being lame, he went into the war, he anſwered merrily, that he came thither to fight, not to run away.

Verſe 17. They which builded on the wall] The Maſter-Maſons, and they that bare burthens, Bajuli, Labourers and Porters, who bear upon their ſhoulders, as much as they can ſtand under, yet go ſinging oft under their burdens: the reaſon whereof Alexander Aphrodiſæus ſaith is this, that their minds being delighted with the ſweetneſſe of the muſick, the body may be the leſſe ſenſible of the weight they carry. But theſe burden-bearers had little mind to ſing, their lives being in ſuſpence. And yet, as worthy workmen, they went on with the Wall.

Every one with one of his hands wrought, and in the other hand had a weapon] Id eſt, When they were buſieſt in building, they had their weapons in a readineſſe to reſiſt. What a goodly ſight was this? ſaith one, to ſee every one ſo full of courage, that they feared not the enemy; and ſo willing to work, that they would not be weary. Let Chriſtian men look into this notable example, and be aſhamed of their ſlothfulneſſe, &c.

Verſe 18. For the builders every one had his ſword girded by his ſide] Heb. On his loynes: that's the place for the ſword to hang on, Pſal. 45. 3. Gird thy ſword upon thy thigh O moſt mighty. And Rev. 19. 16. Chriſts Name is written upon his veſture, that all may ſee it, and upon his thigh, where his ſword hangs, to ſhew that he won it by his valour. S. H. Blunt. 94. Among the Turks at this day, as the right hand is held uppermoſt for a Scholar, ſo the left Ibid. 70. for a Souldier; becauſe it gives a man poſſeſſion of his companions ſword: though the Turks ſeldome bear weapons but in travel; and then ſome of them ſeeme no leſſe like a walking, then theſe builders did like a working Armourie.

Verſe. 19. And I ſaid unto the Nobles, &c.] Nehemiah the more a man obſerveth him, the more he ſhall admire him. Surely he was (as Velleius ſaith of Cato Major) homo virtuti ſimillimus, a man as like vertue as might be: He was (as Pliny ſaith of the ſame Cato) optimus Orator, optimus Imperator, optimus Senator, omniumque bonarum artium Magiſter, an excellent Oratour, an excellent General, an excellent Stateſman, a Maſter of all good arts whatſoever. He had cropt off the very tops of all vertues, as Pindarus ſaith of Hiero, and as Melanchthon ſaith of Frederick the Electour of Saxony. From the builders here he turneth him to the Nobles and Rulers, &c. whom he would not have to be Carpet-knights, fitter for a canopy then a Camp, for language then a lance, &c. but active in their orbe, and ready preſt to ſerve in watching, warding, and preparing things neceſſary for the workmen.

Vell. lib. 2.

Ἄρετων κορυφας ἀρετῶν ἀπὸ πασῶν.

The work is great and large] The compaſſe of the Walls at this time is thought by good writers to be certain miles about: and yet was enlarged as much afterwards by Herod.

And we are ſeparated upon the Wall] According to our diviſions, noted chap. 3. 1. &c. and this is a weapon in the hand of our enemies: for dum pugnamus ſinguli, vincamur univerſi, being diſperſed, we are much diſadvantaged.

Verſe

Verſe 20. In what place therefore ye hear the ſound of the Trumpet] Which therefore, for the purpoſe he kept at his own elbow, verſe 18. as a matter of truſt, and importance. Moſes committed the blowing of the Trumpets unto the ſonnes of Aaron only, Num. 10. for if the Trumpet give an uncertain ſound, who ſhall prepare himſelf to the battel? 1 Cor. 14. 8.

Reſort you thither unto us] As to your Rendevous, that we may ſtand againſt the Enemy in an entire body; mean while Nehemiah walketh the round, and watcheth the Enemies motions, ſo that of him might be ſaid, as once was of Hannibal, Nullo labore aut corpus fatigari, aut animus vinci poterat, he was indefatigable, inſuperable: or as of Fabius Maximus. Liv. decad. 3. lib. 1.

Hic patria eſt, murique urbis ſtant pectore in uno. Sil. Ital.

Our God ſhall fight for us] Courage therefore, my hearts, He is the Lord, Strong, and Mighty, the Lord Mighty in battel, Pſal. 24. 8. and may far better ſay then Henry the eighth did, Cui adhæreo, præeſt, he whom I fight for, is ſure to prevail.

Verſe 21. So we laboured in the work] Their fear of the enemy did not weaken them, but waken them rather to a redoubled diligence.

From the riſing of the Sun till the Stars appeared] Time was precious: and they redeemed and improved it. The common complaint is, We want time: but the truth is, Non parùm habemus temporis, ſed multùm perdimus. We do not ſo much want, as waſte it. The good man is perdius & pernox, night and day at his buſineſſe: and his thoughts are the ſame with thoſe of Rabbi Simeon, Dies brevis eſt, & opus multum, & operarii pigri, & paterfamilias urget, The time is ſhort, the task large, the workmen lither, the maſter of the houſe urgent.

Verſe 22. Likewiſe at the ſame time I ſaid unto the people] He had a ſaying to every one: and having ordered the work of the day, he appointeth a watch for the night ſeaſon alſo: for they had many falſe friends within themſelves too. Cæſars vigilancy did ever equal his valour: ſo did Nehemiahs.

Verſe 23. So neither I] He ſaid not to his men, Ite, but eamus, as Cæſar did, Go ye, but go we, and as Abimelech, Judg. 9. 48. What ye ſee me do, make haſte and do accordingly: Velleius flattered when he ſaid, Tiberius imperio maximus, exemplo major. Nehemiah was ſo in very deed.

Saving that every one put them off for waſhing] To keep themſelves cleanly, and from being naſty; or otherwiſe, to waſh themſelves from legal pollutions.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. And there was a great cry]

Such as ſeditious ones uſe to ſet up in their outragious uproares: or ſuch as is the expreſſion of great grief and anguiſh of heart. Significat clamorem vel querulum, vel impervioſum, iracundum, inacem.

Of the people] The ignobile vulgus, a moſt dangerous and heady water, when once it is out.

And of their wives] Who being pincht with penury made piteous out-cries. Invalidum omne, naturâ querulum. Seneca.

Againſt their brethren the Jewes] The richer ſort, who oppreſſed them and drew them before the judgement ſeats, as Saint James hath it of the Jews of his time: for they were no changelings. Let the Philiſtins bind Sampſon, and he can bear it: but do not you lay hands on me, ſaith he to his Countrey-men. Scipio had rather Annibal ſhould eat his heart with ſalt, then Lælius give him a croſſe word. Had it been mine enemy, ſaith David, I could have digeſted it. So could theſe poor creatures far better have born the inſolencies of ſtrangers, then the oppreſſions of fellow-brethren. Tacitus tells us, that in his time the Jews were very merciful to thoſe of their own Nation, and cruel to all others. But here their owne complaine, and this was doubtleſſe a great grief to good Nehemiah. James 2. 6. Miſericordia in promptu apud ſuos, &c.

Verſe 2. We, our ſonnes, and our daughters are many] That's a mercy, had we but keeping for them. Their wives were very fruitful, ſed luſtuoſa fœcunditate (as Hierome ſaith of Lata:) Epiſt. 7.

Læta:) for they had more mouths then meat for them. The young children asked for bread, and no man brake it unto them, *Lam.*4.4.

Therefore we take up corn for them] Corn upon uſe, to keep us from ſtarving: and that by pawning or ſelling our dear children to the rich Creditours for ſervants, till we can redeem them, which we are never like to do, *ver.*5.

That we may eat and live] Meerly to keep us alive: for elſe we would never have made our poor children bondſlaves. But Neceſſitas durum telum, Hunger is ſo pinching a pain, that a Woman will eate her own child, as in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, Samaria, Saguntum: yea a man his own fleſh, rather then dye with hunger. Hitherto the pooreſt ſort. Follows now another cry.

Verſe 3. We have morgaged our Lands, Vineyards, &c.] Lands they had, but were little the better for them. Husbandry they had neglected to give attendance upon buildings: neither were they able to ſtock and ſtore their grounds, and ſo are forced to part with them at an under-rate. This is many a poor mans caſe amongſt us, who yet are little pitied, or relieved, unleſſe it be with a little mouth-mercy, as in S. James his dayes, *chap.*2. 15,16. Oppreſſours will be but as Friends at a ſneeze: the moſt you can get of them is, God bleſſe you: like they are (many of them) to Darius; who prayed God to help Daniel, but ſent him to the Lions den.

Jam.2.15,16

Verſe 4. There were alſo that ſaid] Here was a third complaint to good Nehemiah, to whom whoſoever lamented were ſure to have redreſſe and remedy. He did not ſerve theſe poor people, as that mercileſſe Biſhop of Mentz in Germany did; who, to rid his hands of them in a time of famine, in horreo concluſos juſſit concremari, ſhut them up altogether in a barn, and there burnt them: He was afterwards eaten to death by Rats, non ſine maxima divinæ vindictæ ſuſpicione, ſaith mine Author, by a juſt hand of God upon him for his cruelty to thoſe poor, whom he would not relieve with his corn, but let the Rats eat it; and of whom he ſaid when they were burning in his barn, that they cryed like a company of Rats.

Hatto Archiep. Mogunt. Anno 923.

We have borrowed money for the Kings tribute] They did not deny payment, and riſe up in armes, making Poverty their Captain, as the Suffolk-men did here in Henry the eighths time: Neither did they anſwer the King of Perſia's officers, as the men of Andros once did Themiſtocles. He, being ſent by the Athenians to them for tribute, told them that he came unto them on that errand, accompanied with two goddeſſes, Eloquence to perſwade, and Violence to enforce them. Their anſwer was, that they alſo had on their ſide two goddeſſes as ſtrong; Neceſſity (for they had it not) and Impoſſibility, for they knew not how to raiſe it. Theſe men pawn their lands to pay tribute: but it went to their hearts, and cauſed this complaint.

Speed. 1012.

Plutarch.

Verſe 5. Yet our fleſh is as the fleſh of our brethren] i. e. Nevertheleſſe we are men as well as they, though poor men, and therefore ſlighted (but why ſhould they hide their eyes from their own fleſh, Iſa. 58.7? Have we not all one father, Mal. 2. 10?) Yea, we are men of Iſrael, ſuch as fear God, Acts 13. 16. Hewen out of the ſame rock, digg'd out of the ſame pit, *Iſa.*51.1. cut out of the ſame cloth, the ſhieres only going between. What if God have given them more wealth (as the Shepherd beſtows a bell upon his Belweather) ſhould they therefore inſult and domineere over us, as if not worthy to breath in the ſame aire?

Our children as their children] Viz. As dear to us, and as free-borne every way as theirs are; why then ſhould their unmerciful dealing enſlave them? He that oppreſſeth the poor, reproacheth his Maker: but he that honoureth him, hath mercy on the poore. There is a Writ in England which beareth this name, Ne injuſtè vexes, Vex not any man unjuſtly: But Law without execution, is like a bell without a clapper. It was done directly againſt Law, that is here complained of. See Levit. 25. 39. and therefore there is an Ecce ſet upon it in the next words: And (loe) we bring into bondage, &c. Theſe cruel Cormorants thought to bear out and juſtifie the moſt monſtrous miſdemeanour, becauſe it was the fact of a Grandee, who could as eaſily break thorough the lattice of the Laws, as the bigger flies do thorough a ſpider-web, as Anacharſis once ſaid concerning his Scythians.

Prov. 15.31.

We bring into bondage our ſonnes and our daughters] This went to the hearts of them; and well it might. For, 1. Our children are a chief part of our ſelves, even the ſeed; as though now there were nothing left in us but the chaffe. 2. Bondage is very grievous, as liberty exceeding ſweet. Did we but live a while in Turkey, (ſaith one) in

Perſia,

Perſia, yea or but in France, a dram of that liberty we yet enjoy, would be as precious to us, as a drop of cold water would have beene to the rich man in hell, when he lay broyling in thoſe flames. 3. They were neceſſitated to do this with their own hands; we bring into bondage, &c. hard hunger driving us thereunto, though as ill-willing thereunto as ever Jacob was to part with his Benjamin into Egypt: he would not do it till there was no remedy. 4. They ſold them for ſlaves, not to ſtrangers, but to their owne friends and Countreymen, where we looked for more courteſie. But a man had as good deal with a Coſſack or Cannibal, as with a truly covetous caytiff, and as much favour and fair-dealing he ſhall finde. For ſuch an one reſpecteth neither friend nor foe; nor regards at all how he cometh by it, by hook or by crook, by right or by wrong, be it ſhort or long.

And ſome of our daughters are brought into bondage already] So that our complaints are neither falſe nor cauſeleſſe: for that weaker ſex is every way ſubject to more abuſe, their chaſtity (which is their honour) was much hazarded. Caſtus quaſi καλὸς ὁ natus.

Neither is it in our power to redeeme them] Would we never ſo faine. What would not a tender-hearted father give or do for the redemption of his dear child? To let go many other examples, Fridericus Barbaroſſa, Emperour of Germany, (when as in the wars betwixt the Pope and him, his youngeſt ſonne was taken priſoner by the Venetian fleet) Vehementi amore commotus erga filium captum, ſaith mine Author, through an earneſt deſire of getting his ſonnes liberty, he concluded a peace upon moſt unequal terms, viz. that he ſhould come in perſon to Venice, and there proſtrate at the Popes feet (who trod upon the Emperours neck) he ſhould beg pardon; and then having ſetled peace in Italy, led his army into Aſia againſt the Turk. All this he did for his ſonnes liberty. Val. Max. Chriſt pag. 193 & 309

For other men have our lands and vineyards] Even thoſe men that ſo lately came out of captivity themſelves, and know the miſery of want and ſlavery. Thoſe that partake now of ſo much liberty, and liberality from the Kings of Perſia, and yet behold they pull up the bridge before us that themſelves have gone over. Surely there is no truth nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land, Hoſ. 4.1. Lo this was Vox oppreſſorum merceſque retenta laborum.

Verſe 6. And I was very angry] Red-hot with anger, and not without cauſe. To be angry without cauſe, is to be guilty of judgement, Matth. 5. but in caſe of Gods diſhonour, and publike prejudice, moderation is mopiſhneſſe, toleration, cowardiſe, &c. Nehemiah was a Magiſtrate, that is, a Mortal God: as God is an Immortal Magiſtrate. Therefore as God is angry at the oppreſſions of poor people (Lactantius hath written a book De ira Dei) ſo ſhould his Lieutenants: And this holy anger ſhould be cos fortitudinis, a means to encourage, or rather to enrage them againſt Oppreſſours, who grind the faces of the poor, and take from them burdens of Wheat, Amos 5.11. Yea, lands and vineyards, as here, eating bread baked with the tears of men, coyning their money on their skins, and wringing their ſpunges into their own purſes.

When I heard their cry] His anger then was mixed with grief, as was our Saviours, Mar. 3.5. it was pure zeal, which is nothing elſe but an extreme (but regular) heat of all the affections.

Verſe 7. Then I conſulted with my ſelf] As reaſon required: he was very angry, but yet he keeps within compaſſe, and practiſeth that rule, Be angry, and ſinne not: which, (ſaith one) is the eaſieſt charge under the hardeſt condition that can be. He that will be angry, and not ſinne, let him be angry at nothing but at ſinne: and then ſee to it alſo that it become not a ſinne, by anteverting right reaſon. Nehemiah was not ſo angry but that he could conſult with himſelf, and deliberate what was beſt to be done: his heart conſulted within him, or wiſely over-ruled him: ſo the Hebrew.

Then I rebuked the Nobles and the Elders] Not in his paſſion, but upon ſerious deliberation; and having put himſelf into a fit frame, that he might neither over nor under-do. Valete, quoniam vobis iraſcor, ſaid Archytas to his ſervants that had offended him; I have nothing to ſay to you, till mine anger be over. Plutarch.

And ſaid unto them, you exact uſury, &c.] This reproof was, as it ſhould be, warm but not ſcalding: Words of reviling and diſgrace do ſcald as it were. But words that tend to ſtir up the conſcience to a due conſideration of the fault, theſe are duly warme, and tend to make the Phyſick work more kindly.

Every one of his brother] This was a preſumptuous violation of the Law, Exod. 22. 25.

25. Levit. 25. 36, 37. and a ſinne that they had ſoundly ſmarted for, Ezek. 22. 12. Uſurers are men-eaters, Pſal. 14. 4. like Pickrels in a pond, or Sharkes in the Sea, that devoure the leſſer fiſhes. Anno 1235. There were ſpread thorough England certaine Roman Uſurers, called Caurſini (quaſi capientes urſi, devouring bears, quoth Matth. Paris) who had entangled the King, Nobles, and all others that had to deale in the Court of Rome, in their cunning ſnares, under colour of ſupplying with money, ſuch as wanted preſent pay to the Pope: ſo theſe, to the King of Perſia.

Speed 613.

And I ſet a great aſſembly againſt them] i. e. I reproved them, firſt, privately, and then publikely, and he doth it ſeverè & ad vivum, roughly and roundly, not going about the buſh with them, though they were Nobles and Rulers. Reprehenſiones perſonatæ frigent; ſuch as was that of Jehoſhaphat to Ahab, Let not the King ſay ſo. This is to do more harm then good.

1 Kings 22. 8.

Verſe 8. And I ſaid unto them, We after our ability] This he ſpeaketh not in a vainglorious vaunting way, or to curry favour with the people, but to convince the contrary-minded of their inhumanity to their poor brethren. Good works, ſaith Chryſoſtome, are unanſwerable ſyllogiſmes, invincible demonſtrations to confute, and convert thoſe that do otherwiſe. Let your works ſo ſhine before men, &c.

Which were ſold unto the heathen] This they did in obedience to the Law, Deut. 25. 47, 48.

And will you even ſell your brethren?] There was no reſiſting of ſuch a rational reproof, no whit imbittered (as the manner is) with wrath or ſpite; but carried on with ſo much modeſty and moderation.

Or ſhall they be ſold unto us?] He makes himſelf a party, becauſe of the ſame body politick.

Then held they their peace, and found nothing to anſwer] Such is the majeſty of a reproof rightly adminiſtred: it even gags the offendour, as Matth. 22. 12. and renders him ſelf-condemned, Tit. 3. 11. Scipio with his countenance only, quelled and quieted his ſeditious ſouldiers. Alexander the Great, and after him Auguſtus Cæſar, and Severus the Emperour did the ſame, with a few quick words. Adrianus Boxſchafius, Preacher of the Word at Antwerp, hearing a certain Monk railing at Luther out of the Pulpit, Tell me, ſaid he, thou perverſe Monk, and that openly before all this people, where, and when, and in what points Luther hath erred? The Monk thus accoaſted, anſwered not a word, but gat him out of the Pulpit, and fled away as faſt as he could, and never came again into that Countrey.

Scu'tet. Annal.

Verſe 9. Alſo I ſaid, It is not good that you do] No oratory is ſo powerful, as that of mildneſſe. The drops that fall eaſily upon the corne, ripen and fill the eare; when haſty ſhowers lay all flat to the earth, without hope of recovery. Gregory hath obſerved, that they that could not be cured with ſtrong potions, have been recovered with warme water. Reprovers of others muſt deal warily, as bone-ſetters: and as we take a mote out of ones eye.

Ought ye not to walk in the fear of our God?] Which would have reynd you in, and reſtrained you from ſuch exorbitancies, Gen. 42. 18. You need not fear me, ſaid Joſeph to his brethren, for I fear God, and therefore dare do you no hurt. Ye ſhall not oppreſſe one another; but thou ſhalt fear thy God: for I am the Lord your God, Levit. 25. 17. And will ye not tremble at my preſence, ſaith the Lord? Tremble thou earth at the preſence of the Lord, at the preſence of the God of Jacob. Oppreſſours are called Canaanites, Hoſ. 12. 7. He is Canaan (that is a meer natural man, utterly void of Gods holy fear, Ezek. 16. 3.) the ballances of deceit are in his hand, he loveth to oppreſſe. To him that is afflicted, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend (as it ſhould have been to theſe poor Jews from their hard-hearted Countreymen and kinſmen) but he forſaketh the fear of the Almighty, and is therefore mercileſſe.

Jer. 5. 22. Pſal. 114. 7.

Becauſe of the reproach of the Heathen our enemies] Who watch for our halting more earneſtly then a dog doth for a bone, and will be glad of any occaſion to ſpeak evil of us and of our Religion, with, Theſe are your Profeſſours, &c. You ſee what Tyrants and Tigers they are one to another. Hereby the banks of blaſphemy will be broken down in them, to ſpeak evil with open mouth of the Name of God; And will ye trample upon that dear and dread Name?

Verſe 10. I likewiſe, and my brethren —— might exact money] To wit, for money we have lent them; or as a recompence of our publike employments. But poſſe & nolle, nobile eſt.

Seneca.

I pray

I pray you leave off this uſury] Who can reſiſt this ſweet and ſoveraigne admonition? See verſe 9. They had ſomewhat to ſay, no doubt, in defence of their uſury; as alſo many have at this day. But let them conſider, that uſury is here and elſewhere cryed down without diſtinction, Pſal. 15. 5. Ezek. 18. 8, 13. That the lender dealeth not as he would be dealt withal: that Saint Luke maketh him worſe then other ſinners, when he ſaith, Sinners lend to ſinners to receive the like, but theſe to receive more, Luke 6. 34. That Heathens condemned uſury, as Ariſtotle in his Ethicks, and Agis the General of the Athenians, Ageſilaus King of Spartans: who when he ſaw the Uſurers bills and bonds ſet on fire by Agis, ſaid, That he never ſaw a clearer fire burne. And laſtly, that at Rome it ſelf Uſurers are excommunicated monethly. Plut. in Sclone.

Verſe 11. Reſtore, I pray you to them even this day] While you are in a melting temper, and in a good mind, make reſtitution. Say not, This is an hard ſaying, who can brook it? But ſay rather, as the Civilian ſaith, Perquàm durum eſt; ſed ita lex ſcripta eſt, 'Tis hard to be done, but the Law will have it ſo done: Aut faciendum, aut patiendum; Either we muſt do it, or do worſe. The Law for reſtitution, ſee Levit. 6. 1, 4. Num. 5. 6, 7, &c. The wrong-doer muſt not only confeſſe, but reſtore. The tranſgreſſion was againſt God, but the treſpaſſe againſt man; and he muſt be ſatisfied, if the ſinne ſhall be pardoned. Samuel proffer'd to reſtore, if it might appear that he had wronged any. Micah, though an Idolater, did ſo, Judg. 17. 2, 3. So did Queen Mary, She reſtored again all Eccleſiaſtical livings aſſumed to the Crown. Her Grandfather Henry the ſeventh in his laſt Will and Teſtament, deviſed and willed reſtitution ſhould be forthwith made of all ſuch monies as had been unjuſtly levied by the officers. Selymus the great Turk did the like upon his death-bed: ſo great is the force of natural conſcience; Gravel in the kidnies will not grate ſo much, as a little guilt in this kinde. Reſtore your evil-gotten goods, ſaid father Latimer, or elſe you will cough in hell, and the Devils will laugh at you. He ſet this point ſo well home, that he wrought upon many; and particularly upon Maſter Bradford. Auſtine ſaith, that if a man be able to make actual reſtitution, and do it not, pœnitentia non agitur, ſed fingitur, his Repentance is not right: if he have waſted all, and is not able to reſtore, he muſt deſire pardon very humbly, and water the earth with his tears. Ulpian. 1 Sam. 12.

Alſo the hundreth part of the money] That is, all that they had received for intereſt, whether money, or elſe. It appeareth by this text, that they took twelve in the hundred (for ſo much the hundreth part monethly amounteth to) as at this day in Italy, and elſewhere the Jewes are permitted to ſtraine up their uſury to eighteen in the hundred upon the Chriſtian (for among themſelves they now uſe it not) which cauſeth many of thoſe Pſeudo-Chriſtians to uſe thoſe Jews under-hand, in improving their unlawful rents to the utmoſt proportion. Sands his Survey.

Verſe 12. Then ſaid they, We will reſtore them] This was well ſaid: and Nehemiah took courſe it ſhould be as well done, ne dicta factis erubeſcerent, as Tertullian phraſeth it; that their ſaying and doing might be alike.

We will require nothing of them] But be of thoſe that lend, looking for nothing againe, no not the principal. Luke 6.

So will we do as thou haſt ſaid] Denying our ſelves, and all worldly luſts, that we may get and keep a good conſcience, that moſt precious Jewel that ever the heart of man was acquainted with.

Then I called the Prieſts] As fitteſt to tender ſo ſolemne an oath, and to bear witneſſe in a caſe of that nature.

And took an oath of them] That is, of them that had promiſed reſtitution: that they might not ſtart back, nor repent them of their good reſolutions. Our hearts are deceitful, and muſt be by all good means hēld up to duty, Quo teneas vultus mutantem Protea nodo? elſe they will ſlip collar, as thoſe ſlippery Jewes, Jer. 34. 10, 11. retracted and repealed their vow. It was therfore well and wiſely done of Nehemiah to bind them thus to the good abearance; as Aſa and Joſiah had done before him. An oath is an hedge which a man may not break; which yet that great Heteroclite of Rome maketh a ſport of. For when the Cardinals meet to chuſe a new Pope, they make him ſwear to certain Articles. And Sleydan ſaith, that no ſooner is he choſen, but he breaks them all, and checks their inſolencies, as if they went about to limit his power, to whom all power is given in heaven and earth. Is not this that ἄνομος, that lawleſſe, yokeleſſe, maſterleſſe monſter Saint Paul ſpeaketh of, 2 Theſ. 2. 8?

Verſe 13. Alſo I ſhook my lap] By this rite (running into their ſenſes) this holy man runs with terrours into the eyes and hearts of all that ſhould perfidiouſly forſwear themſelves, by a direful denunciation of divine vengeance. In all lawful oaths there is an imprecation, though it be not alwayes expreſt, Gen. 14.23. Heb. 3.

So God caſt out every man from his houſe] See Zech. 5. 4, 5. with the Note.

And from his labour] i. e. From his layings-up (the fruit of his labour) his lands and eſtate, got by a diligent hand. The Hebrew word ſignifieth labour even to laſſitude and fainting.

And all the Congregation ſaid, Amen] In token of hearty aſſent, and aſſurance.

And praiſed the Lord] There was a general joy, and many an humble, chearful and thankful heart lifted up to God for ſinne ſo redreſſed, and poor people relieved.

And the people did according to this promiſe] This was real thankfulneſſe. It is not the fumbling out of a few good words (as God I thank thee, praiſed be God, &c.) that will paſſe. Thanksdoing is the proof of Thanksgiving; and the good life of the thankful, is the life of thankfulneſſe. Offer unto God thankſgiving, and pay thy vowes unto the Moſt High, Pſal. 50.14.

Verſe 14. From the time that I was appointed to be their governour] He was not ambitious of the office, nor uſurped it: but was commanded to it (as the word ſignifieth) by the King of Perſia, and clearly called to it by God Almighty. Otherwiſe he could have ſhrouded himſelf in willing ſecrecy, as good corn lieth in the bottome of the heap, and as good balſam ſinketh to the bottome of the veſſel.

I and my brethren have not eaten the bread, &c.] Rulers, as they are nurſing-fathers to the people, Iſa. 49. 23. ſo by them they are to be nouriſhed, and their ſtate maintained, See 1 Kings 4. 7. It is alſo obſerved, that although our Saviour Chriſt wrought many miracles; yet he never wrought any about honour or money, but that about tribute: rather then that ſhould go undiſcharged, he commanded a fiſh to pay it. Hence alſo he ſaith not Date, but Reddite; Give, but Render unto Caeſar the things that are Caeſars. And Saint Paul ſaith, ye pay tribute, as being a due debt. Nevertheleſſe in this great neceſſity Nehemiah lets go his own right, and leaveth it to others: like as the Eagle is ſaid, when ſhe ſeeketh her prey, to leave a good part thereof to the birds that follow her, for the ſame end.

Matth. 22. Rom. 13.6. Toſtat. ex Plin.

Verſe 15. But the former Governours] Thoſe that had been betwixt Zorobabel and Nehemiah: Ezra was no Governour. Theſe had been ſtrict in exacting their five pounds a day; or, for the head of every family, ſo much; beſides bread for neceſſity, and wine for delight. Not ſo Nehemiah, he would not uſe his power to over-burden thoſe poore whom theſe Uſurers oppreſſed. This he here inſtanceth for their further conviction.

Yea, even their ſervants bear rule over the people] Exacting what they pleaſe of them: this their maſters ſhould have ſeene to, and not ſuffered for the ſervants ſinne is the maſters reproach. When Charles the fifth reſolved to lay down the Empire, ſome of his Courtiers and Counſellours adviſed him to retaine ſtill the name and authority of Emperour, and to govern the Kingdome by his under-officers. His anſwer to them was, Ah, me praeſente ita res adminiſtratis, &c. Alas, now that I am amongſt you, things are ſo ill carried, that ye are complained of by all: what then would you do, if I ſhould not have an eye upon you? and how would you domineere like ſo many Sultans (the word here uſed) and follow the adminiſtration of Juſtice as a trade only, with an unquenchable and unconſcionable deſire of gaine?

Val. Max. Chriſt. p. 197.

But ſo did not I, becauſe of the fear of God] The beſt retentive from ſinne certainly; a ſpur to good, a curb from evil. Hence David calleth it a cleane feare, Pſal. 19. 9. and the fear of the Lord is, to depart from evil, ſaith Solomon. And Ariſtotle hath this Probleme, Why are men credited more then other creatures? The anſwer is, ὅτι θεὸν μόνον φοβοῦνται μόνον, becauſe man alone holdeth and feareth God: therefore you may truſt him. But where this fear is not, no good is to be expected, but the contrary, Gen. 20. 11. See the Note on verſe 9.

Verſe 16. Yea alſo, I continued in the work] He meaneth, ſaith Lyra, that he wrought with his own hands to draw on others the more, when they ſhould ſee their Governour himſelf ſo intent to the work. He was conſtant at it, and held out till all was finiſhed. And this he recordeth, not out of oſtentation, but to ſhew that the love and feare of God conſtrained him; as it did afterwards Paul that ſpiritual builder, who laboured more then they all, and denied himſelf to bring others to heaven, as himſelf ſetteth forth,

2 Cor.

2 Cor. 11. In praiſing our ſelves, our end muſt be, that our light may be ſeene, not our ſelves ſeene, Matth. 5. 16. Mens praiſe may be ſought, modò tibi non quæras, ſed Chriſto, ſaith Aretius, ſo that Chriſt be thereby ſet up and ſerved.

Neither bought we any land] As eaſily we might have done with the ſurpluſage of our revenue: eſpecially if we had exacted the utmoſt of our right. But publike ſpirits mind not their own intereſts. Joſhua divided the land to Iſrael, and left none to himſelf: And that portion that was given him, and he content withal, was but a meane one in the barren mountains, as Hierome obſerveth. The late victorious King of Sweden (a ſecond Joſhua) in his reprehenſory ſpeech to the German plunderers, hath this paſſage: I proteſt before God, that I have not by all this warre enriched my ſelf ſo farre as a paire of bootes cometh to: yea, I had rather ride without bootes, then in the leaſt degree to enrich my ſelf by the damage of poor people. Mr. Clark in his Life.

Verſe 17. Moreover, there were at my table, &c.] He did not eate his morſels alone, as that Pamphagus Nabal; and as many miſers now-adayes, who, like little children, though they have their hands full, and their mouths full, yet will part with none.

Ecce Deo ſimilis vir dapſilis, atque benignus. Palingen.

Beſides thoſe that came unto me from among the heathen] Either as State-Agents, or upon other occaſions. Nehemiah entertained them, that they might not lie upon the publike charge. And herein he trode in the foot-ſteps of hoſpitable Abraham, whom Syneſius calleth Θεὸν ξένων, Gods Hoſt. The Primitive Chriſtians likewiſe won much upon the Heathens by their hoſpitality towards all, as Julian the Apoſtate confeſſed: all that he could ſay againſt them for it was, that they did it all in hypocriſie, and vain-glory: which was an envious and falſe charge. Epiſt. πρὸς Ἀρσάκιον. Chryſoſt. in Joan. παλαισμὸν.

Verſe 18. Now that which was prepared for me daily] A very great table he kept (at his own charge all) yet nothing ſo great as Solomon, 1 Kings 4. 22, 23. or as once Cardinal Wolſey here; who, beſides all ſtrangers that came, had four hundred of family, whereof one was an Earle, nine Barons, very many Knights and Eſquires. But then he had more yearly revenue then all the Biſhops and Deanes in the land had, take them al together. Godw. Catal.

And once in ten dayes] Then he kept an extraordinary table inviting gueſſe, for whom he had ſtore of the beſt wines. The Turkiſh Baſhawes feaſt forreigne Embaſſadours with Rice and mutton, and fair water out of the river; wine is a forbidden ware with them: Mahomet their Prophet having told them, that in every grape there dwelt a Devil.

Yet for all this, I required not] This he did, and this he here recordeth: not for a name, (as Crates the Philoſopher did, when he caſt his goods into the Sea meerly to be talked of, and is therefore worthily called by Hierome, gloriæ animal, popularis auræ vile mancipium, a baſe ſlave to vain-glory) but for better and higher ends, ſee verſe 16. Epiſt. ad Julian. conſ.

Verſe 19. Think upon me, my God, for good] i. e. Both of grace and glory, ſaith Lyra; a confluence of all comforts and contentments, eſpecially ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things, Epheſ. 1. 3. He that firſt called riches goods, was ſurely a better husband then Divine, ſaith one. Oſtendam tibi omne bonum, I will ſhew thee all good, ſaid God to Moſes, when he gave him a glimpſe of himſelf. Nil bonum abſque ſummo Bono, ſaith Auſtine, There is no good without the chief good. Say therefore with the Church, Hoſ. 14. 2. Take away all iniquity, and do good; and as here, Remember me, O my God, for good.

According to all that I have done for this people] Here is nothing for Merit-mongers. It is mercy in God to ſet his love on them that keep his Commandments, Exod. 20. 6. to reward every man according to his works, Pſal. 62. ult. A poor Gardiner preſenting a rape root (being the beſt gift he had at hand) to the Duke of Burgundy, was by him bountifully rewarded. His Steward obſerving this, and hoping for the like recompence, preſented him with a very fair horſe. The Duke (ut perſpicaci erat ingenio, ſaith mine Authour, being a witty man,) perceived the craft; and therefore thought good to receive the horſe, and to give him nothing again. Let thoſe that dreame of merit, expect the like diſappointment; and let them learn of Nehemiah, chap. 14. 22. (the beſt gloſſe upon this text) to urge, not their merits with the Phariſee, but their miſeries with the Publican, for obtaining mercy. So Pſal. 25. 11.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1. Now it came to paſſe.]

LO here another let to the good work in hand. That in the fourth chapter was externall onely: that in the fifth internal onely: This here is mixt; that is, partly caſt in by the Enemies without (thoſe cruel-crafties,) and partly helped on by the perfidious Prophets and ignoble Nobles within, conſpiring with the Enemy againſt the good of their own Countrey. Thus Fluctus fluctum trudit.

And the reſt of our Enemies] The Churches Enemies are not a few, 1 *Cor.*16.9. She is like unto a ſilly poor maid (ſaith Luther) ſitting in a Wood or Wilderneſſe, compaſſed about with hungry Wolves, Lyons, Boares, Beares aſſaulting her every moment, and minute. The ground of all is that old Enmity, *Gen.*3.15.

Godw.Caral. That I had builded the Wall] This Wall made Nehemiah, as Wincheſter-tower at Windſor made William Wickam, that is, raiſed and renowned him: and in a like ſenſe as God is ſaid to have made Moſes and Aaron, 1 *Sam.*12.6. that is, to have advanced them, in the hearts of his people.

And that there was no breach left therein] It had been but half-built, *chap.*4.6. and the breaches but began to be ſtopt, *ver.*7. yet now all is finiſhed, amidſt much oppoſition: ſo ſhall the work of grace be in our hearts. But whileſt here, a Chriſtian hath his Ulteriùs ſtill (which was Charles the fifth his Motto,) his Superiùs as the gueſt in the Goſpel that was bid to ſit higher, &c. ſomething is yet wanting to his ful and final ſalvation, which he is ſtill to work out, *Philip.*2.*ver.*12. like as here, the doores were not yet upon their hinges.

Verſe 2. Then Sanballat and Geſhem ſent unto me] As if ſollicitous of my ſafety, and careful of the common good. He that hateth, diſſembleth with his lips, and layeth up deceit within him. When he ſpeaketh fair, beleeve him not: for there are ſeven abominations in his heart, *Prov.*26.24,25. Nehemiah well knew that all this pretended curteſy was but droſſe upon dirt, *ver.*23. a fair glove drawn upon a foul hand, a cunning colluſion to undo him. He therefore keeps aloof: quia me veſtigia terrent, &c.

Come let us meet together] Thus they called him to conference and conſultation whiles the doores were not yet upon the gates; purpoſely to take him off the work: as the Fox diverts the Huntſ-man from following the Hare: and as our deceitful hearts do too often draw us away from the proſecution of good purpoſes, by caſting many other odde impertinent matters in our way.

In the plain of Ono] Which was in the tribe of Benjamin, *chap.*11.30,31. near to Jeruſalem: that he might the ſooner come, and be the more ſecure: ſo the Papiſts appointed Trent for their conventicle, as near to the Reformed Churches: inviting their Divines thereunto ſub fide publicâ: but that Councel was carried by the Pope and his complices, with ſuch infinite guil and craft, without any ſincerity, upright dealing and truth, as that the Proteſtants, Calvin, Bucer, &c. kept off: as ſeeing that it was to no purpoſe to come amongſt them.

But they thought to do me miſchief] To kill me, or at leaſt to captivate me.

Verſe 3. And I ſent Meſſengers unto them] He went not, but ſent. This was to be wiſe as a Serpent, *Matth.*10.17. God calleth us not to a weak ſimplicity; but alloweth us as much of the Serpent as of the Dove, and telleth us; that a Serpents eye in a Doves head, is a ſingular accompliſhment. Beware of men, ver.18. bruitiſh perſons skilful to deſtroy, *Ezek.*21.31. Bleſſe your ſelves from Machiavellians (thoſe matchleſſe villanies) and pray with David to be delivered from lying lips and from a deceitful tongue, Pſal.120.2. The Cardinal of Loraine (the chief Engineer of the French Maſſacre) ſent to Chriſtopher Duke of Wirtsberg (a prudent and a valiant Prince) that he and his brethren the Guiſes would embrace the Proteſtant Religion, and deſired to be enrolled in the number of the Proteſtant Princes: but they knew him too well, to truſt him.

I am doing a great work, ſo that I cannot come down] I cannot intend it, as having my hands more full of employment, then that I can give heed to your complements. There is a curſe to him that doth the work of the Lord negligently or deceitfully. And Lata negligentia dolus eſt, ſaith the Civilian; Remiſneſſe is a kind of perfidiouſneſſe.

Lata

Why ſhould the work ceaſe?] As it would, or at leaſt go but ſlowly on in his abſence: he was ἐφόδιάρχης the driver on of the buſineſſe: as was likewiſe Boaz, who therefore followed it ſo cloſe himſelf: his eyes were upon the Servants, reapers, gleaners: he lodgeth in the middeſt of his husbandry. Let the Tempter ever find us buſie, and he will depart diſcouraged, as Cupid is ſaid to do from the Muſes, whom he could never take idle. Standing water ſoon ſtinketh, empty ſtomacks draw the humour that is next it: ſo doth the idle heart, evil motions. An induſtrious Nehemiah is not at leaſure to parle with Sanballat: leſt if he let any water go beſide the Mill, he ſhould be a great loſer by it. His employment is as a guard, or good Angel, to keep him both right, and ſafe. Ruth. 2. 3.

Verſe 4. Yet they ſent unto me four times] As thinking to prevail, by their importunity. This, wicked men have learned of their Maſter Beelzebub, the lord of Flies (as the Name ſignifieth) or Maſter-flie that will not off the bait till beaten, and hardly then. Sin hath oaded an impudency in ſome mens faces: and it appears they are paſt all grace, becauſe ſhameleſſe. Et pudet non eſſe impudentes, ſaith Auſtin. ἈπουΘ.

And I anſwered them after the ſame manner] Nehemiah ſtood immoveable as a rock: He was homo quadratus, not to be altered, but firm to his principles, reſolute in his holy purpoſes. We may ſtile him (as Theodoret doth Athanaſius) the Bulwark of Truth, the Churches-champion. Nec temerè, nec timidè may ſeem to have been his motto, neither temerarious, nor timorous. πρόβολον τῆς ἀληθείας.

Verſe 5. Then ſent Sanballat —— the fifth time] So reſtleſſe are wicked perſons: their ſouls are violently toſſed about, as in a ſling, 1 Sam. 25. 29. Etſi non aliquà docuiſſent, &c. Satan, their task-maſter, urgeth them; and when thou ſeeſt them moſt importunate, and outragious, Scito quia ab accenſore ſuo dæmone perurgentur, ſaith Bernard, Know thou that the Devil pricks them, and kicks them on to it.

With an open Letter in his hand] Not ſealed as the manner is, for ſecrecy ſake. The Jews uſe to write upon the back of their Letters, Nun, Cheth, Shin: that is, Niddui Cherem and Shammatha, all ſorts of excommunication, to him that ſhall open them. But this Letter was purpoſely ſent open, that whoſo would might read it ere it came to Nehemiah's hand, and be warned of having hand in the pretended treaſon.

Verſe 6. It is reported among the Heathen] And muſt therefore needs be true, like as the common ſort of Turks think that whatſoever is written in their tongue, muſt of neceſſity be beleeved for truth. But who knowes not, that Rumour is a loud lyar, and that every publike perſon needeth carry a ſpare hankerchief to wipe off dirt caſt upon him by diſaffected perſons, that ſeek to fly-blow their reputation, and to deprave their beſt actions. Grand Sign. Serag. 271.

And Geſhmu ſaith ſo] Geſhmu alias Geſhem the Arabian, ver. 1. 2. a worthy wight, a credible witneſſe. Nehemiah might well have replyed as Seneca did in like caſe. Mala de me loquuntur, ſed mali. Geſhmu's tongue was no ſlander: for he was known to be mendaciorum artifex, one that had taught his tongue the art of lying, Jer. 9. 3, 5. and had taken faſt hold of deceit, Jer. 8. 5. Such of late time were thoſe loud and lewd liars, Genebrard, Scioppius, Baldwin, and Bolſecus, who being requeſted by the Popiſh ſide to write the lives of Calvin and Beza, is in all their writings alledged as Canonical, though they know him to be (according to the old Proverb) a Friar, a Lyar.

That thou and the Jews think to rebel] A likely matter: but that matters not. Any Authour ſerves Sanballats turn, who for a need could have ſuckt ſuch an accuſation as this, out of his own fingers, See Ezra 4. 13.

For which cauſe thou buildeſt the Wall] This was calumniari audaciter, as Machiavel taught, aliquid ſaltem adhærebit. But if dirt will ſtick to a mudwal, yet to marble it will not. Nehemiah hath the Euge of a clear conſcience, and no Wiſe-man will beleeve this black-mouthed Blatero. N. D. Authour of the three converſions, hath made Sr. John Oldcaſtle the Martyr, a Ruffian, a Robber, and a Rebel. His authority is taken from the Stage-players, of like conſcience for lyes, as all men know. Speed. 804.

That thou maiſt be their King] King of the Jewes, As they called our Saviour, John 19. 12. And as ſome think the ground of this report (if any there were) concerning Nehemiah's practiſing to be King, were the propheſies of Haggai and Zachary concerning the near approach of Chriſts Kingdome.

Terent. Nihil eſt, quin male narrando, poſſit depravarier.

According to theſe words] According to this report: or ſomewhat to the ſame ſenſe.

Verſe 7. And thou haſt alſo appointed Prophets, &c.] That the thing might ſeem to be of God: as the Beaſt hath his Falſe-prophet, that wrought miracles before him, Rev. 19.20. As Mahomet had his prophets, and John of Leyden had his to cry him up King of Munſter, the new Jeruſalem (as they called it) yea of all Nations, to rule them with a rod of iron.

Romanos gemi-nos unum non caperet Regnũ, quos unum uteri ceperat hoſpitiũ, Cyprian.

And now ſhall it be reported to the King] Who muſt needs be highly diſpleaſed, and will as little endure it, as the Heaven two Suns. Sol quaſi ſolus: ſic Monarcha. Marriage and Monarchie will not away with cornivals.

Come now therefore, and let us take counſel] In commune conſulere, leſt we all ſuffer for your fault. But neither was good Nehemiah in any fault: neither was their drift any other but this, to draw him out of the City, that they might miſchieve him: like as Dr. Briſtow adviſeth his Catholikes to get the Proteſtants out of their ſtrong-hold of the Scriptures into the open Field of Fathers and Councels: and then they might do what they would with us.

Verſe 8. There are no ſuch things done as thou ſayeſt] Nehemiah is not over-carefull to clear himſelf. This was ſo tranſparent a lye, that a man might ſee thorough it, and was therefore beſt anſwered with a neglective denyal. It falles out often, that playn-dealing puts craft out of countenance. Animus recti conſcius objectu probra ut viſus nocturnos & vanas ſomniorum imagines digno ſupplicio punit, feſtivo ſcilicet contemptu, & oblivione: vel ſi tanti eſt, miſericordiâ elevat.

Joh. Wower.

Verſe 9. For they all made us afraid] This they aymed at: but could not attain unto; for faith quelleth and killeth diſtruſtful fear, *Pſal.*46.1,2. Audacia eſt pro muro, ſaith Salluſt. Let the wicked flie when none purſueth, but the righteous will be bold as a Lion.

Prov.28 1.

Saying, their hand ſhall be weakened from the work] So meaſuring them by themſelves, as if they would have been ſoon ſcared and diſcouraged. But they knew not the Æs triplex, the power of the Spirit, that Spirit of power (oppoſed to the ſpirit of fear,) of love, and of a ſound mind, 2 Tim.1.7. They knew not the privy armour of proof, that theſe good Jews had about their hearts.

Now therefore, O God, ſtrengthen mine hands] He acknowledgeth himſelfe to be in the condition of a poor Garriſon-ſouldier, that hath no help or ſupplies but from the Captain of his ſalvation: which therefore he thus humbly calleth in, and craveth. Of ejaculations, See Chap.2.ver.4. This here is diſpatcht in four words.

Verſe 10. Afterwards I came unto the houſe of Shemaiah] Perhaps the ſame that is mentioned, Ezra 8.16. but now fallen, as a Star from Heaven. Blazing Stars were never but Meteors. Demas not only forſook Paul, but became a Prieſt in an idols Temple at Theſſalonica, if Dorotheus may be beleeved. A Prieſt Shemajah was, and would ſeem to be a Prophet: but he proved not right. All is not gold that gliſters. It was Tobiah's gold that made him a Prophet, as Philips gold made the oracle of Apollo give what anſwer he pleaſed. A houſe he had in the Temple: & there he had recluſed and ſhut up himſelf, that he might ſeem ſome ſingular Devoto, expecting a revelation from Heavẽ: or as one who ſequeſtred himſelf from company of others, with a ſtand further off, come not near, for I am holier then thou. Or, laſtly, to perſwade people that there was a neceſſity of ſecuring themſelves from the night-inrodes of the Enemy. Whatever it was that he was thus (Anchoret-like) pent up, or locked up, or deteyned (as Junius rendreth it, ſee the like ſaid of Doeg, that bloody Edomite, 1 *Sam.*21.7.) Nehemiah went to his houſe to know what was the matter: ſuppoſing him to be a friend, but finding him ſuborned by the Enemy.

1 Chron.24. 18.

Let us meet together in the Houſe of God] Famous for ſanctity and ſafety: being within Gods precincts, we ſhall ſurely be under his protection.

And let us ſhut the doors of the Temple] Immure our ſelves, and keep out the Enemy. But, this had been the ready way to invite them, ſeeing his cowardiſe: for maximum his periculum qui maximè timent (ſaith Salluſt.) nothing betrayes a man ſooner then his cauſeleſſe fear. God helpeth the valiant. Beſides, Shemaiah and his falſe complices, having got Nehemiah to them from his friends and followers, might have done what they pleaſed with him; as the Romanes did by Cæſar, in the Senat-houſe.

For

For they will come to slay thee] And Nehemiah must be made beleeve, that Shemaiah, as a special friend, wished no long life, and was zealous for it: whence he so doubleth his prediction of the danger. O deep dissimulation!

Verse 11. And I said, should such a man as I flie?] To the dishonour of God, and the discouraging of the people? to the scandal of the weak, and the scorn of the wicked? Et Turnum fugientem hæc terra videbit? There is a Τὸ πρέπον, a comelinesse, a seemlinesse, a suitableneſse appertains to every calling and condition of life: and Nature hath taught Heathens themselves to argue from dignity to duty, and to scorn to do any thing unworthy of themselves. Scipio, when an harlot was offered him, answered, Vellem, si non essem Imperator, I would, were I not a General. Antigonus being invited to a Feast where a notable harlot was to be present, asked counsel of Menedemus, what he should do? No more but this, said he, Remember that thou art a Kings son. Themistocles once, after a Victory, viewing the spoiles and pillage of the field, said to his friend that bare him company, Take thou these rich spoiles to thy self: for thou art not Themistocles: it is below me to stoop to them. When Pompey had Cæsar and Anthony in a Ship together, it was suggested to him by Metrodorus, to revenge himself for the death of his Father and Brother. To whom he replyed, that so to do, might haply befit Metrodorus, but in no wise Pompey. It is not for you to be fishing for Gudgeons, but for Towns, Forts, and Castles, said Cleopatra to M. Antony. It is not for Gods Saints to walk as men: sith they are children of the Kingdome, and must therefore regnum in pectore gerere, carry themselves accordingly. We usually say, such a man understands himself well: that is, he knowes his place, his dignity, and walks accordingly. It is a pusillanimity to do otherwise; Nehemiah will never do it, to dye for it.

Ἀνελοῦ σεαυτῷ· σὺ γὰρ οὐκ εἶ Θεμιστοκλῆς.

And now is there, that being as I am] So greatly beloved of God, Dan. 9.23. so highly favoured of the King, chap. 2.2,4. so protected hitherto, so prospered, so entrusted with the government and safety of this people, more dear to me then my very life.

Would go into the Temple] As a Malefactour to take Sanctuary there, or as a Coward to save mine own life with the losse of the lives of many of the precious sonnes of life, Zion.

I will not go in] The Heavens shall sooner fall then I will forsake the Truth, said that Martyr. Omnia de me præsumas præter fugam & pulinodiam, said Luther to Staupicius. He rather dye, then flye: burn then turn. Latimer was wondrous bold and stout in his dealing with Henry the eighth, both before and after he was a Bishop. So were Athanasius, Ambrose, Basil; the primitive Confessours. This courage in Christians the Heathen persecutours called Obstinacy, and not faith. Sed pro hac obstinatione fidei morimur, saith Tertullian in his Apology, For this obstinacy of faith we gladly dye: neither can we dye otherwise; for the love of Christ constraineth us. Life in Gods displeasure is worse then death: as death, in his true favour, is true life: as Bradford told Gardiner.

Will. Flower. Act. & Mon. 1430.

In Epist.

Verse 12. And so I perceived that God had not sent him] By my spiritual sagacity I smelt him out: as having mine inward senses habitually exercised to discern good and evil, Heb. 5. ult. Doth not the eare try words, as the mouth tasteth meat, Job 12.11? What though we have not received the Spirit of the World, (we cannot cog and comply as they can, yet) we have received a better thing, the Spirit of God, the mind of Christ, 1 Cor. 2. 12,16.

But that he pronounced this prophecy against me] To make my righteous soul sad with his lyes, Ezek. 13.22. and to bring me to disgrace, and danger. Luther was wont to advise Preachers, to see that these three Dogs did not follow them into the pulpit: Pride, Covetousnesse, and Envy.

For Tobiah and Sanballat had hired him] A niere mercenary he was then, and had Linguam Vanalem: he could call good evil, and evil good, justify the wicked for a reward, and take away the righteousnesse of the righteous from him, Isa. 5.20. Such false prophets were Dr Shaw, and Frier Pinket in Rich. the thirds time, who made use of them as his Factours to obtrude bastardy on his brother King Edward the fourth, and so to disable his children for the Crown, that he might settle it upon his own head. What became of Pinket I know not, but Shaw (as ashamed of his Sermon at Pauls crosse) disconsolately departed, and never after that was publikely seen. Like unto these, were Bishop Bourn, and Cardinal Pool in Q. Maries dayes. The Cardinal, hired with the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, took for his Text, Esay 66.8. and applyed it to England, as then happily reduced to the Popes obedience. Bourn, for the Bishoprick of Bath, preached such stuffe at Pauls-cross, that that the people were ready to tear him in pieces, They flang a Dagger at him in the Pulpit.

Dan. Hist.

Melch. Adam. Plugius, and Sidonius, Authours of the Popiſh Book publiſhed in Germany by the name of Interim, Chriſma & oleum pontificium defendebant, ut ipſi diſcederent unctiores, defended Chriſme, and extreme unction, as being liquoured in the fiſts, and promoted to fat Biſhoprickes. But a Miniſter, as he ſhould have nothing to loſe, ſo he ſhould have as little to get: he ſhould be above all price or ſale. Nec prece, nec pretio ſhould be his Motto.

Verſe 13. Therefore was he hired, that I ſhould be afraid] But they were much miſtaken in their aimes: this matter was not malleable. Nehemiah was a man of another ſpirit, of a Caleb-like ſpirit: he was fide armatus, Deo armatus, and therefore undaunted: he was full of Spiritual mettle, for he knew whom he had truſted.

And do ſo, and ſin] Nehemiah feared nothing but ſin, and the fruit thereof, ſhame and reproach, ſo great was his ſpirit, ſo right ſet were both his judgment and affections. But if any thing would have drawn him aſide from the ſtraight wayes of the Lord, baſe fear was the likelieſt: as we ſee in David at Gath, and Peter in the High-prieſts hall. See Zeph. 3.13. with the Note. Peſſimus in dubiis Augur Timor.

And that they might have matter for an evil report] This, wicked men watch for, as a Dog doth for a bone: and if they get but the leaſt hint, oh how happy do they hold themſelves! what wide mouthes do they open, &c! It is our part therefore (by a Nehemiah-like converſation) to put to ſilence the ignorance of fooliſh men, who, like Black-moores, deſpiſe beauty; like Dogs, bark at the ſhining of the Moon. Of Luther it was ſaid by Eraſmus, Nec hoſtes reperiant quod calumnientur. Of B. Hooper it is ſaid, that his life was ſo good, that no kind of ſlander (although diverſe went about to reprove it) could faſten

Act. & Mon. 1366. any fault upon him. The like is reported of Bradford, and Bucer. We ſhould ſo carry our ſelves, ut nemo de nobis malè loqui abſque mendacio poſſit, as Hierom hath it: that none might ſpeak evil of us, without a manifeſt lye.

Verſe 14. My God, think upon Tobiah and Sanballat] Heb. Remember, to be revenged on them. q.d. I cannot deal with them, but do thou do it. He doth himſelf no diſſervice (ſaith one) who when no Law will relieve him, maketh God his Chancellour. It is a fearful thing to be put over into his puniſhing hands by the Saints, as Joab and Shimei were unto Solomons hands by dying David. If men, in their beſt eſtate, are ſo weak that they are cruſhed before the moth, how ſhall they ſtand before this great God?

According to theſe their works] Qualia quiſque facit, talia quiſque luat: Let them drink as they have brewed.

And on the Propheteſſe Noadiah] Who joyned with Shemaiah in this diſſimulation, and was of his counſel. Omne malum ex gynæcio. Falſe Prophets and Seducers are ſeldome without their Women. Simon Magus had his Helena, Carpocrates his Marcellina, Apelles his Philumena, Montanus his Priſcilla, and Maximilla, &c.

And the reſt of the Prophets] Improperly ſo called, but ſo they pretended to be; and here they had conſpired, a great ſort of them, to do evil.

That would have put me in fear] By their concurrent propheſies, purpoſely to diſgrace and endanger me: Suffragia non ſunt numeranda, ſed expendenda. Multitude and antiquity are but ciphers in Divinity.

Verſe 15. So the Wall was finiſhed] Though with much ado, and maugre the malice of all forrein and inteſtine Enemies. So ſhall the work of grace in mens hearts: it is perfected there by oppoſition; and growes gradually, but conſtantly and infallibly.

In the twenty and fifth day of the moneth Elul] Which was their ſixth moneth, anſwering, Beda. moſt what, to our Auguſt. This (ſaith One) anſwered both unto the ſix dayes of Gods working to make the World, after which a reſt followed, and to the everlaſting reſt in Heaven after ſix ages of the World, ſpent in toil and labour!

In fifty and two dayes] A very ſhort time for the diſpatch of ſo great a work. But neſcit tarda molimina Spiritus Sancti gratia. God was much ſeen herein: and the Enemies courage much quailed.

Verſe 16. But what meant Joſephus to ſay, that the wall was in building two yeares and three moneths? It appeareth hereby, and by many other paſſages in his Jewiſh antiquities, that he had not much read, or at leaſt minded the holy Scriptures. Of this ſhort time ſpent in building the Wall, Daniel ſeemeth to prophecie, ſaith an Interpreter, when

Dan. 9, 25. he ſaith, that it ſhould be built again in anguſtiis temporum in the ſtraits of time: neither held held we ſo much ſtrange at it, ſith the hands at it were many, and thoſe were motitantes, nimble and chearful; and the Princes were preſent to prick them on, and they repaired onely and built upon the old foundation: And laſtly the very Enemies were convinced, that the work was wrought of God, ver. 16. what marvel therefore that it went ſo on end?

Verſe 16. When all our Enemies heard thereof] So famous a matter could not be concealed from them who liſtened with the left eare, and readily received theſe βλαβαι πολυωτεις, as the Greeks call, galling reports.

Saw theſe things] For they ran to the light of it, as to a miracle; they looked alſo upon it with an evil and envious eye: like as the Papiſts do upon the Reformation.

They were much caſt down in their own eyes] They were creſt-faln, and dejected from the high-tops of their proud hopes, and deſignes. See what biles and ulcers the Antichriſtian rout are vexed with, and how they are ſcorched with the Sun-ſhine of the Goſpel, Rev. 16.2, 11. What mone Babels Merchants make to ſee her ruine and the riſe of the new Jeruſalem, chap. 18. ver. 11. Envy is vitium Diabolicum, the Devils diſeaſe, ſaith Auſtin: and thoſe that are troubled with it, can never want wo. In Pſal. 139.

For they perceived that this work was wrought of God] with ſuch incredible ſwiftneſſe was it carried on and accompliſhed, that they could not but ſay among the Heathen, The Lord hath done great things for them; God is with them of a truth.

Verſe 17. Moreover in thoſe dayes the Nobles of Judah] Heb. The White ones: either, becauſe they went in white garments, as Joſeph, Mordecai, &c. or becauſe they were illuſtrious and famous for wiſedome and vertue. But in theſe Nobles of Judah was nomen inane, crimen immane. Here was ſedes prima, vita ima, dignitas in indigno, hoc eſt, ornamentum in luto, white garments they might have, but withal, ſooty ſouls, and black manners.

Sent many Letters unto Tobiah] Heb. Multiplyed their Letters (or Packets) walking to Tobiah, with who mthereby they held correſpondency, as at this day they do with the Turkiſh Viſiers and Baſha's of ſtate, giving them continual intelligence of the affairs of Chriſtendom, and adviſing moſt of that miſchief which the Turk puts in execution againſt us.

Verſe 18. For there were many in Judah ſworn unto him] Beſides that intercourſe of Letters afore-mentioned, Tobiah had his penſioners among the Jews, who were his ſworn ſervants, and had taken oath, or (as the Hebrew hath it) they were Lords of an oath to him. In the year 1583. Girald Earle of Deſmond's men had barbarouſly vowed to forſwear God, before they would forſake him. I know not what theſe Jews had ſworn to Tobiah (to be true to him likely, and to proſecute his deſignes:) but thoſe of them at this day living are great Swearers (they were ſo in St. James his time, chap. 9.12.) but they keep no oath, unleſſe they ſwear upon their own Torah, or Book of the Law, brought out of their Synagogues. Camb. Eliſab. Fol. 258. Weemſe.

Becauſe he was the ſon-in-law of Shechaniah] One of thoſe corrupt Nobles, ver. 17. and Meſhullam was another, who alſo helped to build the Wall, chap. 3.4. and ſeemed forward, but now ſhewes himſelf in his colours. Thou mayeſt be the Fore-horſe in the teem (ſaith One) a Ring-leader of good exerciſes as Joaſh, 2 Chron. 24.4,5,6. Thou mayeſt flock after zealous Preachers, as thoſe did after John Baptiſt, Matth. 3. Yea ſtand out in perſecution, and not ſhrink in the wetting, as the thorny ground did not, and yet be no better than a very painted hypocrite.

Verſe 19. Alſo they reported his good deeds before me] Heb. His goodneſſes, as if he had been another Phocion, who was ſurnamed the good. But this was but in their opinion onely, who had little enough goodneſſe, and skill to judge of it. Or if there were any good in him, yet Sunt bona miſta malis, and of him might be ſaid, as once of Sforza Duke of Millain, that he was a very Monſter, made up and compact of Vertue, and Vice. Foliet. Galeazo.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. When the Wall was built.]

FOR better defence of the City. Mœnia, à munienda urbe dicuntur.

And I had ſet up the doors] We may not take this expreſſion for a vain-glorious hæc ego feci, ſuch as was that of Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 30. boaſting as if he (and not Ninus) had built Babel, when he enlarged it onely, and built the Palace: Or that of Auguſtus, Urbem ego lateritiam inveni, marmoream reliqui. We read of one Lampadius a Noble man in Rome, who per omnia Civitatis membra, through all parts of the City, where other great men had beſtowed coſt in building, he would ſet up his own Name (not as a Repairer of the work neither, but) as the chief builder. Trajan the Emperour alſo is ſaid to have been ſick of this diſeaſe: and was therefore called by way of jeare Wall-weed. But good Nehemiah was none ſuch: he was humiliter ſublimis, & ſublimiter humilis, as Cyprian phraſeth it; that is, humbly lofty, and loftily humble; humble in heart, and yet high in worth and works, as Nazianzen ſaith of Athanaſius.

Am. Marcellini.

Herba parietina.

ὑψηλὸς τοῖς ἔργοις, ταπεινὸς δὲ τῷ φρονήματι.

And the Levites were appointed] Viz. to their ſeveral ſervices in the Temple, (as David had diſtributed them:) after that they had been otherwiſe imployed about the building.

Verſe 2. That I gave my brother Hanani] Of whom ſee chap. 1. 2. Ezra 10. ver. 20.

And Hananiah the Ruler of the palace] The ſecond perſon next to the Governour; commanding in his Name within his Court.

Charge over Jeruſalem] Thus he that is faithful in a little, ſhall be made Maſter of much, Matth. 25. 21.

For he was a faithful man] Heb. A man of Truth, Faithfulneſſe, or Firmeneſſe, a ſure man, and ſuch as one might ſafely conſide in.

And feared God] No wonder therefore though faithful to men. See chap. 5. 15. Gods holy fear is the ground of all goodneſſe and fidelity. Hence Jethro, in his well-qualified Ruler, places the fear of God in the middeſt of the other graces, as the heart in the body, for conveying life to all the parts, or as a dram of Musk, perfuming the whole box of ointment, Exod. 18. 21. Moſt ſure it is, that nothing maketh a man ſo good a Patriot, as the true fear of God. On the other ſide, Pietate ſublatâ fides tollitur, take away Piety, and Fidelity is gone: as is to be ſeen in the unrighteous Judge, Luk. 18. ver. 2. and as Conſtantius Chlorus, father of Conſtantine the Great, did well experience in his Counſellours and Courtiers, whence that famous Maxime of his recorded by Euſebius, He cannot be faithful to me, that is unfaithful to God, Religion being the foundation of all true fidelity and loyalty to King and Countrey. Hence that cloſe connexion, Fear God, Honour the King. And hence that ſaying of Berquard, If all the World ſhould conſpire to make me complot againſt my Prince; yet I would fear God, and honour the King.

1 P. 2. 1.

Above many] This is a ſingular praiſe, and by every man to be ſought after: ('twas Cicero's poſy and practiſe, to be the beſt at every good thing, to excel and exceed others) to be eminent and exemplary, taller then the reſt by the head and ſhoulders, full of all goodneſſe, filled with all knowledge, Rom. 15. 14. able and active in every good word and work. That's a low and unworthy ſtrain in ſome, to labour after no more grace then will keep life & ſoul together, that is, ſoul and hell aſunder. God would have his people to be diſcontentedly contented with the meaſures they have received, and to be ſtill adding, 2 Pet. 1. 5. and advancing, Philip. 3. 14. aſpiring to perfection, till they come unto the meaſure of the ſtature of the fulnes of Chriſt. Eph. 4. 13.

Ἀεὶ ἀριστεύειν καὶ ὑπείροχον ἔμμεναι ἄλλων.

חמה Job 30. 28.

Verſe 3. Till the Sun be hot] The Sun hath one of his names, in Hebrew, a calefaciendo, from heating, there is nothing hid from the heat thereof, Pſal. 19. 6. The name here given to the Sun ſignifieth a miniſter, or ſervant: becauſe it is the common ſervant of the World, World, whereby God miniſtreth light, heat, and precious fruits to all people, *Deut.*4.19. and 33.14. It whirleth about the World with incredible ſwiftneſſe; and is up in a morning before moſt people. Therefore till the Sun be riſen the Gates muſt be kept ſhut, to keep out the Enemy, who watcheth his opportunity.

And while they ſtand by] to ſee it done as it ought to be; leſt by the treachery or careleſneſſe of Under-officers, it ſhould either be undone, or ill-done. Let them feel with their hands, (ſo ſome render it) whether the Gates are made faſt or not. Etiam Tractate, Junius.

And appoint watches] Heb. Set thou watches. He ſpeaketh to the two Hanani's, and bids each of them, whoſe turn it was, ſee to the well-doing of it. Xenophon ſaith of Cyrus, that when he gave any thing in command, he never ſaid, Let ſome one do this, but do thou this. Hoc tu facias; Cyropæd.

Verſe 4. Now the City was large] Heb. Broad in ſpannes, or ſpaces. And great] Yet nothing ſo great as Niniveh was of old; or Babylon then; or Alcair, and Quinſay at this day. Of the former, Bunting ſaith, that it is threeſcore miles in compaſſe. Of the later Paulus Venetus (who himſelf dwelt therein about the year 1260) writeth, that it is an hundred miles about, being of all the Cities in the World the greateſt. Jeruſalem was a great City and ſpacious, though it fell far ſhort of theſe.

And the people were few therein] But how exceedingly they multiplyed afterwards appeareth by thoſe many thouſands of perſons there deſtroyed and carried away by the Romanes at the laſt deſolation: as teſtifieth Joſephus an eye-witneſſe, quem lege, & luge. For preſent, they were ſo few, that they were not able, without help, to defend the walles in ſo large a circuit.

And the houſes were not builded] All could not be done in a day. But ſome ſeiled houſes there were, *Hag.*1.*ver.*4. and Nehemiah was all his time buſie in building the old waſt places, and raiſing up the foundations of many generations: ſo that he was worthily called, The Repairer of the breach, the Reſtorer of paths to dwell in, Eſay 58.12. Euſebius ſaith Nehemiah was twelve years in building the Walls: he ſhould have ſaid, the City: Hierome likewiſe ſaith, that he came to Jeruſalem, in the twentieth year of Artaxerxes: and made an end of building the Wall and City in the two and thirtieth year: ſo that, during the whole twelve years of his Government, he was in action.

Verſe 5. And my God put into my heart] Seeing how thinly the City was inhabited, and caſting in his mind, what evil might come of it, he bethinks himſelf (by a motion from Heaven) how to ſet things to rights: that the City might be better peopled, and (ſo) preſerved. This to do, God put into his heart by his holy Spirit (the ſweet motions whereof, are the ſound of his goings, the footſteps of his anointed, *Pſal.*89.51.) We are not ſufficient of our ſelves (ſaith that great Apoſtle) to think any thing as of our ſelves: but our ſufficiency is of God, 2 *Cor.*3.5. Nemo Vir magnus ſine aliquo afflatu Divino unquam fuit, ſaith Cicero: No man ever grew to be greatly good, without a Divine inſtinct.

To gather together the Nobles and the Rulers, &c.] That out of them a tenth man might be taken to furniſh out the City, *chap.*11.1. after that they had been firſt prepared by the hearing of the Law, *chap.*8.2.

That they might be reckoned by their genealogies] And ſo, Jeruſalem be inhabited again, in her own place, even in Jeruſalem. Zach.12,6.

Verſe 6. Theſe are the children, &c.] See Ezra 2. *ver.*1,2,3, &c. with the Notes. Some ſmall differences there are in Names and Numbers between this Catalogue, and that: not by the negligence of the Scribes who wrote out this Regiſter, as Pellican would have it; but by other meanes, as is above-noted.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. As one man.]

See Ezra 3.1. and remember that Omne ſimile non eſt idem: this is a diſtinct Hiſtory from that.

Into the ſtreet] Or, open place, the meeting-place of the water-gate, See *chap.*3. *ver.*26. Right over againſt this Gate, was the Court of the people, ſaith Lyra, See Ezra 10. *ver.*9.

Col.4.17. 1 Cor.3.22. And they ſpake unto Ezra the Scribe] The people may, if need be, ſay to Archippus, Look to thy miniſtery, &c. Whether Paul, or Apollo, or Cephas, All is theirs; (the gifts and abilities of all good Miniſters) and they may call for them.

διδακτικὸς. To bring the Book of the Law of Moſes] Wherein he was noe leſſe able, then apt to impart, 1 *Tim.*3.2. He knew that the beſt had need hear the Law, ne ſpiritum ſeſſorem excutiant, that they might be kept within the bounds of obedience. Not the unruly colt onely, but the Horſe that is broken, hath a bit and bridle alſo.

Verſe 2. And Ezra the Prieſt brought the Law] The Commandement (he knew well) was a Lamp, and the Law a light, and reproofs of inſtruction the way of life, Prov.6.23. The Greeks call the Law νόμον quaſi Θεῖ νόον μίμημα, the ſtanding mind of God. And if Demoſthenes could ſay of mens Lawes, that they were the invention of God; If Xenophon could ſay of the Perſian Lawes, that they kept the people, even from coveting any wickedneſſe: If Cicero durſt ſay of the Roman Lawes, that they far excelled and exceeded all the learned Libraries of the Philoſophers, both in weight and worth: How much more may all this, and more be ſaid of this perfect Law of God, the book whereof was here brought forth by Ezra, and read and expounded in the eares of all the people?

Plato in Cratylo.

μὴ τοίνυν ἄλλους ἄλλους τοὺς πολίτας, ὥστε πονηροὺς εἶναι.

Before the Congregation, both of Men and Women] Heb. from Man to Woman, for ſouls have no ſexes: and in Chriſt there is no difference, *Gal.*4.28. The Jewes at this day little regard their Women, not ſuffering them to come within their Synagogue. And the Turkiſh Women never go to their Moſchees, neither is there any heed taken or reckoning made of their Religion at all.

The Papiſts. ſay, a that Diſtaffe is fitter for a woman then a Bible.

And all that could hear with underſtanding] i.e. Children alſo, that were of any grouth. Little Pitchers have ears, and little children will underſtand much, if well principled.

Upon the firſt day of the ſeventh moneth] A moneth of more ſolemnities then any other: this firſt day was a double holy-day, *Levit.*23.24. See *Deut.*31.11.

Verſe 3. And he read therein] As a Scribe, he wrote the Law: and as a Prieſt, he read and expounded it. This was Chriſts own cuſtome, *Luk.*4.16. and the Jews Acts 13,15, 27. and 15:21. and is ſtill to this day: One leſſon is ever read, out of the Law in their publike meetings: and another out of the Prophets correſpondent to the former in argument. The Holy Scripture is called Mikre the Reading, *ver.*9. of this chapter, becauſe it ought to be read to all: and the Word, as if all the uſe of our ears were to hear this Word.

From the morning until mid-day] This was a great while, five or ſix houres together they ſpent in holy duties, whereas the moſt amongſt us think long of an hour: they ſit as it were in the Stocks whiles they are hearing the Word read or preached, and come out of the Church, when the tedious Sermon runneth fomwhat beyond the glaſſe, like priſoners out of a gaol.

And the eares of all the people were attentive to the Book] Heb. Were to the Book of the Law: which phraſe importeth both their attention and affection to what they heard delivered. They drew up the ears of their ſouls to the ears of their bodies, and ſo one ſound pierced both. See the like *Luk.*19.48. they hung upon Chriſts Holy lips, as loth to loſe any part of that precious language. The Jews at this day, though they give very great outward reſpect to their Torah or Book of the Law (carrying it about their Synagogue at the end of Service in proceſſion, and the like) yet for any ſhew of attention or elevation of ſpirit, I could never diſcern (ſaith one that had been much amongſt them) but they are as reverent in their Synagogues, as Grammar-boyes are at School, when their Maſter is abſent.

Verſe 4. And Ezra the Scribe ſtood upon a Pulpit of wood] Heb. A Tower of wood, becauſe cauſe high and round, as ours are. The Cappuchines and other Popiſh preachers are ſaid to have long Pulpits, wherein they may walk and act, as upon ſtage, in Lent eſpecially: at which time it is the cuſtome of Italy for the ſame man to preach ſix dayes in the week upon the Goſpel of the dayes, and on the Saturday in honour and praiſe of the Virgin Mary.

And beſide him ſtood Mattithiah, &c.] For greater authority ſake, as concurring with Ezra, and ready in their turn to perform the work. Prædicationis officium ſuſcipit quiſquis ad ſacerdotium accedit, ſaid Gregory long ſince. No preacher, is no Miniſter.

Verſe 5. And Ezra opened the Book] Gods Book: not Ariſtotles Ethiks, as Melanchon ſaith, he heard ſome Popiſh Prieſts preaching upon Texts thence taken. And Carloſtadius was eight years Doctour, when he firſt opened the Bible: and yet at the taking of his degree, he had been pronounced Sufficientiſſimus.

For he was above all the people] Both in place, and office: as repreſenting the perſon of God, and bearing his Name unto his People.

All the people ſtood up] For reverence ſake. So did Eglon that fat King of Moab, when he heard of a meſſage from God, *Judg.*3.20. Balaam being to utter his parable, biddes Balak ariſe up and hear him. Our Saviour ſtood up to read his Text, *Luk.*4.16. Conſtantine the Great, and our King Edward the ſixth would not hear a Sermon but ſtanding. The modern Jewes ſhew their reverence to their Law by a like geſture; and their adoration is by bowing forward of their bodies: for, kneeling they uſe none, neither ſtir they their bonnets in their Synagogues, but remain ſtill covered.

Verſe 6. And Ezra bleſſed the Lord] i. e. He called upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praiſed, *Pſal.*18.3. He prayed before he read, and preached. So ought we to do by his example, as Lyra well noteth; & as is commonly done by all our Miniſters. Luthers uſual prayer before Sermon was this, Confirm, O God, in us what thou haſt wrought: and perfect the work that thou haſt begun to thy glory. Lord open our eyes that we may ſee the wonders of thy Law, &c. Zuinglius began his publike Lectures thus, O Almighty Everlaſting and Merciful God, whoſe Word is a light to our feet, and a Lanthorn to our paths, open and illighten our minds, that we may piouſly and holily underſtand thine oracles, and be ſo transformed thereinto, that we may not in any thing diſpleaſe thy Majeſty, through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen. The Platoniſts could ſay, that the light of our minds whereby we learn all things, is no other but God himſelf, the ſame that made all things. This made Ezra here bleſſe the Lord, that is, ſay with David, Pſal.119.*ver.*12. Bleſſed be thou, O Lord, teach us thy Statutes.

The great God] The true Triſmegiſt, the Fortiſſimus Maximus, Opt. Max. All whoſe attributes are in the higheſt degree, yea in a degree beyond any ſuperlative.

And all the people anſwered, Amen, Amen] This word is Hebrew: but uſed in all Languages, in the cloſe of prayers. The doubling of it here importeth their aſſent, and their aſſurance. It is the voyce of one that beleeveth, and expecteth that he ſhall have his prayers granted. The Septuagint render it ſo be it, or ſo it is. The Apoſtle reckoneth it for a great loſſe, when people either ſay not Amen to publike prayers, or not heartily and affectionately, as here, 1 *Cor.*14.16. Elſe, When thou ſhalt bleſſe with the ſpirit, how ſhall he that occupieth the room of the unlearned ſay, Amen? The Turks alſo when their Prieſt hath ſaid his Letany (ſuch as it is) make anſwer in manner of a ſhout Homin, that is, Amen.

With lifting up their hands] And withall their hearts unto God in the Heavens, Lam. 3.41. This, Nazianzen judgeth to be optimum opus manuum, the beſt work of the hands, ſc. in Cœlos eas extendere, ad preceſque expandere, to ſtretch them towards Heaven, and to hold them out in prayer. This way David ennobled his tongue (therefore called his glory) and ſo men may their hands.

And they bowed their heads] In token of the lowlineſſe of their hearts. Theſe outward geſtures, as they iſſue from the fervency of a good heart, ſo they reflect upon the affections, and do further inflame them. Onely note, that theſe bodily exerciſes are not alwayes or abſolutely neceſſary in Divine worſhip. God looks chiefly at the heart, and hateth all outſide-ſervice, and heartleſſe devotion, *Iſa.*1. and 66.3. and ſuch as is that of the Jews at this day. Their holineſſe, ſaith One, is the outward work it ſelf, being a brainleſſe head, and ſoul-leſſe body. And the like may be ſaid of the Papiſt, and of the common Proteſtant, whoſe body is proſtrate, but his ſoul bolt-upright within him.

Verſe 7. Alſo Jeſhua and Bani, &c. cauſed the people to underſtand the Law] As the audience was great, ſo, great was the company of Preachers, Pſal.68.11. The people were too many to be taught by one: therefore they made ſundry Companies and Congregations, and had ſeveral Teachers: as had likewiſe thoſe primitive Chriſtians, *Act.*1.and 3. when once they grew numerous.

And the people ſtood in their places] Heb. And the people upon their ſtand; They kept their ſtations according to their diviſions: not ſhuffling, or ſhifting from Preacher to Preacher, but abiding and attending with utmoſt intention and retention.

Explanatè Junius.

Verſe 8. So they read in the Book in the Law of God diſtinctly] Expoſitè, clarè, vel cum expoſitione. They read aloud, and ſo treatably and plainely, that all might know what they read. Some ſtumble over the chapter ſo faſt, that few are the better.

And gave the ſenſe] Viz. by comparing place with place, and interpreting one Scripture by another. See the like done by St. Paul at Damaſcus, *Act.*9.22. he layd one Text to another, as Artificers do the ſeveral pieces of their work, that they may perfectly agree the one with the other.

συμβιβάζων.

Cauſing the people to underſtand the reading] Dabant intelligentiam per ſcripturam ipſam, ſo Tremellius rendreth it. Of the Law it may be ſaid, Et latet, & lucet. The Prophets are as ſo many expoſitours and explainers thereof: they do excellently unfold and draw out that arras which was folded together before: they give us Moſes unveiled. Search the Scriptures therefore, and compare them. Parallel texts, like glaſſes, ſet one againſt another, do caſt a mutual light: like the Sun, the Scriptures ſhew other things, and themſelves too.

Mr. Clarks Lives, Part. 2. pag. 31.

Verſe 9. And Nehemiah, which is the Tirſhata] Or Governour, See Ezra 2.63. He had Jovianus the Emperours wiſhed happineſſe, which was, that he might govern wiſe men, and that wiſe men might govern him.

And Ezra the Prieſt and Scribe] See *ver.*3.

And the Levites that taught the people] That numerus nominum, id eſt, hominum mentioned, ver.7. Men moſt happy in ſuch melting hearers. We now-adayes prevail as little, as Bede did, when he preached to an heap of ſtones.

This day is holy unto the Lord your God] Your mourning therefore, now is as much out of ſeaſon, as Sampſon's Wives weeping was at her wedding. All Gods worſhips were to be celebrated with joy, *Deut.*12.7. and ſacrifices offered in mourning, were abomination, *Hoſ.*9.4. See *Mal.*2.13. with the Note.

Mourn not, nor weep] Sc. Under ſenſe of ſin, and fear of wrath. This they were called to at another time, Eſay 22.12. *Jam.*4 9,10. but every thing is beautiful in its ſeaſon, *Eccleſ.*3.3.

For all the people wept when they heard the words of the Law] For like cauſe as Joſiah did, 2 *King.*22.11,19. His tender heart was troubled and terrified by the menaces of Gods mouth uttered againſt his and the peoples ſins. Hence ſome inferre, that it was the Decalogue (together with the malediction) that was now read and applied: and that made them weep ſo faſt. Get thee Gods Law, (ſaith holy Bradford) as a glaſſe to look in---ſo ſhall you ſee your face foul-arrayed, and ſo ſhameful, mangy, pockey, and ſcabbed, that you cannot but be ſorry at the contemplation thereof---eſpecially if you look to the tag tied to Gods Law: which is ſuch, as cannot but make us caſt our curriſh tayles betwixt our legges, if we beleeve it. But oh faithleſſe hard hearts! O Jezebels gueſts, rocked and laid aſleep in her bed, &c!

Serm. of Rep. pag. 20. 26, 27.

Verſe 10. Then he ſaid unto them, Go your way] A friendly diſmiſſion. We muſt ſo reproove or admoniſh others, as that we ever preſerve in them an opinion of our good will unto them: for this is that ſugar, that ſweeteneth all ſuch tarter pilles.

Go your way, eat, &c.] One being asked whether a good man might not feed upon ſweet and delicate meat; eat the fat, and drink the ſweet, even the choyeſt Wines and chieſeſt viands? anſwered, Yes: except God made bees onely for fools. God freely permitteth to his beſt children the uſe of his beſt creatures, even to an honeſt affluence (on Thankſgiving-dayes eſpecially) provided, that they feed with fear, and keep within the bounds of ſobriety.

And ſend portions to them for whom nothing is prepared] That is, to the poore, the fatherleſſe and the widdowes, *Deut.*16.14. Who have not their ſet meales: nor certain diſhes: but as hard fare for their holy-day chear, as Chriſts Diſciples had once for their Sabbath-dayes dinner, *Matth.*12.1.

For

For this day is holy unto the Lord] An holy convocation *Lev.*23.24. a day of blowing Trumpets, a feast-day, See *Zach.*8.19. with the Note. A more liberal use of the creature dilateth and exhilarateth the heart, and so disposeth it to thankfulnesse, *Jam.*5.13. *Psal.*92.2.3. Eat, that thy soul may blesse me, *Gen.*27.19. The idolatrous Israëlites sat down to eat, and drink, and then rose up to play. Gods people should much more rejoyce in the Lord, when refreshed by the creatures, speaking good of his Name, and serving him with cheerfulnesse in the abundance of all things, Deut.28.47.

Neither be ye sorry] No not for your sins now, least it prove a sinful sorrow, See *ver.*9.

For the joy of the Lord is your strength] Or, your fortification, and place of defence against sin, and al the ill fruits of it. Bernard. Lati igitur sitis, sed non securi: gaudeatis in Domino, sed caveatis a recidivo. A merry heart (grounded upon a good conscience) doth good like a medicine, *Prov.*17.22. It is as marrow to the bones, as oil to the wheels: as a bait by the way to a generous horse: as a back of steel to a bended bow, &c. Surely, as true gold strengtheneth the heart, (that Alchymy-gold doth not) so doth spiritual joy much more: making a man insuperable under sufferings, and unsatisfiable in performance of duties. It is such a precious commodity, as that no good can match it, no evil overmatch it. It beareth all things, beleeveth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things, as St. Paul saith of charity, 1 *Cor.*13. *ver.*7. And as a man that hath plenty of good blood and fresh spirits in his body, being well-lined within, (as we say) can better endure heat and cold, &c. then another that hath not so: in like sort he that hath his heart full of Heaven, his conscience full of comfort, is in case to do and suffer much for, and from God and men. The peace of his conscience will appear in his countenance, as Stevens did: and as the Martyrs in Severus the Emperour his dayes, who being released for a time seemed to come è myrotheca, non ergastulo, out of a perfumed palace, and not out of a stinking prison, looking more like Angels of Heaven, then men on Earth, as in Eusebius relateth. The crosse to such is anointed, as Bernard hath it: and by the joy of the Lord (that oil of gladnes) it is made not only light, but sweet: not onely tolerable, but desireable, and delectable. Divinum nescio quid in valitibus ipsis praferentes, Euseb. lib.5.cap.12.

Verse 11. So the Levites stilled all the people] Made them hold their tongues, and forbear their groanes, and moanes, the expressions of their great grief conceived for their sins; making a wayling like the Dragons, mourning as the owles, and saying, Look away from me, I will weep bitterly, labour not to comfort me, &c. But these holy Levites did comfort them, and quiet them. Mic.1.8. Isai 22.4.

Saying, Hold your peace] Or, S't: Peace and be still.

For the day is holy] And God loves not the bread of mourners for a sacrifice, is like as none might come into the Court of Persia in mourning-weeds, *Esth.*4. *ver.*4. See *ver.*9.

Neither be ye grieved] It seems, their hearts were even leavened and sowred with sorrow, as Davids was, *Psal.*73.21.

Verse 12. And all the people went their way to eat] To do all that they were directed to do. They had been in the Furnace of mortification; and now they were willing to be cast into the mould of Gods Word, and to be whatsoever the Lord would have them to be. They were only his clay and wax, a willing people, wayting for his Law.

And to make great mirth] i.e. All kind of honest jollity: for the better exciting their hearts to true thankfulnesse.

Because they had understood the words] Not the threatnings only to the refractary, but the promises also, to the penitent and obedient. The Levites had taught them, doubtlesse, (as the truth is in Jesus) that God therefore threateneth that he may not punish, and desireth to be disarmed, Amos 4.12. that he giveth to do, what he commandeth to be done; that his mercy is from everlasting to everlasting to them that fear him, to them that keep his Covenant, and that think upon his Commandements to do them, qui faciunt præcepta, etsi non perficiant, that are doing at it, though they are farre from perfection. This was very comfortable: this put into them that joy of the Lord which was their strength: this more cheared them, then all their good chear of their peace-offerings. Psal.103.18.

Verse 13. And on the second day] The next day after they had heard the Law expounded; but were not so well satisfied in some points or cases they follow on to know the Lord, Hos.6.3. Divine knowledge is as a great Lady, that will not easily be acquainted with us, but upon further suit, *Prov.*2.3,4.

Were

Were gathered together, the chief of the Fathers, &c.] Æneas Sylvius was wont to ſay of knowledge, Popular men ſhould eſteem it as ſilver, Noblemen as gold, Princes prize it as pearles.

The Prieſts and Levites] Theſe Teachers of others took no ſcorn to learn of Ezra that perfect Scribe. The wiſeſt here know but in part: becauſe we propheſie but in part, 1 Cor. 13. ver. 9. that is, we are taught but imperfectly, and thoſe that ſhould ſhew us the way, are themſelves to ſeek: to teach us to run to Ithiel the Arch-prophet, as that great Wiſe-man did, Prov. 30. 1. The greateſt part of thoſe things which we know, is the leaſt part of the things which we know not, as that Father ſaith.

Unto Ezra the Scribe] Who was well inſtructed to the Kingdome of God; and no leſſe ready to throw out of his treaſury, &c. Matth. 13. 52. It is ſaid of Tacitus, that he knew all that he ſhould know of the affaires of the World: and that he was primus in Hiſtoria, and that ex ejus ore nil temerè excidit. Think the ſame of Ezra, and much more: he was an able Teacher of the ableſt Teachers, a ſacred oracle, a living library, the arguteſt and accurateſt of men after the Prophets, as Auſtin is ſaid to have been after the Apoſtles, in contemplation, and diſputation. Scalig.

Even to underſtand the words of the Law] Which he had the day before expounded: and in ſome paſſages whereof they had a deſire to be better reſolved and ſatisfied. No man can poſſibly ſpeak al at once, or deliver the mind of God ſo clearly and fully, but that there may be place left for Caſes and Queries.

Verſe 14. And they found written in the Law] And therefore in no wiſe to be neglected, ſith there God had written for them great things, Hoſ. 8. 12 Excellent things, Prov. 22. 20. marvellous things, Pſal. 119. 18. There is a mountain of ſenſe hangeth upon every apex or title of it, ſay the Rabbines, who do therefore preſcribe to their diſciples not to write any Letter of it, but by a Copy; not to read it, but in a clean place; not to touch it, but with the right hand: not to carry it about him, but next his heart, &c. Schickard.

That the children of Iſrael ſhould dwell in Boothes] See Ezra 3. 4. with the Note. For this, the Law was clear, Lev. 23. 34. Deut. 16. 13. But this they had not ſo fully obſerved, ſo by dwelling in Boothes, till now that they were returned from Babylon, where they had been lately, and for a long time, Strangers. This to profeſſe and ſet forth, was the intent of that feaſt, and of this rite of it, of dwelling in Boothes or Bowers. This is intimated, ver. 1.

Verſe 15. And that they ſhould publiſh and proclaim] Heb. Make a voice to paſſe, viz. for better preparation, and greater ſolemnity. God will not take up with a careleſſe and ſlubberd ſervice: he is a great King and ſtands greatly upon his ſeniority, Mal. 1. 14.

Go forth unto the mount] Which is covered with all ſorts of trees: and nothing like the countrey Axylus, which is ſo called, becauſe no trees grow in it, no not ſo much as thorns, or any kind of fuell. Thorough this countrey marched Manlius the Roman General, when he went againſt the Gallograci. Liv. Lib. 38.

And fetch olive-branches, and vine-branches, &c.] Fit for ſhelter and ſhadow againſt the weather. That is very ſtrange that yet is reported by Authors of good note, concerning certain trees in Braſile, of that bigneſs that whole families live in an arme of one of them, every tree being as populous, as many of our Villages. Abbots Geog. pag. 171.

And branches of thick trees] Tyed together with willowes of the brook, Levit: 23. 40.

Verſ: 16. So the people went forth, and brought them] They had kept the feaſt of trumpets on the firſt day of this moneth. And although no mention be here made of the Feaſt of Expiation, a day of Humiliation to be kept for ever upon the tenth day: yet it is to be preſumed, that they kept it, having ſo good a guide as Ezra. Now alſo, as not weary of well-doing, they doe moſt ſolemnely celebrate the Feaſt of Tabernacles, making themſelves booths of boughes in every ſtreet thoroughout the whole City.

Verſe. 17. Made boothes, and ſate under the boothes] See Verſe 14, 15, 16. They that turn this hiſtory into myſtery, make an alluſion of it, 1. To Chriſt as dwelling in our fleſh. 2. To Chriſtians as travelling toward heaven, and having here no ſetled habitation. Heb. 11. 13.

For ſince the dayes of Joſhua] Moſes is not mentioned, becauſe during his dayes, till Joſhua brought them into the promiſed land, they kept not this feaſt, likely.

Had not the children of Iſrael done ſo] Kept this feaſt they had, but not ſo kept it: viz. with that devotion, ſolemnity, and great gladneſſe, being in ſo poor a caſe, and yet ſo unanimous nimous in the work, as one man. But one would wonder that all along during the reign of David and Solomon (who gave the pattern of, and built the Temple) and all those succeeding Reformers, there should something be omitted about the feast of Tabernacles (kept as 'tis thought by Solomon, 2 Chron. 7. 8.) till their return from Babylon; yet so it was.

Verse 18. And also day by day] Not onely on the first and last day (that great day of the feast, John 7. 37.) but every day; this good man was at it; being Insatiabilis Dei cultor, (as Chrysostome saith of Saint Paul,) an insatiable worshipper of God; and accounting quòd nimis angusta pietas est; ad legem, bonum esse; to do nothing for God more then needs must, was too little.

And they kept the feast seven dayes] The people were as willing to hear, (and do other holy duties) as Ezra was to preach. So were Chrysostomes hearers; who were wont to say that they could better be without the Sun-light, then Chrysostomes daily Sermons. So likewise were Calvins hearers at Geneva, where he preached every day in the week for most part, and had a constant audience that even over-admired (some of them at least) his most excellent paines and parts; as Zanchy shewes and complaines in the Epistle Dedicatory set before his Miscellanies: taxing them of ἀνθρωπολατρεια, man-worship.

And on the eighth day was a solemne assembly] Heb. A restraint, viz. from servile works: or a Retention, viz. a holding of the Congregation together for holy uses. Tremellius rendereth it diem interdicti: The vulgar Latine of Lyra thus, They made a gathering, &c. for necessaries about the Temple. This eighth day thus kept might prefigure the Christian Sabbath, that first day of the week.

CHAP. IX.

Verse 1. Now in the twentieth and fourth day]

A Day after the feast of Tabernacles, they keep a solemne fast:

Usque adeo nihil est; ex omni parte; beatum.

There is in this present life an interchange of all things, a succession of feasting and fasting. Of the best, whilest here it may be said, as Pliny doth of Metellus, Infelix dici non debet, felix non potest: unhappy you cannot call him; happy you may not. One compareth him to the Arke, which was ever transportative, till settled in Solomons Temple: Another to quicksilver, which hath in it self a principle of motion, but not of rest. Lib. 7. cap. 47.

The children of Israel were assembled with fasting] As Epaminondas walked heavily the day after his triumph. Deadnesse of spirit is apt to follow our livelieſt joyes: but that must be lookt too, and security prevented, which is wont to seize upon men after holy duties; like as wormes and waspes eate the sweetest fruits. These fasters had wept at the hearing of the Law, and were stilled by the Levites, chap. 8. 11. because it was unseasonable. Now the feast being over, and their hearts yet full of grief for their great sin in taking strange wives, (not yet put away, though they had vowed to do it, Ezra 10. 3. &c.) they first put away those wives on the twenty third day, and then humble themselves by fasting and prayer on this twenty fourth day; being wrought thereunto by the reading of the Law, as is implyed in the next verse.

And with sackcloth] As acknowledging themselves unworthy of the courseſt clothing: and that, but for shame, they would have stript themselves naked.

And earth upon them] As those that had forfeited all, and deserved to be as far under ground, as now they were above.

Verse 2. And the seed of Israel] Called Israelites, (not Abrahamites) from their wrastling with God by prayer and teares, and prevailing. Called also Jewes from Judah, which signifieth the Confessour. Here it is said of them that.

They stood and confessed their sinnes] All their sinnes either actually committed, or habitually comprised in their body of sinne. This whoso doth in due manner shall have mercy, Prov. 28. 13. Yea, he shall have heaven. Israel had power with God as a Prince. Judah the Confessour got the Kingdome from Reuben. Confession is the way to the Kingdome, walk in it: Onely it must be joyned with confusion of sinne, as here. They separated them-

Martial. themſelves from all ſtrangers, they abandoned their peccatum in deliciis, their darling ſinne, they kept themſelves from their iniquity, Pſal. 18. 23. Hoc non ſit verbis, Marce : ſit ameris, ama.

And the ſinnes of their fathers] i. e. Of their Progenitours: which are owned, if not bewailed, diſclaimed.

Verſe 3. And they ſtood up in their place] The people ſtood for reverence-ſake to the Word read (ſee chap. 8. 5.) Or the Miniſters ſtood up in their Pulpits, where they repreſent God himſelf as his Embaſſadours; and ſhould therefore lay down all ſelf-reſpects and Oecolamp. aimes at the Pulpit doore; and be fully of his minde, who ſaid, I would not be found ſpeaking or doing ought that I thought Chriſt would not approve of, if he were corporally preſent.

And read in the book] Giving the ſenſe of that they read; and applying it cloſe to mens conſciences. This was preaching indeed: for as every ſound is not muſick; ſo neither is every Pulpit-diſcourſe, Preaching. Cura Paſtoralis eſt ars artium & ſcientia ſcientiarum, ſaith one, It is a matter of great skill to divide the word aright. See chap. 8.8.

One fourth part of the day] i. e. for three hours: from nine a clock to twelve. This warranteth our preaching Faſt-Sermons; though prayer be the chief buſineſſe of ſuch a day. See Jer. 36.6,7.

And another fourth part] &c. From twelve to three: thus beſides the ordinary morning and evening ſacrifices, they divided the day betwixt Preaching and Prayer, as thoſe did, Acts 6. 4. And as the Prieſts of old taught Jacob Gods judgements, and put incenſe before the Lord, Deut. 33. 10. The Jewes at this day boaſt that they divide the day (even the working-day) into three parts: the firſt ad Tephillah they ſpend in Prayer; the ſecond ad Torah, in reading the Law; the third ad Malachah, in their worldly buſineſſe. But you are not bound herein to beleeve them.

They confeſſed] Not without ſupplication for pardon, and power to do better.

And worſhipped the Lord their God] Inwardly and outwardly, giving him his due glory, and reſting upon him by a lively faith in the gracious promiſes: being fully perſwaded of this, that together with the forgiveneſſe of ſinne they ſhould have thoſe particular bleſſings which they ſued for, ſo farre as might ſtand with Gods glory, and the good of their ſouls.

Verſe 4. Then ſtood up] Each of theſe eight in his turn, or each in his own proper place: the people being, for more conveniency-ſake, divided into eight ſeveral Congregations.

And cried with a loud voyce] Verbis non modò diſertis, ſed & exſertis, that God might hear (which yet he can do very well without any audible voice, Exod. 14. 15. 1 Kings 22. 32.) and all the people might hear, and joyn in prayer.

Unto the Lord their God] As being in Covenant with them. This ſhewes their faith, as the former their fervencie. Faith is the foundation of Prayer: and Prayer is the fervencie of Faith.

Verſe 5. Then the Levites, Jeſhua. &c. ſaid, ſtand up] Gird your ſelves, and ſerve the Lord, as Luke 17. 8. Be inſtant, or ſtand cloſe to the work; ſet ſides and ſhoulders to it, Neand. Chron pag. 74. Rouſe up your ſelves, and wreſtle with God. Hoc agite, ſaid the Romane Prieſt to the people at their ſacrifices. And Sacerdos parat fratrum mentes dicendo, Surſum corda, ſaith Cyprian, In the Primitive times the Miniſters prepared the people to ſerve God, by ſaying, De oratione. Lift up your hearts.

And bleſſe the Lord your God for ever] Give him immortal thanks, all poſſible praiſe, amare, more, ore, glorifie him doingly, 1 Cor. 10. 30, 31. Epheſ. 1. 11, 12. Think of the multitude, ſeaſonableneſſe, ſuitableneſſe, conſtancy, &c. of Gods favours: and then give him the glory due unto his Name; which yet we can never do, becauſe his Name is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe (as it followeth here) ſo that if we ſhould do nothing elſe all our dayes, yea as long as the dayes of heaven ſhall laſt (ſaid that Martyr) but kneele upon our knees and ſing over Davids Pſalmes to Gods praiſe, yet ſhould we fall farre ſhort of what we owe to the Lord, who is moſt worthy to be praiſed.

And bleſſed be thy glorious name] Theſe holy Levites having called upon the people to bleſſe God, break forth into the performance of this Divine duty themſelves. So Saint Paul often exhorting the Saints to pray, falls a praying for them.

Which is exalted above all bleſſing and praiſe] So that when we have done our utmoſt herein, we can never over-do. David is oft ſo tranſported, that he ſeemes to forget himſelf; ſelf, as a bird that hath got a note, records it over and over, as Pſal. 136. for his mercie endureth for ever. And Pſal. 150. in ſix verſes are twelve Halleluiahs. Praiſe him (ſaith He Verſe 2.) according to his excellent greatneſſe (for great is the Lord, and greatly to be praiſed, Pſal. 145. 3.) and verſe 6. Let every thing that hath breath, praiſe the Lord, Or; Let every breath praiſe the Lord. As oft as we breath, we are to breath out the praiſes of God; and to make our breath like the perfumed ſmoke of the Tabernacle.

Verſe 6. Thou, even thou art Lord alone] Jehovah is Gods incommunicable name: that holy and reverend Name of his which Jewes pronounce not, we too oft profane, at leaſt by not conſidering the import of it; which is enough to anſwer all our doubts, and to fill us with ſtrong conſolation, had we but skill to ſpell all the letters in it.

Thou haſt made heaven] With great skill and artifice thou haſt made it, three ſtories high, 2 Cor. 12. 2. Heb. 11. 10.

The heaven of heavens] Called the higheſt, Luke 2. 14. and the third heaven, 2 Cor. 12. 2. Of this heaven no natural knowledge can be had, nor any help by humane arts, Geometry, Opticks, &c. for it is neither aſpectable, nor movable.

With all their hoſt] i. e. Their furniture; Angels, thoſe heavenly Courtiers, Sunne, Moone and Starres, &c. which are all Gods ſervants, Pſal. 119. 91. and do, in their way, worſhip Him.

The earth and all things that are therein] God may be read in the great book of Nature, which hath three leaves, Heaven, Earth, and Sea. Heaven is all that's above earth: Earth is an element of cold and dry nature, thick, ſolid, heavie, placed in the middeſt of the world as the foundation thereof, and therefore unmovable, though round (and in that reſpect naturally apt for motion) and though founded, not upon ſolid rocks, but fluid waters. This, Ariſtotle himſelf wondred at, Lib. 2. de Cœlo, cap. 13.

And all things that are thereon] Either therein, as metals and minerals; or thereon, as men, beaſts, creeping things, &c.

The Seas and all that are therein] As, There is that Leviathan, and creeping things innumerable: Gods handy-work all of them.

And thou preſerveſt them all] Giveſt them ζωὴν καὶ πνοὴν, Acts 17. 25. life and breath, motion and maintenance; thou upholdeſt the whole creation by the word of thy power, and all things ſubſiſt by thy manutenſion. God doth not caſt off the care of his works that he hath made (as doth the Carpenter, or Shipwright) but being perpetually preſent with them, ruleth, diſpoſeth and ordereth all by a certaine counſel, to his own ends, and at length to his own glory. Heb. 1. 3.

And the hoſt of heaven worſhippeth thee] Angels, and Saints eſpecially: who the more they know of God, the more they love him and honour him; making their addreſſes to him with greateſt ſelf-abaſement, conſidering their diſtance, and diſproportion. Thus Angels: As for Saints; All thy works praiſe thee, O God, ſaith David, that is, they give matter and occaſion; but thy Saints bleſſe thee, Pſal. 145. 10. How they do this, ſee Rev. 5. 11, 12.

Verſe 7. Thou art the Lord the God] Heb. That Lord, with an emphaſis, with an accent; and beſides thee there is none other. See verſe 6. This is proved by his free favours to Iſrael, and patient bearing with their evil manners in the wilderneſſe; there being not any God like unto our God, for pardoning of ſinne, and paſſing by the tranſgreſſion of the remnant of his heritage, Mic. 7. 18.

And didſt chuſe Abram] God firſt choſe him for his love, and then loved him for his choice.

And broughtſt him out of Ur of the Chaldees] Pulling him as a brand out of that fire, where, till then, he had lived (and might elſe have died) an Idolater, Joſh. 24. 2.

And gaveſt him the name of Abraham] See the Note on Gen. 17. 5.

Verſe 8. And foundeſt his heart faithful] He muſt needs finde it ſo, who had made it ſo. Otherwiſe Abraham, as well as any other, might well ſay, Horreo quicquid de meo eſt, ut meus ſim. The natural heart is deceitful and deſperately wicked, &c. a bundle of ſinne (folly is bound up, &c.) a treaſury of ſinne (an evil man out of the evil treaſure of his heart, &c.) a raging Sea of ſinne, Eſay 57. 20. a world of wickedneſſe, James 3. 6. If any good be in it, 'tis but as a drop of roſe-water in a bowle of poyſon; where falling, it is preſently corrupted. Bern.

And madeſt a Covenant with him] To be his God, and the God of his ſeed. This was divini mellis alveare, the bee-hive of heavenly honey: this was more then to be made Monarch of the whole world. See Gen. 17. 20, 21.

To give the land of the Canaanites, &c.] Who had filled that good land from one end to the other with their uncleanneſſes, Ezra 9. 11. and were therefore worthily rooted out of it. So Joſephus reporteth that in his time theſe Jewes were grown ſo wicked, that if the Romanes had not deſtroy'd them, without doubt either the earth would have ſwallowed them up, or fire from heaven have conſumed them. Bede ſaith of the ancient Britaines (immediately before their deſtruction by the Saxons) that they were come to a very great height of wickedneſſe: ſo as to ſhame the counſel of the poore, becauſe the Lord was his refuge, Pſal. 14. 6.

And haſt performed thy words] Of many promiſers it may be ſaid, as Tertullian of the Peacock, all in changeable colours, as oft changed as moved. Sertorius paid his promiſes with fair words. Antiochus was ſirnamed Doſon, becauſe he oft ſaid I will give you this, or that, but never did. God is none ſuch.

For thou art righteous] That is, faithful: for there is a twofold juſtice of God. 1. Of Equity. 2. Of Fidelity. See 1 John 1. 9. Rev. 10. 1. Where Chriſt is ſaid to have a rainbow on his head; to ſhew that he is faithful and conſtant in his promiſes.

Verſe 9 And didſt ſee the affliction] The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, as well as his eares open to their prayers: he knoweth their ſoul in adverſity, & de remedio proſpicit, he is ſolicitous of their ſafety.

And heardeſt their cry by the red ſea] Though mixed with much murmuring, Exod. 14. 10. So he heard that pitiful poor prayer of David, Pſal. 31. 22. I ſaid in mine haſte, I am cut off from thine eyes: Neverthleſſe thou heardſt the voice of my ſupplications, when I cryed unto thee. God heareth the young Ravens, Pſal. 147. 9. though they have but an hoarſe and harſh note, make no melody to move pity, and cry but by implication onely, and not directly unto him.

Verſe 10. And ſhewedſt ſignes and wonders upon Pharaoh] That ſturdy Rebel, whom neither Miniſtery, nor miſery, nor miracle, nor mercy could poſſibly mollifie. This was worſe then any or all thoſe ten plagues ſent upou him, whereof ſee Exod. 3. 19. with the Note.

For thou kneweſt that they dealt proudly, &c.] This the juſt and jealous God could not away with, Exod. 18. 11. His work in Heaven is (ſaid that Heathen) to caſt downe the lofty, and to lift up the lowly.

τὰ μὲν ὑψηλὰ ταπεινῶν, &c. Æſop. Chiloni.

So didſt thou get thee a name] i. e. A great fame of thy power and juſtice, to the converſion of ſome (as Jethro, Exod. 18. 1.) and conviction of others, as Deut. 32. 31. Joſh. 2. 10. 1 Sam. 4. 8.

Verſe 11. And thou didſt divide the Sea before them] That which threatened to ſwallow them, preſerved them. For this, ſhall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayeſt be found: ſurely in the floods of great waters they ſhall not come nigh unto him, Pſal. 32. 6.

As a ſtone into the mighty waters] As lead, Exod. 15. 10. So ſhall Rome (that ſpiritual Egypt) once ſinke into the bottome of the Sea, as a milſtone thruſt into it by a mighty Angel, with a moſt impetuous force, Rev. 18. 21.

Verſe 12. Moreover thou leddeſt them by day, &c.] This pillar of a cloud was miraculouſly moved with ſuch variation as God thought fit, for the guiding of their journeyes: much better then did or could Virilia that Heathen-fiction.

And in the night by a pillar of fire] Though they did not uſually journey in the night, yet ſometimes they did; and then this pillar of fire was their guide. God is with his at all aſſayes; and is all in all unto them, Pſal. 121. 4. See Eſay 4. 5, 6.

Verſe 13. Thou cameſt down alſo upon mount Sinai] A place of many buſhes and briers: The Law there delivered, pricketh and pierceth the conſciences of evil-doers. Thither God came with ten thouſands of his Saints, as Moſes (who climbed up that hill, and alone ſaw it) ſaith, Deut. 33. 2.

And ſpakeſt with them from heaven] He came down upon Sinai, and yet ſpake from heaven: See a like text, John 3. 13. There he ſpake alſo with us, Hoſ. 12. 4. See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh from heaven, ſee that ye ſhift him not off, much leſſe turn away from him, Heb. 12. 25.

And gaveſt them right judgements, &c.] All theſe high praiſes are farre below the worth and excellency of Gods holy Lawes. They were given in the wilderneſſe, becauſe (ſaith Philo) they are to be learnt in a wilderneſſe; ſeeing there we cannot be hindered by the multitude. But this is no way ſolid, as one hath well obſerved.

God

Good Statutes and Commmandments] Good they are in reſpect, 1. Of the Author. 2. Of the Matter. 3. Of the Effect; for they make thoſe good that obſerve them. This is true of the Moral Law; as for the Judicial, it was fitted to the Jewes, and beſt for them: but Caroloſtadius did ill to ſeek to force it as needful for all Chriſtian Commonwealths. Solon being asked whether he had given the beſt Lawes to the Athenians? anſwered, the beſt for them, the beſt that they could ſuffer. So here. Encyclop.

Verſe 14. And madeſt known unto them thy holy Sabbath.] Not then firſt known to the Church: but of old obſerved, even from the beginning, Gen. 2. 3. about 2544. years before it was made known in ſuch a ſolemne ſort at Sinai; as having been much neglected and forgotten, during the Egyptian ſervitude. So it was by the German Churches, till God awakened them by the loſſe of Prague (that firſt blow given them) and that upon the Sabbath day, which they kept no otherwiſe then if it had been Dies dæmoniacus, and not dominicus, (as their countrey-man Alſted complaineth) and as if it had been called Sabbath from Sabbos a name of Bacchus, as Plutarch dreamed.

And commandedſt them precepts] See the Note on verſe 13.

Verſe 15. And gaveſt them bread from heaven] Pluviam eſcatilem, & petrum aquatilem, as Tertullian phraſeth it. God rained down Angels food, and ſet the flint abroach; and this he did for their hunger, for their thirſt, fitting his favours ad cardinem deſiderii, according to their need, and requeſt. Beſides that, their bread was ſacramental, whereof they communicated every day. Their drink alſo was ſacramental, that this ancient Church might give no warrant of a dry Communion: for they did all eate of the ſame ſpiritual meat, and did all drink the ſame ſpiritual drink, the ſame that we do at the Lords Supper, 1 *Cor.*10.3,4.

And promiſedſt them that they ſhould go in, &c.] And the like promiſe he hath made of heaven to all his people. Let us therefore fear, &c. Heb. 4. 1. Let us therefore cleanſe our ſelves, &c. 2 Cor. 6. 1. Let us haſte away in our affections, *Col.*3.2.

Which thou haſt ſworne] So he hath to give us heaven, (becauſe he knowes how backward we are to beleeve him, without ſuch a pawne) that by two immutable things, Gods Word, and Gods Oath (which maketh his Word not more true, but yet more credible) we might have ſtrong conſolation, Heb. 6. 18. and more abundant entrance into the everlaſting Kingdome of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, 2 *Pet.*1.11.

Verſe 16. But they and our fathers] Gods mercies have been hitherto mentioned, that their ſinnes might thereby be aggravated: For good turnes aggravate unkindneſſes; and mens ſinnes are much increaſed by their obligations. It is charged upon Solomon as a foul fault, that he departed from the Lord, who had appeared unto him twice, 1 Kings 11. 9.

Dealt proudly] Pride is the Maſter-pock of the ſoul, and the root of rebellion againſt God, *Pſal.*119.21.

And hardened their necks] As unruly beaſts that will not bear the yoke; lawleſſe and awleſſe perſons that refuſe to be reformed, hate to be healed.

And hearkened not to thy Commandments] But rather to the Devils whiſtle, calling them off from better practiſes.

Verſe 17. And refuſed to obey] Heb, To hearken. They not onely not hearkened, but refuſed to hear reaſons why they ſhould; as having made their concluſion, and being as good as ever they meant to be. This is to adde rebellion to ſinne: this is that ſtubbornneſſe that Ahaz is taxed of and branded for, 2 Chron. 28. 25.

Neither were mindful of the wonders] Theſe ſoone grew ſtale to them, as the Pſalmiſt proves by their wicked practiſes, Pſal. 106. 13. And truly who that looketh upon our lives, would ever think that God had done any wonders for us of this Nation, either by ſea or land, either againſt fire-works or water-works formerly; or againſt a viperous brood amongſt our ſelves, here alate? Num.14.4.

And in their rebellion appointed a Captaine] They once talked (in their mad mood) of doing ſuch a thing, and therefore they are here ſaid to have done it: Like as Joſh. 24. 9. it is ſaid that Balac aroſe and fought with Iſrael; and yet the ſtory ſaith no ſuch matter. But if he did not, yet becauſe he thought and talked of ſuch a matter; it was a done thing before the Lord!

But thou art a God ready to pardon] Heb. A God of pardons. One that haſt ſet up a pardon-office; where pardons for penitents lie ready ſealed, that the ſinner may not be to ſeek, that he may not periſh in his ſinnes while the plaiſter is in providing. It is our comfort that we have to do with a forgiving, ſinne-pardoning God, that doth it naturally, Exod. 34. 6. plentifully, Iſ. 55. 7. conſtantly, Pſ. 130. 4. This ſhould be as a perpetual picture in our hearts.

Gracious] Doing all for us gratis, & ex mero motu; out of his free and unexcited love.

And merciful] All-bowels; whereby he is inclined to ſuccour them that are in miſery; notwithſtanding their ſinnes. See his Non-obſtante, Pſal. 106. 8.

Long-ſuffering] Heb. Long of anger, that is, Long ere he will be angry; not haſty of ſpirit, as Prov. 14. 17, 29. but wondrous patient, amidſt a world of provocations.

And of great kindneſſe] Exceeding propenſe to communicate good. The Hebrew word ſignifies a large quantity either continued (that is, magnitude or greatneſſe) Pſal. 48. 2. Or diſcrete (that is, multitude) Pſal. 3. 1, 2.

And forſookeſt them not] That is, not utterly, as David prayeth, Pſal. 119. 8. and after him Solomon, 1 Kings 8. 57. When God forſaketh a people or perſon, woe be to them, Hoſ. 9. 12. What a terrible text is that, Ezek. 22. 20. I will gather you in mine anger, and my fury, and I will leave you there? and that other, Jer. 16. 13. I will caſt you out of this land into a land that ye know not —— where I will not ſhew you favour? This laſt was worſe then all the reſt. This the Prophet well knew; and therefore cryed out, Lord leave us not, Jer. 17. 17.

Extingui lucem ne patiare tuam.

Or if thou deſert us for a time, yet do not diſinherit us for ever. If thy dereliction of
M. Gerundin us be penal, yet let it not be Perpetual.

Verſe 18. Yea when they had made them a Golden Calf] An ounce whereof the Jews ſay is ſtill to this day in all the puniſhments that befall them: though ſome of their Rabbines have the face to excuſe this groſſe Idolatry of their fore-fathers. See Act. 7. 41.
Piſcat. ἐμοσχοποίησαν, Vitulificârunt.

And ſaid, this is thy God] Exod. 32. 4. Theſe be thy Gods. It was the Serpents Grammar that firſt taught men to decline God in the plurall number: Ye ſhall be as Gods, Gen. 3.

That brought thee out of the Land of Egypt] Some of them then did mean to worſhip the true God, in this falſe manner: hence Exod. 32. 5. there is proclaimed a feaſt (not to the Golden Calf, but) to Jehovah. Here then falls to the ground the Papiſts plea for their image-worſhip.

And had wrought great provocations] Or, Blaſphemies, 2 King. 19. 3. Idolatry is no better. Hierome as oft as he meeteth with this Hebrew word in the book of Pſalmes (and that is five ſeverall times) he tranſlateth it, to blaſpheme.

Verſe 19. Yet thou in thy manifold mercies] Nothing elſe could have kept him from turning them off, and ſaying to them as once Jephta did, Judg. 11. Behold ye have thruſt me out: and do ye come unto me in your diſtreſſe? Go, cry unto the Gods which ye have choſen: Let them deliver you in the time of your Tribulation, Judg. 10.

Forſookeſt them not in the Wilderneſſe] And yet he was neare the matter, when he would own them no longer, but even fathered them upon Moſes, ſaying, Exod. 32. 7. Thy people which thou broughteſt out of the Land of Egypt, have corrupted themſelves.

The pillar of cloud departed not] It is ſad with a people when God ſends for his Love-tokens (his Ordinances) when they have ſinned away their light; and ſo wiped off all their comfortables.

Verſe 20. Thou gaveſt alſo thy good Spirit] Viz. to their Governours and teachers, Numb. 11. 16, 17, 25, 26. Yea to every good ſoul, that they might be all taught of God, led into all truth and holineſſe, Eph. 5. 9. For which end God hath promiſed to poure his Joel 2. 28. Spirit upon all fleſh, that is, the beſt thing upon the baſeſt. Next to the ſending of his Son in the fleſh (which is called the gift Joh. 4. 10. and the benefit 1 Tim. 6. 2.) what can God do more for his people then to give them his good ſpirit? this is to give them all good things in one, Mat. 7. 11. with Luke 11. 13.

And withheldeſt not thy Manna] See verſe 15. It is twice mentioned as a ſingular and ſignall mercy. And it is well obſerved by a Reverend Writer, that this Manna and water from the Rock, (which was Chriſt in the Goſpel) were given this people before the Law, the Sacraments of grace before the legall Covenant. The Grace of God preventeth our obedience: Therefore ſhall we keep the Law of God, becauſe we have a Saviour.

Verſ. 21. Yea fourty yeares didſt thou ſuſtaine them] Suſtaine them? this is a meer Miôſis, ſith never was Prince ſo ſerved in his greateſt Pomp, as theſe rebellious Iſraelites were in the wilderneſſe: They had their Quailes and their Manna, and the Rock to follow them, &c.

were

So that they lacked nothing] No more ſhall they that ſeek the Lord lack any good thing, Pſal. 34. 10, and 84. 11. God will not be a wilderneſſe to them, or a land of darkneſſe, Jer. 2. 31. A ſufficiency they ſhall be ſure of, if not a ſuperfluity: yea in the midſt of ſtraits they ſhall be in a ſufficiency, 1 Tim. 6. 6. The ungodly are not ſo, Job 20. 22.

Their cloths waxed not old] They wore not in the wearing; this was wonderfull: theſe men lived in an age of miracles, here was no need of What ſhall we put on? For the cloths they had of their own, and that they borrowed of the Egyptians decayed not; but, as ſome think, grew up with their perſons. See Deut. 8. 4. and 29. 5.

And their feet ſwelled not] Nor did any other diſeaſe annoy them, while they were in the wilderneſſe, There was not one feeble perſon among them: this was a ſweet mercy. Non eſt vivere, ſed valere, vita ſi valet, bene eſt. Vincentio Peſtiom an Italian Gentleman being asked how old he was? anſwered that he was in health. And to another that asked how rich he was? anſwered, that he was not in debt. This was the happineſs of theſe Iſraelites in the wilderneſs.

Verſe 22. Moreover, thou gaveſt them Kingdomes and Nations] God gave them all, for he is the true proprietary, he pulleth down one, and ſetteth up another. This, Nebuchadnezzar acknowledged (after he had been turned a grazing,) and Charles the Fifth, Emperour of Germany, who in twenty eight battles in America waged by Cortez and Pizarro won eight and twenty Kingdomes. And what a world of Nations are ſwallowed up in the greatneſſe of the Turkiſh Empire? America hath the hapineſſe to be out of their reach. Prideaux. Introduct.

So they poſſeſſed the land of Sihon] Gods favours muſt not be mentioned in the lump onely, and by whole-ſale; but particularly enumerated and celebrated.

Verſe 23. Their children alſo multiplieſt thou] Judea was not above two hundred miles long, and fifty miles broad (not near the halfe of England by much,) yet what a numerous people were they? what huge armies had they?

And broughteſt them into the land] Not the neareſt way, but the beſt for them; that he might humble them, and try them, and do them good in the latter end. If God will bring us to heaven at length, (as Iſrael in the wilderneſſe, ſo) muſt we follow him and the line of his Law, though it ſeeme to leade us in and out, backward and forward, as if we were treading a maze.

Concerning which thou hadſt promiſed to their fathers] And they diſpoſed of it by Will to their poſterity, as if they had been in preſent poſſeſſion. Gods promiſes are good ſure-hold: the Patriarchs would be buried there, though they died in Egypt, and keep poſſeſſion, as they could: for they knew that all was their own.

Verſe 24. So the children went in] After that they had been held a long while under the Egyptian ſervitude. God knows how to commend his favours to us, which citò data citò vileſcunt, lightly come by, are lightly ſet by.

And thou ſubdueſt before them — the Canaanites] There is an elegancy in the original, Thou bowedſt or preſſedſt down thoſe crookened or depreſſed ones, the Canaanites who had their very name (portending their condition) from bowing down, as born to be ſervants of ſervants, according to Noahs curſe, Gen. 9. 25. with Rom. 11. 16.

And gaveſt them into their hand] If any were unſubdued, it was through their own ſloth, for which they are reproved, and by which they afterwards ſmarted. It is the obſervation of a good Divine, that as ſeven Tribes are juſtly taxed by Joſhua for their negligence and ſloth in not ſeeking ſpeedily to poſſeſſe the land God had offered them, Joſh. 18. 2. ſo may the moſt of us be juſtly rebuked for grievous ſecurity about the heavenly Canaan. Divers of the better ſort have but a title: and therefore it juſtly falleth out, that theſe are buffeted by Chriſt, as thoſe were diſgraced by Joſhua.

That they might do with them as they would] Save or ſlay whom they pleaſed; yet not forgetting the Lawes of humanity; as the bloody Spaniards have done amongſt the miſerable Indians: cauſing them to cry out, that it had been far better, that the Indies had been given to the Devils of hell then to them, and that if the Spaniards go to heaven when they die, themſelves will never come there, though they might.

Verſe 25. And they took ſtrong Cities] With no great ado: like as townes were ſaid to come in to Timotheus (the Athenian Generall) his toiles while he ſlept. This he aſcribed to his owne proweſſe and policy: often interlacing this proud ſpeech (Plutin Sylla.

Herein Fortune had no

no part) and from thenceforth never proſpered, in any thing he undertook.

And a fat land] Flowing with plenty of dainties, though Strabo ſpitefully ſlander it for craggy and barren.

And poſſeſſed houſes full of all goods] Of all pleaſant and precious ſubſtance: for the Canaanites were great Merchants, Eſay 23. 8. Hoſ. 12. 7. Ezek. 17. 4.

Wells digged] A great commodity in that hot Countrey.

Vine-yards and Olive-yards] A ſingular help to houſe-keeping.

So they did eate and were filled] They had enough of every thing, and did eate whiles eating was good, as they ſay Queen Elizabeth did ſeldome eate but of one diſh, roſe ever with an appetite, and lived about ſeventy years. King Edward the ſixth was wont to call her His ſweet ſiſter Temperance.

And delighted themſelves in thy great goodneſſe] They lived in Gods good land; but not by Gods good Lawes; the refreſhing they found by his beſt creatures was none other but ſuch as his, who warmeth himſelf, and ſaith, Aha, I am warme, I have ſeene the fire, Iſa. 44. 16.

Verſe 26. Nevertheleſſe they were diſobedient, and rebelled] See how full in the mouth theſe holy Levites were in aggravating their own and their forefathers ſinnes, which ſwelled as ſo many toads in their eyes; neither could they ever ſufficiently diſgrace them. This is the property and practiſe of the true penitentiary.

They caſt thy Law behinde their backs] That is, they vilipended and undervalued it; God drew them by the cords of a man, (ſo the cords of kindneſſe are called, Hoſ. 11. 4. becauſe befitting the nature of a man, and likelieſt to prevaile with rational people) but they like men (or rather like beaſts) tranſgreſſed the Covenant: and, as if God had even hired them to be wicked, ſo did they abuſe all his benefits to his greateſt diſhonour; being therefore the worſe, becauſe in reaſon, they ought to have been better.

And ſlew thy Prophets which teſtified againſt them to turne to thee] This was the worſt they did to them, and that for which they received mercedem mundi, the wages of the mad world ever beſide it ſelf in point of ſalvation, and falling foul upon ſuch as ſeek its good. This is that ſinne that brings ruine without remedy, 2 Chron. 36. 16. Prov. 29. 1. for, precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints, Pſal. 116.

And they wrought great provocations] Or, Blaſphemies: ſee verſe 18.

Verſe 27. Therefore thou deliveredſt them] Flagitium & flagellum, ſicut acus & filum. Sinne and puniſhment are tied together with chains of adamant.

Who vexed them] Heb. Put them to ſtraits; ſo that they had not what ſhift to make, or how to help themſelves.

And in the time of their trouble] Vexatio dedit intellectum. The time of affliction is the time of ſupplication. When out of the depths Gods people cry unto him, they may have any thing, Zach. 13. 9. ſpeedy audience, unmiſcarrying returnes of their prayers.

Thou gaveſt them Saviours] i.e. Deliverers ſuch as the Judges were, Judg. 3. 9. and ſuch as Flaminius the Roman was to the poor Argives; who therefore called him Saviour Saviour, and that with ſuch a courage, ut corvi fortuito ſupervolantes, in ſtadium deciderent, that the birds fell to the earth amazed with that outcry; the aire was ſo diſſipated with their acclamations. Plut. in Flam Verſe 28. But after they had reſt, they did evil again] As ſtanding pooles breed vermine; as ſedentary lives are ſubject to diſeaſes. If men be not poured out from veſſel to veſſel, they will ſoone ſettle upon their lees. Becauſe they have no changes, therefore they feare not God, Pſal. 55. 19. ſaith David, of the wicked: and Pſal. 30. David himſelf was afflicted, delivered, and then grew wanton. Then troubled again, verſe 7. cryes againe, verſe 8, 9. God turnes his mourning to joy again; whereof if he ſurfeited not, it was well beſtowed on him. But rara fumant felicibus ara. We are commonly beſt when worſt: and Pliny told his friend, that the beſt way to live well, was to be as good in health, as we promiſe to be when we are ſick. Plin. Epiſt.

Therefore leſteſt thou them in the hand of their enemies] Who can do us no hurt, but by Divine permiſſion; though they bandy together, and bend all their forces to harme the Church, yet are they bounded by God, and can do nothing, till he leave his people in their hands.

Had the dominion over them] Ruled them with rigour.

And many times didſt thou deliver them] Even totiès quotiès: for as the eye is not wearied with ſeeing, nor the eare with hearing: ſo neither is God with ſhewing mercy. But as the Sunne ſhineth after it hath ſhone, and as the ſpring runneth after it hath run; ſo doth the Lord proceed to do good to his in their neceſſity; and that according to his mercies which never fail, Lam. 3.22.

Verſe 29. And teſtifiedſt againſt them] Toldeſt them of their ſinnes, foretoldeſt them of their dangers, didſt all that could be done to do them good: but nothing would do.

Yet they dealt proudly] See verſe 16.

And hearkened not] Intus exiſtens prohibuit alienum; Hear, and give eare, be not proud, Jer. 13.15.

But ſinned againſt thy judgements] i. e. Thy Statutes, though made with ſo much reaſon and reſpect to our good, that if God did not command them, yet were it every way our beſt way to practiſe them, Eſay 48. 17. I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way which thou ſhouldeſt go. As who ſhould ſay, It is for thy profit that I command thee this or that, and not for mine own.

Which if a man do] But that, as now, he cannot do, and therefore not be ſaved by the Law, Rom. 10. 5. Our Saviour indeed ſaid to that young juſticiary, This do and thou ſhalt live, Luke 10. 28. But that was all one, ſaith Luther, as if Chriſt had ſaid unto him, Vade & morere, Go upon thy death; for do this of thy ſelf, and live thereby thou art never able.

And withdrew the ſhoulder] When called to take up Chriſts yoke, or to beare his croſſe. See the Note on Zach. 7. 11.

And hardened their necks] To ſinewes of iron, they added browes of braſſe.

Verſe 30. Yet many years didſt thou forbear them] Heb. Protract over them: or draw out thy loving kindneſſe toward them, to the utmoſt.

And teſtifiedſt againſt them] As verſe 29. They wanted not for warnings or wooings, with, Woe unto thee O Jeruſalem: wilt thou not be made cleane? when ſhall it once be?

Yet would they not hear] But as Sea-monſters, or Catadupes, or men borne in a mill, or as one that is running a race; give him never ſo good counſel, he cannot ſtay to hear it.

Therefore gaveſt thou them] As uncounſelable, incorrigible.

Verſe 31. Nevertheleſſe for thy great mercies ſake] Mans perverſneſſe cannot interrupt the courſe of Gods goodneſſe. In the middeſt of judgement, he remembreth mercy, which beareth the ſame proportion to his judgement, which ſeven (a compleat number) hath to an Unity.

Thou diddeſt not utterly conſume them] God will repent for his people, when he ſeeth their power is gone, Deut. 32. 36. and be jealous with a great jealouſie, when the enemy goes beyond his commiſſion, Zach. 1. 14, 15.

For thou art a gracious and merciful God] And this is moſt ſeene, when miſery weighs down, and nothing but mercy turneth the ſcale.

Verſe 32. Now therefore our God, the great, the mighty] It is an high point of heavenly wiſdome, in the beginning of our petitions, to propound God to our ſelves under ſuch holy notions and fit expreſſions, as wherein we may ſee an anſwer to our prayers, as here. See chap. 1.5.

Let not all the trouble] Heb. The wearying, the laſſitude. Afflictions are not joyous, but grievous to the fleſh, which doth ſoone flag, and even ſink under the burden, if not ſupported by the hand of heaven.

Seeme little before thee] As if we had not yet ſuffered enough, but (as if we wanted weight) muſt be made yet heavier by an addition of new afflictions, 1 Pet. 1. 6. God is apt to think a little enough, and ſpare, Eſay 40. 1. and to take care that the ſpirit fail not before him, that his children ſwoon not in the whipping, Eſay 57. 16. He knows that every child of affliction hath not the ſtrength to cry out as Luther did, Feri Domine, feri, ſmite on, Lord, ſmite on, for I am abſolved from my ſinnes: or as another did, I thank thee O Lord, for all mine extremity: and I beſeech thee, if thou think good, to adde to it an hundred fold more &c.

That hath come upon us] As foul-weather comes afore it is ſent for. Heb. Hath found us; for we ſought it not, but would gladly have ſhun'd it.

Since the times of the Kings of Aſſyria] Who yet were their moſt favourable enemies, and are therefore compared to a golden head in Nebuchadnezzars Image: but any ſervitude is grievous: and among the Greeks, after that they were delivered from the tyranny of the Macedonians and Spartans, the Cryer at the Nemæan games was forced to pronounce the word Liberty iterumque iterumque, again and again. And how earneſt are Gods people here in deprecating another captivity. He heareth them; and for their late ſeventy years captivity, granteth them ſeven ſeventies of years (Daniels weeks) for the enjoyment of their own countrey.

Verſe 33. Howbeit thou art juſt] So Mauricius the Emperour juſtified God, when he ſaw his wife and children butchered before his eyes by the traytor Phocas, and knew that himſelf ſhould be ſoone after ſtewed in his own broth; he cryed out, juſt art thou O Lord, and juſt are all thy judgements. So did the Noble Du Pleſſy, when he heard of the death of his onely ſonne ſlaine in Holland; which ſo grieved his mother, that ſoone after ſhe died.

Verſe 34. Neither have our Kings, our Princes, our Prieſts, &c.] But as there hath beene a general defection, ſo a well deſerved deſolation, wherein we have all juſtly ſhared.

Nor hearkened to thy Commandments] And that becauſe they teſtified againſt their contrary practiſes. This, wicked men cannot away with, they hate him that reproveth in the gate, as Ahab did Micaiah. None but the gracious can ſay, Let the righteous ſmite me, be the reproof never ſo well tempered. No ſugar can bereave a pill of its bitterneſſe. Now the eare trieth words, as the mouth taſteth meats, Job 12. 11. And ungodly men (as they write of ſome creatures) have fel in aure, and muſt get their eares cured ere they can be in caſe to hear Gods Commandments, and his Teſtimonies. It is ſaid of Gerſon, that he loved a friendly reprover: and of Queen Anne Bullen, that ſhe not onely was willing to be admoniſhed, but alſo required her Chaplains freely and plainly to tell her of whatſoever was amiſſe. Scilicet Chriſtus voluit aliquando etiam Reginam in Cœlum vehere, as Luther once ſaid of Elizabeth, Queen of Denmark. Theſe Kings and Princes of Iſrael were none-ſuch.

In vita.

Her life by M. Clark.

Verſe 35. For they have not ſerved thee in their Kingdom] As David did, who held it his higheſt honour to be the ſervant of the Lord: and as thoſe three famous Chriſtian Emperours, Conſtantine, Valentinian, and Theodoſius, who ſtiled themſelves The vaſſailes of Jeſus Chriſt.

Pſal. 36.

Socrat.

And in thy great goodneſſe that thou gaveſt them] In the abundance of all things, Deut. 28. 47. they ſhould have conſidered, The more wages, the more work: and that thus to requite the Lord, was to come under the cenſure of a fooliſh people and unwiſe, Deut. 32. 6. yea, of idle and evil ſervants, Mat. 25. 26.

And in the large and fat land] But Jeſhurun waxed fat and kicked: fulneſſe bred forgetfulneſſe, ſaturity, ſecurity, Deut. 32. 15. therefore he was worthily pent up and pined in a ſtrange land; where he had liberty little enough, and priſoners pittance.

Neither turned they from their wicked works] They quarrel not with their faults, but with their friends that reprove them; they turne not to him from whom they had deeply revolted. Their impenitency maketh their ſinnes mortal, ſaith Saint John, 1 Epiſt. 5. 16. immortal, ſaith Saint Paul, Rom. 2. 5. they die in their ſinnes, as did thoſe Jewes in the Goſpel, and periſh for ever, John 8. 21.

Verſe 36. Behold, we are ſervants this day] This is twice here bewailed, as a ſingular unhappineſſe. They that live under the Turkiſh ſlavery, feele it ſo. Poor Greece that was once Sol & ſal gentium, terrarum flos, & fons literarum, is now ——vel Priamo miſeranda manus.

Princeſſe of Nations, Queen of Provinces
She was, that now thus tributary is. Lam. 1. 1.

Out of Greece, and other Countreys that had ſometimes received the Faith of Chriſt, the Turkiſh tyrants draw with them to the warres great multitudes of wretched people, whom they call Aſape. Theſe carry all the baggage; theſe carry wood and water for other ſouldiers of better account: theſe ſerve inſtead of Pioners to caſt up trenches, and raiſe bulwarks: and when battle is to be given, if it be in plain field, theſe have then weapons put into their hands, and are thruſt into the fore-front of the battle, to blunt the enemies ſwords: But if a City be to be beſieged, theſe ſerve as fit matter to fill the ditches with their dead bodies, or to make bridges for other ſouldiers to paſſe over upon. And if they ſhrink to attempt any thing they are commanded, then are they more cruelly uſed by their Commanders, then by their enemies. And this the Ottoman Kings count good policy.

Turk. Hiſt. 325. & 317.

Verſe 37. And it yeeldeth much increaſe unto the Kings] As this Land once did unto unto the King of Locuſts. When it was ſtiled the Popes hortus deliciarum, out of which he could fetch what money, or any thing elſe he pleaſed, ſo long as he could hold a pen in his hand. In the year 720. Ino King of Weſt-Saxons, cauſed in all his Dominion, in every houſe having a chimney, a penny to be collected and paid to the Biſhop of Rome, in the name of Saint Peter; and thereof were they called Peter-pence. Theſe continued till Henry the eighth's time: who in his Proteſtation againſt the Pope, ſpeaketh thus, England is no more a babe: there is no man here, but now he knowes that they do fooliſhly, that give gold for lead, more weight of that then they receive of this, &c. Act. and Mon. Ibid. 990.

Alſo they have dominion] See the Note on verſe 30.

At their pleaſure] Their will was a law; which to argue or debate, was high miſdemeanour; to detract or diſobey, preſent death.

Verſe 38. And becauſe of all this] Our ſinne and miſery.

We make a ſure Covenant] See Ezra 10.3.

And write it] Litera ſcripta manet.

And our Princes, Levites and Prieſts ſeale unto it] In the roome and name of all the reſt, who have ſworn and will performe it, that we will keep thy righteous judgements

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. Now thoſe that ſealed, were Nehemiah the Tirſhata.]

HE is firſt mentioned, not as a Prieſt, but as Provoſt; and one that held it an honour to be firſt in ſo good a matter As Cæſar never ſaid to his ſouldiers, Ite, but Venite, Go ye, but Come along, I will lead you: And as Abimelech ſaid, What ye have ſeene me do, make haſte and do accordingly. So ſhould all Superiours ſay to their inferiours. Vita Principis cenſura eſt, imò cynoſura, the life of the Prince is the load-ſtar of the people, upon which moſt men fix their eyes, and ſhape their courſes. Magnates ſunt Magnetes, Great men draw many by their examples, they are as looking-glaſſes by which others dreſſe themſelves. And hence Nehemiah's forwardneſſe here to ſeale firſt. There follow in their order Prieſts, Levites, Princes and people ſolemnly ſealing a ſure Covenant. God had cauſed them to paſſe under the rod, and now he is bringing them into the bond of the Covenant, that he may purge out the rebels from amongſt them, Ezek. 20.37,38. Plin.

Verſe 28. That had ſeparated themſelves] In Saint Pauls ſenſe, 2 Cor. 6.17. Come out from among them, and be ye ſeparate, &c. from ſuch ſtand off; Stand up from the dead, ſave your ſelves from this untoward generation, ſhun their ſinnes, leſt ye ſhare in their plagues. Theſe holy Separates (or Proſelytes) ſealed the Covenant, and became free deniſons of the Common-wealth of Iſrael; having right to all Gods Ordinances, Exod. 12.48. Such were Araunah the Jebuſite, 2 Sam. 24. Jether the Iſmaelite, 1 Chron. 7.17. with 2 Sam. 17.25. thoſe Acts 2.10. the Jewes called them Advenas Juſtitiæ. Deodate interpreteth this text of ſuch Jewes as were come again out of Babylon, to ſerve the Lord, according to his Law. Others, of ſuch as had ſeparated themſelves from their Heathen-wives and children.

Their wives, their ſonnes, and their daughters] Theſe alſo were then, and ſtill may be Covenanters, as partakers of the benefit, 1 Tim. 6.2. and heirs together of the grace of life, 1 Pet. 3.7.

Every one having knowledge] Of their own miſery by ſinne, and of the great myſtery of godlineſſe.

Verſe 29. They clave to their brethren] Heb. They laid faſt hold on them, viz. by taking hold of the Covenant, to keep the Sabbath from polluting it, and chuſing the things that pleaſe God, as Eſay 56.4,6.

And entred into a curſe] The more to confirme the oath, and to keep their deceitful hearts cloſe to God. See Deut. 29.12,21. This is called the oath of God, Eccleſ. 8.2. Confer Iſa. 19.18. and 44.5. 2 Chron. 15.12,14. and 34.31.

To walk in Gods Law] Ex gnomone & Canone decalogi, to walk accurately and exactly by line and by rule, In all the Commandments and Ordinances of the Lord blameleſſe, Luke 1.6. ſo far as by his grace He ſhould vouchſafe to aſſiſt them. For lex jubet, gratia juvat. The bowles of the Candleſtick have no oile, but what droppeth from the olive- Aug. in Exod. quæſt. 55.

branches. David can wiſh well to the keeping of Gods Commandments diligently, Pſal. 119. 4, 5. but promiſe no further then God ſhall pleaſe to enlarge his heart, verſe 32. Vows and Covenants indefinitely and abſolutely made (as that of Jephta, Judg. 11. 31.) prove a ſnare. Condition with the Lord for his ſtrength and grace; rely not on thine own ſufficiency, leſt it repent thee of thy raſhneſſe and ſelf-confidence, as it befell Peter. Conſider that thou art but a poor garriſon-ſouldier: and without ſupplies of the Spirit of Jeſus Chriſt, Phil. 1. 19. thou canſt do nothing. David knew this, and therefore called earneſtly for help from heaven, Pſal. 51. 13, 14, 15. & 119. 106, 107.

Verſe 30. And that we would not give our daughters] This is the firſt particular branch of the Covenant, that they would make no inter-marriages with the Heathen; as knowing the ſnare that herein Satan laid for their ſouls. In the firſt ſentence againſt man, this cauſe is expreſſed, Becauſe thou obeyedſt the voice of thy wife, &c. By the rib (as by a ladder) Satan oft climbs to the heart, and corrupts it, as Gregory hath it. O wives! (ſaith another) the moſt ſweet poyſon, the moſt deſired evil in the world, &c. Make a wiſe choice therefore. The Heathen well ſaith, that every man when he marrieth, brings either a good or an evil ſpirit into his houſe, and ſo makes it either a heaven or a hell.

Verſe 31. And if the people of the land bring any ware] As they might without the Jewes leave: and did, chap. 13. 16. and ſome of theſe Jewes, forgetting their Covenant, bought of them too: even the children of Juda in Jeruſalem, ib. as if they had been of her religion in the tragedy, who ſaid, ἡ μὲν γλῶτ' ὀμώμοχεν, ἡ δὲ φρὴν ἀνώμοτος ἔσθ'.

that is, I ſwore with my tongue, but not with my heart. But ſhall they thus eſcape by iniquity? Be not deceived, God is not mocked: A God of truth, and without iniquity; juſt and right is he, Deut. 32. 4.

That we would not buy it of them] Leſt we ſhould trouble and diſquiet that holy Reſt; and God ſhould ſue us upon an Action of waſt: For the ſeventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God, Exod. 20. 11. Jer. 17. 21.

Or on the holy day] Now abrogated Col. 2. 16.

And that we would leave the ſeventh yeare] That Sabbaticall yeare, prefiguring the year of Grace, the Kingdome of Chriſt, Qui noxas & nexus omnes ſolveret, who giveth his people a generall releaſe, Deut. 15. 2. and comes not over them againe with an after-reckoning. Peccata non redeunt. The Land alſo was to reſt from tillage this year, Exod. 23. 11

And the exaction of every debt] For that year at leaſt, and the next too, if the debter were not able to pay; the lender was to expect a recompenſe from God, Deut. 15. 6.

Verſe 32. To charge our ſelves yearly with the third part of a ſhekel] Beſide the Poll-mony the half-ſhekel required, Exod. 38. 26. the third part of a ſhekel was no great ſum, yet ſomewhat more then what Saul and his ſervant preſented the Seer with, whom they could not but know to be the Judge of Iſrael, 1 Sam. 9. 8. Theſe had learned, that thankfulneſs was meaſured both by God and good men not by the weight, but by the will of the Retributor. God doth highly accept the ſmall offerings of his weak ſervants, when he ſeeth them to proceed from great love.

Verſe 33. For the ſhewbread] Here are recited the ſeverall uſes whereunto that tribute or Impoſt was put: the half-ſhekel enjoyned by the Law being not enough, by reaſon the people were as yet ſo few. This though Junius denieth, yet the Hebrews all conſent about it.

To make an atonement] That is, an agreement, Heb. To cover or expiate, to purge away, or take away uncleanneſſe; to ſatisfie for ſin, and to pacifie wrath. By the Prieſts making atonement legally was typified Chriſts making reconciliation betwixt God and man: for he alone is the propitiation for our ſinnes, 1 John 2. 2. But how much miſtaken were our Anceſtours in times of Popery, who built religious houſes, and gave large maintenance to them to buy off their ſinnes, to deliver their ſoules from hell, to fetch their friends out of Purgatory, &c.

Act. and Mon. 1077.

Verſe 34. And we caſt lots — for the Wood-offering] Heb. Korban or Korban as the Goſpel calleth it, becauſe by offerings they came near to God. This Wood offering we read not of till now: the Prophet Iſay telleth us, that if we ſhould ſacrifice unto God according cording to his excellent greatneſſe, Lebanon would not be ſufficient to burn, nor the beaſts thereof ſufficient for a burnt-offering, Chap. 40. 16. There was much uſe of fuell about the Temple; and it was formerly provided out of the publike treaſury. But that now failing, they take another order as here; that God might not be unſerved, and the daily ſacrifice neglected, which they held and called The abomination of deſolation

Verſe 35. And to bring the firſt-fruits of our Ground] Heb. The firſt-borne. Theſe firſt-fruits were the fiftieth part; and, if any would be more liberall in paying, the fourtieth; or, being poorer, the ſixtieth part.

And the firſt-fruits of all fruits of all trees] God required to be honoured with the firſtlings of all; to ſhew how he ſets by our young-ſervices. We prize nettle-buds when they firſt put forth: ſo doth God remember and regard the kindneſſe of our youth. Jer. 2. 1.

Verſe 36. Alſo the firſt-born of our Sonnes] Theſe God claimed as his due, Exod. 12. 2. and 22. 29. Num. 3. 13. and called for, as beſt beloved of the parents; that, together with them he might draw mens beſt affections to himſelfe. They were to be redeemed, as were alſo the firſtlings of all beaſts not fit for ſacrifice, Exod. 13. 13. and the redemption-money brought to the Prieſts (who were Gods Receivers) that they might be the better encouraged in the Law of the Lord, as Hezekiah phraſeth it, 2 Chron. 31. 4.

To bring to the houſe of our God, unto the Prieſts] No man might offer his own ſacrifice, though it were never ſo good, but preſent it to the Prieſt, Levit. 17. 5. who was to offer as well the poor mans Lamb, as the rich mans Oxe: it is by Chriſt alone that we muſt draw nigh to God, &c.

Verſe 37. And that we ſhould bring the firſt-fruits of our dough] As oft as they baked, they gave a Cake unto the Prieſts, where they dwelled, throughout the Tribes: for they were diſperſed all abroad the land for inſtruction of the people, and exhortation to obedience to the Law of God. See Num, 15. 20, 21.

And the tythes of our ground unto the Levites] All the tythes were paid to the Levites, not to the Prieſts: and out of them, the Levites paid a tenth to the Prieſts.

In all the Cities of our tillage] No places were tyth-free.

Verſe 38. And the Prieſt the Son of Aaron] That Son of Aaron by an eminency, the High-Prieſt.

Shall be with the Levites] To ſee that right be done, and to make an equal diſtribution.

When the Levites take tythes] As their Due, and not as a benevolence from the people. Melchizedech tythed Abraham, Heb. 7. 6. It is your reward or wages which you dearly earne, and may juſtly call for, Num. 19. 31. The chief of the Levites demanded their due, when they were not thought of: but, by great over-ſight, were paſſed over in the diviſion, Joſh. 21. 1.

And the Levites ſhall bring up] See the Note on verſe 37.

Verſe 39. And we will not forſake the houſe of God] But frequent it our ſelves, and ſee that the Prieſts that miniſter, the porters and ſingers forſake it not, for want of neceſſary maintenance: as they were ſhortly after this, forced to do, And to flie every one to his field, Neh. 13. 10. For a ſubſiſtence.

CHAP. XI.

Verſe 1. And the Rulers of the people dwelt at Jeruſalem.

THis City, being before repaired, beginneth now to be repeopled. See chap. 7. 4. The Rulers there took up their ſeat, (as was fit, and as in all chief Cities is uſuall) ſo that thither the Tribes went up, the Tribes of the Lord, &c. And there were ſet the Thrones of Judgment, Pſal. 122. 5.

The reſt of the people alſo caſt lots] The diſpoſe whereof is wholly of the Lord: and therefore none could reaſonably repine.

To bring one of ten] This ſhadowed out the paucity of thoſe that ſhall inhabit the heavenly Jeruſalem, according to Iſai. 6. 13. Jer. 3. 14. Chriſt at laſt day will do as Joſhua did (ſaith a Divine) to finde out who had ſtollen the Babyloniſh garment: there were many brought together, and all to find out one, Joſh. 7. So all ſhall then appeare: out of them a finall number ſeducted, that have heard of Chriſt: out of them thoſe that have profeſſed him: and out of them, thoſe that have profeſſed in ſincerity: and theſe.

--- Numero vix ſunt totidem, quot
Thebarum portæ, vel divitis oſtia Nili.

Juvenal. Sat. 13

Hom. 4. ad pop. Antioch, How many, think you, ſhall be ſaved in this City, (ſaid Chryſoſtome to the people of Antioch, where he had long preached, and was much admired,) It will be a hard ſpeech to you, but I will ſpeak it; though there be ſo many thouſands of you, yet there cannot be found an hundred, that ſhall be ſaved: and I doubt of them too; for what villany is there in youth? What ſloth, in old age? and ſo he goes on.

The holy City] Jeruſalem is ſo called, becauſe God had choſen it to ſet his name there. The Heathen God-haters had alwayes an edge againſt it, and this made people ſo unwilling to inhabit it. Our Edward the Firſt had too high a conceit of it, when he charged his Son upon his death-bed to carry his heart thither, and left 32000. pounds for that purpoſe.

Verſe 2. And the people bleſſed all the men that willingly offered themſelves] All the Voluntiers, thoſe Liberi & libentes, that moved with a zeal of God, and his ſervice, ſeated themſelves at Jeruſalem; though it were little for their ſafety or profit. Sincerity is an enemy to Siniſterity; it ſtreines out ſelfe-reſpects, and procures a man great reſpect in the hearts of good people, who are ready to commend them and pray for them, as here.

Verſe 3. Now theſe are the chief of the province] So Judea is called, becauſe now ſubject and tributary to the King of Babylon; as afterwards it was to the Romans (and is therefore called a province, Act. 25. 1.) and is now to the Turk. How then could thoſe Jews in the Goſpel ſay, We are Abrahams ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man, but that they cared not what they ſaid in abravado? Spaniards are ſaid to be impudent braggers: and extreamly proud in the loweſt ebbe of fortune. Theſe Jews were ſo certainly; and ſo they continue.

John 8. 33.

Ver. 4. Certaine of the children of Judah, &c.] Yea and of the children of Ephraim, and Manaſſeth too, 1 Chron. 9. 3. Where the ſame is ſet downe as here, but the number is greater. And why? here only thoſe are reckoned who inhabited Jeruſalem by lot: but there, the Voluntiers alſo. See verſe 2.

Verſe 5. And Maaſeiah the Sonne of Baruch] See the Note on Ezra 2. 3.

Ver. 6. Valiant men] Heb. Men of ability and activity. It comprehendeth all the four Cardinall vertues.

Verſ. 7.8.] Little Benjamin, the ſmalleſt of the Tribes of Iſrael, 1 Sam. 9. 23. yields more by halfe, then Judah. Jeruſalem ſtood in both theſe Tribes.

Verſ. 9. Their overſeer] Or Commiſſary.

Verſ. 11. Ruler of the houſe of God] One of the High-Prieſts great Deputies, See Num. 3. 32. 1 Chron. 9. 11. 2 Chron. 19. 11.

Verſ. 12, 13, 14.] In all 1192. The totall of Prieſts and Levites 1476. and of Judah and Benjamin 1396. So that there were more Prieſts and Levites then of the Lay-people; which argues their zeal to be greateſt. There were alſo 172. Porters, who were all Levites.

Verſ. 17. To begin the thanksgiving in prayer] To ſet tunes to Pſalmes of praiſe, and to begin thoſe tunes as Precentor chief-chaunter.

Verſ. 18, 19.] See verſ. 12, 13.

Verſ. 20. Were in all the Cities] Diſperſed abroad to inſtruct the people, and to be as the ſalt of the Earth, to keep it from putrifying.

Verſ. 21. Dwelt in Ophel] See chap. 3. 26. Some will have it to be not a Tower, but a Village, near to Jeruſalem.

Verſ. 22. The Over-ſeer] The Vulgar hath it, the Biſhop.

Verſ. 23. The Kings] Viz. of Perſia. Ezra 6. 8, 9. and 7. 2, 24.

Verſ. 24. At the Kings hand] Was his Plenipotentiary.

Verſ. 25. In the villages thereof] Heb. In the daughters; for villages ſeem to be ſo to the greater Cities.

CHAP.

CHAP. XII.

Verſ. 1. Now theſe are the Prieſts and the Levites.]

ANCESTOURS to thoſe that dedicated the walls: and here regiſtred, as for honours ſake to themſelves, ſo to ſhew that their ſucceſſors, now imployed in this work, were true Prieſts and Levites of a right deſcent and alloy.

That went up with Zerubbabel] Together with thoſe that came afterwards with Ezra. Ezr. 8. 2, 3, 18, 19.

Verſ. 2. Amariah, Malluch,] See the Note on Ezr. 2. 3.

Verſe 8. Which was over the thanksgiving] Præfectus Muſicus. See Chap. 11. 17.

Verſ. 9. In their Watches] In the order of their functions, taking their turns.

Verſ. 10. Joiakim begat Eliaſhib] Who proved a very wicked Prieſt, Chap. 13. 4, 5. and his Sonne Joiada was little better, being allied to Sanballat, Chap. 13. 28.

Verſ. 11. And Jonathan begat Jadduah,] Who was High-Prieſt in Alexander the Greats time; and meeting him, in his formalities, prevailed with him to ſpare the City Jeruſalem, and to confirme the priviledges thereof, as Joſephus reporteth. Antiq. Jud. Lib. 11. c. 8.

Verſ. 22. To the reigne of Darius the Perſian] Viz. Darius Codomannus, the laſt Perſian King.

Verſ. 23. In the book of the Chronicles] Sc. 1 Chron. 9. 10, &c.

Johanan the Son of Eliaſhib] That is Jonathan the Grandchild of Eliaſhib, and the Son of Joiada.

Verſ. 27. And at the dedication of the Wall] To ſet down which is the main ſcope of this whole Chapter.

Verſ. 30. Purified themſelves, and purified the people] But firſt themſelves: becauſe who ſo would reforme others, muſt begin with himſelfe, as Lyra here noteth.

Verſ. 34. Judah and Benjamin] i. e. Men ſo called.

Verſ. 36. And Ezra before them] Before the firſt company, as Nehemiah came after the ſecond, verſe 3. As the firſt went round from the Weſt Southward till they came to the Eaſt: ſo the ſecond company went from the Weſt Northward, till they came to the Eaſt, where they both met at length in the Temple, verſe 41. Praiſing God with all ſorts of muſick vocall and inſtrumentall. This was a moſt ſolemne and ſacred proceſſion, farre different from thoſe of the Papiſts. The French Hiſtorian telleth us of their Henry, that going in proceſſion together with his Cardinall, they had in the middle betwixt them Morionem, nugas & ineptias agentem, a jeſter to make them ſport: here was good devotion therewhile. The Philoſopher told the Fidlers, he could be merry without them. And Ariſtotle being asked what he thought of muſick? anſwered, Jovem nec canere, neque cytharam pulſare, Jupiter neither ſings nor plays on an inſtrument. But though God needeth it not, careth not for it: yet ſo far as it might excite and further devotion, theſe holy Prieſts and Levites made uſe of the muſicall inſtruments of David (called muſicall inſtruments of God, 1 Chron. 16. 42) and Ezra before them, as a guide: they alſo ſang aloud, and ſo generally rejoyced, That their joy was heard even afar off. Verſ. 42, 43. This was right. Epit. Hiſt. Gallic. 191.

Verſ. 39. And from above the gate of Ephraim] Much mention is here made of the ſeverall gates and Towers; becauſe God was much ſeen in helping them ſo ſoon to build ſuch: and, by the ſight of them, they were much excited to praiſe the Lord.

Verſ. 43. For God had made them rejoyce with great joy] By giving them both matter of joy, and hearts to do it aright. Crede mihi res ſevera eſt verum gaudium, ſaith Seneca, true joy is a ſevere buſineſſe. Quid nobis cum fabulis, cum riſu? ſaith Bernard. What have we to do with jeſting and paſtime, &c? we have meat to eate, pleaſure to take that the world wots not of; we can let out our ſouls into God the fountain of all good, and rejoyce in his Word, as one that findeth great ſpoile, wherein the pleaſure is as much as the profit, Pſal. 119. 162.

Verſe 44. For Judah rejoyced] Heb. For the joy of Judah, the oile of ſpiritual gladneſſe had ſo dilatated their hearts, that they were moſt ready and willing to provide for the ſacred Miniſters; and to pay them that which was appointed, as they had alſo newly covenanted to do.

For

For the Prieſts and the Levites that waited] Heb. That ſtood, ſc. before the Lord, and ſerved in their courſes. Theſe they not onely applauded, but liberally maintained. Nowadayes Miniſters ſhall have hard work and good words, but ſlight wages. Men deale by them as Carriers do by their horſes, lay heavy burdens upon them, and then hang bells about their necks, &c.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſe 1. On that day]

THat great Faſt-day, chap. 9. 1, 2, &c. Or, after Nehemiah's return from the Court of Perſia, verſe 6. ſo the moſt expound it.

They read in the book of Moſes] Viz. In Deuteronomy, (chap. 23. 3.) called by the Rabbines Sepher tochechoth; the book of Rebukes, or of Inſtructions, upon conviction.

And therein was found written] Perquàm durum eſt, (ſo it might ſeeme to Ammonites and Moabites) ſed ita lex ſcripta eſt, The Law was perpetual and indiſpenſable: a ſigne of great wrath. Ulpian. p.

That the Ammonite and the Moabite] Lots by-blowes, and the Churches conſtant enemies.

Into the Congregation of God] i. e. Aſſemblies of Gods people, whether ſacred or civil, unleſſe proſelyted.

Ver. 2. Becauſe they met not the children of Iſrael] A bare omiſſion of obſervance, ſubjected them to divine vengeance. As God requiteth the leaſt courteſie done to his people, be it but a cup of cold water: ſo he repayeth the leaſt diſcourteſie, or but neglect of them, to whom the glorious Angels are miniſtring ſpirits, and may not think themſelves too good to ſerve them, Heb. 1. ult.

But hired Baalam againſt them] With the rewards of divination, Num. 22. 7. the wages of wickedneſſe, Jude 11. 2 Pet. 2. 15. which he greedily ran after; and not ſo much as roving at God, made the world his ſtanding-mark, till he had got a ſword in his guts.

Howbeit our God turned the curſe into a bleſſing] So he did the Popes curſe to Queen Elizabeth; and, before her, to Luther. Quò magis illi furunt, eò amplius procedo, ſaith He in a certain Epiſtle; the more they rage and ban me, the more I proceed, and proſper. Tom. 1 Epiſt. The Pope excommunicated him, the Emperour proſcribed him, &c. Omnium animi tum erant arrecti, quid illa Cæſaris & pontificis fulmina eſſent effectura. All mens minds were then ſet an end, and ſtood on tip-toes, as it were, to ſee what would be the iſſue, ſaith mine Author. A wonderful work of our God ſurely, and worthy to be chronicled! Luther is conveyed out of the way by the Elector of Saxony for ten moneths, till he would be hid no longer. Mean-while Pope Leo dieth, the Emperour Charles the fifth is firſt called into Spain to ſuppreſſe ſeditions there, and afterwards is ſo buſied in his wars with the French King, that he hath no leiſure to look after Luther. After this, when the French King was beaten by the Emperour, and carried priſoner into Spain, he was releaſed and ſent home again, upon condition, that the Emperour and He ſhould root out the Lutheran Hereſie, as they called it. But our God broke their deſignes, and turned this curſe alſo into a bleſſing. For the French King returning home, and conceiving that the conditions (that he had yeelded unto, to get off) were unequal, entereth into a League with the Pope and the State of Venice againſt the Emperour. The Pope (that he might cover his falſe dealing with the Emperour) ſends abroad his Bull, and therein calleth knave firſt. The Emperour on the otherſide complaineth of the Popes malice, and double-dealing, exhorteth him to peace, and concludeth, that it were fitter for them to unite againſt the Lutherans. And when he could prevaile nothing by writing, he aboliſheth his authority throughout all Spain, ſends his armies againſt him under the Duke of Burbon, claps him up priſoner in Saint Angelo, proclaimes open war againſt the French, &c. So that Religion got ground, and all things fell out rather unto the furtherance of the Goſpel, Phil. 1. 12. Let them curſe thy Church Lord, but do thou bleſſe: when they ariſe, let them ever be aſhamed; but let thy ſervants rejoyce, and ſpeed the better for their ill wiſhes. So be it. Scultet. Annal. Phil. 109. 28

Verſe 3. Now it came to paſſe when they had heard the Law] And were transformed into the ſame image therewith, by the Spirit of grace, who had made their flinty hearts

to

to become fleshy, &c. We use to say, As hard-hearted as a Jew. But they that relent not, repent not at the hearing of the Word, are worse then these Jewes; and it may be feared that the Lord hath a purpose to destroy them. The Law of the Lord, when but read only, is perfect, converting the soul, Psal. 19. 7. but woe to the irreformable, 2 Corinth. 4. 4.

And they separated from Israel all the mixed multitude] Vulgus promiscuum. the rabble of strangers, wherewith this people were haunted and pestered from the very first; Exod. 12. 38. Num. 11. 4. These, moved with miracles, removed with them out of Egypt, but for a mischief to them, for they drew them into sinne then, as those here did also; and were therefore worthily put away, as the Law required.

Verse 4. And before this] Before the Commandment came as a Lamp, and the Law a Light (as Prov. 6. 23.) causing a Reformation. As Toads and Serpents grow in dark and dirty sellars: so do sinful disorders in ignorant places and persons.

Eliashib the Priest] The High-Priest, but such an one, as from whom profanenesse went forth into all the land, Jer. 23. 15. The sinnes of Teachers, are Teachers of sins.

Having the oversight of the chamber] i. e. Of all the chambers of the Temple, by vertue of his office; and therefore thought belike, he might do what he listed with them (now in Nehemiah's absence) without controul.

Was allied unto Tobiah] A bitter enemy to Gods people, but sly and subtile, seeking to insinuate by alliances, and letters of perswasion; such as Cardinal Sadolet wrote to the Genevenses in Calvins absence, and Cardinal Lorraine to the Protestant Princes of Germany, that he and his brethren the Guises (those sworn swordmen of the Devil) would embrace the reformed Religion.

Verse 5. And he had prepared for him a great chamber] Called chambers, verse 9. for he had laid many chambers into one, saith Junius, by taking down the partitions, and furnishing the same for his friend and ally Tobiah.

Verse 6. But in all this time was not I at Jerusalem] And thence it was that things grew so farre out of order. So when Moses was gone into the Mount, the people set up the golden Calf: they turned aside quickly, saith God, Exod. 32. 8. So were the Corinthians and Galatians so soon [illegible] as Saint Pauls back was but turned upon them, Gal. 1. 6. Levitate prorsus desultoriâ. And so were these Jewes, notwithstanding their better purposes, promises, Covenants; yea, and beginnings of Reformation. See chap. 10. 30.

And after certaine dayes) Heb. At the end of dayes; that is, at a years end, as Vatablus and Genebrard expound it. No longer then a year was Nehemiah away from his Government, (to shew his dutiful respect to his Master the King of Persia, and to negotiate for his Nation) but all things were out of frame, so well had the Devil and his instruments bestirred them. But Junius rendereth the text, exactis aliquot annis, certaine years being past: and Lyra thus, at the end of his dayes, or of his life, when he now waxed old, he had a desire to go and reforme things amisse at Jerusalem, and to die, and lay his bones there. So likewise Funccius, the eighth year after his returne to Artaxerxes, which was also the last year of his reigne. And indeed one would wonder how in lesse then one years space things so well settled, should be so farre disjoynted; but that the Devil is ὁ πανσάτος the great Troubler, and had by sinne hurled (at first) confusion over the whole creation, in an instant.

Verse 7. And I came to Jerusalem] There was his heart before; Animus est ubi amat, non ubi animat: No sooner therefore had he got his congedelere at Court, but he hies to Jerusalem, as the Doves do to their windows. Fugiendum est ad clarissimam patriam: ibi pater, ibi omnia, saith Plotinus the Philosopher; hasten we all to our heavenly home, there's all that heart can wish, &c. Nehemiah lacketh nothing with Artaxerxes, Hadad with Pharaoh; Yet in any case, will go into his own Countrey, 1 Kings 11. 22. Rivers run into the Sea, whence they came: the Dove resteth not but upon the Ark. Nescio quâ natale solum dulcedine cunctos Ducit ---- Aug. de civ. Dei l. 9. c. 16. Ovid.

And understood of the evil that Eliashib did] As Joseph brought his brethrens evil report to their father, Gen. 37. 2. as the houshold of Chloe declared unto Saint Paul the contentions at Corinth, 1 Cor. 1. 11. so did some good souls this High-Priests miscarriages to Nehemiah, and that in an Ordinance; not to disgrace him, but to reclaime him, and to free themselves from the guilt of a sinful silence.

Verse 8. And it grieved me sore] Such was his zeale for God, that he could not bear it; no more could Phineas those two naughty packs, nor Paul the Idolatry of Athens, παρῳξύνετο, Acts 17. 16. his ſpirit was moved, he was in a fit, yea almoſt beſides himſelf, as the word ſignifieth. This the mad world counteth madneſſe, 2 Cor. 5. 13. but madneſſe in tis caſe is better then mopiſhneſſe, and the true Zelot may anſwer his adverſaries as David did Michal, 2 Sam. 6. 21. or as Baſil did the threatening Prefect, who told him that he was mad, Opto me in æternum ſic delirare, I wiſh I may be ſo mad to my lives end.

Therefore I caſt forth all the houſhold-ſtuffe of Tobiah] As a profane thing, not fit to be in ſo holy a place. True zeal, as fire, is active, and faith, ſhall I budge, ſtop, or ſtep back, becauſe hoc Ithacus velit? remit of my diligence for fear of a frown, loſſe, miſchief? Out of doores with this bondwoman and her ſonne; down with this piece of graſſe, Let Adoniah die, though Bathſheba intercede for him, &c.

Verſe 5 Then I commanded] This was Governour-like; and bleſſed be He that hath a ſtomach for God, and will do his utmoſt for him, as occaſion requireth. Of Nehemiah it might well be ſaid, as Chryſoſtome doth of Peter, that he was like a man made all of fire, walking among ſtubble; or, like Baſil, who was ſaid to be a pillar of fire; he was of ſuch a maſculine, diſengaged, couragious diſpoſition.

And they cleanſed the chamber] The Levites did, with their legal rites and purifications, according to their office, which Nehemiah would not invade.

And thither brought I againe] And ſo ſet things to rights, as our late Reformers began happily to do; but Satan hath hitherto hindred them.

Verſe 10. And I perceived] Heb. I took knowledge, and was ſoone ſenſible of it, as a great publike miſchief: for ad tenuitatem beneficiorum neceſſariò ſequitur ſocordia ſacerdotum, leane benefices make leaden Miniſters. This, the Magiſtrate muſt look to, and provide that they may have the double honour that is due to them, of countenance and maintenance; or elſe Religion will ſoone go to wreck.

Panormit.

1 Tim. 5 17.

That the portions of the Levites had not been given them] And why? becauſe the High-Prieſt was ſo bad, and the Levites therefore thought to be little better. How apt are men to diſpute God out of his own? How witty to ſave their purſes? How ready to ſay with William Rufus, The Church-bread is ſweet-bread? and with Julian the Apoſtate, to take away the Miniſters maintenance, pretending conſcience; for that too much Living would be a burden to them: and who knows how Eliaſhib and his Levites may miſimploy it?

For the Levites and ſingers that did the work] And are therefore worthy of their wages, muſt have their honorary ſtipends, or cannot ſubſiſt; are not of the Chamaleon-kind, to live by ayre: but, as harveſt-labourers, muſt have that which is good; as Oxen that tread out the corne, muſt have more then ſtraw allowed them.

Were fled every one to his field] For ſtark need, in the fail of Temple-maintenance; they were glad to do as they might, and let their charge lie. Though Tythes were not paid, yet they had ſome glebe-land to live upon.

Verſe 11. Then contended I with the Rulers] Who had let looſe the golden reines of authority, and, by a paſſive Miniſtery at leaſt, ſuffered this ſacrilege, whilſt they bare the ſword in vaine, if they were not chiefe actours in it: as Luther complaineth of the Rulers of his time, Niſi ſupereſſet ſpolium Ægypti quod rapuimus Papæ, &c. If we had not ſome of the ſpoiles of Egypt, pulled from the Pope, all we Miniſters of the Goſpel might be famiſhed: and this little that is left us, is violently taken from us by the civil Magiſtrate. Pariſhes and Schooles are polled and ſpoiled by them, as if they meant to ſtarve us all. Thus Luther, and more to this purpoſe.

Luth. in Gen. 47.

Why is the houſe of God forſaken] By your ſlackneſſe and covetouſneſſe, contrary to your Covenant, chap. 10. 39?

And I gathered them together] i. e. The ſcattered Levites, that Gods ſervice might be no longer intermitted, and his wrath thereby provoked. Thus Nehemiah, whatever his hand found to do, did it with all his might; as David danced, as Baruc builded, &c. he went through-ſtitch with his work.

Eccleſ. 8. 10.

And ſet them in their place] Heb. Made them ſtand in their ſtanding, as if abſque ſtationibus iſtis non ſtaret mundus, without thoſe ſtandings, the world could not ſtand.

Verſe 12. Then brought all Judah] Then, when there was no other remedy. There muſt be a compulſory means, or Miniſters ſhall be poorly maintained. Quòd ſi ſuſtentandi eſſent de contributione populi, miſerè profectò & duriter viverent, ſaith Luther. If once they be brought to live upon the peoples benevolence, they ſhall have a poor life of it. Once (in times of Popery) there was need of a Statute of Mortmain, providing that they ſhould give no more to the Church. But now 'tis otherwiſe: theſe laſt and worſt worſt times have ſeene the ſprings of bounty, like Jordan turned back; which heretofore did run ſo freſh and faſt into the Church. Our Stateſmen have Miniſters maintenance now under debate; and much lifting there is by a levelling-party (not without a Jeſuite to help them) at Tythes, and College-lands. The Lord direct our Rulers, and preſerve us out of the hands of thoſe hateful Harpyes. This was written Jul. 30. A. D. 1653.

Verſe 13. And I made treaſurers] Nehemiah left nothing undone that might befit a vigilant and valiant Governour. He was omnibus numeris abſolutus, every way compleat.

For they were counted faithful] A ſingular praiſe in perſons entruſted, 1 Cor. 4. 2. See Nehem. 7. 2. Num. 12. 7. Such men as theſe are now gone in pilgrimage (as one ſaith) and their return is altogether uncertain. When one deſired to ſee Alexanders treaſures, he ſhewed him not his wealth, but his friends. Nehemiah might have done the like by theſe faithful treaſurers, precious pieces ſurely, rare and rich jewels.

And their office was] Heb. It was upon them. Duty is a debt; which till it be diſcharged, a good heart cannot reſt.

To diſtribute unto their brethren] To a treaſure are required, 1. A laying in: 2. A lying hid: 3. A drawing out: So to a Treaſurer, that he receive readily, keep carefully, diſtribute prudently.

Verſe 14. Remember me, O my God] See chap. 5. 19.

And wipe not out my good deeds] Forget not my labour of love: God requireth us to be his remembrancers, who yet needeth it not, Heb. 6. 10. there is a book of remembrance written before him, Mal. 3. 16. and good Nehemiah would not be wiped out of that book, nor blotted out of the book of life, Rev. 3. 5. That wretched Monk died blaſphemouſly, who ſaid, Redde mihi æternam vitam quam debes, Give me heaven which thou oweſt me.

That I have done] Sure it is, ſaith Auſtin, that we do what good we do: but it is God alone, who cauſeth us ſo to do. Say therefore, Not unto us Lord, not to us, but to thy Name be the praiſe.

Verſe 15. In thoſe dayes ſaw I in Judah] He was centoculus, and had his eye in every corner, to finde out and redreſſe abuſes: wherein he was inceſſant and indefatigable. He choſe rather to be counted a buſie Juſtice, then a quiet Gentleman.

Some treading wine-preſſes on the Sabbath-day] Theſe Jewes were not ſo looſe, but their poſterity at this day are (in ſome reſpects) as much over-ſtrict, as is elſewhere noted.

Dum vitant ſtulti vitium, in contraria currunt.

And bringing in ſheaves] As a work of neceſſity.

As alſo wine, grapes and figs] As a work of mercy. So they would plead likely. Sinne and ſhifting came into the world together, no evil wants its excuſe: but the covering is too ſhort, and God will waſh off that varniſh, with rivers of brimſtone.

And all manner of burthens] They did not ſo much as keep Sabbatum Aſinorum, a reſt from ſervile employments. See Jer. 17. 21.

And I teſtified againſt them] i.e. I challenged them as impious for ſo doing, and provokers of Gods wrath, traytours to the State, Verſe 18. This ſhould every man do in his place. A certain Indian coming by, and ſeeing one of the New-Engliſh profaning the Lords day by felling of a tree, ſaid to him, Thou much mached man, that is, Thou very wicked man, What, break you Gods day? knoweſt thou not that this is the Lords-day in Maſſaquſets? that is, in one of the Engliſh plantations ſo called? New-Eng. firſt fruits.

In the day wherein they ſold victuals] A practiſe too much in uſe in this Nation, till keeping of Markets and Faires on the Chriſtian Sabbath was put down by authority; and eſpecially by that late good Act for the ſanctification of the Lords-day, groſſely broken in this kinde, under many of the Biſhops noſes; yea, made a voyder and dunghill, for all refuſe buſineſſes.

Verſe 16. There dwelt men of Tyre alſo] Phœnician Merchants had their Factors in Jeruſalem.

And all manner of ware] Merchandiſe, for Tyre was a great Mart-town, and famous for fiſhing, Ezek. 27.

And ſold on the Sabbath] Which they ought not to have done: for that was Gods market-day, and not mans.

Unto the children of Judah] Who were therefore worſe then the Tyrians, becauſe they ought to have been better: therefore wrath ſhall be upon the Jew firſt, and then upon the Gentile, Rom. 2.

And in Jeruſalem] This holy City was become an harlot. Filthineſſe in a Stewes is nothing ſo odious as in a Virgin: a nettle in a Wilderneſſe, is not ſo unſightly as in a Garden. In a land of uprightneſſe to do wickedly, is an aggravating circumſtance, Iſa. 26. 10.

Verſe 17. Then contended I with the Nobles] Heb. With the white ones; that had white-clothes, but black ſouls. The ſnow-drift covers many a muck-hill. See ver. 11.

What evil thing is this that ye do?] Or ſuffer others to do at leaſt, and are therefore worthily ſhent; as Moſes alſo was for like cauſe, Exod. 16.28.

And profane the Sabbath day] As if it were a common day, and not Gods encloſure, holy and honourable. Should men thus rob God of his right, unmound his Several, make falſe entry upon his free-hold? Hath He not ſingled out this day for his own, as He did Iſrael out of all Nations, the tree of knowledge out of all the trees of the garden, and out of all the world, (which is his) the tenth? This is the day which the Lord hath made, &c. 'tis a day like that night, Exod. 12. 42. to be kept holy unto the Lord; that day of the Lord which all his people muſt keep throughout their generations. To profane it or wound it, is here called an evil thing with an accent, a wickedneſſe with a witneſſe.

Verſe 18. Did not your fathers thus?] And will ye abet, and adde to their wicked practiſes? Will ye needs eſpouſe their ſinnes, as a ſeed of Serpents?

And did not our God bring all this evil upon us?] And that juſtly, becauſe Belſhazzar-like, though we knew all this, yet we lifted up our ſelves againſt the Lord of heaven, as the horſe that caſteth his rider, and riſeth up againſt him. Hath ever any waxed fierce againſt God, and proſpered? Was not he that but gathered ſticks upon the Sabbath-day paid home with ſtones? Was there not for this very ſinne a fire kindled in the gates of Jeruſalem, that devoured the Palaces thereof, Jer. 17. 27? Juſtly is he made an example, that will not take example by others: and it is a ſure both preſage and deſert of ruine, not to be warned.

Dan. 5. 22. 23. Job. 9. 4.

Yet ye bring more wrath] As if ye had a minde to wreſtle a fall with the Almighty, and to try for maſtery. But do ye provoke the Lord to anger? are ye ſtronger then he?

Verſe 19. When the gates of Jeruſalem began to be dark] As they did betimes, becauſe the mountains were round about Jeruſalem, Pſal. 125. 2.

Leo Modena. Before the Sabbath] That there might be a due preparation, without interruption. At this day in many Cities where the Jewes reſide, there is one goes about and proclaimes the approaching of the Sabbath, about half an hour before Sun-ſet the day before; that they may ſet all aſide to ſanctifie it.

I commanded that the gates ſhould be ſhut] And thereby all ſuch occaſions of profaning ſhut out.

Acts & Mon. And charged that they ſhould not be opened till after the Sabbath] So King Edgar ordained that Sunday ſhould be ſolemnized from Saturday nine of the clock, till Munday morning here in this Land, that God might ſurely have his due. The Jewes of Tiberias began the Sabbath ſooner then others. Thoſe at Tſepphore continued it longer, adding de profano ad ſacrum. Hence R. Joſe wiſhed that his portion might be with thoſe of Tiberias, and ended it with thoſe of Tſepphore. Buxtorf.

And ſome of my ſervants ſet I at the gates] To keep them carefully, and to prevent profanations. How the Athenians amerced thoſe that came not to the Aſſemblies on holy-dayes, hurdling up all the ſtreets, except them that led to the Eccleſia, taking away all their ſaleable wares, &c. See Rous his Archæolog. Attic. pag. 103.

Verſe 20. So the Merchants —— lodged without Jeruſalem] They would not eaſily be ſaid, or take an anſwer, ſo deſirous they were of ſome takings from the Jewes. There is nothing in the world that is more pertinacious, and that cleaveth cloſer to a man then a ſtrong luſt, ſay it be covetouſneſſe, wantonneſſe, paſſionateneſſe, or any the like, intreat it to be gone, as Naomi did Ruth, threaten it as Abner did Aſael, or as Nehemiah did theſe Merchants, you prevail nothing, till God comes and ſtrikes a parting-blow, &c.

Verſe 21. Why lodge ye about the wall?] His care was alſo, leſt God ſhould be diſhonoured in the Suburbs. A little fire warmes but a little way off: when a great one caſteth about its heat farre and near. He feared alſo leſt thoſe within the walls, ſeeing ſeeing them, might be tempted to wiſh themſelves with them; as when Sylla the Roman lay before the walls of Athens, the Citizens minds were with him, though their bodies were kept from him.

I will lay hands on you] I will lay you faſt enough: be packing therefore. The beſt way to be rid of ſinne, is to threaten it, puniſh it, by the practice of mortification, to handle it roughly. We are not debters to the fleſh, Rom. 8. 12. We owe it nothing but ſtripes, nothing but the blue eye Saint Paul gave it, 1 Cor. 9. 27. ὑπωπιάζω.

Verſe 22. And I commanded the Levites] He might do it, as their Governour. How then can Popiſh Prieſts exempt themſelves from the power of the civil Magiſtrate? and ſay, as thoſe ſhavelings did to our Henry the ſecond, when they laſhed him on the bare till the blood followed, Domine, noli minari; nos enim de tali curia ſumus, quæ conſuevit imperare regibus, & Imperatoribus; that is, Sir, ſpare your threats; for we are of that high Court of Rome which is wont to Lord it over Kings and Emperours? Might he not have well replyed, Ye take too much upon you, Ye ſonnes of Levi; or rather, ye limbs of Antichriſt?

Come and keep the gates] The Temple-gates, with ——— Procul hinc, procul eſte profani. In Greece the Prieſt, at their ſolemne ſacrifices, was wont to aske τίς τῇδε Who's there? and the people were to anſwer, πολλοὶ τ' ἀγαθοί τε πάρεισι. Here are many, and thoſe alſo good men.

To ſanctifie the Sabbath day] By ſevering the precious from the vile: and ſeeing that all things were rightly carried by themſelves and the reſt.

Remember me, &c.] See verſe 14.

And ſpare me] Meritum meum eſt miſericordia Domini. Horreo quicquid de meo eſt, ut ſim meus. Thomas Aquinas lying on his death-bed, and being about to receive the Lords Supper, beſought the Lord with tears that he would ſpare him according to his abundant goodneſſe: and ſnatching up the Bible, he hugg'd it, and ſaid, I beleeve all the contents of this bleſſed Book. The like is reported of William Wickam, Founder of New-College Oxon, and of Charles the fifth Emperour, and ſome other wiſer Papiſts. Bern. Volater.

Verſe 23. In thoſe dayes ſaw I Jewes] Outwardly, at leaſt, (as the Apoſtle diſtinguiſheth, Rom. 2. 28.) and that alſo was then a prerogative, Rom. 3. 1. and ſhall appear to be ſo againe, when their long-looked for converſion-day is come, Romans 11.

That had married wives of Aſhdod] Outlandiſh-wives, and of another Religion: and with theſe they cohabited, as the Hebrew word here importeth.

Verſe 24. And their children ſpake halfe in the ſpeech of Aſhdod] They had a mixture of their mothers both ſpeech and ſpirit, the birth followed the belly, the Concluſion followed the weaker Propoſition.

And could not ſpeak in the Jewes language] Though it were that of their fathers. Mothers are moſt about children, and have the greater advantage to perfume them, or poyſon them. But what mad fellowes were thoſe old Britaines or Welſh-men, who driven out of their owne Countrey by the Saxons, came into little Britaine in France: where, when they had married wives, they are ſaid to have cut out their tongues, leſt they ſhould corrupt the language of their children? Hence the Brittiſh or Welſh language remaineth ſtill in that Countrey. Heyl. Geog.

Verſe 25. And curſed them] i.e. I denounced Gods heavy curſe and vengeance upon them (according to that themſelves had wiſhed and entered into, chap. 10. 30.) in caſe they repented not. This is nothing then, in favour of our curſing men, who are curſed men, &c.

And ſmote certaine of them] So far was his heart enraged with an holy hatred of their ſinne, that he could not forbear them. So when Charles the fifth had heard that Farneſius, (General of the Popes forces) had raviſhed certaine Ladies, he brake out into this ſpeech (and was never in all his life obſerved to be more angry at any thing) Si adeſſet impurus ille Farneſius, manu meâ confoderem., O if I had here that filthy fellow, I would ſlay him with mine own hand.

And made them ſwear by God] So they had done before, chap. 10. 29, 30. But now alaſſe they were all gone aſide, they were altogether become filthy, they ſtank above ground. He takes therefore another oath of them, &c. Pſal. 14. 3.

Verſe 26. Did not Solomon King of Iſrael, &c.] Did not he deviate and prevaricate in his old age, ſhamefully turning from the Lord who had appeared unto him twice? Did not his ſtrange wives draw him to ſtrange practiſes; inſomuch as ſome have doubted of his ſalvation, and Bellarmine reckoneth him (but wrongfully) amongſt reprobates?

Yet among many Nations was there no King like him] For honour, pleaſure, wiſdome, and wealth, &c. the abundance he had of theſe drew out his ſpirits, and diſſolved him. See Mark 10. 23, 25. 1 Tim. 6. 9. Iſa. 39. 1, 2.

Who was beloved of his God] His cereulum, his darling, his Jedidiah, 2 Sam. 12. 25. but he did not reciprocate: his heart was diſ-joynted and hung looſe from the Lord, whom he grievouſly provoked by his ſenſuality and apoſtaſie.

And God made him King over all Iſrael] Not by right of inheritance (for he was a younger brother) but by ſpecial deſignation. Yet he defiled that Throne whereunto God had ſo graciouſly advanced him: this was a great aggravation of his ſinne: 2 Sam. 12. 7, 8. Deut. 32. 12, 19. Amos 2. 9.

Nevertheleſſe, even him did outlandiſh women cauſe to ſinne] And that moſt ſhamefully: Never was there a wiſer man than Solomon; and never any Saint fell into more fooliſh luſts. Job, who had the greateſt adverſity that ever man felt, fell much: but Solomon, who had the greateſt proſperity that ever man ſaw, fell more.

Verſe 27. To do all this great evil] Here are three articles in the Hebrew, importing the hainouſneſſe of this ſinne. See the like Gen. 39. 9.

To tranſgreſſe againſt our God] No ſinne can be little, becauſe a diſloyalty (ſo the word ſignifieth) againſt ſo great a God, and his moſt holy Law; a ſacrilegious treſpaſſe.

Verſe 28. And one of the ſonnes of Jehoiada] His grand-ſonne Manaſſes, brother to Jaddua the High-Prieſt, a vile Apoſtata, and firſt author of that famous ſchiſme, and deadly feud betwixt the Samaritans and Jews.

John 4. 2 c. Joſeph. lib. 11. Antiq cap. 7.

Was ſonne in Law to Sanballat] Who, to keep him to his wife, built a faire Temple on Mount Gerizim, hard by the City Sichem, and made Manaſſes chief Prieſt thereof.

Therefore I chaſed him from me] I cauſed him to be excommunicated, and baniſhed from amongſt us.

Remember them, O my God] For evil, as me for good, verſe 31. and in both remember the relation that is betwixt thee and my ſoul. Woe be to thoſe whom Gods people do thus turn over to Him to be puniſhed.

Becauſe they have defiled the Prieſthood] Corruptio optimi peſſima: as ſweeteſt wine makes the ſowreſt vineger, A wicked Prieſt is the worſt creature upon earth.

And the Covenant, &c.] See the Note on Mal. 2. 4.

Verſe 30. Thus cleanſed I them from all ſtrangers] As from ſo much filth and rubbiſh. I made them either put away their ſtrange wives, or quit their places. He did not raiſe a duſt onely, but not remove it, as Luther wittily ſaith of the Cardinals and Prelats, that met at Rome about Reformation of the Church. Theſe he compared to Foxes that came to ſweep an houſe full of duſt with their tailes; and inſtead of ſweeping it out, ſwept it all about the houſe, and made a great ſmoke for the while; but when they were gone, the duſt all fell down againe. Nehemiah made cleane work, and ſo purged the Prieſthood, that he made it ſhine againe, as the word here ſignifieth: the Prieſts were (as Chryſoſtome ſaith all Miniſters ſhould be) puriores cœlo, clearer then the azured skie; and as thoſe Nazarites, Lam. 4. 7. purer then ſnow, whiter then milk, &c.

Sleid. Com.

Verſe 31. And for the wood-offering] See chap. 10. 34, 35.

Remember me, O my God, for good] See chap. 5. 19. and 13. 15, 22. He brags not, but prays, producing his good deeds as teſtimonies of his ſincerity, whereof he begs acceptance. And this is a ſweet cloſe of the Old Teſtament, (ſay our laſt and largeſt Annotations upon the Bible) for this was the laſt hiſtory and book thereof, though the book of Eſther be ſet after it. Malachy propheſied anon after the Temple was built, as we ſee, (ſaith Maſter Pemble,) by his reproving of that ſinne, in corrupting the holy ſeed by marrying ſtrangers. Sixtus Senenſis placeth him as low as about five hundred years before Chriſt. Many of the ancients make him to be the ſame with Ezra. Nehemiah then, as it may ſeeme, hath the honour of putting a percloſe to the Old Teſtament: and he doth it with this ſhort, but pithy prayer, which he uttereth (as Luther uſed to pray) tantâ reverentiâ, ut ſi Deo, & tantâ fiduciâ, ut ſi amico: with ſo great reverence, as to God; and yet with ſo great confidence, as to his God, a God in Covenant with him. Remember me, O my God, for good. Fiat, Fiat.

Bib. Ser. 11.

In vit. Luth.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the BOOK of ESTHER.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 1. Now it came to paſſe in the dayes of Ahaſhuerus]

THis Book is in the Hebrew called Eſther: becauſe ſhe is a chief party therein mentioned and memorized. The Rabbines call it Megillath Eſther, that is, the volume of Eſther; and further tell us that there be five ſuch volume of Scripture-books; viz. Solomons Song, Ruth, Lamentations, Eccleſiaſtes, and this of Eſther; which they uſe to read all over in their Synagogues, at five ſeveral times of the year. 1. Solomons Song, at the Paſſeover; in remembrance of their once-deliverance out of Egypt, and their future ſalvation by the Meſſiah. 2. Ruth at Pentecoſt; becauſe therein is ſet down the Genealogy of David their firſt King. 3. The Lamentations of Jeremy on the ninth day of the fifth moneth (that is, of July,) in regard of the Babyloniſh captivity, and ruine of the Temple. 4. Eccleſiaſtes, at the feaſt of Tabernacles; in a thankful remembrance of the Divine Providence aſſerted in that Book; and exerciſed over them in a ſpecial manner, when they wandred in the wilderneſſe. 5. Laſtly, this of Eſther, on the fourteenth and fifteenth dayes of the moneth Adar or February: and as oft as they hear mention of Haman, they do, even to this day, with their fiſts and hammers beat upon the benches and boards, as if they did beat upon Hamans head. They tell us that this Book was written by Mordecai himſelf, an eye-witneſſe and a maine party, according to chap. 9. 20. and have ever reckoned it among the Chetubin or Hagiographæ, that is, the Books of holy Scripture. Indeed, becauſe they finde not the name of God or Lord in this whole Book, they have a cuſtome to caſt it to the ground before they read it. But they need not: for as the Ancient Heathens uſed to write upon their books Θεὸς, Θεὸς, God, God, ſo might the Jewes upon this; there being no where in Scripture found more remarkable paſſages and acts of Gods immediate providence for his calamitous people, then in this. Surely (ſaith a great Divine) like as a man by a chaine made up of ſeveral linkes, ſome of Gold, others of Silver, ſome of Braſſe, Iron, or Tin, may be drawn out of a pit: ſo (it may here be ſeen that) the Lord by the concurrence of ſeveral ſubordinate things which have no manner of dependance or natural coincidence among themſelves, hath wonderfully wrought the deliverance of his Church; that it might appear to be the work of his own hand.

R. Abraham Hiſpanus cognom. σοφος.

Pauſan.

In

In the dayes of Ahaſhuerus] That is of Xerxes, the terrour of Greece, called Ahaſhueroſh, that is, an hereditary Prince, begotten by King Darius, and borne of a Kings daughter, viz. Atoſſa, daughter to Cyrus, and heir of the Kingdome by lineal deſcent. Such an hereditary Prince was our Henry the eighth. Greek Authors alſo call Xerxes, Oxyares, and his wife Ameſtris, which ſeemeth to be the ſame with Eſther, who is called Ameſtris by a like compoſition, ſaith an Interpreter, as Hamans father was called Ham-Adata, an honourable addition to a name among the Perſians.

Vide Scalig. de Emend. temp. lib. 6. Herod. l. 7. & 9. Fevardent. in loc.

This is Ahaſhuerus which reigned from India even unto Æthiopia] Viz. Incluſivè, ut loquuntur. This muſt needs be Xerxes; for he ſubdued Ethiopia, and thereupon made this great feaſt. He was Lord, we ſee, of a very great part of the habitable world; as is now the great Turk, not inferiour in greatneſſe and ſtrength, to the mightieſt Monarchs that ever yet were upon the face of the earth. No part of the world is left untouched by him but America onely; not more fortunate, ſaith one, with her rich mines, then in that ſhe is ſo farre from ſo great and dangerous an enemy. Nevertheleſſe of all this greatneſſe (belluine rather then genuine) what ſaith Luther? Turcicum imperium quantum quantum eſt, &c. The Turkiſh Empire in its utmoſt extent, is but a cruſt caſt to his dogs, by the great houſe-keeper of the world. The inheritance he reſerves for his children: who though held here to ſtrait allowance, yet are far dearer to him then the worlds greateſt darlings, as the poor captive Jewes were, then this great Emperour. Thoſe that ſeek a myſterie in this hiſtory tell us, that Ahaſhueroſh typically repreſenteth God the Father ſoveraigning over all Kingdomes and creatures on earth; chuſing ſome to be heires of heaven, and purifying them for that purpoſe. Mardochai (ſignifying bitter, and contrite) ſetteth forth Chriſt, ſay they, broken for our ſinnes, and ſuffering the bitter wrath of God. Eſther (being the ſame with Alma, a pure Virgin, ſecreted and ſecured from defilement) is a lively image of the Church, unſpotted of the world, and provided for by her Mordecai. The diſdainful Vaſhti (taking her name from Shatha, to drink) is a fit effigies of the world, proud and luxurious, and therefore excluded heaven. Haman (ſignifying a tumultuous and obſtreperous perſon) repreſents the Devil, reſtleſſe and rageful, but to his own utter ruine, &c. Theſe are pretty things, but not ſo proper. The Popiſh Commentatours are full of them.

Turk. Hiſt. 132

Eſay 7. 14.

Over an hundred and ſeven and twenty Provinces] Seven more then were in Darius the Mede his time, Dan. 6. 1. Monarchs will be ſtill adding; and although a man were Monarch of the whole world; yea, had the command of Moone, and Stars, yet would he ſtill be peeping beyond them for more, more. Herodotus reckons up ſundry ſatrapies under the King of Perſia, out of which he received, yearly, fourteene thouſand five hundred and threeſcore Euboian talents: ſo that this Monarchy is fitely compared (in Daniel) to the ſilver breaſt and armes in Nebuchadnezzars image.

Verſe 2. When the King Ahaſhuerus ſate on the throne] Having peace with all men, being quiet and ſecure; though this laſted not long; for he was ſhamefully foiled by the Grecians (againſt whom he led an Army of two millions of men) and forced to flie back againe over Helleſpont, in a poor fiſhers-boat; which being over-burdened, had ſunk all, if the Perſians by the caſting away themſelves had not ſaved the life of their King. Omnia ſunt hominum tenui pendentia filo, &c.

Which was in Suſan the Palace] See Nehem. 1. 1. Ptolomy, Strabo, and Pliny tell us, that in this City (ſcituate upon the river Choaſpes) was that famous Palace of Cyrus, which was adorned with marble walls, golden pillars, and great ſtore of precious ſtones, ſhining as ſo many ſtars from the roofe and ſides of it, to the dazling of the eyes of the beholders. Here it was, likely, that the Kings of Perſia ſate to hear cauſes under a vine of gold, ſet with ſmaragds; as with ſo many cluſters of grapes.

Ptol. l. 6 c. 3. Strab. lib. 15. Plin. l. 6. c. 27. Herod. l. 5. Athen. l. 12. c. 3

Verſe 3. In the third year of his reigne he made a feaſt] Such a feaſt, as that all other feaſts were but hunger to it; whether we regard the number of gueſts, the largeneſſe of preparation, or the continuance of time: Yet it had an end. But ſo hath not the feaſt of a good conſcience. Prov. 15. 15. See the Note there.

Unto all his Princes and his ſervants] To gratifie them for their former valour and victory; and to enflame them to a new expedition, viz. againſt Greece; for the conqueſt whereof he was now addreſſing himſelf: As alſo that his glory and wealth appearing herein might make them all the more willing to live in ſubjection to him, ſo royal and munificent a Prince.

The power of Perſia] Or to the army of Perſia and Media.

The Nobles] Satrapis, μεγιστᾶνες, of which the word Parthemim is made, as ſome think.

think. Others derive it of Perath, quaſi principes Euphratæi, the Princes that were beyond the river Euphrates. Kimchi Arias.

Verſe 4. When he ſhewed the riches of his glorious Kingdome] Or, that he might ſhew, &c. There were other ends of this feaſt, as was before noted; but this is inſtanced by the Holy Ghoſt, to ſet forth the pride and vanity of this great Monarch, abuſing Gods gifts to his own ambition, and priding himſelf in that wealth which had been gotten by the hard labour of his poor ſubjects, from whom haply his Exactours had received no leſſe ſummes of curſes then of coyne. O curas hominum! ò quantum eſt in rebus inane!

And the honour of his excellent majeſty] Atqui virtute, non vanitate acquirenda eſt gloria, ſaith the Oratour, glory is to be gotten by vertue, and not by theſe, like vanities. Hezekiah ſmarted for his folly in this kinde; Nebuchadnezzar much more. This great Potentate was ſhortly after brought low enough. Cic de Orat. & de offic.

Deſinat elatis quiſquam confidere rebus;
Magna repentè ruunt, ſumma cadunt ſubitò. Claudian.

Many dayes, even an hundred and fourſcore dayes] An hundred fourſcore and five dayes, ſaith Joſeph Ben Gorion. So long laſted the firſt feaſt: though Lyra will have it, that ſo long they were in preparing, but the feaſting was not till after theſe dayes expired; and that then both Prince and people were feaſted together ſeven dayes. Of the Sybarites indeed we read, that when they made great feaſts, they invited their women a twelve month before, that they might come the more richly and luxuriouſly attired, and might be the more ſumptuouſly entertained. But the text plainly ſhewes, that Lyra here did delirare, miſſe the meaning: for after that, the Princes, from ſundry parts had been half a year in feaſting.

Verſe 5. The King made a feaſt unto all the people] This was not amiſſe, ſo that care were taken that no irregulares gulares were found amongſt them; for Kings ſhould carry themſelves toward their people as kindly as parents do toward their children, and ſhepherds toward their ſheep. Are they not therefore called patres patriæ, Fathers of their Countrey, and Shepherds of their people? David and Cyrus were taken from the ſheepfolds to feed men. Ariſt. 8. Eth. Plin. Panegyr. ποίμνιος λαῶν. Pſal. 78. 70.

Both unto great and ſmall] Pell-mell, one with another, to ſhew his liberality; which yet he might better have beſtowed in another way, then in belly-chear, and ſuch open-houſe-keeping to all comers without difference: ſith this is rather prodigality then bounty.

Seven dayes] Too long together to be a feaſting; ſith at ſuch times men are ſo apt to exceed and out-laſh; eating that on earth that they muſt digeſt in hell; and drowning both bodies and ſouls in wine and ſtrong drink, as Richard the third did his brother Clarence in a Butt of Malmſey.

In the court of the garden] In the banquetting-houſe, or ſub dio, in the open aire in the garden, where they had elbow-roome, and all manner of delights, fit to have beene ſeaſoned and allayed with the ſight of a ſepulcher (the Jewes built their Tombs aforehand in their gardens) or elſe of a deaths-head (as was the manner of the Egyptians at their great feaſts) to keep them from ſurfetting.

Verſe 6. Where were white, greene and blew hangings] Rich and royal tapeſtry, ſet forth with variety of colours, pleaſant to the eye.

Faſtened with cords of fine linnen] More precious then ſilk.

And pillars of marble] To bear up the hangings, that the gueſts might the better behold them, and be defended by them from winde, duſt, and heat.

The beds] Whereon they ſate at meat (which was the manner of all thoſe Eaſterne parts) their bodies ſo compoſed, as that the upper part thereof being ſomewhat bent and bowed, the reſt lay along.

Were of gold and ſilver] The bedſteds were. See Amos 6. 4. & 2. 8. Jer. 23. 41.

Upon a pavement of red and blue and white and black marble] Or, porphyry or cryſtal. All very coſtly and ſtately: And theſe are thoſe things that make us deſirous to live longer here, as Charles the fifth told the Duke of Venice, who had ſhewed him his fair Palace richly furniſhed. But what ſaid Nugas the Scythian Prince to certaine Embaſſadours who brought him brave and rich preſents? Will theſe ſave a man from ſickneſſe? Will they ſtave off death? Do not theſe outward gawdes and gayeties carry away the heart Hæc ſunt quæ nos faciunt invitos mori.

from the love and care of better things? Solomon ſaith as much in his ſacred Retractations: and Charles the fifth (who beſides other Territories and Dominions, had twenty eight Kingdomes) voluntarily gave over the Empire as a burden; and curſing his honours in his old age, his trophees, riches, royalties, ſaid to them all, Abite hinc, abite longè, Be gone all of you; get you hence. Abi perdita beſtia quæ me perdidiſti, as Cornelius Agrippa ſaid on his death-bed, to his familiar Devil, Be packing thou wretched beaſt, that haſt undone me for ever.

Val Max. Chriſtian.

Mornay.

Delrio. Diſq. Mag. to. 3. l. 6.

Verſe 7. And they gave them drink] Think the ſame of meat alſo: but the whole feaſt hath its denomination in the original from drinking; becauſe at ſuch times they drank freely, and many times more then did them good. The Perſians are infamous for their intemperancy, though they had Lawes to the contrary: and Xenophon tells us that of old they were otherwiſe. Onely once a year their King had licence to be drunk, viz. when they ſacrificed to the Sun.

Quia in conviviis largiter bibi ſolet. Corn. Nepos in vit. Alcibiad. Xenoph Cyrop. lib 8. Athenæus.

In veſſels of gold] Beſet with precious ſtones (as Joſephus addeth) ad delectationem & ſpectaculum.

The veſſels being diverſe one from another] To ſhew the Kings ſtore of them, that there was not curta ſupellex, but great plenty and variety of diſhes and dainties.

And royal wine] Choice wine, and fit for a Kings palat. Vinum Cos, as they call it merrily at Lovain and Paris, id eſt, coloris, odoris, ſaporis optimi, of the beſt colour, ſmell and taſt.

Beehive of Rome. Præf.

In abundance] They ſwam in wine, and the tables did even ſweat with variety of diſhes: quicquid avium volitabat, quicquid piſcium natabat, quicquid ferarum diſcurrebat, &c. to uſe Seneca's expreſſion.

According to the ſtate of the King] For whom it was not unlawful to feaſt, ſo to ſhew his liberality toward his Peeres, and courteſie to his people. But that which was blameworthy in him, was, 1. His vainglory. 2. His prodigality. 3. His miſ-ſpending of time. 4. His neglect of buſineſſes. 5. His contempt of the true God, not once acknowledged by him or his gueſts. Laſtly, their profane mirth and jollity, without the leaſt note of ſanctity or reſpect to Gods glory.

Merlin. in loc.

Verſe 8. And the drinking was according to the Law] Preſcribed by the King, and it was but needful, leſt men ſhould make his houſe a ſchoole of intemperancy: and leſt ſhameful ſpewing ſhould be on his glory, Habac. 2. 16. And, inaſmuch as of evil manners come good Lawes, it appeareth by this Edict of the King, that the Perſians were now degenerated from their ancient ſobriety and moderation in meats and drinks. So likewiſe were the Cretians when Minos made a Law that men ſhould not drink one to another, εἰς μέθην, unto drunkenneſſe: And the ſame we may well think of the inhabitants of this Land, when King Edgar made an ordinance for putting pins in cups, to ſtint men how farre they ſhould drink, and that none ſhould quaffe whole ones.

Quinetiam Sparta mos eſt laudabilis ille,
Ut bibat arbitrio pocula quiſque ſuo.

Sueton.

– None did compell] Domitius the father of Nero ſlew Liberius an honeſt Roman, becauſe he refuſed to drink ſo much as he commanded him. Tiberius for his drunkenneſſe called Caldius Biberius Mero, inſtead of Claudius Tiberius Nero) made Novellius Tricongius Proconſul, for that he could drink three pottles of wine together with one breath. He preferred alſo L. Piſo to the government of the City of Rome, becauſe he could ſit drinking with him continually for two whole dayes and nights together. Lyra upon this text declaimeth againſt this deteſtable healthing and carowſing too too common in all parts of Chriſtendome; and ſaith that it was brought up firſt by the Barbarians in Normandy, who came and depopulated that Countrey. And what a lamentable thing is it that at this day, in ſuch a State as ours, the civil, ſober, and temperate man ſhall be urged, and it may be forced to ſwallow down needleſſe draughts, as a horſe doth a drench, by domineering drunkards. The late good Act againſt drunkenneſſe, if well executed, will be ſome curb to our Roaring-boyes; ſo they will needs be called by a woful Prolepſis, Here for hereafter. Oh that we could perſwade ſuch, as Mahomet did his followers, that in every grape there dwelt a Devil; or, that fire and brimſtone, ſtorme and tempeſt, this ſhall be the portion of the Drunkards cup.

For the King had appointed to all the officers of his houſe] He had appointed, Heb. he had founded founded or ſtabliſhed it for an inviolable Decree, and officers on purpoſe (Controulers of his houſe) to ſee it executed. John 2. 8. we read of a governour of the feaſt. The Jewes had ſuch Officers or Moderatours at their merry-meetings (called the Eyes and Overſeers of the feaſt,) that took care that none ſhould over-drink himſelf. The Latines alſo had ſuch, calling them Dictatours. The Greeks had their Sympoſiarchs; but among theſe, their power extended no further then to ſee that the feaſters drank ſmall draughts onely at firſt, which by degrees they increaſed till they came to the height of intemperancy. But theſe ſhould have conſidered that which Anacharſis had told them, that the Vine beareth three grapes: The firſt, of pleaſure, the ſecond of drunkenneſſe, and the third of miſery and miſchief.

Præfecti meorum. Οινοχοοι Οφθαλμοι. Gaudentius. Caſaubon. Plautus.

Laert.

That they ſhould do according to every mans pleaſure] Drink what they thought good without ſtint, or force. It is reported of Romulus, that being once invited to ſupper, he drank not much, becauſe he had weighty buſineſſe to do on the morrow after. And when one ſaid unto him, Sir, If all men ſhould drink as you do, wine would be far cheaper: Nay, it would be dearer, ſaid he, if every man ſhould drink as I have done; that is, as much as he pleaſeth to drink.

Nam ego bibi quantum volui. Gell. lib. 11. cap. 14.

Verſe 9. Alſo Vaſhti the Queene made a feaſt for the women] Heb. A feaſt, or a compotation of women. This was better yet, then Heliogabalus his Senat of women, with their ordinances correſpondent; as what attire each woman ſhould uſe, how they ſhould take place, when ſalute, &c. The Romans decreed in Senate that no women ſhould drink wine. What Vaſhti's practice was I know not; but, by her name ſhe ſhould be a Meribibula, a wine-bibber, as was noted, verſe 1.

Conveniunt rebus nomina ſæpè ſuis.

Dio in Tiberio.

Joſephus, and after him Lyra, give her the commendation of a modeſt woman. 'Tis probable ſhe had the Kings conſent to feaſt the women, becauſe it was in the royal houſe: and it added much to the Kings munificence. But then ſhe ſhould have ſubdued her husband by obeying of him, as Livia (as great an Empreſſe) did Auguſtus. Dio reporteth of her, that being asked how ſhe got ſuch a power over her husband? ſhe anſwered, Multâ modeſtiâ, by my much modeſty. It is remarkable in this third feaſt, that, firſt, the women feaſted within doores, not in the open Court, as their husbands did, and, next, apart from the men. Which whether it were of pride, becauſe Vaſhti would keep ſtate by her ſelf; or, of neceſſity, becauſe either the cuſtome of the Countrey, or the Kings jealouſie would not allow her preſence among ſo many of the other ſex, yet ſurely this may condemne (as one well ſaith) our moſt laſcivious mingling of both ſexes together in dancing, and ſuch like meetings; where nothing is more uſual then luſtful looks, filthy ſpeeches, uncleane touches. Apage omnem hanc impudentiam, ſhun all occaſions of ſinne that doth ſo eaſily beſet us. Lot feaſting and drinking wine with his own daughters, fell into the ſin of inceſt. The Iſraelites doing the like with the daughters of Moab, were enſnared, and ſubverted. The dancing damoſel ſo enflamed that old Goat Herod, that like a mad man he ſweareth to give her her deſire to the halfe of his Kingdome. In all mixt meetings of both ſexes, let the husbands eyes be eyes of Adamant, which will turne only to one point, leſt ſome Circe enchant him, having faculty attractive with the Jeat, and retentive with the Adamant. Let the wives alſo be like that Perſian Lady, who being at the marriage of Cyrus, and asked how ſhe liked the Bridegroome? How? ſaith ſhe, I know not, I ſaw no body but my husband.

Verſe 10. On the ſeventh day] Here we have Luxuriosi convivii luctuoſum exitum, a ſad end of a luxurious feaſt. Sin uſually endeth tragically. On the ſix former dayes of the feaſt having farced his body with good chear like a wool-ſack, and inflamed it with wine wherein was exceſſe, he bethinks himſelf of other pleaſures: Vina parant animos Veneri. Ariſtophanes calleth wine the milk of Venus, and fuell of luſt. Ambroſe ſaith that luſt is fed with feaſts, nouriſhed with delicacies, kindled with wine, ſet on flame with drunkenneſſe. A belly filled with wine ſoameth out filthineſſe, ſaith Hiecom.

Ovid. Αφροδίτης γάλα. Ariſt. Lib. 1. de pœnit. c. 4.

When the heart of the King was merry with wine] The property whereof is to exhilarate the heart of man, as the Scripture ſpeaketh. Plato calleth wine the mitigater of mans miſery. Euripides ſaith, Qui non hilareſcit bibendo, nihil ſapit. But Aha ſuerus his heart was over-merry, the wine was ſo in, that the wit was out: drunkenneſſe had bereft this Polyphemus of his eye of right reaſon. This is a vice hateful in all, but in a Ruler moſt of all.

Judg. 9. 13. Pſal. 104. 15. In Cyclope.

See Prov. 31. 4. with the Note. What mad work made Alexander the Great many times in his drunkenneſſe, killing thoſe then whom he would afterwards have revived, if he could, with his own heart-blood? Therefore it was that the Carthaginians forbade their Magiſtrates all uſe of wine: Solon puniſhed drunkenneſſe in a Ruler with death. And Ferdinand the firſt Emperour of Germany, ſharply reproved the Embaſſadours of the Electours and Princes ſent to an Imperial Diet, for their quaffing and careleſſe performance of their truſt, ſaying, Abſtinete à maledictâ ebrietate, &c. Abſtaine, for ſhame, from this curſed drunkenneſſe, (which is neither good for body nor ſoul) and look better to your offices.

Plato. ¶

Val. Max. Chriſt. 397.

He commanded Mehuman] Theſe ſhould have adviſed him better (for now drunkenneſſe had robbed him of himſelf, and laid a fool in his roome, wine had over-ſhadowed his wiſdome, as Pliny phraſeth it) and not have been ſo ready to execute his unreaſonable and illegal commands. For the Perſians had a Law (Joſephus ſaith) that Matrons ſhould not be ſeen at feaſts among men; though Harlots might. But Kings are never without their Court-Paraſites, who will humour them in any thing, and whoſe ſong is, Mihi placet quicquid Regi placet, That which pleaſeth the King, pleaſeth me, howſoever.

Vino ſapientia obumbratur lib. 23. cap. 1. Lib. 11. Antiq. cap. 6.

Verſe 11. To bring Vaſthi the Queen before the King] This was their errand, and they went readily about it, (though it beſeemed not their ſtate, as being chief about the King) whether they envyed the Queen, and ſo ſought occaſion againſt her (as the Biſhops did againſt Queen Katharine Parr) or were in the Kings predicament, and therefore deſired fuel to their fire.

With the crown royal] In all her beſt, that neſt of pride, as one calleth it, and incentive of luſt.

To ſhew the Princes and the people her beauty] And thereby to ſhew them all his own imprudence, and impudence: this he would not have done, if ſober, for any good. Quid non ebrietas deſignat? Wine is a mocker, and ſtrong drink is raging. Could he not conſider what he had oft read befel Candaules King of the Sardians for ſhewing his fair wife to Gyges in a vain-glorious humour? Knew he not that thoſe well-whittled Courtiers would eaſily be enflamed with the ſight of ſuch a peerleſſe beauty, and that her gay attire would not make her more comely, then common?

Herodot. Juſtin.

For ſhe was fair to look on] Xenophon teſtifieth of the Perſian and Median women, that they are proper and beautiful beyond all other Nations. Vaſthi, we muſt needs think then, was a choyce beauty: and if ſhe were (as Aſpaſia Mileſia wife to King Cyrus) fair and wiſe, it was no ſmall commendation. But if (as Aurelia Oreſtilla in Salluſt) ſhe had nothing in her praiſeworthy but her beauty, it was ill beſtowed on her. The Jews give a very ill character of her. They ſay ſhe was daughter to Belſhazzar (that notable quaffer, who might therefore call her Vaſthi, that is, a drinker) that ſhe hated the Jews extremely, and abuſed divers of their daughters (her ſlaves) making them work on the Sabbath day, and putting them every day to the baſeſt offices, not affording them rags to hide their nakedneſſe, &c. This perhaps is but a Jewiſh fable.

τὰλλα τὰς γυναῖκας ὑπερβάλλουσι. Joſeph. καλὴ ἡ σορή. Ælian.

Verſe 12. But the Queen Vaſti refuſed to come at the Kings commandment] She peremptorily and contumaciouſly refuſed, though ſent for again and again (as Joſephus hath it) by her Lord and husband, who had in his cups boaſted of his wives beauty, courteſie and obedience, whereof he would now make proof to the company, ſending for her by ſuch an honourable convoy: yet, ſhe would not, that ſhe would not, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth, but carried her ſelf, as if ſhe had been his Miſtreſſe, and not his wife, to his great grief, and the marring of all their mirth. What if the King were not ſo well adviſed? what if he were in his cups? what though ſhe had the Law on her ſide, and a pretence of modeſty, and leſt ſhe could by coming, occaſion the Kings jealouſie, &c? Yet Vaſthi was to have ſubmitted her ſelf unto her own husband (ſuch an husband eſpecially) as it was fit in the Lord, Col. 3. 18. to yeeld obedience to all his lawful commands and reſtraints, ſeeme they never ſo unreaſonable. If woman were given to man for a comforter, and in ſome caſes for a Counſellor, yet in no caſe for a Controuler, as they are apt to be that are fair (faſtus ineſt formæ) rich (argentum accepi, dote imperium vendidi, ſaith he in Plautus) better deſcended, &c. ſi vis nubere, nube pari: an inſolent wife is an unſufferable evil; and he hath loſt half the comfort of his life, who is married to ſuch an one.

ἐκ ἤθελεν. Septuag.

There-

Therefore was the King very wroth] He even foamed at mouth like a wild-bore, and froathed as the raging Sea, as the word importeth. The Perſian Kings were noted by ſome for uxorious; ſuch, as though they commanded the whole world, yet were commanded by their wives and concubines: But here it proved otherwiſe. This mighty Monarch could not bear ſuch a publike affront and ſcorne as he conſtrued it; but rageth beyond reaſon (whereof his wine for the time had bereft him) and reſolveth upon revenge. How much better our William the Conquerour, who though he knew that Maud his wife maintained her ſonne Robert Curtuoiſe in his quarrel for Normandy, and out of her own coffers paid the charge of that warre againſt his father, and her own husband, yet becauſe it proceeded but from a motherly indulgence for advancing her ſonne, he took for a cauſe rather of diſpleaſure then of hatred. He loved her whileſt alive, often lamented her death with tears, and moſt honourably interred her. Captivarum ſuarum captivi. Plut. Speed. 452.]

And his anger burned in him] As Nebuchadnezzar alſo did upon a like occaſion, hotter then his ſeven times-heated oven, or then the mountaine Ætna doth: Moſes his anger waxed hot in him, Exodus 32. 19. ſo that he knew not well what he did in it; it raiſed ſuch a ſmoke. Jonah was ready to burſt with anger, Chapter 4. 9. his blood boyled at his heart, as brimſtone doth at the match: therefore is the heart ſet ſo near the lungs, that when it is heated with anger, it may be allayed and cooled by the blaſt and moiſture thereof. Joſephus ſaith that he brake off the feaſt upon this occaſion.

Verſe 13. Then the King ſaid to the wiſe-men] What a ſudden change is here? Ex conviviis fiunt comitia, imò & convitia, ſaith an Interpreter: The enraged King forgets all his old love to Vaſthi, and breaths nothing elſe but reparation of his own loſt honour, and revenge upon his peereleſſe paragon. Howbeit herein He is to be commended, that he ſent not for her forthwith by force, that he might diſpatch her with his own hands; as Alexander did his friend Clitus and others in his cups and choler: neither ran he raging into her chamber, and kickt her out of the world, as Nero did his wife Octavia, for a leſſe matter. He knew that anger is an evil counſellour: Sueton. Ner.

——— qui non moderabitur iræ,
Infectum velit eſſe dolor quod ſuaſerit & mens. Horat.

He that reineth not in his anger ſhall do that in his haſte, whereof it ſhall repent him by leiſure, and could eate his nailes to have it undone again. Ahaſhuerus therefore calleth for his Judges and Counſellours, skilful in ſtate-matters.

Which knew the times] And what was beſt to be done in them. This skill they had gotten by much reading of Politicks, and Hiſtories, and long obſervation. The men of Iſſachar were ſuch, 1 Chronicles 12. 32. Such a one was Cræſus to Cyrus, Polybius to Scipio, Agrippa to Auguſtus, Anaxagoras to Themiſtocles, &c. Xerxes here had ſeven ſuch to adviſe with as his Privy-Counſellours, Judices Regios; the Kings Judges Herodotus calleth them, and further ſaith, that they held their places for their lives, unleſſe they very much misbehaved themſelves. Lib. 3.

For ſo was the manner] Sc. to adviſe with them in matters of moment, but not alwayes to take their adviſe. The manner was, and the fundamental Lawes of the Land took order, for prevention of tyranny, that the Kings of Perſia ſhould be ruled by this grave Senate of the Kingdome, and not bring in an arbitrary government. But Xerxes, (who is this Ahaſhuerus) once at leaſt, (if not oftner) viz. in his expedition againſt Greece, which was not long after this great feaſt, called his ſeven Princes together, and ſpake to them after this manner: Leſt, ſaid he, I ſhould ſeeme to follow mine owne counſel, I have aſſembled you: and now do you remember, that it becomes you rather to obey then adviſe. Val. Max. lib. 9. cap. 5.]

Towards all that knew law and judgement] Of theſe Perſian Privy-Counſellours

it is ſaid, 1. That they were wiſe-men: now thoſe only are wiſe quibus res ſapiunt prout ſunt. 2. They were skilful in the times, that is, well verſed in hiſtories, and well furniſhed with experiences. 3. That they knew the Lawes, which they had ready, and at their fingers ends, as we ſay. They knew alſo judgement, that is, equity and moderation, without which utmoſt right might be utmoſt wrong; as indeed it proved in the caſe in hand. Memucan not only accuſeth the Queen, but aggravateth her offence, and inſtead of healing the wound, maketh it farre wider. This might become a mercenary Oratour, but not a grave Counſellour. The buſineſſe was this: The King was angry, and he meant to ſet him going: the Queene was an eye-ſore, and ſhe muſt be removed. Such ſlaves are ambitious ſtatiſts to their own, and their Princes luſts, but eſpecially when their own plough is driven forward withal.

Verſe 14. And the next unto him was Carſhena, &c.] Theſe were his truſty and welbeloved Couſins, and Counſellours, primi & proximi, firſt in the Kingdome, and next unto the King, without whom he was to have done no buſineſſe of importance. But it is recorded in ſtory that they had no freedome nor liberty of Councel. For every one of them had a plate or tile of gold to ſtand upon in the Councel-houſe: And if he gave counſel that the King thought well of, the plate of gold was given him for a reward: but if he delivered any thing contrary to the Kings minde, flagris cædebatur, he was beaten with ſtripes. Lo this was the manner of the Perſian Monarchs.

Kecker. Polit.

The ſeven Princes] See Ezra 7. 14.

Which ſaw the Kings face] That came at pleaſure into the preſence, as they call it. It was a piece of the ſilly glory of theſe Kings of Perſia to ſecret themſelves from their ſubjects. No man might ſee the King (uncalled for) on paine of death, cùm ejus perſona ſub ſpecie majeſtatis occuleretur, ſaith Juſtin. Only theſe ſeven might ordinarily take the boldneſſe to ſee his face: which leſt Haman ſhould do, they covered his face.

Lib. 1. hiſt.

And which ſate the firſt in the Kingdome] Xenophon telleth us that Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch ordained that the Nobles ſhould ſit before the King every man according to his degree, and dignity. Aben-Ezra upon this text ſaith the ſame.

Cyrop. lib. 8.

Verſe 15. What ſhall we do] Saith the King, who changeth the ſcene ſuddenly, the banquetting-houſe into a Councel-chamber, the merry-meeting into a moſt difficult conſultation, what to do with the Queene, and how to repair the Kings honour ſo much impaired by her. How eaſily can the Lord ſtaine the pride of all glory, croſſe the worlds greateſt darlings, give an unſavoury verdure to their ſweeteſt morſels, and make their very felicity miſerable!

Eſay 23. 9.

Unto the Queene Vaſhti] You ſhould determine nothing raſhly againſt her, but accept of her lawful excuſe, hear her plea, remember that ſhe is your companion, and the wife of your Covenant, Mal. 2. 14. your fellow, and not your footſtoole; a yoke-fellow ſtanding on even ground with you, though drawing on the left ſide, &c. This you ſhould do to the Queene Vaſhti. But Plutarch noteth of the Perſians, that they were none of the kindeſt husbands, but harſh, and jealous. And Athenæus ſaith, that the Kings of Perſia lord it over their wives, as if they were their handmaids.

ἄγειοι φύσει καὶ χαλεποὶ. Plut. Themiſt. ὡς δεσπότης ἄρχει τὴν γαμετὴν ὁ βασιλεύς. Athen. lib. 13.

According to Law] This you ſhould do; retaine the decency and gravity of the Law which is never angry with any man (Lex non iraſcitur, ſed conſtituit, ſaith Seneca) no more muſt thoſe that adminiſter it. The angry man cannot eaſily keep a meane. This Archytas the Tarentine knew, and therefore being diſpleaſed with his ſervants for their ſloth, he flang from them, ſaying, Farewell, I have nothing to ſay to you, becauſe I am angry at you.

Becauſe ſhe hath not performed the Commandment, &c.] This was a fault no doubt: but not ſo hainous as was made of it. The faults of his wife a man muſt either tollere or tolerare, cure or cover, and not go about to kill a fly upon her forehead with a beetle, as they ſay. But God had a provident hand in it for the good of his Church.

Verſe 16. And Memucan anſwered before the King] Heb. Mumchan, The Junior likely, and therefore ſpake firſt, the reſt concurred, verſe 21. A bold man he was ſurely (whatever elſe he was) that durſt deliver his minde ſo freely of ſuch a buſineſſe, and in ſuch a preſence, &c. What if the King and Queen ſhould have grown friends again, where had Memucan been? If his cauſe and his conſcience had been as good as his courage was great, all had been as it ought to be.

And the Princes] Inter pocula de rebus arduis conſultabant, ſaith Herodotus concerning the Perſian Princes. In the middeſt of their cups they uſe to conſult of the greateſt affairs. Here they accuſe and uncondemne the Queen heard, and unconvicted, which was againſt all Law divine and humane. King Henry the eighth, though a boyſterous man, dealt more civily with his firſt wife Katharine of Spaine, when he had a minde to rid his hands of her; Her cauſe was heard before the two Cardinals, Wolſey and Campaine, ere the Divorce was pronounced, and ſhe ſent out of the Kingdome.

Lib. 1.

affairs

Vaſthi the Queen hath not done wrong to the King only] That ſhe had done wrong or dealt perverſely againſt the King, He taketh for granted: becauſe the Kings commandment was not obeyed. But was that a ſufficient reaſon? Was the Kings bare word a Law, or rule of right? and is not a wife in caſe of ſin commanded by her husband, rather to obey God then men? Or ſay ſhe had done wrong, muſt it needs be out of perverſeneſſe? might it not be out of fear, modeſty, or for ſome other civil reaſon which ſhe might alledge for her ſelf, if called to her tryal? But here you may ſee (ſaith one) when flattery and malice gives information, ſhadows are made ſubſtances, and improbabilities neceſſities; ſo deceitful is flattery, malice ſo unreaſonable. And yet herein alſo the Lord is exceeding righteous, who meets hereby with other ſins of this inſolent Queen: that whereas (no doubt) ſhe was an example of pride and vanity more generally to other women then ſhe was likely to be in this point, therefore is ſhe hereby found out in her ſin, and by this unlikely accuſation, condemned of a true fault.

But alſo to all the Princes and to all the people] Againſt the King ſhe had offended by her diſobedience, againſt all others by her example. And indeed the ſins of great ones fly far upon thoſe two wings, Scandal and Example; they prove both patterns and privileges to their inferiours, for the like. Howbeit we muſt neceſſarily diſtinguiſh between ſcandal given, and ſcandal taken only: neither may we judge of a thing by the ill conſequences that biaſſed and diſaffected perſons can draw from it; there being nothing ſo well carried, but that it may be liable to ſome mens exceptions.

Verſe 17. For this deed of the Queen ſhall come abroad] The leaſt aberration in a ſtar is ſoon obſerved: ſo the miſcarriages of great ones are quickly both noted and noticed. Publike perſons are by Plutarch compared to looking-glaſſes, according to which others dreſſe themſelves: to pictures in a glaſſe-window, wherein every blemiſh is ſoon ſeen: to common Wells, which if they be poyſoned, many are deſtroyed. The common people commonly are like a flock of Cranes: as the firſt flies, all follow.

So that they ſhall deſpiſe their husbands] Which indeed ought not to be, no not in their hearts. Let the wife ſee that ſhe reverence her husband. God hath a barren womb for mocking Michal: when Sarah is crowned and chronicled for this, that ſhe obeyed her husband, calling him Lord. It is here taken for confeſſed, that Vaſthi deſpiſed her husband; and that others would thereby take heart to do the like, is therehence inferred. But doth that neceſſarily follow? and muſt the Queen therefore be preſently depoſed, yea put to death, as the Jew-Doctours tell us ſhe was? King Aſa depoſed his grandmother Maacha; but that was for Idolatry. Our Henry the eighth beheaded his wife Anne Bullen, but that was for (ſuppoſed, and but ſuppoſed) adultery. Queen Elizabeth narrowly eſcaped with her life, becauſe ſhe was accuſed (but falſely) of conſpiracy againſt the Queen her ſiſter. But what had Vaſthi done? Condemned ſhe is without reprival; and the Countrey muſt come in (but was never called) to give in evidence againſt her, that haply never ſaw her, nor heard of her offence. Is this fair-dealing? Eph. 5. ult.

Verſe 18. Likewiſe ſhall the Ladies of Media and Perſia ſay] Say what? We will not do as our Lords command us. Like enough all this: for their tongues were their own, and their wills no leſſe. That free-will (about which there is ſo much ado made) when men once loſt, the women caught it up; and hence they are ſo wedded to their own will, ſaith one merrily. Quicquid volunt, valdè volunt, what they will do, they will do contra gentes, ſaith another. And for talking and telling their minds; The Rabbines have a proverb, that ten Kabs (meaſures) of ſpeech deſcended into the world, and the women took away nine of them. Theſe Ladies of Media and Perſia were feaſting with the Queen when the King ſent for her, ubi quid factum eſt? garritur, potitatur, ſaltitatur, ſaith an Interpreter, at which time they were chatting, and bibbing, and dancing, and (when their mirth was marred) they would not ſpare to ſpeak their minds, and eaſe their ſtomachs, whatever came of it. We read in our own Chronicles of the Lady de Breuſe, that by her railing and intemperate tongue, ſhe had ſo exaſperated King John (whom ſhe reviled as a tyrant and a murtherer) that he would not be pacified by her ſtrange preſent (four Feverdent. in verſe 9.

Speed. 572. (four hundred kine, and one bull, all milk-white, except only the eares, which were red) ſent unto the Queen.

Then ſhall there ariſe too much contempt and wrath] Contempt on the wives part, and wrath on the husbands: wives ſhall ſlight their husbands, and they again ſhall fall foul upon their wives: ſo that conjugium ſhall become conjurgium; and the houſe they dwell together in, ſhall be no better then a fencing-ſchool, wherein the two ſexes ſeem to have met together for nothing but to play their prizes, and to try maſteries. This made Sylla ſay, I had been happy, if I had never been married.

Verſe 19. If it pleaſe the King] Courtier-like; leſt he ſhould ſeem to preſcribe to the King, or to prejudice the reſt of the royal Counſellours, he thus modeſtly prefaceth to his enſuing harſh and hard ſentence. He knew well enough it would pleaſe the King at preſent, in the minde he now was in: and to prevent any alteration, he moves to have it made ſure by an irrevocable Law, that he might not hereafter be cenſured for this his immoderate and unmerciful cenſure, but be ſure to ſave one howſoever.

Let it be written, ſaith he, among the Lawes of the Perſians] Which the King himſelf could not repeal, Dan. 6. 8, 15. but, once paſſed and regiſtred, they remained binding for ever. I have read of a people among whom the Lawes they had laſted in force but for three dayes at utmoſt. This was a fault in the other extreme. Lawes are to be made with due deliberation, and then to be eſtabliſhed, and not altered without very great reaſon, as ſometimes there is, ſith Legem dicimus νόμον, quaſi μένοντα τοῦ. Plato.

Tempora mutentur, nos & mutemur in illis.

That Vaſthi come no more before King Ahaſhuerus] But be abſolutely depoſed and divorced. Here was no proportion betwixt the offence and the ſentence. This judgement was like the Laws of Draco: of which Ariſtotle ſaith, that they were not worth remembrance, but only for their great ſeverity; as being written not with black, but with blood.

And let the King give her royal eſtate unto another] The more to vex her. Surely ſuch an exauthoration of ſo great a perſonage, with ſo great diſgrace and ignominy, could not but be very grievous, yea worſe then death. High ſeats as they are never but uneaſie; ſo the fall from them muſt needs be dangerous and diſmal. How well might holy Eſther ſing with the Virgin Mary, God putteth down the mighty from their thrones, and exalteth them of low degree, Luke 1. 52.

Verſe 20. And when the Kings Decree that he ſhall make ſhall be publiſhed] But why ſhould any ſuch thing be publiſhed at all, unleſſe the King be ambitious of his own utter diſhonour? Is there none wiſer then other, but that the King muſt beray his own neſt, tell all the Empire that he was drunk or little better, and did in his drink determine that againſt his fair Queen, that he ſo ſoon after repented? He ſhould have done in this caſe as a man doth, that having a ſecret ſore, clappeth on a plaiſter, and then covereth it with his hand, that it may ſtick the faſter, work the better. Had Ahaſhueroſh been wiſe, the world had been never the wiſer for any thing that Vaſthi had done, &c. But Memucan hath ſome colour for his bad counſel, a goodly vail to caſt over it.

All the wives ſhall give to their husbands honour] They ſhall not dare to do otherwiſe, unleſſe they mean to be likewiſe divorced. But will terrour breed true honour? is ſoothing right ſubmiſſion? Quem metuunt oderunt, fear makes hatred; and people honour none (to ſpeak properly) but whom they love ſincerely. Thoſe lordly husbands that domineere over their wives as if they were their ſlaves, and carry themſelves like lions in their houſes, muſt not look for any great reſpect there. This man promiſed himſelf great matters when he thus ſaid, The wives ſhall give iittenu in the maſculine gender, to ſignifie the wives voluntary ſubjection and obedience: but that he never had; nor any other that took the like courſe. Thoſe husbands that will be honoured indeed by their wives, muſt give honour to them as to the weaker veſſels, as being heirs together of the grace of life, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

Verſe 21. And the ſaying pleaſed the King] Pity but itching ears ſhould have clawing Counſellors. Memucan was a fit helve for ſuch an hatchet; and his adviſe fit lettice for ſuch lips. What marvel that ſuch a ſmooth Counſellour pleaſed the King, when as he had before given place to two ſuch bad Counſellours, Wine and Anger?

And the Princes] Who perceived (very likely) by the Kings looks and geſtures, that he

he was much taken and tickled with Memucans counsel: which they therefore second and subscribe to. How rare a jewel in a Princes eare is a faithful counsellour, that will deliver himself freely, non ad gratiam, sed ad veritatem, not to please, but to profit. Such a one was Agrippa to Augustus, Polybius to Scipio, Latimer to Edward the sixth, &c. There is safety in the multitude of Counsellours, modò audeant quæ sentiant (as the Oratour saith) so they dare speak out, and will not spare to do it. Cic. pro Milone

And the King did according to the word of Memucan] Dicto citius, it was forthwith done. Vasthi is all on the sudden divorced, and the foolish King publikely shamed. But all this was of the Lord, that Esther might be advanced, and the Church relieved. So there was a wheele within a wheele, which the wicked discerne not, nor the Saints consider of. God oft wraps himself in a cloud, and will not be seene till afterwards. All Gods dealings will appear beautiful in their seasons; though for the present we see not the contiguity and concatenation of one thing with another.

Verse 22. That every man should beare rule in his own house] Æquum sanè edictum, modò moderatum, A righteous Decree, had it been but rightly made use of, and not abused to tyranny and rough-dealing. Aristotle saith, that the husband ought to have a civil power over his wife, as being her better in honour, speech, gravity and dignity. Menander and Euripides say the same; holding it unfit that the hen should crow, that the woman should usurp authority over the man: this, Nature and Scripture do both condemne. But why should these Persian Princes at this time send forth such an Edict as this? was it because this good Law of Nature began to be depraved and obliterated among them; as it was among the Egyptians, where the Queen is more honoured then the King, and in private houses the wife then the husband, as Diodorus Siculus reporteth? Or had they a minde to divulge their own shame, and to tell the world that they were least masters at home, and must therefore have a law made to force obedience? Or was it not (lastly) to countenance the Kings rash and unlawful putting away of his wife, for so light a cause: like as Cambyses their late King having a minde to marry his own sister, made a Law, that any man should have liberty to do the like? Whatever it was that moved them to send forth this Decree, surely there was little need to excite men to use their authority over their wives; sith they are apt enough to do so without bidding. Therefore Saint Paul after, wives submit your selves unto your own husbands, doth not say, and subjoyne, husbands rule over your wives, but husbands love your wives, and be not bitter against them. Lib. 1. Bibl. c. 2. Col. 3. 19.

And that it should be published according to the language of every people] That so being particularly understood, it might appear more authentical and weighty, and so take away the hatred from the Law-givers for the wrong they had done the Queen. Some render it thus, that he should speak according to the language of his own people, that is, say they, that each man should keep and observe the liberty of his own Nation, by commanding his people, and governing his own family, without any contradiction.

CHAP. II.

Verse 1. After these things.]

After the wine was out, the fuell of his anger spent, and the lust thereof satisfied.

When the wrath of King Ahasuerus was appeased] There is nothing that a man is more ready to keep then his wrath: therefore the Hebrews put servare for servare iram, to keep, for, to keep his anger, as Jer. 3. 5. Psal. 103. 9. Levit. 19. 18. Ahasuerus, by invading Greece, had so incensed them, that their wrath ἀνήνυστος, unappeasable, for they thenceforth hated all Barbarians for the Persians sake, and forbade them their sacrifices, as they used to do murtherers. But Ahasuerus his wrath against Vasthi was, after a time, asswaged.

He remembred Vasthi] Not without some remorse, but without all true repentance. He forsook not his rash anger as a sinne; but regrated it for a time, and laid it asleep, to be raked up again upon as slight an occasion. In graceless persons vitia raduntur, non eradicantur: abscinduntur sæpius, non exscinduntur, vices may be barbed or benumbed, not mastered and mortified. A Merchant may part with his goods, and yet not hate them.

them. A man may part with his ſinnes for ſelf-reſpects, and yet retaine his affection to them: as Phaltiel did to Michal, when he went weeping after her afarre off. He may remember his Vaſthi, his boſome-ſinnes from which he ſeemeth divorced; and by ſuch a ſinful remembring of them, recommit them. See Ezek. 23. 21. compared with verſe 8.

And what was decreed againſt her] But whoſe fault was that? Wine and anger are the worſt of all counſellours, ſay the Ancients? and Ahaſuerus found it ſo: as did alſo Alexander the great, and many others, but all too late. Hence they came in afterwards with their Non putaram, Had I wiſt; which Scipio ſaid ſhould never be heard out of a great mans mouth. Auguſtus alſo was wont to ſay, that nothing doth ſo ill become a Commander, as haſtineſſe and raſhneſſe. Tully taxeth him for a foole, qui eundem & lædit & laudat, who firſt wrongeth a man, and then commendeth him.

Plutarch.

Sueton.

Verſe 2. Then ſaid the Kings ſervants] His friends, ſaith Joſephus, to whom he had opened his mind: the young Courtiers, ſay others (green wood is ever ſhrinking and warping) but moſt probably thoſe ſeven chief Counſellours, chap. 1. 14. who had perſwaded him to caſt off Vaſthi, and now feared, leſt if not ſome way diverted, he ſhould fall as foul upon them, as his predeceſſour Darius did upon thoſe claw-backs, Dan. 6. 24. or as the Athenians did upon Timagoras, Demagoras, and Enagoras, whom they condemned to die, for flattering Darius Hyſtaſpes, the father of this Ahaſuerus.

Let there be fair young Virgins ſought for the King] They knew him to be a ſenſualiſt and effeminate: they therefore agree to feed his humour, to drown him againe in pleaſure, ſo to drive away his melancholy. Such miſerable comforts are carnal Phyſitians: ſo wretched is our nature, to endure no other Phyſick: ſo juſtly doth God fit the Phyſitian to the Patient, the helve to the hatchet: ſo do the wicked help each other forward to their deſerved deſtruction. Ahaſuerus his Courtiers and Counſellours become Brokers to his luſts: neither is this any thing unuſual with ſuch. Lenocinantur, produnt, blaſphemant, pejerant, toxica miſcent, &c. ſaith an Expoſitor here. What is it that ſuch Paraſites and Sycophants will not do to ingratiate with great ones? It was not therefore without good cauſe, that the Primitive Chriſtians prayed hard for the Emperour (as Tertullian teſtifieth) that God would ſend him Senatum fidelem, a faithful Councel, and free him from flatterers.

Verſe 3. And let the King appoint officers] Præficiat præfectos. Coſtly counſel: this could not be done without much trouble and charge to the King. Two or three years are ſpent in gathering, purifying, and preparing theſe choice Virgins for the impure bed of this Heathen Prince, while he is following the chace of his ambition, in the warres of Greece.

In all the Provinces of his Kingdome] A large Commiſſion they muſt have, the whole Kingdome is their circuit: and note that they went not to forreiners: which thoſe Princes that do, while thereby they ſeek for greatneſſe, they many times miſſe of goodneſſe: while they labour to be ſtrong abroad (and ſo to have a ſtake in ſtore, as they ſay, however the dice chance to turne) they weaken themſelves at home; and while by forraine matches they intend unity, it proves an occaſion both of inteſtine and forraine diſſentions. We of this Nation have had ſad experience of theſe miſchiefs.

That they may gather together] This could not be done without the great grief and general diſcontent of the Kings beſt ſubjects (nimium ſerviliter huic hirco ſubjectorum, as one hath it) thus bereft and deſpoyled of their deareſt daughters, the ſtaves of their age.

All the fair young Virgins] Beauty (the beſt pearle in a carnal eye) is all that's here looked after, quæ plerunque virtute & pudicitiâ caret, which is oft without vertue, and common honeſty; as, where they meet, it is a rare mixture. The Heathen man ſaith, Non eſt formoſa mulier cujus crus laudatur aut brachium, ſed illa cujus univerſa facies admirationem ſingulis partibus abſtulit. Now if this be true, long enough might theſe commiſſionated officers look for fair young Virgins, truly ſo called, there being very few that are not peccant in ſome minnum, ſome tittle of beauty, or other. It is a praiſe peculiar to the Virgin daughter of Zion to be all fair, Cant. 4. 7. to be ἄμωμος, Epheſ. 5. 26. ſuch as in whom even Momus himſelfe could finde no errour.

Unto Shuſhan the palace] In which one place there might have been found choice enough, without ſpeaking further: but that luſt is unſatisfiable. The eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing; and in ſuch a multitude, how could it be but that the Kings minde muſt needs be diſtracted, which one to make choice of?

To

To the house of the women] Such as is now the Turks Seraglio. See the description of the Grand Signiors Seraglio by Master John Greaues, chap. 4.

Unto the custody of Hege] Who was their keeper, or rather their Gaoler. For what was this house of women, but a perpetual prison to them, clapt under hatches, as it were, and, haply, held in as great servitude, as those in Barbary are at this day; where it is death for any man to see one of the Xeriffes concubines; and for them too, if when they see a man, though but through a casement, they do not suddenly screek out. Heyl. Geog.

And let their things for purification] σμίγματα, Their Abstersories, to dry up the filth of the flesh, and to cleanse natures infirmities, that they might be six moneths purified with oile of myrre, and six other moneths perfumed with sweet odours, as verse 12. Here the maids were first purified before the King chose one. But Christ first cleanseth his Spouse, and then purifieth her, Eph. 5. 26.

Verse 4. And let the maiden] Herein unhappy that she got her honour with the losse of her honesty: and that so many maids are made miserable for her sake.

That pleaseth the King] Heb. That is good in his eyes. The eye is the lamp and ornament of the whole body: and yet that most lightsome part doth oft-times draw the soul into utter darknesse; whilest by those windows of wickednesse, and loop-holes of lust, Satan windeth himself into the heart, and maketh it impudicitiæ cloacam (as Venus's temple on the top of Lebanon is called by Eusebius) a very sink, and jakes of all feudnesse and abomination.

Be Queen instead of Vashti] This was held a great businesse, and a sufficient recompence. The bramble held it a goodly thing to reigne over the trees, not so the vine and fig-tree. Judg. 9.

And the thing pleased the King] Because it added more fuel to the fire of his lust, and that he may lengthen out his dayes in dalliance and wantonnesse: ut libidine libidinem provocante, nihil nisi muliebre fiat, saith an Expositour here, that he might be the right successour of Sardanapalus, who buried himself in the bosomes of his harlots, and left behinde him this infamous Epitaph. Feuardent.

Ταῦτ' ἔχω ὅσ' ἔφαγον ἐ ἐφύβρισα ἐ μετ' ἐφίλησα·
Τἄλγη' ἐπάθον πολλ' ἐ δὴ πλέα ἐ τέρπνα λιπόντα τάδε.

An Epitaph fit for an oxe, saith Aristotle. The Kings of Persia are noted for effeminate, fitter for a Canopy then a Camp, and affecting such sights, ubi Imperator Apparator, lanx phalanx, acies facies, bella labella, spicula pocula, scutum scortum, &c.

And he did so] According to the counsel of those Court-parasites (whose word is that of Stratocles; Mihi placet quicquid Regi placet) he walked in the wayes of his heart, and in the sight of his eyes, little thinking that for all these things God would bring him into judgement. But such Governours the wicked world deserveth, as being it self totus in maligno positus, 1 John 5. When Phocas, that filthy traytour, reigned at Constantinople, Cedrinus saith, that a certaine honest poor man was very earnest with God to know why such a man (or rather monster) was set up; he was answered againe by a voice, that there could not be a worse man found, and that the sins of Christians did require it. Plut. in vit. Demetr. Eccles. 11. 9.

Verse 5. Now in Shushan the palace] Not in Babylon, as Josephus doateth.

There was a certaine Jew] That had not returned to Jerusalem, as he ought to have done; and as another of his name did, Ezra 2. 2.

Whose name was Mordecai] That is, Pure Myrre, say some; bitter contrition, say others; he is the son of contrition, that must be the son of consolation. This Mordecai was one of those few that both lived and died with glory, being not taxed for any grosse sinne.

The sonne of Jair] Happy father in such a sonne: much more joy might he well be to his parents, then Epaminondas was to his: and of him it might be sung, Homer.

Τεὸς μὲν ἔτι κατάγνητος, κατάγνητος δέ.

The sonne of Shimei, the sonne of Kish a Benjamite] He descended then either from some other sonne of Kish the father of Saul, or else from Jonathan Sauls sonne: for he only, of all the sonnes of Saul, left issue behind him. But the Kish here mentioned, though of his line, lived many years after Sauls father.

Verse 6. Who had been carried away from Jerusalem] Kish had, not Mordecai: unlesse leſſe it were in the loines of his great grandfather. Kiſh and his poſterity were of thoſe goods figs mentioned in Jeremy: but goodneſſe is no target againſt affliction.

Virg. ——nec te tua plurima Penthen
Labentem texit pietas.

With the captivity which had been carried away with Jeconiah] The good figs were carried away at the ſame time with the bad; but in ſeveral baskets, Jer. 34. 1. Kiſh and others like him, as Daniel, Ezekiel, Shadrach, Meſhack and Abednego, &c. were not only good men, but very good, like the figs that are firſt ripe, Jer. 24. 2. ſuch as Gods ſoul deſireth, Mic. 7. 1. and yet they were carried away with Jeconiah and the reſt that were naught, ſtark naught, Jer. 24. 2. The beſt may have their ſhare in a common calamity: but God will not faile even then to ſet his eyes upon them for good, Jer. 24. 6. The husbandman cutteth down his corne and weeds together, but for different purpoſe. Excellently Auſtin, Una eademque vis irruens bonos probat, purificat, eliquat; malos damnat, vaſtat, exterminat: One and the ſame common calamity proveth, melteth, purifieth the good; damneth, waſteth, deſtroyeth the evil: theſe have an evil, an onely evil, Ezek. 7. 5. without mixture of mercy; and that becauſe they are naught, very naught, figs that cannot be eaten, they are ſo naught, Jer. 24. 2.

De Civit. Dei. lib. 1. cap. 8.

Whom Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon had carried away] Loe here the rod in Gods hand for the chaſtiſement of his children; that being chaſtened of the Lord, they may not be condemned with the world, 1 Cor. 11. 32. This rod when he had worne to the ſtumps, he caſt into the fire.

Verſe 7. And he brought up] He both nouriſhed and nurtured her in the true Religion and admonition of the Lord, Epheſ. 6. 4. he was her foſter-father, and her Inſtructor.

Hadaſſah] Not the ſame with Atoſſa, as Tremellius would have it. Hadaſſah was the name given her by her parents, and it ſignifieth a Myrtle-tree, which loveth to grow in a bottome; whence the Church is compared to it for her lowly-mindedneſſe, Zech. 1. 8. See the Note there.

Herod. lib. 7 Scalig. That is Eſther] This was her Perſian name, ſay ſome; In Heathen hiſtories, ſhe is called Ameſtris.

His uncles daughter] Not his brothers daughter, as the Vulgar rendereth it, after Joſephus, and Aben-Ezra. She was his couſin-german, and this was one reaſon that moved him to adopt her, viz. the bond of nature.

For ſhe had neither father nor mother] A poor Orphan ſhe was: but Chriſt left her not comfortleſſe, John 14. 18. He had provided and inabled Mordecai to feed her and breed her: to traine her up in the fear of God, and to defend her chaſtity from the rage of luſt; beſides that her head was by him deſtined to a Diadem: Eſther the captive ſhall be Eſther the Queen: Eſther the fatherleſſe and motherleſſe, ſhall be a nurſing mother to the Church; and meane while meet with a merciful Guardian Mordecai. Why then ſhould we not truſt God with our ſelves and our children?

And the maid was faire and beautiful] See the Note on verſe 3. Gratior eſt pulchro, &c. For her beauty ſhe was brought to the King; and not without ſome reſpect to this it was, that ſhe was bred up by Mordecai. This beauty was a priviledge of nature: and becauſe of the forcible battery that would be laid to it, God gives her a Guardian. Eſther was now in the flower of her age, and her beauty was the flower of her vertue, as Chryſippus called it.

Whom Mordecai when her father and mother were dead] And ſo ſhe might have been put to ſeek her bread in deſolate places, being left to the wide world, as they ſay; but the Lord was her rereward, Eſay 58. 8. he took her up, Pſal. 27. 10. as the gathering army, or rear-guard did the lame feeble and ſick Iſraelites, Joſh. 6. 9. In the Civil Law, proviſion is made for Orphans, and ſuch as were caſt out; ſome Hoſpitals to entertaine them, ſome liberties to comfort and compenſate their troubles. Amongſt us alſo (beſides harbours and Hoſpitals for ſuch, to the great commendation of the Founders) very good proviſion is made by the Lawes, and many lives thereby preſerved. God oft profeſſeth himſelf the pupill's Patron: gives great charge to all, not to hurt them; and menaceth the Jewes for their hardheartedneſſe toward them. Let therefore the dying parents of ſuch (though they have as little to leave them as Esthers had) cast them by faith into Gods everlasting armes, who hath charged his Angels with them, and hath promised heaven to them, commanding his best creatures to cater for them, *Hos.*2.21,22.

Took for his own daughter] He hid not his eyes from his own flesh, as some unnatural Ostrich, or Sea-monster: he made not, as many do, tuition a broker for private gaine, he made not instead of a daughter a slave, or spunge of his pupil: he devoured her not under pretence of devotion, but freely took her for his child, and bred her in the best manner. Now the Jews at this very day account a childs Tutour or Monitour worthy of more respect then his father, for he, say they, hath given him only his being, but the other his well-being. Esay 58. Leo. Mod.

Verse 8. When the Kings commandment and decree was heard] Percrebuisset: his officers, (herein over-officious) had soone set it abroad, and put it in execution: the Persians also (homines ad servitutem parati, as Tiberius said of the Romanes) those servile souls, deny not to prostitute their daughters, but proffer them rather, and hold them happy if they may be admitted. Not so Mordecai and his Esther: Vim magis quam obstulit. She was carried away by force, 'tis like: or if otherwise, it might be a fault in her and her Guardian, unlesse we shall say they did it by an extraordinary instinct. Probably there was a sad parting, and many prayers put up by them both for divine direction and protection, and they were heard accordingly.

And when many maidens were gathered together] Four hundred, saith Josephus. Sed quid attinebat tot puellas huic cani constuprandas offerre? saith Feuardentius, why should this dog deflour so many maidens? Proculus Cæsar boasted that in fifteene dayes space he got with child twenty Virgins: a fair commendation. Lib. 11. cap. 6. Plin. lib.

Unto Shushan the palace] Answerable to the Seraglio, where those that are kept up for their beauties, are all young Virgins taken and stollen from forraine Nations, where after they have been instructed in good behaviour, and can play upon instruments, sing, dance, and sew curiously, they are given to the Grand Signior as presents of great value. They live just as Nunnes do in great Nunneries, &c.

That Esther was brought also] In the generall survey, she was taken among the rest and brought to the Court; an ill aire for Piety to breath in. But necessity is an hard weapon. As the Turks at this day, so the Persian Kings then, took all their subjects to be their slaves, holding not only their estates, but their lives and all they have, at their dispose, without respect either to the cause or manner. —exeat aulâ Qui vult esse pius. Fraus sublimi regnat in aulâ. Sen.

To the custody of Hegai keeper of the women] Clapt up as it were, in a glorious prison, being not to come abroad but when the King calls, nor to frequent any society, but such as is appointed her for her necessary attendance and comfort. See the like in the description of the Grand Signiors Seraglio, *chap.*4.

Verse 9. And the maiden pleased him] Hegai cast his favour upon her, not because she was the faireſt, noblest, most industrious, most courtly, &c. but because God wrought his heart to it; as he did Potiphars and Pharaohs to Joseph, Jonathans to David, Darius's to Daniel, &c. It is the Lord that gives favour, and fashioneth mens opinions of us. He gave Solomon honour: and Paul prayes so him, that his service may be accepted of the Saints, *Rom.*15.31.

And she obtained kindnesse of him] His favour was not empty favour, professional only, as that of Courtiers.

And he speedily gave her, &c.] As resolving shortly to recommend her to the King, who he knew, would be much ruled by him in his choyce. Here were shadows of many excellent vertues in a blind Ethnik; who may in some sort teach true kindnesse, and doth condemne those that boast of false liberality. He dealt not basely, but bountifully with Esther.

Her things for purification] See *ver.*3.12.

With such things as belonged to her] Heb. Her portions or allowances of food, raiment, &c. which this faithful officer interverted not for his own private gaine, but rather inlarged himself in the true bestowing thereof.

And seven maidens] When he might have put her off with one: he enlargeth himself, and even stretcheth his authority, that he might by these maids of honour attending her, set her forth as a Queen aforehand.

Which were meet to be given her] Or, which were very comely, speciosæ, vel speciosæ.

And he preferred] Heb. He changed her. ſc. for the better, as God doth his people, when he taketh them to heaven, where they change place, but not company (as that good man ſaid upon his death-bed) and are brought from the jawes of death, to the joyes of eternal life; from ſhadows to ſubſtances, from miſery to majeſty, &c. a greater change then that of Queen Elizabeth, from a Priſoner to a Princeſſe; or that of our Henry the fourth, who was crowned the very ſame day that the year before he had been baniſhed the Realme. The Latines call proſperous things Res ſecundas, becauſe they are to be had hereafter; they are not the firſt things.

D. Preſton.

Dan. hiſt. 48.

Unto the beſt place of the houſe of the women] Or, Unto the beſt condition. Gods beſt children ſhall have the beſt of the beſt, fat things full of marrow, wines on the lees well refined, Eſay 25. 6, Jacob and his family had the beſt of the Land of Egypt, that Granary of the world, as one calleth it. His poſterity had a Land that flowed with milke and honey. What Countreys comparable to thoſe that profeſſe the Goſpel? Godlineſſe is profitable to all things, having the promiſes of both lives, &c.

Verſe 10. Eſther had not ſhewed her people] Becauſe the Jewes were ſlighted as captives, and forlorn (how dear to the gods that Nation is, ſaith Cicero, it appeareth, quòd eſt victa, quòd elocata, quòd ſervata, in that they are conquered, captivated, and not utterly deſtroyed by us) they were alſo generally hated, as different in Religion, and would not ſo much as drink with Heathens, leſt they ſhould drink things ſacrificed to Idols. They held it meritorious (in after-times) to kill an idolater, as Tacitus teſtifieth: and at this day they ſay, Optimum inter gentes, &c. The very beſt among the Gentiles is worthy to have his head bruiſed as a Serpent. A naſty people they are ſtill, and bloodthirſty, odious and ſordid. An hiſtorian telleth us of an Emperour travelling into Egypt, and there meeting with certaine Jews, he was ſo annoyed with the ſtench of them, that he cryed out, O Marcomanni, ô Quadi, ô Sarmatæ, tandem alios vobis deteriores inveni. This is the baſeſt and moſt contemptible people that ever I light upon. The Romanes would not own them (when they had conquered them) as they did other Nations, though they complied never ſo much, and were their ſervants. The Turks ſo hate them for crucifying Chriſt, that they uſe to ſay in deteſtation of a thing, I would I might die a Jew then: as when they would aſſure any thing, in execrationibus dicunt Judæus ſim, ſi fallo, they curſe themſelves, and ſay, Let me be held a Jew, if I deceive thee. This lyeth upon them as a puniſhment for their unexpiable guilt in putting to death the Lord of life. But in Eſthers time they were hated chiefly for their Religion. In prudence therefore ſhe concealeth her kindred, as being not called to give an account of her faith; and living private, might well performe her devotions, and yet not thruſt her ſelf into obſervation.

O at. pro L. Hac.

Ammian. lib. 2.

Aug. in Pſal. 58

Heyl. Geog.

Sanctius in Zech 8. 13.

For Mordecai had charged her that ſhe ſhould not ſhew it] Leſt ſhe ſhould be caſhiered the Court for a Jeweſſe, which was then held crime enough, as afterwards it was in Nero's dayes, to be a Chriſtian; and this haud perinde in crimine, quàm odio humani generis, as Tacitus hath it, not for any great fault ſo much, as by the hatred of mankind, incenſed and ſet on work by the Devil (doubtleſſe) to root out the true Religion, and to ſet up himſelf in the hearts of men as god of this preſent world. Hence thoſe complaints of Tertullian and Juſtin Martyr in their Apologies for Chriſtians, that their name (and not their crimes) was hated and hiſſed out of all companies. Odio publico eſt confeſſio nominis, non examinatio criminis.----Solius hominis crimen eſt, &c. Wiſely therefore did Mordecai charge Eſther to conceal her ſelf for preſent, ſo long as it might be done without prejudice to the truth, and ſcandal to her profeſſion. Worthily alſo did holy Eſther in obeying Mordecai her faithful foſter-father, in ruling her tongue that unruly member: and in that although ſhe had changed her keeper, yet ſhe had not let go her integrity, but held with that good woman in Hierome, who cryed out, Non ideò fateri volo, ne peream: ſed ideò mentiri nolo, ne peream.

Tert. Apol. c 1. 2, 3.

Juſt. Apol. 2.

Verſe 11. And Mordecai walked every day] What marvel that Eſther was ſo morigerous to Mordecai, when he was ſo ſolicitous of her welfare? Theſe mutual reſpects draw on one another. The Centurion in the Goſpel had dutiful ſervants (Do this, ſaid he, and they did it) for he was a moſt kinde Maſter, and minded their good.

Before the court of the womens houſe] The Turks wonder to ſee a man walk to and fro, and uſe to aſk ſuch an one what he meaneth? and whether he be out of his way, or out of his wits? But the Perſians and Greeks were great walkers. Jeſus alſo walked in Solomons porch, John 10. 23, &c.

Biddulph. lit. 3. cap. 5.

Virg.

To know how Eſther did] Heb. The peace of Eſther. Omnis in Aſcanio, &c. He had taken

taken her for his child, and was curious of her welfare, though she were now grown up, and preferred at Court. The Court he knew, was an ill aire for godlinesse to breath in. His care was therefore that she might have Gaius's prosperity, even mentem sanam in corpore sano, a sound mind in a sound body. And although he trusted God with his Neece, yet he knew that an honest care of her might well stand with faith in Gods providence. God must be trusted, but not tempted, by the neglect of lawful means, Matth. 4. 7.

Verse 12. Now when every maids turne was come] Their turnes then they took, and held it their happinesse to lose that which was their honour. See 1 Thess. 4. 4. with the Note: their bodies were first adulterated, and then vitiated. This was abominable.

After that she had beene twelve moneths] Time spent without spare, and wofully wasted in making provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof, which the Prophet Amos rightly calleth a thing of nought, Chap. 6. 13. with 4, 5, 6. Is time no better worth then to be thus rioted out in vanity? doth not eternity depend upon it, even the heaviest weights upon the weakest wires? It is therefore a good rule that one giveth, Corrige præteritum, rege præsens, cerne futurum.

According to the manner of the women] Who of themselves are apt enough (without an order to do so, as here) to cast away too much time and cost in tricking and trimming their bodies (those painted sheaths) as the Comedians have tartly taxed them; Negotii quantum in muliere unâ est! saith Plautus. What a deale of do is there with one woman in this kind! And Nosti mores mulierum, saith Terence, dum molliuntur, dum comuntur, annus est. And as for the Persian women, Ælian saith that they were above all others most addicted to this vanity: and yet the haughty daughters of Zion are deeply censured, and heavily threatned, Esay 3. 18. where the Prophet gives us an Inventory of those Ladies gallantry, and tells them that their fineneſse shall be turned into filthinesse, their neatnesse become nastinesse. Lib. 12. cap. 1.

For so were the dayes of their purification accomplished] What strange preparation was here for the impure bed of an Heathen? Every Virgin must be six moneths purified, and six moneths perfumed. O God, saith one, what care and cost is requisite to that foul which should be addressed a fit bride for thy holy and glorious Majesty?

To wit, six moneths with oyle of myrrhe] To cleanse them, and to clear up their countenances. Plin. l. 13 c. 1. & l. 12. c. 15, 16

And six moneths with sweet odours] Of these there is a lawful use, (why else were they created?) to please the sense, refresh the spirits, comfort the braine, &c. But the excesse and abuse of them is utterly unlawful, and was justly punished in Darius the last Persian Monarch, and Muleasses King of Tunes, who so far affected sweet odours, that he could not be without them whiles he was in the field against his enemy. Hereby it came to passe, that being overcome in battel by his own sonne Amidas (another Absalom) and pursued among the rest that fled, he was discovered and known who he was by the perfumes that he had about him, though to prevent it he had besmeared himself with blood and dust. Martial writing to his sweet friend, saith, Ba'th. Exner. pag. 245.

Posthume, non benè olet, qui benè semper olet.

And another saith, That woman smelleth best which smelleth of nothing. Spiret autem fœmina Christum, saith Clemens Alexandrinus, Let women learn and labour to smell of Christ, who is the royal Unction, and let them ever be anoynted with chastity, that chiefest ointment. Pædag. lib. 2. cap. 8.

And with other things for the purifying of women] Here was no end of excesse, and of expense; and all to satisfie the lust of this impure Prince. Silver is lavished out of the bag, and much wealth cast away upon these Minions, who had nothing else to do but to exercise their wits in devising ornaments and artifices, whereby they might get the Kings favour, and attaine to the Queendome. Tully telleth us that it was ordinary with the Kings of Persia to bestow upon their women such a City to buy them bracelets, and such a City for head-tires, &c. This was luxus plane monstrosissimus, & prodigalissimus, as one saith, most prodigious and prodigal luxury. So eagerly are the wicked bent upon Hæc in collum, hæc in crines. Orat. 5. in Verr.

the

the ſatisfying of their luſts, that they care not what coſt they caſt away upon them. Aske me never ſo much money, ſaith that Amouretto, Gen. 34. 11, 12. Judah let go his ſignet, bracelets, and ſtaffe, to the Harlot. Joſephus reporteth of one Decius Mundus (Immundus rather) a Nobleman that to one Paulina, a Lady in Rome, he offered as much as came to ſix thouſand pounds to ſatisfie his luſts but one night, and yet he could not bring her to his lure by ſuch a large offer: though afterwards (under the maſk of Anubis, to which dogs-head ſhe was devoted) he found means to abuſe her: which was the deſtruction both of thoſe bawdy Prieſts, and their Temple.

Lib. 18. cap. 4.

Verſe 13. Then thus came every maiden to the King] Thus prepared, annointed, appointed, &c. rejoycing in that whereof they had reaſon rather to repent; as too many do now adayes, whileſt they go dancing to hell in their bolts.

Whatſoever ſhe deſired was given her] Omne quod dicebat, was but ask and have: ſo laviſh is luſt; and ſo fooliſh are men to beſtow coſt upon ſo hard a reckoning.

Unto the Kings houſe] Ad regis cubiculum, ſaith the old Interpreter to the Kings bed-chamber.

Verſe 14. In the evening ſhe went] As the fitteſt time for a work of darkneſſe.

And on the morrow ſhe returned] So ſhort is the pleaſure of ſinne. Læta venire Venus, triſtis abire ſolet.

Into the ſecond houſe of the women] That having made ſale of her honeſty, ſhe might converſe with ſuch as had likewiſe left their honeſties behind them; companions in evil, and miſerable comforters, with whom they might make up their meaſure, and God power on his.

She came in unto the King no more] But muſt burn in luſt, without means of allayment; being ſcalded, as it were, in her own greaſe, frying within, and freezing without. Sed βορβορίωσα talia dicerem, as Cyril ſaith in a like caſe, We do but rake a dughill in a diſcourſe of this nature. Let us therefore ſtay here no longer (as an Interpreter hath it) in ſetting forth the filthineſſe of this Heathen Prince, who yet hath too many amongſt us that imitate his uncleanneſſe, and intemperance.

Merlin.

Verſe 15. Now when the turne of Eſther, &c.] Then, and not till then. So when Joſeph was ſufficiently humbled, the King ſent and looſed him; the Ruler of the people let him go free. When David was become weaned from the world, as a child from the breaſts, when his heart was not haughty, nor his eyes lofty, &c. then was he advanced to the Kingdome, Pſal. 131. 1, He that beleeveth maketh not haſte. Gods time is beſt: and as he ſeldome cometh at our time, ſo he never faileth at his own.

Pſal. 105. 20.

The daughter of Abihail] The ſeed of the righteous, and ſo an heireſſe of that precious promiſe, His ſeed ſhall be mighty upon earth, Pſal. 111. She was alſo a daughter of Iſrael, and therefore Gods firſt-born, higher then the Kings of the earth, Pſalme 84. 27.

Who had taken her for his daughter] This good work was ſo well pleaſing to God, that it is once again recited, and honourably mentioned. What ſhall the Lord Chriſt then do at the laſt day for his people who are full of mercy and good fruits? If now he doth not onely make mention of us, but mediation for us at the throne of glory; ſurely then he will much more make our faith which worketh by love, to be found unto praiſe, and honour, and glory, 1 Pet. 1. 7.

She required nothing] As other maids had done to ſet out their beauty; but contenting her ſelf with her native comelineſſe, and that wiſdome that made her face to ſhine: ſhe humbly taketh what Hegai directed her to, and wholly reſteth upon the Divine providence.

And Eſther obtained favour in the ſight of all] By her comely countenance and gracious deportment. Plutarch ſpeaks of a Spartan woman, that when her neighbours were ſhewing their apparel and jewels, ſhe brought out her children vertuous and well taught, ſaying, Theſe are my ornaments and accouſtrements. Eſther did the like by her vertues, which drew all hearts unto her; like as fair flowers in the ſpring do the paſſengers eyes. She had decked her ſelf with the white of ſimplicity, with the red of modeſty, with the ſilke of piety, with the ſattin of ſanctity, with the purple of chaſtity, as Tertullian expreſſeth it: taliter pigmentata Deum habebitis amatorem, ſaith he, and being thus adorned and beautified, women ſhall have God himſelf to be their ſuitor, and all godly men their admirers. Whereas on the otherſide, Tert. de cult. fœm.

Nequa-

Nequaquam ornata est benè, quæ morata est malè.
Pulchrum ornatum turpes mores pejus cæno collinunt. Plaut. Mostell. Act. 1. Scen. 3.

Verse 16. So Esther was taken unto King Ahasuerus] And so that sweet Promise was fulfilled and exemplified in her, Though ye have lien among the pots, yet shall ye be as the wings of a Dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold. Psal. 68. 13. God raised up this poor Orphane, this despicable exile out of the dust, and lifted this needy one out of the dunghil, that he may set her with Princes, even with the Princes of the people, Psal. 113. 7, 8. Thus he raised Moses and Joseph, David and Daniel, &c.

Into his House-royal] A place of rest and honour. Thus Flebile principium melior fortuna secuta est.

In the tenth moneth] Not in the twelfth moneth, as Josephus hath it falsely: and yet the Papists tell us, that the common people may well want the historical part of the Bible, and for it read Josephus his Jewish Antiquities. Barclai.

In the seventh yeare of his reigne] Foure or five yeares before Hamans advancement: this was a sweet Providence, that God should set up one to be a deliverer to his Church, so long before the danger grew on. So Joseph was sent down to Egypt before: Moses was skilled in all the learning of the Egyptians, and afterwards sent to Midian, that he might be fitted to be King in Jesurun, &c. Oh how unsearchable are Gods judgements, and his ways past finding out! Oh the depth, &c! Latimers three last Petitions were granted.

Verse 17. And the King loved Esther] This was the Lords own work, who regarded the low estate of his Handmaid, and framed the Kings heart to affect her. Let all such maids as desire loving husbands, and all such wives as would have their husbands loyal and loving to them, get Gods favour, and adorne themselves with humility and modesty, as Esther did. Let Christian husbands also learn (for shame) of this barbarian, to love their wives above all women, with a conjugal, chaste and fast affection; not lusting and hankering after strange flesh. 'Tis remarkable, that after Solomon had said, Rejoyce in the wife of thy youth,— be thou ravisht always with her love, he subjoyneth, And why wilt thou my sonne be ravisht with a strange woman, and embrace the bosome of a stranger? Prov. 5. 19, 20. Luke 1. 48.

She obtained grace and favour in his sight] Surely as meat pleaseth better in a clean dish, so vertue in comely persons is more amiable, saith Hugo. Beauty of it self is a greater commendation, saith Aristotle, then all letters testimonial.

So that he set the royal Crown upon her head] For Queens also had their Crownes, and did shine with the beams of their husbands, saying, as once those Romane Ladies, Ubi tu Caius, ibi ego Caia, whereseever thou art King, I also am Queen. Severus here saith, that the King clothed Esther with a purple robe, to shew, that he shared the Kingdome with her, but the text holdeth forth no such matter: Indeed he made her Queen instead of Vashti, he made also a great wedding feast, and gave a release to the Provinces, and gifts to his Grandees, as it followeth.

Verse 18. Then the King made a great feast] Feasts are never more in season, then at the recovery of the lost rib. See the note on Gen. 29. 22.

Unto all his Princes and his servants] So did Mauritius the Emperour of Greece, when he married Constantina; and Henry the third Emperour of Germany, when he married Agnes, daughter to the Prince of Pictavia, at Ingelheim. Whither when a great sort of Players, Fidlers, Jesters and Juglers resorted, he not only sent them away without reward, but also without meat and drink, which he liberally bestowed upon the poor. Niceph. l. 18. c. 8. Funec. ad annum 1044.

Even Esthers feast] So he called it, to testifie his great affection and respect toward his Spouse. This is no warrant for that Popish custome, of dedicating feasts to the honour of Saints, or for that heathenish practice, in some places amongst us, of keeping Wakes.

And he made a release to the Provinces] That is, he caused it to be kept Holiday, as Josephus hath it. Or rather he granted to his subjects a relaxation, or freedome from their their taxes, tributes and publike payments, for a time at leaſt, that thereby the New Queen might get favour and authority amongſt them, and all men might wiſh them much joy and happineſſe, that the ſoines of the people might bleſſe their Prince and his marriage for this breathing and intermiſſion; when as formerly his Exactours received from his ſubjects no leſſe ſummes of curſes then of coine, to maintaine his luxury.

Cyrop. l. 8. And gave gifts] Such as Xenophon reckoneth up, bracelets, chaines of gold, garments, horſes with rich trappings, diſhes from his own table, &c. This was Kingly, this was god-like, James 1.5. His ſonne Artaxerxes Longimanus was wont to ſay, that he had therefore one hand longer then another, that he might be readier to give then to receive. Of Cyrus it is ſaid, that he took more content in giving then receiving. Of Steven King of Hungary, and of Oſwald King of England, that their right hands rotted not off, a long while after they were dead, becauſe oft ſtretched out in giving gifts, and dealing almes. Chriſt received that he might give, Pſal. 68. 18. Eph. 4. 8. And held it more bleſſed to give then to receive, Acts 20. 35. Be wiſe now therefore, O ye Kings, &c. by your bounty and liberality the people ſhall be obliged, the State fenced, vertue encouraged, miſery relieved, that you have ſecured. For, μαχρόχειρ. Δεδὺς μᾶλλον ἢ λαβών. Xenoph. Bonfin.

Martial. Extra fortunam eſt quicquid donatur amicis:
Quæ dederis ſolas, ſemper habebis opes.

According to the ſtate of the King] Not pinchingly and ſparingly, but bountifully, and as became a King: as Alexander the Great, when he ſent his Tutour a ſhip full of frankincenſe: and when a poor man asked him for an almes, he gave him a City, which when the poor man ſtarted at and made ſtrange of, Alexander ſaid unto him, Non quæro quid te accipere deceat, ſed quid me dare, The queſtion is not what thou ſhouldeſt receive, but what it beſeemeth me to give. And thus is the marriage of Eſther ſolemnized with ſtate and pomp ſuitable: thus is Gods Promiſe made by Jeremy fulfilled, that if Jechoniah would not ſtand out againſt Nebuchadnezzar, but yield up the City, and go into captivity, it ſhould be well with him and the people in the land of their captivity. It was ſo with him, Jer. 52. 31. it was ſo likewiſe with Eſther, Daniel, and many others by their meanes. And why? God will not ſuffer his faithfulneſſe to faile, nor alter the word that is gone out of his mouth.

Sen. de benef. l. 2. c 16.

Pſal. 89 33.

Ver. 19. And when the Virgins were gathered together, &c.] For a new ſupply of the Kings inſatiable luſt, ſay ſome, this affection ſoon growing cold to Eſther. So unreaſonable is luſt, ſo inconſtant carnal affection, ſo lawleſſe are the wicked, ſo ſhort is any happineſſe of perfection in this life. The Septuagint leave out this word [the ſecond time] but the Hebrew verity hath it. Others ſay, the ſecond time, ſignifieth into the ſecond houſe of the women. For they went not each to their own homes, becauſe the King was now fully ſatisfied in his choice, as Tremellius and Junius conceive, but they remained in the cuſtody of Shaazgar Keeper of the Kings Concubines, not ſuffered to converſe with any man ever after, as Aben-Ezra obſerveth. Therefore they were twice gathered together. Once, when they were brought to Hegai the Eunuch, and again, when from the Kings houſe, they met all together in the ſecond houſe of the women, under the Government of Shaazgar.

Negotiorum familiarium curator. 1 Theſ. 4.11. Φιλοπραγμοσύνη. Ἀνοχή.

Then Mordecai ſate in the Kings gate] As Porter or other Officer, ſaith Severus: and he attended ſtill upon his office, not fawning on Eſther, nor prolling for preferment. His ambition was to be quiet, and to do his own buſineſſe, intra pelliculam ſuam ſe continere: high ſeates he knew were never but uneaſie, and long robes cannot but contract much ſoile. In the place he now holdeth, he can heare how it goeth with his Eſther, and do the King good ſervice, as verſe 21.

Cui tacere grave ſit. Curt. l. 4.

Verſe 20. Eſther had not yet ſhewed her kinred] Taciturnity is ſometimes a vertue, and Tacitus the beſt Hiſtorian. Queen Elizabeths Motto was, Video, taceo, I ſee, and ſay nothing. Sophocles ſaith, Nothing better becometh a woman then ſilence. Euripides alſo ſaith, that ſilence, and modeſty, and keeping at home, are the greateſt commendation to a woman that can be. Curtius telleth us, that the Perſians never truſt one whom they finde to be talkative. Why Eſther concealed her kindred, ſee the note on v. 11. and know that this is no warrant for popiſh equivocation; a device of the Jeſuites, for the comfort of afflicted Catholikes (as Blackwell and Garnet profeſſe) and for the inſtruction of all the godly.

For

For Esther did the commandment of Mordecai] Her honours had not altered her manners. She was semper tardem, as obsequious and observant of Mordecai still as ever. So was Joseph, David, Solomon, Epaminundas, and others; of their old and poorer Parents. Pope Benedict a Lombard, Anno Dom. 1303. A shepherds son would not acknowledge his poore mother, when she came to him Lady-like, but caused her to put on her shepherdesse apparel, and then did her all the honour that might be. Sir Thomas Moore, would in Westminster-Hall beg his fathers blessing on his knees. Mordecai was Esthers foster-father, and had given her (though not her being, yet) her well-being; and hence she so respects him, and is so ruled by him. She had gotten from him that nurture and admonition in the Lord, that was better (to her then the Crown of the Kingdome: for what is unsanctified greatnesse but eminent dishonour? and what is dignitas in indigno, but ornamentum in lute? If any Parents finde disobedient children, let them consider whether Eli like, they have not honoured (I mean cockered) their sons too much, 1 Sam. 2. 29. which is the reason they honour them now so little. Will they keep meat well savoured, yet never salt it? will they have sprigs sprout right, yet never lop them? Our Henry the second so cockered his eldest son Henry, that he crowned him whilest himself was yet alive, which made his ambition quite turne off his obedience, to his fathers great heart-break. Salvian.

Verse 21. In those dayes] Whiles the King is drowning himself in pleasure, and dreadeth no danger: whiles he was ravishing and deflowring of Virgins, and bragging (perhaps) as Proculus the Emperour did, that when he made warre upon the Sarmatians, in fifteen dayes he got with childe an hundred Virgins of that Countrey, there taken prisoners. Whiles this voluptuous Prince was in the glut of his carnal delights, in the flagrancy of his sinful lusts his life is sought for, and hell gapes for him; so slippery places are great ones set in: so doth the Lord sauce their greatest prosperity with sudden and unexpected dangers. Thus Attilas King of Hunnes was hang'd up in gibbets, as it were, by Gods own hand, in the midst of his Nuptials. Thus King Henry of France, upon the marriage of his sister to the King of Spaine, was so over-joyed, that he called himselfe by a new title, Tres heureuse Roy, the thrice happy King. But (to confute him) in solemnizing that marriage, he was slain at Tilt by Mongomery, Captain of his guard, though against his Will, &c.

Ad generum Cereris sine cade & sanguine pauci
Descendunt reges, & sicca morte tyranni. Juvenal.

While Mordecai sate in the Kings gate] See ver. 19.

Two of the Kings Chamberlaines] In trust I have found treason, said Queen Elizabeth. So before her, did David, Solomon, Rehoboam, Joash, Amaziah, Alexander the great, Julius Cæsar, and who not, almost? Hence some great Princes have wished never to have meddled with Government: as Augustus, Adrian, (felix si non imperitasset) Pertinax, who used to say, that he never in all his life committed the like fault, as when he accepted the Empire: and many times he motioned to leave the same, and to return unto his house. Diocletian and Maximian did so; for they found, that quot servi, tot hostes, quot custodes, tot carnifices; they could not be safe from their own servants; but Damocles-like, they sat at meat with a drawn sword hanging by a twined thread over their necks. Hence Dionysius durst not trust his owne daughter to barbe him. And Massinissa, King of Numidia, committed his safe-keeping to a guard of dogs; for men he durst not trust.

Of those which kept the door] sc. Of the Kings bed-chamber. Some render it, which kept the houshold-stuffe. Men, they were much intrusted, and therefore the more to be abhorred. Metuendum est esse sine custode, sed multo magis a custode metuendum est, said Augustus concerning his guard, whom he suspected of treachery. All, or most of his successours, till Constantine, died unnatural deaths. Let great ones therefore commit themselves to God in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creatour. Dio Cass.

Were wroth] What the occasion of their discontent was, is uncertain. The Greek and Chaldee say it was, because Mordecai was so promoted. Others, because Vashti was deposed, and Esther advanced to her Royal state. Others say, that they affected the Kingdom, as the Magi had done not long before. Some again, that they were not well paid paid their arrears. Sure it is, that ambition, envy, covetousnesse, all or some of these stirred them up to this treasonable attempt. Whatsoever the Sire was, the bastard is anger: and rage likely is the mother of treason, because as it banisheth reason, and so gives way to all unrulinesse, so it ends in malice; and malice will have blood.

And sought to lay hands on the King Ahasuerus] Kings are fair marks for Traitours to shoot at. In which regard

Miserumque infelix est etiam Rex
Nec quenquam (mihi credo) fecit diadema beatum.

Most of the Cesars got nothing by their adoption or designation to the Empire, Nisi ut citius interficerentur, but to be slain so much the sooner. Treasons there were so many plotted and practised against that incomparable Queen Elizabeth, that she said in Parliament, She rather marvelled that she was then mused that she should not be, were it not that Gods holy hand had protected her beyond expectation. Henry the fourth of France, was first stabbed in the mouth, and after that in the heart, by those false Jesuites, whom he had admitted into his very bosome, and used with marvellous respect. But it would not serve his turne to save his life. His Countreyman Comineus telleth us, that if he should write of all the Princes which he knew in his time, that in the judgement of men seemed to live in great felicity, and yet to those that knew them familiarly, lived in a miserable estate, that matter alone would require a reasonable Volume.

Camd. Eliz. Pref.

Ibid.

Verse 22. And the thing was known to Mordecai] How he came to know it, is uncertain. Josephus saith, that it was revealed to him by one Barnabazus a Jew, who was servant to one of the Conspiratours. R. Solomon saith, that the Eunuches talked of the plot before Mordecai in the language of Tarsus, supposing that he had not understood them; and so it came forth. Others conceive, that they solicited him, being one of the Keepers of the Kings door also to joyne with them. Howsoever it was that he got inkling and intelligence of their bloody purpose; God was in it, and good men are of his privy counsel; The secret of the Lord is with them that feare him, Psal. 25. 11. Their apprehensions of things are deep, and their observations right, their knowledge rare to boult out mischiefes, their experience leads them on to guesse shrewdly at mens purposes by their looks and gestures. Wisdome dwell with prudence (or subtilty) and finde out knowledge of witty inventions, Prov. 8. 12.

Who told it unto Esther the Queen] Haply, as holding himself (a mean man) unworthy and unfit to speak to the King. Or, as fearing lest he should not be believed, or should be out-faced by the Traitour, or as conceiving that it would be better taken from Esther, whom the King so dearly loved, and might prove a good meanes to insinuate her further into his favour. Yea Mordecai himself (saith an Interpreter) might safely have also a further reach herein, namely, to try the sincere affection of Esther towards him, whether she would make this an occasion to his good and preferment, or rather take the glory thereof unto her self.

And Esther certified the King thereof in Mordecais name] She doth not conceal the treason, or further it, as some ambitious Semiramis would have done, or adulterous Livia. For although she was wont to boast that she ruled her husband Augustus by obeying him, yet Pliny and Tacitus tell us, that she was over-familiar with Eudemus her Physician. And whereas Augustus his last words to her were, O Livia, remember our marriage, and Adieu. She did so, and 'tis thought, had a finger in setting him going. And the like is reported of Clytemnestra, Olympias, Queen Isabel, wife to our Edward the second. But holy Esther was none such; She, as a loyal and faithful wife, discovereth to the King the danger he was in, and so saveth his life, so did Michol Davids wife, though she had no great good will to her. The like is reported of Cleopatra, daughter to Antiochus the great, who gave her in marriage to Ptolemeus Epiphanes, thinking by her to destroy him, but he was deceived, according to Dan. 11. 17. Valerius Maximus and Fulgosius speak much in the commendation of Theria, Sulpitia, Chilonia, Eutonia, Egnatia, &c. for loving and faithful wives. Valerius Maximus Christianus also for like cause, celebrateth Irene, wife to Philip the Emperour, and Mary, wife to Sigismund, King of Bohemia and Hungary, &c.

Lib 2. cap 16.

Verum hæc (Esther) tantùm aliàs inter caput extulit omnes, Quantùm lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.

Verſ. 23. And when Inquiſition was made of the matter] The King neither ſleighted this accuſation, nor over-haſtily believed it. Not this, leſt he ſhould diſcover a needleſſe feare, or precipitate a wrong ſentence. Not that, leſt he ſhould betray his own life, and put all into a confuſion, as Gedaliah did, Jer. 40. and 41. and as he in the hiſtory did, who being forewarned by a letter, of a dangerous plot laid for his life, laid aſide the letter with theſe words, ne curæ vel cruciatui, Tomorrow we will minde theſe ſerious buſineſſes. but ere the morrow he was diſpatched. The matter was here enquired into, ſaith the text, leſt haply it might be miſ-reported, and ſo the innocent be puniſhed. Or, if not innocent, yet Doth our Law condemn any before his cauſe be heard? Surely Pilate and Feſtus were farre better Juſticers then Caiaphas and Lyſias, for they would execute a man in the morning, and then ſit upon him in the afternoon. Æneas Sylvius, in his twentieth chapter of Europe, tells of ſome places, wherein if any one be ſuſpected of theft, he is forthwith taken and truſſed up. Three dayes after, they judge of the ſuſpicion: and if they finde the man guilty, they let his carcaſſe hang till it rot: as if otherwiſe, they take it down, and bury it honourably at the publike charge. This is prepoſterous juſtice, judgement turned into gall, and righteouſneſſe into hemlock.

It was found out] As treaſon uſually is, and ſtrangely: witneſſe thoſe in Queen Elizabeths reign, and the powder-plotters. Creighton the Jeſuite, a Scot, ſailing into Scotland, and being taken by certain Netherland-Pirates, had torne certain papers in pieces. But the torne pieces being throwen out of the ſhip, were blowen back again by the wind and caſt by a Providence into the ſhip, not without a miracle, as Creighton ſaid himſelfe. Which being ſet together by Wade, with much labour and ſingular cunning, diſcovered new deſignes of the Pope and his Agents here againſt England. Anno 1585. Detexit facinus fatum & non implevit, ſaith Tacitus of one about his time. Either the Traitours own tongue ſhall betray him (as it befel thoſe two ſent by Mahomet to kill Scanderbeg) or the foules of heaven ſhall reveal the miſchief, and that which hath wing ſhall tell the matter, Eccleſ. 10. 20. (It was a piece of a wing, a quill that diſcovered that helliſh powder-plot.) Or ſome other way it ſhall be found out, as here, and the Conſpiratours brought to condigne puniſhment. Camd. Eliz. 266. Turk. Hiſt. fol. 160.

Therefore they were both hanged on a tree] Traitours, like bells, will be never well tuned till well hanged, till they have worne a Tyburne-tippet, as father Latimer phraſed it. Campian that ſpider was ſwept down by the hand of juſtice, and drew his laſt thread in the Triangle of Tyburne. His words in his Epiſtle to the Honourable Counſellours of Queen Elizabeth were theſe, Quamdiu vel unus quiſpiam è nobis ſupererit qui Tyburno veſtro fruatur, &c. As long as there is any one of us left to enjoy your Tyburne, &c. Much joy may they have of it, ſith it is their ambition, and may their quarters be ſet as high, as that falſe Edricks head once was by King Knute, viz. upon the higheſt part of the tower of London, therein performing his Promiſe to a Traitour, of advancing him above any Lord of the Land. Dan. Hiſt. 19.

And it was written in the book of the Chronicles] Heb. in the book of the words of dayes, in the Diary of the Kings, or in the book of remembrance. As the Jewes, ſo the Perſians had their Chronicles or publike Commentaries, wherein all memorable acts were recorded, and Scribes or Hiſtoriographers for that purpoſe appointed and maintained; Plutarch writeth, that at that great ſea-fight between Themiſtocles and the Perſians, Xerxes ſate in a throne of gold, and ſaw the conflict, having many Scribes about him, whoſe office was to ſet down all that was done that day. This was a commendable cuſtome, and might be a motive to their Kings and great ones to take heed of doing ought that they would not have regiſtred and read by ſucceeding ages. Suetonius telleth us, that Auguſtus upon this account, forbade his Daughter and Nieces to ſay or do any thing that they would not have to be chronicled. Suet. in Auguſt.

Before the King] Perhaps in his preſence, and for his ſpecial uſe: though Mordecai's good ſervice was ſoon forgotten, God forgat not to recompence Ahaſuerus his love to Eſther, and courteſie to her people, by detecting and defeating thoſe Conſpiratours that ſought his life. But he ſoon forgets Mordecai, Gods inſtrument for his deliverance, though the matter were written in a book before him; hence he goes noted with a black Turk. Hist. 227. coale for his ingratitude. Tamerlane had a catalogue of the names of such as had best deserved of him, which he daily perused, of ten times saying, that day to be lost wherein he had not given them something. There was a Providence in it, that nothing was yet done for Mordecai. Gods time is the best, and we shall one day say so: neither is there any thing lost by waiting his leisure. He bottles up our tears, he books up our sighes, he writes down all we say or do in his roll of remembrance, Mal. 3. 6, 10. See the Note there, and the Reference.

CHAP. III.

Verse 3. After these things did King Ahasuerus promote Haman.] AFoure yeares after his marriage with Esther, (or near upon) did Ahasuerus magnifie and exalt Haman, Hominem profanum & sceleratum, as one saith, a profane wicked person: meerly for his minde sake, to shew his Soveraignty, and that he would, like some petty god upon earth, set up whom he would, and whom he would, put down, Dan. 4. 19. Whether it were also by flattery or sycophancy, or some new projects for establishing his tyranny, and increasing his tributes, that Haman had insinuated himself into this Kings favour, it is uncertain. Sure it is, that Mordecai, a better man, lay yet unlook't upon, like good corne he lay in the bottome of the heap, when this vilest of men was exalted, Psal. 12. 8. Thus oft empty vessels swim aloft, rotten posts are gilt with adulterate gold, the worst weeds spring up bravest, and when the twins strive in Rebecca's womb, profane Esau comes forth first, and hath the primogeniture, Gen. 25. 25. But whiles they seek the greatest dignities, they mostly meet with the greatest shame, like Apes, while they be climing, they the more shew their deformities. They are lifted up also, ut lapsu graviore ruant, that they may come down again with the greater poise. It was therefore well and wisely spoken by Alvarez de Luna, when he told them who admired his fortune and favour with the King of Castile: You do wrong to commend the building before it be finished, and until you see how it will stand.

Alexander the Great made Abdolominus a poor Gardiner King of Sidon.

The sonne of Amedatha the Agagite] i. e. The Amalekite, of the Stock-royal: so that Haman was the natural enemy of the Jewes, like as Annibal was of the Romanes. An old grudge there was, an inveterate hatred: Amalek was Esau's grand-childe, and the enmity betwixt these two peoples was, as we say of runnet, the elder the stronger.

And advanced him] Set him aloft upon the pinacle of highest preferment, as Tiberius did Sejanus, as Lewis the eleventh of France did his Barber, as our Henry the eighth did Wolsey, and our late Kings, Buckingham. But Princes Favourites should consider with themselves, that honour is but a blast, a magnum nihil, a glorious fancie, a rattle to still mens ambition, and that as the Passenger looketh no longer upon the dial, then the Sun shineth upon it: So it is here.

And set his seat above all the Princes] This cup of honour his weak head could not beare: this blast so blew up the bubble, that it burst again. Sejanus-like, he now began to sacrifice to himselfe, little thinking of that utter ruine to the which he was hasting. Physicians use to say, that ultimus sanitatis gradus est morbo vicinus. Sure it is, that when the wicked are near unto misery, they have greatest preferment and prosperity. When Tiberius was desirous to rid his hands of Sejanus, he made him his Colleague in the Consulship, and set him above all his Courtiers. Ahasuerus intended not any hurt to Haman, when he raised him to this pitch of preferment, but it puffed him up, and proved his bane. None are in so great danger, as those that walk upon pinacles: even height it selfe makes mens braines to swim. Every man is not a Joseph, or a Daniel. They were set above all the Princes, and could not only beare it, but emprove it for the glory of God, and the good of his people. Sed ô quàm hoc non est omnium! High seats are not only uneasie, but dangerous, and how few are there that do not (as Isis her asse) think themselves worthipful for the burthen they bear?

Honos onus.

Verse 2. And all the Kings servants] His Courtiers and others; not his menial servants only.

That were in the Kings gate.] Where the Courtiers used to walk, that they might be at a call: and where others attended, that had buſineſſe at the Court.

Bowed and reverenced Haman] Not with ſo much readineſſe and diligence, as impudence and baſeneſſe: for ſhould men bow to a molten calfe, becauſe made up of golden care-rings? Many of theſe cringing Courtiers could not but hate Haman in their hearts, and were as ready to wiſh him hang'd, and to tell the King ſhortly after where he might have a fit gallowes for him. So Sejanus his greateſt friends, who had deified him before, when once he fell out of the Emperours favour, ſhewed themſelves moſt paſſionate againſt him, ſaying, that if Cæſar had clemency, he ought to reſerve it for men, not uſe it toward monſters.

For the King had ſo commanded concerning him] And if the King had commanded theſe ſervile ſoules to worſhip a dog or a cat, as the Egyptians did a golden image, as Nebuchadnezzars ſubjects did, to turne the glory of the incorruptible God into the ſimilitude of a corruptible man, of foure-footed beaſts or creeping things, as Rom. 1. 23. they would have done it. Moſt people are of King Harry's religion, as the proverb is, reſolving to do as the moſt do, though thereby they be undone for ever. This is to be worſe then ſome Heathens. See the note on Acts 4. 19. But why ſhould Ahaſuerus be ſo haſty to heap ſuch honours upon ſo worthleſſe and wicked a perſon, but that he had a minde to proclaime his own folly to all his Kingdome?

But Mordecai bowed not, nor did him reverence] He did not, he durſt not, though preſſed and urged to it with greateſt importunity. And why? not becauſe Haman wore a picture openly in his boſome, as the Chaldee Paraphraſt and Aben-Ezra give the reaſon; Nor meerly (if at all, which ſome doubt of) becauſe he was a curſed Amalekite; But becauſe the Perſian Kings required, that themſelves and their chief Favourites (ſuch as proud Haman was,) ſhould be reverenced with a kinde of divine honour, more then was due to any man. This the Jewes were flatly forbidden by their Law to do. The Lacedemonians alſo were reſolute againſt it, as Herodotus in his ſeventh book relateth. Pelopidas the Thebane would not be drawn to worſhip the Perſian Monarch in this ſort. No more would Conon the Athenian General. And when Timagoras did, the Athenians condemned him to die for it. It was not therefore pride or ſelf-willedneſſe that made Mordecai ſo ſtiffe in the hams that he would not bend to Haman, but feare of ſinne, and conſcience of duty. He knew, that he had better offend all the world, then God and his own conſcience.

Herod. l. 1. Valer. l. 7. c. 3. Curt. l. 3. & 5.

Plut. in Artax. Juſtin. l. 6. Val. l. 6. c. 33.

Nihil præter peccatum timeo. Baſil.

Verſe 3. Then the Kings ſervants, &c.] See verſe 2.

Said unto Mordecai] Tempting his piety and conſtancy not once, but often, alledging the Kings commandment, together with his aloneneſſe in refuſing to obey it, Hamans power, diſpleaſure, &c. Thus they preſented to Mordecai both Irritamenta and Terriculamenta, i. e. Allurements and Affrightments, according to that of the Apoſtle, Heb. 11. 37. they were tempted on both hands, but all in vaine. Sapientis virtus, per ea quibus petitur, illuſtratur. This conſtancy wicked men call obſtinacy, but they ſpeak evil of that they know not, viz. the power of the Spirit, and the privy armour of proof, that the Saints have about their hearts.

Why tranſgreſſeſt thou the Kings Commandment] Right or wrong, it matters not with many; if the King or State have commanded a thing, done it muſt be. But what ſaid that Martyr to the Popiſh Biſhop, preſſing him with this Argument, and affirming, that the Kings Lawes muſt be obeyed, whether they agree with the Word of God or not, yea, though the King were an infidel? If Shedrach, Meſhech and Abednego had been of your minde, my Lord, (ſaid Roger Coo, Martyr) Nebuchadnezzar had not confeſſed the living God. True it is, that we muſt give unto Cæſar the things that are Cæſars. But withal, we muſt ſee to it, that we give unto God the things that are Gods, Matth. 22. 21. where the three articles uſed in the Original are very emphatical. And it is a ſaying of Chryſoſtome, If Cæſar will take to himſelf Gods part, by commanding that which is ſinful, to pay him ſuch a tribute is not tributum Cæſaris, but ſervitium diaboli, an obſerving of Cæſar, but a ſerving of the devil.

Act. & Mon. 1550.

τὰ τῦ Θεῦ τῷ Θεῷ.

Verſe 4. Now it came to paſſe, when they ſpake daily unto him] This, if they did of good-will, (as at firſt perhaps they did) it was a friendly office, and may ſhame many of us who are ſo backward to Chriſtian admonition, (See my common places) that ſpiritual Almes, that we are bound freely to diſtribute. Jude 22. 23. But if (as is likely, at length, at leaſt) they did it to ingratiate with Haman, and out of envy to Mordecai, becauſe he did not comply and comport with them, what did they elſe but act the devils vils part; and the rather, because they were importunate and impudent as not to take an answer?

And he hearkened not unto them] They did but surdo fabulam (as they say) beat upon cold iron: this matter was not malleable, this man not to be prevailed with, to do ought against his conscience. The Heavens shall sooner fall, then I will alter mine opinion, said that Martyr. This the Persecutours called obstinacy: sed pro hac obstinatione fidei morimur, saith Tertullian, but for this obstinacy of faith we gladly die: and the stronger any are in faith, the more resolute in warrantable purposes. The strength of Israel repenteth not, 1 Sam. 10. 29. Unconstancy comes from weakness.

Act. & Mon. John Ardley.

That they told Haman] Purposely to pick a thank and curry favour. Go not about as a tale-bearer, Levit. 19. 16. The word signifieth as a pedler, that first filleth his pack with tales and slanders, and then venteth them to the hurt of others. Such are fitly joyned with flatterers. Prov. 20. 19. and with murtherers, Ezek. 22. 9. Such a wretched Pedler was Doeg, and such were these evil instruments in the text, whose tongues were as sharp as the quills of a Porcupine, the poison of aspes was under their lips. And although it was truth they told Haman, yet because they did it not for any love to the truth, nor for respect to justice, nor for the bettering of either party, but only to undo the one, and to incense the other, they were no better then slanderers.

To see whether Mordecai's matters would stand] Whether he would stick to his principles, and not start aside for any terrour, Phil. 1. 28.

For he had told them that he was a Jew] That is, by Interpretation, a Confessour: yea more, he was a stout Professour of the truth: and though he had hitherto concealed himself, yet now (sith they will needs have it so) he plainly tells them, his countrey and his conscience, the true cause of his peremptorinesse, which they held and call'd pride and stubbornesse.

Verse 5. And when Haman saw] Stirred up by these pestilent pick-thanks, qui crabronem furiosum magis irritaverant (as one saith) he took special notice of Hamans irreverence, which with more discretion he might have dissembled. When an inconsiderate fellow had stricken Cato in the Bath, and afterwards cried him mercy, he replied, I remember not that thou didst strike me; 'Tis a signe of weakness to be too soft and sensible of an indignity; I was as a deafe man that heard not, and as one dumbe, in whose mouth is no reproof, Psal. 38. 13, 14. The best apology to words and carriages of scorne and petulancy, is that of Isaac to Ishmael, viz. patience and silence.

Sen. de ir. l. 1.

That Mordecai bowed not, &c.] A great businesse to mad him so much, but that he was set on by that old man-slayer.

Sic leve, sic parvum est animum quod laudis avarum
Subruit, aut reficit——

A small winde raiseth a bubble, ambition rideth without reines, and hath inhabitatorem Draconem Apostatam, the devil at inne with it.

Then was Haman full of wrath] He swell'd like a toad, glow'd like a devil, being transform'd as it were, into a breathing devil, he seeks the utter extirpation of that people, of whom, as concerning the flesh, Christ was to come, Rom. 9. 5. wishing the same to them which Caligula in a rage did to the people of Rome, I would ye had all but one neck, that I might cut you all off at one blow. Josephus tells us, that he brake out into this bluttering speech, Liberi Persæ me adorant. Hic autem, servus cum sit, tamen hoc facere dedignatur. The Persians, though free-men, reverence me, and yet this slave thinks himself too good to do it. This he uttered no doubt with a very harsh and hateful intention of the voice, such as was that of the two brethren in evil, (whose anger was fierce, and their wrath cruel) when Gen. 34. 31. they answered their aggrieved father, Should he deal with our sister as an harlot? where the word Zonah (Harlot) hath a great letter, to note their vehemency, rage and rudeness.

Ἐβούλοντο ἑνὶ τραχήλῳ πάντες ὑμῖν ἐπιπεσεῖν.

Gen. 49. 5, 7.

Verse 6. And he thought scorne to lay hands on Mordecai alone] He thought it a small matter, saith Josephus, a thing below him, too little for his revenge, which like fire burneth all it can lay hold upon, especially when as here it ariseth from ambition, which like choler adust, if obstructed and stopped in its course, is a dangerous passion, and μικρὸν ἡγούμενος.

endeth

endeth in burning fevers and madneſſe. Haman thought ſcorne, (contempſit in oculis ſuis, ſo the Hebrew) to foule his fingers with Mordecai alone, the whole Nation muſt periſh, and all the children of God that were ſcattered abroad, as he once ſaid, John 11. 50, 52. Semblably, noſtri temporis Hamanus (ſaith Merlin upon this text,) the Haman of our time, (meaning the Duke of Guiſe, as I ſuppoſe) when as by the Kings favour he was promoted, and promiſed himſelf the Crown, there being but one family only that ſtood in his way, he deſired together with it to overturn all the Reformed Religion, and to root out all the remembrance of the Churches in France. Hence the Pariſian Maſſacre, (wherein Merlin had his part, being houſhold-Chaplaine to the Admiral, and by a miracle of Gods mercy eſcaping thoſe helliſh cut-throates.) The firſt occaſion of that bloody Maſſacre, I have ſomewhere read, was this. (Other things I know were pretended, as if the Proteſtants had plotted and practiced againſt the King, Queen-mother, and the Princes of the blood, and coine ſtamped with this Inſcription, Virtus in rebelles, &c.) The Pope ſent to the Cardinal of Lorraine, (brother to the Duke of Guiſe) a Table, wherein was painted our Lady with a little childe in her armes, by the moſt excellent Painter in Chriſtendome, and conſecrated with his own hands, and encloſed it in a caſe of ſilk, and a letter withal, giving him high commendation and thanks for his zeal againſt the Huguenots. The meſſenger that carried the Preſent fell ſick by the way, and finding one going into France, entreated him to deliver the Preſent to the Cardinal. The Cardinall read the letter, and laid the Table on his bed, for he would not open it, till he might do it with greater ſolemnity. For this purpoſe he invited the Duke of Guiſe to dinner with many other great Perſonages. In the mean while, one that liked not the Cardinal, found meanes to change the Table, &c. At dinner the letter was read, and the Table taken out of the caſe in the ſight of the Cardinal, and all his gueſts, wherein was painted in place of our Lady and her childe, the Cardinal of Lorraine ſtark naked, the Queen-Mother, the young Queen of Scots, and the old Dutcheſſe of Guiſe naked alſo, hanging about the Cardinals neck, and their legges wrapped between his legges. I cannot ſay much for the man that did this prank: but that the Cardinal and his Complices ſhould thereupon deſign all the French Proteſtants to deſtruction, ſhould butcher thirty thouſand of them in a moneth, one hundred thouſand of them in one year, ſome ſay three hundred thouſand: that upon the newes of it the Pope ſhould proclaim a Jubilee for joy, and the Cardinal of Lorraine give the meſſenger a thouſand Crownes, &c. This was matchleſſe immanity, this was Haman-like hatred, this was cruelty beyond that of Simeon and Levi, which made good Jacob in a deep deteſtation of that dirity, cry out, O my ſoul, come not thou into their ſecret, &c. Gen. 49. 6.

Camd. Eliz.

Act. & Mon.

For they had ſhewed him the people of Mordecai] Viz. That he was a Jew. Joſephus his note upon this text is. Haman naturally hated the Jewes, as thoſe that had anciently deſtroyed the Amalekites his Countreymen. He might eaſily call to minde what Saul had done to them, and David, and laſtly the tribe of Simeon. God had ſentenced them long ſince to utter deſtruction; and yet deferred the firſt execution for about foure hundred yeares ſpace: and now again, after more then five hundred yeares, Haman the Agagite is thus exalted, but for a miſchief, as the Eagle carrieth the Tortoiſe on high in her talons, that ſhe may break it in the fall, and feed upon it.

Patientia læſa fit furor.

Wherefore Haman ſought to deſtroy all the Jewes] Ut ſanguineam famem expleret, as a wolfe breaking into the folde kills all the flock: as fowlers take away the young and the dammes together, putting both into the bag (which God forbade, Deut. 22. 6.) as Eſau, that rough man, came with foure hundred cut-throats at his heels, to deſtroy the mother with the children, Gen. 32. 11. as Uladus, Prince of Valachia, was wont, together with the offendor, to execute the whole family, yea, ſometimes the whole kindred: as Selimus the great Turk in revenge of the loſs he received at the battel of Lepanto, reſolv'd to put to death all the Chriſtians in his dominions, in number infinite: As Philip of Spaine ſailed out of the Low-countreyes homewards, vowing to root out all the Lutherans there, and proteſting that he had rather have no ſubjects then ſuch, As cruel Doctor Story a great Perſecutor in Queen Maries reign, and hang'd for a Traitour in Queen Elizabeths, whoſe death he had conſpired, curſing her daily in his Grace at board, and greatly repenting that he and others had laboured only about the young ſprigs and twigs (as he phraſed it) while they ſhould have ſtriken at the root, and clean rooted it out: Laſtly, as the Gun-powder Papiſts, who had prepared by Proclamations to father that horrid plot (if it had taken effect) upon the Puritanes, and under that name to have murthered all thoſe that had but look't toward Religion.

Turk. hiſt. 369.

Ibid. 885.

Fiſt. of Counc. of Trent. 417.

Anno 1571. Camd. Eliz.

Act. & Mon. 1925.

That were throughout the whole Kingdome] Herein he ſhewed himſelf a right Amalekite, Madi corvi malum vinum, dirt kneaded with blood, as one ſaid of Tiberius, He preſumed he might have what he pleaſed of the King, and therefore made account to make but a Breakfaſt of his enemies the Jewes, to whom he ſaid in his heart, as once Caligula did to the Romane Conſuls, Ridete, quòd uno nutu meo jugulare vos omnes poſſim. I cannot but laugh to think, that I can nod you all to death.

Πολὺς αἷμα, πουεραῖν &. De Tib. Theodor. Gadareus.

Even the people of Mordecai,] Who were more renowned by him then Co was by Hippocrates, Thebes by Epaminondas, Stagira by Ariſtotle, Hyppo by Auguſtine. &c.

Verſe 7. In the firſt moneth] The time is thus noted, ad majorem hiſtoriæ fidem & lucem, to give more credit to the Hiſtory, and to lend ſome light to it.

That is the moneth Niſan] The Chaldees call it Abib, from the new fruits or eares of corne then firſt appearing. It was the firſt moneth unto Iſrael, (in reſpect of ſacred, not civil affaires) becauſe of their coming out of Egypt therein. It anſwereth to part of March with us, and part of April.

In the twelfth yeare of King Ahaſhuerus] When Eſther had now been Queen above foure yeares, and being greatly beloved, was in a capacity to do her people good. This was a ſweet Providence, the remedy was ready before the diſeaſe brake out. No Countrey hath more venemous creatures then Egypt, none more Antidotes. So godlineſſe hath many troubles, and as many helpes againſt trouble.

They caſt Pur, that is, the Lot] The old Interpreter addeth in urnam, into the pitcher. And the new Annotations tell us, that about caſting lots, there was a pitcher into which papers, with names of the ſeveral moneths written on them, and rolled up were caſt, yea, alſo papers with the names of every day, and of every moneth were caſt in: then one blind-folded put in his hand and pulled out a paper, and according to the marks which they had ſet down, ſuch a moneth proved lucky, and ſuch a day in the moneth; and by Gods Providence it ſo fell out, that their ſuppoſed luckie day was on the twelfth moneth, whereby it came to paſſe, that their plot was defeated, before the time of accompliſhing thereof, chap. 9. 1, &c.

From day to day, &c.] This is not to be taken as if they had continued twelve moneths about in caſting of theſe lots: but as in the Note next above.

That is the moneth Adar] In all which time that wicked Haman might have bethought himſelf (as one noteth) and returned to a better minde toward Gods people. But he, after the hardneſſe of his heart, that could not repent, treaſured up unto himſelf wrath againſt the day of wrath, &c. Rom. 2. 5.

Verſe 8. And Haman ſaid unto King Ahaſhuerus] After that by ſortilegy, (or ſorcery, for it is no better, as the very name ſheweth, and Varro affirmeth,) he had light upon a luckie day, wherein to ſpeak to the King, and a black day, wherein to do execution, he taketh the boldneſſe to move the King in it. Now Mr. Perkins affirmeth, that as men do put confidence in lot-ſorcery, or the like diabolical divinations, or elſe they cannot attaine to any foreknowledge by them, ſo therein, explicitely or implicitely, they have confederacy with the devil. Oh, that this were well conſidered!

There is a certain people] Not worth the naming.

Scattered

Scattered abroad] But was that their fault? was it not their misery rather, according to that God had threatened them, Deut. 32. and were they not therefore to be pitied, and not preyed upon? It is said of Queen Elizabeth, that she hated, no lesse then did Mithridates, such as maliciously persecuted vertue forsaken of fortune. Camd Eliz. 531.

And dispersed among the people] And therefore the more dangerous, sith every sect strives to spread their opinions, and these, being Antimagistratical, may do much hurt, and draw many from their obedience, prove seedsmen of sedition. It may very well be that the sect of the Essenes were now beginning among the Jewes, who taught, that God alone, and no mortal man was to be acknowledged for Lord and Prince. Hence they were called Esseni or Hasshoni, that is, Rebels, and for their sakes the whole Nation might be the worse thought of (as if they were all such) like as the Protestants were in France for the Anabaptists sake, in the reigne of King Francis. Joseph. l. 18. c. 2. Weems. Scultet. An. 454.

In all the Provinces of thy Kingdome] Quarum proventu gaudet, alitur, insolescit. Where they do no good, but devoure graine as vermine, as excrements in humane society, and deserve to be knockt on the head, which may easily be done, because they are disjected, and not able to make head against an adversary.

And their Lawes are diverse from all people] So they were, and better, their enemies themselves being Judges, Deut. 4. 6, 7, 8. Prospers conceit was, that they were called Judei, because they received Jus Dei, their Lawes from God, who might say to them, as once Joseph did to his brethren, Gen. 45. 12. Behold, your eyes see, that it is my mouth that speaketh unto you. And therefore if Demosthenes could say of Lawes in general, that they were the invention of Almighty God; And if Cicero could say of the Lawes of the twelve Tables in Rome, that they farre exceeded and excelled all the Libraries of all the Philosophers, how much more true was all this of the Lawes of the Jews given by God, and ordained by Angels in the hand of a Mediatour, Moses? Seneca (though he jeared the Jewes for their weekly Sabbath, as those that lost the seventh part of their time, yet) he could not but say, that being the baseſt people, they had the best Lawes, and gave Lawes unto all the world. Those holy Levites, Nehem. 9. 13. acknowledge with all thankfulnesse, that God had given them right judgements, true Lawes, good Statutes and Commandments, whereby he severed them from all other people, as his own peculiar, and this was their glory whereever they came; though the Sycophant in the text turneth their glory into shame, as one that loved vanity, and sought after leasing, Psal. 4. 2. Ἐυρημα τῦ Θεῦ.

Neither keep they the Kings Lawes] Mordecai indeed would not do him reverence, because it went against his conscience: no more would others of them keep the Kings Lawes in like case, but obey God rather then man, where they could not do both. Otherwise they were charged, Jer. 29. 7. to seek the peace of the cities where they abode, and to submit to their civil and municipal Lawes: and so they did doubtlesse, for the generality of them. But this impudent liar represents them to the King as Refractaries and Rebels, &c. The devil began his Kingdome by a lie, and by lies he upholdeth it. He was a liar and a murtherer from the beginning; but first a liar, and thereby a murtherer. He cannot handsomely murther, except he slander first, Cant. 5. 6. the credit of the Church must first be taken away, and then she is wounded, traduced she must be, and then persecuted. Thus David is believed to seek Sauls life: Elias is the Troubler of Israel: Jeremy, the Trumpet of Rebellion: the Baptist, a Stirrer up of sedition: Christ, an enemy to Cæsar: Paul, a pestilent Incendiary; the primitive Christians, a publike mischief: the Reformed Churches, Antimagistratical: this colour of right, yea, of Piety was laid upon the French Massacre, and by Edicts a faire cloke sought to cover that impious fraud, as if there had been some horrid treason hatch't by the Huguenots. The primitive Persecutours used to put Christians into beares and dogges skins, or other ugly creatures, and then bait them, so wicked men put religion and its Professours, into ugly conceits and reports, and then speak and act against them. Camd. Eliz.

Therefore it is not for the Kings profit] Heb. It is not meet, equal, or profitable to the King to suffer them, ut insolescat per licentiam, so the Vulgar Latine rendreth it, but without warrant from the Orig. See here how this Sycophant fils his mouth with arguments, the better to atchieve his desire. An elaborate set speech he maketh, neither is there a word in it, but what might seem to have weight. He pretends the Kings profit and the publike good, concealing and dissembling his ambition, avarice, envy, malignity, that set him a work. Politicians when they soare highest, are like the Eagle, which whiles aloft, hath her eye still upon the prey, which by this meanes she spies sooner, and seizes upon better. In parabolâ ovis caprás suas quærunt, as the Proverb hath it, Haman holds it not fit there should be more religions then one in a Kingdome, for preventing of troubles. Nebuchadnezzar was of the same minde, when he commanded all men to worship his golden image. But must all therefore die that will not do it? and is it for Isa. 6.13. the Kings profit that the righteous be rooted out? Is not semen sanctum statumen terræ the holy seed, the stay of the State? the beauty and bulwark of the Nation? See Jer. 5.1. Ezek. 2. 2. 30, 31. Absque stationibus non staret mundus.

Verse 9. If it please the King] Here he sheweth himself a right Courtier, and speaketh silken words, the sooner to insinuate. But if Solomon had been by, he would have Prov. 26. 25. said, When he speaketh faire, beleeve him not, for there are seven abominations in his heart.

Let it be written that they may be destroyed] As Mithridates King of Pontus, by writing one bloody letter only, destroyed fourescore thousand Citizens of Rome,
Val Max. dispersed
Rup. l. 8. de virt. verb. c. 7. up and down Asia for traffick sake. That was bad, but this was worse that Haman motioned, and well-near effected. And surely never did the old red dragon (saith Rupertus) lift up his head so fiercely and furiously against the woman, that is, against the Church of God, as in this place. Therefore is Haman to be reckoned among those cruel enemies, Psal. 83. who said, Come and let us destroy them from being a Nation, that the name of Israel may be no more remembred. But let them rage and kill up the Saints as much as they can, the sheep will still be more in number then the wolves, the doves then the hawkes. Plures
Tertull. Apoll. efficimur quoties metimur, saith Tertullian, the more you crop us, the faster we grow.

And I shall pay ten thousand talents of silver] A vast summe, three thousand seven hundred fifty thousand pound sterling. At so great charge would this butcher be, to satisfie his lust, and to have his penniworths upon Gods poor people. So in the Gun-powder treason, (besides their paines, digging like moles in their vault of villany) Digby offered to bring in fifteen hundred pounds, Tressam two thousand, Piercy foure thousand out of the Earle of Northumberlands rents: besides ten swift horses to stead them when the blow was past. But where should Haman have all this money, may some say? I answer, First if he were of the seed-royal of Amalek (as tis thought) he might have much left him by his Ancestours. Secondly, being so great a Favourite to the King of Persia, he had doubtlesse many profitable offices, and so might lay up gold
Job 22. 24. as dust, and silver as the stones of the brooks. Did not Wolsey so here in Henry the eighth's time? Thirdly, he had already devoured in his hopes, the goods and spoiles of all the slain Jewes, which he doubted not but the King would bestow upon him, for his good service. Like as Henry the second of France, gave his Mistresse Diana Valentina, all the confiscations of goods made in the Kingdome for cause of heresie. Hereupon ma-
Hist. of Counc. of Trent. 387. ny good men were burned for religion, as it was said, but indeed it was to satiate her covetousnesse.

To the hands of those, &c.] Vulg. Arcariis gazæ tuæ.

To bring it into the Kings treasuries] That he might not be damnified in the tributes formerly paid by the Jewes for their liberty of conscience. Kings use to take care, that their incomes and revenues be not empaired or diminished. It is said of Solyman the great Turk, that seeing a company of many thousands of his Christian subjects fall down before him, and hold up the forefinger (as their manner of Conversion to the Turkish religion is) he asked what moved them to turn? they replied, it was to be eased of
S. H. Bl. Voyage p. 111. their heavy taxations. He not willing to lose in tribute for an unsound accession in religion, rejected their Conversion, and doubled their taxations.

Verse 10. And the King took his ring from his hand] And thereby gave him power to do what he pleased, Gen. 41. 42. 1 Kings 21. 8. En regis hujus inertiam & imperitiam. How weak (weak as water, Gen. 49. 4.) was the heart of this brutish Barbarian, skilful to destroy? Ezek. 21. 31. seeing he did all these things, the work of an imperious whorish woman, Ezek. 16. 30. rather then of an able man, (such as every Magistrate should be, Exod. 18. 21.) just, and ruling in the the feare of God, 2 Sam. 23. 3. In the caſe of Vaſhti, he could referre the matter to the conſideration of a Council. In the caſe of the two Eunuches that had conſpired againſt his life, he made inquiſition of the matter, and did all things deliberately. In this caſe of Haman after this, though deeply diſpleaſed, yet he did nothing raſhly, till he had gone into the Palace-garden, and conſidered with himſelf what was beſt to be done. But here upon the very firſt motion (without hearing them ſpeak for themſelves, or admoniſhing them to do their duty better, &c.) he gives order for the ſlaying of ſo many thouſand innocents: never conſidering that every drop of their blood had a voice in it, to cry for vengeance againſt him and his, Gen. 4. 10. Matth. 22. 7. And when the King heard it: for blood cries aloud to God, 1 Kings 9. 26. Surely I have ſeen yeſterday the blood of Naboth. Murther ever bleeds freſh in the eye of Almighty God. To him many yeares, yea, that eternity that is paſt, is but yeſterday. He will give ſuch blood again to drink, for they are worthy, Rev. 16. 6. Dealt he not ſo by Herod, Julian, Attilas, Felix of Wartemburg, Farneſius, Minerius, Charles the ninth King of France, who died by exceeding bleeding at ſundry parts of his body, ſoon after the Pariſian Maſſacre, whereof he was the Authour, giving as large and as bloody a commiſſion to the Duke of Guiſe, to deſtroy, to kill, and to cauſe to periſh all the French Proteſtants, as Ahaſhuerus did here to Haman? Neither was he ſlack to execute it with greateſt inhumanity, crying out to thoſe of his party (after that he had ſlaine the Admiral) Courage, my fellowes, fall on, the King commands it, it is his expreſſe pleaſure, he commands it. But what followed ſhortly after? The Hiſto of French Maſſ. by Mr. Clark.

Quem ſitiit vivens ſceleratâ mente cruorem,
Perfidus hunc moriens Carolus vne vomit.
Ergo Dei tandem verba ſubſcribite, Reges;
Ne rapiant Stygiæ vos Acherontis aquæ.

And gave it unto Haman] Who now being his Favourite, might have any thing of him, like as it is ſtoried of Sejanus, that in all his deſignes he found in Tiberius the Emperour ſo great facility and affection to his deſire, that he needed only to aſk and give thanks. He never denied him any thing, and oft-times prevented his requeſt, and avowed that he deſerved much more. It was not therefore without cauſe, that the primitive Chriſtians prayed ſo hard for the Emperour, that God would ſend him good Counſellours, and deliver him from flatterers and ſlanderers, thoſe peſts of the Court. Life of Sejan. by P. M. p. 5. Tertull. Apol.

The Jewes enemy] That was his ſtile, or rather his brand and mark of ignominy, worſe then that of Cain, Gen. 4. 15. that of Dathan, Numb. 26. 9. of Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28. 22. It may be he affected this title, and gloried in it: as we read of John Oneale, father to the Earle of Tyrone, that rebel 1598. that he inſcribed himſelf in all places. I great John Oneale, Couſin to Chriſt, friend to the Queen of England, and foe to all the world beſides. Camd.

Verſe 11. And the King ſaid unto Haman] Whom he looked upon, as an honeſt, prudent, publike-ſpirited man, and therefore ſo eaſily impowered him to do what he would.

O vanas hominum mentes! O pectora cæca!

The ſilver is given unto thee] i. e. the ten thouſand talents that thou haſt proffered, and which Haman likely purpoſed to raiſe out of the ſpoile of the Jewes; all this is remitted, and returned to Haman as a gift again. Sic ex alieno corio gigantes iſti latiſſimas corrigias ſecant, ſaith an Interpreter here, Such large thongs cut theſe Gyants out of other mens Hides. But what meant they thus to ſell the Hide, before they had taken the beaſt? He that ſate in Heaven (and had otherwiſe determined it) laughed at them, the Lord had them in deriſion. With him (alone) is ſtrength and wiſdom, the deceived and the deceiver are his. He leadeth Counſellours away ſpoiled, and maketh the Judges fooles. He leadeth Princes away ſpoiled, and overthroweth the mighty, Job 12. 16, 17, 19. Pſal. 2.

The people alſo, to do with them] Here Haman was made, here he had more then heart could wiſh, as Pſal. 73. 7. and holdeth himſelf therefore, no doubt, the happieſt man under heaven. But Nihil ſunt infelicius eſt felicitate peccantium, ſaith Hieron, there cannot befall a man a greater miſery then to proſper in ſinne: for ſuch a one is ripening for ruine, as fatting cattel are fitting for the ſhambles, They proſper and live at eaſe, ſaith God, yet I am extremely diſpleaſed with them, Zech. 1. 15. As they ſay of the metal they make glaſſe of, it is neareſt melting when it ſhineth brighteſt; ſo are the wicked neareſt deſtruction when at greateſt luſtre. Meane-while ſee here what many times, is the condition of Gods deareſt children, viz. to fall into the power and pawes of Lions, Leopards, Boares, Beares, Tygers; of men more ſavage then any of theſe, whoſe tender mercies are meer cruelties. Poor blinde men they are, that offer violence to the Saints, as Sampſon laid hands upon the pillars, to pluck the houſe upon their owne heads.

To do with them as it ſeemeth good to thee] O bloody ſentence! Such words as theſe Leniter volant, ſed non leniter violant. So Diocleſian gave leave to people to kill up Chriſtians, without more ado, whereever they met them, the like was done by authority in the French Maſſacre, but though Tyrants reſtraine not their Agents, yet God will, Pſal. 76. 10. And though they bandy together, and bend all their forces to root out true Religion, yet are they bounded by him, and ſhall not do what themſelves pleaſe, but what he hath appointed. My times are in thine hand, ſaith David, and Pilate had no more power to crucifie Chriſt, then what was given him from above, John 19. 11.

Verſe 12. Then were the Kings Scribes called] Then, preſently upon't, ſo ſoon as the word was out of the Kings mouth, licet quod libet: the Scribes were called, and all things diſpatched with all poſſible haſte, art and induſtry. So Judas, what he did, did quickly; he was up and at it, when Peter and the reſt of the Apoſtles were found aſleep. The children of this world are wiſer in their generation then the children of light; for why? they have the devil to help them, and to prick them on; and hence their reſtleſneſſe.

On the thirteenth day of the firſt moneth] Soon after they had begun to caſt lots, verſe 7.

And there was written according to all that Haman had commanded] Right or wrong, that was never once queſtioned by theſe over-officious Officers. If the King command it, and Haman will have it ſo, the Secretaries and Rulers, (thoſe ſervile ſoules) are ready to ſay, as Tiberius once did to Juſtinus. Si tu volueris, ego ſum; ſi tu non vis, ego non ſum. Or as he in Lucan did to Caeſar.

Juſſa ſequi, tam velle mihi, quàm poſſe, neceſſe.

We are wholly at your devotion and diſpoſe. We are only your clay and wax, &c. It is not for us to take upon us as Counſellours, but only to write what is dictated unto us, &c. But this was no ſufficient excuſe for them before God: as neither was it for Doeg, that he was commanded to ſlay all the Lords Prieſts, which Abner and other of Sauls ſervants rightly and ſtoutly refuſed to do, 1 Sam. 22. A warrant once came down under ſeal for Lady Elizabeths execution, whileſt ſhe was priſoner at Woodſtock; Steven Gardiner, like another Haman, being the chief Engineer. But Mr. Bridges her Keeper, miſtruſting falſe play, preſently made haſte to the Queen, who renounced and reverſed it. So might Ahaſhuerus haply have done this bloody Edict, had his officers ſhewed him the iniquity of it. But they took not this to be any part of their buſineſſe: Or if any one of them ſhould be more conſcientious, yet he might be ſurprized by a ſudden onſet, as the Lord Cromwell, when by the inſtigation of Gardiner, he was commanded by King Henry the eighth, to reade the ſentence of death againſt Lambert the Martyr, whereof he repented afterwards, ſending for Lambert, and asking him forgiveneſſe, as Mr. Fox relateth.

And to every people after their language] See chap. 1. 22.

In the name of the King Ahaſhuerus] For more authority ſake, and that Hamans malice and cruelty might lie hid under the Kings cloak. So Jezabel wrote letters in Ahabs name againſt Naboth, ſo the Egyptians oppreſſed the Iſraelites in the name of their King; the Jewes pretended to be all for Caeſar, when they ſought and ſuck't our Saviours blood. The Popiſh Perſecutours here did all in Queen Maries name, when as it might be ſaid of her, as Joſephus doth of Queen Alexandra among the Jewes, Ipſa ſolum nomen regium ferebat, &c. She had the name only of Queen, but the Phariſees ruled

ruled the Kingdome, ſo did the Biſhops in thoſe dayes: and ſome of them would have done the like in ours, and that was their downfal, after that, as rotten teeth, they had put the King and Kingdome to a great deal of miſery.

And ſealed it with the Kings ring] Leſt it ſhould by any meanes be reverſed, Dan. 6. 8, 12, 15. Of the right antiquity, uſe and matter of rings, let them that will, read Plin. lib. 33. cap. 1. & 37. 1. Macrob. lib. 1. Saturn. cap. 13. Alexand. ab Alex. lib. 2. genial. dier. Rhodig. lib. 6. cap. 12.

Verſe 13. And the letters were ſent by Poſtes] Theſe, the Perſians called Angari, or (as Ruffin writeth it) Aggari. But why was this done in ſuch poſt-haſte, ſo long before the day of execution? was it not to hold them all that while on the rack, and ſo to kill them peece-meale, (as Tiberius uſed to do by his enemies,) whileſt through feare of death, and expectation of that doleful day, they were all their life-time ſubject to bondage? Heb 2.15.

To deſtroy, to kill, and to cauſe to periſh] Words written not with black, but with blood; and therefore multiplied in this ſort, to ſhew, that it mattered not how, ſo they were made away by any meanes, and the world well rid of them. Reade the Hiſtory of the French Maſſacre: and heare Reverend Merlin, (who narrowly, and indeed miraculouſly eſcaped thoſe bloody Villaines, as being Chaplaine to the Admiral, and praying with him in his Chamber a little before he was murthered,) heare him, I ſay, commenting upon this text; Sic noſtro ſæculo, ſi ſcribenda fuerint edicta adverſus Religionem, non potuerunt ſibi Scribæ ſatisfacere in excogitandis verbis ſignificantibus, quibus atrociora & magis ſanguinaria redderentur, &c. that is, in our age alſo, if any edicts are to be written againſt Religion, the Secretaries cannot ſatisfie themſelves in deviſing ſignificant words, whereby thoſe edicts may be rendred the more cruel and ſanguinary.

All Jewes, both young and old, little children and women] All ages, ſizes, and ſexes. What could the devil himſelf have added to this abhorred cruelty, if it had gone on? ſuch a ſlaughter made Dog at Nob, the Sicilians at their bloody veſpers, the King of France with the Templars throughout his Kingdom, Minerius the Popes Champion, with the Proteſtants of Merindol and Chabriers, (beſides that of the Pariſian Maſſacre before-mentioned, and by Merlin upon this verſe graphically deſcribed, like as that of Babylon is by Jeremy, chap. 51. 34.) what a woful ſlaughter had here been made, had Faux but fired the powder? What an Acheldama had this whole Land been turned into in a few dayes ſpace? Necdum interiit ſævus Hamani animus. Neither yet is Haman dead, but reviveth daily in his bloody and blaſphemous ſucceſſors. That like as one ſaith of Cain, the devils Patriarch, there are not a few that ſtill carry about, adore and worſhip as a ſacred thing, Cains club, red with the blood of Abel: ſo it is here. Buchol.

Even upon the thirteenth day] That it was to be no ſooner done, was by a ſpecial Providence of God, that ere that time came, it might be happily prevented, as was afore noted. See verſe 7. Hamans folly alſo was not a little ſeen in deferring the execution ſo long: for how knew he what a day might bring forth? it was indeed mirabile ſimulque miſerabile dictu, as one ſaith, a wonderful, and withal a miſerable thing, that none ſhould be found among the Perſians, Medes and Chaldees, to pity this poore people, and to intercede for them. To have ſpoken to Haman for them, might likely have been as bootleſſe, as once it was to Minerius in the behalf of the Merindolians. Of whom when a few had eſcaped his all-devouring ſword, and he was intreated to give them quarter for their lives, he ſternely anſwered, I know what I have to do, not one of them ſhall eſcape my hands; I will ſend them to dwell in hell among the devils. But if Haman reſolved no better, yet what knew he, but that in time the King might relent and repent of that raſh and wretched edict, as he did? Act. & Mon. 869.

Nam faciles motus mens generoſa capit. Ovid.

We reade in our Chronicles, that when King Henry the third had given commandment, for the apprehending of Hubert de Burgo Earle of Kent, he fled into a Church in Eſſex. They to whom the buſineſſe was committed, finding him upon his knees before the High-Altar, with the Sacrament in one hand, and a Croſſe in the other, carried him away nevertheleſſe unto the Tower of London. The Biſhop taking this to be a great great violence and wrong to the Church, would never leave the King, until he had caused the Earle to be carried to the place whence he was fetch't. This was done: and although order was taken he should not 'scape thence; yet it gave the Kings wrath a time to coole, and himself leisure to make proof of his innocency. By reason whereof he was afterwards restored to the Kings favour and former places of honour. And the like befel these Jewes, ere the thirteenth of Adar: but Haman, blinded with pride and superstition, could not foresee it.

Δεινὸς καὶ ἀντολμᾶν. Ibid.

And to take the spoile of them for a prey] To be sure that none should 'scape, the goods of the slain are proposed for a reward to them that should slay them, and how far that would prevaile with many covetous wretches, who knoweth not? Covetousnesse is daring and desperate: how much more when it is encouraged, as here, by a Permission, nay, a Precept from the King, and his chief Favourite? where we may be sure, the wealthier any man was, the sooner he should have been sent out of the world, as a tree with thick and large boughes is most likely to be lopped. Trithemius telleth us, that the Templars above-mentioned were massacred by Philip the Faire, King of France, upon pretext of heresie: but indeed because they were rich, and Philip sore longed after their possessions. The Cyprians for their great wealth became a spoile to the Romanes.

—— Quid non mortalia pectora cogis,
Auri sacra fames?

Verse 14. The copy of the writing —— was published] Phathsegin, a Syriack word, saith R. David, and not found, but in the books about the captivity. The vulgar rendreth it Summa, R. Nathan תומה, to the same sense. Transcripts of the Original were sent to all places, that none might be ignorant or negligent in doing execution: But why did not the Jewes upon such notice save themselves by flight, may some say? Alas, whither should the poor soules flie with their families? being compassed about with so many deadly enemies, and having none that durst own them in that distresse? It was a just wonder, and a special work of God, that their enemies forbear to fall upon them before the black-day came, if but for the spoile-sake. We reade chap. 9. that notwithstanding the known favour of the King, the patronage of Mordecai, and the hanging up of Haman, &c., the thirteenth of Adar is still meant to be a bloody day. Hamans Abettours joyne together to performe that sentence, whereof the Authour repented, &c. But God was seen in the Mount: he loveth to help those that are forsaken of their hopes, as he did these poor Prisoners then, when it might seem that there was neither left unto them hope of better, or place of worse. Who would not therefore trust in God? Deo confisi nunquam confusi? Trust in God will surely triumph.

That they should be ready against that day] That long-look't-for day, by Haman and his Party, wherein they meant to roll themselves, and wallow in the blood of those Jewes, and to say as Hannibal did, when he saw a ditch filled with mans blood, O jucundum spectaculum! O pleasant sight! Or as Valesus, when he had slain three hundred, O rem regiam! O Kingly act! Or as that Queen, who when she saw some of her Protestant subjects lying dead and stripped upon the earth, cried out, the goodliest tapestry that ever she beheld! Are not such blood-suckers of the vulturine kinde, spoken of in Job, whose young ones glut-glut blood, (the Original word seemeth made from the sound) and where the slain are, there is she? Job 39. 30.

Verse 15. The Postes went out, being hastened by the Kings commandment] As if the enemy had been at the gates, and his crown had hang'd on the one side of his head: he could not have been more earnest and diligent in such a case, then now he is. So much set upon't are Gods enemies, to bring their evil purposes to passe; that till then, neither themselves nor others can be suffered to rest for them. Quicquid volunt, valde volunt, bearing down with crest and breast whatsoever stands in the way of their sinful lusts. What a shame is it then for Saints, not to be zealous of good works, valiant for the truth, and violent for the Kingdom?

And the decree was given in Shushan the Palace] Pependit, saith the Vulgar, it hung up upon the posts to be read of all, the King not shaming to have his privities seen, (as the phrase is, Ezra 4. 14.) to traduce himself (as it were) in a publike theatre, for a foolish and oppressive Prince; neither caring what might be the evil consequents thereof, thereof; ſo that he may ſatisfie his own luſt, and gratifie his minion.

And the King and Haman ſate down to drink] So to drown the noiſe of conſcience, (if not altogether dead and dedolent) and ſo to nouriſh their hearts, as in a day of ſlaughter. Thus Joſephs brethren, when they had caſt him into the pit, ſate down to eat bread, Gen. 37. 25. (when it had been fitter for them to have wept for their wickedneſſe.) So did the Iſraelites when they had made them a golden calfe, Exod. 32. 6. Herod feaſteth, when he had caſt the Baptiſt into priſon. The Antichriſtian rout, revel and riot, when they had ſlain the two witneſſes. Rev. 11. The Pope proclaimed a Jubilee upon the Pariſian Maſſacre. The King of France ſwore, that he never ſmelled any thing more ſweet then the Admirals carcaſſe, when it ſtank with long lying. As for his head, he ſent it for a preſent to the Queen-mother. And ſhe balming it, ſent it to her holy Father the Pope for an aſſurance of the death of his moſt capital enemy. Thuanus writeth that the Pope cauſed that Maſſacre to be painted in his Palace: Had the Powder-plot ſucceeded, it ſhould have been pourtrayed (ſurely) in his Chappel or Oratory. Faux was to get into the fields to ſee the ſport; for they made no other reckoning, but that all was their own. No more did the King and Haman here, and hence their jollity, but it proved ſomewhat otherwiſe. God oft ſuffereth his enemies to have the ball on the foot, till they come to the very goale, and yet then to make them to miſſe the game: He loveth to make fooles of them, to let them go to the utmoſt of their tedder, and then to pull them back with ſhame to their taſk.

Mat. 14.

Epit. Hiſt. Gallic. Speed.

But the City Shuſhan was perplexed] That is, the Jewes that dwelt there: together with the reſt that loved them, and wiſhed well to them. Theſe wept, ſaith the Vulgar Latine, were in heavineſſe, ſay others, they were intricated, intwirled, at their wits end, ſo that they knew not what to do, (as the word here gnifieth) only their eyes were toward the hills, from whence ſhould come their help. Their comfort was to conſider, that melior eſt triſtitia iniqua patientis, quam lætitia iniqua facientis. Better is the perplexity of him that ſuffereth evil, then the jollity of him that doth evil. Deliverance would come they believed, chap. 4. 14. but whence they knew not. Hard things may be mollified, crooked things ſtreightened, Non omnium dierum ſol occidit: Whiles there is a Sun to ſet, I will not deſpaire of a good iſſue, as Queen Elizabeth ſaid when ſhe was moſt perplexed, as being to be ſent Priſoner to the Tower, then the which never went any thing nearer to her heart.

Auguſt.

Engl. Eliz.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe. 1. When Mordecai perceived all that was done.

Μαθὼν τὰ γεγενημένα, ſaith Joſephus, when he had learned or fully informed himſelf, ſo that he knew it to be ſo, as the Hebrew text hath it. Sollicitous he was of the Churches welfare, and ſat liſtening, as Eli did once, what would become of the Ark. Now therefore (as ill newes is ſwift of foot, ſaith Sophocles, and comes like ill weather, before it be ſent for) Mordecai taketh knowledge of that bloody decree, though Eſther and thoſe about her had not heard of it, ver. 4, 5. Neither ſitteth he ſtill at home, as deſponding and deſpairing, or ſeeketh by ſiniſter practices to help himſelf and his people, but applieth himſelf. Firſt, to God by hearty humiliation and prayer; And then to the King, by the interceſſion of Eſther. A carnal heart would have taken other ſhifting courſes, like as a dog that hath loſt his Maſter, will follow after any other for relief.

Joſeph. 1 Sam. 3. 13. Ἀι βλάβαι πολλάκις.

Mordecai rent his clothes] To ſhew that his very heart was rent with ſorrow for Sion. This cuſtome of renting their clothes in time, and in token of greateſt grief, was in uſe not among the Jews only, but Perſians alſo, and other Nations, as is noted by Herodotus and Curtius.

Herod. l. 3. & 9. Curt. l. 3, 4. & 11.

And put on ſackcloth] The courſeſt clothing he could get: as holding any clothes too good for ſo vile a caitiffe, and ſhewing, that but for ſhame, he would have worn none. So the Ninivites ſat in ſackcloth and aſhes, for more humiliation. See Exod. 33. 4. &c.

And aſhes] He put on aſhes or duſt, that is, a duſky garment ſprinkled with aſhes, ſaith Drexelius, putting his mouth in the duſt, as Lam. 3. 29. acknowledging himſelf to be of the earth earthy, and fit fuel for hell-fire.

Non è ſuccis, ſed è terra deſumptum pulverem notat. Martin.

And went out into the midſt of the City] That he might be a pattern to others. Si vis me flere, &c.

And cried with a loud and bitter cry] More barbarico, after the manner of that country, but there was more in it then so. It was not his own danger that so much affected him, (how gladly could he have wished with Ambrose, that God would please to turn all the adversaries from the Church upon himselfe, and let them satisfie their thirst with his blood?) as that so many innocent people should perish. This made him lift up his voice unto God on High.

Ὅτι μιᾶς ἀδικίας ἕνεκεν ἐξ-ολοθρεύεται πᾶν ἔθνος. Joseph.

Verse 2. And came even before the Kings gate] Which should have been alwayes open to poor Petitioners, (as the gate of the Romane Ædilis was) but was now shut against such Mourners as Mordecai. A night-cap was an ill sight at Court: Jolly spirits cannot endure sadnesse; so great enemies they are to it, that they banish all seriousnesse, like as the Nicopolites so hated the braying of an Asse, that for that cause they would not abide to heare the sound of a trumpet.

For none might enter into the Kings gate clothed with sackcloth] Behold, they that weare softs are in Kings houses, Mat. 11. 8. and those that are altogether set upon the merry pin. Jannes and Jambres (those Juglers) are gracious with Pharaoh, when Moses and Aaron are frown'd upon. Baals Prophets are fed at Jezabels Table, when Elias is almost pined in the desert. The dancing Damosel tripped on the toe, and triumpheth in Herods Hall, when the rough-coated Baptist lieth in cold irons: and Christs company there is neither cared for, nor called for, unlesse it be to shew tricks, and do miracles for a pastime, Luke 23. 8. The Kings and Courtiers of Persia must see no sad sight, lest their mirth should be marred, and themselves surprized with heavinesse and horrour. But if Mourners might not be suffered to come to Court, why did those proud Princes so sty up themselves, and not appear abroad for the relief of the poor oppressed? How much better the moderne Kings of Persia, whom I have seen (saith a certain Traveller) to alight from their horses, to do justice to a poor body? How much better the great Turk, who whensoever he goeth forth by land, doth alwayes ride on horseback, upon the Friday especially, (which is their Sabbath) when he goeth to the Temple. At which times they that go along by his Stirrup, have charge to take all Petitions that are preferred to his Majesty, and many poor men, who dare not presume by reason of their ragged apparel to approach near, stand afar off with fire upon their heads, holding up their Petitions on their hands; the which the grand Signior seeing, (who never despiseth, but rather encourageth the poor) sends immediately to take the Petitions, and being returned home into his Seraglio, reades them all, and then gives order for redresse, as he thinks fit. By reason of which complaints, the King oft-times taketh occasion suddenly to punish his greatest officers, either with death or losse of place. Which maketh the Bashaws and other great Officers, that they care not how seldome the grand Signior stirres abroad in publike, for fear lest in that manner their bribery and injustice should come to his eares. 'Tis probable that Haman had got this also to be decreed, that none should enter into the Kings gate clothed in sackcloth; lest passion might be moved thereby in any of the Courtiers, or that be a meanes to make a complaint to the King of his cruelty.

Ὤρχησατο. Mat. 14. 6.

Grand Sign. Serag. 118.

Verse 3. And in every Province] Heb. In every Province, and Province, &c. not only in Susan (which (say the Hebrewes) was called Elam Hammedina) but throughout the Kings dominions.

Whatsoever the Kings Commandment and his Decree] The latter was irrevocable, and therefore more dreadful.

There was great mourning among the Jewes] Not murmuring or mutinying, or meditating revenge against the King and Haman, Not casting away their confidence in God, or committing all to face and blind fortune, Not crying out of Religion as unhappy to the Professours (Perdita Dea, said he in the story, O miserable vertue! O practice of no profit, &c.) Not taking up armes or betaking themselves to flight (how should poor gally-slaves at this day flie out of the middle of Turkie?) prayers and teares were the weapons of these condemn'd captives, caitives. It troubled them exceedingly, (as well it might) that through heedlesnesse and negligence they had not, ere this, gone back to their own country, with Zorobabel or some other. When they had good leave to have gone with their brethren, and God himself cried out unto them, Flie, flie, come forth, &c. Arise, depart, this is not your rest, because it is polluted: it shall destroy you, even with a sore destruction. This was now a hobling at their heeles: like as it shall be one day to those in hell, to think we might have been delivered.

Brutus apud Dion.

Zach. 2. 6. Micha. 10.

And

And fasting] The word signifieth an abstinence from food and sustenance, either à toto, as 2 Sam. 12. 16. Or at least à tanto & à tali, as Dan. 10. 2, 3. Hence it is called a day of restraint, Joel 2. 15. Hence Zech. 8. 19. they separated themselves, viz. from work, meat and delights, for the furtherance of their repentance, and the enforcing of their prayers. Preces nobis jejuniis alendum, & quasi saginandum, saith one, our prayers must be pampered and corne-fed with fasting. A practice in use, not among Jewes and Christians only, but among Egyptian Priests, Persian Magi, and Indian wizards of old, and Turks to this day when they are in any great feare or pressure. Νηστεία.

And weeping and wailing] This was the way to get in with God, though they might not come crying to the Court. Oh the divine Rhetorick and omnipotent efficacy of penitent teares! Psal. 6. 8. Weeping hath a voice. Christ turned to the weeping women, when going to his Crosse, and comforted them. He shewed great respects to Mary Magdalene, that weeping Vine; she had the first sight of the revived Phœnix, (though so bleared that she could scarce discerne him) and held him fast by those feet which she had once washed with her tears, and wherewith he had lately trod upon the lion and adder, Psal. 91. 13.

And many lay in sackcloth and ashes] As many as were more deeply affected with their sins, and the sad consequents thereof. David lay on the bare ground, 2 Sam. 12. 16. these and those, Joel 1. 13. lodged in sackcloth and ashes, that they might watch as well as fast: see how they go linked together, Mark 13. 33. See verse 17. Χαμαικοίτης.

Verse 4. So Esthers maids came and told it her] She her self (say Interpreters) was kept in a closer place then they, not having the liberty of going abroad, as others had: because the Persians that were of highest quality, used so to keep in their wives, and if they went forth at any time, they were carried in a close chariot, so as that none could see them.

Then was the Queen exceedingly grieved] Dolens exhorruit. So Tremellius. The Hebrew is, She grieved her selfe, scil. for Mordecai's heavinesse, as our Saviour when he heard of the death of his friend Lazarus, groaned in spirit, and troubled himself, Joh. 11. 33. And here we see that of Plautus disproved.

Mulier nulla cordicitus dolet ex animo, that is, No woman can grieve heartily for any thing. Holy Esther is here sick at heart of grief, as the word importeth: and yet (as one saith of the Lady Jane Grey,) she made grief it self amiable: her night-clothes becoming her as well as her day-dressings, by reason of her gracious deportment.

And she sent raiment to clothe Mordecai] That he might be fit to come unto her, and make known the cause of his grief, for she yet knew nothing of the publike calamity. And although she were so highly advanced above Mordecai, yet she condoleth with him, and honoureth him as much as ever. This was true friendship. Ego aliter amare non didici, said Basil, to one that disliked him for stooping so low to an old friend.

And to take away the sackcloth, &c.] To change his saccum in sericum, sackcloth into sattin, &c. See verse 2.

But he received it not] Such was the greatnesse of his grief which he could not dissemble: such was his care of community, that he could not minde his own private concernments, whiles it went ill with the publike. Such also was his patient continuance in well-doing, that he would not give over asking of God till he had received, seeking till he had found, knocking till the gate of grace was opened. His clothes were good enough, unlesse his condition were more comfortable. Rom. 2. 7.

Verse 5. Then called Esther for Hatach] She snuffeth not at Mordecai's refusal of her courtesie. She saith not, Let him chuse, the next offer shall be worse, Rerum suarum satagat, si velit, & valeat, &c. Solomon reckoneth among those foure things that the earth cannot bear, an handmaid advanced to the state and place of a Mistresse. But Esther was none such. In her you might have seen magnitudinem cum mansuetudine, as Seneca hath it, singular humility in height of honours. She calleth here for Hatach a faithful servant, and perhaps a Jew, a Jew inwardly. Honesty flowes from piety. Prov. 30. Sen. epist.

One of the Kings Chamberlaines] Heb. Eunuchs or gelded men; such as used to keep their women in Kings Courts. The Chaldees call them Rabrebanim, that is, Grandees. The Persians call them Spadones, saith Stephanus. The Greeks, Eunuchs; either because they were Princes Chamberlaines, and had the custody of their beds: or because they were egregiæ cordati homines, well-minded men: for they generally proved (as likewise now they do among the Turks) subjects, though not of great courage: Παρὰ τὸ εὐνὴν ἔχειν καὶ ἀπὸ τοῦ νῦν ἔχειν.

courage, yet of the greatest judgement and fidelity, their mindes being set on busineſſe, rather then on pleaſure.

Whom he had appointed to attend upon her] Heb. Whom he had ſet before her, in obſequium & ſervitium, to be at her beck and obedience: probably, he was happy in ſuch a ſervice, for goodneſſe is communicative, and of a ſpreading nature. Plutarch ſaith of the neighbour-villages of Rome in Numa's time, that ſucking in the aire of that City, they breathed δικαιοσύνη, righteouſneſſe and devotion: ſo it might very well be here. It was ſo with Abrahams ſervants, and Solomons, and Cornelius's, Acts 10. 7. Nero complained (and no wonder) that he could never finde a faithful ſervant. What could they learn from him, but villany and cruelty?

And gave him a commandment to Mordecai] i. e. She commanded him to deliver her minde to Mordecai. A ſervant is not to be inquiſitive, (John 15. 15. he knoweth not what his Lord doth) but executive, ready to do what is required of him. He is the Maſters inſtrument, and wholly his, ſaith Ariſtotle. The hands muſt take counſel of the head, and beſtir them.

Ὅλως ἔκνης.

To know what it was, and why it was] Some great matter ſhe well knew it muſt needs be, that put him to thoſe loud laments. Wiſe men cry not till they are ſorely hurt. Jobs ſtroak was heavier then his groaning, Job 23. 2. He was not of thoſe that are ever whining: like ſome mens fleſh, if their skin be but razed with a pin, it preſently rankleth and feſtereth; or like rotten boughes, if a light weight be but hung on them, they preſently creak and break. Mordecai ſhe knew was none ſuch. She therefore ſendeth to ſee what was the matter, that ſhe might help him, if poſſible. The teares and moanes of men in miſery are not to be ſleighted, as if they were nothing to us. Who is afflicted, and I burn not, ſaith Paul? Weep with thoſe that weep, elſe you adde to their grief; as the Prieſt and Levite did, by paſſing by the wounded man: Is it nothing to you, O ye that paſſe by the way, Lam. 1. 12? Are not ye alſo in the body, Heb. 13. 3. that is, in the body of fleſh and frailty, ſubject to like afflictions? And may not your ſins procure their ſufferings, as a veine is opened in the arme, to eaſe the paine of the head?

2 Cor. 11. Rom. 12.

Verſe 6. So Hatach went forth to Mordecai] He was obedient to his Queen-miſtriſs, pleaſing her in all things, not anſwering again, Tit. 2. 10. unleſſe it were, I will, or the like. Servus ſit monoſyllabus Domino. Apelles painted a ſervant with Hindes feet, to run on his Maſters errands: with Aſſes eares, and with his mouth made faſt with two locks, to ſignifie that he ſhould be ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeak.

Unto the ſtreet of the City] The Broad-ſtreet, as the word ſignifieth: there Mordecai kept him, and might not come nearer the Court, becauſe a Mourner. See verſe 2. Tiberius the Emperour, counterfeiting grief at the Funeral of Druſus, there was a veile laid betwixt the dead and him, becauſe being High-Prieſt forſooth, he might not ſee any mournful object. The Statues of the gods were tranſported or covered (for like cauſe) in thoſe places where any puniſhment was inflicted. But what ſaith the wiſe man? The heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning, (whereby we muſt underſtand any place or object, which occaſioneth mourning) but the heart of fooles is in the houſe of mirth, Eccleſ. 7. 4.

Ῥεχοβ. πλατεῖα ἀ latitudine, roomth.

Verſe 7. And Mordecai told him all that had happened unto him] Not by fate or blind fortune, (and yet time and chance happeneth to all, Eccleſ. 9. 11. and it was by chance to the wounded man, that the Prieſt and the Levite came down that way, Luke 10. 31.) but by the Providence of God, which hath an hand in ordering the moſt caſual and fortuitous events, to the execution of his righteous counſels: neither is there ever a Providence, but we ſhall once ſee a wonder, or a mercy wrapt up in it.

κατὰ συγκυρίαν.

And of the ſumme of money] See chap. 3. 9. Money is the Monarch of this preſent world. Money is to many dearer then their heart-blood, yet to gratifie their luſts, they laviſh ſilver out of the bag, and care not to purchaſe revenge or ſenſual delights, with miſery, beggery, diſcredit, damnation.

Verſe 8. Alſo he gave him the copy of the writing] That ſhe might ſee it, and reſt aſſured, that it was even ſo, and no otherwiſe: and that therefore now or never ſhe muſt beſtir her ſelf for the labouring Church.

That was given at Shuſhan] Which if ever it were full of judgement, and white as a lilie, (according to the name) is now ſtain'd with blood of innocents: if ever

righ-

righteouſneſſe did lodge in it, yet now murtherers, as Eſay 1. 21.

To ſhew it unto Eſther] That her eye might affect her heart, and her heart ſet all a-work for her people, that is, her ſelf, according to that, Phyſician heale thy ſelfe, that is, thine own Countreymen. Lam. 3. Luke 4.

And to declare it unto her] In the cauſe, viz. his refuſing to bow to Haman againſt his conſcience, (whereof it no whit repented him:) and in the ſeveral circumſtances laid forth in the livelieſt colours, for her thorough-information.

And to charge her that ſhe ſhould goe in unto the King] Hoc perquam durum eſt, ſed ita lex ſcripta eſt, ſaith the Civilian. This Mordecai knew would hardly be done: he therefore makes uſe of his ancient authority, and ſets it on with greateſt earneſtneſſe. So Saint Paul, I charge you by the Lord, 1 Theſ. 5. 27. And again, I charge thee before God and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, &c. 2 Tim. 4. 1. So Saint Auſtin to his hearers, Per tremendum Dei judicium vos adjuro, I require and charge you by that dreadful day of judgement, when that domeſ-day book ſhall be opened, &c. It is a weakneſſe to be hot in a cold matter, but it is a wickedneſſe to be cold in a hot matter. He that is earneſt in good, though he may carry ſome things indiſcreetly, yet is he far better then a time-ſerver, and a cold friend to the truth: like as in falling forward is nothing ſo much danger, as in falling backward. Eli was too blame with his Do no more ſo my ſonnes. And ſo was Jehoſhaphat with his Let not the King ſay ſo. And the people in Ahabs time, who when they were preſſed to expreſſe whom they were for, God or Baal? they anſwered not a word, 1 Kings 18. 21. And yet how many ſuch cold friends hath the truth now adayes? Luke-warm Laodiceans, Neuter-paſſive Chriſtians, &c? When Callidus once declared againſt Gallus with a faint and languiſhing voice, Oh (ſaith Tully) Tu niſi fingeres, ſic ageres? Would'ſt thou plead on that manner, if thou wert in good earneſt? Mens faint appearing for Gods cauſe ſhewes they do but faine; their coldneſſe probably concludeth they do but counterfeit. Mordecai plays the man, and chargeth Eſther to improve her intereſt in the King her husband, for the Churches deliverance. See here how he turneth every ſtone, tradeth every talent, leaveth no meanes unuſed, no courſe unattempted for the Saints ſafety. And this the Spirit of God hath purpoſely recorded, that all may learn to lay out themſelvs to the utmoſt for the publike; to be moſt zealous for the conſervation and defence of the Church, when it is afflicted and oppoſed by Perſecutours; ſeeing they cannot be ſaved, unleſſe ſhe be in ſafety; neither can they have God for their Father, unleſſe they love and obſerve this their deare mother. Utinam, iterùm autem utinam diligentiùs à cunctis ordinibus hæc hodiè conſiderarentur, ſaith one. Oh that theſe things were duely conſidered by all ſorts now adayes. Cypr. Aug. l. de unit. Eccleſ.

To make ſupplication unto him] Heb. to deprecate diſpleaſure and miſchief, as 1 Kings 8. 28. Zech. 12. 10.

And to make requeſt before him] Ad quærendum à facie ejus; ſo Pagnine from the Hebrew, to ſeek for good from his face, an effectual ſmile, a gracious aſpect, that they may live in his ſight. For in the light of the Kings countenance is life, and his favour is as a cloud of the latter raine, Prov. 16. 15. The ancient Perſian Kings were moſt fond of their wives, doing them all the honour poſſible in Court, as Partakers of all their fortunes, and carried them and their children into their fartheſt warres: by the preſence of ſo dear pledges, the more to encourage their mindes in time of battel. Now therefore Eſther (whom Herodotus alſo witneſſeth to have been Xerxes his beſt beloved) is to try what ſhe can do with him for her people, who were haply grown too ſecure upon Eſthers preferment: as the French Churches alſo were upon the Queen of Navarres greatneſſe, and the promiſe of peace by that match. God therefore ſhortly after ſhook them up, (not by ſhaking his rod only at them, as here at theſe Jewes, but) by permitting that bloody Maſſacre.

Verſe 9. And Hatach came, and told Eſther] He acted the part of a faithful meſſenger: ſo muſt Miniſters thoſe ſervants of the Churches, declare unto the people all the minde of God, Acts 20. 27. and not ſteal Gods word every one from his neighbour, Jer. 23. 30. not deal deceitfully with it, but as of ſincerity, but as of God, in the ſight of God, let them ſpeak in Chriſt; and let them ſpeak out, not fearing any colours. He that hath my Word, let him ſpeak my Word faithfully, ſaith God, Jer. 23. 28. Aarons Bells were all of gold, the Trumpets of the Sanctuary were of pure ſilver: they did not (as thoſe inverſe Trumpets of Furius Fulvius) ſound a retreat, when they should have sounded an alarm: No more must Gods Messengers. Whatsoever the Lord

1 Cor. 21. saith unto me, that will I speak, saith Michaiah. Paul, as he received what he delivered, so he delivered whatsoever he received. Moses was faithful in all Gods
Heb. 3. 5. house, &c.

Verse 10. Again, Esther spake unto Hatach] Having before found him a fit and faithful messenger she further employeth him: so those that minister well, do purchase to themselves a good degree, and great boldnesse in the faith which is in Christ Jesus, 1 Tim. 3. 13. when others shall be laid by as broken vessels, whereof there is not left a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal from the pit, as the Prophet hath it, Esay 30. 14.

Verse 11. All the Kings servants] His Courtiers and Counsellours, who haply were Turk. Hist. 1153. as very slaves to him, as now the greatest Lords of the Court are to the great Turk; no man having any power over himself, much lesse is he Master of the house wherein he Ibid. 361. dwelleth, or of the land which he tilleth, but is in danger of being whipped upon the least displeasure of the Tyrant: especially if he be not a natural Turk borne.

And the people of the Kings Provinces do know] i. e. All, both far and near: this shewes, that the Law here mentioned was no new Law procured by Haman, to prevent Jewish Suppliants, as Lyra would have it, but long since made and known to all the Kings subjects.

That whosoever, whether man or woman] Yea, though she be his deerest Consort, who should cohabit with him, and not be sundred for a season, but by consent, 1 Cor. 7. 5.

Shall come into the King] The Persians usually hid their King, tanquam aliquod sa- crum mysterium, as some precious businesse, and that for two reasons; First, for State and Authority, lest familiarity with their subjects should breed contempt, and make them over-cheap. Philip the second King of Spaine, was of the same minde and practice. For after that he had gotten into his hands the Kingdome of Portugal, and therewith the wealth of the Indies, includit se in Curiale, he shut up and immured him-Val. Max. Christ. self in his Court, and was seldome seen of any, though never so great a man, but upon long suit, and as a singular favour. This made him to be adored as a demi-god. Secondly for security and safety, lest if all should be suffered to come that would, the King should be assassinated and made away, as Eglon was by Ehud, Ishbosheth by Ba- anah and Rechab, Gedaliah by Ishmael, and many Kings of Israel and Emperours of Rome were by their own servants. The Turks at this day suffer no stranger to come into the Presence of their Emperour, but first they search him that he have no weapon: and Turk. Hist. so clasping him by the armes, under colour of doing him honour, dissemblingly they bereave him of the use of his hands, lest he should offer him any violence: yet hath he alway as he sitteth in his throne, lying at hand ready by him, a target, a scimiter, an iron mace, with bow and arrowes.

——Sors ista tyrannis
Muriti ut gladiis vivant, cinctique veneni.

Xenoph. orat. de Agesil. How much better Agesilaus King of Spartans, who walked daily among his subjects, doing justice, and is therefore by Xenophon worthily preferred before this stately King of Persia? how much better Queen Elizabeth, who often shewed her selfe to her people, and chearfully received nosegayes, flowers, rosemary from mean persons. She got the hearts of her subjects (which Philip of Spaine, her stately Contemporary never could do) by coupling mildnesse with Majesty, and stooping, yet in a stately manner, to those of low condition. So reserved she was, that all about her stood in a reverent awe of her very presence and aspect, but much more of her least frown or check, where-Speed 1235. with some of them, who thought they might best presume of her favour, have been so suddenly daunted and planet-stricken, that they could not lay down the grief thereof, but in their graves.

There is one Law of his] A wretched Law it was, written not with black, but with blood, and condemned by very heathens for barbarous and pernicious to the pub-like. For if the King may not be come at, but upon paine of death, what shall become of the poor oppressed? and how shall he ever heare of the rapines and other bloom mis-

miſcarriages of his Favourites and under-Officers, by whom he ſhall be even bought and ſold, and himſelf never the wiſer, as Amelius the Emperour complained. Orpheus, that ancienteſt of Poets, faineth, that Litæ (or Petitions) are Joves daughters, and ever converſant about his Throne. David heard the woman of Tecoa, Solomon the two harlots, and King Joram the aſſamiſhed woman that called to him for juſtice, with Help O King. Philip of Macedon righted the old wife that check't him for his neglect of her; and Trajan, the widow that would not be put off till another time. This was King-like: His office is to judge the people with righteouſneſſe, and the poor with judgement. He ſhall judge the poor of the people, —— and break in pieces the oppreſſour, Pſal. 72. 2, 4. Plutarch.

To put him to death] Θάνατος ἐκ ζημίας, Athenæus. No ſuch danger in approaching Gods Preſence, he ſoliciteth ſuitours, and ſeeketh ſuch as may come before him, John 4. 23. This was anciently figured by the door of the Tabernacle, not made of any hard or debarring matter, but of a veile eaſily penetrable: which alſo now is rent, to ſhew our eaſie acceſſe to Him, who heareth prayers, and willeth that all fleſh come unto him, lifting up in all places pure hands, without wrath, and without doubting. Pſal. 65. 2. 1 Tim. 2. 8.

Except ſuch to whom the King ſhall hold out the golden Scepter] In token that he called for them. Thus, whom he would he ſlew, and whom he would he kept alive; as Dan 5. 19. But Eſther ſhould (as afterwards ſhe did) have truſted God with her life: and with a Romane reſolution have ſaid, Neceſſe eſt ut eam, non ut vivam. It is neceſſary, that I venture, not that I live. That ſhe was fearful when her life lay upon it, we may impute to the weakneſſe of her ſex, or rather of her faith, againſt which ſenſe fights ſore, when 'tis upon it's own dunghil, I mean, in a ſenſible danger. Natures retraction of it ſelf from a viſible feare, may cauſe the pulſe of a Chriſtian, that beats truly and ſtrongly in the main point (the ſtate of the ſoule) to intermit and faulter at ſuch a time. Abraham ſhewed ſome trepidation; and Peter much more.

But I have not been called to come in to the King theſe thirty dayes] There was hot love the while, his concubines, perhaps, had engroſſed him. Doves are ſaid to draw the charet of Venus: and thoſe neither change their mates, nor forſake their company. Haman was all the doer, now about the King, as our King Richard the ſecond his Favourites, Knights of Venus rather then Bellona, ſaith the Chronicler, converſing with the King, not without ſuſpicion of foula familiarity, as Walſingham writeth, Sodomitica labe infecti, ſaith another. Speed. 746.

Verſe 12. And they told to Mordecai Eſthers words] See the Note on verſ. 9. She would have been her own Meſſenger, but might not. The greateſt are not alwayes the happieſt. The Lady Elizabeth once wiſhed her ſelfe a merry milkmaid.

Verſe 13. Then Mordecai commanded to anſwer Eſther] He would not take her excuſe, but ſeemes to ſay unto her, as one once did to a Philoſopher, that in a great tempeſt at ſea asked many trifling queſtions. Are we periſhing, and doeſt thou trifle? So, Doeſt thou caſt off the care of community, and provide for no more then thine own ſafety? Aul. Gell. Ἡμῖς ἀπολλύμεθα, καὶ σὺ παίζεις.

Think not with thy ſelf, that thou ſhalt eſcape in the Kings houſe] Any more then Serena that Chriſtian Empreſſe, wife to Diocleſian did, or Eliz. Queen of Denmark, glad to flie for her life, becauſe a Lutheran; or Queen Katharine Parr, who hardly eſcaped the fire by the favour of her husband Henry the eighth. Sure it is, that the feare of man bringeth a ſnare (as fearful birds and beaſts fall into the Hunters toile) but he that truſteth in the Lord, (as good Mordecai did, and as he would have Eſther to do) ſhall be ſafe, or ſhall be ſet on high, out of harmes way, his place of defence ſhall be munitions of rocks, Eſay 33. 15. Like as the corney, that weak, but wiſe creature, Prov. 30. 24, 26.) flieth to the holes in the rocks, and doth eaſily avoid the dogs that purſue her: when the Hare that truſteth to the ſwiftneſſe of her legs, is at length overtaken, and torne in pieces. Prov. 29. 25.

More then all the Jewes] The Law was general and irreverſible. Darius ſought to deliver Daniel, and could not. And Haman (as once Medina's here in eighty eight) ſword knew no difference, nor would make any in that generall Maſſacre; like as in that at Paris, they poiſoned the Queen of Navarre, murdered the moſt part of the Peerleſſe Nobility in France, their wives and children, with a great lote of the common people.

Verſe

Verſe 14. But if thou altogether holdeſt thy peace] And ſo make thy ſelf guilty of a ſinful ſilence, nay, of the death of ſo many innocents! for not to do good, when it is in the power of a mans hand, is to do evil, and not to ſave is to deſtroy, as our Saviour ſheweth, Mark 3. 14. Paſſive wickedneſſe is deeply taxed in ſome of thoſe ſeven Churches, Revel. 2. and 3. In a ſtorme at ſea, it is a ſhame to ſit ſtill, or to be aſleep with Jonas in the ſides of the ſhip, when it is in danger of drowning. Every man cannot ſit at the Sterne, but then he may handle the ropes, or manage the oares, &c. The ſelf-ſeeker, the private-ſpirited man, may he be but warme in his own feathers, regards not the danger of the houſe; he is rerum inſe, like the ſnail, ſtill within doors and at home, like the Squirrel, he ever digs his hole towards the Sun-riſing: his care is to keep on the warme ſide of the hedge, to ſleep in a whole skin, to ſave one, whatever become of the many. From doing thus, Mordecai deterreth Eſther by an heap of holy arguments: diſcovering an heroical faith, and a well-knit reſolution.

Qui non cum poteſt, ſervat; occidit.

At this time] There is indeed a time to keep ſilence, and a time to ſpeak, Eccl. 3. 7. But if ever a man will ſpeak, let him do it when the enemies are ready to devoure the Church: as Cræſus his dumb ſon burſt out into, Kill not King Cræſus. For Zions ſake I will not hold my peace, and for Jeruſalems ſake I will not reſt, &c. Eſay 62. 1. If I forget thee, O Jeruſalem, let my right hand forget her cunning. If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth, &c. Pſal. 137. 5, 6. That noble Terentius, (General to Valens the Emperour) being bidden to ask what he would, asked nothing, but that the Church might be freed from Arians. And when the Emperour, upon a defeat by the Gothes, upbraided him with cowardiſe and ſloth as the cauſes of the overthrow, He boldly replied, Your ſelfe have loſt the day, by your warring againſt God, and perſecuting his people.

Niceph.

Then ſhall their enlargement] Heb. Reſpiration, a day of refreſhing ſhould come from the Preſence of the Lord. Confer Job 9. 18. At preſent they could hardly breath, for bitterneſſe of ſpirit.

And deliverance ariſe] Heb. ſtand up, as on its baſis or bottome, ſo as none ſhall be able to withſtand. This, Mordecai ſpeaketh, not by a ſpirit of Prophecy, but by the force of his faith, grounded upon the Promiſes of Gods defending his Church, hearing the cries of his afflicted, ariſing to their relief and ſuccour, &c. Mira profecto ac omnibus linguis, ſæculis, laudeſque commendabilis fides, faith one. A notable faith indeed, and worthy of higheſt commendation. Thorough the Perſpective of the Promiſes (thoſe pabulum fidei, food of faith) a believer may ſee deliverance at a great diſtance; ſee it and ſalute it, as thoſe did, Heb. 11. 13. What though Senſe ſaith, It will not be; Reaſon, It cannot be: yet Faith gets above, and ſayes, It ſhall be, I deſcry land.

Ἀγαπασίωτοι.

Virg. Italiam, Italiam læti clamore ſalutat.

But thou and thy fathers houſe ſhall be deſtroyed] Here he thundereth and threateneth her, if to ſave her ſelf ſhe ſhall deſert the Church. Mordecai's meſſage, like Davids ditty, is compoſed of diſcords. Soure and ſweet make the beſt ſauce: Promiſes and menaces mixed will ſooneſt work. God told Abraham, that for the love he bare him, he would bleſſe thoſe that bleſſed him, and curſe ſuch as curſed him. Their ſin ſhould finde them out, and they ſhould rue it in their poſterity. As one fire, ſo one feare ſhould drive out another.

Pſal. 101. 1.

Gen. 12. 3.

And who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom] There is often a wheel within a wheel, Ezek. 1. God may have an end and an time in buſineſſes that we wot not of, nor can ſee into, till event hath explained it. Let us lay forth our ſelves for him, and labour to be publike-ſpirited, ſtanding on tiptoe, as Saint Paul did, to ſee which way we may moſt glorifie God, and gratifie our brethren.

Ἀπροσδόκητα Phil. 1. 20.

Verſe 16. Then Eſther bade them returne Mordecai this anſwer] A ſweet anſwer, and ſuch as fully ſatisfied him. No mans labour can be in vaine in the Lord. Good therefore and worthy of all acceptation is the wiſe mans counſel. In the morning ſow thy ſeed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knoweſt not whether ſhall proſper, either this or that, or whether they both ſhall be alike good, Eccleſ. 11. 6. Mordecai had filled his mouth with Arguments, and now God filled his heart with comfort. Eſther yields, and reſolves to obey him, whatever come of it, only ſhe will go the wiſeſt wiſeſt way to work, firſt ſeeking God, and then caſting herſelf upon the King. Ora & labora, God hath all hearts in his hand, and will grant good ſucceſſe to his ſuppliants.

Verſe 16. Go gather together all the Jewes] Great is the power of joynt prayer, it ſtirres heaven, and works wonders. Oh when a Church-full of good people ſhall ſet ſi des and ſhoulders to work, when they ſhall rouſe up themſelves, and wraſtle with God, when their pillars of incenſe ſhall come up into his Preſence, and their voices be heard as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder, Rev. 14. What may not ſuch thundring legions have at Gods hands? Have it? they will have it: Cœlum tundimus, preces fundimus, miſericordiam extorquemus, ſaid thoſe primitive Prayer-makers. Rev. 9.13. the prayers of the Saints from the foure corners of the earth ſound, and do great things in the world, they make it ring. It was the ſpeech of a learned man, if there be but one ſigh come from a gracious heart (how much more then, a volley of ſighs from many good hearts together?) it filleth the eares of God, ſo that God heareth nothing elſe. Rev. 14.2.

And faſt ye for me] Who am now upon my life, and for ought I know, am ſhortly to appear before the Lord; (who requireth to be ſanctified in all them that draw near unto him) and wherein I may not look to have leave to erre twice. Foint therefore your prayers for me with holy faſting, that they may pierce heaven and prevail. Abſtinence meriteth not, ſaith a grave Divine, for Religion conſiſteth not in the belly, either full or empty. (What are meats or drinks to the Kingdome of God, which is, like himſelf, ſpiritual?) but it prepareth beſt for good duties. Full bellies are fitter for reſt. Not the body ſo much as the ſoule is more active with emptineſſe: Hence ſolemn prayer taketh ever faſting to attend it; and ſo much the rather ſpeedeth in heaven, when it is ſo accompanied. It is good ſo to diet the body, that the ſoule may be fattened. Non licet in bello bis errare. D. Hall.

And neither eat nor drink three dayes, &c.] That is, ſaith Druſius, two whole nights, one whole day, and part of two other dayes. See the like expreſſion, Mat. 12.40. Others ſay, that in thoſe hot countreyes they might faſt three dayes, as well as we two in theſe cold climates. Tully in one of his Epiſtles telleth us, that he faſted two dayes together, without ſo much as taſting a little water. For the Romanes alſo and Grecians had their Faſts private and publike, whether it were by a ſecret inſtinct of Nature, or by an imitation of the Hebrewes, Faciunt & veſpe favos. The Turks likewiſe at this day preciſely obſerve their Faſts, and will not ſo much as taſte a cup of water, or waſh their mouthes with water all the day long, before the ſtars appear in the ſky, be the days never ſo long and hot. The Hollanders and French faſt, but had need, ſaith one, to ſend for thoſe mourning women, Jer. 19. 17. by their cunning to teach them to mourn. The Engliſh are not ſick ſoon enough, ſaith another, and they are well too ſoon: this is true of their mindes as well as of their bodies. Currat ergo pœnitentia, ne præcurrat ſententia: and let our Faſts be either from morning till evening, Judg. 20.26. 2 Sam. 3.35. Or from evening till evening, Levit. 23.32. or longer, as here. And Acts 9.9. As the hand and wrath of God doth more or leſſe threaten us, or lie upon us. There is an old Canon that defineth their continuance, Till ſtarres appear in the ſky. Epiſt. 101. Turk. Hiſt. 777. Usque dum ſtellæ in cœlo appareant.

I alſo and my maids will faſt] She her ſelf would be in the head of them, as Queen Elizabeth alſo told her ſouldiers at Tilbury Camp for their comfort: and as Cæſar uſed to ſay to his ſouldiers Go we, and not Go ye; and as Joſhua ſaid, I and my houſe will ſerve Jehovah. Eſthers maids muſt faſt and pray, or they are no maids for her. Non ite, ſed eamus. Joſh. 24.15.

And ſo will I go unto the King] It is ſaid of Achilles, that he was Styge armatus: But he that faſteth, prayeth, believeth, Eſt cœlo, Chriſto, Deo armatus, armed with an undaunted reſolution to obey God whatever come of it.

Which is not according to the Law] She ſlights not the Law, but waves it, to obey Gods Law, and ſave her people.

And if I periſh, I periſh] This ſhe ſpeaketh not raſhly or deſperately, as prodigal of her life, but as ſacrificing the fame to God and his cauſe, thorough the obedience of faith, and ſaying, as that Martyr. Can I die but once for Chriſt? See the like phraſe, Gen. 43.14. with the Note there. Better do worthi'y, and periſh for a Kingdom, then unworthily, and periſh with a Kingdom.

Verſe 17. So Mardecai went his way, and did according, &c.] As he had put her upon a dangerous, but, as the cauſe ſtood, neceſſary exploit, (Nature will venture its own particular good for the general, as heavy things will aſcend to keep out vacuity, and preſerve the Univerſe,) ſo he is ruled by her, (though a woman, and once his pupil) when he perceived her counſel was good. Abraham muſt hear Sarah, and David Abigail, and Apollos Priſcilla, when they ſpeak reaſon. It is foretold of a man in Chriſt, that a little childe ſhall lead him, Eſa. 11.6.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1. Now it came to paſſe on the third day.]

Seder. Olam.

THat is, on the fifteenth day of the moneth Niſſan, as the Hebrew Annals ſay. Cum adhuc ferverent populariũm ſuorum preces, (whiles the prayers of her Countreymen, like thoſe of Cornelius, Acts 10. 4.) were come up for a memorial before God: ſhe takes her opportunity and ſpeeds accordingly: ſhe knew that ſweet paſſage, Pſalme 145. 18. The Lord is nigh to all that call upon him, to all that call upon him in truth. He will fulfil the deſire of them that feare him, he will alſo heare their cry and will ſave them, &c. This ſhe could afterwards ſeale to and ſay, This poor ſoul cried, and the Lord heard her, and ſaved her out of all her troubles, Pſal. 34.6, Luthers widow confeſſed, that ſhe never underſtood many of Davids Pſalmes, till ſhe was in deep affliction.

Joh. Manl. loc. Com. 142.

That Eſther put on her royal apparel] She knew that Hanc homines decorant, quam veſtimenta decôrant.

People are uſually regarded as they are habited, & good cloaths conduce much to the ſetting forth of beauty to the beſt. Like a right daughter of Sarah, ſhe knew that the outward adorning, by plaiting the haire, wearing of gold, and putting on of apparel, would not at all commend her to God, (in obedience to whom ſhe had wanzed her face with faſting, and truſted that he would put upon her his comelineſſe) But conſidering that the King, her husband looked much at ſuch things, ſhe laid aſide her faſting-weeds, and put on her beſt, Induit ſe regno (ſo the Original runs) ſhe clothed her ſelf in rich and royal aray; as Queen Mary of England did on her Coronation day: her head was ſo laden with precious ſtones, that ſhe could hardly hold it up, ſaith the Story: and all things elſe were according. Whether Eſther came to the King, leaning upon one maid, and having another to hold up her traine, as Joſephus hath it, is uncertain. 'Tis likely ſhe left her Attendants without, leſt ſhe ſhould draw them into danger: and contented her ſelf (when ſhe went in to the King,) with thoſe faithful companions, Faith, Hope and Charity, who brought her off alſo with ſafety, according to Prov. 18.10. and 14.26.

1 Pet. 3.3,5.

And ſtood in the inner Court of the Kings houſe] A bold adventure queſtionleſſe, but the fruit of the prayer of faith, this was it that put ſpirit and metal into her. What if ſhe were Queen? ſo had Vaſthi been, and yet diſcarded for her diſobedience. Beſides, how could ſhe tell, either what the Kings minde toward her was (he had not ſeen her of a moneth, and if Haman knew her to be a Jeweſſe, what would not he ſuggeſt againſt her?) Or, what was the minde of God, till he had ſignified it by the event? It was therefore an heroical courage in Eſther, proceeding from her faith, which when it is driven to work alone without ſenſe, then God thinks it lieth upon his credit to ſhew mercy.

Over againſt the Kings houſe] Where ſhe might ſee him, and be ſeen by him. This ſhe did, Nec temerè, nec timidè, which, ſaith one, is the Chriſtians Motto.

Lib. 12. 3.

And the King ſat upon his Royal Throne] Royal indeed, as Athenæus deſcribeth it. But yet ſhort of Solomons, much more of the Lord Chriſts, ſupported and ſurrounded with an innumerable company of Angels. It ſhould be our earneſt deſire to ſee this King of glory upon his Throne: to ſee him and enjoy him. Auſtin wiſhed that he might have ſeen three things, 1. Romam in flore, 2. Paulum in ore. 3. Chriſtum in corpore. Rome in the flouriſh, Paul in the Pulpit, Chriſt in the fleſh. Venerable Bede cometh after, and correcting this laſt wiſh, ſaith, Imo verò

1 Kings 10.18.

Chri-

Chriſtum in ſolio ſedentem. Let me ſee Chriſt upon his Throne-royal rather. Eſay ſaw him ſo ch. 6. 1. and took far more delight therein, then the merry Greeks did or could do at their Olympick games, celebrated at the ſame time, in the one thouſand five hundred and fourtieth yeare after the Flood, as the divine Chronologer compureth it. Bucholc. 541.

Verſe 2. And it was ſo] God the great Heart-diſpoſer ſo ordered it.

That when the King ſaw Eſther the Queen, &c.] Beautified by God in a ſpecial manner, as was Moſes, Acts 7. 20. Stephen, Acts 6. 15, &c. And ſome faces we know do appear moſt orientally faire, whenthey are moſt inſtamp't with ſorrow. Ἄστε τὸν θεὸν τὸν θεόν.

That ſhe obtained favour in his ſight] Joſephus ſaith, that at firſt the King frowned upon her, ſo that ſhe fell into a ſwoon before him. Rex autem voluntate, arbitror Dei, mentem mutavit, i. e. But the King as God would have it, changed his minde, and cheared her up. How true this is, I know not; But this I know, that the wrath of a King is as the roaring of a lion, which is ſo terrible, that it aſtonieth all that heare it, and that Omne trahit ſecum Cæſaris ira malum. Sir Chriſtopher Hatton, being check't and threatened by Queen Elizabeth, died ſoon after: Neither could the Queen, having once caſt him down with her word only, raiſe him up again, though ſhe viſited him, and comforted him. Eſther here was ſoon raiſed and relieved. Amb hex. l. 6. c. 5. Camd. Eliz. 406.

Dejicit ut relevet, premit ut ſolatia præſtet:
Enecat, ut poſſit vivificare Deus.

And the King held out to Eſther the golden Scepter] He did not kick her out of his Preſence, as ſome Cambyſes would have done, neither did he command her to the block, as Henry the eighth did his Anne Bullen, upon a meer miſpriſion of diſloyalty: neither yet did he caſhiere her, as he had done Vaſhti for a leſſe offence: but, by holding out his Scepter ſhewes his gracious reſpects unto her. This was the Lords own work, as was likewiſe that of old, that Laban ſhould leave Jacob with a kiſſe, Eſau meet him with a kiſſe, Gen. 33. 4. where the word kiſſed hath a prick over each letter in the Original, to ſhew the wonder of Gods work in changing Eſaus heart from his former hatred. Let a mans wayes pleaſe the Lord, and men ſhall quickly befriend him. This is compendioſiſſima hominum gratiam conſequendi via, ſaith Lavater here, the readieſt way to win favour with all others. When David was once a man after Gods heart, whatſoever he did, pleaſed the people.

So Eſther drew near, and touched the top of his Scepter] With her hand, ſaith the Chaldee: with her mouth, ſaith the Vulgar Tranſlation. This ſhe did either in token of ſubmiſſion, or for the avoiding of danger; for, as Joſephus ſaith, He that touched the Kings Scepter, was out of the reach of evil. Wives ſhould ſubmit themſelves to their own husbands, as it is fit in the Lord. Submiſſion includeth Reverence, (in heart, ſpeeches, geſtures) and obedience to all their husbands lawful commands and reſtraints. This is no more then is meet, ſaith the Apoſtle. Ὁ ἀνθρωπος, ἀνὴρ δὲ ὁ θεός. Joſeph. Col. 3. 19.

Verſe 3. Then ſaid the King unto her] He perceived both by this her bold adventure, and alſo by her countenance and habit, that ſhe had ſome very great ſuit to him. He therefore accoſteth her (as the Lord did the Angel, Zech. 1. 13.) with good words, and comfortable words. And this way one man may be an Angel, nay, a God to another, Gen. 33. 10. Indeed it is God that comforteth by the creature as by a conduit-pipe. The aire yieldeth light as an inſtrument, the water may heat, but not of it ſelfe. The Lord put it into the heart of Ahaſhuerus, to cheer up Eſther in this ſort: wherein alſo he did but his duty, for no man ever yet hated his own fleſh, but nouriſheth and cheriſheth it, even as the Lord the Church; ſo ought men to love their wives as their own bodies, He that loveth his wife loveth himſelf, Eph. 6. 28, 29.

What wilt thou Queen Eſther?] That he called her by her name, and with ſuch an honourable attribution, was a ſigne of no ſmall favour. The hearts of Joſephs brethren were ſo big ſwolne with ſpite and ſpleen, that they could not call him by his name, but ſaid, Behold, this dreamer, Gen. 37. 19. So the Phariſees called our Saviour, Thy father. And the Jewes ſought him at the feaſt, and ſaid, Where is he? they could not finde in their hearts to ſay, Where is Jeſus? So Saul asked not for David much leſſe for his ſon-in-law David, but for the ſon of Jeſſe, by way of contempt. Chriſt tells his diſciples that their enemies ſhall caſt out their names for naught, Luke 6. 22. and charges them courteouſly to ſalute their enemies, calling them friendly by their names, Mat. 5. 47. Ἐκεῖνος. John 7. 11.

And what is thy request?] q. d. Feare not to utter it, I am very earneſt to know it, and fully reſolved to grant it. It was more troubleſome to Severus the Emperour to be asked nothing, then to give much. When any of his Courtiers had not made bold with him, he would call him and ſay, Quid eſt cur nihil petes? What meaneſt thou to ask me nothing? Hitherto ye have asked me nothing (ſaith the King of Saints to his beloved Eſther) Ask, that your joy may be full, John 16. 24. he is worthily miſerable, that will not make himſelf happy by asking.

It ſhall be given thee to the half of the Kingdom] A proverbial rather then a prodigal ſpeech, and much in this Kings mouth. If ſome ambitious Semiramis had had ſuch an offer, what ill uſe might ſhe ſoon have made of it? The dancing Damoſel made no good uſe of the like from Herod. But a Bee can ſuck honey out of a flower, that a flie cannot skill to do. Eſther prudently and modeſtly improveth the immoderate offer of the King, and conceiveth good hope. How much more may we (upon thoſe exceeding great and precious Promiſes given us by God) of an exuberancy of love, and a confluence of all comforts for this life and a better? Eſpecially ſince God doth not pay Plut. his Promiſes with words, as Sertorius is ſaid to have done; neither is he off and on with his people (nec mutatur, nec mentitur) but performeth all with the better, as Naaman preſſed the Prophets man, to take two talents, when he asked but one. The widow of Sarepta had more then ſhe could tell what to do with: her cruſe never ceaſed running till ſhe had no room. The Shunamite would ask nothing of the Prophet, nor make uſe of his offered courteſie. He ſends for her again, and makes her a free Promiſe of that which ſhe moſt wanted and deſired, a ſonne, 2 Kings 4. 16. Gods kindneſſe is beyond all this. He giveth his ſervants what they forget or preſume to ask: and ſends his Spirit to help them, and to forme their prayers for them, and thereby to ſeale them up to the day of Redemption, to aſſure them of the Kingdome.

Verſe 4. And Eſther anſwered] She did not preſently poure forth her whole heart into the Kings boſome, raile againſt Haman, beg for her people, &c. but prudently reſerveth her ſelfe till a fitter opportunity. Unadviſed open-heartedneſſe is a fruit of fool-hardineſſe, Prov. 29. 11. A fool uttereth all his minde, (ye ſhall have it preſently, ſo near his mouth doth it lie, that all will out ſuddenly) but a wiſe man keepeth it in till afterwards, or, in an inner room, (in ulteriori animi receſſu) as the word may be rendred, till he ſee his time to produce it.

If it ſeem good to the King] Princes muſt have ſilken words given them, as the mother of Artaxerxes (haply Eſther) told one. The rule of old was ἢ ἥδεα, ἢ ἥδιονα; ſhort or ſweet.

Let the King and Haman come this day to the banquet] She knew that the King loved Hamans company, and eſpecially at a banquet. It was policie in Rebecca to provide ſuch ſavoury meat as the old man loved: ſo here. Be wiſe as Serpents. David is commended for his prudent, (and thereby proſperous) deporting himſelfe in Sauls houſe, 1 Sam. 18. God gave Solomon politick wiſdom exceeding much. Who is a faithful and a
Mat. 24. wiſe ſervant, ſaith our Saviour, &c? And who is a wiſe man, and endued with knowledge,
Jam. 3. 13. (ſaith St. James) amongſt you? let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works, with meekneſſe of wiſdom. But if it were policy in Eſther to invite Haman whom ſhe hated, was it likewiſe Piety? did ſhe not diſſemble? R. Solomon ſaith, She invited Haman alone with the King, that other Courtiers might envie him, and ſo undermine him. But that's but a ſorry excuſe, neither doth Lyra's allegation of her good intention much mend the matter. They anſwer better, who ſay, that ſhe invited him, that ſhe might accuſe him to his face: and ſo put off all matter of his excuſe or eſcape. Hereby alſo ſhe would ſhew, ſaith Lavater, that ſhe accuſed him, not out of wrath or revenge: but that ſhe was drawen to it, and as it were driven by meer neceſſity.

Verſe 5. Then the King ſaid, Cauſe Haman to make haſte] Heb. Accelerate or haſten Haman, ſc. to an ill bargain, as it proved the very next day. Loe, how thunder commonly happens, when the ſky ſeemeth moſt clear: ſo Haman ſaw himſelf inveloped with a ſtorme, in one of the faireſt skyes of his fortune. Philoſophers ſay, that before a ſhour, the weather will be warmiſh: when the winde lies, the great rain falls, and the aire is moſt quiet, when ſuddenly there will be an earthquake.

Σκοπει τον ἐπιτιθεντα, τουτεστι τον Dio. Sit the King and Haman come to the banquet] Who but the King and Haman? So Tiberius called Sejanus, My Sejanus Partaker of all my cares and counſels, &c. and made him his Colleague in the Empire. But he ſoon caſt him from ſupreme honour, to extreme ignominy; ſo that the ſame Senatour, who accompanied him to the Senate, conducted him to priſon; they which ſacrificed unto him as to their god, which kneeled down to him to adore him, ſcoffed at him, and loaded him with contempt and contumelies. So Cæſar Borgia, that reſtleſſe Ambitioniſt, who emulating Julius Cæſar, would needs be aut Cæſar, aut nullus, was ſhortly after & Cæſar, & nullus, being ſlain in the Kingdom of Navarre.

his

Verſe 6. And the King ſaid unto Eſther at the banquet of wine] Which ſeemeth to have been after the other banquet of dainties and ſweet-meats, during which they drank water. Only the King had aurum potabile, a golden water prepared, which he and his eldeſt ſonne alone might drink: and none elſe might taſte of it on paine of death. At this latter Banquet they drank wine freely one to another; and, inter poculorum lætitiam, as Joſephus hath it, when his heart was now merry within him, after he had drunk wine abundantly, as the Latine hath it, the King ſaid unto Eſther, Τῶν δ' ἄλλων ἐὰν τις πίῃ θανάτῳ ἡ ζημία. Athenæus. Ἐν τῷ πίνειν, Inter pocula.

What is thy Petition, —— to the halfe of the Kingdome] The Promiſe the King reneweth, as ſuppoſing that Eſther durſt not propoſe her requeſt, becauſe of the greatneſſe of the matter: and aſſuring her that ſhe ſhould have it, though never ſo great. And ſaith not the God of heaven as much to his ſervants and ſuppliants, Eſay 45. 11. Jer. 33. 3? Why then ſtand they off in a ſinful ſhamefacedneſſe, and improve not to the utmoſt this divine indulgence, this precious priviledge? why ſay they not with Luther, (who well underſtood the latitude of this royal Charter) Fiat mea voluntas, Let my will be done: my will I ſay, becauſe the ſame with thine, Lord? why do they not grow upon God, and work upon his Promiſe, (which is ſo exceeding broad, Pſal. 119. 96.) as David did, 1 Chro. 17. 23, 24, 25? he goes over it again, and yet ſtill encroacheth, verſe 26. he preſſeth and oppreſſeth it, till he hath expreſſed the ſweetneſſe out of it, and ſo we have all good leave to do, Eſay 66. 11. even to ſuck and be ſatisfied by thoſe full-ſtrutting breaſts of divine conſolation. But what mean thoſe ſoule great babies the Papiſts, to pray the Virgin Mary to exhibit unto them the breaſts of her grace, &c? And what frontleſſe blaſphemers are they to ſay, that God the Father hath ſhared his Kingdome with her: keeping his Juſtice to himſelf, and giving his Mercy to her to diſpoſe of? And this (ſay they, that they may not ſeem to be mad without reaſon) was prefigured by Ahaſhuerus his ſaying to Eſther, I will grant thy requeſt to the half of my Kingdom. Gab. Biel.

Verſe 7. My Petition and my requeſt is] She beſpeaketh the King in his own very words: and ſo muſt we if we mean to ſpeed in heaven, Take unto you words, and ſay, Take away all iniquity, and give good, &c. Produce Gods own words in prayer, and ſay (as ſhe did to Judah) Whoſe are theſe? He loves to be ſet upon in his own words, to be preſſed with his Promiſe, to be ſued upon his bond. This David knew, and therefore cries, Pſal. 86. 11. Unite my heart to feare thy name: it is as if he ſhould ſay, Thou haſt promiſed, Lord, to give me one heart, behold I finde mine heart divided, my thoughts diſſipated, and my ſelf diſabled for duty, (for Anima diſperſa ſit minor) Unite it, I beſeech thee, &c. This is the way to make our prayers to be nigh the Lord day and night, as Solomon phraſeth it, 1 Kings 8. 59. Gen. 38. 25. Ezek. 11. 19.

Verſe 8. If I have found favour in the ſight of the King] As ſhe had, not ſo much by her beauty and bravery (wherein Vaſhti perhaps might eaſily have compared with her) but by the finger of God, who tameth to his Elect the fierceſt creatures (as he did the Lions to Daniel, and other ſavage beaſts to the Martyrs, whom they would not meddle with,) and turneth the Kings heart, as the rivers of water, into what channel ſoever he pleaſeth to put it, Prov. 21. 1. as the Plowman doth the water-courſe with his paddle, or the Gardiner with his hand.

And if it pleaſe the King] See verſe 4. and ſubmit to God, James 4. 7.

And I will do to morrow as the King hath ſaid] She had learned to preferre opportunity before time. There might be ſome by, at this firſt banquet, whoſe company ſhe liked not: or ſhe might not yet have ſo clear an anſwer in her own heart to her former prayers, and therefore deſireth ſome farther time that night to ſeek God: whatever the reaſon of her putting it off till next day was, Gods holy hand was in it, that Mordecai might be firſt ſo greatly honoured, and Hamans high Gallowes prepared. Illum itaque magis ſecurum, Regem autem magis benevolum magiſque ſibi amicum, ſaith Ru-

Rupertus. Hereby ſhe made Haman more ſecure, and the King more kinde and attent.

Verſe 9. Then went Haman that day forth joyful] Seculi lætitia eſt impunita nequitia, ſaith an Ancient, He looked upon himſelf now as no leſſe favoured of the Queen, then of the King, and was puffed up with this new honour, as a bubble is with a childes blaſt in a walnut-ſhell, with a little ſope, but it ſhortly after falls down again into his eyes, and vexeth him.

And with a glad heart] But he rejoyced, as many more do, in a thing of nought, Am. 6. 13. And the end of this his mirth was heavineſſe, Prov. 14. 13. It was riſus Sardonius, like that of thoſe, who being ſtung with the Tarantula (a viper in Italy) die laughing and capering. Or as the Dolphin, that ſporteth moſt before a ſtorme. Or as the little fiſhes, that ſwimming merrily down the ſilver ſtream of Jordan, fall ſhortly after into the dead ſea. Haman doubtleſſe held himſelf now the happieſt man alive: as having the royalty, not of the Kings eare only, but of the Queens too, as he fooliſhly fancied. This wicked one boaſted of his hearts deſire, and as for all his enemies, he puffed at them. He ſaid in his heart I ſhall not be moved, I ſhall never be in adverſity. Herodotus ſaith of Apryes King of Egypt (Pharaoh-Hophrah Jeremy calleth him, chap. 44.) that he conceited and bragged that his Kingdome was better ſetled to him, then that any, either God or man could remove him: yet was he afterwards taken and hang'd by his own ſubjects. Ælian tells us, that Dionyſius the Tyrant, thought it impoſſible that he ſhould have been caſt out of Sicily, but it proved otherwiſe. How ſuddenly were Alexander the great Conquerour, and Julius Cæſar the perpetual Dictator, cut off, and quenched as the fire of thornes? Sic tranſit gloria mundi. The worlds greateſt darlings, are in no better condition, then the Bull that goes to be ſacrificed with garlands on his head, and muſick before him: but ſuddenly feels the ſtroke of the murthering axe.

Pſ. 10. 3, 5, 6.

Herod. l. 2.

Æl. var. hiſt. l. 2.

Pſ. 118. 12.

But when Haman ſaw Mordecai in the Kings gate] There he ſat, and would not ſtir an inch, for Hamans greatneſſe: as reſolute he remained, (notwithſtanding the bloody Edict now publiſhed) as was Rawlins White the Martyr in Queen Maries dayes. The Biſhop of Landaffe pretended to pray for his Converſion: after which he ſaid, Now Rawlins how is it with thee? Wilt thou revoke thine opinions or no? Surely, (ſaid he) my Lord, Rawlins you left me, and Rawlins you finde me, and Rawlins, by Gods grace I will continue. The heavens ſhall aſſoon fall, ſaid another, as I will recant. This, the mad world ſtiles ſtiffeneſſe, ſelf-willedneſſe, fool-hardineſſe, &c. as was before noted, but the Saints do it out of Chriſtian courage, an invincible faith, and zeale for Gods cauſe and Kingdome.

Act. & Mon. 1415. Ibid. 1430.

That he ſtood not up, nor moved for him] No, not he, ne minimo quidem obſequiolo, he neither moved nor muted. For he looked upon him firſt as a vile perſon, and therefore fit to be ſlighted, Pſal. 15. 4. Next, as an utter enemy to God and his people, a ſworn ſword-man to the devil. Laſtly, Mordecai herein ſhewed himſelf conſtant to his principles, and to his former practice, which a good man may not eaſily alter, leſt all be queſtioned. Beſides, ſhould he but have any whit yielded, Haman would have been thereby hardened, and his pride heightened. He therefore very honeſtly perſiſteth in his purpoſe, and giveth that wretch leſſe reſpect then ever.

He was full of indignation againſt Mordecai] Full, as heart could hold, of hot wrath: ſo that he gloweth like a fire-coal, Et ferè crepat medius. So unſatisfiable is ambition, ſo reſtleſſe, and ſo vindictive.

Verſe 10. Nevertheleſſe Haman refrained himſelfe] Much ado he had to forbeare miſchieving him: he was faine to force himſelf thereunto, as the word ſignifieth; for his fingers even itched to be having him by the eares, or to be bathing in his blood. This he did not, haply becauſe he durſt not, becauſe Mordecai was the Kings ſervant, his door-Keeper, as 'tis thought, and ſo went under his protection. It would therefore have reflected upon the King himſelf, if he ſhould lay violent hands on him. Moſt ſure it is, that God held his hands, and preſerved Mordecai for further good to his Church. Precious in the ſight of the Lord is the death of his Saints: neither will he ſend them to bed, till they have done their work.

And when he came home, he ſent and called for his friends] This had been a wiſe mans part, if he had done it for any good purpoſe. But as he was in an ill caſe to conſult, as being full of rage, ſo he minded nothing but revenge, and therefore adviſed with none but such as would lay with him, and thereby hasten his downfal.

with

And Zeresh his wife] Ut consiliariorum primam & præcipuam. That she was wise above her sexe. See chap. 6. 13. But had she been as wise as Pilates wife was. She would not have given here such pestilent counsel, but have warned her husband of medling with just men. Have these workers of iniquity no knowledge, that they eate up Gods people, as they eat bread? that they make account to make but a breakfast of them? Psal. 14. 4.

Verse. 11. And Haman told them of the glory of his riches] Favourites (observing their mollissima fandi tempora,) get many times much wealth under Princes: as did Sejanus under Tiberius, Seneca under Nero, that rich and wretched Cardinal Henry Beauford, Bishop of Winchester, and Chancellour of England, in the reigne of Henry the sixth, Cardinal Woolsey, under Henry the eighth. That Haman had well-feathered his nest, appears by his large offer to the King of ten thousand talents of silver, &c. Now riches render a man glorious in the worlds eye; hence they go coupled together. Prov. 3. 16. and 8. 18. Hence that of Labans grumbling sonnes, Gen. 31. 1. Jacob hath taken away all that was our fathers, (nay, not all, but as avarice made Sejanus think all which he acquired not, to be lost; so did these losels) and of that which was of our fathers hath he gotten all this glory. But what were all this glory of his riches, if, for want of children, Haman should leave it to those, Quos vel nescit, vel nolit, as Austin hath it, to strangers or enemies? He tells them therefore Quicquid non acquiritur damnum est. Sen. De C. D. l. 5. c. 18.

Of the multitude of his children] His sonnes and his successours like to be. I say, likely to be, not sure to be, for Omnia sunt hominum tenui pendentia filo.

God gave Leda, Luctuosam fœcunditatem, as Hierom saith of her, a sorrowful fruitfulnesse, because she lived to bury her many children. There were two and twenty children, and childrens children of the House of Portugal, betwixt Philip the second of Spain, and that Crown; and yet he out-lived them all, as Histories shew, and his successours held that Kingdome till within these few years. It is but a vain thing therefore for a man to boast of the multitude of children, sith he may either lose them, or live to wish as Augustus the Emperour did, Oh that I had either lived a Batchelour, or died childelesse! Epist 7. Balthas Exner. Utinam aut cœlebs vixissem, aut orbus periissem.

And all the things wherein the King had promoted him] Wherein, but Wherefore, he sheweth not. Dignity should wait upon desert; but many times we see it otherwise, and it was of old complained of, Psal. 12. ult. He telleth what the King had done for him, but not a tittle what God. God was not in all his thoughts. He might justly have been twitted, as once that Pope was pithily, when he had engraven upon the gates of his new-built Colledge. Utrecht (where he was borne) planted me, Lovain (where he was bred) watered me; but Cesar (who had promoted him to the Popedome) gave increase: a merry Passenger under-wrote Hic Deus nihil fecit, here God did nothing. God had done much for him, but for a mischief to him; as he once gave the Israelites quailes to choke them, and a King to vex them; as Saul gave Michal to David to be a snare to him; and as our Saviour gave Judas the bag, to discover the rottennesse of his heart. This Bernard calleth, Misericordiam omni indignatione crudeliorem. God gives outward blessings to wicked persons to furnish their enditement out of them: as Joseph put a cup into his brethrens sack, to pick a quarrel with them, and lay theft to their charge.

And how he had advanced him above the Princes] What an impudent Thraso was this Haman? this odious bragging of his, Gregory referreth to that third kinde of pride, such as Gods soule abhorreth, and surely punisheth; as he did in the Prince of Tyre, Nebuchadnezzar, Antiochus, Herod, whose hearts were lifted up with their estates, as a boat, that riseth with the rising of the water; whose bloods and goods rose together. Lib. 25. Moral.

Corde fiat inflato, pauper honore dato.

But as the Peacock so delighteth to be seen, and to behold his own taile, that he discovereth his filthy parts behinde, so do vain-glorious Bragadochio's. It is therefore very good counsel, that a grave Divine giveth to such, as are advanced above others.

Carry

Carry humble hearts, and adde grace and vertue to your places, elſe they ſhall prove but as an high gibbet to bring you to more diſgrace in this world, and torment in the next. That of the Poet alſo is very ſavoury and ſoveraign.

Whateleys Archetype.

Claudian.

Deſinat elatis quiſquam confidere rebus:
Magna repentè ruunt, ſumma cadunt ſubitò.

Verſe 12. Haman ſaid moreover] He makes no end of vaunting and vapouring; and all to aggravate the indignity done him by Mordecai, in not ſtooping to ſo great a perſonage.

Now Eſther the Queen did let no man come in, — but my ſelfe] This he miſtaketh for a ſpecial favour, when as Eſthers banquet proved no better to him, then Semiramis her tomb did to them that rifled it; they expected to finde treaſure, but met with a deadly poiſon.

And to morrow am I invited, &c.] Where thou ſhalt (as hypocrites do at the Lords Table) eate thy bane, and drink thy poiſon; yet art thou over-joyed as if highly favoured. A temporary may receive both the word audible and the word viſible, (the Sacrament) with much ſeeming joy: which yet is but only as the commotion of the affections in a dream: It fareth with ſuch in the end, as with one that ſleeping on the top of a ſteep rock, dreameth of great matters befallen him, but ſtarting ſuddenly through joy thereof, tumbleth headlong into the ſea, and breaketh his neck at the bottom.

Verſe 13. Yet all this availeth me nothing] It is ſeldome ſeen, (ſaith a Right Reverend Interpreter here) that God allows unto the greateſt darlings of the world a perfect contentment. Something they muſt have to complaine of, that ſhall give an unſavoury verdure to their ſweeteſt morſels, and make their felicity miſerable. Totum hoc non eſt utile mihi, I enjoy nothing of all this. No more did Ahab, when ſick of Naboths vineyard, 1 Kings 21.4. His heart did more afflict and vex it ſelf with greedy longing for that bit of earth, then the vaſt and ſpacious compaſſe of a Kingdom could counter-comfort.

So long as I ſee Mordecai the Jew ſitting at the Kings gate] So tormentful is envy, if it cannot come at another mans hurt, it will feed upon its own. Who would ever ſet by the profits, pleaſures and preferments of this preſent life, that yield ſo little ſound and ſincere contentment to thoſe that have moſt of them? In the very purſuit of them is much anguiſh, many grievances, feares, jealouſies, diſgraces, interruptions, &c. and after the unſanctified enjoyment of them (if any ſuch thing there be, for even in laughter the heart is ſorrowful, Prov. 14.13. and there is a ſnare, (or a cord) in the ſin of the wicked, Prov.29.6. to ſtrangle their joy with) followeth the ſting of conſcience, that will inexpreſſibly torment the ſoule throughout all eternity: beſides the vexation of it, to ſee ſuch as Mordecai the Jew, whom they once would not have ſet with the dogs of their flocks, ſitting not at the Kings gate, but on Chriſts own Throne, Rev. 3.21. as Partakers of all his glory.

Verſe 14. Then ſaid Zereſh his wife] Thraſo's ſhall never want for Gnatho's. Such as have firſt flattered themſelves, ſhall have enow others to ſooth them, and to ſay with them. Zereſh ſets the motion of revenge on foot, ſhe was a fit helve for ſuch an hatcher, wittily wicked. The wit of women hath wont to be noted, for more ſudden and more ſhrewd.

And all his friends unto him] Indeed no friends, becauſe flatterers and furtherers in evil. Sed divitibus ideò amicus deeſt, quia nihil deeſt. The rich hath many friends, ſaith Solomon, ſeeming friends, but true enemies, paraſites, brokers, cole-carriers, good to ſcoure an hot Oven withal. Such a one was that Adullamite to Judah, Gen. 38.20. Jonadab to Ammon, 2 Sam. 13.2,3. thoſe green-headed counſellours to Rehoboam, &c. Haman ſhould have made a better choice, and have come more calme to counſel. It is not good ſowing in a tempeſt, nor taking phyſick in a fit. Theſe friends of Haman deſerved to ſpeed as ill as thoſe of Sejanus did, who were executed with him, becauſe they ſerved his luſt, and added fewel to his flame.

Let a Gallowes be made of fifty cubits high] A cubit was halfe a yard at leaſt. In thoſe parts they had trees very tall, or they might piece one to another. But why ſo high a Gallowes, but for the greater diſgrace to Mordecai, and terrour to all that ſhould ſlight the Kings Favourite? So Knute the firſt Danique King of England, cauſed the the false Edricks head to be set upon the highest part of the Tower of London. And our Gun-powder Traitours were served in like manner. Daniels hist. f. 19.

Daniels hiſt. fol. 19.

And to morrow] But why so soon, sith in case of life, Nulla cunctatio satis diuturna esse possit? were it not fit that he were tried first? Hamans malice will bear no delayes, he is in pain till the businesse be dispatched: he cannot sleep till he have caused this innocent man to fall, Prov. 4.16. though he fall with him, as the dragon doth with the Elephant, whose blood he sucketh out, and perisheth by his falling weight. Plin. l. 8 c 12.

Speak thou unto the King] It will be but dictum factum, he will lightly say as Zedekiah did to his Princes, requiring Jeremiah to the stocks. The King is not he that can deny you any thing. How much better that Romane Emperour, who being to subscribe a warrant for execution of a certain Malefactour, cried out, Non nisi coactus, full sore against my will? and another, Utinam literas nescirem, I would I could not write my name. So when one Jone Butcher was to be burned for her deserts, all the Council could not prevail with our Edward the sixth, of a long time to set to his hand. But these wicked friends of Haman, question not the Kings readinesse to gratifie him, though they could not but know, that Mordecai had once at least saved the Kings life, chap. 2. and what could they tell, but the King might now remember it? Sed Deus quem destruere dementat, when God has a minde to undoe a man, he first infatuateth him. Act. & Mon. 1177.

That Mordecai may be hanged thereon] And that before Hamans door, that he may feed his eyes on that sweet spectacle, and say as that bloody Prince Charles the ninth of France did, when he saw the noble Admirals carcasse hanging and stinking upon the Gallowes, Quam suaviter olet cadaver inimici! How sweetly smelleth the dead body of an enemy! Ep. hist. Gall. 150, 151.

Then go thou in merrily with the King, &c.] They knew that he could not be heartily merry till then, and forced smiles are but as counterfeit complexion, the hypocrisie of mirth. So Richard the third would not sit down to dinner till the Lord Hastings were beheaded: nor Stephen Gardiner, till he had the newes brought him that the Bishops were burnt at Oxford. Oh that we could be as restlesse, till the hindrances of our true spiritual joy were removed; I mean those stubborn corruptions that will not stoop to the power of grace. Act. & Mon. f. 1692.

And the thing pleased Haman] As being agreeable to his malicious humour, and that which he doubted not to be able to effect. Man purposeth, but God disposeth.

And he caused the Gallowes to be made] Little thought he for whom. Æquum est ut faber quas fecit compedes ipse gestet. So let thine enemies perish, O Lord.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. On that night]

THat very night before Mordecai should have been hang'd on the morrow morning, and so early that Esther could not have begged his life, would she never so faine. God will appeare for his poor people. ἐν τῷ καιρῷ, in the nick and opportunity of time, 1 Pet. 5. 6. He will be seen in the Mount, he will come as out of an Engine.

Could not the King sleep] Heb. the Kings sleep fled away, and, like a shadow, it fled away so much the faster, as it was more followed. Sleep is best solicited by neglect, and soonest found, when we have forgotten to seek it. They are likeliest for it, who together with their clothes can put off their cares: and say as Lord Burleigh did when he threw off his gown, Lie there Lord Treasurer. This, great Ahashuerus cannot do at present, (for Crowns also have their cares, thistles in their armes, and thornes in their sides) Lo, he that commanded one hundred and twenty seven Provinces cannot command an hours sleep; how should he when as sleep is Gods gift, Psal. 127.2? And it was he that at this time kept him awake for excellent ends; and put small thoughts into his heart for great purpose, like as he did into our Henry the eighth, when the Bishop of Baion (the French Ambassadour) coming to consult with him about a marriage between the Lady Mary and the Duke of Orleans, cast a scruple into his mind, which rendred him restlesse. Whether Mary were legitimate, &c. Life and death of Card. Wolsey 65.

If it were his ſurfetting and drunkenneſſe the day before that hindred Ahaſhuerus from ſleeping, (habent enim hoc ebrii, ut neque dormiant, neque vigilent) Gods goodneſſe appeareth the more, in turning his ſinne to the good of the Church. Venenum aliquando pro remedio fuit, ſaith Seneca, He can make of a poiſonful viper an wholeſome treacle: and by an Almighty Alchymy draw good out of evil.

lin.

And he commanded to bring the book of records] Perhaps ſome ſpecial Notes or Commentaries, written for the Kings own uſe; as M. Aurelius had his τὰ εἰς ἑαυτόν. Julius Cæſar had his Commentaries written with his own hand, and for the help of his own memory. Tamerlane had the like book, wherein he read a great part of the night, before the mortal battel between him and Bajazet.

πομνήματα.

urk. hiſt.

Of the Chronicles] Perhaps, beſides the former book of remembrances, or elſe the ſame; Librum Commentariorum, Chronica, as Tremelius rendreth it, the book of Commentaries, even the Chronicles; but the Vulgar and Tygurine make them ſeveral books.

And they were read before the King] Perhaps as a Recipe, to bring on ſleep, or at leaſt to deceive the time; and yet it may be too for a better purpoſe, viz. to better his knowledge, and to rub up his memory, that dignity might wait upon deſert: as it did in Tamerlanes time, who kept a catalogue of their names who had beſt deſerved of him, which he daily peruſed, oftentimes ſaying, that day to be loſt, wherein he had not done ſomething for them. This Ahaſhuerus had not yet done for Mordecai, who therefore haply held with the Poet.

urk. hiſt. 227.

Omnia ſunt ingrata nihil feciſſe benignè eſt.

ſet us gratia ormire. Pind. er rarò grati periuntur. ic.

But God was not unrighteous to forget his work and labour of love, Heb. 6. 10. though men were unthankful.

Verſe 2. And it was found written] It was God who directed the Reader to that very place: like as he did the Eunuch to Eſay 53. 7, 8. where reading of the meekneſſe of Jeſus Chriſt, he was transformed into the ſame image; as was likewiſe Johannes Iſaac a Jew, converted by reading the ſame chapter. Hoc ego ingennè profiteor, ſaith he, Caput illud ad fidem Chriſti me adduxiſſe. This I confeſſe ingenuouſly, that lighting upon that chapter, I was brought thereby to the faith of Chriſt. Auſtin thought he heard a voice, ſaying, Tolle, lege, take up the Bible and reade: accordingly he took it up, and opening it, fell upon that text in the Romanes, chap. 13, 14. which was the main meanes of his Converſion.

That Mordecai had told of Bigthana, &c.] See chap. 2. 21.

Verſe 3. And the King ſaid, What honour and dignity hath been done to Mordecai for this?] Lyra ſaith that he had waited ſix yeares for a reward, and had none. In Princes Courts men are ſure to meet with two evils, Ἀναβολὴ and Μεταβολὴ, not ſo in heaven. The Butler forgate Joſeph. Solomon ſpeaketh of a poor wiſe man, who by his wiſdome delivered the City, yet no man remembred that ſame poor man, Eccl. 9. 15. This is merces mundi, the worlds wages. Mordecai had ſaved the Kings life, and yet is unrewarded. The Kings of Perſia uſed to be very bountiful to thoſe that had well deſerved of them, or of the Common-wealth: calling ſuch Oroſanga, and ſetting down both their names and their acts in the Chronicles, as Herodotus teſtifieth. Among the reſt he mentioneth one Phylacus, Qui inter benè de rege meritos aſcriptus eſt, & multo tractu ſoli donatus, who was put upon record for his good ſervice to the King, and rewarded with a great deal of land given him. Others had great ſtore of gold and ſilver, and a gallant houſe, as Democedes Crotoniates the Phyſician, who cured Darius, had at Suſis. It is well known out of Xenophon, what rich gifts Cyrus gave to his friends and followers, chains of gold, armelets, bridles boſſed with gold, Perſian Stoles, called Doropherice, &c. Herodotus telleth us, that this Ahaſhuerus (alias Xerxes) gave Megabyzus for his good ſervice at Babylon, a golden Mill weighing ſix talents. Plutarch writeth, that he gave Themiſtocles above two hundred talents, and three Cities beſides, (viz. Magneſia, Lampſacus and Myuntis) to finde him food, and for clothing and furniture two more, viz. Percos and Paleſcepſis. How came it then to paſſe that good Mordecai was ſo forgotten? Surely it was a great fault in this ungrateful King, but Gods holy hand was in it, that Mordecai ſhould not have no preſent recompence, but that it ſhould be deferred till a fitter opportunity, when God might be

erod. l. 8.

erod. l. 3.

ib. 8 Cyrop.

lut. in Themiſt.

more glorified in the preſervation of his people, and deſtruction of their enemies. Let us not therefore be weary of well-doing: for (however men deal by us) we ſhall be ſure to reap in due ſeaſon if we faint not, Gal. 6. 9. God beſt ſeeth when a mercy will be moſt ſweet and ſeaſonable. When his people are low enough, and the enemy high enough, then uſually it appeareth, that there is a God that judgeth in the earth, and a rich reward for the righteous. Men may neither remunerate nor remember the good turnes we have done them: but there is a book of remembrance written before the Lord for all them that feare him, and that think upon his name, Mal. 3. 16. See my Treatiſe on that text, called, The Righteous mans Recompence, annexed to my Comment upon the Small Prophets.

Then ſaid the Kings ſervants] The Eunuches or Gentlemen of the bed-chamber: ingenuous men they were, and not diſaffected to Mordecai, whom yet they could not but know to be a great eye-ſore to Prince Haman. Si juvenes iſti vulgari invidentiæ morbo laborâſſent, ſaith Lavater. If theſe young men had been ſick of that common diſeaſe of envy, they would have extenuated his good ſervice, and have ſaid, Mordecai is a deſpiſed Jew, a ſtranger, a captive. If he revealed the conſpiracy, he did but his duty, and provided thereby well for his own ſafety. Is it not reward enough that he lives, and at Court, where he hath a place, an office, &c? Courtiers, we know, love not to have others come over their heads, but think all loſt which themſelves acquire not, as Seneca ſaith Sejanus did. We know how it was in the Courts of Pharaoh, Saul, Herod. That's a rare commendation that is given by Xenophon of Cyrus his courtiers, that though a man ſhould ſeek or chooſe blindfold, he could not miſſe of a good man. Davids Court might very well be ſuch, Pſal. 101. and Queen Elizabeths, and George Prince of Anhalts, of whom Melanthon writeth, that his chamber was Eccleſia, Academia, Curia, a Church, an Univerſity, and a Court, Paleſtra pietatis & literarum; as Tremelius ſaith of Cranmers family, a School of Piety and Learning.

Quicquid non acquiritur damnum eſt.

Ἔνθα κέρμα οὐ βάλλῃ τίς ἐκ ἀν ἀμάρτοι τὸ ἀργύριον. Cyrop. l. 8.

Ep. Præf. Enarr. in Hoſ.

There is nothing done for him] And yet the Apocryphal Additions, chap. 12. ver. 5, 6. ſay otherwiſe.

Verſe 4. And the King ſaid, Who is in the Court] Joſephus ſaith, that he firſt asked, What a clock it was, and underſtanding that it was morn-light, (for ſo long he had heard his ſervants reade, and till then it was not that Mordecai's matter was mentioned, Haman being now ready to get a warrant for his execution) he asked, Who's there without? as desirous to proceed by counſel in a buſineſſe of that conſequence.

Now Haman was come, &c.] He was early up, (and at Court for a miſchief) but never the nearer, ſave only to his own utter ruine.

To ſpeak to the King to hang Mordecai] Which till it were done, he could neither ſleep in quiet, nor eat with comfort. Little conſidered he how the Gallowes groaned for himſelf. The righteous is delivered out of trouble, and the wicked cometh in his ſtead, Prov. 11. 8.

Vivit adhuc Chriſtus, regnat, regnabit & uſque:
Atque hoſtes omnes ſub ditione premit.

Verſe 5. Behold Haman ſtandeth in the Court] For into the Preſence he might not come uncalled. And to be thus called in he held it no ſmall happineſſe; but was ſoon confuted. He came into the room (as men come to a Lottery) with his head full of hopes, but he went thence with his heart full of blanks.

And the King ſaid, let him come in] See here, ſaith Merlin, a ſweet and ſpecial Providence of God in this, that Ahaſhuerus ſhould take advice about honouring Mordecai, and not of his ſervants that attended upon his perſon, but of Haman then preſent, (though for another purpoſe) and, concealing the man he meant, ſhould make Haman ſay what was fit to be done, and then do it accordingly. Neither the King nor his ſervants likely, would ever have thought of doing Mordecai ſo great honour as Haman preſcribed. See here, as in a mirrour, how the Lord by a ſecret Providence bringeth about, and over-ruleth the wiles of men, their affaires, times, counſels, words and ſpeeches, to the fulfilling of his own Will and Decree; and this, when they think leaſt of doing Gods Will, or ſerving his Providence.

Verſe 6. So Haman came in] Merry and jocund, but went out ſad and heavy-hearted. Theſe hoaſts (profit, pleaſure and preferment) though they welcom us into our Inne with ſmiling countenances, yet if we watch them not, they will cut our throats in our beds.

Speed. Walsingham. It is obſerved of Edward the third, that he had alwayes faire weather at his paſſage into France, and foule upon his return. Pharaoh had faire weather till he was in the heart of the red ſea. The Sun ſhone faire upon the earth that morning that Lot came out of Sodom, but ere night there was a diſmal change. He that lives in the height of the worlds blandiſhments, is not far from deſtruction.

And the King ſaid unto him, What ſhall be done, &c.] Though the King knew of no difference betwixt Haman and Mordecai (ſaith a grave Interpreter) yet he ſuppreſſeth Mordecai's name: and thus the Lord by his Providence brought it about, that even Haman himſelf ſhould, to his greater vexation, appoint the honours that ſhould be done to Mordecai, and that at a time when he was come to deſire of the King that he might be hanged, and with full aſſurance that he ſhould have obtained his deſire. Mr. Jackſon.

Now Haman thought in his heart] Heb. ſaid in his heart; the language whereof God very well underſtood: and here uttereth, to the perpetual ſhame of this monſtrous Ambitioniſt.

To whom would the King delight to do honour more then to my ſelf?] Ambition (as they ſay of the Crocodile) groweth as long as it liveth; and ſelf-love, like to a good ſtomack, draws to it ſelf what nouriſhment it liketh, and caſts off that which offends it. It maketh men unreaſonable, and teacheth them to turne the glaſſe to ſee themſelves bigger, others leſſer then they are. Herodotus reporteth, that after the Greeks had got the better of this Xerxes and his Perſians, and came together to divide the ſpoile, when it was put to the queſtion, who of all the Commanders had deſerved the beſt and chief reward? none would yield to other, but every man thought himſelf beſt deſerving, and ſecond to none. In the battel at Belgrade, where Mahomet the great Turk was beaten and driven out of the field, Capiſtranus and Hunniades were the Chieftaines there. And whereas both of them wrote the relation of that dayes work, neither of them ſo much as once mentioned the other, (though both of them had done their parts gallantly,) but each one took the whole praiſe of it to himſelfe. Haman, though altogether unworthy of the leaſt reſpect, yet holds himſelf beſt worthy of the greateſt honours, and therefore will be ſure to be no niggard in adviſing thoſe ceremonies of honour, which he preſumes meant to his own perſon. Herod. l. 8. Æn. Sylv.

Verſe 7. And Haman anſwered the King] After a ſhort pauſe, he had his anſwer ready; but making a bridge of his own ſhadow, he ſoon fell into the brook. Ambition rideth without reines, and like thoſe horſes, Amos 6.11. runneth upon the rocks, where firſt ſhe breaks her hooſes, and then her neck. It ſeemeth by that which followeth, that Haman aſpired to the Kingdome: why elſe did he ask the Crown-royal, and the Kings horſe, &c? When David would declare Solomon his ſucceſſour in the Kingdom, he ſet him upon his own mule, 1 Kings 1.33. But Haman little thought that thoſe his high hopes ſhould end in a rope. So did Hanno's the Carthaginian, and Roger Mortimers in King Edward the ſecond his time, and the falſe Edrick in King Knute's dayes: and laſtly Hadrian de Caſtello, an Italian Legate, made by King Henry the ſeventh, Biſhop of Hereford, who conſpired with Alphonſo Petruccio, and other ſacred Cardinals, to murther Pope Leo the tenth, induced thereunto by the ſuggeſtion of a witch, who foretold him, that one Hadrian an old man, of mean Parentage, of great learning and wiſdome, ſhould ſucceed in the Papacy; the man (Haman-like) thought it muſt needs be himſelf: but another Hadrian Schoolmaſter to Charles the fifth proved to be the man: and this our Hadrian loſt by deprivation all his promotions whatſoever, (for his life could not be come at) for his nefarious attempt. Paul. Jovius.

For the man whom the King delighteth to honour] Heb. In whoſe honour the King delighteth. And what will not delight do whether in good or evil? See the Note on Micah 7.18.

Verſe 8. Let the royal apparel be brought, &c.] This was very glorious and gorgeous; as is to be ſeen in Xenophon, Plutarch, Lucian, Dion, Chryſoſtome, and other good Authours. The Perſian Kings wore on their heads an upright Tiare or Turbant very ſumptuous; a Diademe alſo made of white and purple colour. On their bodies a rich purple Stole, or robe of State, reaching down to the heeles: this Curtius calleth pallam Perſicam, a Perſian Pall, beſet with gold and precious ſtones, great ſtore, and the pictures of wilde creatures and foules of the aire. Curtius deſcribing Xerxes his royal apparel, ſaith, that golden hawkes encountring one another with their beakes adorned his robe Xenoph. l. 8 Plut. l. 21. de fort. Alex. Luc. de navig. Dion. Orat. de Ierus. & lib Curt. l. 3. & 6.

made

made of cloth of gold. Beſides, they wore a rich Caſſock (called Candy) bound to them with a golden girdle, breeches alſo of ſcarlet, reaching to their knees; called therefore by the Greeks, Περισκελίδες, as Hierome teſtifieth. Ep. ad Fabi

And the horſe that the King rideth upon] The King of Perſia did alwayes ride, either on horſeback, or in a charet, and had one ſpecial horſe proper to himſelf, as had alſo David, 1 Kings 1.33. Alexander, Julius Cæſar, &c. At this day the better ſort in Perſia fight, buy, ſell, confer, and do all on horſeback. The difference between the Gentleman and the Peaſant is, that the Peaſant never rides, the Gentleman never goes on foot. Carwr. trav 63.

And the Crown-royal that is ſet upon his head] This was monſtrous ambition: appoint him the Kingdom alſo, might Ahaſhuerus have ſaid. Lyra noteth here, that Haman aſpired to the Kingdom, becauſe none but the King could have the Crown-royal ſet upon his head: wherefore the King alſo in anſwering to the things propounded by him, ſaith, Take the robe and the horſe as thou haſt ſaid, but of the Crown he maketh no mention. Some of the Hebrews by head here underſtand the horſes head; Nam apud Perſas ſolebat equus deferre diadema regni, the Kings horſe was wont to carry the royal Crown. Vatablus thinks this ſenſe not unlikely, becauſe the Crown is not mentioned, verſe 11. and this might alſo peradventure be the cuſtome and faſhion of Perſia, ſaith Diodate. Merlin noteth here, that Haman maketh no mention of rewards or gifts to be conferred upon him, becauſe he had wealth enough already, and deſired only more honours, inſtancing the utmoſt that could be done to any ſubject, in ſeeking whereof he miſerably failed.

Verſe 9. And let this apparel and horſe be delivered, &c.] All muſt be done in ampleſt manner: and if it had been done to himſelf as he deſired, what had all that been but a magnum nihil, as one ſaith, a great nothing, a glorious fancie, a rattle to ſtill his ambition for a while? He, ſimple man, had wrought himſelf into the fooles paradiſe of a ſublime dotage, like as the Spaniards have in their dream of a Catholick Monarchy, diviſitus debita, ſaith one, ſed in Utopia. They were laughed at agood by Captain Drake, and his company, when they took Santta Domingo. Anno 1585. and in the Town-Hall found the King of Spaines armes, and under them a Globe of the world, out of which aroſe a horſe with his fore-feet caſt forth with this Inſcription, Non ſufficit orbis. Pyrrhus, that ambitious King of Epirotes, had the like thought, but was ſlain at laſt with a tileſtone thrown upon his head by a woman. And a like evil end befel Cæſar Borgia, who in imitation of Julius Cæſar, would needs be, aut Cæſar, aut nullus, and ſoon after proved to be Et Cæſar, & nullus. Had Haman but contented himſelf with his preſent condition (too good for ſuch a Caitiffe) he might have lived in the worlds account happily, and have called himſelf as that French King did Treſheureuſe, thrice bleſſed, but that inſatiable thirſt after honour, that gluttonous exceſſive deſire after more and more greatneſſe undid him. So true is that Proverb of the Ancients, Turdus ipſe ſibi malum cacat, Of the black birds dung is made the lime wherewith he is taken, ſo out of the dung of mens ſinnes doth God make his lime-twigs of judgement to take them withal. Forte ampli fuiſſet, niſi v riras eſſet re ſuſpicione n tiquàm care Lavat.

To one of the Kings moſt noble Princes] Principibus majoribus paratiſſimis. This would be no ſmall addition to the honour of the man, and ſplendour of the day, like as it was here in England, when Henry the ſecond, at the Coronation of his eldeſt ſonne, renounced the name of a King for that day, and, as Sewer, ſerved at the Table.

That they may aray the man withal] Setting him forth to the greateſt advantage: as our Henry the ſixth did, when he crowned the Lord Beauch. mp King of the Iſle of Wight, and as Xerxes did Demaratus, when for honours ſake he granted him to enter into Sardis, the chief City of Aſia, arayed like himſelf, with a ſtraight Tiare upon his head, which none might wear but Kings only. Sen. l. 6. de

Through the ſtreet of the City] Of Suſa, that he might be ſeen and cried up by many, for Honor eſt in honorante. As the Meteor liveth in the aire, ſo doth honour in the breath of other men. Plato reckoneth it among thoſe dei Indibria quæ ſurſum ac deorſum ſub cœlo feruntur, like tennis-balls bandied up and down from one to another.

Verſe 10. Then the King ſaid to Haman] The King had no intent herein to enſnare Haman, or croſſe his humour, but God had a hand in it for the effecting of his own ends, which cannot but be ever exceeding good, ſith his will is not only recta but regula.

Make haſte, and take the aparel, and the horſe, &c.] Here was no time left him of deliberation, or liberty of contradiction, diſpute he muſt not, but diſpatch what was given him in charge. Had he had but the leaſt breathing-while, that ſtepping out of the preſence he might have conſidered with himſelfe, or conſulted with his friends, he would either have fained himſelf ſick, or found ſome other excuſe, that he might not have done his enemy this honour. But God had ſo ordered it, and the King commanded it to be done forthwith; it was not therefore for Haman, vel reſponſare, vel repugnare, to chat or chafe, unleſſe he would run the hazard of all; for, Where the word of a King is, there is power; and who may ſay unto him, What doſt thou?

And do even ſo to Mordecai the Jew] This word ſtabb'd Haman to the heart, who had run many great hazards doubtleſſe to dominere in his undeſerved dignities, and now muſt perforce honour him whom he had hoped to have hanged; cloath him whom he hoped to have ſtripped; help him up to his horſe, upon whoſe grave he hoped to have danced; prepare a triumph for him, for whom he had prepared a tree; make Proclamation before him as a Crier, lead his horſe as a Lacquey, do all offices for him as a ſlave or underling: Oh what a cut, what a Cordolium was this to a man of his metal and making! It was wonder his heart burſt not, as did Achitophels, for pride ſo ſwelleth the ſoul many times, that it breaketh the caſe, the body I mean, and endeth the life: but this had been here to have ſaved the Hangman a labour. But baſe ſpirits will buckle, and fall down to riſe, crouch and creep to mount, &c.

That ſitteth at the Kings gate] There you ſhall have him, and ſee that you miſtake him not. Haman knew him well enough by his ſtiffeneſſe and ſtoutneſſe, and wiſhed him of all the men in the world out of the world.

Let nothing faile of all that thou haſt ſpoken] Perquàm hoc durum eſt, ſed ita lex ſcripta eſt, ſaith the Civil Lawyer, this was an hard ſaying, and as hard meat to Hamans ſtomack that would ill go down, but there was no help for it, himſelf had adviſed it, and muſt therefore ſpeedily execute it. Lata negligentia dolus eſt, ſayes the Lawyer: remiſſeneſs is a kinde of perfidiouſneſſe. Excuſes would have been conſtrued for refuſals, delayes for denials, &c.

Verſe 11. Then took Haman the aparel, &c.] Full ſore againſt ſtomack be ſure, But how could he help it? Thus God compelleth the devil and his limbes ſometimes, though againſt their wills, to ſerve him and his ſervants, Canes linguunt ulcera Lazari: Saul pronounceth David more righteous then he; Judas and Pilate give teſtimony to Chriſts innocency. Theſe are the ſervants of the High God, which ſhew unto us the way of ſalvation, ſaid the Pythoniſſe concerning Paul and his companions, Acts 16. 17.

And arayed Mordecai] Whoſe heart he could rather have torne out, and eaten it with ſalt. But Courtiers are uſually notable Diſſemblers, cunning Politicians, &c. How buſie is Haman now about Mordecai to aray him, to mount him, and to attend upon him, whom yet he hated and inwardly curſed to the pit of hell? Cavete ab oſculo Iſcariotico, ab officio Hamanitico. Beware of men, Matth. 10. Joſephus telleth us, that when Haman came to do theſe things to Mordecai, he (thinking that he had mocked him) anſwered with indignation, Thou moſt wicked man, doeſt thou thus inſult over the miſerable. But when he had told him, that indeed it was the Kings pleaſure, he ſuffered him to do it. But what ſhall we ſay to reconcile thoſe croſſe paſſions in Ahaſhuerus? Before he ſigned that decree of killing all the Jewes, he could not but know that a Jew had ſaved his life: and now after that he had enacted the ſlaughter of all the Jewes as rebels, he giveth order to honour a Jew as his Preſerver. It were ſtrange (ſaith a right Reverend Writer hereupon) if great perſons in the multitude of their diſtractions, ſhould not let fall ſome incongruities. r. Hall.

And brought him on horſeback] Whom before he could not endure to ſee ſitting at the Court-gate. A great trouble it was to Haman to lead Mordecai's horſe, which another man would not have thought ſo, the moving of a ſtraw troubleth proud fleſh, &c.

Thorough the ſtreets of the City] Where all men were now in an amazement at that ſudden glory of Mordecai, and ſtudy how to reconcile this day with the thirteenth of Adar.

And

And proclaimed before him] Not without an honourable mention made of his loyalty and fidelity to the King, the cauſe of that great honour. This Haman was forced to proclaim, and that on foot as a ſervant: when Mordecai as a Prince in his ſtate was on horſeback. It is probable, that Haman thought within himſelf, that he ſhould ſhortly have his penniworths of that vile varlet, whom now he thus far honoured, and that haply ere night yet, at the feaſt, he might prevaile with the King to do by Mordecai, as once he did by his Steerſman, when he came back with ſhame and loſſe from his warres with Greece. He was forced, ſaith the Hiſtory, to flie back in a poor Fiſhers boat: which being over-burdened had ſunk all, if the Perſians by caſting away themſelves had not ſaved the life of their King: the loſſe of which noble ſpirits ſo vexed him, that having given the Steerſman a golden Coronet for preſerving his own life, he commanded him to execution as a Co-Authour of the death of his ſervants.

Verſe 12. And Mordecai came again to the Kings gate] No whit over-joyed of his new honour, or puffed up thereby (as many would have been, a ſmall winde bloweth up a bubble) only he conceiveth hope thereby of a better condition, and taketh every former mercy for a pledge of a future: this experience breedeth confidence. He doth not ruſh into the Court at his return, and reach after an higher room, but came again to the Kings gate, where his office was, and his buſineſſe lay: he took up alſo, as ſome think, his old habit again: (the Kings apparel and horſe being reſtored to the right owner, he had as little delight in it, as David once had of Sauls armour;) but it is rather probable, ſaith an Expoſitour, that he now left that off, being full of hope, that as God had heard his prayers, to bring him out of danger, and to high honour: ſo he ſhould now, be able to help his brethren the Jewes out of theirs alſo. Mean-while he doth not envie his ſuperiours, inſult over his inferiours, trouble his equals, threaten his enemies, &c. but committeth himſelf and all his affairs to Gods good pleaſure and Providence: and this is the guiſe of a godly man, *Pſal.*131.1,2.

But Haman haſted to his houſe mourning] Or, vexed at heart, fretting within himſelfe, that he was ſo very much diſappointed. Merrily he made account to have gone to the Queens feaſt, when he had firſt truſſed up Mordecai. Of which not only miſſing, but made to do him publike honour in that ſort, and that by his own direction, this gall'd him and grieved him above meaſure; ſo bladder-like is the foul of an unregenerate man, that filled with earthly vanities, though but winde, it growes great, and ſwells in pride: but if prick't with the leaſt pin of piercing grief, it ſhriveleth to nothing.

And having his head covered] With his cap pulled over his eyes, as aſhamed to look any one in the face. See, *2Sam.*15.30. *Jer.*14.4.

Verſe 13. And Haman told Zereſh his wife, and all his friends] Expecting comfort and counſel from them, but they read him his deſtiny, and adde to his grief and deſparation: letting him know, that his ſtate was ſuch, as that there was neither hope of better, nor place of worſe: a juſt hand of God upon ſuch an hard-hearted wretch, that had plotted the ruine of ſo many innocents. And this his wife and friends, had they done well, ſhould have minded him of, and ſtirred him up to repent of his wickedneſſe againſt God, the cauſe of his preſent wretchedneſſe, to be reconciled to Mordecai, whom he and they plainly ſaw to be Gods Favourite, and now the Kings alſo) to take down that ugly Gallowes, (that there were no further notice taken of it) the evidence and enſign of his inſufferable pride, and their unſavoury counſel, to get the decree for the Jewes Maſſacre reverſed or countermanded, &c. But not a word find we of any thing this way tending. Graceleſſe people neither have God in their heads, Pſal. 10.4. nor hearts, *Pſal.*14.1. nor words, *Pſal.*12.4. nor wayes, *Tit.*1.16. but ſtand in a poſture of diſtance, nay defiance: walking contrary to him, and therefore he alſo to cry quittance, walketh contrary to them, *Lev.*26. ſhewing himſelf as froward as they for the hearts of them, *Pſal.*18.26.

Every thing that had befallen him] The ſad accidents of that day, nothing now (as once, *chap.*5.11.) boaſteth he to them of the glory of his riches, and multitude of his children, and how the King had advanced him above all his other Courtiers. Hamans crowing was now turned into crying, &c.

Then ſaid his wiſe men] Wizards haply, ſuch as he made uſe of when he caſt Pur for a luckie day, and into whoſe mouthes the devil might put this anſwer. It is his uſe to bring bring his impes into the briars, and there to leave them, as he did Saul, (whoſe Funeral Sermon he preached, and Judas, Julian, Valens and others.

And Zereſh his wife ſaid unto him] She is noted for a prudent woman; but here ſhe proves as cold a comforter, as before ſhe had been an evil counſellour.

If Mordecai be of the ſeed of the Jewes] A Nation noted for dear to God, often delivered by him, and that had alſo the faculty of gaining the good-will of Princes, by their excellent vertues, as it had been ſeen in Daniel and his companions, in Jechoniah, Zerubbabel, Ezra, Nehemiah, and the whole Nation, ſo graciouſly licenſed by Cyrus to return into their own Countrey. It is a good Note that one gives here, A Jew may fall before a Perſian, and get up and prevail: but if a Perſian, or whoſoever of the Gentiles begin to fall before a Jew, he can neither ſtay nor riſe, &c.

Thou ſhalt not prevaile againſt him] But why did they not tell him this before, ſith they knew as well as Haman, that Mordecai was of the ſeed of the Jewes, and therefore adviſed him to prepare ſuch a huge Gallowes? Surely, he that had ſo flattered himſelf, deſerved to be ſo flattered and undone by others: he that had given ſo evil counſel to the King againſt the Jewes, deſerved by ſuch evil counſellours to be caſt into ſtraits, and have no hand to help him out; they lead him to his bane, and there leave him: as familiars do their witches, when they have once brought them into fetters.

But ſhalt ſurely fall before him] Thus is Haman judged of all, condemned by all, and this with ſo great aſſurance of ſuch an event, as if they had ſeen it. Utique coram eo concides. Thou ſhalt ſurely fall before him, and that irrecoverably: as Eli fell, and as thoſe idolaters are threatened, Amos 8.14. The Hebrew is, falling thou ſhalt fall, viz. to the loweſt and utmoſt ebbe of diſgrace and miſery, πεσὼν πεσῇ. ἄλγεα πάσῃ.

Verſe 14. And while they were yet talking with him] But could not yield him one word of comfort. He hoped haply that they would have found out for him ſome good occaſion, ſome mean of ſupplanting Mordecai, now his Corival and Counter-factioniſt, and of incenſing the King againſt him, that he might build upon his ruines. But the hope of unjuſt men ſhall periſh, Prov.11.7. (Etiam ſpes valentiſſimo perit, ſo ſome render it,) and themſelves with it. As Haman had not one to ſpeak for him, when the King frowned upon him: ſo here he hath not one to ſpeak to his heart, or to ſhoare him up, now that he is upon the fall. Thoſe that before took crafty counſel againſt Gods people, and conſulted againſt his hidden ones, *Pſal.*83.3. are now at their wits end, as ſeeing themſelves taken (as wilde beaſts in a ſnare,) in their own craftineſſe, yea, they are mad for the ſight of their eyes, which that day they ſhould ſee, *Deut.*28.34.

ἐφρόνησεν G. 1 Cor. 3.19.

Came the Kings Chamberlaines, and haſted to bring Haman] Heb. and hurried and headlonged in a turbulent manner: for it may be the King and Queen tarried for him. Could he have been any way excuſed, he had no ſuch minde to have gone. For his ſtomack was full, and what if he ſhould meet Mordecai the new Favourite there, and ſee him ſet above him? But now it is no time to conſult further with friends, or caſt perils by himſelf. Harbonah haſteneth him, having firſt taken notice of the lofty Gallowes, and (as Joſephus ſaith) asked of one of the ſervants of the houſe what it meant, and for whom it was prepared? See *chap.*7.9.

*Lib.*11.*c.*6.

Unto the banquet that Eſther had prepared] That fatal feaſt, Ubi manducaret quod apud inferos digereret, where his meat in his bowels was turned, it became the gall of aſpes within him, Job 20.14. why then ſhould any Saint envy the wicked man his fed bits, his murthering morſels? is not his meat ſawced, his drink ſpiced with the bitter wrath of God? Adoniah's feaſt ended in horrour: the eares of his gueſts were filled, (becauſe their bellies had prepared deceit, Job 15.35.) with the ſound of thoſe trumpets, which at once proclaim Solomons triumph, and their confuſion. Ever after the meale is ended, comes the reckoning; but at this banquet of Eſther it came before, *chap.*7.2. And Haman ſped not ſo well as Cæſar Borgia's Nobles, whom he invited to a feaſt, and after they had well dined, he cut off their heads.

Au guſt.

CHAP.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. So the King and Haman came to the banquet.] HEb. to drink, for multorum vivere eſt bibere: and profane perſons have a Proverb; Bibere & ſudare eſt vita Cardiaci: Such are your chamber-Champions: whoſe teeth in a temperate aire, do beat in their heads at a cup of cold ſack and ſugar. Belſhazzars feaſt-dayes were called σαββατα ἀνομα: becauſe he was quaffing in the bowles of the Sanctuary, to the honour of Shac or Bacchus. Little did either he or Haman think, that in the fulneſſe of their ſufficiency, they ſhould be in ſuch ſtraits, and that every hand of the troubleſome ſhould come upon him: that when they were about to fill their bellies, God ſhould caſt the fury of his wrath upon them, and raine it upon them whiles they were drinking, Job 20.22,23. But, this is the portion of a wicked man from God, and the heritage appointed unto him by God, verſe 29. Why then ſhould any Saint be ſick of the fret, at the proſperity of the ungodly? ſurely, as fiſhes are taken in an evil net, and as birds are caught in a ſnare, ſo are ſuch ſnared in an evil time, when it falleth ſuddenly upon them; Eccleſ. 9.12. Of Eſthers invitation Haman might have ſaid, as he did of the gifts one ſent him, Greg. Poſtbu Munera magna quidem mittit ſed mittit in hamo. Martial.

But he knew not yet what evil was toward him; though I doubt not but his conſcience, (if not altogether dead and dedolent) began by this time to ſtare him in the face; his friends having already read his deſtiny.

Verſe 2. And the King ſaid again unto Eſther] He was very deſirous to know what her ſuit was; and with thought thereof, as it may ſeem, could not reſt the night before. He purſueth his deſires, not a little edged by her delayes; neither was he of thoſe lusks, who

Remque aliquam exoptant, intabeſcúntque relictâ.

His love to Eſther made him ask again, What is thy petition, and what is thy requeſt, &c? He preſſeth her to ſpeak out, ſo doth God his Suppliants. Hitherto ye have asked nothing, ask that your joy may be full. Pray that ye may joy; ye are not ſtraitened in me, but in your own bowels: as if no water come by the conduit, it is not becauſe there is none in the ſpring, but becauſe the pipes are broken. See the Note on chapter 5. 6.

Verſe 3. Then Eſther the Queen, &c.] See chapter 5.7,8. As Abigail, her family; and the woman of Abel, the City: ſo doth Eſther by her wiſdom and humility deliver her ſelf and her people, ducem ſequens lucem fidei, as one ſaith of her.

Let my life be given me at my Petition] Heb. my ſoule. See how diſcreetly ſhe marſhalleth her words: ſetting theſe two great requeſts in the head of her petition, which is ſimplex & non fucata, plain and downright. Truth is like our firſt Parents, moſt beautiful when naked. Our words in prayer muſt be neque lecta, neque neglecta, neither curious nor careleſſe; but as the words of Petitioners, plain and full, and direct to the point. Eſther reckoneth her ſelfe here among the reſt of her poor Countreymen; free among the dead, free of that company, and begs for her life and theirs together; becauſe hers was even bound up in theirs. Mortis habet vices quæ trahitur vitâ genitibus; to live after their death would be a lifeleſſe life; and hence her importunity for both together, ſith they were in her heart, ad commoriendum & convivendum, if they died ſhe could not live. Good blood will not belie it ſelfe. Eſther had not ſhewed her kindred and people till now, that ſhe muſt appear for them. See the like in Moſes, Heb. 11. 25. in Nicodemus that night-bird, John 7.51. he ſpeaks boldly and ſilences the whole company, John 19. he boldly beggeth the body of Jeſus; neither could he any longer conceal himſelf. Surely, as Solomon by trial found out the true harlot-mother; ſo doth God by hard times deſcry the affections of his people. Then, as Joſeph could not refrain teares, ſo nor they the exerciſe of their faith and charity. John 19.3

Verſe 4. For we are ſold] i. e. given up wholly into the power of the enemy, as that which a man hath bought with his money, is his own to diſpoſe of. She referres, doubtleſſe to the ſumme proffered by Haman, chap. 3.9. not fearing the face of ſo potent an enemy, nor going behind his back to ſet him out in his colours, yea, though her diſcourſe could not but ſomewhat reflect upon the King, who had given Haman his conſent.

I, and my people] She makes it a common cauſe, and ſaith to her Countreymen, as once David did to Abiathar, 1 Sam. 22.23. or, as Charles the fifth ſaid to Julius Peſtugius, who complained that he had been much wronged by the Duke of Saxony. Have a little patience, thy cauſe ſhall be my cauſe, neither will I ſit down till I have ſeen you ſome way righted. See verſe 3.

To be deſtroyed, to be ſlain, and to periſh] Theſe were the very words of that bloody decree which ſhe purpoſely maketh uſe of, that he might be ſenſible of what he had conſented to: and might ſee that ſhe complained not without cauſe. But what a caſe was Haman in at the hearing of this? and how did he now repent him, but too late, of ever having a hand in ſo bloody a buſineſſe? His iniquity was now full, and the bottle of his wickedneſſe filled up to the brim with thoſe bitter waters, was even about to ſink to the bottom. His Gallowes was finiſhed laſt night, and now it groaned hard for him, that he might be deſtroyed, ſlain and made to periſh.

——— Neque enim lex juſtior ulla eſt,
Quàm necis artifices arte perire ſuâ.

But if we had been ſold for bondmen and bondwomen] Though it had been an hard and ſad condition for a Queen, eſpecially (which yet was Hecuba's caſe and Zenobia's) yet it would not be grievous to them to ſacrifice their liberty to the ſervice of their life: the Gibeonites were glad they might live upon any termes, Joſh. 9.16. Maſters might ſlay their bondſervants, but that was counted a cruelty, and when one did it at Rome, he was amerced by the Cenſor: many times they were manumitted for their good ſervice, and came to great eſtates.

I had held my tongue] Silence is in ſome caſes a crying ſinne. Taciturnity, I confeſſe, is ſometimes a vertue, but not at all where it tends to the betraying of a good cauſe, or the detriment of the labouring Church. For Zions ſake I will not hold my peace, and for Jeruſalems ſake I will not reſt, &c. Eſay 62.1. Terentius that noble General told Valens the Arian Emperour, that he had abandoned the victory and ſent it to the enemy, by his perſecuting Gods people, and favouring hereticks. That was an excellent ſaying of Hierome to Vigilantius, Meam injuriam patienter tuli, &c. whiles the wrong thou didſt, reached only to my ſelf, I took it patiently, but thy wickedneſſe againſt God I cannot beare with: ſo was that of Occolampadius to Servetus, (blaming him for his ſharpneſſe to the ſelf-ſame purpoſe. And laſtly, that of Luther in a letter to his friend Staupitius. Inveniar ſanè ſuperbus, &c. Let me be accounted proud, peremptory, paſſionate, or what men pleaſe, ſo that I be not found guilty of a ſinful ſilence, when called to ſpeak for God.

Although the enemy could not countervaile the Kings damage] q. d. It is not his ten thouſand talents, ch. 3.9. nor all that he is worth, and ten more ſuch as he is, that can make up the loſſe, that the King is ſure to ſuſtain by the ſlaughter of the Jewes, a people painful and prayerful, (this, Darius made high account of, Ezra 6.16.) uſeful and profitable, careful to maintain good works in St. Pauls ſenſe, Tit. 3.8. that is, ſuch as were noted to exceed and excel others in witty inventions, to be their Craftſmaſters, and faithful to their truſt. Beſides, if they be taken away, great damage ſhall redound to the Kings revenue, by non-payment of toll, tribute and cuſtome, as thoſe Malignants could alledge, Ezra 4.12. a thing that Princes uſually are very ſenſible of. Or if there ſhould be lucrum in arca, yet there would be damnum in conſcientia, the foule blurre of blood-guiltineſſe would lie heavy, both upon the Kings conſcience, and his name among all Nations. The Vulgar rendreth this text thus, Nunc autem hoſtis noſter eſt, cujus crudelitas redundat in regem. And now he is our enemy, whoſe cruelty reflecteth upon the King. Tremelius thus, Sed non eſt hoſtis iſte utilis, damnoſus eſt regi; but now this enemy is no way profitable, but to the King diſadvantageous. This the King conſiders not, and the enemy cares not, ſo that he may ſerve his own turne, and ſatisfie his murtherous minde.

Verſe

Verſe 5. Then the King Ahaſhuerus anſwered, &c.] It ſeems he did not yet, by all that Eſther had ſaid, underſtand whom ſhe meant: ſo high an opinion he had of Haman his minion, the only ornament and bulwark of the Empire, the greateſt Publicola, and moſt eſteemed Patriot. The King therefore, as not thinking him ſo near hand, haſtily asketh, He ſaid and ſaid, (ſo the Heb. hath it) to the Queen.

Quis hic ipſe, & ubi hic ille?

Who is he, and where is he?] Who is that Sirrah, he, and where is that Sirrah, he? words of utmoſt indignation and readineſſe to be revenged: ſuch as were thoſe of Charles the fifth Emperour. If that Villaine were here (ſpeaking of Farneſius the Popes General, who had raviſhed certain Ladies) I would kill him with mine own hand: or thoſe of fiery Friar, who openly in the Pulpit at Antwerp, preaching to the people, wiſhed that Luther were there, that he might tear him with his teeth. But could this King poſſibly ſo ſoon forget what himſelf had not two moneths before granted to be done againſt Eſthers people, (which was with his right hand to cut off his left?) or did he not all this while know what Countrey-woman his beloved Eſther was? and might he not expect that the Hamaniſts ſhould come and take her forcibly from him to execution, by vertue of his own Edict, as Daniels adverſaries had dealt by him, though Darius laboured till the going down of the Sun to deliver him, but could not, Dan. 6. 14? and as Steven Gardiner and his Complices attempted to do by Queen Katherine Parre, had not her husband Henry the eighth rated them away, and graciouſly reſcued her out of their bloody fingers?

Petri Medul. Hiſt. Proſan. Eraſm ep. l. 16 ad obtrectat.

That durſt preſume in his heart to do ſo] Heb. Whoſe heart hath filled him to do ſo? Cujus cor perſuaſit ipſi, ſo Vatablus. Whoſe heart hath perſwaded him thus to do. The devil had filled Hamans heart, ſitting a brood thereon, and hatching there this horrid plot, Acts 5. 3. But (to do the devil right) Haman had ſuffered the Sun, (nay many Suns) to go down upon his wrath, and thereby given place to the devil, Eph. 4. 26, 27. Nemo ſibi de ſuo palpet (ſaith an Ancient) quiſque ſibi Satan eſt; Let no man deceive his own heart, each man is a Satan to himſelf; and though men bleſſe themſelves from having to do with the devil, and ſpet at his very name, yet they fetch not up their ſpettle low enough; they ſpet him out of their mouthes, but not out of their hearts, as being filled with all unrighteouſneſſe, fornication, wickedneſſe, covetouſneſſe, maliciouſneſſe; full of envy, murder, debate, deceit, malignity, Rom 1. 29. Hamans heart thus ſtuffed might well have ſaid to him at the Gallows, as the heart of Apollodorus the Tyrant ſeemed to ſay to him, who dreamed one night that he was fleaed by the Scythians, and boiled in a Cauldron, and that his heart ſpake to him out of the kettle. It is I that have drawn thee to all this. Thoſe in hell cry ſo ſurely.

Ἐγω σοι τῶν κακῶν.

Verſe 6. And Eſther ſaid] Now ſhe found her time to ſtrike whiles the iron was hot: ſhe therefore layeth hold upon the opportunity that God had even thruſt into her hand, and, laying aſide all baſe feare, pointeth out the enemy preſent, and painteth him out in his proper colours. A well-choſen ſeaſon, ſaith one, is the greateſt advantage of any action; which as it is ſeldome found in haſte, ſo it is too often loſt in delay. It is not for Queen Eſther now to drive off any longer. The negligent ſpirit cries, Cras Domine, To morrow thou ſhalt pray for me, ſaid Pharaoh to Moſes, Fooles are ever futuring, ſemper victuri, as Seneca hath it, but a wiſe mans heart diſcerneth both time and judgement, Eccleſ. 8. 5. The men of Iſſachar in Davids dayes were in great account, becauſe they had underſtanding of the times to know what Iſrael ought to do, and when to do it, 1 Chron. 12. 32.

Aug.

The adverſary] Heb. The man adverſary, the Lycanthropos, the man of might that diſtreſſeth us, anguſtiator, that is, our calamity; as the people of Rome once by an elegant ſoleciſme, cried out, Calamitas noſtra Magnus eſt: meaning it of Pompey ſir-named Magnus.

And enemy] That is, the utter enemy, that ſworn Swordman of Satan, the old manſlayer, from whom Haman hath drawn this ancient enmity, Geneſis 3. 15.

Is this wicked Haman] Peſſimus iſte, this homo hominum quantum eſt, peſſimus, homo poſt homines natos nequiſſimus, as wicked a man as goes on two legges, a Merum ſcelus, a man made up of miſchief, a very breathing devil. Cicero telleth of one Tubulus, who was Prætor a little before his time, ſo wicked a wretch, Ut ejus nomen non hominis ſed vitii eſſe videretur, that his name ſeemed to be not the name of a man, but of vice it ſelf. And Joſephus ſaith of Antipater, that his life was a very myſtery of iniquity. Think the ſame of Haman ſo portentouſly, ſo peerleſly wicked and malicious, that Eſther can finde no word bad enough for him, unleſſe it be Harang, that naughtieſt of all naughts, as Saint Paul could call ſin no worſe then by its own name ſinful ſin, exceeding ſinful, Rom. 7.13. Tiberius was rightly characterized by his Tutour Theodorus Gadareus, dirt kned with blood; Haman was ſuch another, if not worſe, and now he heares of it: for never till now did the man adverſary heare his true title. Before, ſome had ſtiled him Noble, others Great, ſome magnificent, and ſome perhaps vertuous: only Eſther gives him his own, wicked Haman. Ill-deſerving greatneſſe doth in vain promiſe to it ſelf a perpetuity of applauſe. There will be thoſe that will deal plainly, and call a ſpade, a ſpade. Thus Jeremy dealt with Jehoiakim, and Ezekiel with Zedekiah, whom he calleth naught and polluted. Go tell that fox, ſaith our Saviour, concerning Herod; and God ſhall ſmite thee, thou whited wall, ſaith Paul to Ananias. But what a courage had Eſther to ſpeak thus to the King, and of his Favourite, and before his face? This was the work of her faith, and the fruit of her prayer.

Bipedum nequiſſimus.

κακίας μυσήριον.

Ἱλὺς αἷμα πεφυραμένης.

Then Haman was afraid before the King and the Queen] He was amazed and amated, troubled and terrified.

Virg. Obſtupuit, ſteteruntque comæ, & vox faucibus hæſit.

In the fulneſſe of his ſufficiency he fell into ſtraits, Job. 29.22. So that being convinced in his own conſcience that the Queens accuſation was very true, and that the King knew it to be ſo, he had nothing to ſay for himſelf, he was even gagg'd, as it were, or muzled, as Mat 22.12. according to that of David, Pſal. 63.11. the mouth of them that ſpeak lies ſhall be ſtopped. And again, Pſal. 12.3. The Lord ſhall cut off lying lips, and the tongue that ſpeaketh proud things. Here we ſee how ſuddenly wicked ones may be caſt down upon the diſcovery of their wickedneſſe, in the height of their pride, in the ruffe of their jollity, as was Nebuchadnezzar, Belſhazzar, Herod, Haman. Surely as thunder commonly is heard when the skie ſeemeth moſt clear: ſo this man ſaw himſelf enveloped in a ſtorme, in one of the faireſt dayes that ever befell him.

Verſe 7. And the King ariſing from the banquet of wine in his wrath] As not able to abide the ſight of ſuch a caitiffe, he flings away in a chafe. This wrath of the King was to Haman a meſſenger of death: and ſo he apprehended it, as appears by that which followeth. Aſhamed the King was, and vexed, that his favour and power had been ſo much abuſed, to the hazarding of the Queens life, and the taking away the lives of ſo many innocents. It troubled him alſo to conſider how he had loſt his love upon ſo unworthy a wretch, and truſted him with his ſecrets, whom now he findeth treacherous, and all for his own ends. This King ſhould firſt have fallen out with himſelf for his raſhneſſe, and then have ſaid as Alphonſus, that renowned King, did in a ſpeech to the Popes Ambaſſadour: he profeſſed that he did not ſo much wonder at his Courtiers ingratitude to him, who had raiſed ſundry of them from mean to great eſtates, as at his own to God. This one conſideration would have cooled him better then the repeating of the Greek Alphabet, or his taking a turne in the Palace Garden, before he paſſed ſentence upon the Delinquent. Rex amici memor, paulliſper cunctatur, deliberandique gratiâ modicum ſeceſſit, ſaith Severus: that is, the King mindful of the friendſhip that had been betwixt him and Haman, maketh a pauſe, and retireth for a while, that he may deliberate with himſelf what to do. If theſe were the reaſons, it was a piece of prudence in the King, for anger is known to be an evil counſelour, and as ſmoke in a mans eyes hindreth his ſight, ſo doth raſh anger the uſe of reaſon. Hence wiſe men have refrained the act when angry: Plutarch telleth of one Architas, that diſpleaſed with his ſervants for their ſloth, he flung from them, ſaying, Valete, quoniam vobis iraſcor: farewel, for I am angry with you, and may not therefore meddle with you. Vapulares, niſi iraſcerer, I would pay thee, but that I am diſpleaſed at thee, ſaid Plato to a ſervant of his. And of Alphonſus King of Arragon it is reported, that vexed at his Cup-bearers ſtubbornneſſe, he drew his dagger and ran after him: but before he came at him he threw away his dagger, ne jam prehenſum iratus feriret, leſt he ſhould catch him and kill him in the heat of his anger. This was better then Sauls caſting a javelin at Jonathan, Alexanders killing of his friend Clitus and others in his drink, Herods commanding the Keepers of the priſon to execution, Acts 12.19. Whether Ahaſuerus went went into the garden (as Jonathan took his Artillery and went into the field) to divert and mitigate his anger, is uncertain. Possibly he might do that to edge and increase it. Of Tiberius it is storied, that the more he meditated revenge, the more did time and delay sharpen it: and the farther off he threatened, the heavier the stroke fell. Most certain it is, that Haman gat little by the Kings going into the garden; for upon his return, he was the more enraged: Nempe impiis omnia ad malum cooperantur, saith Lavater, to the wicked all things work together for the worse. Lentus in r ditando tri ribus dictis trocia facta jungebat. T

De ſera numinis Vindic.

Val. Max. Chriſt. l. 5. c 20

And Haman stood up to make request for his life] See what a strange turne of things here was all upon the sudden. He that was bowed unto by all men, is now upon his knees before a woman. He that was erst the professed enemy of the Jewes, is now suppliant to a Jewesse. He that had contrived the death of that whole people, is now begging for his own life. He that had provided a Gallowes for Mordecai, feares nothing more now, then that himself shall be hanged on it.

Discite justitiam moniti, & non temnere sanctos.

Haman hoped that Esther would have interceded for him to the King, but there was little reason for it: a drowning man will catch hold on any twig. Esther knew him too well, to befriend him so farre. Let him have judgement without mercy (thinks she) who shewed no mercy.

Quisquam nec ipsum supplicem,
Quamvis jacentem sublevet. Psal. 109.

Let him lie for me, and die according to his deserts. A man that doth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; Let no man stay him, Prov. 28. 17. to mediate for such an one, is no mercy: neither is it any almes-deed, as we say, for, save a Rogue from the Gallows and he will cut your throat if he can, as the proverb hath it, and experience hath confirmed it. Magnentius slew Constans the Emperour, Anno Dom. 337. who had formerly saved his life from the souldiers fury. Parry the Traitour offered the like to Queen Elizabeth, who had pardoned him after that he had been condemned to die for burglary. Michael Balbus slew his Master Leo Armenius the Emperour that same night that he had pardoned him, and released him out of prison. Those that are habituated and hardened in wickednesse, will not be mollified or mended by any kindnesse that is shewen them. Speed. Zonar. An

For he saw that there was evil determined against him] Vidit quod completum esset malum, rem ad restim rediisse; He perceived himself to be altogether in as ill a condition, as Judge Belknap in Richard the second his time, who said there wanted but an hurdle, an horse, and a halter, to have him to the place where he might have his due; where he might weare a Tyburne-tippet, as father Latimer afterwards phraseth it. Speed.

Verse 8. Then the King returned out of the Palace-Garden] Where he had either increased his choler, and cast on more fuel by plodding, or (as some think) strove to disgest it, as horses do by biting on the bit.

Ut fragilis glacies occidit ira morâ. Ovid.

Unto the house of the banquet of wine] Called also by the Hebrew Beth-mittoth, the house of beds triclinium: because at beds they used to sit, as we do at tables to eat and drink. See chap. 1. 6. Stuccius tiq. Cor

And Haman was fallen upon the bed whereon Esther was] He had stood up before, (for he saw the Queen took no felicity in his company) to make request for his life, which now was in suspense; here he falls down, either as swooning, or supplicating at the Queens feet, to beg her favour. But she very well knew, that there is both a cruel mercy, and a pious cruelty, and that although the sword of justice should be furbished with the oyle of mercy, yet there are cases (and this was one) wherein severity ought to cast the scale: when there is no hope of curing, men must fall to cutting: Immedicabile vulnus, &c.

Then said the King, will he force the Queen also] Haman had little minde of any such matter, as being now in the hands of the King of terrours, and ready to be devoured by the firſt-borne of death, as Bildad hath it, Job 18. 13. But the angry King was willing to miſinterpret him, and to take all things at the worſt. It is an eaſie matter to finde a cudgel for a dog, to pick a quarrel where men intend a miſchief Ahaſhuerus was not unwilling to miſconſtrue the poſture of Hamans body, whiles proſtrate he ſpred his armes in a vehement imploration up to the Queens bed. How oft might he have done ſo and more, whileſt he was in favour, uncenſured? Actions are not the ſame when the man alters. Men either judge or not judge as their paſſions and affections carry them. See this Acts 23. 9. Before Paul had diſcovered himſelf to be a Phariſee, this man is not worthy to live, ſaid they, but when he had cried out in the Council, I am a Phariſee, the ſonne of a Phariſee, oh how finely do they mince the matter? Perhaps an Angel hath revealed it to him, &c. Paul was an honeſt man then.

Impedit ira animum, ne poſſit cernere verum.

But though the King were unjuſt in judging thus amiſſe of Haman, yet God was righteous in meaſuring to him as he had meted to others, by belying and ſlandering ſo many innocents as he had deſigned to deſtruction. The devil was and ſtill is, firſt a liar, and then a murtherer, he cannot murther without he ſlander firſt. But God loves to retaliate and proportion device to device, Mic. 2.1,3. frowardneſſe to frowardneſſe, Pſ. 18.26. ſpoiling to ſpoiling, Eſa. 33. 1. tribulation to them that trouble his people, 2 Theſ. 1.6.

As the word went out of the Kings mouth] Either the former words, or elſe ſome words of command not here related, ſuch as are Corripite, velate vultum, take him away, cover his face. And this word was to Haman the meſſenger of death, driving him from the light in to darkneſſe, and chaſing him out of the world, Job 18. 18. Nay worſe. That book of Job elegantly ſets forth the miſery of a wicked man dying, under the notion of one not only driven out of the light by devils, where he ſhall ſee nothing but his tormentors, but alſo made to ſtand upon ſhares or grinnes with iron teeth, ready to ſtrike up and grinde him to pieces, having gall poured down to his belly, with an inſtrument raking in his bowels, and the pains of a travelling woman upon him, and an hideous noiſe of horrour in his eares, and a great Giant with a ſpeare running upon his neck, and a flame burning upon him round about, &c. and yet all this to hell it ſelf is but as a prick with a pin, or a flea-biting.

Joh. 18.18. & 20.24,15. & 15.20,21,16, 30.

They covered Hamans face] In token of his irrevocable condition. See Job 9.24. Eſa. 22. 17. The Turks caſt a black gown upon ſuch, as they ſit at ſupper with the great Turk, and preſently ſtrangle them. Many of their Viſiers or greateſt Favourites die in this ſort, which makes them uſe this proverb, He that is greateſt in office, is but a Statue of glaſſe. Plutarch wittily compareth great men to counters, which now ſtand for a thouſand pound, and anon for a farthing. — Sic tranſit gloria mundi.

Grand. Sign. Seraj. 148.

Quem dies veniens vidit ſuperbum,
Hunc dies abiens vidit jacentem.

Haman for inſtance, and ſo Sejanus, the ſame Senatours who accompanied him to the Senate, conducted him to priſon; they which ſacrificed unto him as to their god, which kneeled down to adore him, ſcoffed at him, ſeeing him dragged from the Temple to the Goale, from ſupreme honour, to extreme ignominy.

Ludit in humanis divina potentia rebus.

Pertinax Imp. fortunæ pila dictus eſt.

One reaſon why the King flang out of the room, and went into the Palace-garden, might be becauſe he could not endure the ſight of Haman any more. Wherefore upon his return they inſtantly covered his face. Some ſay, the manner was, that when the King of Perſia was moſt highly offended with any man, his face was immediately covered, to ſhew that he was unworthy to ſee the Sun, whom they counted their god; or to be an eyeſore to the diſpleaſed King. Among the Romanes it was, Majeſtas læſa ſi exeunti Proconſuli meretti x non ſun. movetur, high treaſon for any Strumpet to ſtand in the Proconſuls way, whenſoever he came abroad. The ſtatues of the gods were tranſported or covered in thoſe places where any puniſhment was inflicted. That in Tully and Livy is well

Tanquam indignus qui rem oculis uſurparet Druſ Sen. Tac. Tull. pro Rab. Liv.

well knowen, I lictor colliga manus, caput abnubito, arbori infelici ſuſpendito. Go Hangman, binde his hands, cover his face, hang him on the Gallow-tree. This was their condemnatory ſentence.

Verſe 9. And Harbonah one of the Kings Chamberlaines, &c.] See chapter 6. 14. with the Note.

Said before the King] Not a man opens his mouth to ſpeak for Haman, but all againſt him. Had the cauſe been better, thus it would have been. Every curre is ready to fall upon the dog that he ſeeth worried; every man ready to pull a branch from the tree is falling. Cromwell had experience of this when once he fell into diſpleaſure, by ſpeaking againſt the Kings match with Lady Katherine Howard, in defence of Queen Anne of Cleeve, and diſcharge of his conſcience, for the which he ſuffered death, Steven Gardiner being the chiefe Engineere. Had Hamans cauſe been like his, albeit he had found as few friends to intercede for him as Cromwell, yet he might have died with as much comfort as he did. But he died more like to the Lord Hungerford of Hatesby, who was beheaded together with the noble Cromwell, but neither ſo Chriſtianly ſuffering, nor ſo quietly dying for his offence committed againſt nature, viz. buggery. Cromwell exhorted him to repent, and promiſed him mercy from God; but his heart was hardened, and ſo was this wicked Hamans. God therefore juſtly ſet off all hearts from him in his greateſt neceſſity; and now, to adde to his miſery, brings another of his foule ſins to light, that he might the more condignely be cut off.

Σφοδρὸς πούσης πᾶς ἀνὴρ ξυλίνεται. Speed.

Speed.

Behold alſo the Gallowe, fifty cubits high] See chap. 5. 14. This the Queen knew not of when ſhe petitioned againſt Haman. But now they all heare of it for Hamans utter confuſion.

Which he had prepared for Mordecai] At a time when the King had done him greateſt honour, as his Preſerver and near Ally by marriage, as now it appeared. This muſt needs reflect upon the King, and be a reproach to him. Beſides, the King looked upon him, as one that went about either to throttle the Queen, (as ſome underſtand the words, verſe 8.) or to raviſh her: and this was juſt upon him, ſay ſome Interpreters, eò quòd aliis virginibus & matronis vini intuliſſet, becauſe it was common with him to raviſh other maids and matrons, and hence the Kings ſuſpicion and charge, whereof before.

Who had ſpoken good for the King] All is now for Mordecai, but not a word for Haman; the riſing Sun ſhall be ſure to be adored. And the contrary, Sejanus his friends ſhewed themſelves moſt paſſionate againſt him, when once the Emperour frowned upon him, ſaying, that if Cæſar had clemency, he ought to reſerve it for men, and not uſe it toward monſters. This is Courtiers cuſtome, ad quamlibet auram ſeſe inclinare, to ſhift their ſails to the ſitting of every winde, to comply with the King which way ſoever he enclineth. It is better therefore to put truſt in the Lord, then to put confidence in man. It is better to truſt in the Lord, then to put confidence in Princes, Pſal. 118. 8, 9. If Harbonah ſpake this out of hatred of Hamans inſolency, and in favour of Mordecai's innocency and loyalty, he deſerved commendation. Howſoever Gods holy hand was in it for the good of his people, and overthrow of their enemy; and little did this night-ſprung-Muſhrom Haman, (that ſuck't the earths fatneſſe from far better plants then himſelf) take notice till now, of the many hands ready to pluck him up by the roots, when the ſeaſon ſhould ſerve to clear the land of ſuch weeds.

Standeth in the houſe of Haman] Or, by the houſe of Haman, that he might feed his eyes with that delightful ſight, and cry out, as Hannibal did when he ſaw a ditch filled with mans blood, O jucundum ſpectaculum, O pleaſant Spectacle. The Story of that King of France is well known, who vowed to ſee a certain Martyr executed; but before that could be done, had his eye put out at a Juſtes, whereof not long after alſo he died. And that of Sir Ralph Ellerker Governour of Callice in King Henry the eighths time, who at the death of Adam Damlip Martyr, called to the Executioner, ſaying, Diſpatch the Knave, have done, I will not away before I ſee the Traitours heart out. But ſhortly after in a skirmiſh betwixt the French and us at Bullen, this Knight was not only ſlain among others, but ſtrip't, diſmembred, and his heart rip't out, and ſo left a terrible example, ſaith Mr. Fox of Gods juſtice to all bloody and mercileſſe men. Thou ſhouldeſt not have looked, &c. Obad. 12. See the Note there.

Acts & Mon. fol. 1120.

Then the King ſaid, Hang him thereon] The Kings of Perſia, had abſolute and unqueſtionable power to do whatſoever they liſted, Quicquid libuit, licuit. All their ſubjects except their Queens, were no better then their Slaves, whom they would they ſlew, and and whom they would they kept alive: whom they would they ſet up, and whom they would they put down, Dan. 5. 19 Haman is here without order of law, more then the Kings command, adjudged to be hanged. The truth is, it was a clear caſe, and the malefactour was ſelf-condemned; Hang him therefore, ſaith the King, a ſhort and juſt ſentence, and ſoon executed.

Verſe 10. So they hanged Haman on the Gallowes] Heb. tree. Neither hanged they him only to death: but crucified or nailed his dead body to the tree, for greater ignominy. So ſome gather from chap. 8. 5. The Septuagint alſo render it: So they crucified him. And here hanged the greatneſſe of Haman, who now is fallen from the Palace to the Gallowes, from the higheſt ſtage of honour, to the loweſt ſtaire of diſgrace, and lies wrap't up in the ſheet of perpetual infamy. So let all thine enemies periſh, O Lord, &c. A like end befell Bonoſus the drunken Emperour, Amaſis that inſolent King of Egypt, Joane that libidinous Queen of Naples, our Roger Mortimer, that Troubler of the Realme hang'd at Tyburne, Oliver that proud Prefect, advanced to higheſt honours and offices by Lewis King of France, but hang'd up by his ſonne and ſucceſſour upon a new and large Gallowes, ſet up for the purpoſe, and not without his deſert. High places are not more uneaſie then ſlippery. Even height it ſelf maketh mens brains to ſwim, and when they fall they come down with a poiſe.

Cranz l. 12. c. 17.

That he had prepared for Mordecai] Joſephus hath here a very good Note; Unde mihi contigit mirari nomen Dei, & ſapientiam & juſtitiam ejus agnoſcere, &c. I cannot but admire the Lords wiſdom, and acknowledge his juſtice, in that he not only puniſhed him for his malice to the Church, but by turning his own miſchief upon himſelf, hath made him an example to all poſterity, hanging him up in gibbets that others may take warning. The like the Lord did by Adonibezek, Pharaoh, Goliah, Achitophel, Abſalom, Sennacherib, Maxentius, Valerianus, &c.

Lib. 1. Antiq. c. 6.

Claud. lib. in Eutrop.

Quàm benè diſpoſitum terris ut dignus iniqui,
Fructus conſilii primis authoribus inſtet, &c.

Ὁι ἂν αὐτῷ κακὰ τεύχει ἀνὴρ ἄλλῳ κακὰ τεύχων Heſiod.

See thoſe ſacred Similies to the ſame ſenſe, Eccleſ. 10. 8, 9. Prov. 26. 27. Pſal. 7. 16. &c. and beware of making a match with miſchief, leſt ye have your belly-full thereof. He that conceiveth with guile, ſhall (though he grow never ſo big) bring forth nothing but vanity and worſe, Job 15. 35. As he hath ſowen the winde, ſo he ſhall reap the whirlwinde, Hoſ. 8. 6. See the Note there. Diabeli ſervus & ſatelles præcipuus erat Haman, ſaith Rupertus. Haman was a main ſtickler for the devil, who paid him accordingly; the wages of ſin is death, and it may well be feared that Haman was killed with death, as Jezabels children were, Rev. 2. 23 Fuit enim homo diræ feritatis planéque ἄθεος, for he was a moſt cruel wretch, and a plain Atheiſt. I ſhall ſhut up the ſtory of his life, as Ambroſe doth that of Ahab and Jezabels fearful end. Fuge ergo, dives ejuſmodi exitum, &c. Tremble at ſuch ends, and be careful to avoid them. Such ends ye ſhall eaſily avoid, if ye carefully fly ſuch like foule and flagitious practiſes.

Lib 8 de vic. verb. c. 21.

Lavat. in loc.

Amb. de Nab. Iſr. c 11.

Then was the Kings wrath pacified] Harbonah had helped to kindle it, verſe 9. and by executing Haman, whom he had accuſed, he now helpeth to quench it. For it was not unuſual of old, that men of greateſt rank and quality ſhould execute Malefactours, as Gideon did Zeba and Zalmunnah, as Samuel did Agag, as Benaiah did Adonijah, Joab and Shimei, by the command of Solomon. The holy Angels delight in ſuch an office, as at Sodom, and in Sennacheribs army: and how active ſhall they be at the laſt day, but chiefly againſt ſuch as walk after the fleſh in the luſt of uncleanneſſe, and deſpiſe Government, 2 Pet. 2. 10. So ſhall Gods wrath be pacified, as once it was when Phineas the High Prieſt had done execution upon that unclean couple. The Saints have another way of pacifying him, of preventing his judgements, and diſarming his indignation: and that is by remembring their ſins, and being confounded in his Preſence, never opening their mouths any more, unleſſe it be in an humble confeſſion, which is the Chriſtians beſt Apology? as the Apoſtle calleth it, 2 Cor. 7. 11. This will quiet Gods Spirit (as the phraſe is, Zech. 6. 8. and cauſe him to ſay as Job 33. 24. I have found a reconciliation. Surely, if we judge our ſelves, he will not judge us, 1 Cor. 11. 31. God ſhall be prevented, and the Accuſer of the brethren put out of office; our Hamans alſo ſhall be hang'd up before the Sun, our ſturdy corruptions crucified, and the Lord ſhall as little repent him of Sententiam ocyus dicto exequuntur oculi. Merl.

Ezech. 16. 63.

of any good he hath done us, as Ahaſhuerus did of gratifying his wife Eſther, and Kinſman Mordecai; who were now all the doers, ſeeking the wealth of Iſrael, and ſpeaking peace to that whole people, as appeareth in the following chapters. As for the King he never ſo much as once lamented the loſſe of Haman, nor ſaid, ſe properantius quàm prudentius egiſſe, that he had been more haſty then wiſe in doing him to death; but was very well pleaſed with what he had done, his wrath reſted, ſaith the text, as the ſea doth in a calme: it lay and ſlept, as the word ſignifieth; for anger is an eager deſire of revenge, and rendreth a man reſtleſſe, till that be done.

Ira eſt libido puniendi ejus qui videtur læſiſſe injuriâ. Cicero.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſe 1. On that day]

THis was a feſtival and a good day, as verſ. 17. albo lapillo notandus, for the many ſignal mercies that thereon came in together; viz. Eſthers Petition granted, Haman hanged, Mordecai advanced, the proſcribed Jews relieved, &c. As croſſes ſeldom come ſingle, but trooping together commonly, and treading upon the heels of one another, like Jobs meſſengers, James 1.2. So do bleſſings from God; there is oft a continued Series, a Concatenation; there comes a troop, as ſhe ſaid, when her ſon Gad came. God is rich in mercy, *Rom.*10.12. Neither are we at any time ſtraitened in him, but in our own bowels.

Catenata pio-ru n crux.

*Gen.*30.11.

Did the King Ahaſhuerus give] For into the Kings hands was all Hamans eſtate forfeited. The Turks have a Proverb, He that is greateſt in office, is but a ſtatue of glaſſe. Few of their Viſiers die in their beds, but are cut off at a ſhort warning, and all they have is confiſcate.

The houſe of Haman] i.e. his goods and chattels, all that glory of his riches, whereof he had ſo greatly boaſted, chap 5.11. and which he had been ſo many yeares heaping and hoarding. Nemo confidat nimirum ſecundis.

The Jewes enemy] It is ill being the Churches enemy: ſhe hath a champion that will ſtick to her, Eſay 37.23. ſo that her enemies ſhall all be found liars unto her, Deut. 33.29. Let them reade their deſtiny in that cup of trembling, burdenſome ſtone, hearth of fire mentioned, Zech. 12.2, 3, 6. and here the Churches Motto, Nemo me impunè laceſſit; there cannot be a greater folly then to be her enemy; for ſhe conquereth even when conquered: as Chriſt overcame as well by patience, as by power.

Victa tamen vinces, everſáq; Troia reſurges.

Unto Eſther the Queen] So making good that of Solomon, Prov. 13.22 The wealth of the ſinner is laid up for the juſt. Thus was that of the Canaanites for the Iſraelites, of Nabal for David, of the former tyrants and perſecutors, for Conſtantine the Great, to whom the good God (ſaith Auſtin) gave ſo much worldly wealth, Quantas optare nullus auderet, as no man could ever have wiſhed. That Haman was exceeding rich, appeareth by that large offer of his, chap. 3.9. who can tell, but that he might have as much as Pope John the 22. in whoſe coffers were found by his heires two hundred and fifty tunnes of gold, as Petrarch reporteth.

See Job 27.16 17.

*De C.D.l.*5. *c.*25.

And Mordecai came before the King] As his continual Attendant and ſpecial Favourite; his Couſin and Councellour: perhaps one of the ſeven mentioned, chap. 1.14. He that hitherto ſate as a ſervant before the Kings gate, is now grown ſo great a man all upon the ſudden. It is the Lord that thus raiſeth up the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghil to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory. 1*Sam.*2.8. Promotion cometh neither from the Eaſt, Weſt, nor South, (where the warm Sun-ſhine is) but God is the Judge, he putteth down one, and ſetteth up another, *Pſal.*75.6,7. He advanced Jovinian and Valentinian, men of low birth, to the Empire. In the yeare of grace 518. Juſtinus was firſt a Swineherd, then an Herdſman, then a Carpenter, then a Souldier, and laſtly an Emperour. Cromwell a Smiths ſonne of Putney or thereabouts, (whoſe mother married after to a Sheerman) what a great man grew he here to be in King Henry the eighths time? Vertue exalteth the meaneſt, when villany tumbleth down the nobleſt.

Act. & Mon.

For Esther had told what he was unto her] Viz. her Cousin-germane and foster-father, her friend that was as her own soule, as Moses phraseth it, *Deut.*13.6. and preferreth him before brother, sonne, daughter, wife. This his relation to Esther was as a Stirrop to help him into the Saddle of highest preferment.

Verse 2. And the King took off his ring] As a signe of intimate friendship, and a bond of strictest league of love. That this was usual among the Persians, is testified by Alexander ab Alexandro. Of Alexander the great it is storied, that when he died, he left his ring to his dearest friend Perdiccas, but his dominions τῷ κοσμίῳ, to the Worthiest. This set up Competitours, and bred much trouble. Ahashuerus knew that a worthier then Mordecai he could not easily finde, and therefore besides that momentary honour he had newly done him, *chap.*6.10. he now not only by this ring admitteth him into neerest friendship, but, as some think, advanceth him to be Keeper of the Seale, and Lord Chancellour of all the Empire.

Lib.1.c.26.

Which he had taken from Haman] And so degraded and exauthorated him before his execution: this is usual.

And gave it unto Mordecai] Acknowledging thereby his errour in promoting so unworthy a man before: whom having punished for his deserts, he here pitcheth upon a better. En Imperatorem valdè terribilem nec minus Clementem, as Frederick the Elector of Saxony said of Charles the fifth. Let Ahashuerus be what he will, Almighty God is in this text set forth as bountiful to his people, and terrible to his enemies. See *Psal.*34.15,16.

And Esther set Mordecai over the house of Haman] As her chief Steward, to see that every thing went right, and were put to the best. Hamans sons lived some months after this, but were outed of all. An inheritance may be gotten hastily at the beginning, but the end thereof shall not be blessed, *Prov.*20.21. He that by usury and unjust gain encreaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor, Prov. 28.8. God will provide him both an Executour and an Overseer, as here he did Haman.

Verse 3. And Esther spake yet again] Having sped so well before, she is encouraged to speak yet again. Heb. She added to speak before the King. She had a further request, and having had so free accesse, and so good successe, she takes the boldnesse to commence it. We should do so when we come before God. Prayer should be multiplied like those arrows of deliverance, 2Kings 13.18. and our suits re-inforced whilest we speak yet again; as Abraham did in his intercession for Sodom. See, for our encouragement, that fourefold comfortable, yet again uttered by the Lord, *Zech.*1.17.

Nec his contenta Esther. Vulg.

And fell down at his feet] This was a more humble posture, then yet she had used: importing her lowly minde and most earnest desire, whereunto she added tears, those effectual Oratours, (— Nam lachryma pondera vocis habent) that prevaile with the hardest hearts many times, and alter the strongest resolutions. Hereof we have an instance in our Chronicles, which, because it somewhat suiteth with the case in this text, I will here relate: King Edward the third laying siege to Callice, they desired parley, and had this final sentence, that six of the chief Burgesses should be sent to the King, bareheaded, barefooted, in their shirts, with halters about their necks, the Keyes of the Town and Castle in their hands, and submit themselves to the Kings will: for the residue he was content to take to mercy. Those came, and the King commands them presently to be carried to execution, and would not on any suit be diverted, in regard, as he said of his oath; till the Queen, great with childe, fell on her knees before him, and with teares obtained their pardon, and had them given unto her. Nescit Antipater, said Alexander the great? Knoweth not Antipater, that one teare of my mother Olympias, can easily wash off all his accusations of her to me?

Da. Hist.140.

To put away the mischief of Haman the Agagite] She doth not say to reverse the bloody decree of the King of Persia, for this might have irritated that waspish Prince, and made him to have rejected her request as unreasonable, impossible. She therefore useth a great deal of commendable prudence, (I wisdom dwell with prudence, and finde out knowledge of witty inventions, Pro.8.12.) and picks out her best time, that she may set her words upon the wheels, as Solomon hath it, *Prov.*25.11. and utter right words that may be forcible, Job 6.25. Such another was Abigail, the woman of Tekoah, and the Matron of Abel.

And

And his device that he had deviſed againſt the Jewes] All the blame is laid upon Haman, who was indeed a man of wicked devices, and had taken counſel both crafty and cruel againſt Gods people. Him therefore ſhe maketh the only Authour and Actour in this buſineſſe, not once mentioning the King, who yet had ratified the decree, but by his late dealing with Haman, had ſufficiently teſtified his utter diſlike of his own act therein, and cried, Had I wiſt! ὡς ἄμην.

Verſe 4. Then the King held out the golden Scepter] It appeareth by this, that ſhe once more put her life in her hand; hazarding it for her peoples ſafety, (as Arſinoe interpoſed her own body, betwixt her children and the murtherers ſent to ſlay them) and ſo performing her promiſe made to Mordecai, *chap.*4.16. Gods children are all ſuch as will not lie, Eſay 63.8. if they ſwear to their hurt, yet they dare not change, Pſal. 15.4. dare not ſay and unſay, 2*Cor.*1.18,19 Of many Promiſers it may be ſaid, as Tertullian doth of the Peacock, that they are all in changeable colours: as often changed as moved. Holy Eſther was none ſuch; no more was that bleſſed Martyr of Jeſus Chriſt, Mr. Hawkes, when in the flames remembring his promiſe to certain friends, (to give them a ſigne whether the rage of the paine were tolerable) he reached up his hands burning on a light fire, and clapt them over his head three times together, to the great aſtoniſhment of the beholders, but eſpecially of them who underſtood the matter. Act. & Mon. 1446.

So Eſther aroſe and ſtood before the King] Experience had bred confidence. They likewiſe that humble themſelves under the mighty hand of God, ſhall be exalted in due time, 1 Peter 5. 6. And as the lower the ebbe, the higher will be the tide; ſo the lower we deſcend in humiliation, the higher ſhall we aſcend in exaltation Verſe 5. And ſaid, If it pleaſe the King] See chap. 5.8. Thus when we pray to God, we muſt take unto us words, and ſpeak in a low language, as broken men, The poor ſpeaketh ſupplications, Prov.19.23.

And the thing ſeem right before the King] She taketh not upon her to preſcribe, but is willing to ſubſcribe to the Kings good pleaſure, let us do ſo to the only wiſe God, John 2.3. The mother of Chriſt doth not over-earneſtly in words preſſe him to do that ſhe deſired, but only layes open the caſe, They have no wine, referring all to his diſcretion; ſo ought we in our prayers for temporal things. Socrates taught his ſcholars, to ask no more of God but this, that he would do them good: but how, and how much, they ſhould leave that to him, as beſt underſtanding what is beſt and fitteſt for us. Thoſe in the Goſpel that would needs be at a certainty, and bargain with the Maſter of the vineyard for a penny a day, when they had their penny, they went grumbling away, that it was but a penny, *Mat.*20.11.

And I be pleaſing in his eyes] If my beauty pleaſe him, which is the beſt letter of recommendation to a Prince, as the Queen-mother of France was wont to ſay.

Let it be written to reverſe the letter] She did not requeſt to rule the whole Empire for three days, as Semiramis once did; nor to ſet Perſepolis on fire, as Alexander the great did, at the motion of his Concubine; but that the King her husband would revoke and reſcind the letters of Hamans device, that he would by new letters correct and over-rule (as the Vulgar Latine hath it) thoſe former deviſed by Haman, that he would antiquate and aboliſh the plots and projects of that wicked man. And albeit this requeſt of hers might ſeem to ſome uncivil and over-bold; yet in a caſe of ſuch great conſequence, wherein the glory of God, the preſervation of his people, and the honour of the King were ſo much concerned, ſhe doubteth not to preſent and proſecute it. Hinc igitur ſatis eſt conſpicua Eſtheræ ſanctæ audacia, ſaith an Interpreter: ſuch as was alſo that of Cranmer in the Parliament houſe, when the ſix Articles were in Agitation, and that of George Marqueſſe of Brandenburg, who profeſſed at the Imperial Diet at Ausborough, Malle ſe flexis ibi coram Cæſare genibus, ſpiculatori cervicem feriendam ſtatim præbere, that he had rather loſe his head preſently there in the Preſence of the Emperour, then to yield his aſſent to the Popiſh Interim. Act. & Mon. fol. 1037. Sculter. Annal.

Verſe 6. For how can I endure to ſee the evil, &c.] She had her life already given her at her petition, but unleſſe ſhe might have her people at her requeſt, who were ſold as well as her ſelf, to be deſtroyed, to be ſlain, and to periſh, chapt. 7.3,4. her life would be unto her a joyleſſe, that is, a lifeleſſe life, Mortis enim habet vices quæ trahitur vita gemitibus. It is rather a death then a life that is ſpent in heavineſſe and horrour. And this would be Eſthers caſe if her people ſhould be maſſacred, as was deſigned and decreed: Such was her holy ſympathy and endeared affection to her Countrey-men and fellow-Citizens of heaven, that ſhe could not live to behold ſuch a ſad and bloody ſpectacle:

Abſit ut excisâ poſſim ſuper vivere Troiâ, ſaid Anchiſes, to his ſon Æneas, that would have ſaved his life in that common deſtruction of his countrey, Far be it from me to out-live Troy. Curtius telleth us, that Alexander the great, when he was extreme thirſty, and had water offered him, he would not receive it, but put it by with this brave ſpeech, Nec ſolus bibere ſuſtineo, nec tam exiguum dividere omnibus poſſum, There is not enough for all my ſouldiers to ſhare with me, and to drink it alone I cannot finde in my heart, I will never do it. Compare herewith this ſpeech of Eſther, and you ſhall finde it far the better, as being full of thoſe precious graces, (whereunto Alexander was a perfect ſtranger) humility, prudence, faith, zeal toward God, and ardent love toward his people. Oh how great is the number of thoſe now adayes, (ſaith Lavater here) qui ne micam Spiritus Eſtheræ habent, who have not the leaſt parcel of Eſthers ſpirit, but are all for themſelves, and for their own intereſts!

Curt. l. 7.

Or how can I endure to ſee!] Heb. quomodo potero & videbo? How can I? and ſhall I ſee? how ſhould I do otherwiſe then ſink at the ſight, (as ſhe did in the Romane hiſtory, when her ſonne was butchered: and as the Virgin Mary felt a ſword at her heart, when ſhe beheld Chriſt crucified, Luke 2.35.) Melanchthon ſaid, that good Oecolampadius died of grief for the Churches calamities. Nehemiah was heart-ſick for the breaches of Joſeph, chap. 2.3. with Amos 6.6. Moſes wiſhed himſelf expunged, and Paul accurſed, rather then it ſhould go ill with Gods people.

Verſe 7. Then the King Ahaſhuerus ſaid unto Eſther, &c.] Here Hamans letters of Mart are reverſed by Ahaſhuerus, whoſe anſwer to Eſther is full of gentleneſſe and ſweetneſſe: but yet ſuch as diſcovereth a minde perplexed, and caſt into ſtraits, as Princes eſt-ſoones are by the ſubtilties and malice of wicked counſellours, Dan. 6. 15. ſo that they cannot do as they would, unleſſe they will bring all into a combuſtion, though uſually where the word of a King is, there is power, Eccleſ. 8. 4. and the old Lord Treaſurer Burleigh, was wont to ſay, that he knew not what an Act of Parliament could not do in England: and King James in his ſpeech in the Starre-chamber, Anno 1616. ſaid as much.

Behold I have given Eſther the houſe of Haman] i. e. I have done ſomewhat toward the performance of my Promiſe made to Eſther, chap. 7.2. and more I am willing to do, only I muſt obſerve good order, and do things with diſcretion. Behold, I give you, poteſtatem plenariam & omnimodam, all the power I have, that therewith you may help your ſelves, only my former decree I cannot reverſe, but I ſhall ſtirre up great garboiles in the Kingdome. Joſephus indeed telleth us, that Ahaſhuerus did retract the Edict procured by Haman; and further, gave power to the Jewes, that if any withſtood the Kings will herein, they ſhould kill them, &c. But we are not bound to believe him in all things; as neither Herodotus, Livy, nor any of the Hiſtorians, (the Sacred always excepted) for Vopiſcus, who was one of them, confeſſeth, neminem hiſtoricorum non aliquid eſſe mentitum, that there is none of them that hath not taken liberty to lie more or leſſe: and it is manifeſt, that Joſephus his manner is, to recite what he thinks likely to have been done, and what is fit to be written of ſuch a buſineſſe. Baronius annales facit non ſcribit ſaith one: think the ſame of Joſephus, he rather maketh an hiſtory ſometimes, then writeth it. And therefore that is but a ſorry excuſe, that the Papiſts make for their ſacrilegious forbidding the people to reade the Scriptures, when they refer them to Joſephus, as having the Hiſtory of the Bible more largely and plainly deſcribed.

In vita Aureliani.

Joh. Barclai. M. Parænesi.

Becauſe he laid his hands upon the Jewes] He did it becauſe he deſigned it. Like as Balak alſo aroſe and fought with Iſrael, Joſh. 24.9. and yet the ſtory ſaith nothing ſo. But that is in Scripture ſaid to be done, that is intended or attempted. And this the Heathen alſo ſaw by the dimme light of nature. Hence that of Seneca, Fecit quiſque quantum voluit. And another ſaith.

Qua

Quæ quia non licuit, non facit, illa facit.

Polybius attributeth the death of Antiochus to his ſacriledge, only in his purpoſe and will. This Joſephus thinks could not be. ſcil. that a man having a purpoſe only to ſinne, ſhould be puniſhed by God for it. Hence he derideth Polybius for the fortcited cenſure: but he had no cauſe ſo to do, for the Heathens herein exceeded the Phariſees, who held thought free and Joſephus was ſowred with their leaven.

Verſe 8. Write ye alſo for the Jews] Here was one Syngram or authoritative writing, croſſing another. What could the people think of this, but that crownes have their cares, and it were a wonder if great perſons, in the multitude of their diſtractions, ſhould not let fall ſome incongruities. We muſt not think, ſaith Lavater here, if Princes or States command things different one from another, that it proceedeth from lightneſſe of minde; but that they make Lawes, and ſet forth Edicts according to the ſtate and neceſſity of the times, and as the publick good requireth. In the beginning of Queen Elizabeths reign here, (when mens mindes differed concerning Religion, and Reformation could not ſafely be wrought at once) it was by one and the ſame Proclamation commanded, that no man ſhould ſpeak unreverently of the Sacrament of the Altar, and both kindes were permitted in the adminiſtration. Religion was changed without commotion by degrees: after that the Romiſh ſuperſtition had ſtood a whole moneth and more, after the death of Queen Mary, as afore. The ſacrifice of the Maſſe was not aboliſhed till half a yeare after: nor images caſt out of Churches, till two moneths after that. Here then let St. James his counſel take place. Be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak; to ſpeak evil of Governours, when they anſwer not our expectations, but ſeem to command contradictories. There are certain Arcana imperii, ſecrets of State that moſt men underſtand not: and muſt therefore dedicate them to victory, as the Romanes did that lake, the depth whereof they could not fathom nor finde out. Beſides, we muſt know that there will be faults ſo long as there be men, and faults will ſlip betwixt the beſt mens fingers; as Biſhop Jewel was wont to ſay. And as we endure with patience a barren yeare if it happen, and unſeaſonable weather; ſo muſt we tolerate the imperfections of Rulers, and quietly expect either reformation or alteration. Camd. El. 1. p. 9. Ib. 17 & 20

As it liketh you] Having been ſo lately deceived in Haman, and by him miſcarried to the ratifying of that bloody Edict, he will no more truſt his own judgement, but referres the managing of the Jewes deliverance. (which now he greatly deſired) to their prudence, diſcretion and faithfulneſſe. Few Kings would have yielded to have retracted, leſt they ſhould thereby ſeem light and inconſtant: and confeſſe themſelves to have been in an errour. Hence, right or wrong, their laws muſt ſtand: and if any demand a reaſon. Sic volo, ſic jubeo, muſt ſtop his mouth: And Quod ego volo pro Canone ſit. Let my will be your reaſon and rule, as Conſtantius ſaid to the Orthodox Biſhops, refuſing to communicate with the Arrians. But God who tameth the fierceſt creatures, had for his poor peoples ſake brought Ahaſhuerus to a better bent; ſo that rather then contract the ſtaine and ſting of ſuch barbarous cruelty, he will run the hazard of being accounted inconſtant: and not care though a Retraxit be entred againſt him, as is uſually againſt the Plaintiffe, when he cometh into the Court where his plea is, and ſaith he will not proceed.

In the Kings name, and ſeale it with the Kings ring] He was well perſwaded of their fidelity, piety and prudence. Otherwiſe it had been too great weakneſſe in this Prince, (who had been ſo lately abuſed by Haman) to have truſted his whole power in the hands of ſtrangers. But natural conſcience cannot but ſtoop to the image of God, whereſoever it meeteth therewith, and have high thoughts of ſuch, as Pharaoh had of Joſeph, Nebuchadnezzar of thoſe three Worthies, Darius of Daniel, &c. Surely, when men ſee in the Saints that which is above ordinary, or beyond their expectation, they are afraid of the Name of God which is called upon by them, Deut. 28. 10. and will entruſt them more then any other whatſoever. It is a Probleme in Ariſtotle, why man is credited more then other creatures? The anſwer is, ὅτι θεὸς τοὺς ἐσθλοὺς φίλους, becauſe he alone reverenceth God, therefore you may truſt him; honeſty floweth from piety.

For the writing which is written in the Kings name, &c.] Therefore you muſt not take it amiſſe, that I reverſe not Hamans letters; for I alſo am under a Law, (whatever ever my Predeceſſour Cambyſes held to the contrary,) neither need you doubt but that what you write in my name, and ſigne with my ſeal will be authentick, and paſſe for a current countermand, feare it not.

Scu'tet. Verſe 9. Then were the Kings Scribes called] This verſe is noted to be the longeſt in all the Bible. It was Robert Stevens the Printer (I trow) that firſt diſtinguiſhed the chapters by verſes: and this he hath done not ſo well in ſome places, as were to be wiſhed. Theſe Scribes were as ready at Mordecai's call, as before they had been at Hamans, chap. 3.12. neither cared they much what they wrote, ſo that they might be ſure it was the Kings pleaſure they ſhould do it. As for their Religion, it may ſeem to be the ſame with Act 18.17. that of Gallio the Pro-conſul, a meer irreligion, their Motto, Mihi placet quicquid Regi placet. Whatſoever pleaſeth the King ſhall pleaſe me, and if their hearts could be ripped up, there would be found written therein, The god of this preſent world.

At that time] So ſoon as the word was out of the Kings mouth, delay might have bred danger. Habent aulæ ſuum citò, citò, Courtiers are quick of diſpatch, as they carefully obſerve their molliſſima fandi tempora, ſo when once they have got a grant, they loſe no time, they know that opportunities are headlong, and once loſt irrecoverable. Plutarch. Hannibal, when he could have taken Rome would not; when he would, could not. Vincere ſcis Hannibal victoriâ uti neſcis, ſaid one to him. Mordecai made uſe of the preſent, the nick of time. Eſther could tell him by experience, that a well choſen ſeaſon is the greateſt advantage of an action, which as it is ſeldome found in haſte, ſo it is too often loſt in delay. It is not for Mordecai to drive off any longer, the whole Church was in heavineſſe, and needed comfort; and ſome might be ſlain, ere notice came to the contrary.

Ovid. Metam. l. 4. — Ad opem brevis hora ferenda eſt.

In the third moneth] Two moneths and more the poor Jewes lay under the ſentence of death, in a foreloin condition; God loves to help ſuch as are forſaken of their hopes, to help at a dead lift, to comfort the abject, 2*Cor.*7.6. Though Jacob be a worm, yet God will not cruſh him, but cheriſh him. And I will reſtore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, ſaith the Lord; becauſe they called thee an out-caſt, ſaying, This is Zion whom no man ſeeketh after, Jer.30.17. The ſeaſonableneſſe of Gods mercies doth much commend them. Theſe poor wretches cried, and the Lord heard them, and ſaved them out of all their troubles, *Pſal.*34.6.

This is the moneth Sivan] That is, May, when all things are in their prime and pride, and the earth checkred and entrailed with variety of flowers, and God is ſeen to be Magnus in minimis, great in the ſmalleſt creatures. Then did the Sun of righteouſneſſe ariſe to theſe afflicted exiles, with healing in his wings, Mal. 4.2. Like as the Sunbeams did to the dry and cold earth, calling out the herbes and flowers, and healing thoſe deformities that Winter had brought upon it.

On the three and twentieth day thereof] The preciſe time is thus noted, not only to ſet forth the certainty and truth of the hiſtory, but alſo to let us ſee what was the preſent ſtate of the Church, and what is Gods uſual diſpenſation and dealing with his people. For two moneths and more they were in a very low, and as it might ſeem a loſt condition. Now they have eight moneths ſpace of breathing and preparing themſelves to their juſt and lawful defence: yet are they not without divers difficulties and diſcouragements, until God had given them a full and final victory over their enemies. The Saints proſperity here, like checker-work, is inter-woven with feares and croſſes. They muſt not look for a perpetual ſerenity till they come to heaven. I ſhall die in my neſt, ſaid Job, I ſhall never be moved, ſaid David. How apt are the holieſt to be proud and ſecure, to ſettle upon their lees, unleſſe God poure them from veſſel to veſſel? This the wiſe God well knoweth, and therefore exerciſeth them with interchanges. See the circle that he goeth in with his Davids, *Pſal.*30.5. to 10. and reckon upon this, that if our ſorrows be long, they are light, if ſharper the ſhorter: as thunder the more violent, the leſſe permanent.

Flebile principium melior fortuna ſequetur.

And

And it was written according to all that Mordecai commanded] Had he not been a man of ſingular parts, he had not been fit for ſuch a ſervice. It could not otherwiſe be, but that many eyes were upon him, and ſome evil eyes, that would more curiouſly pry into his proceedings, then Laban once did into Jacobs ſtuffe. It behooved him therefore to look to his behaviour, and to weigh well his words in dictating ſuch a ticklish edict as this to the Kings Secretaries. But God who had called him to this high employment, did likewiſe gift him for it. He was with his mouth, (as once with Moſes, Exod. 4. 11.) and taught him what he ſhould ſay. There is no mouth into which God cannot put fit words: and how oft doth he chuſe the weak and unwiſe, to confound the learned and mighty, as he did Balaams Aſſe, to convince his Maſter?

Unto the Jewes] To them firſt, becauſe they were in their deepeſt dumps, and ſtood in need of comfort; Go tell my diſciples and Peter; let him know with the firſt that I am riſen, for he is in greateſt heavineſſe.

And to the Lieutenants, and the Deputies, &c.] That they might know that the Kings minde was altered, and that the Jewes were now to be favoured and furthered in their juſt and neceſſary defence. The equity of this Edict, ſo oppoſite to the former, they were not to diſpute but to diſpatch. To argue or debate the buſineſſe were preſumption, proud curioſity to ſearch the reaſon thereof, to detract or diſobey, high offence, equal to rebellion.

Unto every Province, according to the writing thereof] In their ſeveral characters, and manner of writing. The China and Japan writing is from the right hand to the left, but with the lines down the leafe, not croſſing, &c.

And unto every people after their language] The whole earth was once of one language, lip, and ſpeech, Gen. 11. 1. This was the Hebrew-tongue, called the Jewes language here, and more plainly, Eſa. 36. 11. (though ſome fond men have given the ſeniority to other languages, many ages younger then the Hebrew) ever ſince the building of Babel languages were confounded, and thereby a great labour laid upon the ſonnes of men. The Hebrew Doctours ſay, that thenceforth for one tongue there were ſeventy two languages. Others think there were as many tongues as ſeveral kindreds and families; and theſe have multiplied alſo ſince that time exceedingly. It was Mordecai's care here, that all Nations under the Perſian Dominion, might have the Kings Edict in their ſeveral dialects, that ſo none might plead ignorance. It ſhould be the Magiſtrates care, that their people have the Law of God, the holy Scriptures, in a known language, ſith the ignorance thereof is deſtructive to the ſoule. This the Pope denieth to thoſe miſled and muzled ſoules, that are faſt locked up in his dark dungeon; and giveth this bald reaſon, Ne ſacra verba vileſcerent, leſt thoſe holy words ſhould be undervalued, and become too cheap. This is good Turciſme: the Mahometans reade their Alcoran, (which is their Bible) in the Arabick (which is their learned) tongue, leſt, if tranſlated it ſhould be prophaned by the vulgar.

Verſe 10. And he wrote in the King Ahaſhuerus name] For he knew that where the word of a King is, there is power, and who may ſay unto him, What doeſt thou? Eccl. 8. 4. See Dan. 5. 19. Mordecai, as he was careful not to abuſe his authority, ſo he ſpareth not to improve it to the utmoſt for the Churches good. We may alſo lawfully and comfortably improve the benefits and priviledges granted us by Princes and other Benefactors: Conſtantines donation, and Peters patrimony is much boaſted of by that Antichriſt of Rome. A meer fiction, as divers learned men of their own ſide have proved. But if it were never ſo true, what power had Conſtantine to give away and alienate ſuch a conſiderable part of the Empire? (Might he not well have been therefore called Pupillus, (as he was in ſcorn by ſome Heathen Hiſtorians for his bounty to poor Chriſtians?) or with what conſcience could the Biſhop of Rome have accepted of ſuch a gift, and left it to his Succeſſours. But it was neither ſo, nor ſo. Not Conſtantine but Pepin enlarged the Popes territories: as not Peter but Phocas, is the right craggy rock upon which is founded the Popes Supremacy.

Cuſanus, Ficinus, Volater. Otho Friſing.

Lavat. in loc.

And ſealed it with the Kings ring] See chap. 3. 12. and obſerve what a ſtrange turne of things here was all on the ſudden. Merlin from this clauſe gathereth, that the King peruſed and approved whatſoever the Scribes wrote by the appointment of Mordecai, he ſaw it, and ſigned it.

And ſent letters by Poſts] Chap. 3. 23. That was a witty ſpeech of him, who ſaid of Sectaries, that pretend much to Scripture; they were like Poſts, that bring truth in their letters, letters, and lies in their mouthes. And of another, that they do angariare, make Posts of the holy Scriptures; compelling them to go two miles, which of themselves would go but one.

Equitantes in equis angariis Tremel.

And riders on mules] Which are counted swifter then horses, and yet an horse is so swift a creature, that the Argives consecrated a horse to the Sun, as the swiftest beast to the swiftest Planet.

Ὃς τάχιστος τῷ πτερωτάτῳ.

Camels] These were large strong beasts, that could endure long and hard travel. It is said of them, that they do drink, in præsens & in posterum, and can hold out travelling three dayes together without meat.

And young Dromedaries] These were also swift beasts, Jer. 2.23. and therefore it is by Antiphrasis, that amongst us a slow person is called a Dromedary, Ut lucus à non lucendo bellum, quasi minimè bellum.

Verse 11. Wherein the King granted the Jewes] The slaughter therefore that they made of their enemies was not unlawful: Because, 1. They were armed with authority. 2. In their own necessary defence.

To gather themselves together] Which till now they might not do, lest it should seem a riot or rebellion. Conquerours use to disarme and disperse those whom they have vanquished, ut sit that they may not make head and shake off the yoke.

Una salus victis, nullam spirare salutem.

And to stand for their life] Life is a precious mercy, such as all creatures make much of, from the highest Angel, to the lowest worme. See the sweetnesse of it, 1 Kings 20.32. *Jer.*39.18. and 45.5. *Eccl.*9.4. Job 2.4. Quis vitam non vult? saith Austin. Joseph is yet alive, saith Jacob, Gen. 45.26. This was more joy to him then all his honour. A man is bound to sacrifice all he hath to the service of his life, and to die in the defence of it; to kill another rather then to be killed by another. If it be the defence of a mans own life which the King himself attempteth, violently and injuriously to take away, in such a case ordinarily it shall be lawful for a subject to defend himself, although the death of the Prince follow thereupon, saith Suarez. In the defence of himself and his friends, it may be lawful for a private person to lay hands upon his lawful Prince, that setteth upon him without cause, saith another Casuist. Only such an act as this must not proceed out of hatred or desire of revenge, but out of right self-love, and pure necessity; adhibitâ magna inculpatæ tutelæ moderatione, as the Lawyers call it, using great moderation of harmlesse defence.

Suar. l.6.c.4. sect.4. Sebast. Huissius.

To destroy, and to slay, and to cause to perish] Mordecai maketh use of the self-same termes that Haman had done, *chap.*3.13. that all men might know, that his commission was altogether as large as the others, and that they would, vim vi repellere; stand upon their guard, slay all such as should seek their lives, and fight stoutly, pro aris & focis. This, saith Tully, is Lex non scripta sed nata; ad quam non docti, sed facti; non instituti, sed imbuti sumus, &c. that which uncorrupted nature teacheth every man.

Cic. pro milone

Both little ones and women] This seemeth spoken in terrorem, that the enemy might forbear to meddle; if not for their own sakes, yet for their wives and children, whom many hold more deare to themselves then their own lives. But the Text may be better read thus. To destroy, to slay, and to cause to perish all the power of the people and Province that would assault them, their little ones and women.

And to take the spoile of them for a prey] This also would work much with those that had estates to lose, For money is the Monarch of this present world; and many had as live part with their blood as their good.

Verse 12. Upon one day in all the Provinces, &c.] That once fatal day, but henceforth (the brunt once past) festival. That long-looked-for day, wherein the enemy hoped to revel in the Churches ruines, to frame Comedies out of her Tragedies, to wash their feet in her blood, yea, to ride their horses up to the Saddle-skirts therein, as Farnesius the Popes Champion threatened to do in Germany; and Minerius in France, and the Papists here in England, at the death of Queen Elizabeth, and again upon the good success of the Powder-plot, that great crack and black day, as they called it. For the speeding and furthering whereof, they had a devillish ditty, consisting of a seven-fold Psalmody, which ſecretly they paſſed from hand to hand with tunes ſet to be ſung for the chearing up of their wicked hearts with an expectation (as they called it) of their day of Jubilee. This is one paſſage therein, Confirme your hearts with hope, for the day of your Redemption is not far off. The year of viſitation draweth to an end, and Jubilation is at hand, &c. The Pſalter is hard to be had, for they are taken up by the Papiſts, as other books be that diſcover their ſhame. But do what they can, ſhame ſhall be the promotion of fooles, (as it was of Haman) but the wiſe (as Mordecai) ſhall inherit glory, Prov. 3. 35. Spec. Bell. ſacr. l. 2.

which

Verſe 13. The Copy of the writing] Tranſcripts of the Original were every where publiſhed and proclaimed, as the contrary Edict had been before, chap. 3. 14. This muſt needs amuſe and amaze the people, but who durſt ſay to their Monarch, What doeſt thou? Is it ſafe to take a Lion by the beard, or a Beare by the tooth?

That the Jewes ſhould be ready againſt that day] God ſometimes taketh notice, (in his vindictive juſtice,) as of the offending member, Judg. 1. 6, 7. Luke 16. 24. ſo of the place where, 1 Kings 21. 19. (Henry the third of France was ſtabbed to death in that very chamber, where he had contrived the Maſſacre of Paris,) and of the time when miſchief ſhould have been acted to prevent and puniſh it, as Exod. 15. 9, 10. Ladiſlaus King of Bohemia and Hungary, having conſpired with other Popiſh Princes, to root out the true Chriſtians in Bohemia, on ſuch a day, on his marriage-day, was immediately before in the midſt of his great preparations, viſited with a peſtilent ſore in his groine, whereof within thirty ſix houres he died. Henry the ſecond King of France, the ſelf-ſame day that he had purpoſed to perſecute the Church, and burne certain of his guard whom he had in priſon for religion, (at whoſe execution he had promiſed to have been himſelf in perſon) in the midſt of his triumph, at a Tourney, was wounded ſo ſore in the head with a ſpeare, by one of his own ſubjects, that ere long he died. The Duke of Guiſe threatened to deſtroy utterly the Town of Orleans, but was himſelf ſlain that very evening. The Conſtable of France made a vow, that ſo ſoon as he had taken St. Quintons, he would ſet upon Geneva: but ſped as ill as Julian the Apoſtate did, when going againſt the Perſians, he ſwore that upon his return he would offer the blood of Chriſtians. But the Galilæan (as he called Chriſt in ſcorne) took an order with him ere that day came; the Carpenters ſonne had made ready his coffin, as was foretold him by a Chriſtian, in anſwer to that bitter jeare. M. Clarks Examples. Act & Mon. 1784. Ib. 19. 14.

To avenge themſelves on their enemies] This was no private revenge, but licenſed by the chief Magiſtrates, entruſted by God with the adminiſtration of his Kingdome upon earth, by the exerciſe of vindictive and remunerative juſtice, Rom. 13. 4. And here, Bonis nocet qui malis parcit. He wrongeth the good, that puniſheth not the bad. True it is, that private revenge is utterly unlawful, unleſſe it be in a mans own neceſſary defence, where the caſe is ſo ſudden, that a man cannot call in the help of the Magiſtrate, but muſt either kill or be killed. Otherwiſe that of Lactantius holdeth true, Non minus mali eſt injuriam referre quam inferre. And that of Seneca, immane verbum eſt ultio, Revenge is a cruel word, Manhood ſome call it, but it is rather doghood. The manlier any man is, the milder and more merciful, as David, 2 Sam. 1. 12. and Julius Ceſar, who when he had Pompey's head preſented to him, wept and ſaid, Non mihi placet, vindicta ſed victoria, I ſeek not revenge but victory. The Jewes here ſought not revenge, but ſafety. If they had been ſold for bondmen, they had borne it in ſilence and ſufferance, the language of the Lamb, dumb before the Shearer, chap. 7. 4.

Verſe 14. So the Poſts that rode upon mules and camels went out] Thus God provided that his poor afflicted ſhould be ſpeedily comforted, and aſſured that their prayers were accepted; when this good newes came flying towards them, as on the wings of the wind, over the mountaines of Bether, all lets and impediments. Thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words, ſaith the Angel to Daniel, chap. 10. 12. yea, as theſe Poſts were haſtened and preſſed on by the Kings commandment; ſo was the Angel Gabriel cauſed to flie ſwiftly, chap. 9. 21. or as the Hebrew hath it, with wearineſſe of flight, to bring the Prophet an anſwer to his prayers. Who would not then pray to ſuch a God, as maketh his Angels Spirits, his Miniſters a flame of fire to convey ſeaſonable relief to his poor Suppliants?

Being haſtened] Heb. Frighted and headlonged, by a ſolicitous celerity, haſting and hurrying for life, as we ſay; being driven on to a diſpatch with utmoſt expedition, they threw themſelves onward their way, as the ſecond word here uſed, importeth.

And the decree was given at Shushan the Palace] So had the former decree againſt the Jewes been, chap. 3.15. the Poſt alſo haſtened as now. There is no doubt but many diſaffected perſons would jeare at this laſt decree, as extorteth from the King by the Queens importunity, and would perſwade themſelves and others, that the King was of the ſame minde as before, to have the Jewes rooted out, only to give his wife content he had ſet forth this counter-edict, which they would not take notice of. Thus thoſe that are ripe for ruine harden their own hearts, and haſten their own deſtruction.

Verſe 15. And Mordecai went out from the Preſence of the King] Whether he went, is not ſet down. It is probable, he either went to Hamans houſe, the overſight whereof was committed to him by Eſther; or that he went to ſome other parts of the City, upon the publick emploiment, whereof now he had his hands full: and therefore all his faculties were in motion, and every motion ſeemed a well-guided action, as one ſaith well of Queen Elizabeth, when ſhe firſt came to the Crown.

In royal apparel] Suitable to his new condition. This he might lawfully do, no doubt, as did Joſeph, Daniel, Solomon. Generally thoſe that are in Kings houſes are clothed in ſofts, and go gorgeouſly. There is indeed a blame-worthy exceſſe herein, Zeph. 1.8. Athenæus. Iſa. 3.18. Alcisthenes his coſtly cloak, prized at one hundred and twenty talents. Demetrius King of Macedony his robe of State, which none of his Succeſſours would weare, propter invidioſam impendii magnificentiam; Herods cloth of ſilver, which by refraction of the Sun-beams upon it, gave ſuch a ſplendour, that the fooliſh people for that and for his ſpeech, cried him up for a god. Good Mordecai thought never a whit the better of himſelf for his gay clothing: neither did his heart riſe with his habit, as the boat doth with the water that carrieth it. He affecteth not this change, but rather accepteth it: he endureth it rather then deſireth it. Sheeps-ruſſet would pleaſe him every whit as well as cloth of tiſſue, but that the King will have it ſo; and being now the ſecond man in the Kingdome, he muſt go accordingly, leſt he ſhould be ſleighted, as Ageſilaus King of Sparta was by the Perſians for his over-plain habit. Veſtis virum facit, a man is eſteemed as he is arrayed: cultuſque conceſſus atque magnificus, comely and coſtly attire addeth authority, as Quintilian long ſince obſerved.

And with a great crown of gold] We reade not that Haman had any ſuch. It may be the King had beſtowed it upon Mordecai as a ſpecial favour, for having ſaved his life, chap. 2. Sure it is, that he gave it him for a better cauſe, then Alexander the Great did his crown of one hundred and eighty pounds, provided by him at a great Supper, and promiſed to him that ſhould drink moſt. Mordecai had his temporal Crown upon far better termes, and yet looked for a more maſſie one in heaven, 2*Cor.* 4.17. even ſuch a weight of glory, as that if the body were not by the Power of God upheld, it were impoſſible it ſhould beare it.

And with a garment of fine linnen] Or of ſilk, which was anciently ſold for its weight in gold, as Pliny teſtifieth. This rich glutton is taxed for the too frequent uſe of it, Luke 16.19. It was his every dayes weare, as the Greek word importeth. Plin. l. 19. c. 1. ἐσθῆτι νυσταχῆ. Verb. frequentativum.

And purple] This was alſo much worn by great ones of old. Dives was daily clothed with it, and was ſo far from cloaking his pride, that he proclaimed it in his cloak. This purple colour was made, ſaith Lavater here, of the juice or blood of a certain ſhell-fiſh. Now, they ſay there is no right purple. Perhaps, when the foure Monarchies ceaſed, purple ceaſed with them.

And the City of Suſan rejoyced and was glad] Time was when they were in perplexity, chap. 3.5. now in jollity. Then ſaid they among the Heathen, the Lord hath done great things for them: The joyful Jews there by way of Antiphony anſwer, The Lord hath indeed done great things for us, whereof we are glad, Pſal. 126.2,3. Tremelius, after Aben-Ezra, rendreth it. And the City of Shushan ſhone: the Lilly was now moſt lovely and lightſom. The word ſignifieth properly hinnivit, neighed as an horſe: which he doeth not but when he is well-pleaſed. The whole City was well apaid, but the poor Jewes were over-joyed; ſo that their mouth was filled with laughter, and their tongue with ſinging: This is the import of the Metaphor here uſed. Lucebat.

Verſe 16. The Jews had light and gladneſſe] Truly the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun, Eccl. 11.7. Such as have been long ſhut up in a dark dungeon, as Joſeph will ſurely ſay ſo. Theſe Jews had for two months & more layn buried alive, as it were in heavineſſe and horrour, they walked in the very vale of the ſhadow of death, the darkeſt ſide of death, death in its moſt hideous and horrid repreſentations, ſtared them in the face.

as

Luctus ubique pavor, & plurima mortis imago. Virg.

Their Motto at the beſt was that of the City of Geneva out of Job, Poſt tenebras ſpero lucem, after darkneſſe we have ſome faint hopes of life. But now it was otherwiſe with them. Light was riſen to theſe righteous, and joy to theſe upright in heart. Judæis fuit lux & lætitia (or as Tremelius rendreth it, illuſtris lætitia, famous gladneſſe) gaudium & gloria, unſpeakable joy and full of glory, as St. Peter phraſeth it, an exuberancy of ſpiritual joy and inward comfort, fitter to be believed, then poſſible to be diſcourſed. For we may not think, that the joy and gladneſſe here mentioned, was no more then that of profane and carnal people, upon the receipt of ſome ſpecial mercy, or ſignal deliverance. They rejoyce (harlot-like) in the gift, but not in the Giver; they gnabble upon the ſhell, but taſte not of the kernel. The joy that theſe Jewes had, was the fruit of faſting and prayer, according to that of our Saviour. Ask, that your joy may be full. Pray that ye may joy. The fountain of it was the light of Gods loving countenance: it was φῶς ὃ σωτήριον, (as Joſephus hath it here) a ſalvifical light. The matter of it was the happy change of their late lamentable condition: and this as a pledge of that light of life eternal. See Pſal. 23. 5, 6. the end of it was a teſtification of their hearty thankfulneſſe to God, for his unconceivable loving kindneſſe, a breaking forth into thoſe or the like words of the Pſalmiſt, Bleſſed be the Lord, who daily loadeth us with benefits: even the God of our ſalvation. Selah. He that is our God is the God of ſalvation; and unto God the Lord belong the iſſues from death, Pſalme 68. 19, 20. Job 17.

And gladneſſe] Habitual joy, ſolid and ſubſtantial. Crede mihi, res ſevera eſt, gaudium verum. Beleeve me, ſaith Seneca, true joy is a ſevere and ſolid buſineſſe, that few men are acquainted with; It is indeed the juſt mans jewel, ſuch as the ſtranger may not meddle with, Prov. 14. 13. he is flatly forbidden it, Hoſ. 9. 1. The wicked mans joy is of another alloy, then that of the righteous. The light of a candle is fed with ſtinking taliow, but the light of the Sun hath influence from heaven to feed it, and therefore is not ſo ſoon blown out. Like as together with Manna there fell a dew, ſo together with temporal mercies and deliverances, there is a ſecret influence of God to a ſpiritual heart, as there was to theſe good Jewes; and thence their ſo well rooted gladneſſe. It was ſuch as did not only wet the mouth, but warm the heart; ſmooth the brow, but fill the breaſt; it was more inward, as the windowes of Solomons Temple were wider within then without. Whereas on the contrary, the wickeds joy is but in the face only, and not in the heart, 2 Cor. 5. 12. it is but the hypocriſie of mirth, like a little counterfeit complexion. It is but a cold armful, as Lycophron ſaid of an ill wife, or as Lamech's ſecond wives name, was Zillah, that is, the ſhadow of a wife, ſo is this, the ſhadow of gladneſſe, the ſubſtance is wanting. λυκόφρων σκιᾶς γαμετῆς ἄγαλμα.

And honour] Heb. weight, account, eſteem. The poor Jewes formerly ſlighted, were now highly honoured: chari & rari, as Eſa. 43. 4. bright and glorious as the word ſignifieth, Jeh 31. 26. precious and ponderous, ſo that their name was much let by, as 1 Sam. 18. 30. This was the Lords own work, for it is he that gives credit, and faſhioneth mens opinions: he, beſides wiſdom, gave Solomon honour.

Verſe 17. And in every Province, and in every City] Not at Shuſhan only, where it began, but thoroughout the whole Empire there was a general joy among the Jewes. For albeit the worſt was not yet paſt with them: but the thirteenth of Adar is meant ſtill by Hamans abettours to be a bloody day, (and this the Jewes knew well enough, and therefore prepared for the encounter, ſo that they could not be without their feares and anxieties,) yet the joy of the Lord was their ſtrength. Their hopes and prayers were like thoſe of David, Pſal. 138. 8. The Lord will perfect that which concerneth us; thy mercy, O Lord, endureth for ever; forſake not the works of thine own hands.

Bern. The Jewes had joy and gladneſſe] Gaudium in re, gaudium in ſpe; gaudium de poſſeſſione, gaudium de promiſſione; gaudium de præſenti exhibitione, gaudium de futura expectatione. The Perſians might revel, but the Jewes only rejoyced. See the Note on *ver.*16.

A feaſt and a good day] Convivium & hilaria, a compotation and a merry meeting, ſuch as the Saints have here, in their foretaſts of eternal life, thoſe ſweet-meats of the feaſt of a good conſcience, (ſo Mr. Latimer called the aſſurance of heaven) which they have here, before they come to that ful feaſt above. This feaſt and good day here mentioned, was but a preparation unto that in the following chapter, when the warfare was accompliſhed, and all feares removed, and God ſaid, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, &c.

And many of the people of the Land became Jewes] That is, they were proſelyted, profeſſing the Jewiſh Religion, and ſiding with them: ſome in ſincerity doubtleſſe, and ſome out of ſiniſterity, and for ſelf-reſpects, becauſe they ſaw the King favoured them, the Queen and Mordecai were altogether of them and for them, &c.

Ovid. Triſt. l. 1. Mobile ſic ſequitur fortunæ lumina vulgus.

So that mixed multitude, *Exod.*12.38. moved with miracles, removed out of Egypt with the Iſraelites, took hold of the skirts of theſe Jewes, and ſaid, We will go with you, *Zech.*8.23. So in Davids dayes, whileſt he dealt prudently and proſpered, ſo that he became the head of the heathen, a people whom he had not known offered him their ſervice, and ſtrangers feinedly ſubmitted themſelves unto him, *Pſal.*18.43,44. The like they did in Solomons dayes, as Joſephus relateth; as alſo, that the people then were very careful how they received ſuch Proſperity-Proſelytes. So, many ſtrangers followed the captives returning out of Babylon, under the conduct of Zorobabel: and many heathens joyned themſelves to the Chriſtian Congregations, under Conſtantine the firſt ChriſtianEmperour. The Hunnes well-beaten by the Chriſtians, concluded that their God was the true God, and received the Goſpel. Thus, whether it be in pretence or in truth, (as Saint Paul hath it) that people come in, God is glorified, and his Church amplified, and the Saints therein do rejoyce, yea, and will rejoyce, Phil. 1.18.

For the feare of the Jews fell upon them] So that either for love or feare they conformed to the Jewiſh way of worſhip, or at leaſt they forbare to attempt againſt them, whom now they looked upon as Heavens darlings. Whether Ahaſhuerus himſelf were drawn by the faith and piety of Eſther and Mordecai, to embrace the true Religion, is not expreſſed. It is hard for Princes drowned in delights, to deny themſelves, and to yield the obedience of faith. The poor receive the Goſpel, *Mat.*11.5. the leſſer fiſhes bite ſooneſt: the Lamb and the Dove were offered up in ſacrifice, not the Lion and the Eagle; Not many mighty, not many noble are called, 1*Cor.*1.26. That this King was not converted, we have ground to believe, when as, after this, we read that in his expedition into Greece, he was angry with mountaines, windes, rivers, elements, no otherwiſe then as if they had been men, cauſing the ſea to be beaten with three hundred ſtripes for battering his bridge of boats, and caſting a paire of fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was ſubject. Let him be what he will, God made uſe of him for the good of his people, and ſo over-awed the malignant Perſians, that they had (very many of them) no minde to meddle.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe. 1. Now in the twelfth moneth, &c.]

THat lucky time, as Haman had deemed it, but was deluded by the devil, (the Author of all ſuch Arts and lots of divination, to foretel future arbitrary events) qui etſi ſemel videatur verax, millies eſt mendax, & ſemper fallax; who, if he ſometimes hit upon the truth, yet uſually cozeneth thoſe that truſt to him. Thus he ſerved Balaam the Sorcerer ſlain by the ſword of Iſrael; Creſus taken priſoner by Cyrus: Ahab ſlain at Ramoth-Gilead: Julian the Apoſtate going againſt the Perſians: Walter Earle of Athol, who murthered his Maſter James the firſt King of Scots, in hope to attain to the Crown. Crowned indeed he was, but not as his witches and ſorcerers had ambiguouſly inſinuated with the Crown of that Realme, but with a crown of red hot iron clap't upon his head, being one of the tortures wherewith he ended at once his wicked dayes and deſires. The Pope to honour and encourage the Leaguers in France, ſent them conſecrated pictures and medals! promiſing them thereby good ſucceſſe againſt the Huguenots, but God confuted and defeated them all: as he did likewiſe Tyrone in Ireland, to whom, among other trinkets, the Pope had ſent a Plume of Phœnix feathers; a meer colluſion. Buchole. Hector. Boeth. Cárlt. Rem.

When the Kings commandment and decree drew near, &c.] Both that for the Jewes, and the other againſt them. This latter was not reverſed, though the former were publiſhed. The King, it ſeemeth, greatly cared not for the lives of his ſubjects; ſith he would not ſo much as privately hint to them to be quiet, and to let the Jewes alone: Such an intimation as this might have ſaved the lives of ſeventy five thouſand of them. But God had an holy hand in it, for the juſt puniſhment of thoſe blood-thirſty Perſians, confident in the good ſucceſſe of their ſorceries, having made hell their refuge, but it failed them.

In the day, that the enemies of the Jewes hoped, &c.] But their hope ran aſlope, as they ſay; their lucky day deceived them. Wicked mens hope, when they moſt need it, will be as the giving up of the ghoſt, and thats but cold comfort, Job. 11. ult. and as the ſpiders web, Job 18. 13, 14. who gets to the top of the window, as high as ſhe can, and then when ſhe falls ſhe falls to the bottom, for nothing ſtayes her. From ſuch high hopes fell our Engliſh Papiſts, firſt, when Queen Mary died You hope and hope (ſaid Dale the Promoter to Julian Lining, whom he had apprehended) but your hope ſhall end in a rope; for though the Queen faile, ſhe that you hope for ſhall never come at it: for there is my Lord Cardinals grace, and many more between her and it. Secondly, at Queen Elizabeths death, that long-look'd-for day, as they called it, triumphing before the victory, and ſelling the hide before they had taken the beaſt. This they had done before in eighty eight, when in aſſurance of victory, they had ſtiled their forces the Invincible Armada: and alſo afterwards at the Powder-plot, when they had preſumptuouſly diſpoſed of the chief offices, holds and revenues of the land; like as before the Pharſalian field was fought, the Pompeians were in ſuch miſerable ſecurity, that ſome of them contended for the Prieſthood, which was Cæſars office: others diſpoſed of the Conſulſhips and Offices in Rome: So at the batte of Aginecurt in France, where our Henry the fifth won the day, the French were ſo confident of a victory, that they ſent to King Henry, to know what ranſome he would give. A preſumptuous confidence goes commonly bleeding home, when an humble fear returnes in triumph. Acts & Mon. fol. 1871. Heyl. Geog. 407. Speed. 745.

Though it was turned to the contrary] By a ſweet and gracious Providence of God, whoſe glory it is to help at a pinch, to alter the Scene all on the ſudden, to begin where we have given over, and to cauſe a ſtrange turne of things, according to that of the Pſalmiſt; God ſhall ſend from heaven and ſave me (when it might ſeem to ſome that ſalvation it ſelf could not ſave me) he ſhall ſend forth his mercy and his truth, Pſal. 57. 3. and then what ſhould hinder the Churches happineſſe.

That the Jewes had rule over them that hated them] They dominered over their enemies as ſo many Sultans. So true is that of the Preacher, Man knoweth not his time: but as the fiſhes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the ſnare, ſo are the ſonnes of men ſnared in an evil time, when it falleth ſuddenly upon them, Eccl. 9. 12. ישלש׳.

Security is the certain usher of destruction, and God delighteth, by turning the scale, to retaliate, as he did upon the Egyptians at the red sea; the Philistines at Mizpeh: these Hamanists, and our powder-Papists. See. Psal.7.16.

Verse 2. The Jewes gathered themselves together] They were læti in Domino, sed non securi, as Bernard hath it. They had prayed, but yet provided for the thirteenth of Adar, which by many was meant still to be a bloody day, notwithstanding the knowen favour of the King, and the patronage of Mordecai. The Hamanists would join together to perform that sentence, whereof the Authour repented and had rued it. (That old enmity, *Gen.*3.15. will never out of the Serpents seed,) the Jewes therefore well and wisely get together, and unite their forces, that they may make a powerful resistance. They are noted by Tacitus to be a nation at great unity amongst themselves, and to hate all others. On of the main scandals they do at this day take from Christians, is, their dissension, that mother of dissolution, as Nazianzen calleth it. The Turks pray to God to keep us still at variance, and say that their fingers shall sooner be all of one length, then we be of one minde. What a shame's this? If nothing else will, yet our common misery, and the hatred of our enemies should unite us, as it did these exiles, and it was foretold by Jeremy, *chap.*50.4. that Judah and Israel, that could not agree at other times, yet when they should be both in a weeping condition, they should better agree. So did Basil and Eusebius against the Arrians: Ridley and Hooper against the Papists, &c. And it is high time for us now to set aside our private emulations and exceptions; as the creatures in the Ark laid by their Antipathies within, because of the common danger of an inundation without.

Camer. med. histor. cent. 2. c. 23.

To lay hand on such as sought their hurt] To repel force with force, to kill and spoil those that sought to do so to them. This, nature prompted them to, (as was foremoted) and they had also the Kings warrant for it, and they kept themselves within compasse thereof, by not medling with any, but only those that molested them. See, chap. 8. 11.

And no man could withstand them] Tantum potest bona causa bonis usa consiliis & mediis, saith an Interpreter here. A good cause, a good conscience, and a good courage, what cannot these three do where they meet? How should any stand before those who are Deo armati, strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might? Pilates wife could warne him of medling with such: and Hamans wife could tell him, that a Jew might fall before a Persian, and get up again and prevaile. But if a Persian, or whosoever of the Gentiles begin to fall before a Jew, he can neither stand nor rise, *chap.*6.13. There is an invisible hand of Omnipotency, that striketh in for his owne; and confounds their opposites.

Eph.6 10.

For the fear of them fell upon all the people] This was the work, not of some Pan Deus Arcadiæ, (as the Heathens fancied,) but of God the sole giver of victory, who when he pleaseth affrighteth the Churches enemies, as he promiseth to do in many places. See *Exod.*23.27. *Deut.*11.2,3. *Jer.*46, &c. And as accordingly he did it on the Egyptians, Midianites, Philistines, Syrians, &c. And the like he did for Baldwin King of Jerusalem against the great Calyph; for the Hussites against all the force of Germany; for the Angrognians against the Popes army that came against them. The souldiers told their Captains, they were so astonished they could not strike, and that the Ministers with their prayers, conjured and bewitched them. So at the siege of Montabone, whensoever the people of God began to sing a Psalme, (as they usually did before their sallying forth) the enemies coming, acquainted with their practice, would so quake and tremble, crying, they come, they come, as though the wrath of God had been breaking out upon them. What was this handful of captives to the whole Persian Empire, that they should now become no lesse formidable to them, then not long after those few Grecians were to this Ahasuerus or Xerxes? who having covered the seas with his ships, and with a world of men passed over into Greece, was afterwards himselfe alone, in a small Fisher-boat glad to get back into Asia, to save his owne life.

Bapt. Egnat. l. 3

Act. & Mon. 883.

Spec. bel. sacr. 282.

Herodotus.

Verse 3. And all the Rulers of the Provinces — helped the Jewes] Heb. gave them a lift, sc. over the brook, the brake, or whatsoever lay in their way of deliverance. This they did out of their respect to the King, rather then for any great good will to the Jewes, who were generally hated for their Religion, and wished out of the world. Sit divus modo non sit vivus, said that Roman Emperour of his brother, whom he maliciously murthered.

Because

Because the feare of Mordecai fell upon them] But much more, because God himself over-awed them, and dispirited them. (See the Note on verse 2.) How else should he appear to be the God of the spirits of all flesh, and that in the thing wherein people deal proudly, he is above them? How should they come to know themselves to be but men, Psal. 9.20. and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit, &c. Isa. 31.3. if he did not otherwhiles make their hearts heartlesse, Hos. 7.11. their hands feeble, Jer. 6.24. Isa. 13.7. Ezek. 21.7. their eyes faile, Deut. 28.26. their knees knock together as Belshazzars did, Dan. 5.6. How else would they ever be brought to bring Presents unto him that ought to be feared. Psal. 76.7,8. and to say unto him, Lord be not thou a terrour to me, &c. Jer. 17.17? If Mordecai be feared, it is because God hath put a Majesty upon him, and made him dreadful, as Abraham likewise was to Abimelech, Gen. 21.22,23. David to Saul, 1 Sam. 18.29. the Baptist to Herod, our Saviour to the Pharisees, Mar. 11.18. Paul and Silas to their Persecutours. Acts 16.27, &c. And this the Lord still doth, that he may dwell upon earth, Psal. 68.18. scil. in his faithful worshippers, which wicked men would not suffer, if not thus rein'd in and restrain'd. And (2ly,) that praise may wait for him in Zion, and unto him may the vow be performed, Psal. 65.1. Exod. 8.11.

Verse 4. For Mordecai was great in the Kings house] So great a Favourite, as that it was dangerous to displease him: and most men coveted his favour. It was now in the Court and Kingdome of Persia, as it was once at Rome when Sejanus ruled the roast under Tiberius. Ut quisque Sejano intimus, ita ad Cæsaris amicitiam validus. Contra quibus infensus esse metu, & sordibus conflictabantur. His friends were Cæsars friends, and his enemies were in a very low and lamentable condition. Tacit.

And his fame went throughout all the Provinces] Auditio ejus, the report of him went farre and near. Per ora hominum volitabat, so the Vulgar Latine. He was Claros inter habens nomina clara viros.

It was every where discourst, that Mordecai was the Kings Darling, Kinsman, Counsellour, that he had saved the Kings life, and was therefore promoted to the highest dignity: that it were good getting in with him, who both could and would reciprocate and remunerate any that should well deserve of him and his people. How thankful the Lord Cromwell was to those that had done him any courtesie. See Act. and Mon. fol. 1083. How ungrateful Bishop Bonner was to the fame Lord Cromwell, who had been his great Patron, railing at him as the rankest heretick that ever lived, &c. See in fol. 1087. but this was after his death. Leoni mortuo vel mus insultat.

For this man Mordecai] Vir ille insignis, though he were but novus homo & peregrinis, a new-raised man, a stranger, and one that had brought in a strange alteration of things in the Court and Common-wealth: and therefore could not but be much envied and maligned, as far as men durst shew themselves against him; yet

He waxed greater and greater] Heb. he was going (that is, growing) and greatening. See the like Hebraisme, Prov. 4.18. Gen. 8.5. For why? he did gloria invidiam vincere, overtop, envie, and dazzle her eyes with his lustre; which, saith Sallust, is the hardest thing that can be. For as the tallest trees are weakest at the tops: so doth envy always aim at the highest. But maugre malice it self, Mordecai was in the number of those few that lived and died with glory, gotten by his piety, zeal, and other vertues: neither had his adversaries any thing to complain of him more then his greatnesse, as Camden saith of the old Earle of Essex. Difficilimum inter mortales. Camd. Eliz. fol. 531.

Verse 5. Thus the Jewes smote all their enemies] It was the Lords work, and therefore to do it negligently, to keep back their swords from blood, had been to incurre that curse, Jer. 48.10. as Saul did in sparing Agag; Ahab in shewing mercy to Benhadad, whom God had destined to destruction. These Jewes, as so many Justicers, were set up by God to do to death these desperate enemies; and sith there was no hope of curing, to fall to cutting, that others might heare and feare, and do no more so, but see and say with the Psalmist, Verily there is a reward for the righteous; verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth. 1 Sam. 15. Immedicabile vulnus ense recidendum. 1 Kings 10.42.

With the strokes of the sword, and slaughter, and destruction] Here then we see what punish-punishments they deserve that are enemies to the Church, and sooner or later they shall be sure of. For as hard weather rotteth not in the aire, so neither do the judgements against Persecutors. God himself hath against them, and will surely have his pennyworths of them: his hand that is lifted up in threatning, *Isa.*26.11. will not faile to fall down in punishing; and the higher it is lifted, the heavier it shall fall. Subito tollitur qui diu toleratur: They shall fall by the sword; they shall be a portion for foxes, Psal. 63.10. The Spoiler shall be spoiled, Esa. 33.1. and he that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword, *Rev.*13.10. See, 2*Thess.*1.6.

And did what they would unto those that hated them] Where it is to be hoped, that they furbished the sword of justice with the oyle of mercy, that they remembred that of the Philosopher, Posse & nolle nobile est, that in some cases a man must not do all that he may do: as there be some again, wherein severity ought to cast the scale. The Turks severity I can by no means like, that will rather cut off two innocent persons, then let one guilty man go free. Nor that of the Venetians, who punish with death such as cozen the State of but one penny, if it be proved against them. Again, care must be taken that justice be not executed (whether in a civil or military way) with a vindictive minde, but all selfish actions carefully strained out. Private revenge leaveth a stain upon a man some wayes innocent, witnesse Jehu, and puts an innocency upon the greatest offendour, witnesse Abner.

Zenecat. obs. polit.

Verse 6. And in Shushan the Palace] One would wonder that any here should offer to stir against the Jewes, so much favoured by the King, patronized by Mordecai, and well-appointed to withstand them. But they were mad with malice against Gods people, and ambitious of their own destruction. Hamans death still sticks in their stomacks, and they resolve to be revenged, whatever it stands them in. With like stoutnesse of stomack it was that Jezabel painted her face, and tired her head, when Jehu was come to Jezreel, and looking out at a window, said, Had Zimri peace, &c. Herein certainly she shewed her great stoutnesse, as if she would daunt Jehu, and out-brave him in the midst of his pomp and triumph, 2*Kings* 9.30,31. Divine vengeance suffereth not wicked people to rest, and to keep in their malice and mischief, but that they must break out and run headlong, like wilde beasts into the hunters toile, or upon the spears point, whereby they perish.

Verse 7.8,9. And Parshandatha, and Dalphon, —— and Vajezatha] This Vajezatha was the youngest, but most malicious of them all against the Jewes, as their Doctours guesse and gather from the little Zain, and great Vau, found in his name.

Verse 10 The ten sonnes of Haman] Of whom he had so boasted, chap 5.12. and bore himself bold, as believing that being so full of children, he should leave the rest of his substance to his babes, *Psal.*17.14. These ten likely were ring-leaders to those Hamanists in Shushan, that durst appear in so bad a cause, being evil egges of an evil bird.

Κακῦ κόρακος κακὸν ὠὸν.

Non enim fieri allo modo potest, ut ex me & Agrippina vir bonus nascatur, said Domitius the father of Nero, It cannot be, that of my self and Agrippina, should come any good man. Haman brought up his sonnes to bring down his house: and was a Parricide to them rather then a Parent. His darling Vajezatha he corrected not, but cockered: no wonder therefore that he proved to be of a gastrill-kinde, (disquieting his own nest) of a viperous brood, and therefore, though not hanged together with his father, and the whole family, (as the Apocryphal additions of Esther, chap. 16. 18. tell us, but not truly) yet slain in this insurrection at Shushan, together with the rest of his brethren: the good people crying out as once they did at Rome, when the sonne of Maximinus the Emperour was put to death: Ex pessimo genere ne catulum quidem habendum. Let not one whelp be left of so evil a litter.

Dio in Ner.

But on the spoile laid they not their hand] Left the King should be damnified, or themselves justly taxed of covetousnesse and cruelty. Give none offence, neither to the Jewes, nor to the Gentiles, nor to the Church of God, 1*Cor.*10.32. This is oft repeated in this chapter, to their great commendation; that although, by the Kings grant they might have taken the spoile, *chap.*8.11. yet they did it not. 1. To shew that they were Gods Executioners, not thieves and robbers. 2. To gratifie the King for his courtesie towards them, by leaving the spoile wholly to his Treasury. 3. It is not unlikely, saith an Interpreter, that Mordecai and Esther had admonished them how ill Saul had sped with his spoiles of the Amalekites, and Achan with his wedge of gold, which which ſerved but to cleave his body and ſoul aſunder, and his babyloniſh garment, which proved to be his winding-ſheet.

Non semper omnis quæ licent sunt facienda. Lavat.

Fevard.

Verſe 11. On that day, the number of thoſe that were ſlain] This was done haply, by ſome Malignants, that would thereby have incenſed the King againſt the Jewes. Or elſe the King (as became a good Shepherd of his people) taketh an account of his ſlain ſubjects, by diligent enquiry made thereinto. Whereupon, he might have repented him, (now in cold blood) of his grant to Eſther and the Jewes thoſe forreigners, againſt his natural ſubjects, who had done nothing but by his command, &c. But God ſo ordered it, that all this notwithſtanding the King was well content with that which was done; as ſuppoſing that Hamans ſonnes and complices would be ſeeking revenge, and plotting miſchief, if left alive. He therefore goeth merrily in to the Queen, acquainting her with the number of the ſlain, and giving her leave to ask of him, whatever more ſhe deſired to be done. This was the Lords doing all along.

Simi ia ſunt boni paſtoris & boni regis ope a. Cyr 5. apud Xenoph.

Verſe 12. And the King ſaid unto Eſther the Queen] He would needs be the meſſenger himſelf, as preſuming the newes would be moſt welcome to her, whom he deſired to gratifie, rather out of affection of love, then deſire of juſtice; elſe he would never have ſo little reſpected the ſlaughter of his ſubjects, armed by his own command.

What have they done in the reſt of the Kings Provinces?] This he ſhould have uttered with grief and regret; accounting the blood of his ſubjects dear and precious; and not making light of ſo many mens lives loſt by his default. But many Kings make as little reckoning of their ſubjects lives, as Charles the ninth did of the Huguenots in the French Maſſacre; or as the grand Seignior doth of his Aſapi, a kinde of common ſouldiers, borne for moſt part of Chriſtian Parents, and uſed by him in his wars, for no other end but to blunt the ſwords of his enemies, or to abate the firſt fury, and thereby to give the eaſier victory to his Janizaries and better ſouldiers: This the Turkiſh Tyrants hold for good policy. How much better that Romane General, who ſaid, that he had rather ſave one Citizen, then ſlay twenty enemies? and Edward the Confeſſour, who when his Captains promiſed, for his ſake they would not leave one Dane alive in his land, thought it better to lead a private and unbloody life, then to be a King by ſuch bloody butcheries?

Turk. hiſt. 317.

Camd. Rem. p. 214.

Now what is thy petition? and it ſhall be granted thee, &c.] An uxorious Prince, not propitious only to his Queen, but morigerous and obſequious. He was only her clay and wax; and had ſhe been an Eve, a Jezabel, or an Eudoxia, what might ſhe not have done with him, or had of him? Our King Edward the third was wholly poſſeſt and ruled by his Miſtris Dame Alice Pierce, an impudent woman, who ſo wrought upon the Kings impotencies, that ſhe cauſed the Speaker of the Parliament, to be committed to perpetual impriſonment at Nottingham. At length ſhe grew ſo inſolent, that ſhe intermedled with Courts of Juſtice, and other offices, where ſhe her ſelf would ſit to effect her deſires. But though holy Eſther was none ſuch: yet it behoveth Kings to be leſſe Prodigal of their Promiſes, and not to leave the lives and eſtates of their liege ſubjects, to the luſts of that weaker ſexe eſpecially; as having leſſe of diſcretion, and more of immoderation.

Verſe 13. Then ſaid Eſther, If it pleaſe the King, &c.] See chap. 5. 4, 8.

Let it be granted to the Jewes, &c.] The enemies at Shuſhan could not be all caught the firſt day; leſt therefore thoſe that lurked ſhould hereafter prove troubleſome to the Church by hatching new plots, ſhe begs, that they alſo may receive condigne puniſhment, and Hamans ſonnes be hanged up for an example. This ſhe requeſted not out of private and perſonal ſpleen to any, but for the glory of God and the Churches peace. Had her aims been otherwiſe then good, her good actions could not have ſhewed her a good woman. For, though a good aime doth not make a bad action good, as we ſee in Uzzah; yet a bad aime maketh a good action bad, as we ſee in Jehu. Lavaters note may not here be let ſlip; the diligence that Eſther uſed in rooting out her temporal enemies, ſhould quicken us to do the like to our ſpiritual, viz. thoſe evil affections, motions and paſſions, that warre againſt the ſoule. Theſe be our Medes and Perſians with whom we muſt make no truce, but maintaine a conſtant deadly feud, till we have maſtered and mortified them all, Col. 3. 5. Rom. 8. 13.

8.13. for till that be done effectually, we must never look to have true peace, either within our selves, or with others.

And let Hamans ten sonnes be hanged] Had Haman been now alive, himself by right should have been their Hangman. There was a young man among the Switzers, that went about to usurp the Government, and alter their free State. Him they condemned to death, and appointed his father for Executioner, as the cause of his evil education. But because Haman was hanged before, his sons (though dead) shall now hang with him. Neither was it cruelty or revenge in Esther, to crave this of the King, but zeale to God, and fervent love to his people, whose welfare she sought by all means possible to promote. As for her self, she could joyfully say of Haman, as David did of Doeg. Lo, this is the man that made not God his strength, but trusted in the abundance of his riches, and strengthened himself in his wickednesse. But I am like a green Olive tree in the House of God; I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever. I will praise thee for ever, because thou hast done it: and I will wait on thy Name, for it is good before thy Saints, *Psal.*52.7,8,9.

Verse 14. And the King commanded it so to be done] He feared not, that thereupon the people would rise and call him Tyrant to his teeth: as when Bajazet the second had cast Achmetes Bassa into prison, the Janizaries in an uproar insolently answered the great Turk, that they would by and by teach him, as a drunkard, a beast, and a rascal, to use his great place and calling with more sobriety and discretion. Ahashuerus well enough knew his own power, and was therefore the more bold in disposing, after this manner, of the lives of his subjects; who were ready to say to him as once Tiberius did to Justinus. Si tu volueris, ego sum; si tu non vis, ego non sum: I am wholly yours to command.

Turk. hist. fol. 444.

And the decree was at Shushan] Dictum, concessum, illicò factum. The King was not willing to crosse Esther in any thing, saith Josephus.

And they hanged Hamans ten sonnes] For greater ignominy and terrour to others. Thus God commanded the heads of the twelve Princes of Israel, to be hanged up against the Sun, *Numb.*25.4. Joshua hanged the King of Ai upon a Gallowes until the evening, *chap.*8. and after that the five Kings of the Amorites, *chap.*10. God hang'd up Absalom with his own bare hand.

Absalon marte furens pensilis arbore, obit.

Verse 15. For the Jewes that were in Shushan] They did not stand to cast perils, or frame excuses, but with singular courage and constancy went an end with the work, whereunto they saw themselves to be rightly called by God and man, keeping themselves still within the compasse of the Kings Edict, and so carrying the matter, that those that were slaine, were judged by their own fellow-Citizens to have deservedly perished.

And slew three hundred men at Shushan] Besides the former five hundred. All these with Haman their Chieftain, might have lived long in honour and safety, could they have kept them quiet. But by the just and secret judgement of God, they kindled a fire with great force, that consumed themselves; according to that in the Prophet Esay, *chap.*33.10,11,12. Now will I rise, saith the Lord of recompences, now will I be exalted, now will I lift up my self. Ye shall conceive chaffe, ye shall bring forth stubble, your breath as fire shall devoure you, and the people shall be as the burnings of lime, as thorns cut up shall they be burnt in the fire.

But on the prey they laid not, &c.] See verse 10.

Verse 16. But the other Jewes that were, &c.] Though they were but a Nation scattered and pealed, a contemptible and feeble folk, lately destined to destruction; yet by faith they subdue Kingdomes, escape the edge of the sword, out of weaknesse become strong, wax valiant in fight, turne to flight whole Armies of the Aliens, *Heb.*11.33,34. prevaile and prosper against all the malignant power of Persia: Thus were they holped with a little help, (as it is, *Dan.*11.34.) that God might have a great deal of glory, as indeed he had.

Ga-

Gathered themſelves together] United their forces, as verſe 2, which whileſt our Anceſtours, (the old Britans) did not againſt the Romanes who invaded them, they were eaſily and quickly conquered. Et dum pugnabant ſinguli vincebantur vniverſi, ſaith Tacitus, who was here with his father-in-law Agricola, an eye-witneſſe of what he writeth.

And ſtood for their lives] Not one whereof was loſt in this hot encounter, in this ſharp revenge they took off their avowed enemies. This was even a miracle of Gods mercy, Who would not feare thee, O King of Nations, &c.

And had reſt from their enemies.] Or, That they might have reſt from their enemies; who would not otherwiſe be quieted, but by the letting out of their life-blood: but would make an aſſault upon the harmleſſe Jewes, though it were to die for it: ſo that upon the matter they were their own deathſmen, beſides the wilful loſſe of their immortal ſoules, which our Saviour ſheweth, *Mat.*16.26. to be a loſſe, 1. Incomparable. 2. Irreparable.

And ſlew of their foes ſeventy and five thouſand] Neither was it any diſhonour to them to be God Almighties ſlaughtermen. Even the good Angels are Executioners of Gods righteous judgements, as they were at Sodom, in Sennacheribs army, and oft in the Revelation. There cannot be a better or more noble act then to do juſtice upon obſtinate Malefactours.

But they laid not their hands on the prey] They would not once foule their fingers therewith. No godly man in Scripture is taxed for covetouſneſſe, that fordid ſin. See the Note on verſe 10.

Verſe 17. On the thirteenth day of the moneth Adar] On this day they ſtood for their lives, that they might reſt from their enemies. And accordingly

On the fourteenth day of the ſame, reſted they] i. e. the very next day after their deliverance; they would not defer it a day longer, but kept an holy reſt with Pſalmes and ſacrifices of praiſe, (thoſe calves of their lips) the very next day, whiles the deliverance was yet freſh, and of recent remembrance. This they knew well that God expected, *Deut.*23.21. and that he conſtrueth delayes for denials, *Hag.*1.2,4. He gave order that no part of the thank-offering ſhould be kept unſpent till the third day; to teach us to preſent our praiſes when benefits are newly received, which elſe would ſoon wax ſtale and putrifie as fiſh, I will pay my vowes now, now, ſaith David, *Pſal.*116.18. Hezekiah wrote his Song the third day after his recovery: Queen Elizabeth, when exalted from a priſoner to a Princeſſe, and from miſery to Majeſty, before ſhe would ſuffer her ſelf to be mounted in her charet, to paſſe from the Tower to Weſtminſter, ſhe very devoutly lifted up her hands and eyes to heaven, and gave God humble thanks for that remarkable change and turn of things. Englands Eliz.

And made it a day of feaſting and gladneſſe] Exhilarating and chearing up their good hearts, (that had long layen low) with a more liberal uſe of the creatures, that they might the better preach his praiſes, and ſpeak good of his name: and that, ſith they could not offer up unto him other ſacrifices preſcribed in the Law, becauſe they were far from the Temple, they might not be wanting with their ſacrifice of thankſgiving, which God preferreth before an oxe that hath hornes and hoofs, ſaith the Pſalmiſt. Words may ſeem to be but a poor and ſlight recompence: but Chriſt (ſaith Nazianzen) calleth himſelf the Word; and this was all the fee that he looks for for his cures, Go and tell what God hath done for thee. With theſe calves of our lips let us cover Gods Altar; and we ſhall finde, that although he will neither eat the fleſh of bulls, nor drink the blood of goats, yet if we offer unto God thankſgiving, and pay our vowes unto the moſt High, it will be look't upon as our reaſonable ſervice, *Rom.*12.1. Pſal 50.13,14.

Verſe 18. On the thirteenth day thereof, and on the fourteenth] What they could not do on one day, they did it on another. Men muſt be ſedulous and ſtrenuous in Gods work, doing it with all their might, and redeeming time for that purpoſe, *Eccl.*9.10.

On both theſe dayes they deſtroyed their enemies] They did their work thoroughly: Let us do ſo in ſlaying our ſpiritual enemies: not ſparing any Agag, not reſerving this Zoar or that Rimmon: but dealing by the whole body of ſinne, as the King of Moab did with the King of Edom, Amos 2.1. burn the bones of it to lime: deſtroy it not to the halves as Saul, but hew it in pieces before the Lord, as Samuel. As Joſhua deſtroyed all the Canaanites he could lay hold on. As Aſa ſpared not his own mother; as Solomon drew Joab from the Altar to the ſlaughter; and put to death Adoniah the darling, ſo muſt we deale by our corruptions, ferretting and fetching them out of their lurking holes as theſe Jewes did, their enemies on the fourteenth day, that had eſcaped the day before. Sith we muſt either kill them up all, or be killed by them; for as that one baſtard Abimelech ſlew all Gideons ſonnes upon one ſtone; ſo one luſt left unmortified will undo the ſoul. And as one ſinner, ſo one ſin may deſtroy much good, Eccl. 9.18.

And on the fifteenth day of the moneth they reſted] So ſhall the Saints do after death, which will be the accompliſhment of mortification, for he that is dead, is freed from ſin, Rom. 6.7. and filled with joy, Iſa. 35.10. The ranſomed of the Lord ſhall then return and come to Zion with ſongs, and everlaſting joy upon their heads, they ſhall obtain joy, and gladneſſe, and ſorrow, and ſighing ſhall flee away.

Verſe 19. Therefore the Jewes of the villages, &c.] Pagani. This is expounded in the next words.

that dwelt in the unwalled townes] Such as is the Hague in Holland, that hath two thouſand houſholds in it; and chuſeth rather to be counted the principal village of Europe, then a leſſer City.

Made the fourteenth day, &c.] See verſe 17. while the Jewes in Shuſhan were deſtroying the remainder of their enemies. This day was afterwards called Mordecai's Holiday.

Ἡ Μαρδοχαϊκὴ ἡμέρα. 2 Mac. 15.36.

And of ſending portions one to another] See Nehem. 8.10. To the rich they ſent in courteſie; to the poor in charity, and both theſe to teſtifie their thankfulneſſe to God for their lives, liberties and eſtates, ſo lately and graciouſly reſtored unto them.

Verſe 20. And Mordecai wrote theſe things] He wrote with authority as a Magiſtrate (ſay ſome) that the Jewes ſhould keep theſe dayes with greateſt ſolemnitie. He wrote the relation of theſe things before-mentioned, ſay others, as the ground of this annual feſtivitie. Or elſe it may be meant more generally, that Mordecai was the Penman of the Holy Ghoſt, in writing this whole book of Eſther, as was before hinted.

And ſent letters unto all the Jewes, — both nigh and farre] Propinquis & longinquis, that they might all agree together about the time and manner of praiſing God: and ſo ſing the great Hallelujah. See, 2 Cor. 1.11. 2 Chron. 20.26,27,28. Pſal. 124.1,2. and 126.1. Pſal. 136. penned for a recorded publike forme, to praiſe God among the multitude, Pſal. 109.20. and in the great Congregation, Pſal. 22.22,25. David would go into the preſſes of people, and there praiſe the Lord, Pſal. 116.18,19. This was to walk worthy of the Lord, Col. 1.10. This was to make a proportionable return, for we are Gods ſoile, and our thanks his crop.

Verſe 21. To eſtabliſh this among them] ſcil. by a law, that they ſhould yearly on thoſe two dayes reſt, and repeat among themſelves that ſignal deliverance, propagating the remembrance of it to all poſterity. Mordecai well knew that eaten bread is ſoon forgotten, that deliverances are uſually but nine dayes wonderment, that it is eaſie and ordinary with people, to rob God and wrong themſelves by their unthankfulneſſe, which forfeiteth former mercies and foreſtalleth future, he therefore ſetleth it upon them, ſaith the text, ſtatuendo eis ut facerent, he exacteth it of them by vertue of his office.

That they ſhould keep the fourteenth day, and the fifteenth day] Both dayes, nam gaudet produci hæc ſolennitas, as Auſtin ſaid of the feaſt of Pentecoſt, ſuch a ſolemnity ſhould be drawn out to the full length, as the ſilk-worm ſtretcheth forth her ſelf, before ſhe ſpinneth her fineſt thread. Jehoſaphat and his people ſhewed themſelves unſatisfyable in their praiſes, which they preſented again, and again, 2 Chron. 20.26,27. And good Hezekiah, when he obſerved in his ſubjects ſuch a ſtoat of affections at the Paſſeover, and that they were in ſo good a frame, took counſel with them to keep other ſeven dayes, and they kept other ſeven dayes with gladneſſe, 2 Chron. 30.21,22,23. See with what a flood of words holy David poureth forth his ſoul in prayer, Pſal. 145.1. to 8. as if therewith he would even fill up the diſtance between God and himſelf. Sometimes he ſeemeth to forget himſelf in point of praiſing God; for he will, like a bird, having got a note, record it over and over, as Pſal. 136. And in the laſt Pſalme, there are but ſix verſes: yet twelve twelve Hallelujahs. He concludeth, Let every thing that hath breath, or, Let every breath praiſe the Lord, let it be as the ſmoke of the Tabernacle, when peace-offerings were offered, Tam Dei meminiſſe opus eſt quàm reſpirare, ſaith Chryſoſtom, we have as much need to remember God, as to take breath.

Verſe 22. As the dayes wherein the Jewes reſted from their enemies] And therefore they in thankfulneſſe would conſecrate the ſame as an holy reſt unto the Lord, calling the fourteenth day, Feſtum ſortium minus, the leſſer feſtivity of lots; and the fifteenth day, Feſtum ſortium majus, the greater feſtivity of lots, as Druſius telleth us.

And the moneth] They thought the better ever after of the moneth Adar, that magnificent moneth, wherein was that golden day of their deliverance. O dieculam illam, &c. dexter ſanè præ lætitia mihi ſalit oculus, ſaid he. Oh that joyful day! Oh that the Calendar of my life might be filled with ſuch feſtivals!

Which was turned unto them from ſorrow to joy] As God remembred poor Joſeph, and turned his fetters into a chaine of gold, his rags into robes, his ſtocks into a charet, his priſon into a Palace, his brown bread and water into manchet and wine. And as he had turned again the captivity of his people as the ſtreams in the South, *Pſal.*126.4. So here he had made a great alteration, bringing them from the jawes of death to the joys of a glorious deliverance; turning their ſadneſſe into gladneſſe, their ſighing into ſinging, their muſing into muſick, their teares into triumph, luctum in lætitiam, ſaccum in ſericum, jejunium in epulum, manuum retortionem in applauſum, &c. And this is no new thing in the Church.

Verſe 23. And the Jewes undertook to do as they had begun] Which yet they could not do, unleſſe God gave them an heart to do it. Holy David underſtood this, and therefore when he found that heat and height of good affections in his people, he prayed, O Lord God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael our fathers, keep this for ever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and ſtabliſh their heart unto thee, 1*Chron.*29.18. And when he had at another time undertook for himſelf, that if God would deliver him from blood-guiltineſſe, his tongue ſhould ſing aloud of Gods righteouſneſſe, he ſubjoynes (by way of correction, as if he were ſenſible that he had promiſed more then was in his power to perform) O Lord, open thou my lips, and my mouth ſhall ſhew forth thy praiſe, Pſal.51.14,15. The Hebrew, or rather Chaldee word here rendred Undertook, is of the ſingular number, to ſhew, that every particular Jew undertook for himſelf, and for his poſterity to all perpetuity. And indeed they keep this feaſt annually to this day, and exceedingly pleaſe themſelves in the reading of this hiſtory, counting and calling all ſuch Princes and States as croſſe them, Hamans, and wiſhing that they may be able one day to be avenged of them, as their fathers were of theſe Perſians, &c.

Verſe 24. Becauſe Haman the ſonne of Hammedatha the Agagite, &c.] In deteſtation of whoſe wicked plot, the Jewes at this day, when at this feaſt of Purim, they read the book of Eſther in their ſynagogues, as oft as they hear mention of Haman, they do with their fiſts and hammers beat upon the benches and boards, as if they did knock upon Hamans head; Lavater ſaith, the Papiſts in ſome countreyes do the like on Good-friday, when in the reading of the Goſpel, mention is made of Judas the Traitour. But as for Faux, Digby, Piercy, Catesby, and the reſt of that helliſh crue of Popiſh Hamans, treacherous Judaſſes, theſe they have crowned with freſh Encomiaſticks, and little leſſe then ſainted. Garnet (that bouteſeau) hath his picture ſet among the reſt of Rome's Saints, in the Jeſuites Church at Rome with this Inſcription, Voluiſſe ſat eſt, Prodigious impudency.

Anton. Meranta.lib.de Jud. cerem.

Cornè à Lap. in Apoc.7.3. Ger.1. Apol. Cont Jeſuet.

And had caſt Pur] But found to his coſt, that there is no inchantment againſt Jacob, neither any divination againſt Iſrael, but that, according to this time it ſhould be ſaid of Jacob and Iſrael, (ſaid by way of wonder at Gods doing on their behalf) what hath God wrought? Numb.23.23.

Ut contereret eos.

To conſume them] Heb. to cruſh them, as a thing cruſhed to pieces, as the leſſer beaſts are cruſhed by the Lion, or as things are broken with a maule.

Verſe 25. But when Eſther came] Heb. when ſhe came. This was the ſubject of the Jewes diſcourſe upon thoſe dayes, which they ſpent not in idle chat, but in telling one another what great things the Lord had done for them: relating all the particulars. All honourable mention was then made of Eſther and Mordecai; neither was Hamans μνὴ ἐγκωμίων· Memoria ejus ſicut vinum Libani, ſay the Jewes of thoſe they honour. Bud. Pand. Herod. l. 2.

malice inſtanced without utmoſt deteſtation: So true is that of Solomon, Prov. 10.7. The memory of the juſt is bleſſed, (or, is with praiſes, as the Septuagint there render it,) but the name of the wicked ſhall rot, as doth now the name of the Powder-plotters of Bonner, Gardiner, and other Popiſh Perſecutors.

Should return upon his own head] According to Pſal. 7.17. and haply not without alluſion to thoſe Piaculares & Obominales among the Grecians, which were certain condemned perſons, on whoſe heads they put the publick guilt, and then tumbled them into the ſea; or elſe to thoſe expiatory ſacrifices amongſt the Egyptians which were firſt curſed by them, and then caſt into the river, or ſold to the Grecian Merchants: in an apiſh imitation of the Hebrews ſcape-goat, and day of Atonement.

Verſ. 26. Wherefore they called theſe days Purim] Thereby to perpetuate the memory of that mercy, worthy to be engraven in pillars of marble: This was a notable name; for it ſerved to in-minde the Jewes of all that God had done for them at this bout: As there is edification in the choice of fit Pſalmes, 1 Cor. 14.26. ſo in the impoſing of fit names upon perſons, things, and times. As the Chriſtian Sabbath is to good purpoſe called the Lords day: and thoſe feſtivities of Eaſter and Whitſontide were not ſo fitly called Paſch, and Pentecoſt, as the Feaſt of the Lords Reſurrection, and of the ſending of the Holy Ghoſt. It ſhould certainly be the conſtant care of us all, to ſet up marks and monuments of Gods great mercies: ſo to preſerve the memory of them, which elſe will be moth-eaten. Such as were Abrahams Jehovah Iireh, Jacobs ſtone at Bethel, Moſes his Jehovah Niſſi, Aarons rod and pot of Manna, the twelve ſtones pitcht up in Jordan, the names of Gilgal, Ramath-Lehi, Aben-Ezer; thoſe plates nailed on the Altar, Numb. 16.40. Hereby God ſhall be glorified, the Churches enemies convinced, our faith ſtrengthened, our joy in the Lord heightened, our poſterity helped, and Satan prevented, who ſeeketh to obliterate Gods works of wonder; or at leaſt to alienate them, and tranſlate them upon himſelf, as he endeavoured to do that famous execution of divine juſtice upon Sennacheribs army, by ſetting Herodotus a work to tell the world in print, that it was Setkon King of Egypt, and Prieſt of Vulcan, who obtained of his god, that Sennacheribs army coming againſt Egypt, ſhould be totally routed by reaſon of an innumerable company of rats, ſent by Vulcan, which gnawed in pieces their bowe-ſtrings, quivers, bucklers, &c. and ſo made way for the Egyptians to vanquiſh them. Herodotus addeth alſo that in his time there was to be ſeen the ſtatue of Sennacherib, holding a rat in his hand in Vulcans Temple, and uttering theſe words, Let him that beholdeth me, learne to feare God. Lo, the god of this world hath his trophies erected, and ſhall the God of heaven and earth go without? Oh let us (who have lived in an age of miracles, and ſeen the out-goings of God for our good more then ever did any Nation) offer unto him the ranſome of our lives, as they did, Exod. 21.30. and 30.12. in token that they had and held all in meer courteſie from God. Let us leave ſome ſeale, ſome pawn of thankfulneſſe for deliverance from ſo many deaths and dangers. Otherwiſe, Heathens will riſe up and condemn us. They after a ſhipwrack would offer ſomething; after a fit of ſickneſſe conſecrate ſomething to their gods; after a victory, ſet up trophies of triumph, as the Philiſtines did to their Dagon, the Romanes to their Jupiter Capitolinus, &c.

Hab. 9.4.

Herod. l. 2.

Ἐμὲ τὶς ἐσορέων εὐσεβὴς ἔστω.

Therefore for all the words of this letter] In obedience to Mordecai their godly Magiſtrate.

And of that which they had ſeen concerning this matter] And eſpecially of God made viſible all along in it, yea, palpable; ſo that they might feele him and finde him, Act. 17.27. though his name be not found in all this book.

And which had come unto them] Scil. by report and hear-ſay, but from ſuch hands as that they were fully ſatisfied thereof, as Hamans lot-caſting, Eſthers ſupplicating, the Kings reading the Chronicles, &c.

Verſe 27. The Jewes ordained, and took upon them, and upon their ſeed] See ver. 23. Here we have a repetition of what was before recited, and this is uſual in holy Scripture, as Gen. 2.1. Exod. 15.19. that things of moment may take the deeper impreſſion. That of Auſtin is here to be remembred, Verba toties inculcata viva ſunt, vera ſunt, plana ſunt, ſana ſunt. Let Preachers do thus, and hearers be content to have it ſo: Nunquam ſatis dicitur, quod nunquam ſatis diſcitur. To write to you the ſame things, to me is not grievous, and for you it is ſafe, ſaith that great Apoſtle, Phil. 3.1.

And upon all ſuch as ſhould joyne themſelves unto them] Thoſe Proſelytes, chap. 8 17. or whatever hang-bies.

So

So as it should not faile] But stand as a law inviolable. And yet that Octogesimus octavus mirabilis annus, and that never to be forgotten fifth of November, are with us almost antiquated: little would one think that God had ever done any thing for us, either by land or by sea, against either fire-works or water-works, Væ corpori nostro.

That they would keep these two dayes] Keep them as before, by consecrating a rest, and feasting before the Lord; not by gourmandizing and profane sports, nor by running up and down from house to house as whifflers, and wassailers, as at this day the Jewes manner is, witnesse Antonius Margarita, a baptized Jew L. de cerem. Iud.

According to their writing] i. e. Mordecai's order, by themselves subscribed and ratified.

Verse 28. And that these dayes should be remembred] That the memory of them might be kept a foot in the Church to all perpetuity. Nothing is sooner forgotten then a good turn received. David found himself faulty this way, and therefore sets the thorn to the breast, Psal. 103.2. Other holy men kept catalogues, (see one of Gods own making, Judg. 10.11,12.) They also had their μνημοσύνα, or Memorials, as is before noted. The very Heathens, had their triumphal Arches, Pillars, Trophies, Tables, Histories, Annals, Ephemerides, &c. A foule shame for us to fall short of them, and not to wish as Job in another case. Oh that Gods works of wonder for us were now written. Oh that they were printed in a book, That they were graven with an iron pen, and lead in the rock for ever. That famous fifth of November especially, which drownes in a manner the memory of all former deliverances; as the return out of Babylon did the departure out of Egypt. This happy day (too too much slighted, alas, in many places already) should never be put out of the English Kalendar, whiles the Sun courseth about the earth: but be registred for the generation to come, that the people which shall be created, may praise the Lord, Psal. 102.8. Iob. 19.23,24. Ier. 23.7. This was written. Nov. 5. 1633.

Every family, every Province, and every City] They should all recognize their late danger, and thereby the better relish their deliverance, as Sampson did his honey-combe which he found by turning aside to see the lion he had escaped. Every man was to consider his own share in the publick safety, as the people did at Solomons Coronation, and to be particularly thankful. This would fortifie his faith, feed his hope, nourish his joy, further his obedience.

Verse 29. Then Esther the Queen, &c.] See chap. 2.15. Mordecai had written thus before; now for more authority-sake, and to shew her forwardnesse to further so good a work, Esther joyneth with him, not for a name, or out of an humour of fooliish forth-putting, but out of an holy zeal for God and a godly jealousie over her people, lest they should hereafter slight or slack this service. And indeed the Jewes Chronicle (called by them Sedar olam Rabbah) telleth us, that this letter of Esther was not written, till a yeare after Mordecai's first letter: when those dayes of Purim haply began to be neglected and intermitted. She might therefore well say as Saint Peter did afterwards. This second Epistle beloved I now write unto you, in both which I stir up your pure mindes by way of remembrance, 2 ep. 3.1. True grace in the best heart is like unto a dull sea-coale-fire: which if it be not sometimes righted up, will of it self go out, though there be fuel enough about it. This good Queen was no lesse active in her generation, then before had been Miriam, Deborah, Bathsheba, &c. and after her were Serena the Empresse, Sophia Queen of Bohemia a Hussite, Queen Katherine Parre the Doctoresse, (as her husband merrily called her somtimes) and that matchlesse Queen Elizabeth, whose Sunny dayes are not to be passed over sleightly (saith one) without one touch upon that string, which so many yeares sounded so sweetly in our eares, without one sigh breathed forth in her sacred memory. Oh, what an happy time of life, had that famous light of our Church Mr. William Perkins, who was borne in the first yeare of her reign, and died in her last yeare. Anno sequenti contigit quod scripsimus est. Esth. 9.29. Sed. Ol. c. 29.

And Mordecai the Jew] These two joyned together to adde the more force to the Ordinance.

Wrote with all authority] Heb. with all strength, viz. of spirit, and of speech, of affection and expression.

To confirme the second letter] Lest, for fear of the friends of such as they had slain, the Jewes should be slack in observing this feast of lots.

Verſe 30. And he ſent letters to all the Jewes] Tremellius readeth it, Which letters Mordecai ſent to all the Jewes, ſcil. as Monitours and Remembrancers.

To the hundred twenty and ſeven Provinces] Among and above the reſt, to Judea, which was one of that number.

With words of peace and truth] i.e. premiſing words of proſperity and ſettlement, ſaith Tremellius, or promiſing them peaceable enjoyment of the true Religion, liberty of conſcience, rightly ſo called: Or praying, that they may follow peace with all men, and holineſſe, without which no man ſhall ſee the Lord, Heb. 12.14. Or, he ſent letters full of courteſie and truth, that is, of unfeined courteſie, as Vatablus ſenſeth it. For there is a cut-throat courteſie, ſuch as was that of Joab to Amaſa, of Judas to our Saviour, of Julian the Apoſtate to Baſil, when he wrote unto him, but not with words of peace and truth, φίλος φίλῳ, καὶ ἐχθρὸς ἐχθρῷ.

Verſe 31. To confirme theſe dayes of Purim] That they might by no manner of means be neglected, but that renewing their reſolutions and their reaſons for the ſame, they might remain conſtant, and firme, and peremptory in well-doing; cleaving to God with full purpoſe of heart, and ſitting cloſe unto the Lord without diſtraction, 1 Cor. 7.35.

And as they had decreed for themſelves] Heb. for their ſoules; for the ſoule is the man, and the greateſt thing in the leaſt compaſſe, is a good minde in a mans body.

The matters of the faſtings and their cry] Heb. the words of faſting, &c. that is, the vowes they then uttered when they faſted and cried; that if God would hear and help them, they would not faile to praiſe him in all beſt manner. Now therefore, ſith the vowes of God were upon them, they ſhould by keeping theſe dayes offer unto him thankſgiving, and pay their vowes unto the moſt High. Some think that the faſting and crying here mentioned, referreth to thoſe in Zechary, chap. 7.5. in remembrance of the deſolation of Jeruſalem; that as they faſted then, ſo they ſhould feaſt now; God having fulfilled his promiſe there made of turning their faſting into feaſting, and added, Therefore love the truth and peace, chap. 8.19. confer Mordecai's words of peace and truth, ſupra, verſe 30.

Aben-Ezra.

Verſe 32. And the decree of Eſther confirmed, &c.] Dux fœmina facti. Money was coined in the yeare eighty eight in honour of Queen Elizabeth, with that Poſie inſcribed. The like may be here ſaid of Queen Eſther, yea, we may adde that in the Goſpel, ſpoken concerning another. Where ever this hiſtory ſhall be read in all the world, this that ſhe hath done, ſhall be ſpoken of to her eternal commendation.

And it was written in the book] Tremellius rendreth it thus, When therefore the Edict of Eſther had confirmed theſe things, it was written in this book. Lyra and others thus. She requeſted the wiſe men of that age, that they would reckon this Hiſtory for holy Writ. If it be meant of any other publike record, which the Jewes then had, it is loſt: as are likewiſe ſome other pieces which never were any part of the holy Scriptures: for God by his Providence ever took care and courſe, that no one haire of that ſacred head ſhould fall to the ground. That unſound conceit of Pellican here, is by no meanes to be admitted, viz. That this latter part of the chapter from verſe 25. to the end, came from the pen of ſome other man, not guided by the Spirit of God, and that becauſe here is no mention made of praiſing God at this feaſt, or ſtirring up one another to truſt in him. For we know that all Scripture is of divine inſpiration, and it is to be preſumed that thoſe things were done at ſuch ſolemnities, though it be not recorded in each particular.

CHAP

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. And the King Ahaſhuerus laid a tribute, &c.]

AN extraordinary tribute to maintain warre againſt the Grecians, who uniting together, were then grown potent and formidable. To enable himſelf therefore the better againſt them, Xerxes gathered money, the ſinews of warre, but loſt the affections of his ſubjects the joynts of peace. He became hereby ill beloved of all ſorts, and far a leſſe King, by ſtriving to be more then he was. And hence haply one letter of his name is loſt here, for the Maſurites tell us, that in the ancient Druſ. in loc.
Copies he is written, not Ahaſhuerus, but Ahaſres without a Vau.

And upon the Iſles of the ſea] Judæa was an Iſle, Iſa. 20.6. (but not of the ſea, for it was part of the Continent) becauſe mediâ inſuperabilis undâ, ſeparated from other Countreyes, and encircled with Gods powerful Protection. It was, ſay ſome, by Herod. l. 3.
Mordecai's meanes exempted from this great taxation. Herodotus ſaith, that a Countrey near unto Arabia was exempted. He meaneth Judæa, ſaith Junius, though he name it not. It may be ſo. And it may be, ſaith an Interpreter, that this is here inſerted, as being intended only of the reimpoſing of the tribute, whereof there was granted a releaſe at Eſthers marriage. chap. 2.18. yet it may be alſo added, to ſhew how God puniſhed the Nations for their late greedy gaping after the lives and eſtates of Gods people.

Verſe 2. And all the Acts of his Power and his might] Lyra and Rikelius obſerve, that Ahaſhuerus had all this power and might given him by God, as a recompence of his courteſie to the Jewes, and juſtice done upon their enemies. No man ſerveth God for nought. He is a liberal Pay-maſter, Mal. 1.10. See the Note there.

And the declaration of the greatneſſe of Mordecai] Heb. the Expoſition. Many make large Commentaries upon their own greatneſſe, which a right Expoſition would ſhew to be rather belluine then genuine. Great men are not alwayes wiſe, ſaith Elihu, Job 32.9. But Mordecai was a great wiſe man, every way accompliſh't, one of Gods Rabbines, as Daniel calls them, fit to ſerve any Prince in the world. There is a ſpirit in man, a rational ſoule in an ordinary man: but the inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding, Job 32.8.

Whereunto the King advanced him] Heb. wherewith the King greatned him; wherein he ſhewed himſelf a wiſe and Politick Prince; as did likewiſe Pharaoh in advancing Joſeph, Darius Daniel, Conſtantius Chlorus Chriſtian Officers, our Henry the eighth, the Lord Cromwell, whom he made his Vicar-General. Jovianus the Emperour was wont to wiſh, that he might govern wiſe men, and that wiſe men might govern him. Juſtin Martyr praiſeth this ſentence of divine Plato. Common-wealths will then be happy, when either Philoſophers reigne, or Kings ſtudy Philoſophy. Juſtin. Apol.
Jethro's Juſtitiary muſt be a wiſe man, fearing God, &c. Exod. 18. and that famous maxime of Conſtantius Chlorus, recorded by Euſebius, is very memorable. He cannot be faithful to me, that is unfaithful to God, Religion being the foundation of all true fidelity and loyalty to King and Countrey.

Are they not written in the book of the Chronicles] Theſe Chronicles of Media and Perſia, if they were now to be had, (as they are not) would far better acquaint us with the hiſtory of thoſe times, then the fragments of them, collected by Herodotus, Diodorus, Arrianus, Juſtin and Curtius. But better books then theſe Chronicles are now wanting to the world: as the Chronicles of the Kings of Iſrael and Judah, the Book of the warres of the Lord, the book of Jaſher, Origens Octapla, (the loſſe of which work ſaith a learned man, deplorare poſſumus, compenſare non poſſumus, bewaile we may, but make up we cannot), Chryſoſtome upon Matthew, (when promotions were offered Thomas Aquinas, his uſual anſwer was, Chryſoſtomi Commentarium in Matthæum mallem, I had rather have Chryſoſtomes Commentary upon Matthew), and many other precious pieces, which learned men would gladly buy at as deare a rate, as Plato did thoſe three bookes that coſt him thirty thouſand Florens. That we have the holy Scriptures ſo perfect and entire, preſerved ſafe from the injuries of time, and rage of tyrants, who ſought to burne them up and aboliſh them, is a ſweet and ſingular Providence: and muſt be ſo acknowledged.

as

Verſe 3. For Mordecai the Jew was next unto King Ahaſuerus] Proximus à primo, the Kings ſecond, as 2 Chron. 28. 11. having the next chief ſeat to him, as Joſephus expoundeth it, and ſet over all the Princes of that Monarchy; ſo that he might well cry out with that noble General Iphicrates, ἐξ ὅσων κἀγὼ εἰμὶ, from what mean beginnings to how great an eſtate and dignity am I raiſed! How long he held it is not recorded; all the dayes of his life it is likely, for the good and comfort of the Church, though not without the envy of many of the Courtiers, which he overcame more by patience then pertinacy.

Μετὰ βασιλέα ἦν πρωτεῖον.

And great among the Jewes] A kinde of King in Jeſhurun, as Moſes, as great among them, as if he had been their proper King. There is mention made of one Mordecai, Ezra 2. 2. who was of the firſt that went up with Zorobabel. Aben-Ezra ſaith, that this Mordecai was he: and that when he ſaw that the building of the City and Temple went not on as was to be wiſhed, he returned again out of Judea to Shuſhan, and lived about the Kings Court, being not known to be a Jew, till Haman was in his greatneſſe; ſoon after which himſelf became much greater then Haman.

And accepted of the multitude of his brethren] He was their Corculum, (as Scipio;) their darling, as Titus; Mundi Mirabilia, as Otho the third Emperour of Germany was called. Of Mordecai it might be ſung, as Cardanus did of our Edward the ſixth.

Orbis deliciæ Melanct. Chron.

Deliciæ ſæcli & gloria gentis erat.

Seeking the wealth of his people] Farre more then his own private profit, glory and dignity, labouring their good both of ſoule and body by all meanes poſſible, that they might have Gaius's proſperity, and be as happy as heart could wiſh.

And ſpeaking peace] He was gentle and courteous to all, not like Polyphemus, who was Nec viſu facilis, nec dictu affabilis ulli.

Now affability and courteſie in high degree eaſily draweth mens mindes, as faire flowers in the Spring do Paſſengers eyes; Queen Elizabeth for inſtance, of whom before. Moreover he ſpoke good of them, and for them to the King, and promoted their proſperity to the utmoſt.

To all his ſeed] i. e. to all his Countreymen, as if they had been his own children. And here that ſweet Promiſe of God made to the good figges, was fulfil ed. Jeremy had perſwaded Jehoiakim, and many others with him, to yield themſelves up into the hands of the King of Aſſyria, aſſuring them, that ſo doing they ſhould fare farre better then thoſe that ſtood out. They did ſo, and Mordecai among the reſt, as ſome will have it; and now ſee how well they ſpeed, ſee the faithfulneſſe of God in fulfilling his Promiſes; the reward of the righteous, the triumph of truſt.

Again, to all his ſeed] That is, poſteris ſuis, ſo ſome ſenſe it; he ſpoke peace to all his ſeed, that is, proſperity to all the Jewes poſterity: providing for their future happineſſe alſo, and taking courſe, that after his death too, the welfare of the Church might be continued. This was dying Davids care, 1 Chronicles 28. 1, 2, &c. and Pauls, Acts 20. 29. and Peters, 2 epiſt. 1. 15. and locutus eſt ſperitatem lus Judæo- poſterita- Merlin.

and Ambroſes, of whom Theodoſius ſpeaking, ſaid, Dilexi virum, I could not but love the man exceedingly for this, that when he died he was more ſolicitous of the Churches then of his own dangers. So was Calvin as is teſtified in his life. Nay, Cicero, as he could confidently ſing.

O fortunatam natam me conſule Romam.

So he elſewhere profeſſeth, that he was in no leſſe care what the Common-wealth would do when he was dead, then whiles he was yet alive. Cic. de amici

Soli Deo Gloria in æternum.

A COMMENTARY OR EXPOSITION Upon the BOOK of JOB.

CHAP. 1.

Verse 1. There was a Man.] Notable man, a man by an excellency, and with an accent (as it were;) A man of high degree, as the word Ish signifieth Psal. 49. 2. & 62. 9. (where it is opposed to Adam, utpote quem ex meliore luto finxit Titan) a Manly man, every way excellent and eximious: Magnus & admirabilis vir &c. a great and marvellous man, if it be fit to call him by the name of a man, as Chrysostome speaketh of Babylas the Martyr. Basil in his Sermon of the forty Martyrs, calleth them the Stars of the world, and the flowers of the Churches. Chrysostome speaking of those that were praying for Peter, Act. 12. faith that Puriores cœlo afflictione facti sunt, by their afflictions they were become clearer then the azured sky: and elsewhere falling into speech of some religious men of his time, he doubteth not, for their holy and heavenly conversation, to stile them Ἀγγέλους Angels. That Job deserved this high title, as well as the best of them, we have here, and otherwhere, Gods own testimony of him, and this whole book, whereof he is the principal object, doth abundantly prove him an Heroe.

Animo virili praditus.

Orat. com. Gentiles.

ἀεὶ ἔφης τῆς ἀκριβείας, ἀνδρῶν ἐν τῶν ἐκκλησιῶν. Hom. 55. in Mat.

Damonum hominis & miraculum naturæ, ut de Scaligero non nemo dixit.

In the Land of Uz,] Which, what it was, and where situate, though our Maps shew us not: yet, by the consent of all, it was a country bordering upon Idumea in part, and part upon Arabia, see Lam. 4. 21. Jer. 25. 20. Chrysostome testifieth that Jobs sepulcher hath been shewed in Arabia, which might well have been called Happy, if but for having such an inhabitant, Ptolomy placeth the Hussites in Arabia.

τεὸ μὲν χαρίεις τὸ χαλεπὸν τοὶ ἰὸ χαλεπὸν ἁπαλὸν ἰα. Hom. Odyss.

Whose name was Job.] It is then a true and real history, that we here have of him, and not a fiction or a moral parable, as some have believed, see a double testimony for this, the one Prophetical, Ezek. 14. 14. the other Apostolical, Jam. 5. 11. and such a well-twined cord is not easily broken. What of Josephus make mention in his History of such a man? it was beside his purpose to write any thing, but what concerned the Jewes. Aristeus in his History of the Jewes maketh Job to be descended of Esau, and to dwel in Idumea. The Jew-doctors and some of the Fathers of the Church make him to be that Jobab mentioned Gen. 36.33. True it is, that the words differ much in the Hebrew writing; but for that, whiles he prospered, he might be called Jobab; when in distresse (which lasted twelve moneths, say the Hebrews, seven yeares saith Suidas) contracted into Job. See the like, Ruth. 1.20. Gen. 17.5. Some make him to be much more ancient, viz. the same with that Jobab who was the Son of Jockan, the nephew of Eber, 1 Chron. 1.23. and that himself was pen-man of this book. He doth indeed with that his words were written in a book, and happily he and his friends laying their heads together, might write this History, and that in Hexameters for most part, as Hierome thinketh. But that it was by inspiration of God, is testified not only by the divine Grandeur and Majesty of the stile, together with the intrinsecal excellency and efficacy of the matter; but also by the concurrent testimony of not a few other Scriptures, sufficiently asserting the authority and authority of this Book. The common opinion is, that it was written by Moses, while he abode as a stranger among the Midianites, for the comfort of his poor Country men, groaning under the Egyptian servitude: or else, that this History written at first by Job and his friends in prose, was afterwards by Moses put into verse, and imbellished with the most rich ornaments, and the most glittering figures of Poetry. Sure it is (saith Senault) that there is no book in the world, where the manner of speaking is more noble, the conceits more generous, the descriptions more rich, and the comparisons more natural. Sometimes the Author reasoneth like an excellent Philosopher, oftentimes like a profound Divine: but always like an Orator, and his Eloquence never leaveth him.

Preface to his Paraphrase.

And that man was perfect] that is, upright (as it followeth next) and sincere, without guile or gall, a pattern of patience, a standing rule to all ages; and therefore (in Gods acceptation and account) perfect and entire, wanting nothing, Jam. 1.4. because in him patience had her perfect work, as much as mortality would afford. It was but an unsavory speech of him, who when he was perswaded to be patient as Job was, replied, what tell you me of Job? Job never had any suites in Chancery; no, but he had far sharper trials; and if he had been Judge in that Court (as he was in his own Country, Chap. 29. 12, 17.) he would have made as good dispatch there, as ever Sir Thomas More did, who calling once for the next cause, was answered, That there was none.

Tamim de vitiis perfectis & immaculatis dicitur.

And upright] more resembling Jacob that plain-hearted man, then Esau his great Grand-father. Of the word here used (Jesher) Israel was called Jeshurun, Deut. 32.15. and 33.5,26. Isai. 44.2. because God requireth uprightnesse, (which he calleth perfection Deut. 18.13. and there is a great Tau in the word Tamim, to shew that an upright man keepeth the whole law from the first to the last letter thereof) and where he findeth it, reckoneth Jether an Ishmaelite, 1 Chron. 2.17. to be a very good Israelite, 2 Sam. 17.25. and Job the Idumean, a very good Christian, such an one as Apelles was, Rom. 16. approved in Christ.

Buxtorf.

And one that feared God] with an amicable, not servile feare, such as was that of those mongrels who fear'd him for his Lyons, and are therefore said not to have feared him, 2 King. 17.32,33,34. Job so lived with men, as if God saw him; and so spake with God, as if men overheard him. Thence it was, that seldome or never did any man see him doing, or hear him speaking, but what was good and godly, as Xenophon saith of Socrates: Thence it was, that he never did well, that he might appear to do so, sed quia aliter facere non potuit (as Valerius saith of Cato) but because acting by this principle of Gods fear, he could not do otherwise: for the fear of the Lord is pure, Psal. 19.9. and men do perfect holinesse in the fear of God. 2 Cor. 7.1.

Sic vivit cum hominibus, tanquam Deus videat. Sic loquitur cum Deo, ut homines audiant. Sen. Rempub. Απομνημ. Xen. Rerum lib. 2.

And eschewed evil.] He must needs do so that feareth God, the greatest Good, sith sin is the greatest evil, and stands in full opposition to him. Job therefore stands in awe, and sinnes not, he studiously declines evil, as he would do a serpent in his way, or poison in his meates. And this he did, not in a land of uprightnesse, where the fear of God was in fashion, but among profane Esauites, in the midst of a crooked and corrupt generation; as Noah in the old world, Lot in Sodom, Joseph in Egypt, Elijah amidst the Baalites, or as an Orient Star shining with fulnesse of heavenly light, and fixed in the region of happinesse, though seen sometimes in a Well, in a puddle, in a stinking ditch.

verse 2. And there were born unto him seven Sons.] This was a main part of his prosperity perity, to have such a numerous issue, to build up his house, and to heir his estate, though it proved to be luctuosa fœcunditas, as Hieronie said Leta's was, who lived to see her children buried before her. Jobs children are spoken of before his wealth, because better valued: and yet after this, fearing God and eschewing evil, to shew (saith Ferus) that he was not like the men of these times, who, if they have many children, will take any evil course to get something for them, and think it a sufficient plea against works of piety or charity, that they have many children to provide for. But such should know, that not getting, but giving, is the way to thrive: neither can men better lay up for their children, then by laying it out upon the backs and bellies of Gods poor, to whom, he that giveth shall not lack, Prov. 28. 27. that's a bargain of Gods own making; this the righteous knowing, is merciful, and lendeth, and his seed is blessed, Psal. 37. 26. when the wicked wretches riches perish by evil travel, and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand, Eccles. 5. 14. I read of a graceless son, who after his fathers death finding his hoard of mony and evil-gotten wealth cried out, O faithful drudge! and he soon made a hand of it.

And three daughters.] hopeful and towardly; not like those of Augustus Cæsar, whom, for the evil courses they took, he was wont to term them three mattery impostumes, and ulcerous sores, wishing, that either he had lived a batchelour, or died childlesse: But rather like those of Charles the great, who so pleased him, that he could not at any time be well without their company, nor find in his heart to part with them, though it were to be well married. Tres vomicas tria carcinomata. Sueton. Val. Max. Chri. pag. 308.

Verse 3. His substance also] Heb. his Possession or Acquisition, that stock and store which he had gotten, and was rightly possessed of, consisting very much in cattel, great and small, for mony was not then in so great request as now, when it is become the Monarch, and bears the Mastery, Regina pecunia, as he saith, In precio precium nunc est, saith another. We read not of Jobs gold, silver, tapestry, rich furniture (saith Origen) (and other accoustrements, now much used and valued, but not so of old. Heretofore in this Island of ours (saith Hollingshead) in a good Farmers house, 'twas rare to find four pieces of pewter: and it was accounted a great matter, that a Farmer could shew five shillings or a Noble together in silver: and if the good man of the house had a mattress or flock bed, and a sack of chaffe to rest his head on, he thought himself as well lodged as the Lord of the town &c. Hollingshead further saith, that some old men he knew who told of such times in England, no longer ago. Possessio maximè pecuaria. Nomen dictum est ab acquirendo. Merc.

Was seven thousand sheep.] He had most of that most profitable creature, good both ad esum, and ad usum; therefore also in sacrifices was no creature so frequently offered.

And three thousand Camels, and five hundred she asses,] to carry his servants, and his baggage, to export and import commodities: for Nec verò terra ferax unus omnia possit.

And five hundred yoak of oxen.] To plow his ground with, for great men were anciently much addicted to husbandry (as Uzziah, 2 Chron. 26. 10.) which Socrates called Amaltheæ cornu, the horn of plenty: and the Romans reckoned, that corn was with them never so cheap, as when men were fetched from the plough taile, to govern the Common-wealth; quasi gaudeant terra laureâ vomere, & aratro triumphali. But now the case is otherwise, as Beza upon this text complaineth; that husbandry and the plough, are left for the basest and simplest men, and for such as all others might prey upon. And this brought into my mind, saith he, that which once I saw painted in a table, where the Noble-man had this posie, By my sword I defend you all: the Clergyman, By my prayers I preserve you all: the Country-man, I feed you all: Lastly, the Lawyer, I devour you all. Pellican noteth here, that Job had no horse, because he lived lovingly with his neighbours, not warring upon any: the horse is a warlike creature, prepared for the day of battle. But Beza noteth that in that Country they had small use of horses, using Camels to beare burdens, and Asses to ride on. See Judg. 5. 10. and 10. 4.

Great household.] Great store of servants he had about him, and himself was the greatest, according to that of the Greek Poet, (wherewith Luther was so taken, that he translated it in certain rithmes.)

Some render it, He had very much husbandry; others, he had great doings in the world; the more was his trouble, (it is not the great cage that maketh the bird sing, and abroad she singeth not on the ground, but when got in the aire, or on the top of trees: So is it with the Saints) and the greater was his praise, that he could handle his thornes, and not prick his fingers: have so much to do with the world, and yet not grow worldly-minded.

Difficile est opibus non tradere mores;
Et vanum Crœsos vicerit esse Numam.

So that this man was the greatest &c. A King, some say, the first King of Edom, but that's uncertain; he might be a private man, and yet a very rich man: such as was Pythias, who was once able to entertain Xerxes and his two millions of men for three dayes, and yet died a beggar, and was famished. He was impoverished by his own folly and prodigality, but Job, by the immediate hand, and good pleasure of God, for his trial, and for exercise of his patience. This commendeth unto us Jobs constancy and magnanimity, which is so much the more wonderful, by how much this change was not only not self-acquired, but altogether unexpected; his sun went down suddenly, at high-noon; and when he doubted least, he was made a mirrour of misfortune; as if God and men, heaven and earth were set against him. In him it appeared, that mortality was but the stage of mortability, and that,

Omnia sunt hominum tenui pendentia filo;
Et subito casu, quæ valuere, ruunt.

Verse 4. And his sons went, and feasted in their houses.] They were of ripe years: and although unmarried, yet had they their several houses to dwell in. This declareth not onely the wealthiness of the Family, but also the good Order and Government thereof, as Beza observeth. Their orderly intercourse of friendly feasting one another, shews their mutuall love, concord and agreement, by this means testified and increased. For wine hath (as one long since observed) insitum quoddam vinculum, an attractive power in it to make and keep friendship, and from the drinking of wine, the word here used for a Feast hath its denomination. We may not think that they did this every day, as that glutton in the Gospel, or that in their banquets they used any excesse, as the manner is of riotous and intemperate persons: for they had been better bred, and they observed this order with great modesty and discretion. They went and feasted, that is, they did it readily and cheerfully, that brotherly love might continue; for —Fratrum quoque gratia rarast. The Divel doth what he can to cast a bone between brethren, to make those that should love most dearly, to hate one another most deadly. See this emplified in Cain and Abel, Esau and Jacob, Joseph and his Brethren, Joram and his, Romulus and Remus, Caracalla and Geta, Robert and Rufus, the two sons of William the Conqueror, Polynices and Eteocles &c. And when such are once set at variance, another offended (saith Solomon) is harder to be won then a strong City, and their contentions are like the barres of a Castle, which being strong, will neither be removed, Prov. 18. 19. All good means therefore must be used to prevent them, and to preserve that unity and unity which the Psalmist doth so magnifie, Psal. 133. 1, 2, 3. and concludeth, that there God commandeth the blessing, and life for evermore, that is, constant happiness perpetuated in and by a blessed posterity. The number of two hath been accounted accursed, because it was the first that departed from unity.

And sent and called for their three sisters] That their number and unity might be complete. This also is a great joy to see, that his children were so kind one to another; it is reckoned as a piece of their happiness, that which was denyed to Abraham, and Isaac (though fathers onely of two children) to Jacob also and Samuel, and David, Constantine the great, with many others, whose children, through ambition, pride, covetousness, envy, &c. have been at odds, and at deadly feud among themselves. Read upon this occasion of Jobs children, that the sisters kept not with their brethren, but invited them to come unto them, which was both more seemly and more safe, as also more agreeing with maidenly shamefacednesse. Neither is it said, that Job, or his wife, or any other, did invite the sisters: came not over-boldly to the banquets of their brethren, although they knew them to be men of a sober and honest disposition.

Verse 5. And it was so, that when the dayes of their feasting were gone about,] Such was

was his holy care of them, and jealousie over them, that he would deferre the work no longer: as knowing that sin will rankle in the conscience, and harden the heart: like poyson in the body, it must be quickly cast up, ere it get to the vitals.

That Job sent and sanctified them.] Though they were grown up, yet he kept them in awe, as appears by his command to sanctifie themselves against the sacrifice. So did not Eli, but honoured his untoward sons above God, even then when those lewd losels kick'd at his sacrifice, and at his offering which he had commanded in his habitation, 1 Sam. 2. 29. Job knew that he was bound as well to the preservation, as to the observation of Gods commandments, to see that others (those especially of his familiarity and family) keep them, as well as himself. When therefore the circle of dayes and feasting was finished, he waited not till the eighth day came, but at the end of the seventh he summoneth all his children to come before the Lord in holy duties, with the best preparations they could make: to wash their hands in innocencie before they compassed Gods Altar; to repent of their immoderations in mirth, or whatsoever other guilt they had any way contracted, lest he cast back their services as dirt upon their faces. The Heathens, by the light of nature, saw that God was not to be served slightly and slubberingly. The Pythagoreans would not have men Worship by the by, but make it their businesse, and prepare for it afore-hand. And Numa Pompilius, second King of Rome, commanded that men should not worship God for fashion, carelesly, and as doing somewhat else: but freed from all other cares and cumbers. The Jews had their Preparation and their fore-preparation to the Passover: and as any man measureth to God in preparation, God will measure to him again in blessing.

Vt se parent & purgent.

Psal. 26. 6

οὐκ ἐν παρέργῳ θρησκευτέον, ἀλλὰ ὅλοθυμ παρασκευασάμενοι. οὐκ ἐν παρέργῳ γὰρ ἀμελῶς. &c. Plut. παρασκεύη. θρησκεύειν παρασκεύην.

And rose up early in the morning.] Sanctissimus fuerat dictat quoque surgere mane. The morning is the best time for holy duties; God should have the first of every thing: then also men are freshest and freest from worldly businesses. The Philistins were slight to do sacrifice to their Dagon, or Triton, as other Heathens called him. They generally took the top of the morning (utpote quod πᾶν ἦρτον ὀφείλει) to offer to their dung-hill deities, as holding them then in their Temples, and took notice of morning salutations. Homer brings in Nestor sacrificing in the morning; So do the Roman Historians their Pontifi and Flamini, offering to Hercules upon their greatest Altar of all. Aryonazen do the like in Apollonius; and the Persian Magi were wont to worship the rising Sun with their early Hymns.

And offered burnt offerings.] Holocausta, whole burnt offerings, not sacrifice only (as the Greek interpreter hath it) nor peace offerings, whereof himself might have had part, but burnt offerings, that were offered intirely unto God, and that according to the number of his sons, not one general family-sacrifice only, but for every one, one. It appeareth then that Job was no penny-father, no niggard in Gods service, but Lavished many out of the bag, and thought all too little that was laid out that way. So did Solomon in that great sacrifice that ever we read of, 1 King. 8. 63. and his father David, when, out of his poverty, as he calleth it, he had prepared for the house of the Lord an hundred thousand talents of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver &c. which Sir Walter Raleigh casteth up to be more then any King in the world is worth: this is check to vain security and lukewarmness.

Hist. of the world. part. 2. cap. 17. sect. 9.

For Job said.] Or, in his heart, for God understandeth the language of the heart also, Psal. 139. 1. Gen. 20. 11.

It may be that my sons have sinned.] Or, lest happily: He well knew the corruption of mans nature, wherein there is a seminarie, a seed-plot of all sins. He knew also how easily we over-shoot our selves at merry meetings, and give too much liberty to our tongues and appetites to run riot. He therefore seeks pardon for his childrens suspected sinnes, he knew, (unless unavoidable and involuntary infirmities (that no sons are free from) they might be called to an account by a just and jealous God for their other sins, which they had not bewailed, 2 Cor. 7. 2. or not rebuked, at least by their countenance, as God doth, Psal. 50. 18. Job was a man of a tender conscience, and therefore propounds to himself the worst: neither was it a groundless jealousie in him to suspect in all his children, whilest he intended their good, and turned his suspicion into a supplication. That his children were godly, is put out of question, by this his doing: it is a question, whether they had sinned. But how then doth it follow?

And

So Sanctius.

And cursed God in their hearts] And not blessed God, so Calvin rendreth it, not done him right, and therefore wrong; they have not high and honourable conceptions of him, answerable to his excellent greatnesse; but, by base and bald thoughts cast him, as it were, into a dishonourable mould, and not given him the glory due to his Name, that holy and reverend Name, Psal. 111. 9. Great and dreadful among the Heathen, Mal. 1. 14. In the Hebrew, it is, And blessed God, for cursed, by an Euphemisme or Antiphrasis; as when an harlot is called Kedesha, a holy woman, by contraries. So auri sacra (i. e. execranda) fames. The Hebrews so abhorred blasphemy against God, as they would not have the sound of it to be joyned to the Name of God, whom they commonly call Baruch hu, the blessed One. So they would not take the name of Leven (that prohibited ware) into their mouths all the time of the feast of the Passeover. So in their common talk they call a Sow dabbar achar, an other thing, because they were forbidden to eat swines flesh.

Elias Thisb.

Thus did Job continually] Heb. all the dayes; that is, in the renewed seasons: he was not weary of well-doing, but stedfast and unmoveable, alwaies abounding in the work of the Lord, alwaies renewing his repentance, and faith in Christ, figured by those sacrifices; for the Ceremonial Law was their Gospel.

Verse 6. Now there was a day] Haply that day wherein Jobs children were feasting their last. The Rabbines say, the first day of the year, and some say, the sabbath day; But who told them so? this is to intrude into things which they have not seen, Col. 2. 18. and whereof there is neither proof nor profit. Certain it is, that as God hath before all beginnings decreed all things, so he hath set and assigned the times or seasons which he hath put in his own power, Act. 1. 7. when every thing shall come to passe as himself hath appointed. Now then, saith Beza, the time being come which he prefixed for the actual accomplishing of that he had decreed concerning Job, he revealed the same to Satan (being before altogether ignorant thereof) as whom he had appointed to be the chief instrument in executing this his will and purpose.

The children of God] i. e. the Elect Angels, called Sons of God, here and elsewhere: not because they are so by eternal generation, as Christ alone; nor by adoption and regeneration, as the Saints, John 1. 12. but by Creation (as Adam is called the Son of God, Luke 3. ult.) and Resemblance, for they are made in Gods image, and are like him as his children, both in their substance which is incorporeal, and in their excellent properties, which are Life and Immortality, Blessednesse and Glory; wherein we shall one day be their compeers, Luke 20. 36.

Came to present themselves] This is spoken in a low language, for our better apprehension, by allusion to the custome of earthly Princes and their attendants and officers, coming to give an account, or receive directions. The Angels are never absent from God, Luke 1. 19. but yet employed by him in governing the world, Ezek. 1. and guarding the Saints, Heb. 1. 14. This the heathens hammered at, for both Plutarch and Proclus the Platonist say, that the Angels doe mediusfidius travel betwixt heaven and earth, carrying the commands of God to men, and the desires of men to God.

Fussa divina ferentes ad homines, & hominum vota ad deos.

And Satan came also among them] That old man-slayer, (envying Jobs holinesse and happinesse, as much as the good Angels rejoyced in it, and promoted it; for he was seen of Angels of both sorts) would needs make one among those Sons of God, not without Gods over-ruling power, although he regarded not so much Gods authority, as wanted an opportunity and license to do mischief. In reference to this history Gomarus Major Martyr, in a certain letter of his writeth thus to his friend: the Servants of God cannot at any time come and stand before God, that is, lead a godly life, and walk innocently, but Satan comes also among them: that is, he daily accuseth, undermines, watcheth, perverteth and troubleth the godly &c. Yet unlesse God do permit him, he can do nothing at all, not so much as enter into a filthy hog. But we are more of price than many hogs before God.

Acts and Mon. fol. 1413.

Before the Lord] Or By, or Near the Lord. But can Satan come into the presence of God? Surely no otherwise (saith a grave Divine) than a blind man can come into the Sun: he goeth into the Sun, and the Sun shineth upon him, but he sees not the Sun. Satan comes so into the presence of God, that he is always seene of God: he is never so in the presence of God, as to see God.

Mr. Caryl.

Verse

Verse 7. And the Lord said unto Satan] either by forming and creating a voice in the air, as Matth. 3. 17. Joh 12. 28. or by an inward word, after an unspeakable manner, manifesting his will, as he willed to Satan. The School men have great disputes about the speech of spirits; but this they agree in, that the intention of one spirit is as plain an expression of his mind by another spirit (when he hath a will that the other should understand it) as the voice of one man is to another.

Whence comest thou?] This the Lord asketh not as if he were ignorant; for he knows all things, and that from eternity, neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight, but all things are naked and open before his eyes, Heb. 4. 13. yea, in him all things subsist, Colos. 1. 17. So that there can be no motion of the creature without his privity: God therefore thus interrogateth Satan, that he might shew himself to be his Judg, and that he might exact a confession out of his own mouth.

Then Satan answered the Lord] the word signifieth, to speak in witnesse-bearing, Exod. 20. 16.

From going to and fro in the earth] He saith not, from instigating men to all manner of wickednesse, from ranging up and down as a roaring Lion, to devour soules, from sinning that sin against the Holy Ghost every moment &c. All this he cunningly dissembleth, and saith in effect, as once Gehezi did, Thy servant was no where, or for no hurt to any, when as he is never but doing mischief; as Pliny saith of the Scorpion, that there is not one minute wherein it doth not put forth the sting. Is not the hand of Joab in this businesse? So, is not Satan in all the sins of the wicked, and in most of the troubles of the godly? Heu quam furit Satan, & impellit sectores homines ad horrenda flagitia &c. saith Luther! O how doth Satan rage and rage, that he may glut himself with the blood of soules? In prosperity he makes men lay their hearts too near it, in adversity to lay it too neer their hearts. Upon Job he tried both these stratagems.

And from walking up and down in it.] A great Peripatetike he is, and he walks the rounds; for he is yet a prisoner at large, only he hath his fetters upon his heeles, Jude 6. and in them he frisketh up and down, and seeketh a circuit to spy faults, and to take advantages. Mr. Broughton readeth it, from searching to and fro in the earth &c. Non dormitat semper vigil ille Synagogæ suæ Episcopus, saith one, he is vigilant and diligent, restlesse and unquiet as Cain, (whom one calleth the divels Patriarch) could set down no where, but ran up and down as a fugitive and a vagabond, Gen. 4. It is said Matth. 12. 43. that this unclean spirit walketh in dry places seeking rest and finding none. Not but that dry and wet are all one with him, but it importeth his restlesnesse. See the like Jer. 47. 5. turn to and fro, is the condition and curse of those that are once departed from God. Take heed brethren (saith the apostle) lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief in departing from the living God, and wandring after worldly vanities. Take head of giving way to wilful distractions in holy duties. Mens hearts are oft so divided and dissipated, that if after duty they should put the question that God doth here to Satan, Whence comest thou? the answer should be, From compassing the earth &c. Amama. Heb. 3. 12.

Verse 8. Hast thou considered my servant Job?] Job then was in Gods account a considerable person, and set he at one as whose praise was not of men, but of God. Such are all godly people, but especially those that are eminent, tall Christians; full of goodnesse, filled with all knowledge, as those Romans chap. 15. 14. men of choice spirits as Caleb, that walk up and down the world as so many conquerors, 1 John 5. 4. that are clothed with the Sun, and tread upon the Moon, Rev. 12. 1. These are men of mark, quos quidquam spectabile habet, worthy looking after. A man would have gone as farre to have seen Luther, as the Hare in the story, did to see Livy; or as the Queene of Sheba did to see Salomon. A man would fetch such golden sentences as those he uttered upon his knees from Rome or Jerusalem, saith a Reverend man that writeth his life. The tongue of the just is as choice silver, but the heart of the wicked is little worth, Prov. 10. 20. Hence Antiochus is called a vile person, Dan. 11. 21. though a great Potentate. And the Prophet tells Joram that wicked King of Israel, that but for Jehoshaphats sake (a better man) he would not have looked toward him, nor have seen him, 2 King. 3. 14. Job was a man of weight, and great worth, as were those precious sons of Zion, Lam. 4. 2. Didst thou not therefore make a stand at his door, saith God? Seest thou not how he stands as a standard-bearer? shines as a Mr. Sam. Clark great light? shewes forth in his whole practise such a power of godlinesse, as is sufficient either to draw hearts, or to daunt them? hast thou met with such a man in all thy circuit, that can quit himself so well and wisely in all estates, like as gold is purged in the fire, shineth in the water? seest thou not how all his principles, practises, and aims, are supernal and supernatural?

great

That there is none like him in the earth.] This was an high praise indeed, and yet no hyperbole: he was a Giant to other good people, who were but dwarfes and Zanies to him, for growth of grace, and heighth of holinesse. He was the paragon of his time; and of imparallel piety. As Ahab was a very Non-such for wickednesse, 1 King. 21. 25. so was Job for goodnesse. As Hezekiah out-stripped all the Kings of Judah for his trusting in the Lord 2 King. 18. 5 and Josiah for his integrity, 2 King. 23. 25. and the Centurion for his heroick faith Matth. 8. and Paul for his plus ultra, Philip. 3. and Ambrose, that in Theodosius his account, he was the only Bishop: So it was here, Job was above others, as Saul was above the people by the head and shoulders. As he was the greatest, so the best man of all the children of the East, not a man came neer him, and yet they might be dear to God nevertheless. But it is with good people, as with Jonathans signal arrowes: two fell short, and but one beyond the mark &c. God hath his servants of all sorts and sizes: and est aliquid prodire tenus &c.

Ἀμεμπτότατον οἰδ' ἀμόνου ἐπίσκοπον ἀξίως καλέμενον.

A perfect and an upright man &c.] A tough piece thou findest him, I suppose, and not easily malleable. Thou hast been doing at him, I doubt not, but canst do no good on't. Thou hast set thine heart upon him, and tried thine utmost skill to overturn him, but hast met with thy match, and been sent away without thine errand: thou hast but beat upon cold Iron: thou hast struck fire, but without tinder, thou hast knock'd at the doore, but there was none within to open to thee. Thus God speaketh, to sting Satan, and (as it were) triumphing over his and Jobs adversary.

Verse 9. Then Satan answered and said.] Satan and his imps will ever have somewhat to say against the cleer truth, their wits will be too serve them to elude or withstand it, then their pride and malice will suffer them not to yeild and acknowledge it. But what said Austin of the hereticks of his time; Garriant illi, ubi credamus: Let them talk their fill, and think it a great matter to have the last word, let us hold to our principles, and count it enough, that with Nonnius, we have good report of all men (or if not so, yet) of the truth it self, 3 John 12.

Doth Job fear God for nought?] q. d. No such matter! Is there not a cause, as they said once? hath he not wages of the best? and are not thy retributions more then bountiful? he may serve thee well enough for such price and pay, as he daily receiveth: He may swim well enough, when so held up by the chin. But the truth is, Job is a meer mercenary, and serveth God for hire, he serveth not God, but himself upon God: in a word, he is an arrant hypocrite, and a self-seeker, such an one as doth in parabola ovis capras suas quærere, pretend piety to his own worldly respects, and serves God meerely out of interest. An hypocrite indeed doth so, being therein like the Eagle which soareth aloft, not for any love of heaven, her eye is all the while upon the prey, which by this means she spieth sooner, and seizeth upon better. But how will Satan prove that Job is an hypocrite, sith he cannot possibly know his heart? and did not the searcher of hearts acquit Job of this foule sin in Satans hearing, when he pronounced him perfect and upright &c. How impudent then is this accuser of the brethren? The best is, that we have an Advocate with the Father, who puts by, and non-suites all Satans accusations in the Court of heaven, 1 John 2. 2. Yea, though Satan sometimes stand at the right hand of Joshua, Zech. 3. 1. and may seem to have the better of him; yet here's the comfort, Jesus Christ our Advocate is also a propitiation for our sins, as it is in the same text. Who then shall lay any thing to the charge of Gods children? Or if any do, what need we care, when it is God that justifieth, and the Saints as vanquishers shal come off as Job did, with great glory to themselves, and shame to the assailer.

Verse 10. Hast not thou made an hedge about him?] or, hast thou not trenched him in, and secured him with thine own bare hand, as in a town of war, or tower of brasse? thou thy self either art the hedge, or makest it, and that not only about his person, but about his people, children, servants &c. yea, about his whole estate, ſo that there is no coming at him: and this Satan ſeemes to ſpeak very angrily. See the note on Zech. 2. 5.

so

On every ſide] per circuitum, circumcirca. The divel could find never a gap, make never a breach. Oh the ſafety of a Saint, that goes alwaies under a double guard, the power of God without him, and the peace of God within him! The Lord himſelf is his keeper, the Lord his defence upon his right hand. Pſal. 121. 5. See Pſal 91. How miraculouſly hath Geneva been upheld, a ſmall City environed with enemies, and barred out from help of other Churches! How well may we ſit and ſing, If the Lord had not been on our ſide, now may England ſay, if the Lord had not been on our ſide, when men (or rather divels in the ſhape of men) roſe up againſt us, then had they ſwallowed us up quick, when their wrath was kindled againſt us. Pſal. 124. 1, 2. They were not our wooden walls that ſaved us &c. but thy right hand, and thine arme, and the light of thy countenance, becauſe thou hadſt a favour unto us, Pſalm 44. 3. This was a better wall then that about China or Babylon, or that which David ſo ſoon leaped over by the help of his God, Pſal. 18. who is ſic omnibus attentus ut non detentus à ſingulis, ſo helpful to the whole community of his people, as that he neglecteth not any one that pertaineth unto him.

Thou haſt bleſſed the work of his hands] ſo that he hath good ſucceſſe in all his buſineſſes, all things thrive well under his hand; this the divel ſtomacked; and, becauſe he could not come at Jobs heart, fed upon his own. Malice drinketh up the moſt part of its own venome. It pleaſeth the Lord well, that his people proſper, but the divel cannot endure it. Well might Auſtin ſay, Invidia eſt vitium diabolicum, envy is a divelliſh ſin, for it transformeth men into ſo many breathing divels. In Pſal 139.

And his ſubſtance is increaſed in the land.] Heb. is broken forth; ſo that his houſe is too little to hold the precious and pleaſant riches that are therein; his grounds cannot contain the increaſe of his cattle: ruperunt horrea meſſes. In fine, there is no end of his wealth.

Verſe 11. But put forth thy hand] Make Job feele the weight of it, as good people uſually do more then others; yet not ad exitium, but ad exercitium, their croſſes are not penal, but probational and medicinal. The ſame holy hand of God that was put forth to protect and bleſſe Job, ſhall bee put forth to afflict him. It muſt needs be therefore done in meaſure, and in mercy. If he ſmite Job, it ſhall be in the branches only, and not at the root, Iſa. 27. 8. for there is a bleſſing in it; his hand ſhall not be further put forth to ſmite, then to ſave, Iſai. 59. 1. Acts 4. 31. Pſalm 144. 7. If Satan or his inſtruments over-do, and offer to exceed their commiſſion, he will never endure it, Zech. 1. 15. This Satan knew very well, and therefore motioneth that God would put forth his hand and touch him; or, Put forth thy hand, I pray thee; or, Put forth thy hand a little (ſo ſome render it) and touch him; that is, lightly afflict him. Confer Geneſ. 26. 11, 19. and Pſalm 105. 15.

And touch all that he hath] or touch any thing that he hath; ſo the word Col is uſed, Job 8. 12. Prov. 1. 17. And it is, as if he ſhould ſay, Lay but ſome light loſſe upon him, and he will ſhew his unſoundneſſe; as if but light weights be hanged on rotten boughs, they will ſoon break; and as if wooden or earthen veſſels be ſet empty to the fire, they will quickly crack.

And he will curſe thee to thy face] Heb. If he do not curſe thee q. d. then I ſhall much marvel; or then ſay, I have no skill in him, if he will not thereupon bluſter and blaſpheme thee, and that openly, impudently, boldly, to thy very face, avowedly; as Caligula did, when he dared his Jove to a Duell, with that Hemiſtick, in Homer, Ἢ ἐμὲ νῦν ἢ ἐγὼ σέ: as Mahomet the Grand Seigniour greatly grieved with the diſhonour and loſſe he had at Scodra, moſt horribly brake out into blaſphemous words not fit to be related; as that black mouthed Pope with his al deſpito di Dio. They ſet their mouthes againſt heaven, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, and let fly at God himſelf, they howle upwards with the wolf when hunger-bit, they utter their owne harſh voice, as the Parrot when beaten, and like birds of prey that have been long kept in the dark, are out of meaſure fierce and furious when once they come abroad, ſo are ignorant and graceleſſe perſons. But Job was none ſuch, what ever the divel deemed and averred of him. Pompey when he had loſt the field, might, for want of grace, ſay, that there was a miſt over the eye of providence. Brutus, when over- Turk. hiſt. fol. 423. Acts & Mon. 1417.

Dio. come by his enemy Antony, may ſay in his rage, that all things are carried by blind fortune, by hap-hazard. Atque deos, atque aſtra vocat crudelia. — Thoſe miſcreants in Malachi may ſay, 'tis but loſt labour to ſerve the Lord, chap. 3. 14. But Satan ſuggeſting that Job would do any ſuch thing if croſſed, did (as one ſpeaketh) either lie knowingly, or at leaſt gueſſe ignorantly.

Verſe 12. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, Behold, all that he hath is in thy power.] Here God in appearance condeſcendeth to the divels deſires. But we muſt know, that Gods end in this large grant, was not to gratifie the divel, but to glorifie himſelf, by making Satan an inſtrument of his own ſhame and infamie, when by all that he could do, Job would not be drawn to think or ſpeak amiſſe of God; though Satan left him his wife (who was within his commiſſion) to tempt him to it: and afterwards left him his tongue untouched (when all his body beſides was ſmitten with ſore boiles) as hoping haply, he would have curſed God therewith.

Only upon himſelf put not forth thy hand] Meddle not with his outward or inward man. He would fain have been doing with both, and had done it now, but for this mercifull reſtriction; which to the divel was (no doubt) a very great vexation. But how could he help it, otherwiſe then as horſes digeſt their choler, by biting on the bridle? The will of the Lord muſt ſtand: and Job, though he ſhall have his back-burden of croſſes of all kinds, yet they ſhall not be laid upon him all at once, but piece-meal, and at ſeveral times. Fidelis eſt Deus, ſaith the Apoſtle (and Father Latimer died in the flames with thoſe ſweet words in his mouth) God is faithfull, who will not ſuffer us to be tempted above that we are able &c. but will ſurely proportion the burden to the back, and the ſtroke to the ſtrength of them that ſhall beare it. See his gracious dealings with the Apoſtles, at their firſt ſetting forth into the world: and how by degrees he inured them to bear the Croſſe of Chriſt, Acts 2. & 4. & 5. & 12.

Acts and Mon. fol. 1579.

So Satan went forth from the preſence of the Lord] As thinking every houre two, till he had ſped his commiſſion: the divel deſcended like lightning upon the earth, to ſearch occaſions to ruine Job, and to triumph over his patience, to touch all that he had, and to touch him to the very quick. This diligence of the divel in evil-doing, how happy were it, ſaith Mr. Beza, if we could imitate in doing well? But behold, whileſt Chriſts enemies watch, and in the night ſet themſelves in readineſſe to take him, his chief diſciples do not only ſnort and ſleep, but cannot ſo much as be awaked in the garden.

Verſe 13. And there was a day] A diſmal day it proved to Job, a day of trouble and diſtreſſe, a day of waſtneſſe and deſolation, a day of darkneſſe and gloominſſe, a day of clouds and thick darkneſſe, as Zeph. 1. 15. That ſubtle ſerpent ſet upon miſchief, purpoſely picketh out ſuch a time to do it, as wherein ſuch a ſad and ſudden change was leaſt of all looked for; and then laies on amaine (as if he were wood) with the hail-ſhot, hell-ſhot of ſharpeſt afflictions. He knowes well, that as mercies and deliverances, the more unexpected they are, the more welcome; (as Abrahams receiving his ſon Iſaac after a ſort from the dead: Iſraels eduction out of Egypt, when they were forſaken of their hopes: Jonah his being drawn out of the belly of hell (as he phraſeth it, chap. 2. 2.) ſo croſſes, the more ſuddenly they befall men, the more they amate them; and finding weak minds ſecure, they make them miſerable, leave them deſperate.

When his ſons and his daughters were eating and drinking wine] Wherewith, if their hearts were overcharged (and what more eaſie? the divel foiled our firſt parents by inordinate appetite, and finding it then ſo ſucceſsfull a weapon, he maketh uſe of it ſtill) that day might come upon them unawares, Luke 21. 34. That was Satans drift ſurely, however it fell out: and ſo, to deſtroy body and ſoul together. But it is to be hoped, that he was diſappointed of his aime, and that death was ſent in haſt to Jobs children, as an inviteanc to a better feaſt: and that they might do as our Saviour did, who being at a feaſt at Bethany, fell into a meditation and diſcourſe of his death and burial, John 12. 7, 8. Sure it is, that although the wicked may die ſinning, and ſhall die in their ſins, John 8. 21. and ſo be killed with death, as Jezabels children were, Rev. 2. 23. Yet Gods children ſhall not dye before their time, Eccleſ. 7. 17. or till the beſt time, till their work is done, Revel. 11. 7. No malice of man or divel can antedate my end a minute (ſaith one), whileſt my master hath work for me to do. It is the happineſſe of a Saint, that he is ſure not to die till that time, when, if he were but rightly informed, he would even deſire to die. Happy is he, that after due preparation is paſſed through the gates of death, ere he be aware, as Jobs children were.

maſter

Verſe 14. And there came a meſſenger] A ſad relater, not a divel in the ſhape of a man, as the Rabbines would have it (let that paſſe for a Jewiſh fable) but one of Jobs own ſervants, or ſome other eye-witneſſe, to make Job believe, belike, that as an evill man, he only ſought rebellion, ſith ſuch cruel meſſengers were ſent againſt him, Prov. 17. 11.

The oxen were plowing, and the aſſes feeding &c.] i. e. We were none of us either idle, or ill-occupied: but taking pains, and tending our cattle, when this diſaſter befell us. Fools, becauſe of their tranſgreſſion, and becauſe of their iniquities, are afflicted, Pſalm 107. 17. they create themſelves croſſes, ſuch as muſt therefore needs come with a ſting in them. See Gen. 42. 21. But Jobs ſervants were honeſtly employed when plundered and aſſaſſined; which ſheweth, that his loſſes were not penall, but probationall.

And the aſſes feeding beſide them] Peter Martyr upon the firſt of Samuel, wittily applyeth this text to prelates and non-reſidents; who, when put in mind of their duty would uſually anſwer, that they had ſubſtitutes and curates to do their buſineſſe for them, Ita labor aliorum eſt, & proventus ipſorum; So that others took the paines, and they the profit (ſaith he) and as it is in the book of Job, The oxen plow, and the aſſes feed beſide them. Com. in 1 Sam. 12.

Verſe 15. And the Sabeans fell upon them] i. e. The Arabians a theeviſh people that lyved by rapine and robbery. They are at this day called Saracens of Sarac to rob; for they keep up their old trade, and are not all out ſo good as thoſe Circaſſians, a kind of mongrell-Chriſtians, who are ſaid to divide their life betwixt ſinne and devotion; dedicating their youth to rapine, and their old age to repentance. Sabæi apud poetas molles vocantur: but Satan ſet them a-work. Breerw. Enquir 135.

Yea, they have ſlain the ſervants] Heb. The young men; for נערים, &c. Juniores ad labores. It was happy howſoever, that they were taken away, when in their lawfull calling, and about their honeſt employments. Eliah chole to be taken in ſuch a poſture: for he knew the very time: and yet when the charriots of heaven came to fetch him up, he was going and talking to his Scholar Eliſha. The buſie attendance on our holy vocation, is no leſſe pleaſing to God, or ſafe for us to die upon, then an immediate devotion. Happy is that ſervant, whom the Maſter when he cometh, ſhall find ſo doing.

And I only am eſcaped alone to tell thee] For no other cauſe eſcaped this one, this ſingle one, but to adde to Jobs affliction. There was no mercy in ſuch a ſparing: It was, that Job might have the ill newes brought him ſuddenly and certainly. That old man-ſlayer had ſo contrived it for the greater miſchief.

Verſe 16. While he was yet ſpeaking] See here we may, that miſeries many times ſtay not for a mannerly ſucceſſion to each other, but in a rude importunity throng in at once: Fluctus fluctum trudit, one deep calleth to another, and as one ſhower is unbutthened, another is brewed, Eccleſ. 12. 2. It muſt not ſeeme ſtrange, that be joyous to Saints when they fall (or be precipitated, plunged) into divers temptations, Jam. 1. 2. For croſſes ſeldome come ſingle. Aliud ex alio malum. Terent. πόνος πόνῳ πόνον φέρει. Ariſtoph.

There came alſo another, and ſaid] Before Job could recollect and recover himſelf, or take breath: this was a ſore trial. It is a mercy that we have ſome lucida intervalla, that the rod of the wicked doth not alwaies reſt on the lot of the righteous; that there are any interſpiria, any Halcyons; ſith here they muſt have it, or no where, Rom. 11. 4.

The fire of God] This was more terrible then the former, becauſe God ſeemed to fight againſt Job with his own bare hand, by fire from heaven, as once he did againſt Sodom. Be not thou a terror unto me, O Lord, ſaith Jeremy, chap. 17. 17. And then I care not though all the world ſet againſt me. If Marriners in a tempeſt have ſea-room enough, there is no fear; ſo if men in afflictions can ſee and ſay, Yet God is good to Iſrael, to ſuch as be pure in heart, there is comfort; and on the contrary, it is fearfull to fall into the hands of the living God. Heb. 10.

And hath conſumed me, &c.] wherewith Job was wont to offer ſacrifice. It was great joy to those in Joel, that God after a sore and long famine, would yet leave a blessing behind him; even a meat-offering and a drink offering &c. Joel 2.14.

And thy servants,] Those souls of men, as they are called, *Rev.*18.13. This was a worse losse then that of his sheep.

And I only, &c.] See the Note on Verse 15.

Verse 17. While he was yet speaking] See on Verse 16.

The Chaldeans] A base and obscure people from the beginning, subject to the Assyrians, but yet more potent then the Sabeans, as appeareth by the three bands they made out. The Sabeans are noted by Strabo to be an idle and effeminate people. The Chaldeans are set forth in the Scripture to be a bitter and hasty Nation, terrible and dreadfull, fiercer then the evening wolves, &c. *Hab.*1.6,7,8. Satan proceeds by degrees to afflict Job, that he may at length over-turn him: but beyond expectation, he held out all assaults: Instar rupis quæ in mari vadoso horridis Jovis, & iratis, ut ita dicam, Neptuni fervidis assultibus undique verberata, non cedit aut minuitur, sed obtendit assultum fluctibus latus, & firmâ duritie tumentia unda impetum sustinet ac frangit.

Joan. Wower Polymath.

Made out three bands] Which were marshalled and set in array by the Divel, who was their Commander in chief. Sic sæpe loricatus incedit Satan, & cataphractus, as Luther speaketh: he hath his Legions among men also, who (like those vulturine Eagles Job 39. 30.) do glut-glut blood, as the Hebrew word there soundeth and signifieth.

And fell upon the Camels] Heb. Spread themselves over them, rushed and ran violently making an impression upon the Camels.

And have carryed them away Heb. Have taken them to themselves, though Job had never dealt discourteously with these Chaldeans, nor had his Camels trespassed them, but were carefully kept by the servants. Innocency is no target against injury, neither doth Victory alwayes argue a just Cause.

Yea, and slain the servants, &c.] See the Note on Ver. 15.

Verse 18. While he was yet speaking,] See Verse 16.

Thy sons and thy daughters were eating and drinking wine] This was the last, but not the least of Satans assaults, reserved purposely to the last, to crush him quite, when he was now spent and spiritless, as he hoped. Let us look for like dealing, for a tough bout, at death howsoever: and be alwayes ready prepared for another and a worse encounter. It is said of Cæsar, that he sometimes put up, but seldom or never put off his Sword. It is said of Qu. Elizabeth, that in the greatest calm she provided for a storm. It is said of the bird Onocrotalus, that she is so well practised to expect the Hawk to grapple with her, that even when she shutteth her eyes, she sleepeth with her beak exalted, as if she would contend with her adversary. Should not we stand constantly upon our Guard, who have so restlesse and pitilesse an enemy?

Seneca.

Thy sons and thy daughters &c.] Men may die then with the meat in their mouthes, and in the midst of their mirth and jollity; as did Ammon, Elah, Belshazzar. Whether therefore we eat or drink &c. do all to the glory of God, 1 Cor.10.31. Let there be holinesse to the Lord written upon our pots, Zech 14.21. Let us eat, and drink, and sleep eternal life, as a reverend Scotch Divine was said to do. Jobs good heart aked and quaked (likely) at the hearing of this sad newes, of so sudden a death of his children, amidst their merriments: for he used to say, when there was no such danger, It may be, my sons have sinned, and cursed God in their hearts. Me thinks, I hear him saying, or rather sighing out those sorrowfull words of Cratesicles in Plutarch, when he saw her dear children slain afore her, Quo, pueri, ejis profecti? Poor souls, what's become of you? See more on Verse 13.

Plus. in vit. Cleomenis.

Verse 19. And behold, there came a great wind] The Divel (doubtlesse) was in this wind (as he is by divine permission, the Prince of the power of the air, Eph.2.2. and can thereby do much mischief) what wonder then though it were a great wind; so spirited by him, and rumbe (ventus à vemendo) came on amaine, and with a force, as being driven on by the Divel. It was a wonderfull wind (belike a whirlwind) and hath therefore a Behold set upon it; such a wind as the Relator had never known before: The Rabbines say, that he was so affrighted with it, that no sooner had he made an end of his report of it to Job, but he fell down dead at his feet. Sure it is, that he relateth the matter punctually and graphically, with singular diligence, and without without that moderation and making the beſt of things at firſt, as in ſuch caſes is uſuall, when parents are firſt made acquainted with the ſudden death of their children, or other ſad accidents that have befallen them. This meſſenger cluſtereth out all at once, being thereunto ſet on, and ſuborned by Satan (as Lavater thinketh) to ſtirre up Jobs ſtomack, and to make him break off that ſo well-twiſted thred of his patience.

From the wilderneſſe] of Idumea, or Arabia, called deſerta. The divel, who haunteth dry and deſert places, was the Æolus that ſent it. Let us bleſſe that God (the maker and maſter of theſe Meteors, and of all things elſe) who bindeth up ſuch an enemy and boundeth ſuch a power.

And ſmote the four corners of the houſe.] This was extraordinary, and therefore the more dreadfull: God ſeeming to fulfil upon Job and his children, what he threatneth in the Law, Deut. 28. 59. I will make their plagues wonderful. But what ſaith Solomon, and that after long debate with himſelf about occurrents of this nature? For all this I conſidered in mine heart, even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wiſe, and their works, are in the hand of God: no man knoweth, either love or hatred, by all that is before them, Eccleſ. 9. 1. 2 by externals we cannot judge aright of eternals. Let it be our care to lay hold on eternal life; and then ſudden death can do us no hurt; no gueſt cometh unawares to him who keeps a conſtant table.

And it fell upon the young men, and they are dead] No doubt but they were miſerably mawled and diſ-membred by the fall, ſo that they were pulled forth piecemeale, and it could hardly be known which was which as we ſay. The like death befell Scopas (a rich and noble man of Theſſaly) together with his gueſts, all oppreſſed and ſlain together by the ruin of that room where they were feaſting, and fearing no ſuch danger, as Tully telleth us; Simonides was at that feaſt, but was at that inſtant happily called out by two young men that came to ſpeak with him. Luther had the like deliverance by a ſpecial providence, as Mr. Fox reckneth. But ſo had not thoſe Londoners in the Reign of King William the ſecond, who periſhed by a terrible tempeſt, which blew down ſuddenly ſix hundred and ſix houſes in that chief City. No more had thoſe that died by the fall of part of an houſe in Black-Friers, where and whiles Drury a Popiſh Prieſt was preaching, who (together with an hundred more Papiſts his hearers) had there their paſſport; this fell out in the year 1623. And the like we had lately at Witney in Oxford-ſhire, where a ſcurrilous blaſphemous comedy was by the fall of the room wherein it was acted, Feb. 3. 1652 turned into a Tragedy, as ending with the deaths of ſix, and hurts of about threeſcore, who were bruiſed and maimed, and ſome (as it were) half dead, carried away by their friends. The narrative whereof, together with what was preached there in three Sermons on that occaſion from Rom 1. 18. is ſet forth by Mr. John Rowe (Lecturer in that town) in his book called Tragicomedia.

Cic. lib. 2. de Orator.

Acts & Mon. fol. 787.

Stowes Chron. cont. by Howe page 130.

Verſe 20. Then Job aroſe and rent his mantle] He ſtirred not at the three firſt doleſull tidings, but this fourth ſtartleth him; for he was neither a Stoick, nor a ſtock. His ſtrength was not the ſtrength of ſtones, nor his fleſh of braſſe, chap 6. 12. That he ſhould bear blowes, and never feel paine, or make moan, that he ſhould be ſilent in darkneſſe, 1 Sam. 2. 9. and not cry when God bound him, Job 36. 11. This Stoical apathy or indolency (condemning all affections in that their wiſe man, who, as Cicero very well ſaith, as yet was never found) Jeremiah juſtly complaineth of, Jer. 5. 3. and the Peripatetickes utterly diſliked, teaching, that wiſedome doth not remove affections, but only reduce them to a mediocrity. Job kept the mean between deſpiſing the chaſtening of the Lord, and fainting when rebuked by him, Heb. 12. 5 See my Love-tokens, pag. 37, 38. &c.

When Germanicus died, divers forraign Princes ſhaved their beards, to ſhew their grief. Suetan. Legatus Hadr. Jun. com. de coma, cap. 2. & 4. Plut. in Alex.

And ſhaved his head] In token of his very great ſorrow, ſee Jer. 7. 29. Micah 1. 16. Make thee bald, and poll thee for thy delicate children, enlarge thy baldneſſe as the Eagle. See the note there. Plutarch telleth us, that Alexander the great, at the Funeral of Epheſtion his favourite, not only ſhaved himſelf, but clipped his horſes and mules haire, yea, he plucked down alſo the battlements of the walls of the City, that they might ſeem to mourn too: but this favour'd of too much fullenneſſe. How much better his Macedonians, who being once ſenſible of his diſpleaſure, laid by their armes, put on their mourning attire, came creeping to his tent, where where for almost three dayes they remained with loud cries, and abundance of tears, testifying their remorse for offending him, beseeching his pardon, which at last they gained. God calleth to baldnesse for sin, Isa. 22. 12. which in other cases was forbidden, Lev. 19. 27. and 21. 5. Deut. 14. 1. This Job performed here: for he knew that although God afflicteth sometimes for his own glory, John 9. 3. sometimes for triall or exercise of his peoples graces; yet sin is ever at the bottome as the meritorious cause of what they suffer; and if he did not duely consider it before, Zophar gave him to understand that God exacted of him lesse then his iniquity had deserved, chap. 11. 6.

And fell down upon the ground] This shewes that Job arose not before to this end, that with a stout and stubborn gesture of the body, he might withstand God: but rather, that he might with greater lowlinesse and humility submit to his justice, and implore his mercy: He fell down upon the ground and worshipped, saith the Text; that is, he fell upon the ground to worship. He fell not all along on the earth, as Saul did, out of despondency and despaire, after that he had heard the divell preaching his funerall, he lay like an oxe on the earth, in the fulnesse of his stature, as the Original hath it, 1 Sam. 28. 20. but, as humbling himself under the mighty hand of God, who would raise him up in due season, 1 Pet. 5. 6. and as reverently and religiously submitting to his will. And it is probably observed (saith a late Expositor out of another) that the ancient Prophets and holy men were called Nephalim procidentes, or Prostrantes, that is prostrates or Fallers downe, because in their worship they usually fell down upon the earth, to humble themselves before the Lord.

Mr. Caryl. ex Bolduc in loc.

1 Sam. 25. 37 Herod Hom.

Verse 21. And said] He lay not on the ground dumb as a stone, as it is said of Nabal, and fained of Niobe. He rageth not as Xerxes did, when he beat the Sea by way of revenge: neither vexeth himself without measure, as Achilles at the death of his friend Patroclus. He curseth not God to his face (as Satan that old liar said he would do) nor so much as the Sabees and Chaldees, or the divel the chief Engineer of his present sufferings: but rejoycing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer he said in the words of truth and soberneſſe.

Rom. 12. 12.

Naked came I out of my mothers womb] Hence the Proverb, Nudus tanquam ex matre, not having a ragge to my back, but stark naked, as ever I was born. Hither I came a pitifull poor destitute, shiftlesse and forlorn creature, not having a crosse to blesse my self with, as they say: much lesse, sheep and oxen, children and servants &c. howbeit God provided for me then, and as he took me out of the womb, so he made me to hope when I was upon my mothers breasts. I was cast upon him from the womb &c. And shall I now cast away my confidence which hath so great recompense of reward? No, though he hath stripped me stark-naked, and left me with as little as he first found me, yet I will trust in him. It is he that maketh poore, and maketh rich: he bringeth low, and lifteth up againe, 1 Sam. 2. 7. The will of the Lord be done. Here I am, let the Lord do with me, that which is right in his own eyes, 2 Sam. 15. 26. He is Lord Paramount, the true proprietary and Owner of all: I have been only his steward, his tenant at will.

Psal. 22. 9, 10

Jamque meos dedo Domino tibi jure penates:
Tu mihi jus dederas, posse vocare Deos.

And naked shall I return thither again] Sc. to the womb of my Magna Parens, the earth, fitly called a Mother, because as thence we came in Adam, so there-hence shall we be born again (as it were) at the resurrection; called therefore the Regeneration, Matth 19. 28. for so some read the words there; Ye which have followed me, shall in the Regeneration (when the Son of man shall sit in his glory) sit upon twelve thrones &c. See Psal. 2. 7. with Acts 13. 33. This Plato hammered at in his παλιγγενεσια or great Revolution. To the grave therefore, that womb of the earth, that Congregation house of all living, as Job elsewhere calleth it, chap. 30. 23. shall I return, saith he; implying that our life is nothing but a coming and a returning. Repatriare est hoc, saith Bernard concerning death. It is but a coming and a going (saith a Divine) it is but a flood and an ebb, and then we are carried into the Ocean of Eternity. I read of one, who being asked what life was? made an answer answerlesse; for he presently turned his back, and went his way. The truth is, wee fetch here but a turn, and God saith, Return againe, Psal. 90. 3. To live, is but to

Magna parens terra est. Ovid.

lye

lye a dying: the earth receiveth us like a kind mother into her entrailes; when we have a while troden her underfoot, we haſte to our long home, Eccleſ. 12. 5. Heb. to our old home; ſc. to the duſt, from whence at firſt we were taken. Tremellius rendreth it in domum ſæculi, to the houſe of our generation, where we and all our Contemporaries ſhall meet. Cajetan, in domum mundi, the houſe which the world provideth for us; and to this houſe (much in Jobs mind, and therefore he here ſaith Thither) this houſe of the grave (as the Chaldee paraphraſeth) men muſt return naked. As he came forth of his mothers womb, naked ſhall he return to go as he came (ſaith Solomon) and ſhall take nothing of his labour which he may carry away in his hand, Eccleſ. 5. 15. Death as a porter, ſtands at the gate, and ſtrips men of all their worldly wealth, leaving them ne obolum quidem unde naulum ſolvant.

Haud ullas portabis opes Acherontis ad undas.
Nudus ab inferna ſtulte vehêre rate. Propert.

Some have had great ſtore of gold and ſilver buried with them, but to ſmall purpoſe, more then to proclaim their own folly. Some wiſer then ſome: if I muſt leave all the reſt, yet this Ile take with me, ſaid a ſilly fellow, when giving up the Ghoſt, he clapt a twenty ſhillings piece of gold into his mouth. Athenæus telleth of one, Reg. of Lon. that at the hour of his death, devoured many pieces of gold, and ſewed the reſt in his coat, commanding that they ſhould be all buried with him. Hermocrates being loth that any-man ſhould enjoy his goods after him, made himſelf by will, heir of his own goods. Theſe muck-worms, like thoſe ten men Jer. 41. 8. having treaſures in the field, of wheat, barley, oyle &c. are full loth to part with them: and having much cattle, as thoſe Reubenites and Gadites, Numb. 32. 5. they would faine live ſtill on this ſide Jordan: having made their gold their God, they cannot think of parting with it: they would if poſſible, carry the world with them out of the world. But what ſaith the Apoſtle? We brought nothing with us into this world, and it is certain (ſee how he aſſevereth and aſſureth it, as if ſome rich wretches made queſtion of it) we can carry nothing out, nothing but a winding-ſheet; as Sultan Saladines ſhirt, which he commanded to be hung up at his buriall, a bare Prieſt going before the bier and proclaiming, Saladine the mighty Monarch of the Eaſt is gone, and taketh no more with him then what you here ſee. And to the ſame ſenſe the Poet ſpeaking of Annibal, ſaith, 1 Tim. 6, 7.

——— modò quam fortuna fovendo
Congeſtis opibus donisque referſit opimis, Nudum tartareâ portârit navita cymbâ. Sil. Ital.

The Lord gave] It is his bleſſing upon the diligent hand, that maketh rich, Pro. 10. 22. as without that, all pains and policies are but arena ſine calce, ſand without lime, they will not hold together. Not only every perfect, (that is, ſpiritual bleſſings in heavenly things) but every good gift, that is, temporal bleſſings in creature-comforts, come from above, from the Father of lights, Jam. 1. 17. as pledges of his love to thoſe that are his, and as an earneſt of better things hereafter, Pſal. 23. 6. 7. Gen. 27. 28. God give thee the dew of heaven, ſaith Iſaak to Jacob. Eſau likewiſe hath the like, but not with a God give thee, he profanely ſacrificed to his owne net, not having God in all his thoughts. He ſaid with that Aſſyrian, Iſai. 10. 13. By the ſtrength of my hand have I done this: my power and the might of my hand hath gotten me all this wealth &c. Is not this great Babel that I have built &c? Job uttereth no ſuch bubbles of words; he arrogateth nothing to himſelfe, but aſcribeth all to God, whom the heathens alſo acknowledge ——— δόσιν ἄκρον, The giver of all Good. Deut. 8. 10, 11. Hom.

And the Lord hath taken away] As well he might, for though I had the poſſeſſion, yet he hath the property; neither can he poſſibly do me wrong, ſith he is Lord of all, and may diſpoſe of me and mine as he pleaſeth. Hierome teacheth his friend Julian to ſay, Tuliſti liberos quos ipſe dederas: non contriſtor quod reſpiſti, ago gratias quod dediſti: Thou haſt taken away the children which thou haddſt given me: I grieve not that thou haſt taken them, but give thee thanks for giving them. Julian that vile Apoſtate, ſaid at his death, I gladly render up my life to Nature requiring it; as a thankfull and faithfull debtor. This was ſtout, but a copy of his countenance, and meerly for a name. And what ſhall we think of Quintus Fabius Maximus? Vitam repoſcenti natura tanquam debitor bonæ fidei redditurus exulto. Ammian. l. 25.

Maximus? who when he heard that his mother and wife whom he loved dearly, were ſlain by the fall of an houſe, and that his younger ſon, a brave hopefull young man, died the ſame time in Umbria, he never changed his countenance (though his friends lamented the loſſe with many tears) but went on with the buſineſſes of the Common-wealth, as if no ſuch calamity had befallen him; was this patience or ſtupidity, whether? Patience is a fruit of the Spirit, Gal. 5. 22. ſo that Aquinas needed not to have queſtioned, whether a man can have patience ſine auxilio gratiæ, without the help of Gods grace. A natural man may, for ſiniſter ends, bite in his paine, as Marius did, when his leg was cut off by the Chirurgion; he may conceale his griefe, as Mithridates did for a time; but all the while, he was in a kind of fever (Epialis the Phyſicians call it) wherein men be cold without, but hot as fire within. And the like we may judg of Philip the ſecond King of Spaine, who is ſaid to have born the loſſe of his invincible Armado that had been three years a rigging, with much patience, giving, and commanding to be given all over Spain, thanks to God and the Saints, that it was no more grievous. This was but a fained and a forced patience: it was rather pertinacy then patience, it was an obſtinate ſtiffeneſſe of mind &c. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and what was the ground of it? he beheld God in all, the Lord hath taken away, ſaith he: not a word of the Caldean and Sabean plunderers, not a tittle againſt the divel who had employed them: and why? Job eaſily diſcerned Gods arrowes in Satans hand, and Gods hand on the arms of thoſe that had robbed him, and wronged him: hence Taceo, Fero, Spero, was his motto. It is the Lord, ſaid Eli, when threatned with the loſſe of all. I was dumb (ſaith David) becauſe it was thy doing. So was Jacob for the ſame reaſon, in the rape of Dinah his only daughter, afterwards married to Job, ſay the Jew-Doctors. So was Aaron in the untimely end of his untowardly children, Lev. 10. 3. So was Mauricius the good Emperour, when he ſaw his wife and children ſlain before his eyes by the traitor Phocas. And ſo was laſtly, that noble Lord of Pleſſis, who when he had loſt his only ſon (a Gentleman of marvellous great hope) in the Low-Countries, and ſhortly after, his Lady died of that griefe, hee took up thoſe words of David; I was ſilent, and ſaid no word, becauſe thou Lord hadſt done it. Bleſſed be the Name of the Lord] As well for taking away, as for giving: This was a rare bird, that would thus ſing in winter. It is eaſie to ſwim in a warm bath, and every bird can ſing in a warm ſun-ſhine: but to bleſſe God heartily, when afflicted moſt heavily; this, this is the breathing of an excellent ſpirit: In every thing to give thanks, ô quam hoc non eſt omnium! In this theme of bleſſing God for afflictions, alſo Baſil ſpendeth all his Sermon which he entitleth, Giving of thanks in all things; Chriſtianorum propria virtus eſt, ſaith Hierome, it is a vertue proper to true Chriſtians, heartily, and not hollowly to give God thanks for croſſes, for it proceeds from the joy of faith, and ſome taſte of Gods fatherly care of us in our corrections. If good things befall thee, bleſſe God, and they ſhall be increaſed; if evill things, bleſſe God, and they ſhall be removed, ſaith Auſtin; of whom alſo it is reported, that he had alwaies in his mouth Deo gratias, Thanks be to God for whatſoever befalleth us. The Prophet, Pſalm 89. 38. to 52. lamentably complaineth of the Churches miſeries, and yet concludeth, Bleſſed be the Lord for evermore: and this he doth not formally and ſlightly, but earneſtly, and with much affection. Lo, this is the guiſe of thoſe that be gracious. But how blank (I think we) was the Divel, when hoping to heare Job blaſpheme God, he heareth him bleſſing Gods Name in this ſort, The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away: bleſſed be the Name of the Lord? The Greek and Latine tranſlations inſert here another ſentence that is not found in the Hebrew verity; viz. even as it pleaſeth the Lord, ſo come things to paſſe. Our late Common-prayer-book alſo hath the ſame words in the form for Burial of the dead.

Aquin. 2. 2. q. 136.

Camd. Eliſ. 371.

1 Sam. 3. 18. Pſal. 39. Gen. 34. 5.

See his life.

Hier. in Eph. 5.

Si bona dederit Deus, grattas agit, & augebuntur &c.

ὡς τῷ κυρίῳ ἔδοξεν, οὕτω ἐγένετο. Sept.

Verſe 22. In all this Job ſinned not] The Greek and Latine verſions adde here, with his lips: but I could rather be of Mercers judgement, who referreth the former part of this verſe to the mind, and the later to the mouth: ſhewing that Job neither thought in his heart, nor uttered with his mouth any thing unmeet and unworthy of God, inſomuch, that both within and without, he carried away the victory and conqueſt over Satan, and ſo better deſerved to be Sainted then our Henry the ſixth, of whom the Chronicler writeth thus. This King in both eſtates

ſo

ſo demeaned himſelfe, that he modeſtly carried the one, and moderately under-went the other: yea, ſuch was his deportment, that the inconſtancy of his ſtate could not alter the conſtancy of his minde; inſomuch, that one of his ſucceſſours, King Henry the ſeventh, laboured for that onely vertue, to have him canonized for a Saint; and had obtained to have done it, had not the charges thereof ſo farre exceeded mediocrity, as to cauſe him to leave it undone. God himſelf hath here canonized, crowned and chronicled holy Job, for his many good properties before, and here for his humility and patience: The triall of his faith being much more precious then that of gold that periſheth, though it be tried with fire, is found to praiſe and honour and glory, 1 Pet. 1. 7. It was a ſaying of Philoſtratus, that one Jupiter ſet out by Homer the Poet, was worth ten ſet out by Phydias the carver; becauſe the former flew abroad through all the world, whereas the other never ſtirred from his pediſtal at Athens: ſo one Job thus renowned by Gods owne pen, is farre beyond all that have been memorized in humane hiſtories for their æquanimity and conſtancy. In all this that Job ſuffered, acted, and uttered, he ſinned not, ſcil. ſinningly: he was not transformed into ſins image; he ſinned not by curſing God, as Satan hoped, and would have had it: or charged God fooliſhly, or with folly; with any thing inſolent, inſulſe, unſavory; he charged him not in the leaſt, to have dealt unwiſely or unworthily with him; and this is here mentioned, as Grace, almoſt to a miracle, as Patience having her perfect work, and proving Job to be perfect and entire, wanting nothing.

Dan. hiſt. contin. by Truſſel.

Jam. 1. 4.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1. Again there was a day]

WHether the next day, or the next Sabbath day, or the next firſt day of the year, (which is Gods day of general Audit, as the Rabbines will have it) we have not to ſay. God, as he hath in his eternal counſell fore-appointed every thing that is done, ſo he hath ſet the times wherein, Eccleſ. 3. 1. ſuch as the creature can neither alter, nor order. This is a comfortable conſideration.

When the Sons of God &c.] See chap. 1. 6.

And Satan came alſo among them] Whether ſummoned to give an account, or of his own accord to ſue out a new Commiſſion againſt Job, it skilleth not. Reſtleſſe he is, and it behooveth us to be vigilant: not ignorant of his wiles, nor unmindful of his inveterate envy and enmity.

Verſe 2. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan, &c.] See chap. 1. 7.

From going to and fro in the earth] In heaven he comes not; into that earthly paradiſe he could ſcrue himſelf, not ſo into the heavenly. No dirty dog ever trampled on that golden pavement; thoſe that are there, are extra jactum out of Satans gun-ſhot, but whileſt here, he will ever and anon have a bout with the beſt; hee walks about for the nonce, ſpying advantages.

And from walking up and down in it] Doing his feates, and carrying newes. It might very well be he, who when Domitian the Emperour was ſlain by his own ſervants at Rome, informed Apollonius Tyaneus thereof at Epheſus, where he is ſaid to have cryed out the ſame time, To him Stephan, ſtrike him, kill him. But what a vain-glorious vaunt of an impudent caytiffe was this, that though vanquiſhed as he had been by Job, and beaten on his own dunghill, he ſhould take upon him ſtill in this ſort, that he had been walking up and down as a Conqueror or Emperour of this preſent world? Surely as Job ſtill retained his integrity, ſo did Satan his vanity, boaſting that he came now from viſiting his eſtate, and that nothing rendred him more glorious then the great number of his ſubjects which depended upon his will. Senault.

Verſe 3. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan] Before he would condemn him, he thus interrogateth him (which he would not vouchſafe to doe, when he had deceived our firſt parents, Gen. 3. 14.) but with a very bitter taunt and ſharp reprehenſion:

Beza. as if God ſhould have ſaid, Art thou not aſhamed Satan, thus to anſwer me, as if I had forgotten what I granted thee in our laſt aſſembly, and thus in my preſence to diſſemble &c?

Haſt thou conſidered my ſervant Job] See chap. 1. 8.

One that feareth God &c.] This he did not without God (according to that clauſe in the new covenant, I will put my fear into their hearts, Jer. 31. 40. I, is emphaticall and excluſive, q. d. I, and I alone) yet God giveth him the honour of it: as if he himſelf had been the ſole doer. Certum eſt, nos facere quod facimus; ſed ille facit ut faciamus, ſaith Auſtin; Sure it is, that we do what good we doe; but as ſure it is, that God doth all our works in us and for us, Iſai. 26, 12.

And ſtill he holdeth faſt his integrity] which thou haſt ſtriven quaſi ſicedulâ extorquere, by wrinch and wile to get from him; but he hath hitherto held it faſt as with tooth and naile. This was a ſingular commendation, and that's a rare faith, which being long tryed, doth not flag and hang the wing. By reaſon of the overflow of iniquity the love of many ſhall wax cold, (ſaith our Saviour) but he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved, Matth. 24. 12, 13. Lo, it is but a He, a ſingle man that retaineth his integrity; when Many loſe their firſt love, and fall from their former ſtedfaſtneſſe, as faſt as leaves fall in Autumne. Job would not part with his integrity to dye for it: when all was taken away, he laid faſt hold on that, and reſolved to let go his life ſooner. Chriſt he ſaw ſtanding over him (as once Steven did) and ſaying, Hold faſt that thou haſt, that no one take thy crown from thee. Omnia perdidit qui fidem amiſit, ſaith Seneca. In a common combuſtion, a man will be ſure to ſecure his jewels, what ever become of his lumber. Revel. 3. 11.

Although thou movedſt me againſt him] That is, againſt his perſonall eſtate, and his children, which are called himſelf; againſt theſe Satan is ſaid to have moved the Lord, to have incited and inſtigated him, ſtirring him up with reaſons and arguments; as he is an excellent Orator, if he may but have audience. But that the Lord was hereby moved to do ought againſt Job, muſt be wiſely and rightly underſtood, for God is immutable and unmoveable: neither can he be drawne to do any thing, but what he hath decreed to do from before all beginnings: but here he ſpeaketh after the manner of men, as if he were prevailed with by Satans ſollicitations.

To deſtroy him] So Satan would have had it, when God meant to try him only. See the like, Rev. 2. 10.

Without cauſe] or for nothing (as the word ſignifieth, chap. 1. 10. Doth Job fear God for nought?) without any provocation or cauſe on his part procuring it. Not but that there is cauſe enough in the beſt, why God ſhould afflict them: But as there was no peccatum flagrans in Jacob, Numb. 23. 21. No foule ſin of that people, flaming at that time in the eyes of God, or ſtinking in his noſtrels; and therefore Balaam (the divels Spel-man) could do nought againſt them by his inchantments, verſe 23. So there was not in Job that groſſe hypocriſie, wherewith Satan had falſely charged him: he was not that mercenary that Satan would have made of him. In vaine did that arch-ſlanderer and accuſer of the Saints move the Lord againſt Job, Gratis, id eſt, Fruſtra, ſaith Lyra; in vaine did he aſſault this ſtout champion, &c. Job non erat fugitioſus, Lavat.

Verſe 4. And Satan anſwered the Lord &c.] This impudent adverſary had yet an anſwer in his mouth, and would not be ſo ſet down. Of him and his agents (thoſe falſe teachers, as the Apoſtle calleth them) it may be truly ſaid,

Juvenal. ——— Nihil eſt audacius illis
Deprenſis: iram atque animos a crimine ſumunt.

Skin for skin] Any skin for his own, cattel, ſervants, children may be eaſily parted with by him, to ſave himſelfe in a whole skin, to keep himſelfe whole: others read it, skin after skin, or skin upon skin: both the Cutis and the Pellis ſhall go, ſo that life may be preſerved: as a man will hold up his arm to ſave his head, or ſuffer the loſſe of a limb to ſave his life. Ut corpus redimas; ferrum patieris & ignes. Job is ſtill integrâ cute, skin whole, ſaith Satan, and ſo long there is little trial of him: that man is rich enough who is well. I read of one, who being asked how old he was, anſwered, that he was in health: and to another that asked how

how rich he was, answered, that he was not in debt, q. d. He is young enough that is in health; and rich enough that is not in debt. Now all this Job was yet, and therefore Satan ill apaid and unsatisfied.

And all that he hath will a man give for his life] Life is sweet, we say: and man is a life-loving creature, saith the Heathen, fond of life, and afraid of death, which is Natures slaughterman, and therefore the most Terrible of Terribles, as Aristotle stileth it. The Gibeonites refused not to be perpetuall slaves, so they might but live. Those that are overcome in battle, are content to be stript of all, so they may have quarter for their lives. Marriners in a tempest, cast their lading into the sea, though never so precious, in hope of life. If Job may escape with the skin of his teeth, it is some favour: he may not think much to sacrifice all that he hath to the service of his life, his conscience only excepted. Some good people have strained that too for love of life: as when Abraham denyed his wife, David changed his behaviour, Peter denyed his Master, Qu. Elizabeth (though afterwards she could say, When I call to mind things past, behold things present, and expect things to come, I hold them happiest, that go hence soonest, yet) in Queen Maries time, shee sometimes heard divine service after the Romish religion, and was often confessed, yea, at the rigorous sollicitation of Cardinall Pool, shee professed her self a Romish Catholick, yet did not Queen Mary believe her (saith mine Author) remembring that shee her self, for feare of death, had by Letters written with her own hand to her father, both renounced for ever the Bishop of Romes authority, and withall acknowledged her father to be supreme head of the Church of England under Christ, and her Mothers marriage to have been incestuous and unjust. Those good soules did better, that loved not their lives unto death, Rev. 12. 11. that by losing their lives saved them, Matth. 10. 39. that held with that Martyr, that life is sweet only to such as have their souls linked to their bodies, as a thiefs foot is in a pair of fetters.

ζῶον φιλόζωον. Æliop. τῶν φοβερῶν φοβερώτατον. Arist.

Camd. Eliz. fol. 325.

Ibid. Introd.

Fulius Palmer.

Verse 5. But put forth thy hand now] See notes on chap. 1. 11. This God did at Satans motion, yet non ad exitium Jobi, sed ad exercitium; Jobs temptation is of Satan, but his triall and invincible constancy is of God. God in a sense tempted Job. Satan also: even as the dog may be said to bait the beast, and the owner of the beast too, that suffered him to be baited.

And touch his bone and his flesh] pinch him to the quick, that not his flesh onely may feel it, but the marrow also in his bones, Psal. 6. 2. and 32. 3. and 51. 8. The bone and flesh are the chief materials of mans body, which is fitly compared to a fabrick, wherein the bones are the timber-work, the head the upper-lodging, the eyes as windowes, the eye-lids as casements, the browes as pent-houses, the ears as watch-towers, the mouth as a door, to take in that which shall uphold the building, and keep it in reparations, the stomack as a kitchin, to dresse that which is conveyed into it: the guts and baser parts as sinks belonging to the house &c. as one maketh the comparison. Now in all these and the rest of his parts of body, Satan would have Job to be smitten: and then he made no question of a conquest. Paine is a piercing shaft in Satans quiver of temptations: hence he stirred up his agents to tympanize and torment the Martyrs with as much cruelty as the wit of malice could devise; but all in vain. Heb. 11. 35, 36. Apollonia had all her teeth pulled out of her head (hence Papists make her the Saint for tooth-ach.) Blandina tired those that tortured her. Theodorus was cruelly whipped, racked, and scraped with sharp shells, by the command of Julian, but yeilded not. Rose Allen had her hand-wrist burnt by Justice Tyrrell, who held a candle under it till the sinews brake that all the house heard them; and then thrusting her from him, violently said, ah strong whore, wilt thou not cry? thou shameless whore, thou beastly whore, &c. But she quietly suffering his rage for the time, at the last said, Sir, have you done what you will doe? and he said yea; and if thou think it not well, then mend it. Mend it, said she? nay, the Lord mend you, and give you repentance, if it be his will. And now, if you think it fit, begin at the feet, and burn the head also, for he that set you a work, shall pay your wages one day, I warrant you. As little got the divel by these worthies, as he did by Jobs biles and carbuncles. We are ashamed, (said one of Julians Nobles to him) we are ashamed, O Emperour, the Christians laugh at your cruelty, and grow the more resolute.

Scrat. Theodor.

Acts & Mon. 1820.

And he will curse thee to thy face] Heb. If he curse thee not to thy face, q. d. then damne me, send me to hell presently. This Satan holds in by an Apoſiopeſis, being therein more modeſt then our deſperate and deteſtable God-damn-mee's; let them ſee how they gratifie the divel, who curſe and blaſpheme, or proteſt openly what they know to be falſe. This the divel did not.

Verſe 6. And the Lord ſaid unto Satan] who hath his requeſt: it is not alwayes a mercy to have what we wiſh. Deus ſæpe dat iratus, quod negat propitius. Be ſure we bring lawful petitions, and true hearts, Heb. 10. 22. and then we ſhall have good things, and for our greateſt good.

Behold he is in thine hand] Here God puts his child into his ſlaves hand to correct, but not to deſtroy. And ſurely, if we give reverence to the fathers of our fleſh, who correct us for their own pleaſure, ſhall we not much more be in ſubjection unto the Father of Spirits, chaſtning us for our profit, and live? The Turks, though cruelly laſht, are yet compelled to return to him that commanded it, to kiſſe his hand, and to give him thanks, and to pay the officer that whipt them. This laſt we need not do, but the former we ought, taking Gods part againſt our ſelves, and reſting contented; though as Paul delivered up ſome to Satan, that they might learn not to blaſpheme, ſo God deliver us up to him and his agents (ſuch as Satanically hate us, and are divelliſhly bent againſt us, Pſal. 32. 21.) cauſing us to ſuffer more then any ever did out of hell, that we may learn not to be proud, ſecure, ſenſuall, and may preach forth the vertues of him who hath brought us out of darkneſſe into his marvellous light, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Let us not ſay, if God would take the rod into his own hand, I could better beare it: but the tender mercies of that wicked one and his imps are meer cruelties. For 1. this is as if the child ſhould ſay, If I might chooſe my rod, I would not care to be whipt: or the condemned Noble-man, If I might chuſe mine executioner, I would not care to loſe mine head. 2. It is but one hand, and many inſtruments that God ſmiteth us with. Our enemies are but the men of Gods hand, Pſal. 17. 14. that can do no more then is given them from above, John 19. 11. Gods Maſons, to hew us here in the Mount, that we may be as the poliſhed corners of the Temple, Pſal. 144. 12. Gods ſcullions, to ſcowre up the veſſels of his houſhold, that they may ſhine upon the celeſtiall ſhelf, as that Martyr ſaid. 3. God ever reſerveth to himſelf the royaltie of ſetting them their task, limiting them their time, and letting out their tedder, hitherto ye ſhall go, and no further. 4. If they exceed their commiſſion (as they are apt), Gods jealouſie will ſmoke againſt them, Zech. 1. 14.

Heb. 12 9, 10. Buſbeq.

But ſave his life] Heb. his ſoule; put oft for the life, the cauſe for the effect: Satan ſhook his chain at Jobs ſoul, and would have deſtroyed it; but that he might not do: ſcratch him he might with his pawes, but not faſten his fangs in him. Job could ſay (for a ſeaſon at leaſt) as that dying Saint did, My body is weak, my ſoul is well. His afflictions, as afterwards St. Pauls, reached but to his fleſh, Col. 1. 24. And ſee that thou ſave his life too, ſaith God: (ſee how he chaineth up the divel, who would faine have been ſucking Jobs blood, and ſwallowing him down his wide gullet, 1 Pet. 5. 8.) Save it, that is, ſpare it; ſee that the Spirit faile not before me, and the ſoul that I have made; I have yet ſome further uſe of him, though a lamentable Lazar. You know how through infirmity of the fleſh; that is, notwithſtanding the infirmity and weakneſſe of my body, I preached the Goſpel, ſaith Paul, and my temptation which was in my fleſh you deſpiſed not. Daniel, though ſick, yet did the Kings buſineſſe; and Job, though ſcabbed all over, was yet of great uſe, and reſerved to great honour: therefore Save his life, ſaith God: and the divel, ſay the Rabbines, was as much vexed and wounded with this reſtraint, as Job was with all his wounds and ulcers. It is ſurely a vexation to malice, not to do its utmoſt.

Iſa. 57. 16.

Gal. 4. 13, 14.

Verſe 7. So went Satan forth from the preſence of the Lord] The like is ſaid of Cain, when he meditated the murder of his innocent brother, and went to put it in practice. Malefactors amongſt us, we know, are indited in this form. For that thou, not having God before thine eyes, but moved by the inſtigation of the divel, didſt ———.

And ſmote Job] He pretended to touch him only, verſe 5. but let every good man bleſſe himſelf out of Satans bloody fingers: his iron entred into Joſephs ſoule, his his ſtroke was very vehement upon Jobs body, making retum pro vulnere corpus: For he ſmote Job

With ſore boiles] hot boyling boyles, ſuch as the Sorcerers of Egypt were ſmitten with, Exod. 9. 10. and afterwards the limbs of Antichriſt, Rev. 16. 2. The Indian ſcab, ſome ſay it was, or the French diſeaſe, a moſt filthy and odious ulcer it appeareth to have been, ſore and mattery (why elſe ſhould he ſo ſcrape himſelfe with a potſheard, as verſe 8.) ſuch as whoſe ſharp and pricking humour penetrated the very bone, and put him to exquiſite paine, being worſe to him then Auguſtus his tres vomicæ briæ carcinomata, above-mentioned: or Philip the ſecond of Spain his loathſome and louſie diſeaſe, whereof he died Anno 1598. Carolus Scribanius thus deſcribeth it. This potent Prince for a long time endured ulcerum magnitudinem, multitudinem, acerbitatem, fœtorem &c. i. e. Many great, ſharp and ſtinking ulcers, which faſtned him to his bed, as to a croſſe, for a whole yeare before his death; beſides ſix years torture by the Gout, an hectick feyer with a double tertian for two yeers ſpace feeding upon his bowels, and the very marrow of his bones, beſides a moſt grievous flux for two and twenty dayes, a continual nauſeouſneſſe of his ſtomack, an unſatisfiable thirſt, a continuall paine of his head and eyes, abundance of matter working out of his ulcers, qua binas indies ſcutellas divite pædore impleret: beſides a moſt loathſome ſtench that took away his ſleep &c. thus he. Think the ſame, and worſe of Job, the object of Satans utmoſt malice, and that for a whole year, ſay the Hebrewes; for ſeven whole years, ſaith Suidas. Chryſoſtome compareth him with Lazarus, and maketh him to be in a farre worſe condition. Pineda ſheweth, that his ſufferings were a great deal worſe then thoſe of the wicked Egyptians under all their ten plagues; this was a boile, an evil boile, ſaith the text, one of the worſt ſort, the moſt painful and malignant that might be, and this all over his body.

Inſtit. princip. cap. 20.

Alſted. Chron. pag. 314.

Chryſoſt. de Laz.

From the ſole of the feet, unto his crown] It was all but one continued ſore, univerſall, as the leproſie, and therefore incurable; threatned as an utmoſt plague, an evil, an only evil, Deut. 28. 35. If any part were left untouched, it was his tongue and mouth, that it might be free to blaſpheme God: and that herein he was not ſmitten by Satan, ſome have obſerved from chap. 19. 20. I am eſcaped with the skin of my teeth, having no ſores there, as I have all the reſt of my body over.

Verſe 8. And he took him a potſheard] a piece of a broken pot, for want of better: oyntments he had none, nor baths to lenifie his ſoreneſſe. Phyſicians and friends were farre from him. He looked on his right hand, and beheld, but there was no man that would know him: refuge failed and periſhed from him; no man cared for his ſoule. He had ſtill a wife and ſervants, and (as ſome think) his houſhold-ſtuffe left him. He ſhould therefore by them have been helped; but they helped on his miſery, jeering him, and jeſting at him, as he afterwards complaineth. Himſelf therefore in this neceſſity, taketh a potſheard, a piece of an earthen-pot, thereby to mind himſelf, ſaith Gregory, that he was of the earth, earthy. For which cauſe alſo

Pſal. 142. 4

Beza.

He ſate down among the aſhes] or duſt, as repenting in duſt and aſhes, chap. 42. 6. So Jonah 3. 6. Matth. 11. 21. The Septuagint ſay, that he ſat upon the dirt or dung, for want of a better cuſhion, and that he was laid without the City, as if for the ſtink and ill ſavour that came from him, he was not ſuffered to be in the City: as Uzziah afterwards being a Leper, dwelt in a houſe by himſelf alone, 2 Chron. 26. 21. Diſce hîc, ſi ægrotas, ſaith Lanater, Learn here, if thou be ſick, and have help about thee, of friends, food, phyſick, clean linnen, and the like, to ſhew thy ſelf patient: poor Job had none of all this. Nay, the Lord Chriſt had not whereon to reſt his head. Sin autem omni curâ & ſolatio es deſtitutus, ſaith he. But ſay thou be deſtitute of all cure and comfort, forced to lie without doors, and upon the hard ground; ſay thou be in ſuch a condition, that thou canſt neither ſtand nor go, nor ſit, nor lie, nor eat (either for want of meat, or want of ſtomack): comfort thy ſelf with this, and the like examples of the Saints. Ye have heard of the patience of Job, and what end the Lord made, James 5. 11. He raiſeth the poor out of the duſt, and lifteth up the beggar from the dunghill, to ſet them among Princes, and to make them inherit the throne of glory, 1 Sam. 2. 8. Againe, ἐπὶ τῆς κοπρίας ἔξω τῆς πόλεως.

In loc.

let

let no man truſt to his preſent proſperity: Job, who heretofore ſpake not to his ſubjects but from his throne, was now ſeated upon a dung-hill: and his hands accuſtomed to bear the Scepter, were employed to wipe the matter which diſtilled from his ſores, as the French Paraphraſt hath it.

Verſe 9. Then ſaid his wife] Was this Dinah, Jacobs onely daughter? ſo the Jew-Doctors ſay; and that Job had a fair daughter by her, whom Potipher married; and that of her came Aſenaz whom Joſeph married. They tell us alſo (but who told them all this?) that ſhe was hitherto ſpared, when all Jobs outward comforts were taken away, for Jacob her fathers ſake. Moreover, the Septuagint here help her to ſcold, adding a whole verſe of female paſſion, I muſt now, ſaith ſhe, go wander, and have no place to reſt in, &c. Job ſaid nothing all this while; not becauſe he was either inſenſible or ſullen; but becauſe it was God that did it, Pſalm 39. 2. and he had well deſerved it, Mic. 7. 9. I will bear (thinks he) the indignation of the Lord, becauſe I have ſinned againſt him. Yet my ſoul be ſilent to Jehovah &c. Satan therefore (who waited for his curſing of God, as a dog waiteth for a bone, but was defeated) cunningly ſetteth his wife awork, by her venemous words, to make him ſpeak at leaſt, and by her unſeemly and ſinful counſel, to draw him to do wickedly. Some think, ſaith Chryſoſtome, that the divel in the ſhape of Jobs wife, ſpake thus unto him; and ſurely their words agree; He will curſe thee to thy face, ſaith he; Curſe God and die, ſaith ſhee. Chryſoſtome himſelf thinketh, that the divel (if he ſpake not in her, yet) ſpake by her, as he did once to Eve by the Serpent, and that he borrowed her mouth, uſing her as a ſtrong Engine, to a wall of adamant, as the choiceſt arrow in his quiver, to wound Jobs righteous ſoule; and as a ſcaling-ladder, whereby to get up into this impregnable tower, as Gregory hath it. He had tried this courſe before with Adam, and had ſingular ſucceſſe, Gen. 3. 6. he had by his rib (as by a ladder) gotten up to his heart; yea, with his rib broken his head, as one phraſeth it, darting in death at the windowes of his ears. This he aſſayed upon Job, but without effect: his ears were waxed up, his heart fixed &c. although he could not but be vexed that his wife ſhould do it; eſpecially ſince hereby his ſervants and friends would be encouraged to do the like. O wives, ſaith one! the ſweeteſt poyſon, the moſt deſired evil &c. Sir Thomas Moore was wont to ſay, that men commit faults often, women only twice, that they neither ſpeak well, nor do well. This may be true of bad wives, ſuch as Jezebel who ſtirred up Ahab (of himſelf forward enough) to do wickedly with both hands earneſtly, 1 King. 21. 25. This in Jobs wife might be a particular failing, though a foul one. Women are the weaker veſſels, and naturally more paſſionate: they muſt have their allowance, as light gold hath. Shee in the text had no ſmall trials, and he is a perfect man that offendeth not with his tongue.

Pſal. 12. 1.

Per coſtam tanquam per ſcalam ad cor Adami aſcendit. Greg. Moral. l. 3. c. 3.

Doſt thou ſtill retain thine integrity?] Cui bono, as he ſaid: what getteſt thou by it? Is not this thy fear, thy confidence; the uprightneſſe of thy wayes, and thy hope? Lo Eliphaz (who ſhould have had more grace and government of his tongue then Jobs wife) ſcoffeth religious Job, as ſome ſenſe that text, chap. 4. 6. rendring the words thus; Is not thy fear (or religion) become thy folly? Where is now thine uprightneſſe, and hope of reward? It is an ancient and an ordinary ſlurre and ſlander caſt upon the waies of God, as if they were unprofitable, as if God were an auſtere man, an illiberall Lord: as if there were no gain in godlineſſe, nothing to be got by it but knocks, croſſes, loſſes, &c. whereas God is a rewarder of all thoſe that diligently ſeek him, Heb. 11. 6. He recompenſeth the loſſes of his people, as the King of Poland did his noble ſervant Zeliſlaus, to whom having loſt his hand in his warrs, he ſent a golden hand inſtead thereof. He rewardeth the ſufferings of his Saints, as Cains the Emperour did Agrippa, who had ſuffered impriſonment for wiſhing him Emperour. The Hiſtory ſaith, that when he came afterwards to the Empire, the firſt thing he did, was to preferre Agrippa, and gave him a chaine of gold, as heavy as the chaine of iron that was upon him in priſon. The divel could have told this peeviſh woman, that Job did not ſerve God for nought, chap 1. 9. See Mal. 1. 10. and 3. 14. with the Notes.

Curſe God and die] What curſed counſel was this? and from her who ſhould have adminiſtred conjugal help to him? How well might Job have turned her off with Get thee behind me Satan, thou art an offence unto me? Theſe were the divels words and and not the womans, saith Chrysostome; it was her tongue, but the divel tuned it, saith Origen. Curse God and die, for he will not endure thee to live, having once so set thy mouth against heaven, but will quickly set thee packing by a visible vengeance: or, Curse God, and then dye by thine own hands, having first spit thy venome in his face for having handled thee so hardly after so good service done him. Hacket did thus at the gallows, Anno 1591. threatning to set fire on heaven, to pluck God out of his Throne, if he would not shew some miracle out of the clouds to convert those infidels that brought him to execution, and to deliver him from his enemies: having the rope about his neck, he lift his eyes to heaven, and grinning, said, Dost thou repay me this for a Kingdome bestowed? I come to revenge it &c. O wretch! By the way observe, that Satan is a ανστοδυσαιμων (as Hegesias the Philosopher was called) a perswader of people, that death is an end, at least an ease of outward troubles, when as to the wicked death is but a trap-door to hell: we silly fish, see one another jerked out of the pond of life, but we see not the fire, and the frying-pan whereunto those are cast that die in their sins, to whom all the sufferings of this life are but a typicall hell, the beginning of those terrors and torments which they shall hereafter suffer, without any the least hope of ever either mending or ending. Cand. Eli. 403

Verse 10. But he said unto her] He did not start up, and lay upon her with his unmanly fist, (Chrysostome saith, it is the greatest reproach in the world for a man to beat his wife) but he reproveth her, and that sharply, as she deserved: and so did Jacob his best beloved Rachel, when the offence was against God, Gen. 30. 2. A wise husband, saith Marcus Aurelius, must often admonish, never smite, and but seldome reprove, and that with the spirit of meekness too, Gal. 6. 1. Meekness of wisedome, Jam. 3. 13. That was wonderful patience that was exercised by D. Cowper Bishop of Lincoln, who, when his wife had burnt all his Notes which he had beene eight years in gathering, lest he should kill himself with overmuch study (for she had much ado to get him to his meales) shewed not the least token of passion, but only replyed, Indeed wife, it was not well done; so falling to work again, he was eight years in gathering the same Notes, wherewith he composed his Dictionary. Job, though somewhat more tart, as reason required, the offence being of so high a nature, yet he breaks not out into fierce and furious language: he saith not, Go, go, thou art an arrant fool, a wicked woman, an abominable wretch, but Youngs Benef. of Afflict. 153.

Thou speakest like one of the foolish women] like one of the women of Idumea that have no sap of wisdome or goodnesse in them, but do whip their gods, (as the Chinois are said to do at this day) when they cannot have what they would have of them, and revile them for neglecting their worshippers. Note here, that Jobs wife might be a good woman for the main, though in this particular she did amisse: but it is a fault in Gods people, when it shall be said unto them, Are ye not carnal, and walk as men? when it shall be said of Gods daughters, that they speak or act like one of the foolish women. Davids daughters were known by their party-coloured garments; so should Gods by the law of wisdome in their lips and lives, by their patient minde made known to all men, by their eximious and exemplary holinesse. What should Jobs wife, the Governesse of such a religious Family, the yoak-fellow of such an holy Husband, be talking of cursing God? be speaking after the rate of profane Edomites? The Heathen Comedian can say, that she is a wise woman who can be well content to suffer hardship, and not repine, that it is now worse with her then formerly it hath been: Job would fain bring his wise to this, and therefore addeth, Qua aquo animo pati potest sibi esse pejus quam fuit.

What? shall we receive good &c?] He seeketh to set her down, not with rage, but with reason: and that indeed is the right way of backing a reproof: wherein as there must be some warmth, so it may not be scalding-hot. Words of reviling and disgrace, they scald, as it were. But words that tend to convince the judgment, and to stir up the conscience to a due consideration of the fault, they be duely warm, and tend to make the physick work the more kindly.

Shall we receive good at the hands of God, and not evil?] Shall we not eat the crust with the crumbs? drink the sowr with the sweet? blesse God as well for taking away, as for giving, accept of the chastisement of our iniquity? receive it patiently, thankfully, fruitfully? Shall we be all for comforts, and nothing at all for crosses?

Is it not equall that we ſhould ſhare in both, ſith it is the Lords mercy that we are not conſumed? *Gen.*49.28. Jacob is ſaid to have bleſſed all his ſonnes. Now he ſeemed rather to curſe Reuben, Simeon and Levi; for he ſpeaks only of evill to them: But becauſe they were not rejected from being among Gods people, becauſe they were not cut out of the liſt (as Dan afterwards was, 1 *Chron.*7. *Revel.*7.7.) though they were under great and ſore afflictions, they are counted bleſſed. Doles quòd amiſiſti? gaude quòd evaſiſti, ſaith Seneca: Grieveſt thou at thy loſſes? be glad that thy ſelf art eſcaped. Be ready at all hours, to ſend God home again the bleſſings which he lent us, with thankfulneſſe. There is a complaint of ſome men, ſo ungratefull, that if you do them nineteen courteſies, and then deny them the twentieth, you loſe all your thank with them: Carry them on your back to the very ſuburbs of Rome, and not into the City it ſelf, you do nothing for them. God is not to be thus dealt with; eſpecially, ſince he altereth the property of thoſe evils and croſſes which he layeth upon us, turning them to our greateſt good, Rom. 8. 28. like as the skilfull Apothecary turneth a poyſonfull Viper into a wholeſome Triacle. Good therefore and worthy of all acceptation is that counſell of the Wiſe-man, In the day of proſperity be joyfull, but in the day of adverſity conſider. Conſider? What? This, that God alſo hath ſet the one over againſt the other, and therefore thou muſt take the one as well as the other: that's but reaſonable and equitable. Plato ſaith, that God doth alwayes γεωμετρεῖν, act the Geometrician, do and diſpoſe of all things in number weight and meaſure: ſuch an order and viciſſitude he hath ſet of good and evill in the life of man, that they are as it were interwoven. Accept them therefore, and acquieſce in them both, as the Hebrew word here ſignifieth.

Auſon.

Eccleſ. 7. 14.

In all this Job ſinned not with his lips.] Hitherto he did not, though in a pitifull pickle, and much provoked by the wife of his boſome. He did not murmure againſt God, nor let fly at his wife; he did not threaten her as Lamech, nor fall out with the whole ſex, as he that ſaid, Fœmina nulla bona eſt. He doth not wiſh himſelf ſingle againe, as Auguſtus did; or hold himſelf therefore onely unhappy becauſe married, as Sylla did. No ſuch unſavoury ſpeech falls from Jobs lips, as the Divel wiſhed and waited for it. Neither doth it follow (as ſome Rabbines would inferre from this Text) that Job ſinned in his heart, though not with his lips: for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth would have ſpoken. Look what water is in the Well, the like will be in the Bucket: and what ſtuff is in the ware-houſe, the like will be in the ſhop. If his heart had been exulcerate, he would not meekly and wiſely have withſtood his Wives motion to blaſpheme. Hitherto certainly, God had helped him. It was the uncouth and unkind carriage of his friends concurring with the increaſe of his bodily paine, beſides the eclipſe of inward comforts, that drew from him thoſe paſſionate expreſſions, chap. 3.

Sylla fœlix, ſi non habuiſſes uxorem.

Chaldæus Paraphraſtes & Talmudici.

Ver. 11. And when Jobs three friends] His familiar friends, that did eat of his bread, as Pſal. 49.9. that were as his own ſoul, *Deut.*13.6. his boſome friends, and therefore precious Jewels, ſuch as could both keep counſel, and give counſel. Of ſuch there are but few to be found. Friends, there is no friend, ſaid Socrates. Faithfull friends, ſaith Another, are in this age all for the moſt part gone in pilgrimage, and their return is uncertain. A Friend is a changeable creature, ſaith a Third; all in changeable colours like the Peacock, as often changed as moved. Job complaineth of theſe his chief and choice friends, that they were miſerable Comforters, Phyſicians of no value, &c. Amicitia ſit tantùm inter binos, eóſque bonos; ſuch as were Jonathan and David. Corporibus geminis ſpiritus unus erat.

φίλοι, ὡδὲ φίλοι φιλοῦς.

chap. 16. 2.

Heard of all this evil] Whether by the miniſtry of the good or bad Angels, or of neither, it skilleth not. Ill newes is ſwift of foot, ſaith the Greek Proverb; and like ill weather, which comes ere it be ſent for. The ſins and miſeries of good people are much talked of, and ſoon bruited abroad. The Chaldee Paraphraſt here telleth of ſtrange buſineſſes, viz. that theſe three here mentioned (beſides the report they heard of Jobs calamity) were moved to viſit him by the wonders that fell out with them at the ſame time: for their trees ſuddenly withered in their Ort-yards, their bread at their table was turned into raw fleſh, their wine into bloud, &c. But this may well paſſe for a Jewiſh fable: The Author of that Paraphraſe was R. Joſeph Cacus, nothing ſo ancient or authentick as he who paraphraſeth upon the hiſtorical books, but exceeding full of miſtakes, and ſeldome cometh he near the right meaning of the Text, all along the Hagiographa.

τὰ βλάβας ποδαίκεις.

They

They came every one from his own place] More then theſe came to ſuch a ſight, no doubt: but theſe out of a deſire and deſigne to condole with him, and comfort him. But it fel out far otherwiſe: for they tormented Job well nigh as much as Satan himſelf; though it were of ignorance, and unwittingly, rather then of ill will, or malice fore-thought. Their very ſilence and geſture before ever they ſpake a word, did ſo torment his mind, that at laſt he cryes out in that bitter manner, as chap. 3. like a frantick man, which through ſome grievous ſickneſſe hath loſt his wits.

Eliphaz the Temanite, and Bildad the Shuhite &c. Idumeans all (likely) and men of much eſtimation for wiſdome (Jer. 49.7. Is Wiſdom no more in Teman?) and godlineſſe, as deſcended all of Abraham, whoſe care was to catechiſe his whole Family, and to teach them the wayes of God, Gen. 18.19. Their following diſputations ſhew as much, wherein they admoniſh him to repent, aſſuring him, that he could be no leſſe then a groſſe ſinner, and an hypocrite, becauſe ſo grievouſly afflicted. Job anſwereth their ſeverall ſpeeches, tormented in body, perplexed in mind, but ſtoutly defending his own innocency, and ſeeming to tax the Lord alſo, like as dogs in a chaſe bark at their own Maſters. To this, his friends reply ſharply from chap. 15. to 22. and he anſwereth them again with greater boldneſſe and courage then before. Hereupon they begin a ſecond reply, and here Eliphaz and Bildad onely ſpake: The third man fainted and ſpake no more, for that Job was invincible &c. till at length Elihu moderateth, cenſuring both parties; and God determineth, to Jobs conviction and finall commendation.

For they had made an appointment together to come] Not by accident, or at adventure, as Origen will needs have it againſt the Text; but by ſolemn agreement; it was a pitcht meeting. Neither ſtaid they till they were ſent for, but came (as friends) to do Job all friendly offices: like as in a fright, the blood and ſpirits run to the heart to relieve it. A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adverſity, Prov. 17.17. See the Note there.

To mourn with him] Heb. To ſhake the head, or other parts of the body, in token of commiſeration: to bewail his condition, as Cyprian did the perſecuted Saints of his time, Cum ſingulis pectus meum copulo, ſaith he: Mœroris pondera luctuoſa participo, &c. Who is offended, and I burn not? 2 Cor. 11.29.

And to comfort him] This they intended, but proved miſerable comforters too, by reaſon of the deceitfulneſſe of their hearts, fitly therefore compared to a broken or a deceitfull bow, that carrieth the arrow a clean contrary way. So Jonah prayed unto the Lord. chap. 4.2. He thought to have prayed, but it proved that he brawled: ſee the Note there. Theſe mens words were as a murthering weapon in Jobs bones; pious they were, and divine all along, but much miſ-applied. It is ſaid of them, that they handled an ill matter well, and Job a good cauſe as ill, eſpecially when once he came to be wet through.

Pſal. 78.57 The word rendred to comfort, ſignifieth likewiſe to mourn with the mourning of repentance, to teach us here to begin our pity to others, to bewail their and our owe ſins.

Verſe 12. And when they lift up their eyes afarre off] Hence ſome conclude that Job lay abroad, as lepers uſed.

And knew him not] for they had never ſeen him before, but in a ſplendidous faſhion; now then to ſee him in ſuch a pickle, that he had loſt all form and faſhion, more like a dead beaſt, then a living man; this amazed and amuſed them; they might alſo by this ſo ſad a ſpectacle, be admoniſhed of their own mutable and miſerable condition (Aut ſumus, aut fuimus, aut poſſumus eſſe quod hic eſt) and have the ſame thoughts, as the Pſalmiſt afterwards had, Man being in honour, abideth not; he is like the beaſts that periſh, pecoribus morticinis, ſaith Tremellius, the beaſts that die of the murraine, and ſo become carrion, and are good for nothing. Job was now no otherwiſe to be ſeene, then as a ſtinking carcaſſe full of ſores, more like then a living man, as he painteth out himſelf in moſt lively colours.

Pſal. 49.12, 21.

They lifted up their voice and wept] Good men are apt to do ſo, ſaith the Poet, & faciles motus mens generoſa capit; we are bound to weep with thoſe that weep, and to be both pitifull and courteous, 1 Pet. 3. To him that is in miſery, pity ſhould be ſhewed from his friend, (it was ſo to Job here at firſt) but he forſaketh the fear of the Lord, Job 6.14. Jobs friends did ſo, when amazed with the greatneſſe of his calamity, they therehence concluded him an arrant hypocrite, unworthy of any one word of comfort.

And they rent every one his mantle] His ſtately mantle, his robe of ſtate, ſuch as men of great honour used to weare, Stolam regiam. Some Hebrewes and Jesuites will have these three friends of Job to have been Kings; such I believe they were as the three Kings of Collen, so the Papists call those wise men, Matth. 1. 2. be they what they will; they rent every man his mantle in token of greatest sorrow at their friends calamity, a ceremony not unusual among other Nations, then those of the East. Suetonius telleth us, that Julius Cæsar, when he had passed his Army th River Rebican, and was marching toward Rome, he made a speech to his Souldiers, weeping and rending his garment: that thereby he might testifie to them what a grief it was to him to fight against his Country: which he would never have done, had there not been a necessity.

In vita C. Jul Cæsar.

And sprinkled dust upon their heads toward heaven] They so threw it up into the air, that it might fall upon their heads: to import 1. That all things were full of sorrowful confusion, as here earth and air were mingled. 2. That themselves and all mortals were but dust, Gen. 18. a little dirt neatly made up) and to dust they should return, Gen. 3 little deserving in the mean while to tread upon the earth, or to be above ground, Josh. 7. 6. See chap. 1. 16.

Verse 13. So they sat down with him upon the ground] Though his sent and loathsomeness were intolerable, yet they bare him company: this was love and sympathy, thus to sit by him on the ground, then when every one loathed him, and would not lend him a hand to help to scrape him.

Seven dayes and seven nights] Not all this time, but the most part of it, without giving almost any regard to their ordinary rest, and necessary sustenance. Origen saith, they were sustained and preserved all that while without sleep and meat, by a miracle. Others holding it a thing impossible, have therefore judged this whole book to be a parable only.

And none spake a word unto him] So great was their grief; Cura leves loquuntur, ingentes stupent. Calvin thinks they were too blame, to be so long silent. Belike, they were loth to be troublesome, and waited a fit opportunity; looking that he should speak first, and harbouring hard conceits of him.

For they saw that his grief was very great] His paine was extreme, and therefore no time to talk with him. Besides, though they came prepared, yet altering their opinions of him, they doubted how, and what to speak, till at length they became Satans advocates.

CHAP. III.

Verse 1. After this]

AFter so long silence of his friends, and to provoke them to speak, who haply waited for some words from him first, as knowing him wise and well-spoken. Or After this] After that Jobs pains were somewhat allayed, so that he could breath, recollect himself, and utter his mind: for some troubles are above speech, Psal. 77 4 they will hardly suffer a man to take breath; Job. 9. 18. (see Esth. 4. 14. with the Note) or to hear any thing, though never so wholesome or comfortable, Exod. 6. 9.

Job opened his mouth] But better he had kept it closed still; either be silent, saith the Greek Proverb, or else say something that is better then silence. But it may befall the best (left to themselves) to speak unadvisedly with their lips, as meek Moses did at the waters of Meribah, for which sin of his (some Jewes say) that he was damned, because we read not of his repentance. And a like wretched censure they passe upon holy Job for his cursing his day here; saying, that although in words he cursed the creature only, yet interpretatively and indeed, he cursed the Creator: like as he that spitteth upon a Kings picture, or robe royal, doth the same to the King himself. But why do they not then say the same of Jeremy, and pronounce him a Reprobate for cursing his birth day too? chap. 20. 14. R. Levi answereth, because it appeareth to be otherwise by Jeremies whole prophesie besides. And may we not say the like for Job, if we wisely weigh his words in their right sense, ſenſe, and the end which the Lord made, Jam. 5. 11. propounding him for a pattern of patience, not of impatience, whereof, nothing is ſaid againſt him, though he had his out-burſts, as here; and muſt have his allowance (as good gold hath when it comes to the ſcale) that ſo he may paſſe. If he had blaſphemed God, or denied his providence, aſcribing all events to the conjunction of the ſtars at a mans birth (as the Talmudiſts falſely gather from this Chapter) Satan had had his deſign upon him, and God would never have juſtified him, and preferred him before his friends, as he did, chap. 42. True it is, that chap. 38. 2. when he had ſpoken his mind over-freely, and indeed ſinfully (as there is not a man upon earth, that liveth, and ſinneth not) as if the Lord had dealt unkindly, if not unequally with him), God in the end ſteppeth forth, (as it were, from behind the hangings) over-hearing him, and taking him up: Who is this (ſaith he there) that talketh thus? how now? After which, Job was not only huſht, chap. 40. 4, 5. but humbled, chap. 42. 6. And truly it ſhould be conſidered (ſay both Ambroſe and Chryſoſtome, in Jobs defence) that though patient in the two former Chapters, yet now he begins to be wet to the skin, yea, the drops of Gods wrath began to ſoake into his ſoul: the divel alſo ſet upon him with all violence, as ſome conceive from the next verſe, Job anſwered and ſaid, ſo. to ſome diſpute with the divel. Now therefore that he thus falleth a roaring and a curſing his day, it is, ſaith Chryſoſtome, as a ſick man, who being under the Phyſicians hands, of whom he is well perſwaded, uſeth all patience towards him; but being in extremity of paine, layes about him, and ſtrikes at the ſtanders by &c. Exemplo Jobi liquet, ſaith another good Writer; By this example of Job it appeareth, that in extreme trials of the beſt, it oft falleth out, that paine and grief ſpeaketh, rather then the man himſelf, and that in the ſieve of temptations, upon a more violent ſifting, the holes being worn or widened, not the offall onely, but ſome grains of good wheat (that is, of faith) do ſlip through: which yet the right hand of a gracious God, is wont to gather, and to lay up in the granary of his grace. Job cannot altogether be excuſed, (ſaith Ferus upon this chapter) neither is he ſaid, as before, not to have ſinned in theſe following expreſſions. Rather it is to be held, that the Lord, who before ſtood by him, now for a time left him, to try what is in man, even the beſt man living, if he be not ſtrengthened by God continually. David was moſt couragious when he went againſt Goliah; but fearfull when Saul purſued him. Eliah was moſt zealous for the Lord of Hoſts, when he ſlew 450 of Baals Prieſts: Tantus tamen fulminator ad Jezabelis minas trepidat, fatlus ſeipſo imbecillior, ſaith one; and yet this valiant Prophet flieth at the threats of Jezabel, and heareth from heaven, What doſt thou here Elias? So Jeremy, Peter, Father Latimer, Pray for me (ſaith he) I ſay, pray for me, for I am ſometimes ſo fearfull, that I would creep into a Mouſe-hole; ſometimes God doth viſit me again with his comforts: ſo he cometh and goeth, to teach me to feel and know mine infirmity. Thus he writeth to B. Ridley, with whom he afterwards ſuffered at the ſame ſtake. His laſt words were, Fidelis eſt Deus &c. God is faithful, who will not ſuffer us to be tempted above that we are able &c. This was alſo Jobs comfort, when himſelf, doubtleſſe, for at this time it was Ego non ſum Ego with him: and God conſidered it: for he knoweth our mould, he remembreth we are but duſt.

Confuted by Lyra and Hugocard. in Josh. 1 2.

Bucholc.

Bucholc.

Acts and Mon. 1565.

And curſe his day] Diem ſuum Deum: his day, and not his God, as the divell would have had it. It was too much howſoever of that: and Job ſhould have opened his mouth to better purpoſe. In the Revelation, whenſoever heaven opened, ſome memorable matter followed: when wiſedome openeth her mouth, ſhe ſpeaketh excellent things, Prov. 8. 6. When Aſaph opened his mouth, he ſpake parables, Pſal. 78. 2. When our Savious did ſo, he delivered that famous Sermon in the Mount, Matth. 5. 2. But Job, alas, in the extreme paine of his body, and anguiſh of his ſoul, openeth his mouth, and curſeth bitterly: curſeth his day in a moſt emphaticall manner, and in moſt exquiſite terms, wiſhing all the evill to it that it was any way capable of. Now the day that he here curſeth, is either the day wherein he ſuffered ſuch a world of evils, as Obad. 12. Iſa. 2. 12. Or rather the day which gave occaſion to his ſufferings, his birth-day, as verſe 3. Jeremy did the like by a like infirmity, chap. 20 14 and ſome others: but never hath any yet been heard to curſe the day of his new-birth, nor ever ſhall, as whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promiſes, that by theſe we might be partakers of the Divine Nature, having eſcaped the corruption that is in the world through luſt; and beſides an entrance miniſtred unto us further and further into the everlaſting Kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, 2 Pet. 1. 4, 11. There is a μυριομακαριστος, a multiplied happineſſe in holineſſe.

Verſe 2. And Job ſpake and ſaid.] Heb. anſwered and ſaid. Anſwered? whom anſwered he? The Jew-Doctors ſay, he anſwered his friends, who having hitherto ſaid nothing to him, and heard as little from him, at length —— rupêre ſilentia curæ, and asked him what he ailed? others more probably conceive that Job anſwered here to ſome diſpute in his own mind, or rather with the divel. Some take this verſe for a tranſition only. Others make it a preparation for Jobs future diſcourſe, to move expectation, and win attention. The diſcourſe indeed is all along to chap. 42. 7. Poeticall, and very accurate, made up in Hexameters (as Hierome holdeth) not by Job and his friends at the firſt uttering, but afterwards by Job at better leiſure: or, as ſome think, by Moſes whileſt a ſhepherd in Midian, for the comfort of his poore Country-men in Egypt. Mercer ſaith that his predeceſſor Vatablus (as he had heard) had found out a way of ſcanning theſe Hexameters to others unknown, and to all, the more obſcure becauſe the verſe cauſeth a cloud. The firſt Hexameter that ever was made in Greek, is ſaid to be this,

Sic & Jonas orationem ſuã in ventre balænæ habitam, & David plerosq; Pſalmos &c.

Σιμιγίστε πτερὰ οἰωνοὶ μελίσσας τε μέλιτος.

Anno Mundi 2580. Prima vates Phemonoi Alted. Chronol. 468.

Birds bring your plumes, and Bees your wax at once.

Verſe 3. Let the day periſh wherein I was born.] He curſeth his birth-day, which the Greeks call γενέθλιον, quaſi γένεσιν ἄλγος: the beginning of a mans Nativity they call the begetting of his miſery; becauſe he is non penitus natus quam damnatus, no ſooner born but damned to the Mines of miſery, Job 14. 1. Crying he comes into the world, and before he ſpeaketh, he propheſieth, and ſaith in effect, Τί βίος εἰ μὴ βιᾶν; τί ζωὴ ἀνθρώπου χαλεπὴ πᾶσα, πάντα δεινὰ ἐργάζεται, γενέσεις εἰς γῆν φέρει &c.

Aug.

Naſci pœna, labor vita, neceſſe mori.

O that I had ne'r been born! Wo worth the day
That brought me forth, and made me not away!

This whole life is oreſpread with ſins and miſeries as with a ſilthy morphew, or as Job was with his leproſie: the anguiſh whereof, together with his inward troubles ſo grieved and galled him, that he not onely cryeth out, (which is naturall for a man to do) but giving the reins wholly to his grief, he roareth and rageth beyond all reaſon; and had not the ſpirit held him back, he would ſurely have run headlong into blaſphemy and deſperation, which was Satans deſigne. But in the Saints, as the Fleſh luſteth againſt the Spirit, and ſometimes getting the upper ground (as it were) bears it down, as here in Job at this preſent: ſo the Spirit again luſteth againſt the fleſh, and a great buſtle there is in the good ſoul (as when two oppoſite things meet together, cold ſalt-peter, and hot brimſtone, there is a great noiſe; and as when Paul came to Epheſus, there was no ſmall ſtirre about that way, Acts 19. 23. &c.) ſo that ye cannot do the things that ye would, ſaith the Apoſtle. As Job cannot do and ſay the good that he would, becauſe of the fleſh; ſo neither could he do or ſay the evil that he would becauſe of the ſpirit: he curſeth indeed his day, but not his wife nor friends, much leſſe his God, as thoſe male-contents did, Verſ. 8, 21. Nay, ſo ſoon as God came into his mind verſe 20. the fleſh was thereby, though not altogether quailed and quelled, yet ſo farre daunted and damped, that it kept it ſelf within the compaſſe of weeping and wailing, and God himſelf, though he find fault with Jobs ſpeeches for unadviſed, and ſometimes ranging beyond the precincts of godlineſſe; yet acquitting him from all groſſe ſin, he crowneth him with the garland of a famous victory, as Mr. Beza here well obſerveth. Moſt wiſely therefore and fitly doth Saint James warn us, that in thinking upon Job, we regard not ſo much what was done while the combate laſted, as what end the Lord made, Jam. 5. 11. The Saints doe never more prevaile and triumph, then when it ſeemeth otherwiſe. See Rev. 11. 7. with chap. 12. 11. they gather ſtrength by oppoſition, and conquer in being conquered, Rom. 8. 37. They repent of their ouerſights, as Job did chap. 42. And Quem pœnitet peccaſſe, pene eſt innocens, he is little leſſe then innocent who is afterwards penitent. Yea, it is almoſt more to repent of a fault, ſaith a Father, then to have been free from the fault.

Gal. 5. 17.

Senec.

Ambr. in Pſal.

And the night.] He would be fain to hit the time, whether it were day or night. He that is out of Gods way, knows not where he ſhall ſtop, or when he ſtep back. Take heed therefore to thy wayes, that thou ſin not with thy tongue, that unruly member. Pſal. 39. 1. Jam. 3.

——Hanc frenis, hanc tu compeſce catenis.

When Gods hand is on thy back, let thy hand be on thy mouth; keep it as with a bridle or muzzle, Pſal. 39. 1. Paſſionate ſpeeches terunt volant, non ſeruiter violant. The beſt that come of them, is repentance: Job, when he was once out, could keepe no mean, but what he had ſaid againſt day and night, he amplifieth by the parts; and firſt for the Day ver. 4, 5. and then for the Night 6, 7, 8. &c.

Verſe 4. Let that day be darkneſſe] thick darkneſſe, as that once was in Egypt, Exod. 10. 23. A day of trouble and diſtreſſe, a day of darkneſſe and gloominеſſe, a day of clouds and thick darkneſſe, Zeph. 1. 15. Let it be a dreadfull and a dismall day, let ſorrow and ſadneſſe overſhadow it, let mourning and tears overwhelme it: let it be as when the Sun hideth his head in a mantle of black, and is eclipſed, at which time all creatures here below, flag and hang the head. In the gloomieſt day there is light enough to make it day, and diſtinguiſh it from night, though the Sun ſhine not. But Job would have no light to appear on his birth-day. Thus he throweth out words without wiſedome, and as Hinds by calving, ſo he by talking caſteth out his ſorrows. Job 39. 3.

Let not God regard it] or require it; let it paſſe as not worth looking after, let him not take care of it, or powre downe any ſpeciall bleſſing upon it, as he doth upon his people every day, but eſpecially upon the Sabbath-day, Gods market day, called by the Jewes deſiderium dierum, the deſire of dayes, and by the Primitive Chriſtians Dies Lucis, the Day of Light.

Neither let the light ſhine upon it] And what is the air without light that firſt ornament of the viſible world? ſo what are all creature-comforts unleſſe God ſhine through them? What a wo-caſe is that poor ſoul in, that walketh in darkneſſe and hath none of his light, Iſa. 50. 10. how lamentably is ſuch an one deſerted, benighted! how doth he find himſelf in the very ſuburbs of hell it ſelf, where the paine of loſſe is greater then the paine of ſenſe, 2 Theſſ. 1. 9. And to note thus much, Job here, after he had ſaid, Let that day be darkneſſe, addeth as a greater evil, Let not the light ſhine upon it.

Verſe 5. Let darkneſſe and the ſhadow of death ſtain it] Let it be dies luctuoſus & lethalis, ſuch a deadly dark day, that each man may think it his laſt day, fatall and feral. Let there not be dimneſſe only (ſuch as appeareth through a painted glaſſe, died with ſome obſcure colour) but horrid and hideous darkneſſe, ſuch as was that at our Saviours paſſion, when the Sun was totally eclipſed, and a great Philoſopher thereupon cried out, either the God of Nature ſuffers, or the world is at an end. To darkneſſe Job here emphatically addeth the ſhadow of death. The ſhadow is the dark part of the thing, ſo that the ſhadow of death is the darkeſt ſide of death, death in its blackeſt repreſentation. Now let theſe ſtain it, ſaith he, or challenge it, or eſpouſe it. In nocte funeſtatur mundi hanc ſordem, ſolem ſtupent vincta, ſaith Tertullian elegantly.

Let a cloud dwell upon it] Creſcit eloquium per luxuſum oratio. Job heapes up words, like in ſound, and not unlike in ſenſe. Grief had made him eloquent: as hoping thereby to eaſe himſelf. Let a cloud dwell upon it, a fixed cloud, not ſuch an one as continually hangeth over the Iſland of St. Thomas on the back ſide of Africa, wherewith the whole Iſland is watered: nor ſuch a cloud of grace as God promiſeth to create upon every dwelling place of Mount Zion, and upon her aſſemblies, that upon all his glory may be a defence, Iſa. 4. 5. But ſuch as St. Paul and his company were under before the ſhipwrack, Act. 27. when neither Sunne nor ſtarre appeared for many dayes together, the heavens being wholly muffled &c. Abbots Geog. 251.

Let the blackneſſe of the day terriſie it] or Let the heat of the day terriſie it: as it befalleth thoſe that live under the torrid Zone, where nothing proſpereth. The Atlantes (a certain people) are ſaid to curſe the riſing Sun, it doth ſo torture them with extreme heat. When the dog-ſtar ariſeth, thoſe are in ill caſe who dwell in hot Countries towards the Eaſt, they are troubled and terrified. Some take the word Chamarine here rendred blackneſſe, for thoſe Chamarim mentioned by the Prophets, thoſe Chimney-Chaplains of the Heatheniſh idols, and ſo render it thus, Let the Prieſts of the day terriſie it, that is; Let thoſe who uſed to obſerve and diſtinguiſh dayes, note it for a terrible day; others underſtand it of the noon-day divels, that ſhould vex people on that day with hellish heates and fires: the vulgar Latine hath it thus, Let, as it were, the bitterneſſes of the day terriſie it, and to the ſame ſenſe the Chaldee Paraphraſt. Hinc forſan tenebræ Cimmeriæ.

Paraphraſt. Iob ſtill riſeth in his diſcourſe, making uſe of many poeticall figures, and tragicall phraſes, pickt out for the purpoſe.

Verſe 6. As for that night, let darkneſſe ſeize upon it] Having ſpent his ſpleene upon the day, he now vents himſelf upon the night, according to that diviſion verſe 3. As for that night of mine unhappy conception or birth, let tenebroſus turbo (as the Vulgar here hath it) a dark tempeſt, or a tempeſtuous darkneſſe graſp it, or invade it: let it be as dark as pitch, by a darkneſſe ſuperadded to its naturall darkneſſe.

Caligo perpetua & inuſitata. Mercer.

Let it not be joyned unto the dayes of the yeare] Let nature quite diſclaime it, and diſjoint it from the day following; let it not be reckoned as any part of time, that meaſure of all our motions. Some render it, Ne gaudeat inter dies, Let it not rejoyce it ſelf among the dayes of the year, as one of them. The night hath glory by union with the day: this he wiſheth taken from it. Diſunion and diviſion is a curſe: and the number of two hath been accounted accurſed, becauſe it was the firſt that departed from unity.

Druſ. And let it not come into the number of months] Deleatur è calendario, let it be razed out of the Calendar, and not have any place in the computation of time. The Hebrewes call the Moon and a Month by the ſame Name; becauſe the Moone is renewed every month.

Sic μὴν menſis & μὴν luna.

Verſe 7. Lo let that night be ſolitary] And ſo conſequently ſorrowfull: for aloneneſſe is comfortleſſe, & optimum ſolatium ſodalitium. There is a deſirable ſolitarineſſe: ſuch as was that of Iſaac, Gen. 24.63. of Iacob, Gen. 32.24. of Chriſt, Mark 1. of Peter, Acts 10.9. to talk with God and with themſelves. But uſually to ſit ſolitary is a miſery, Lam. 1.1. (for Satan is headieſt to aſſunlt, when none is by to aſſiſt) neither is there a greater tye to conſtancy, then the ſociety of Saints. This the Heathen Perſecutors perceived, and therefore baniſhed and confined the Chriſtian Confeſſors to Iles and Mines, where they could not come together for mutuall edification and comfort. There is a Woe to him that is alone, and good reaſon ſhewed for it by Solomon, Eccleſ. 4.9, 10, 11, 12. Let no man ſkye up himſelf, or affect ſolitarineſſe: but make conſcience of fellowſhip in the Goſpel, as the Philippians did from the firſt day of their converſion to Chriſt, Phil. 1.5. accounting, that Communion of Saints is a point of practice, as well as an Article of belief.

And no joyfull voyce come therein] That is, ſaith One, No pleaſing ſtilneſſe, (as in other nights there is) to invite the melody of Muſick. Or, let there be no merry-meetings, feaſtings and jollities, as was uſuall in the night-ſeaſon. Let not ſo much as the voyce of the Cock be heard that night (ſo the Chaldee here paraphraſeth) but the dolefull ditties of Screech-owles, and other inauſpicate creatures. Let no traveller, that is then benighted, ſolace himſelf with ſweet ſongs, or Muſicians play from houſe to houſe, as City-waits do.

Non tam cute, quàm corde, Æthiopici.

Verſe 8. Let them curſe it, that curſe the day] As thoſe atri & tetri Atlantes (before ſpoken of) curſe the riſing-Sun for ſcorching them; as deſpairing perſons, and malefactors led to execution, uſe to curſe the time that ever they were born. The help of all ſuch Iob here calleth in againſt the harmleſſe night he banneth, with ſo much bitterneſſe. Like as that deſperate wretch mentioned by Mr. Bolton, who being upon his death-bed, albeit he ſwore as faſt and as furiouſly as he could; yet deſired he the ſtanders by to help him with oathes, and to ſwear for him, Tremellius here thinks, that Iob calls to the ſtarres and winds to help him curſe. See his tranſlation of the Text, and his Notes thereon.

Rob. Bolton his Aſſize Serm. 227.

Who are ready to raiſe up their mourning] Whether they be thoſe mercenary mourners mentioned alſewhere, which, for hire, are wont at Funerals with doleſull execrations to lament the day of their Benefactors death, crying out, Oh the day! alas for the day! oh that ever ſuch a day came! See Ezek. 30. 2. Or elſe thoſe that really mourn for their deceaſed friends, and yearly, as oft as the day returneth, they renew their mourning. Theſe are called upon by Iob votos ſuccor deplere, to pour out their utmoſt lamentations and execrations upon this his night. Concerning the word Leviathan, here rendred mourning, whether it be taken for the Sea-Dragon, or the Divel, and what it is to raiſe him up, and why they curſed him that are ready to do ſo, with a prepared and meditated active readineſſe, if I ſhould go about to ſhew the Reader, with the ſeverall opinions of Interpreters, I ſhould not onely tire him out, but alſo danger doing as that Vicar of Ausborough did, mentioned by Iohannes Manlius:

Jer. 9. 17, 18, 20. 2 Chro. 35. 25. Amos 5. 16.

Lec. Com. 478.

ling: This Doctor of Divinity (for ſo he was) having read at Tubinge certain Lectures upon Job, at the end of his laſt Lecture ſaid, that both Job and himſelf were very glad to be rid of one another: For as he underſtood little or nothing of Jobs meaning, ſo Job ſeemed to him to be more tormented with his enarrations, then ever he had been with all his own ulcers. Let them that have a mind, conſult the Commentators here.

Verſe 9. Let the ſtarres of the twilight thereof be dark] If the ſtarres of its twilight be dark, how great is that darkneſſe? Job would not have this night to have light of ſtarres, or hope of day-dawn, hope of better, or place of worſe. And this part of the curſe he reſerveth to the laſt place, as worſe then any of the former. Semblably, that judgment of Pining away in their iniquity, is the laſt that God denounceth, Lev. 26.39. after thoſe other diſmal ones there to befall the diſobedient. And that Rev. 22. 11. Let him that is filthy be filthy ſtill, is the laſt, but not the leaſt (of thoſe that befall in this life) threatned in all the New Teſtament.

Let it look for light, but have none] Heb. but none. Loſſe of expectation is a great loſſe: Eſau found it ſo: and the mother of Siſera, Judg. 5.28. and thoſe ſhall once, that come knocking and bouncing at heaven gates, with Lord, Lord, open unto us, and ſhall hear, Depart ye. The hopes of the wicked fail them when at higheſt; whereas the Saints find that comfort in extremity which they durſt not expect: their light ſhall riſe in obſcurity, Eſay 58.10. it ſhall ſhine more and more unto the perfect day, Prov. 4.18.

Let it not ſee the dawning of the day,] Heb. The eye-lids of the morning; that is, the firſt breakings of light, the morning rayes or beams peeping abroad. Theſe this night muſt never ſee. Heaven is a nightleſſe day, Hell a dayleſſe night. Fire there is, but without light: it burneth, but ſhineth not to thoſe Reprobates who are in tenebras ex tenebris infeliciter exclusi, infelicius excludendi; thruſt into outer darkneſſe, a darkneſſe beyond a darkneſſe, as the dungeon is beyond the priſon, Matth. 8. 12. ἀνέσεως & ἡμέρας.

Verſe 10. Becauſe it ſhut not up the doors of my mothers womb] Leſt his curſe ſhould ſeem cauſeleſſe, and he mad without reaſon, he telleth you here, why he thus powred out his paſſion; and complaineth ſo heavily againſt the day of his birth, and night of his conception, which yet were harmleſſe, and had not deſerved to be thus charged, curſed. Becauſe it ſhut not up, &c. But how could the night do that? Is it not of God alone to ſhut or open the womb, Gen 20. 18. and 29.31.? And was it not he that took David thence? Pſal. 18.23. This Job could tell well enough at another time, but now he is quite out of all reaſon, beating himſelf with his paſſions, as the Lion doth with his own tail: yea, like ſome ſullen bird in a cage, he could almoſt find in his heart to beat himſelf to death. We uſe to ſay, —— Res eſt ingenioſa dolor, Grief is an ingenious thing; yet it maketh a man fooliſh (the exceſſe of it) as it did Job here; yea it maketh a wiſe man mad, as Solomon ſaith of Oppreſſion, Eccleſ. 7.7. and we ſee it exemplified in Job, eſpecially if the words be thus read, as they may, Becauſe he (that is, God) ſhut not up the doors &c.

Nor hid ſorrow from mine eyes] In Scripture, to ſee good or evill, is to feel it, Pſal. 34.12. Jer. 17.6. Iſa. 65.16. Job 33.17. He meaneth, that he had miſt thoſe evils which now he met with ſince his coming into the world, if thoſe doors, being ſhut, had ſhut him out of the world. Man is no ſooner born, then born to trouble, Job 5.7. yea, man that is born (or conceived) of a Woman is of few dayes, and full of trouble: Miſerable he is even ſo ſoon as he is warm in the womb, as David phraſeth it, Pſal. 51.5. If he live to ſee the light, he comes crying into the world, and an untimely birth may be better then he, Eccleſ. 6.3. The Hebrews call him Enoſh, that is, ſorry-man; or doleſull, miſerable, and deſperately diſeaſed man, whoſe living is but to lye a dying. The Greeks, when they would ſet forth one extremely wretched, they call him τριάνθρωπον, thrice-a-man, that is, thrice miſerable. And, What is man, ſaith Seneca? He anſwereth, Morbidum, putre, caſſum, & ſtertus vitæ anſpicatum: a diſeaſed, rotten, empty thing, beginning his life with tears, as if he wept to think upon what a ſhore of trouble he is landed; or rather, into what a ſea of ſorrowes he is launching; not unlike the Streights of Magellan, a ſea of that nature, ſay Geographers, that which way ſoever a man bend his courſe, he ſhall be ſure to have the wind againſt him. Job 14. 1. Pſal. 3.21 Ad Marc. cap. 11.

Verſe 11.

Verſe 11. Why dyed I not from the womb? why did not I give up the Ghoſt &c.] Why was I not forthwith carried ab utero ad urnam? from the womb to the tomb, from the birth to the buriall? True it is, that infants have the ſeed of death in them, and the principle of corruption, Rom. 5. 14. Every one (ſay ſome Chymicks) hath his owne balſame within him; his own bane it is ſure that he hath. But why ſhould Job be ſo weary of life, and ſo wiſh to be rid of it? Is not life a great mercy? Doth not the Philoſopher affirme, that a piſmire excelleth the heavens in dignity, becauſe it is a living creature? Saith not the Scripture, that a living dog is Eccl. 9. 4. better then a dead Lion? and why is living man ſorrowful, a man for the puniſhment of his ſinne? Lam. 3. 39. q. d. Let him be never ſo much puniſhed, it is for his ſinne; and if amidſt all, he be yet a living man, and have his life ſpared, hee need not be ſo over-ſorrowful, and to make ſuch an out-cry, and a wiſhing himſelf out of the world, as Job here doth. Life, alaſs, in its utmoſt extent, is but a little ſpot of time between two eternities before and after; but it is a great conſequence, and given us for this end, that glory may be begun in grace, and we have a further and 2 Pet. 2. 11. further entrance here into the Kingdome of heaven, as Peter ſaith. This, if Job had ſeriouſly and ſedately conſidered (but now alaſs, as in a hot fever, all the humors were on an hurry) he would rather have done, as they ſay, Themiſtocles did; who though he lived till he was about 107 years of age; yet when he came to dye, he was grieved upon this ground, Now I am to dye, ſaid hee, when I begin to bee wiſe.

Verſe 12. Why did the knees prevent me?] Why did the over-officious Midwife lay me on her lap, and not let me alone to periſh by my fatall helpleſsneſs? Man is a poor ſhiftleſſe creature; and Pliny railes at nature for producing him ſo forlorn, naked, and unable to help himſelf; but he knew not that this was a fruit of ſinne. Tully indeed could ſay, (whether he believed himſelf therein, I know not) Cum primùm naſcimur, in omni continò pravitate verſamur, as ſoon as we are borne, we are head and eares all over in wickedneſſe; but Pliny was not ſo perſwaded, as I have elſewhere ſhewed.

Or why the breſts that I ſhould ſuck?] Why did not my mother turn tygreſſe, and caſt me out when new born? Why was ſhe not cruell like the Oſtriches in the
Lam. 4. 3. wilderneſſe, that refuſe to give ſuck to their young ones? Rather we may ask, why doth Job out of his deepeſt diſcontent, think much of ſuch a mercy; and not rather bleſſe God, firſt, for filling two ſuch bottles with milk for him, ready againſt he came into the world? and then, for giving his mother an heart to ſuckle him, which ſome nice or unnaturall women will not, being therein worſe then thoſe Sea-monſters, Lam. 4. 3. that ſuccour their young? The Heathens called their Ceres (Queene of plenty) Mammoſam, as the Nurſe of all living creatures: And there are that derive Gods Name Shaddai from Shad a dug: becauſe as he openeth the hand, ſo he drawes out the breſt to every living thing. And for his Saints, they may ſuck and be ſatisfied with the full-ſtrutting breſts of his conſolations, the two Teſtaments, Iſai. 66. 11. And whatever Job now (under an heavy temptation, which, like lead, ſunk downward, and carried his ſoul with it) may miſ-judge, they may ſit and ſing thankfully with David, Lord thou (and not the midwife) art He that took me out of the womb; thou (and not my mother) keptſt me in ſafety when I hung upon the breſts: neither then only, but afterwards, for puerilitas eſt periculorum pelagus, and the Preſerver of men keepeth us ſtill from a thouſand deaths and dangers. And is this matter of complaint, and not rather of thankfulneſſe?

Verſe 13. For now ſhould I have lien ſtill, and been quiet] Why, but is it not better to be preſerved in ſalt, then to putrifie in ſugar? to be emptied from veſſel to veſſel, then to be at eaſe, and ſo to ſettle on the lees? Jer. 48. 11. to be tumbled up and down, as fiſhes are in the ſtreames of Jordan, then to periſh in the dead ſea? It is not alwaies (if at all) an happineſſe to lie ſtill and to be quiet: Life conſiſts in Iſa. 38. 16. action; and in all theſe things is the life of my ſpirit, ſaith good Hezekiah, who had beene in deaths hands (where Job ſo much deſired to be) and could therefore make a better judgment. What haſte then was there of his lying ſtill, and being quiet? ſay that he were aſſured of his ſalvation (for elſe death had been but a Rom. 8. 17 trap-door to eternal torments), was there nothing more to be done, but taking preſent poſſeſſion? nothing to be ſuffered with Chriſt, or ere we come to be glorified with him? Ought not he himself first to have suffered, and then to have entred into his glory? Luke 24. 26. And ought not we to be conformed to his image (in sufferings also) that he might be the first-born among many brethren? Rom. 8. 29. Let us run with patience (running is active, and patience passive) the race that is set before us, looking unto Jesus, &c. and looking off our present troubles (as the word there importeth) which while Job beheld over-wisthly, and was more sensible of then was meet, he brake out in this sort, and shewed himself too much a man. Let us do up our work, and then God will send us to bed all in good time, Isa. 57. 2. Rev. 14. 13. ἀφορῶντες. Heb. 12. 2.

fied

Verse 14. With Kings and Counsellors of the earth] q. d. Those that here have been most negotious, and (as the Grandees of the earth) have had greatest matters in hand, with those should I have been coupled in the grave, that Congregationum house of all living, as it is called, Job 30. 23. That long, or old home, Eccles. 12. 5. Heaven is called the Congregation-house of Gods first-born, Heb. 12. 23. and their house not made with hand, 2 Cor. 5. 1. But not many Kings or Nobles meete here. 1 Cor. 1. 26. because strait is the gate, and narrow the way that leadeth to it: there must be stripping and stooping, which great men cannot frame to. It was a poore comfort to Hen. 8. to be told upon his death-bed, that he should now go to the place of Kings: And a small commendation to Hen. 2. that some few hours before he died, seeing a list of their names who had conspired against him, and finding therein two of his own sons, he fell into a grievous passion, both cursing his sons, and the day wherein himself was born; and in that distemperature, departed the world, which himself had so often distempered. He went indeed to his grave, and slept with his fathers; yea, he was royally interred under a stately Monument, meant here (haply) by building desolate places for themselves: Absolom had erected a pillar for this purpose; and the Egyptian Kings their Pyramides, to perpetuate their memories. Confer Ezek. 26. 20. With these, Iob, had he died betime, or never seene the light, might have been fellowed: for death is the only King, against whom there is no rising up, Prov. 30. 31. and the mortall fithe is master of the royall Scepter, mowing down the lilies of the crown, as well as the grasse of the field. μανσωλεῖα. The Spanish Frier was wont to say, there were but few Princes in hell: for why? because there were but few in all. Daniels hist. 112. Sceptra ligonibus aequat.

Verse 15. Or with Princes that had gold] great store of it. Petrarch reporteth of Pope Iohn 22 that his heirs found in his coffers no lesse then 250 tuns of gold. Boniface the eighth taken prisoner and plundered by the command of Philip the Faire, King of France, had as much gold carried away out of his Palace, as all the Kings of Europe received for one years revenue from their subjects, together with their crown-land. What a Masse of Treasure had Cardinal Wolsey gotten here? and before him Cardinall Beauford, who when he saw that he must needs die, and that his riches could not reprieve him till a further time, asked, why should I die being so rich? fie, will not death be hired? will mony do nothing? The Cardinall Sylberperger took so great a pleasure in mony, that when he was grievously tormented with the gout, his onely remedy to ease the paine, was to have a bason full of gold set before him, into which he would put his lame hands, turning the gold upside-down. Of Nugas the Scythian Monarch it is storied, that when Michael Paleologus the Greek Emperour sent him many rich ornaments for a present, he asked whether they could drive away calamities, diseases and death? this because they could not do, he slighted them. These Princes that had gold, and filled their houses with silver, what would not they have given to have bought off death? but riches availe not in the day of wrath: it is righteousnesse only that delivereth from death, Prov. 11. 4. Thrice happy then are they who are rich to God, as our Saviour phraseth it, who have the Almighty to be their gold, and who have silver of strength, as Eliphaz speaketh, chap. 22. 25. Fox Mart. 925. Pachymer. hist. l. 5.

Who filled their houses with silver] That is, their graves, say some: called the dead mens houses, chap. 17. 13. The Jewes call the burying-place, Beth-chajin, the house of the living: and they used not only to adorn their sepulchers richly, but also to put their wealth into the grave with them. Iosephus saith that Hircanus found in Davids sepulchre three thousand talents. And Jer. 8. 1. God threatneth that the Chaldeans shal bring out the bones of the Kings of Iudah, and of his Princes, ——— out of their graves, as searching there for hid treasure, so some conceive. Sure it Lib. 13. Antiq. cap. 16. & lib. cap. 11.

Joſephus. is, that in the ſiege of Jeruſalem, under Veſpaſian, there was gold found in the entrailes of a Jew that was ſlain, which cauſed above twenty thouſand of them to be ripped up.

Verſe 16. Or as an hidden untimely birth I had not been] As an abortive or miſcarrying Embryo that falleth from the mother, as unripe fruit falleth off from the tree. See Rev. 6. 13. Hidden it is called, becauſe caſt a de as an unſightly ſpectacle, that cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkneſſe, and his name is covered with darkneſſe, Eccleſ. 6. 4. Job could have wiſhed one way or other never to have been, rather then to have been in ſo calamitous a condition: and

Job. 3. 6. herein he ſinned, no doubt, for that which is of the fleſh is fleſh.

As infants which never ſaw the light] but were ſtill-born, as we call them. The word rendred infants, is taken from a word that ſignifieth to defile, ſee Job 16. 15. for children in the womb are compaſſed about with pollution; and the firſt ſheet or blanket wherewith they are covered, is woven of linne, ſhame, blood, and filth, Ezek. 16. 4, 6.

Verſe 17. There the wicked ceaſe from troubling] Here they are veſſ'eſſe, as being acted and agitated by the divel, who being a diſcontented, turbulent creature, maketh adoe in the world, and ſetteth his imps awork to do miſchief, and to vex others. The word here rendred wicked ſignifieth vexatious perſons, that worry and weary out others, moleſtuous and miſchievous: In the grave they ſhall ceaſe from ſo doing. It was a ſtrange mind of our Edward the firſt, who adjured his Son and Nobles, that if he died in his journey into Scotland, they ſhould carry his corps with them about Scotland, and not ſuffer it to be interred, till they had abſolutely ſubdued the Country. This was a deſire more Martial then Chriſtian, ſaith the chronicler, ſhewing a mind ſo bent to the world, as he would not make an end when he had done with it, but deſireth his travel beyond his life.

Daniels hiſt. 204.

And there the weary be at reſt] Hence ſome Heathens alſo have counted mortality a mercy, and ſome of them appointed contrary ceremonies to thoſe now in uſe; for Plotin. ap. Aug. de C. D. l. 9. c. 10 Quintil. Inſtit. lib. 5 Herod. l. 5. Val. Max. they brought their friends into the world with mournfull obſequies, but they carried them out of the world with joyfull exequies, all ſorts of ſports and paſtimes, becauſe then they conceived they were at reſt, and out of gun-ſhot.

Verſe 18. There the priſoners reſt together] or all the as do their cruell creditors, and hard taſk-maſters. There, that is, in the ſtate of the dead, whether by land or ſea; the priſoners, or common captives, the miſerable captives eſt, ſuch as were thoſe poor Chriſtians, ſhut up ſo cloſe (by Barbaroſſa the Turkiſh Generall returning toward (Conſtantinople) under hatches among the excrements of nature, that all the Turk. hiſt. 750. way as he went, almoſt every houre, ſome of them were caſt dead over-board. Such were many of the Martyrs kept faſt ſhut up in Lollards Tower, in the Biſhop of London's cole-houſe, a dark and ugly priſon, ſaid Mr. Philpot, as any is about London: but I thank the Lord, I am not alone, but have ſix other faithfull companions, who in our darkneſſe, do lightſomely ſing Pſalms and praiſes to God for his great

Acts & Mon. 1669, 1670. goodneſſe, but eſpecially for this that I am ſo near the apprehenſion of eternall bliſſe: God forgive me mine unthankfulneſſe and unworthineſſe of ſo great glory. What pitifull hard uſage Gods poor priſoners met with in the late troubles, at Oxford eſpecially (from which death God graciouſly delivered me when I was in their hands) and in the Weſtern parts; ſee Mr. Bunn's Sermon called Job in the Weſt, pag. 38. where he compareth the enemies cruelty to that of the American Cannibals, who, when they take a priſoner, feed upon him alive, and by degrees, to the unutterable aggravation of his horrour and torment.

They hear not the voice of the oppreſſors] Their harſh and hard ſpeeches, Jude 15. that were as a murthering weapon in the poor priſoners bones, Pſal. 42. 10. Send me back to my frogs and toads again, where I may pray for your converſion, ſaid one of the Martyrs to his railing adverſaries. Art thou come thou villain? how

Acts & Mon. dareſt thou look me in the face for ſhame, ſaid Steven Gardiner to Dr. Taylor the Martyr? who told him his own freely, but fairely; for the ſpirit of grace is e mendax. Eſt autem Satanæ pectus fœtum ſummè exitiis, ſaith Luther, the divell and his agents are bitter railers, fetching their words as farre as hell, to break the hearts of Gods priſoners. Pſalm 69. 20. But beſides that they have their cordiall of a good conſcience by them, 2 Cor. 1. 12. in the grave

they

they heare not the voice of the oppressor, nor the barkings of these dead dogs any more.

Verse 19. The small and the great are there] In Calvary are sculls of all sizes, say the Hebrewes. Sua sors cuique dies. It is appointed for all once to die, be they great or small, low or high. Mors sceptra ligonibus aequat, death makes no difference: Kings and captives, Lords and lofels come then under an equall parity, death takes away all distinctions. William the Conquerours corps lay unburied three dayes, his interment was hindred by one that claimed the ground to be his. King Stephen was interred at Feversham Monastery, but since, his body for the gain of the lead, wherein it was coffined, was cast into the river, where at length it rested, as did likewise the dead corps of Edward the fifth, and his brother smothered in the Tower by Richard the third, and cast into a place called the black deeps at the Thames mouth.

Virg. Æneid. lib. 10.

Daniel.

Speed. 498.

Speed 935.

The servant is free from his Master] Servant is a name of office, he is not his own to dispose of, but the masters instrument, saith Aristotle, and wholly his, till he please to manumit him; if he do not, yet death will, and by taking away his life, give him his liberty; his body resteth from all servile offices for a season howsoever: and if with good will hee hath done service as to the Lord, and not to men; he shall receive of the Lord the reward of inheritance, even a childs part, Colos. 4. 24.

Verse 20. Wherefore is light given to him that is in misery?] Job hath not done yet, though he had said more then enough of this matter, but for want of the oyle of joy and gladnesse, his doors move not without creaking, his lips (like rusty hinges) open not without murmuring and complaining: Good therefore is that counsel given by David, Cease from anger, and forsake wrath; take up in time, before it hath wholly leavened and sowred you: fret not thy self in any wise to do evill. Hee shall not chuse but do evil who is sick of the fret. David had the sad experience of this, when he had carted the Ark, and thereupon God had made a breach upon Uzzah: David was displeased, saith the Text: and how untowardly spake hee, as if the fault were more in God then in himself, though afterwards he came to a sight of his own error, 1 Chron. 13. 11. with 15. 2. And so did Job, no doubt, when come to himself: but here he proceeds to expresse his peevishnesse and impatience, yea, against God himself (though not by name, sed an sese cohibens —— ob bonae mentis reliquias, saith Mercer, out of his good respect to God, which he still retained:) and calls for a reason, why the miserable should be condemned to live, since death would be much more welcome to them. How apt are men to think there is no reason for that for which they can see no reason?

Psal. 37. 8.

Verse 21. Which long for death, and it cometh not] The bitter in soul long for death, those that are in paine or penury, are apt to desire to be dispatch'd upon any terms, and would freely pardon them, they say, that would give them their passport. But these for most part, consider not the unsupportablenesse of the wrath to come, that eternity of extremity in hell, that death usually haleth at the heeles of it; so that by death, whereof they are so desirous, they would but leap out of the frying-pan into the fire, as Judas did: they do as the asse in the fable, who desired to die, that he might be no more beaten: at post mortem factus est tympanum, but when he was dead, he was made a drum-head of, and so was ten times more laid on, then ever in his life-time before.

And dig for it more then for hid treasures] Covetousnesse is αὐθαδιαβολος, all-daring, saith an Ancient: and men for love of wealth, will dig to hell, light a candle at the divel, as they say: With such an eagernesse of desire do some (that have little reason for it, all things reckoned) long and labour after death, not to bee rid of sin, or to bee with Christ, as Phil. 1. 23. but to bee freed from misery incumbent or impendent. Thus Cato (having first read Plato's book of the souls immortality) laid violent hands on himself, that hee might not fall into the hands of the conqueror. Thus Adrian the Emperour having lain long sick (and could get no help by Physicians, but was the worse for them, as he complained at his death) would gladly have slaine himselfe, if those about him would have suffered it. It is said that Severianus whom this Emperour injuriously put to death, wished of God, ut Adrianus, quamvis mortem ejus percupiat, tamen non possit, that Adrian might desire to die, and not be able, or find opportunity. There πολλοὶ ἐαυτοὺς ἀπέκτειναν τὸν βασιλέα.

Dio Caſſ. in Adrian. is an Epiſtle of his extant, ſaith the Hiſtorian, wherein is ſet forth, what a miſery it is to deſire to die, and yet to be denied it. This was the caſe of thoſe Popelings, Rev. 9.6. And in particular of Roger Biſhop of Saliſbury in King Stevens time; who, through long and ſtrait impriſonment, was brought to that evil paſſe, ut vivere noluerit, mori nescierit, live he would not, and yet die he could not. This is a very tripe-all-hell, and a fore-taſte of eternall torment.

Verſe 22. Which rejoyce exceedingly] Joy till they skip again, ſo Broughton rendreth it. Strange, that any ſhould be ſo glad of death that laſt enemy, that ſlaughter-man of nature, and harbinger of hell to the ungodly! but the divel hideth from them, till he hath them where he would have, and whence there is no redemption. What was it elſe that moved Auguſtus at his death to call for a Plaudite, or that made Julian the Apoſtate to die ſo confidently, and many now-adayes that have little reaſon for it to be ſo prodigall of their lives, and ſeemingly fond of death? Is it not becauſe they are fearfully blinded by the god of this preſent world, who holdeth his black hand before their eyes, leſt they ſhould ſee the evill conſequents of death, and be ſaved? which becauſe they do not, what do they elſe but rejoyce exceedingly (or with exultation, as the word here ſignifieth) in their woefull bondage, and goe dancing to hell in their bolts, not ſo much as deſiring deliverance. A man that is to be hanged next day, may dream overnight he ſhall be ſet free; nay, that he ſhall bee a King, and rejoyce therein accordingly: but the end of ſuch joy is heavineſſe.

2 Cor. 4.4.

Verſe 23. Why is light given to a man whoſe way is hid?] i. e. Why is the light of life continued to him who is in a maze or labyrinth of miſeries, whereof he can ſee no cauſe, and whereout he can deſcry no iſſue? no hope at all appeareth of ever either mending or ending. Therefore Vale lumen amicum, as he in Saint Hierome ſaid, ſweet light adieu; Quin morere ut merita es, as ſhee in the Poet, Be thine owne death-man. Seneca counts it a mercy to a man in miſery, that he may by laying hands on himſelf, ſet out his life when he will; and this he calls valour and man-hood. But we have not ſo learned Chriſt, neither may we leave our ſtation till called for by our Captaine, but muſt ſtand to our armes, and as good Souldiers of Jeſus Chriſt, ſuffer hardſhip, 2 Tim. 2. 4. His word to us is the ſame as the Kings was to his Sonne the Black-Prince, either vanquiſh or dye: and as ſhe in the ſtory ſaid to her ſon when ſhee gave him his Target, See that thou either bring this back with thee, or elſe be thou brought back dead upon it out of the battel. It troubled Job that he could not ſee his way, and that God had hedged him in, viz. with a thorn-hedge of afflictions, Lam. 3. 7,9. Hoſ. 2. 6. ſo that he could find no way out. But what if he could not, nor any man alive? yet the Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, 2 Pet. 2. 9. He hath his way in the whirlwind, and his judgements are a great deepe, Pſal. 36. 6. Sometimes ſecret they are, but ever juſt. Surely it had beene more meete for Job to have ſaid unto God, That which I ſee not, teach thou mee, &c. yea, in the way of thy judgments, O Lord, have I waited for thee; the deſire of my ſoul is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee, Iſa. 26. 8.

Sped.

Ἢ τεθνᾶναι ἢ δόμον τεῦξαι.

Job. 34. 31.

Verſe 24. For my ſighing cometh before I eat] It cometh unſent for, as evill weather uſeth to do, and moſt unſeaſonably ſurprizeth me at my repaſt; I mingle my meat with my tears, with every bit of bread I have a morſell of ſorrowes, and I mingle my drink with weeping, Pſal. 102. 9. though indeed Jobs was not ſo much a ſhowre of teares, as a ſtorm of ſighs, and a volly of roarings, betokening extremity of griefe, ſuch as was beyond tears, and vented it ſelfe as the noiſe of many waters; for my roarings, ſaith he, are poured out like water. I am as hungry as a Lion roaring on his prey, and as violent as the Torrent ranging the fields; and yet I neither have leiſure nor luſt to eat my bread: as loth to prolong ſuch a troubleſome life, but that I muſt, or be guilty of ſelf-murther. Mr. Fox reports of Mr. John Glover, that not long after his converſion, upon a miſtake of the ſenſe of that text, Heb. 6. 5, 6. he was ſtrongly conceited, that he had fallen into the unpardonable ſinne, and muſt neceſſarily therefore be damned: and in that intolerable grief of mind, although he neither had nor could have any joy of his meat, yet was he compelled to eate againſt his appetite, to the end, to deferre the time of his damnation ſo long as he might. Now who can tell how neere Jobs caſe might come to this, ſith the divell was both Author and Actor in a great part of both theſe Tragicomedies?

Acts & Mon. 1532.

Verſe 25. For the thing which I greatly feared is come upon me] Heb. I feared a

feare

fear, and it came upon me. Had Job been wicked, this had been no wonder, Prov. 10. 24. Job 15. 21. Or had his fear been sinfull, it had been lesse pity, Prov. 29. 25. John 11. 48. for why should he, by a painfull presonesse, suffer before he needed? and send for his crosses before they came? A good man should be afraid (and so consequently fearfull) in nothing, Phil. 1. 6. he should hope the best, and beare bravely τὰ ἐκ θεοῦ δίδοντα, saith Demosthenes, whatever God sendeth. The Epicures held, that a good man might be cheerfull under whatsoever miseries. 1. In consideration of honesty and integrity. 2. In consideration of those pleasures and comforts that formerly he had enjoyed, and now cheered up himself with. Of neither of these was Job to seek. But whereas it might be said unto him, Is it fit for them who hath hitherto been so happy, now to take on so heavily, because thus and thus afflicted? Truly, saith he, I was never so happy as you took me for, because (considering how moveable and mutable all outward things are) I always feared lest I should outlive my prosperity: that which now also is unhappily befallen me. Sylla had been happy, si eundem & vincendi & vivendi finem fecisset, saith One: that is, if he had made an end of conquering and of living together: but that he did not. In him and many others it hath appeared, that mortality is but the stage of mutability. This, holy Job had oft forecasted with himself: and though in his passion he here alledge it as a reason why he took no comfort in his meat &c. yet, in true account, it could be no grief unto him, nor offence of heart (as she once said to David, 1 Sam. 25. 31.) sith it was a fear of wisdome and caution, a fear of the head, and not of the heart, a fear of diligence, and not of diffidence.

Ex præteritarum voluptatum recordatione. Cic. de finib. lib. 2.

Verse 26. I was not in safety] i.e. I counted not by self simply the safer and happier man, because of creature-comforts: but knowing their uncertainty, I held at a distance, and hung loose to them all.

Neither had I rest.] I set not up my rest here, as did Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. 4. 4. and that rich fool, Luke 12. 19. and the purple whore, who sitteth and saith, I shall see no sorrow. Once indeed, Job said, (but not so well) I shall die in my nest, and multiply my dayes as the sand: Chap. 29. 18. And so (by a like error, which was quickly confuted) David said in his prosperity, I shall never be moved, Psal. 30. 6, 7. But for the main and the most part, Job was otherwise minded. A godly man may be master of, and busied about these palterments of this present world, but not satisfied in them as adequate objects: he looks upon them all, in their greatest lustre, as Ishbam did on the Cities Solomon had given him, which he called Chabul, that is, a Land of dirt. He minds the things above, most of all.

Yet trouble came.] Although I ever kept my self within the bounds of humility and modesty, and so took the safest and wisest course to secure that I had, and to gaine a setled estate; yet all's gone, and I am left a mirrour of misery. What can any one make of this? This is a riddle to me: here I am gravelled and benighted.

CHAP. IV.

Verse 1. Then Eliphaz the Temanite,]

THen, when Job had said about him in this sort: and, giving his tongue too much liberty to lash out, had uttered words little better then blasphemous and contumelious against God: Then Eliphaz Temanites ille, the first-born of Esau, (saith R. Salomon) brought up in the bosom of Isaac, and so inured to Revelations from on high. Others think he descended of Teman, nephew to Esau &c. A man of great wisdome he was, and of grave discourse: One that could speak his mind fitly, and durst do it freely. He seems to have been the chief of the three for age and authority, and therefore begins: pretending to be moved thereunto by zeal for Gods glory, not a little impaired by Jobs impatiency favouring of hypocrisie, and arguing eum falso fuisse, that he had been little better then a dissembler. A causelesse and uncharitable charge, enough to have driven him into desperation. The Rabbines speak so well of Jobs three friends, that they use to say in a Proverb, Let a man either get him such friends as Job had, or else get him out of the world; (like as Chrysippus

Gen. 36.

Bava bathra Perech 1°.

Chrysippus was wont to say, Aut meutem, aut restim comparandam.) But Gregory the great saith, that these three, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar do fitly set forth heretickes, who begin to speak smoothly at first, as if they meant no hurt to him to whom they speak, but only good, to purchase his benevolous attention, but soone come to speak words which much hurt the hearer, and greatly trouble him &c.

Verse 2. If we assay to commune with thee?] Or may we assay to commune with thee? Art thou in case to be counselled? and will not an essay to this purpose further trouble thy patience and distemper thee? the eare which casteth words (as the mouth doth meat) if filled with choler, can relish no comfort: and the easiest medicines, or mildest waters, are troublesome to sore eyes. Hony causeth pain to exulcerate parts, though in it self it be sweet and medicinall: children, though at other times they like it and licke in, yet they will not endure to have it come neare their lips, when they have the canker: some patients are mad against their medicines: and some hearers rage at a reproofe. Eliphaz knew not but that Job might do as much, and that having newly been in a fearfull fit of passion, he might fall into another; as Jonah did; the crimce of his corruption being not yet closed up by repentance: Hence this preamble by way of friendly insinuation. The like art useth Paul with Philemon, and with the Corinthians often.

Basil. ord. 1.

Alex. Aphrod. problem.

But who can with-hold himself from speaking?] Who that hath any piety toward God, or pity to his offending friend? we use to say, He that receiveth a courtesie selleth his liberty; but true love will not be tongue-tied. Our Saviours mouth was not stopped with all the good cheer that Simon the leper made him, Luke 7. neither entertained he the Pharisees with fewer menaces, then they did him effsoons, with messes of meat. Job had been doubtlesse very friendly to his friends, who yet spare him not: and had they done it aright with the meeknesse of wisedome, they had shewed themselves friends indeed, there being not a better office or evidence of love then this, Lev. 19. 17. Friends, as Bees, are killed with the hony of flattery; but quickned with the vinegar of reproofe, so it be well managed. The Eagle, though she loveth her young ones dearly, yet pricketh and heateth them out of the nest when they are ready for flight.

Verse 3. Behold thou hast instructed many] sc. to do each dayes duty with Christian diligence, and to bear each dayes crosses with Christian patience; thou hast don't well. But how comes it now to passe quod dicta factis erubescant, that thy present doings shame thy former sayings? and that (as it was noted of Demosthenes the Orator) thou art better at praising of vertue, then at practising of it? Turpe est Doctori &c. Should not the Physician first heal himself? and ought not the preachers word be Spectemur agendo, let our profiting appear to all men, let our lives be a true transcript of our Sermons. What a shame was it, that Hilary should complain that the peoples eares were holier then the preachers hearts: and that Erasmus by a true jest, should be told, that there was more goodnesse in his booke of the Christian Souldier, then in his bosome! Eliphaz from this ground would here argue, that Job was little better then an hypocrite, a censure over-rigid, it being the easiest thing in the world, as a Philosopher observed, to give good counsell, and the hardest thing to take it. Dr. Preston upon his death-bed confessed, that now it came to his own turn, he found it somewhat to do, to practise that which hee had oft prested upon others.

Tertul.

Sanctiores sunt aures plebis quam corda sacerdotum. Hilar.

Thou hast strengthened the weak hands] Loose and lax, feeble and infirme, through many terrors and troubles: to these thou hast spoken words which have been as sinews to their hands, and as strength to their joynts. Job had comforted the feeble-minded, or the disspirited, the sick at heart, and sinking under the sense of sinne, and fear of wrath, 1 Thes. 5. 14. This is an harder work then to raise the dead to life, saith Luther: this no one of a thousand can skill of, Job 33. 23. he must have feeding lips, and an healing tongue that shall do it. O quam hoc non est omnium! The Christian Romans were able to do it, chap. 15. 14. And holy Job was both able and apt, for he did it to many. True goodnesse is diffusive of it self, and is therefore compared to the most spreading things, as fire, water, Sun-light, &c.

Verse 4. Thy words have upholden him that was falling] So forcible are right words, words, well timed and fitted to the present necessity: they shore up the tottering, they catch him before he comes to ground, and prevent his fall. This made Latimer blesse God that ever he came acquainted with that fellow-prisoner of his, that Angel of God (as he called him) John Bradford, he and Ridley, so long as they lived, upheld Cranmer by their words and letters, who soon after fell, to the grief of the godly party, but rose again by repentance. It is storied of Urbanus Regius, a famous Dutch Divine, that meeting with Luther at Goburg, he spent a whole day in conference with him about matters of great moment, of which himself writeth, that he never had a more comfortable day in all his life. The Earle of Darby's accusation in the Parliament house against Mr. Bradford, was, that he did more hurt (so he called good, evil) by letters and conferences in prison, then ever he did when he was abroad by preaching. Mr. Clark in his life. Acts & Mon.

Thou hast strengthened the feeble knees] That bend and buckle under a back-burden of afflictions: this was to be like unto God, who doth not crush, but cherish the worm Jacob; he doth not break the bruised reed, nor quench the smoaking flax: hee despiseth not the day of small things, nor slighteth the well-meant weaknesses of his upright-hearted people. Now Job as a partaker of the Divine Nature, resembled God herein, and made it his work to comfort the abject, to strengthen and straighten those that were bowed down with paines and pressures, to be eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, chap. 29. 15. to distribute spiritual almes, which is far the best in many respects, as were easie to instance.

Verse 5. But now it is come upon thee] This is a galling. But hitherto Eliphaz had commended Job: now he dasheth all, and draweth a black line over that he had spoken once. To commend a man with a But, is a wound in stead of a commendation, it sounds like that which is said of Naaman, 2 Kings 5. 1. he was an honourable and a valiant man, But a leper; it sprinkleth black upon white, and so smutteth a mans good name, which is slander in an high degree.

It is come upon thee] What is come? the evill thou fearedst, by thine owne confession, chap. 3. 25, 26. Or now it is come to thy turne to act what thou hast taught others.

And thou faintest] Thou art down on all four, most shamefully degenerating into a faithlesse pusillanimity, and unbelieving impatiency, to the scandall of the weake, and scorn of the wicked. Nay, thou art not only in a maze, but in a rage, so that thy reason seemes tired as much as thy strength; thou layest about thee like an Hercules furens, a man stark mad. See the word used in this sense, Prov. 26. 18. Gen. 47. 13.

It toucheth thee, and thou art troubled] It toucheth thee, but so tender thou art, and delicate, that a light touch disquieteth thee: like as some mens flesh, if but razed with a pin, rankleth strait. Invalidum omne naturâ querulum, saith Seneca, the weaker any thing is, the more complaintfull.

And thou art troubled] Pitifully put to't, as if utterly undone, because toucht a little; Mira verò constantia! But is this you that were the great teacher, that were so forward and forth-putting to presse others to a patient and peaceable behaviour under Gods hand? should not thy words be made visible by thine actions? and thy patient mind made known to all men, seth the Lord is at hand? Hypocrites can talk of duty, as if their tongues did run upon pattens, they talk by the talent, but act by the ounce, as did those Pharisees Matth. 23. 3. Rom. 2. 21. that shamed goodnesse by seeming good. Eliphaz here reproacheth Job for such an one, as both here and every where, he and his two companions are too hot and harsh in their censures passed upon him, which God also giveth them the telling of, chap. 42.

Verse 6. Is not this thy feare, thy confidence &c?] Or thy folly, q. d. Is not thy religion a meere foolery? and hast not thou rather acted religion, play'd devotion, and the fear of God, then been serious therein? This was a most bitter scoffe, a cruell shake, and came near his heart. Like as nothing vexed David more then when they laid his religion in his dish, asking, where is now thy God? So here. By this alteration that affliction hath wrought in thee, thou mayest easily see what thou art, viz. a very painted hypocrite: hard weather shewes what health: empty vessels set neere the fire, crack quickly. At the parting way, every dog followeth his own Master.

Affliction

Afflictio virum arguit, &c. Affliction ſhewes a man, it turnes the inſide outward, the bottome of the bag upward, bringing that which was at the bottome, to the top: as that ſtick caſt into the water, made the iron ſwim, 2 King. 6.6. Doth it not appeare (ſaith Eliphaz here) that thou haſt been meerly mercenary, ſerving God whileſt he proſpered thee, and now kicking againſt him, becauſe hee afflicteth thee? See how neer this man cometh, ſaith Mercer, to that firſt inſtigation of Satan, chap. 1. 9. in hoc Satanæ factus miniſter, herein acting the divels part though unwittingly, as Peter alſo did, Matth. 16. 22, 23.

The uprightneſſe of thy wayes and thy hope?] q. d. Thou haſt taken to thy ſelfe many fair titles, and made a great flaunt, as if there were none ſuch; but what is it all come to? Is it any better then a flaſk, a foppery, a name, and not a thing? Or if it be a reality, make proofe of it. True grace is operative, and will not lie dormant.

Verſe 7. Remember, I pray thee, who ever periſhed being innocent?] Why? that hath many a one, as the world counteth and calleth periſhing; the Righteous periſheth, and no man layeth it to heart, Iſa. 57. 1. And it was given unto the Beaſt to make warre with the Saints, and to overcome them, Rev. 13. 7. So it ſeemed to bee, though ſo it never was, Rev. 12. 11. The firſt man that dyed, dyed for Religion; ſo early came Martyrdome into the world: and John Baptiſt was put to death in priſon, without all ſhew of law, right, or reaſon, as if God had beene nothing aware of any ſuch matter, as that Martyr phraſed it. Indeed, if Eliphaz meant it of periſhing eternally, neither Job, nor any one elſe could produce an inſtance of a godly man ſo periſhing; but for temporall miſeries, 'tis ſure, that never any out of hell have met with more then the moſt holy and harmleſſe heires of heaven; ſee Heb. 11. and you will ſay ſo. But the Scriptures, haply, were not written when Eliphaz uttered this ſpeech; howbeit, he might have obſerved the contrary to what he here ſeemeth to affirme, appealing to Jobs own experience for proof. And the truth is, if men were ſo well read as they might, in the ſtory of their owne lives, they might have a Divinity of their own, by noting experiments; ſuch as that 119 Pſalm is in a manner wholly made up of. Remember, ſaith hee here: and the Philoſopher ſaith, that experience is nothing elſe but multiplex memoria, becauſe of the memory of the ſame thing often done, ariſeth experience. Eliphaz therefore, after that he had given Job his turne to ſearch his experiences, brings forth his owne in the next verſe.

Acts & Mon.

Verſe 8. Even as I have ſeene] And therefore can boldly ſay: for what ſo ſure as ſight? See Numb. 11. 23. Gen. 34. 1, 2. Diligent inſpection of a thing, and deepe conſideration upon it, makes confidence, which is the fruit of experience.

They that plow iniquity, and ſow wickedneſſe] Here's plowing and ſowing, a myſticall husbandry. Sinners are ſore labourers, great pains-takers; they plot and plow; they ſow and reap, they dig and delve, Prov. 16. 27. they weave and ſpin, Iſa. 59. 5. They buſie their heads, and beat their brains, as hard ſtudents in their black-art: they labour even unto laſſitude, Jer. 9. 5. Hence they are called workers of iniquity; (the vulgar rendreth this text Qui operantur iniquitatem) and ſinne is called a work of the fleſh. How can thoſe but work hard in digging deſcents to hell, who have the divel for their task-maſter, who continually ſpurres them on to a quick diſpatch of the deeds of darkneſſe? Arant, ſerunt, occant ſcelera, as the divels hinds and horſes, they drudge night and day, turning up all the corruptions in their hearts and conveniences in the world, for the effecting of their wicked deviſes.

And ſow wickedneſſe] Nemo repente fit turpiſſimus. Sin goeth on gradually (here is firſt plowing, and then ſowing) wicked men and ſeducers grow worſe and worſe, til at length they are even Satanized; being transformed into ſins image, and bereft of all paſſive power of awaking out of the ſnare of the divel, being taken alive by him at his pleaſure, 2 Tim. 2. 26.

2 Tim. 3. 13.

Reape the ſame] Not the ſame day it may be, but too ſoone to their ſorrow, they receive the guerdon of their ſinne. Sooner or later, it is ſure, he that ſoweth iniquity, ſhall reap vanity, Prov. 22. 8. Jer. 4. 18. As every body hath its ſhadow, ſo hath every ſinne its puniſhment: and many times, the one is ſo like the other, that a man may ſafely ſay, ſuch a puniſhment is the product of ſuch a ſinne, Gal. 6. 7.

Men

Men ſhall reap the ſame they ſow, and good reaſon. Give them blood to drink, for they are worthy, Rev. 16.6. God loves to make him a name amongſt men by his Art of Juſticing, (as One calleth it) in that moſt exact way of counter-paſſion, or retaliation: And Adonibezek hath got him a fame of ingenuity, by acknowledging as much, Judg. 1.7.

Verſe 9. By the blaſt of God they periſh.] He puts himſelf to no great pain to puniſh them: but blowes them away as ſo many duſt-heaps: he nods them to deſtruction, ſaith the Pſalmiſt, Pſ 80.16. he can as eaſily do it, as bid it to be done. If the Lord do but ariſe, his enemies ſhall be ſcattered: and all that hate him flye before him. If he but put his head out of the windows of heaven, as it were, and ſay, Who is on my ſide, who? all the creatures (who for fear of him had hid themſelves, as worms wriggle into their holes in time of thunder) ſhall look out preſently, and offer him their ſervice: ſo that he cannot poſſibly want a weapon to tame his rebels, or a way to bring the wicked to condign puniſhment. He is Eloah, as he is here called; that is, The puiſſant One, the mighty ſtrong God, as Iſa. 9.6. before whom all Nations are as the drop of a bucket, or as the duſt of the balance: No more able to ſtand againſt him, then is the glaſſe-bottle againſt a Cannon ſhot; or down-thiſtle before a whirl-wind. Behold, I will ſend a blaſt upon him (ſaith God concerning Sennacherib, 2 King. 19.7.) and ſo ſet him going. So elſewhere, he threatneth to tread down his ſtouteſt enemies, as ſtraw is troden down to the dung-hill. Neither ſhall he much trouble himſelf in doing this: For he ſhall onely ſpread forth his hands in the midſt of them, as he that ſwimmeth, ſpreadeth forth his hands to ſwim, &c. Iſa. 25. 11, 12. to ſignifie, that he ſhall do it with greateſt facility. The motion in ſwimming is eaſie, not ſtrong, for ſtrong violent ſtrokes in the water would rather ſink then ſupport. It is ſaid, that by a look of his out of the pillar of fire and of the cloud, he troubled the hoaſt of the Egyptians, Exod. 14.24. and as the Rocks repelled the boyſterous waves, ——Coeuntia ſaxa repellere, frangunt; ſo did He the enemies of his people.

Sic Cæſar Mutello. Pſal. 64.1. Iſa. 40.15

By the breath of his noſtrils they are conſumed.] Heb. By the wind of his noſtrils. This is the ſame with the former. Onely it is conceived, that Eliphaz here alludeth to the manner of the death of Jobs children by a mighty wind, ſo ſtrong as if God himſelf had breathed it out. By the breath of his mouth He made the world, Pſalm 33.6. and by the ſame breath can He as ſoon, and as eaſily unmake it againe; as he did in the generall Deluge, whereunto the Chaldee Paraphraſt holdeth that Eliphaz here referreth: the remembrance of which ſtanding monument of Gods wrath was freſh and well known when this was ſpoken.

Verſe 10. The roaring of the Lion &c.] Leſt any ſhould think, ſaith an Interpreter, that the blaſt of God above-mentioned carryeth away only ſtrawes and feathers, light and weak perſons into perdition, Eliphaz addeth the weightieſt and the ſtrongeſt, The roaring of a Lion &c. q. d. God by his blaſt can take away or break the ſtrongeſt, the mightieſt lion-like men &c. Under the ſhadow of which alluſion he cloſely ſtrikes at Job, who was once a great man, a fierce ſpoiling Lion in the apprehenſion of his friends, and yet God brought him down. Of tyrants and Oppreſſors compared to Lions, and why, ſee Nahum 2. 11, 12. with the Note: and Prov. 28. 15. with the note. The proverb is, The Lion is not ſo fierce, as he is painted. But no words can ſufficiently ſet forth the ſavage immanity and cruelty of aſſured and wicked men. See that of Nebuchadnezzar graphically deſcribed, Jer. 51. 34. He hath devoured me, he hath cruſhed me, he hath made me an empty veſſel, he hath ſwallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicates, he hath caſt me out.

Mr. Ceyl.

The teeth of the young Lions are broken.] Or, pulled out, that they may no more devoure the fleſh, and drink the blood of Gods poore afflicted, that fell into their ſtrong-ones. Thus David had prayed, Pſal. 58. 6. and this he had proved, Pſal 3.7. Thou haſt ſmitten all mine enemies upon the cheek-bone: thou haſt broken the teeth of the ungodly. God with his hard and heavy hand had ſo boxed and buffeted them; that they ſpat forth ſome of their teeth, and for the reſt, they might go ſeek them in their throat: as Dares that bold champion in Virgil, (whom when he had been ſoundly beaten by old Entellus) his fellows led away.

Fractamque ut reque caput, cruſſumque cruorem
Ore rejectantem, ſtatque in ſanguine dentes.

A juſt hand of God upon ſuch as exerciſing regiment without righteouſneſſe, ravin and rend, as Lions greedy of their prey, plucking off the skins of their poor subjects, and pulling out their teeth; as Melanthon telleth of one Tyrant, who to get great ſummes of money out of his people, uſed to ſend for them: and if they refuſed to anſwer his demands, he would firſt knock out one of their teeth, and then another, threatning to leave them toothleſſe.

Mic. 3. 2.

Verſe 11. The old lion periſheth for lack of prey] As not being able to hunt, and get it. The meaning is (ſaith One) that men who reign like Lions, that their children who equalled them in cruelty, that their wives who ſurpaſſed them in inſolency, do end their lives tragically. All this is true for the moſt part. Eliphaz ſpeaks of what is uſually done, ſaith another. Or he ſpeaks of what God can eaſily do at any time: and of what God may juſtly do at all times: If he ſuſpend this juſtice, it is for weighty reaſons &c. Some wicked men God puniſheth here, ſaith Auguſtine, leſt his Providence, but not all, leſt his Patience and promiſe of Judgment ſhould be called into queſtion.

Quotidiana & domeſtica experimenta hoc docent. Mercer. In Pſal. 30.

Verſe 12. Now a thing was ſecretly brought to me] Heb. was brought to mee by ſtealth, cloſely and privily, ſo as others were nothing aware of it. See Act. 22. 9. with 9. 7. Sauls companions heard his voice, but not Chriſts. By this viſion Eliphaz would convince Job, that none are afflicted but thoſe that have well deſerved it: ſith the beſt are defective and blame-worthy, though they ſhould be puriores culo afflictione factis, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, as thoſe good ſouls were, that prayed Peter out of priſon, Acts 12. 5. Some are of opinion, that this viſion either came from his phantaſie, and ſo was none: or elſe, by an illuſion from Satan. But Mercer holds it to have beene a true viſion from God; although Eliphaz abuſe it in his miſ-application thereof to Job, playing the Sophiſter, after a ſort, whileſt he quite changeth the ſtate of the queſtion, which at this time was, Whether we ought to judge of a mans life and behaviour by the greatneſſe of thoſe troubles and miſeries that he doth ſuffer? This viſion he deſcribeth verbis magnificis & ampullatis, as for me a thing (or a word) was ſtolen upon me, or ſecretly brought to me, &c. But what ſo great a ſecret was this, ſaith Calvin, that God alone is perfectly righteous, and all men unrighteous in compariſon of him? For anſwer, he calleth it a ſecret (though it be a plain and evident truth) becauſe few conſider it, and improve it to an humble ſubmiſſion to God, and ſuffering his judgments. See a like expreſſion, Pſal. 78. 2, 3, &c. I will open my mouth in a parable, which yet was nothing extraordinary, but Poetically ſet out. So Pſal. 49. 4. The happy and ſecure eſtate of Saints in trouble, is deſcribed, and the contrary, which though an ordinary argument, and often treated of, yet is called the great Wiſedome, the dark ſaying &c.

And mine ear received a little thereof] Nonnihil, pauxillum, quippiam, not all that it might, but as much as it could, as being but a narrow-mouthed veſſel. Vide ut modeſte loquatur, ſaith Mercer: ſee how modeſtly the man ſpeaketh, not taking upon him any perfection of knowledge, though he were a man of great underſtanding. his ear caught ſomewhat of that was repealed, and but ſomewhat. The beſt men, whileſt here, know but in part: for why? Wee propheſie but in part. 1 Cor. 13. 9. Such is our weakneſſe, and narrow-heartedneſſe, that we cannot take in all of all, no, nor any part of all in the full latitude and extent of it. The greateſt part of that wee know, is the leaſt part of that wee know not, ſaith a Father. Hence thoſe modeſt expreſſions of ſome Philoſophers, and others: This onely I know, that nothing I know, ſaid Socrates: I know not ſo much as this, ſaid another, that I yet know nothing. My greateſt knowledge, ſaid Chytraus, is to know, that nothing I know. And albeit I am otherwiſe ignorant, ſaith another, yet of mine own ignorance I am not ignorant. Not only in moſt other things am I to ſeeke, ſaith Auſtin, but even in the Scriptures (my chief ſtudy, and trade of life) Adulco plura noſcio quàm ſcio, there are many more things hid from mee, then what I yet underſtand, Joh. 14. 4, 5. Thomas ſeemes to contradict Chriſt: Auſtin thus reconcileth it, they did partly know whither Chriſt went, but durſt not once believe that they had any ſuch knowledge, they did not know their own knowledge. The beſt here can ſee but Gods back-parts, and live, as Moſes. Eſay ſaw but his traine in the Temple, and the latter end of that too. Eliphaz his eare caught but the later end, as it were, of a ſentence, only that which the eccho reſounded, a particle of the whole that was whiſpered ſecretly to him. Howbeit, that he received but a little, was not from neglect of the reſt, but from inability to receive more, or to receive it more perfectly.

Epiſt. 119. 21.

Verſe

Verſe 13. In thoughts from viſions of the night &c.] Or in thoughts of the viſions of the night. It appeareth by this and other circumſtances, that this viſion was no fiction or holy fraud (as ſome have conceited) to bring Job to a ſight of his ſinne. Let Papiſts praiſe their St. Dominick for his holy hypocriſie which he taught his Diſciples to make uſe of, to bring people the better to a good eſteem of the faith, and love of vertue. Eliphaz was a better man, then to deale in ſuch depths of the divel; and with ſuch deliberate gravity, put a lie upon God. He was really plodding, he was in thoughts, the word properly ſignifieth branches or boughs of trees, which are many, thick, intertwined, and croſſing one another. In the multitude of my perplexed thoughts within me, ſaith David, thy comforts have refreſhed my ſoule. Pſalm 94. 19. The ſame word is rendred vain thoughts, or wavering cogitations, Pſal. 119. 113. Such as Davids ſoule hated. Carnall hearts are exchanges, and ſhops of vaine thoughts, ſtewes of uncleane thoughts, ſlaughter-houſes of cruell and bloudy thoughts, a very forge and mint of falſe, politick, undermining thoughts: but Eliphaz his thoughts were better buſied; his top-thoughts, thoſe uppermoſt branches of his ſoul were concerning God, and the things of his kingdome: when other men became vain in their imaginations, and their fooliſh heart was darkned, he had viſions of God. In the night-ſeaſon, when dead ſleep fell upon others, he ſlept, but his heart waked, and was free to receive revelations, and to contemplate of them: or perhaps, he was broad awake at that time of night, that he might the better converſe with God and his own ſoule. Abraham had many ſuch ſweet viſions: Iſaac walked out into the fields for the purpoſe: Jacob met with God in this manner, both at Bethel, and at Penuel. Daniel had viſions both of the day, and of the night: ſo had Paul, and other Apoſtles. The Monkes make long relations of revelations, and apparitions that they have had. So do the Enthuſiaſts, and high-attainers; but we are not bound to believe them. Matthew Paris reporteth of Gilbert Foliot, Biſhop of London, Anno Dom. 1161. that one night muſing of the difference betwixt the King and Becket, Arch-biſhop of Canterbury, he heard a terrible voice, ſaying, O Gilberte Foliot, dum revolvis tot & tot, Deus tuus eſt Aſcarot; he taking it to be the divel, anſwered boldly, Mentiris demon: Deus meus eſt Deus Sabbaoth. Æneas in Virgil, is ſaid to have his viſions and conferences with his deceaſed friends. Satan loves to imitate God in what he can, that he may deceive with better ſucceſſe: but we have a moſt ſure word of propheſie, and yet a more glorious light of the Goſpel, Heb. 1. 2. The promiſed day-ſtar being riſen in our hearts, 1 Pet. 1. 19.

Verſe 14. Fear came on me, and trembling] Feare in the inward man, and trembling in the outward. And this is Gods method ſtill; the more he draweth nigh to any man, the more doth rottenneſſe enter into his bones, and he is horribly afraid of Gods judgments, with David; he trembleth at his word with Joſiah, that it may be the more efficacious in his ſoul. Let us have grace (ſaith the Apoſtle) whereby we may ſerve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear. For even our God alſo (and not the God of the Jewes only) is a conſuming fire, Heb. 12. 28, 29. Ἀξιωματικῶς οὕτω καὶ ὁ βασιλεὺς ἡμῶν, ſaith Baſil: Our King will be ſerved like himſelf, ſerved in ſtate: and although he alloweth us an humble familiarity, yet he expecteth our reverentiall fear; acquainted he will be with us in our walks of obedience; but yet he takes ſtate upon him in his ordinances, and will be trembled at in the addreſſes we make unto his Majeſty; he looks we ſhould bring with us a legall faith, and a legall repentance, as well as an Evangelicall; and that wee ſhould work out our ſalvation with feare and trembling, Philip. 2. 12. Terrours and humiliations prepare and poſture the heart for revelations; never is it right, till a man lie low at Gods feet, putting his mouth in the duſt, and crying out; Speak Lord, for thy ſervant heareth: there ſhall be only fear to make them underſtand the hearing: Iſa. 28. fear met Eliphaz, and made way for the heavenly viſion.

Which made all my bones to ſhake] Heb. the multitude of my bones, or the number of my bones, how many ſoever they be, and they are as many (ſay the Hebrewes) as there are affirmative precepts in the Law. Theſe pillars of my body ſhook ſore, and threatned a downfall.

——— Geliduſque per ima cucurrit Æneid. 1.
Oſſa tremor. ———

Verſe 15. Then a ſpirit paſſed before my face] Some render it a wind, as a meſſenger or fore-runner of God near at hand, as 1 Kings 19. 11. But better, a good Angel in some bodily shape, Psal. 104. 4. Luke 24. 37. for else, how could he be seen of Eliphaz, gliding rather then going, as a ship upon the face of the waters?

The hair of my flesh stood up] Horripilatus sum; In a fright the heart falleth down, the haire standeth up; the blood hasteneth to the heart to relieve it, as soldiers do to the castle, when all is likely to be lost.

Dirigui, steteruntque comæ.

Verse 16. It stood still] As now ready to speak: an ambulatory voice is hardly heard: The Heavens indeed, are walking preachers, but then they utter but these three words, saith Hugo, in all Languages, Accipe. Redde. Fuge, that is, Receive mercies, Return duties, Fly offences, and their just punishments.

Lib. 2. de Arca, cap. 3.

But I could not discern the form thereof] Heb. The aspect or countenance. Hee was so frighted, that his eye could not do its office distinctly, to discern the thing that was just before it. It is naturall to a man to fear at the sight of an Angel; what then will wicked men do at the last day, when the Son of man shall bring all his Angels, not leaving one behind him in heaven? Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we perswade men: and oh that we could perswade them!

An image was before mine eyes] But I could not tell what to make of it. It is not the will of God that man should represent him by an image. The Jewes, after the captivity, were so farre from idolatry, that they would not admit a Carver or Painter into their City. The Turks will not endure any image, no, not upon their coines, because of the second Commandment. Varro saith, he that first brought in Imagery (and that is thought to be Ninus King of Babylon) superstitionem auxit, metum dempsit, increased superstition, and tooke away feare. The wiser heathens held, that God was too subtle for sinew or sight to seize upon: and the Greeke Painters, when they would draw the image of their Jupiter in a Table, they were still mending it, but never ending it; saying, that herein they shewed him to be a god, for that they might begin to paint, but could not perfect him.

Deut. 4. 15, 16

There was silence, and I heard a voice] It was fit there should be silence and sedatenesse of spirit, when a divine voice was to be heard. Let all the earth keepe silence before God, Hab. 2. 20. When the seventh seale was opened, there was half an houres silence in heaven, Rev. 8. 1. What a noise is there in many mens hearts even whiles they are hearing what the Lord God speaketh unto them? what bargaining, lawing, projecting, running into another world (as men in dreams do) so that they can tell no more what the preacher said, then the man in the moon can! Silence is a good preparative to audience; speak Lord, for thy servant heareth: Let the woman (and so the man too) learn in silence. Let by-thoughts, swarming and humming in our hearts, like the flies of Egypt, be barred out: let the divel, interrupting us with his suggestions, as the Pythoniss did Paul and his companions, be haltred up. Let even good thoughts, if unseasonable and heterogeneall to the work in hand, be turned out of doores; let us say to them, as Hushai did to Achitophel, thy counsel is good, but not now; how shall we else hear with attention and affection? how shall we listen as for life, and hearken diligently with much heed? Isa. 21. 7.

Verse 17. Shall mortall man] Sorry sinfull man, a very mixture and hodg-podg of dirt and sin.

Miser, ærumnis et peccatis obnoxius.

Be more just then God?] Or, be just rather then God, as Luke 18. 14? This is the matter of the vision, and it is (saith Diodate) a revelation of the doctrine of the free remission of sins, and of the sinners justification by grace, through his faith in the promised Mediator. But Eliphaz turns it another way, and mis-applying it to Job, would there-hence evince, that all his present sufferings were the proceeds of his owne sin, and so from the processe of Gods justice. The truth is, Job had blurted out some words in the former chapter, that reflected somewhat upon God: he had also bitterly cursed the day and services of his birth: this latter, if Eliphaz had sharply reproved Job for, hee had done him a friendly good office: But he waves that part, & quæ desperat reniteſcere posse, relinquit; the other of clearing Gods justice, he takes up and presseth it too farre, to prove this unsound position; That whosoever is greatly afflicted by God, and for a long time together, that man is to be numbred with the wicked, though no other evidence or witnesse appear or speak a word against him: for if he be innocent, how shall God be just that punisheth him? But Eliphaz should have known, that afflictions are of two sorts, Penal and probationall; these later are not simply for punishment of mens sins, but for triall and exercise of their graces, to humble them, to prove them, and to do them good at their latter end, Deut. 8. 16. Wait but till God have made an end of his work (and we must not judge of Gods works, saith Peter Martyr, ante quintum Actum, before the fifth Act) and we shall see the effect both just and good. This Job had scarce patience to doe, as appeareth by sundry passages of his; howbeit he ever preserved high and holy thoughts of God, neither at any time questioned his justice and purity, or complained of his dealings with him, and dispensations toward him as unrighteous, though now and then through the extremity of his pain, the anguish of his spirit, and the provocation of his friends, some unwary speeches slipt from him.

Shall man be more pure then his maker?] Take man in his prime and pride, in his best estate, and utmost strength, when, and wherein he is most a man, Vir à viribus, a man of the first magnitude, of the highest elevation (as one fitly phraseth it) both in parts, gifts and graces, shall he be more pure then his Maker? never think it. Man compared with his Maker, hath no purity or righteousnesse at all, no, not so much as a shew or shadow of it: just he may be, or pure by participation from God, (saith Austin) but neither just nor pure in comparison of God; he surpasseth all notion, and surmounteth all creatures, he hath no parallel; so true he is, that all men are liars; so pure, that all men are filthy; so just, that all men are wicked; so incomparably great and glorious, that the Angels make their addresses to him with greatest self-abasement. For why?

Verse 18. Lo he put no trust in his servants, &c.] those meniall, domestick servants of his, the holy Angels that wait upon him, and are at his hand to doe his will: Servant is a name of office; and they delight rather to be called Angels, (that is, Messengers) and ministring spirits, then Principalities, Thrones, Dominions, &c. Now in these God put no trust, he found no such cause to confide in them, because not perfectly sure and loyall to him, further then upheld and assisted by himselfe: the vulgar Latine hath it thus, They that serve him are not stable; that is, the good Angels are not stable by their own strength, but by Gods stablishing of them to stand when others fell. Hence Psal. 68. 17. the Angels are called Shinan, as Gods seconds, say some; the Nobles of that Court, the very next unto him: but others say they are so called from their changeable state, now taken away by Christ, under whom they are as an head of government, of influence, of confirmation, but not of Redemption, as we. Christ, as God, giveth them their being, and all their excellencies. As Mediator also, he maketh use of their Ministery, for the safe-guard and comfort of his people.

And his Angels he charged with folly] That is, he spared not the angels that sinned, as St. Peter expounds it, 2 Pet. 2. 4. Their sinne is said to be folly, that is, pride and self-confidence. How this folly and madnesse of theirs (pravity, the vulgar rendreth it) shewes it self, whither in affecting a divinity, or in envy stirred up by the Decree of exalting mans nature above Angels in and by Christ, and appointing them to be good mens guardians, which office they scorned; or whether their pride appeared by transgressing some commandments in particular, not expressed, as Adams was; it is hard to say. Sure it is, that they abode not in the truth, that they kept not their station &c. and that the good Angels stand, and are out of danger of ever falling, it is of divine grace. Hence Exod. 25. 19. the Cherubims stand upon the Mercy-seat, and are made of the matter thereof.

Verse 19. How much lesse in them that dwell in houses of clay] Or how much more (in reference to the latter part of the preceding verse) may God charge men with folly and pravity? And how much more ought he to acknowledge, that hee cannot subsist nor stand before Gods judgment (as verse 17) but only by his gracious pardon and absolution?

That dwell in houses of clay] Periphrasis est hominum, saith Mercer: this is a description of men, as opposed to Angels, those inhabitants of heaven, called therefore the Angels of Heaven, Matth. 24. 36. Gal. 1. 8. the courtiers of that heavenly Jerusalem, Heb. 12. 22. in and with which, it may seem, they were created: as Christs soule was in and with his body in the virgins womb, the same moment.

ment. Hence they are alſo ſaid to be in heaven, when as men and other things here below are ſaid to bee on earth, Matth. 6. 10. on the ſurface only, as ready to bee ſhaken off, and as having here no continuing City, Heb. 13. 14. no manſions till they come to heaven, John 14. 2. no ſetled abode: ſome huts we have here, rather then houſes; clayie cottages, earthy tabernacles, as Paul after Plato calleth mens bodies, 2 Cor. 5. 1. And ſo the moſt interpreters underſtand theſe words of Eliphaz concerning the body of man (rather then of his houſe he dwells in here, made up of clay and duſt a little refined and ſublimated by art or nature) which is nothing elſe but a clod of clay neatly made up. What is man (ſaith Greg. Nazianzen out of Gen. 2. 7. but Νῦς ἐν χῦς, ſoule and ſoile, breath and body, a puffe of wind the one, a pile of duſt the other? no ſolidity in either. Pulvis & umbra ſumus, ſaith the Poet, and Κόνις ὁ ἄνθρωπος, ſaith the Greeke Proverb. Man is but an earthen pot. The firſt man, Adam, was of the earth earthy, 1 Cor. 15. 47. And no better are the beſt, quos ex meliore forſan luto finxit Titan, who are made of the fineſt common mould: but as the finer the metall, the purer the matter of any glaſſe or earthen veſſel, the more ſubject it is to break; ſo are they to die: for why?

τὸ σκῆνος.

עפר אפר χόνις cinis. Gen. 3. 19. Gen. 18. 21. Hor. Carm. l. 4. Od. 7.

Their foundation is in the duſt] The houſe is but weak, and yet the foundation weaker, terra friabilis, flying, light, unſtable, unmoveable, duſt that is ſoone wherried and whirled about with every puffe of wind. Hence the Apoſtle calleth mans body not an houſe only (in reſpect of 1. the comely and orderly workmanſhip thereof. 2. The ſoule which inhabiteth it) but a tabernacle which hath no foundation, and is tranſportative, 2 Cor. 5. 1. oppoſing to it building, which is firm and ſtable. Hence David, Omnis Adam eſt totus Abel, ſaith hee. Verily every man in his beſt eſtate (when he is beſt founded and ſetled on his beſt bottome, when he is under-layd on all ſides, and ſeemes ſet to live) is altogether vanity, Pſal. 39. 5, 12. So Pſal. 144. 4. Adam is Abels compeere, or man is like to vanity; what can he be better, when as

They are cruſhed before the moth] He ſaith not, before the Lion, but before the moth. Now what a poor thing is man, that a moth may cruſh him, that a flie may choak him, as it did Pope Alexander; that a light bruiſe on his toe may kill him, as it did Æmilius Lepidus; that a poiſoned torch may light him to his long home, as it did the Cardinall of Lorrain? I have known, ſaith one, death admitted in by a corn on the toe; and though the hurt were ſo farre off the heart, yet the man died upon it. Another I knew, who ſeeming to have conquered the elements, the wide Ocean, wilde wilderneſſe, wilder beaſts, wildeſt men, hotteſt climates; after ſixteen yeares abſence, returned home, and died of an hurt in his thumb. Mr. Terry a great traveller, telleth of a Noble man in the great Mogols Court, who ſitting in dalliance with one of his women, had an haire pluckt by her from his breſt; this little wound, made by that ſmall and unexpected inſtrument of death, preſently feſtered; and turning to an incurable Canker, killed him. God needs no bigger a launce then an hair to kill an Atheiſt, as this dying man acknowledged. But beſides all ill accidents and caſualties from without; look how the garment breeds the moth, and then the moth eates the garment: ſo mans own diſtempered body breeds ill humors, they diſeaſes, and theſe breed death, as one well obſerveth upon this Text. It is holden for certain, that in every two yeares, there is ſuch ſtore of ill humours and excrements ingendred in the body, that a veſſel of one hundred ounces will ſcarce containe them. Ipſa ſuis augmentis vita ad detrimenta impellitur. ſaith Gregory, & inde deſitit unde proficere creditur. Life weareth out by the very meat that maintaineth it; and every man hath his bane about him.

Plin. lib. 7. cap. 53.

Purchas.

Lawl. liberty in a Serm. at Pauls by Edm. Terry. p. 21.

The Newlander cure. pag. 23.

Verſe 20. They are deſtroyed from morning to evening] Heb. They are beaten to pieces, as in a mortar, with one ſorrow upon another, till the very breath be beaten out of their bodies at length; and all this from morning to evening, all the day long, or all their life long, which is here ſet forth (for the brevity of it) by an artificial day, and ſuch alſo as no man can be ſure he ſhall have twelve hours to his day: for how many are there whoſe Sun hath ſet at high-noon? in the prime and pride of their dayes, have they been ſuddenly ſnatcht away by the hand of death: yea, how many ſee we whoſe ſun ſetteth in the very riſing, ſo that they are carried from the birth to the buriall? Every houre, ſurely, we all yield ſomewhat unto death, and a very ſhort cut hath the longeſt liver of all, from the grave of the womb to the Per totum diem. Druſ.

womb

wombe of the grave. Eliphaz here seemeth to compare us to those creatures called Ephemerides, which are young in the morning, middle-aged at noon, and dead ere night; they begin and end their lives in a day. Mans life is a vapour, saith St. James, a bubble, say the Heathens, a blast, a dream, a shadow, a dreame of a shadow &c. Aristot.

They perish for ever] That is, they die once for all. For if a man die, shall he live againe? Job 14.14. No such matter. In this warre as there is no discharge, Eccles. 8.8. so neither is it granted to any man to erre twice: therefore Austin said that he would not for the gain of a million of worlds be an Atheist for halfe an houre: because he knew not but God might in that time call for him, and cut him off from all time of repentance, acceptation and grace for ever, since he could die but once onely, and after death judgment: every mans deaths-day is his doomes-day, Heb. 9.27.

Without any regarding it] Heb. putting sc. his heart to it, or laying it upon his heart, as every man living should do, Eccles. 7.2. but that few or none so do. See Isa. 57.1. David did, when hearing of his childs decease, he said, I shall go to him, 2 Sam. 12.23. And Moses seeing the peoples carcasses fall so fast in the wilderneſse, prayed for himself and the rest, So teach us to number our dayes, that we may apply our hearts to wisedome, Psal. 90.12. Every dead corps is a Monitor, a dumb preacher: Etiam muta clamant cadavera. Abel, though dead, speaketh, but how few hearken to him? Dives thought that if one came from the dead to fore-warn his brethren, great matters would be done. Petrus Sutorius telleth of one, that preaching a funerall Sermon on a religious man, as he calleth him, and giving him large commendations, heard at the same time a voice in the Church, Mortuus sum, judicatus sum, damnatus sum, I am dead, I am judged, I am damned. This very much wrought upon the heart of Bruno, saith he, and occasioned him to found the Carthusian order. Waldus a French Merchant, was so affected with the death of one that died suddenly in his presence, that he thenceforth became a right godly man, and the Father of the Waldenses, those ancient Protestants in France, called also, The poor men of Lions. But oh the dead lethargy, the spirit of fornication that hath so besotted the minds of the most, that they can see death, and yet not think of it! they can look into the dark chamber of the grave, and never make the least preparation for it: if for present they be somewhat affected, and have some good impressions, yet they soon vanish, as the water circled by a stone cast into it, soone returns to its former smoothneſse; as chickens run under the wings of the hen, whiles the kite is over them, or in a storm, but soon after get abroad againe, and dust themselves in the Sun. As Nebuchadnezzar had seen a vision, but it was gone from him; so here, if men at the house of mourning have some good motions, they improve them not to resolutions, or draw not forth their resolutions into execution &c. Pet. Sutor. de vita Carth.

Verse 21. Doth not their excellency which is in them go away?] Journeyeth not their excellency with them? so Broughton rendreth it. By their excellency here, some understand the soule, called by David his glory. A Philosopher said, there was nothing excellent in the world but man, nothing in man but his soul. The Stoicks affirmed, that the body was not a part of a man, but the instrument, or rather, the servant of the soul. Hence the Latines call the body Corpus or Corpor (as of old they spake) quasi cordis puer aut famulus. And Plato saith, that that is not the man that is seen of him, but the mind of a man, that's the man. And in the 19 verse of this chap. man is said to dwell in an house of clay, that is, the soul to inhabit the body. The soul goes away with the name of the whole person: the soul indeed is the man in a morall consideration, and is therefore elsewhere called the inward man, and the hidden man of the heart: the body compared to it, is but as a clay-wall encompassing a treasure, a course case to a rich instrument, a leathern sheath to an excellent blade, Dan. 7.25. or as a mask to a beautifull face. Now at death, this excellency of a man departeth, returneth to God that gave it, Eccles. 12.7. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish; even the most excellent effects of his mind and spirit, as the word signifieth, Psal. 146.4. And as that, so all other excellencies go away at death, Psal. 39.11. and 49.13. even the whole goodlineſse of man, Isa. 40.6. whether it be the good things of the mind, Favorinus. Camer. in Ecclesiast. ὁ ἄνθρωπος τὸ ἡγεμονικὸν μέρος. 2 Cor. 4.16. 1 Pet. 3.4.

as wisedome, science, conscience, judgment: or of the body, as beauty and health; or of fortune (as they call it) as favour and applause, together with plenty of prosperity. No mans glory goeth down with him into the grave, Psal. 49. 16. Where is now the flourishing beauty, and gallantry of Cæsar, saith one? his armies and honours, his triumphs and trophies? where are the rich fools great barnes? Nebuchadnezzars great Babel? Agrippa's great pomp &c? Have not all these made their bed in the dark, leaving their excellency behind them? Are they not (many of them) gone to their place, as a stone to the center, or as a foole to the stocks?

They dye even without wisdome] Heb. They die, and not with wisedome; They die like so many beasts (but for their pillow and bolster) without any care to lay hold on eternall life; they die as a fool dieth. Not in wisedome; that is, in abundance of folly, saith Pineda: and this is most mens case; their wit serves them not in this weighty work of preparing to die; they put farre away the thoughts of it, and hence they die tempore non suo, Eccles. 7. 17. when it were better for them to do any thing, rather then to die. To live with dying thoughts, is an high point of heavenly wisedome, Psal. 90. 12. Deut. 32. 29. How might one such wise Christian chase a thousand foolish and hurtfull lusts, which drowne mens soules in perdition and destruction?

1 Sam. 3. 33.

1 Tim. 6. 4.

CHAP. V.

Verse 1. Call now, if there be any that will answer thee]

THe beginning of this chapter is hard, saith Mercer, till you come to the seventh or eighth verses, and then all is plain and easie. That which Eliphaz driveth at here, is, to drive Job out of all good conceit of his own condition, and to perswade him, that never any good man suffered such hard and heavy things as he, or at least suffered them so untowardly and impatiently. Call, I pray thee, saith he, call over the roll, look into the records of former Saints, and see if thou canst find among them all such another knotty piece as thy self, that needed so much hewing, and made such a deale of complaining. Was there ever the like heard of? Call now, if there be any one answerable to thee. Broughton rendreth it, Call now, if there be any one that will defend thee; that is, be thy Patron or advocate in word, or in the example of their lives.

And to which of the Saints will thou turn? q. d. Thou art alone, neither maist thou hope to meet with thy match in the matter or manner of thine afflictions, unlesse it be among hypocrites and graceless persons, as verse 2. The Septuagint read it, To which of the Angels wilt thou look? And the Popish Commentators think they have here an unanswerable ground for their Doctrine of invocation of Saints and Angels. But did not the buzzards take notice of an Irony here, and that Eliphaz assureth Job that it would be in vain for him to call to any Saint &c? Is it not plain, or probable at least, that he here meaneth the Saints living in this world? or if not, yet is Gregory the great of no authority with them, who acknowledgeth none other to be called upon, here meant, but God; and that the Saints are mentioned to Job in derision, as if it were a ridiculous thing to call to them departed out of this life, who cannot hear us?

Verse 2. For wrath killeth the foolish man] Such as thou art, Job, hot and hasty, pettish and passionate, fretting thy self to do evil, and so provoking God to fall foule upon thee as a just object of his wrath, to thine utter ruine without repentance. Surely, with the froward, God will shew himself froward, Psal. 18. 26. Neither hath ever any one hardened himself against the Lord and prospered, Job 9. 4. For why? he is wise in heart, and mighty in strength, as it is there, every way able to overmaster an silver fury, if he but turn his own passions loose upon him, such as are wrath and envy, they will soon dispatch him: How many are there, who like fallen birds in a cage, beat themselves to death? did not Bajazet do so? and was Diodorus any wiser? or Hegesias, who died for anger that they could not resolve certaine questions put unto them? or Terence who drowned himself for grief, that he had lost certaine Comedies that he had composed? We read of some, that out of discontent they turned Atheists, as Diagoras, Lucian, Porphyry &c. and of others, that missing of Bishopricks, or other Church-preferments, they turned hereticks in Jus solatium; were not these great sinners against their owne soules, like the angry Bee, who to be revenged, loseth her sting, and soon after her life? Died they not like fooles indeed, that died of the sullens, and so were deeply guilty of self-murther? especially if their wrath were bent against God, if they howle against heaven? such are at once twice slain; slain with the wrath of God, and with their owne. Diod. Sic. Ardelionem.

Cent. lib. 2.

put

And envy slayeth the silly one] Him that is under the power of his passions, & minima afflictione ab officio abduci tur, saith Mercer, and is turned off from duty by every light affliction: such an one doth envy at another mans prosperity. It is the same with wrath, nisi quòd vehementius est, but that it is somewhat worse, saith the same Author, as being a most quick-sighted, and sharp-fanged malignity. Hence that of Solomon, Wrath is cruel, and anger outragious; but who can stand before envy? Prov. 27. 4. It is the rottennesse of the bones, Prov. 14. 30. And like the serpent Porphyrius, it drinks the most part of its own venome. See the Note on Prov. 14. 30. Αγνοεῖα Νόμιν ἔλεγε. De Ajace Homer.

Verse 3. I have seen the foolish taking roote] q. d. I grant, that wicked men are not alwaies presently punished, sed Nemesis in tergo; & subitò tollitur, qui diu toleratur. Gods wrath is such, as no wicked man can avert or avoid. This had Eliphaz well observed, I have seen: he had set a Memorandum on Gods just judgments, and marked his Sites with his own starres, as one speaketh. Eliphaz was a man of much experience, see chap. 4. 8. In him, that was true which Elihu saith, should be, that dayes speake, and multitude of yeeres taught wisedome, chap. 32. 7. Only herein he is mistaken, that he mis-applieth all to Job, arguing from his outward condition, to his inward; as if therefore he were wicked, because seemingly wretched. Thus the glosse he set was viperous, eating out the bowels of the text: It was a truth of God that he uttered, and the same in sense with that of David, Psal. 37. 35. And that of Solomon, Pro. 23. 18. But why should he thus writhe it and wrest it, to make the tune sound to his own key? St Peter speaketh of some that wrest the Scriptures, 2 Pet. 3. 16. putting them upon the rack, and making them speak that which they never thought. And Tertullian saith of others, that they do murther the Scriptures for their own turnes, and to serve their own purposes. But let us hear Eliphaz, I have seene, saith he, and what more sure then sight Numb. 16. 14? The foolish, the wilfull fool, and perhaps he points at some one such rich fool as is mentioned, Luke 12. 20. not unknown to Job, and as Eliphaz deemeth a fit parallel for him, taking root, dwelling alone in the earth, confirmed and setled in a fair estate, in a prosperous condition; as Nebuchadnezzar that goodly tree thought himself, Dan. 4. 4, 22. (See Jer. 12. 2.) and Dionysius tyrant of Sicily, who conceited that his Kingdome was bound fast unto him with chaines of adamant; but he was soone after cast out, and thereby convinced of singular folly. A tempest, or at least an axe of divine vengeance, can easily fell these fast rooted, and best-fruited trees, and lay them low enough, as he did Nebuchadnezzar that maule of the Nations, and rod of Gods wrath, Isa. 14. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. Dan. 4. 22. &c. and Attilas the Conquering Hunne, who called himself the wrath of God, and Scourge of the world, and arrogantly said, that the starres of heaven fell before him, and the earth trembled, but was soone after rooted up by impartiall death in the midst of his nuptial solemnities. Cadem scripturarum faciunt. Ælian. var. hist. lib. 2. P. Jovius.

And suddenly I cursed his habitation] His house, which he held his castle, together with his family, verse 4. and his family-provisions, verse 5. All these Eliphaz suddenly (even when he was in the ruffe of all his jollity, in the height of his flourish) cursed, Heb. pierced, or bored through, not so much by a malediction, as a prediction, (Malè ominatus sum ei, I fore-saw and foretold that that happinesse would not hold long. I ominously divined it; I both thought it, and spake it. Pium non decet dicere, cursing men are cursed men; but a godly person may pronounce a curse, and foretell it, according to that Prov. 3. 33. The curse of the Lord is in the house of the wicked, yea, the flying roule of ancient that is ten yards long, and five yards broad shall remain in the midst of it, and consume it. Zech. 5. 4. Brimstone shall be Subitâ morte extinctus est, sanguine copiosè in fauces exundante & ex ore erumpente.

scattered upon his habitation, and the fire of God shall kindle it; so that his rootes shall be dried up beneath, and above shall his branch be cut off &c. Job 18. 15, 16.

Verse 4. His children are farre from safety] This is one principall root of wicked men, viz. their children, which have their very name in Hebrew from building, because by them the house is built up, and way made to greatest honours by friendships and affinities of other great families. These are farre from safety, that is, they are in a great deal of danger; or by their intemperance they run into many diseases and disasters, by their evil practises they come under the lash of the Law, and without repentance under the danger of damnation too; salvation is farre from them, Psal. 119. 155. Isa. 59. 11.

Lavat.

They are crushed in the gate] That is, they are cast in judgement, all goes against them, and sentence pronounced upon them, as it befell Hamans children, and Davids enemies, Psal. 109. 7.

Neither is there any to deliver them] None to plead for them, or rescue them, Prov. 31. 8, 9. none to extend mercy to them, nor any to favour those fatherlesse children, Psal. 109. 12. and that because their fathers were pitilesse, verse 13, 14, Haman for instance.

Verse 15. Whose harvest the hungry eateth up] This is another root of the wicked One, his estate, against which, God raiseth up a rout of needy wretches to pillage him. These are as a sweeping raine that leaveth no food, Prov. 28. 3. These, as leane lice, bite hardest, and as sparrow-hawkes, are extreme greedy: Malesuada fames putteth them upon it. These Harpies seize upon his very harvest ad majorem cruciatum & miseriam, pulling the meat out of his mouth, as it were, and not suffering him to roast that which he took in hunting, Prov. 12, 27. Hee shall meete with greatest disappointment, and come to that poverty which he so studiously shunned, singing that doleful ditty ——— En quæ consevimus agros?

Ἄλλοι μὲν σπείρουσ', ἄλλοι δ' ἀμήσονται.

See this threatned, Lev. 26. 16. Deut. 28. 33. Isa. 1. 6. Micah 6. 15.

And taketh it even out of the thornes] Creeping through the midst of the thornes and bushes wherewith it is fenced and hedged in, to steale it away. Hunger wee say, breakes through stone walls: the Rabbines sense it thus, Hee that comes out of the thornes, that is, every base fellow carrieth away the store of this rich oppressor.

Scutum.

The armed man carrieth it away, so the Vulgar after the Septuagint. Mr. Broughton readeth it thus, The hungry shall eat up his harvest which he had gotten through the thornes, that is, not without a great deal of care, and much pains in stubbing up the thornes, that he might not sow amongst them.

And the robber swalloweth up their substance] Or the thirsty shall drink up their substance; as gold-thirsty Babel did Hezekiahs treasure for his coming so neare the garb and guise of the wicked in his ostentation. The thirsty shall swill up their wealth, so Broughton rendreth it, so that neither their osculenta nor poculenta shall escape the spoiler, but there shall be a clean riddance of all; the enemy shall play at sweep-stake, he shall sup up all, as the Hebrew hath it, and as Eliphaz would have Job consider, that the Chaldees and Sabees had done his substance.

שאף

Verse 6. Although affliction cometh not forth of the dust] It cometh not by fate or blind fortune, it haps not as it may, that men suffer. Philistines indeed, will say haply, It is a chance, 1 Sam. 6. 9. a common occurrence, that had a time to come in, and must have a time to go in: but every Naomi will in such case conclude, The hand of the Lord is gone out against mee, Ruth 1. 13. and carry her sailes accordingly, verse 20, 21. and every good soule will cry out, I will bear the indignation of the Lord (who is the efficient cause of all my miseries) because I have sinned against him, which is the meritorious cause. The word here rendred affliction, signifieth also iniquity; and well it may, sith they are tyed together with chaines of adamant, as that Heathen said, Fingimus & fingimur fatis facti sumus & sumus, saith another. Man weaves a spiders web of sin out of his own bowels, saith a Third, and then he is incangled in the same web; the troubles which enfold and wrap about him, are twisted with his own fingers: Cain is tied fast in a snare upon the earth, where no ginne is for him, Am. 3. 6. Tu das filii materiem malis. Of the black-birds dung is made the bird-lime wherewith he is taken: so of the dung of our sins are made the lime-twigs of their punishments.

Verse

Verſe 7. Yet man is borne unto trouble] Which is the naturall fruit of his ſinne, and a piece of the curſe, hee hath in him a παραπτωμία, a common ſeminary of all ſinne, and this hee brings into the world with him; what wonder then though troubles come trouping in upon him on every ſide; as if he were born for no other end but to ſuffer, and that as naturally as fire aſcendeth? Sure it is, that ſinne doth as naturally and ordinarily draw and ſuck judgements to it, as the loadſtone doth iron, or Turpentine fire. Some read the words thus, Man is borne to ſin, and ſo conſequently to trouble: for ſinne uſually endeth tragically, and troubleſomely. Hence the ſame word both here, and that in the former verſe, ſignifie both ſinne and ſorrow; and man by reaſon of his birth-blot, hath a birth-right to them both, he is even born to them. The divel, when he ſpeaketh lies, ſpeaketh of his owne, Joh. 8. 44. And we, when either we do evil, we work de noſtro & ſecundum hominem, of our own, and according to men, 1 Cor. 3 3. Or when we ſuffer evill, wee ſuffer nothing but what is humane and incident to men, 1 Cor. 10. 13. The very heathen could ſay as much; witneſſe that of Xenophon, πᾶν προσδοκᾶν δεῖ ἄνθρωπον ὄντα, It behooveth him that is no more then a man, to expect all ſorts of troubles: and that of Demoſthenes, it is fit for men to hope the beſt, but bravely to beare the worſt, as that which is common to all mankind: and that of Iſocrates. Ὁ ἀνθρώπινος &c. Hee that remembreth that he is a man, will not be diſcontented at whatſoever trouble befalleth him: and that of Herodotus, ὡς δεῖν ἀνθρώπους συμφορῆς. Every man is miſerable. For this it was likely, that God, to keep Ezekiel lowly in the abundance of revelations, calleth him ſo oft Son of man. And when the French King, being priſoner to Charles the fifth ſaw written upon the wall that Emperours motto, plus ultra, further yet, and underwrote, Hodie mihi, cras tibi. I am now thy priſoner, thou mayſt hereafter be mine, the Emperour came after him, and ſubſcribed; I confeſſe I am a man, and may ſoon ſuffer any thing incident to mankind.

Fob. Manl. loc. com. 175. Homo ſum, humanum nihil à me alienum puto.

As the ſparkes fly upward] Heb. The ſonnes of the quick or live coale lift up to fly: The vulgar hath it, as the birds fly upward; the Septuagint, As the young vultures fly upwards. Sparkes and birds fly upward naturally, and by a principle of their owne they need not be taught it ſo here. Birds, though they have more of the earth then of the other three elements, Gen. 2. 19. yet are light (which is a wonder) and delight in high-flying, and this is innate to them; ſo is it to man, as man, to be in trouble, Job 14. 1. Some of the Hebrews by ſparkes, or ſons of the quick coale, here underſtand the divels, and make this to be the ſenſe; ſuke as ſin is connatural to men, ſo doth God ſtirre up the divels, to whom it is as natural to flutter up and down here for the puniſhment of ſuch as ſinne: Sed hoc friget, ſaith Mercer; but this is not likely to be the meaning.

Verſe 8. Surely I would ſeek unto God] Not let flie at him, as thou haſt done, curſing thy birth-day, and wiſhing thy ſelf out of the world. Aſſure thy ſelf, this that thou takeſt, is not the way to get off with comfort, but rather to return (by repentance) unto him, that ſmiteth thee, and to ſeeke the Lord of Hoſtes, Iſa. 9. 13. ſith elſe, his anger will not turn away, but his hand will be ſtretched out ſtill (as the Prophet there hath it) for is it fit that he ſhould lay downe the bucklers firſt? or that we ſhould ſtand upon termes, and capitulate with him, and not ſtoop unto him by an humble yieldance? eſpecially ſithence

Tibul. Eleg 1. 8

Deus crudelibus iratus
Quos videt invitos ſuccubuiſſe ſibi.

The way to diſarme Gods heavy indignation, is to ſubmit to his juſtice, and to implore his mercy, Hoſ. 5. 14. to fly from his Anger to his Grace. Blood-letting is a cure of bleeding, and a burne a cure againſt a burne, and running to God is the way to eſcape him, as to cloſe and get in with him that would ſtrike you, doth avoid the blow; and this is that that I would do, were I in thy caſe, ſaith Eliphaz here. Hee doth not vaunt (as Olympiodorus miſtaketh his meaning) but advile Job to humble himſelf, and confeſſe his ſinnes, and ſue for pardon of ſin, and releaſe of puniſhment; to kiſſe the rod, and not to bite it; to drink of Gods cup willingly and at firſt, when it is full (as Mr. Bradford Martyr hath it) leſt if he linger, he drink at length of the dregs with the wicked.

And unto God] the ſtrongeſt Judge, as the word importeth, who ſeeth Pindar. Pythiſ. [illegible] neither feareth nor feareth any man (as it was ſaid of Trajan the Emperour, but more truly of God:) he proceedeth according to truth, not according to opinion or appearance, and greatly ſcorneth to look at diſpleaſure, revenge or recompence.

Would I commit my cauſe] Put my caſe and condition by ſelf-reſignation, and humble ſupplication. This David did notably, 2 Sam. 15. 25, 26. Pſal. 142. 2. and counſels all to do accordingly, Pſal. 55. 22. Caſt thy burden (or thy requeſt) upon the Lord by vertue of this writ or warrant.

Verſe 9. Which doth great things and unſearchable] The better to perſwade Job to take his counſel, he entreth into a large deſcription of Gods Attributes, his Power, Wiſedome, Juſtice, Mercy &c. all which are clearly ſeene in his workes of wonder as in a mirrour, or as on a theatre. Theſe he is ever in doing, as the word here ſignifieth, and ſheweth himſelf great in great things, and not little in the leaſt, dum memora culicis & pulicis diſponit; yea, he uſeth to be greater in ſmaller things, then in bigger. The ſoul is more operative in Ants, then in Elephants, in Dwarfes, then in Giants. So he delights to help his people with a little help, Dan. 11. 34. (that through weaker meanes they may ſee his greater ſtrength) to magnifie his power in pardoning their many and mighty ſinnes, Numb. 14. 17, 18. Micah 7. 18. to illuſtrate his power in their perſeverance and wonderfull preſervation amidſt a world of evils and enemies, John 10. 29. 1 Pet. 1. 5. to fulfill his promiſes, ſeeme they never ſo improbable or impoſſible, Jer. 32. 14, 15. to anſwer prayers that look as if loſt, and to do for his people exceeding abundantly above all that they can ask or think, according to the power that worketh in them, Eph. 3. 20. All this Eliphaz would have Job to conſider, that he might not caſt away his confidence, but ſeek to God, and turn his talk to him, as Beza turneth the fore-going words.

Aug.

And unſearchable] Heb. And no ſearch, for they are fathomleſſe, and paſt finding out, Rom. 11. 33. This, Eliphaz might ſay, to ſtop Jobs curioſity, and to humble him for his ſinne, in enquiring too much into the reaſon of Gods ſo ſevere dealing with him, chap. 3. In prying too farre, or too boldly into the ſecret workings of God. It ſhould ſuffice us to know that the will of God is the rule of right, that his judgements are ſometimes ſecret, alwaies juſt, that it is extreme folly to reprehend what we cannot comprehend (wee may as ſoone comprehend the ſea in a cockleſhell, as the unſearchable things of God in our narrow and ſhallow underſtandings) that at the laſt day all things ſhall be cleared up, and every mouth ſtopped, when exquiſite reaſons of all Gods proceedings (which now ſeem not ſo well carried) ſhall be produced, and wiſedome ſhall be juſtified of her children.

Marvellous things] Such as the wiſeſt may well wonder at. God is the onely Thaumaturgus, the great wonder-worker, and theſe marvels are more ordinary then the moſt are, either at all either aware of, or affected with. To let paſſe thoſe wonders of the Creation (for which, ſee Pſal. 136. 4, 5, 6, 7.) Canſt thour tell, how the bones grow in her that is with child, ſaith Solomon? Eccl. 11. 5. Mirificatus ſum mirabilibus operibus tuis, ſo Montanus rendreth that of David, Pſal. 139. 14. I am fearfully and wonderfully made; marvellous are thy workes &c. Galen, that great Naturaliſt, was much amazed at the motion of the lungs in mans body, and would needs offer ſacrifices therefore to that God whom he knew not. Who can give a naturall reaſon of the ſtrength of the neather-chap, of the heat in the ſtomack, of the colours in the rain-bow, of the ebbing and flowing of the Sea, or but of this ordinary occurrence, that chaffe is ſo cold, that is keepes ſnow hidden within it from melting, and withall ſo warme, that it haſteneth the ripening of Apples? Well might Eliphaz ſay, that God doth marvellous things without number.

Fernel. de abd. rer. cauſ.

Verſe 10. Who giveth raine upon the earth] This is reckoned, and rightly, among the marvellous workes of God. See chap. 28. 26. Jer. 10. 13. Amos 5. 8. Acts 14. 17. Raine is the flux of a moiſt cloud, which being diſſolved by little and little by the heat of the Sun, lets down ſtore of drops out of the middle region of the aire: this is Gods gift. 1. For he Determineth it, Job 28. 26. 2. Prepareth it, Pſal. 147. 8. 3. Withholdeth it at his pleaſure, ſtopping thoſe bottles that ſhould yeild it. Amos 4. 7. 4. Sheeteth it for the benefit and benefit of man and beaſt, as alſo for the demonſtration of his Power, Wiſedome, Juſtice, and Goodneſſe, whereof hee hath not left himſelf (as it were) without witneſſe, Acts 14. 17. while he weigheth theſe waters above the firmament by meaſure, ſo that not one drop falleth in vain, or in a wrong place. In those hot countries, where Rivers were scant, raine was highly valued: they called it the husband of the earth, because the earth can no more bear fruit without it, then a woman children without the company of a man. The Egyptians were wont in mockery to tell the Grecians, that if their God (whom they called cloud-gathering Jupiter) should forget to give raine, they might chance to starve for it: see the reason, Deut. 11. 8. — 11, 12. Egypt was watered with the foot as a garden, by sluces from Nilus, not so Canaan. Psal. 10. 8. νεφελη γερετης Ζευς.

wrong

He sendeth waters upon the fields] Irriget agnis universa, saith the vulgar. Hee moisteneth all places with waters, by the showres which falling upon the ground, run hither and thither, he divideth the fields as it were, into streets and high-wayes, so Beza paraphraseth. Another thus, 'Tis he himselfe, who watereth it, as well by those waters which fall from heaven, as by those which he hath hidden in its entrailes, and whose secret draines produce in a thousand places sources and rivers. Some render it, upon the out-places, and understand it of wildernesses, to set forth Gods bounty. Others render it, upon the face of the streets, and will have it meant of Navigable rivers, which by the passage upon them, do after a sort, make streetes and high-way wayes through several Countries, to the which also they convey many commodities.

Verse 11. To set up on high those that be low] By those rich raines whereby hee fatteneth the earth, and makes it fruitfull, giving them a whole country of corne, as hee did that vir divitiarum qui animam etiam habuit triticeam. Luke 12. 16. But God hath more wayes then this, to preferre men to riches, honour, and authority, as he did Joseph, David, Daniel, Mordecai &c. He raiseth up the poore out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dung-hill, that he may set him with Princes, &c. Psal. 113. 6, 7. Let Job heare this, and know it for his good, as ver. 27. Aben-Ezra.

That those which mourn] As those do commonly who are in a low condition, and 'tis much if they murmur not. The word signifieth, such as are pulla veste clad in mourners weedes, or that having layn among the pots, are smutched and sullied like so many black scullions, Psal. 68. 13. I. e. these shall the Lord not only make to be as the wings of a dove covered with silver, and her feathers with yellow gold, but shall also make them to mount up with wings as Eagles, Isa. 40. 31. He shall exalt them to safety, saith Eliphaz here: yea, he shall safely exalt them to safety. Wicked men are oft exalted, Psal. 12. ult. but then it is not to safety, ... pollentur ut ad ... sit lapsu gravior ruant, they are lifted up, but for a mischief, that they may be brought downe againe with the greater poise, as Haman and Pharaohs chiefe Baker, whose head was lifted up, but to the gallows: the chiefe Butlers head was lifted up too, but after another manner. There is great difference betwixt the advancement of the righteous and the wicked. Those God carrieth as the Eagle doth her young on her wings, to exalt them to safety, to set them upon a rock that is higher then they; these he lifteth up as the Eagle doth her prey in her talons, to dash them against some rock, and to destroy them.

Verse 12. He disappointeth the devices of the crafty] Hee frustrateth and endeth ineffectual the curious contrivances of the worlds wisards, full of supernaturall subtilty, and so secureth his people in safety, by out-plotting their enemies; secured he not Pharaoh so (who dealt craftily with our fathers, saith Stephen, Acts 7. 19.) and Saul that subtile tyrant? and Herod that crafty fox, Luke 13. 32? and all the primitive and modern persecutors, to whom the old Dragon had lent his seven heads to plot, and his ten hornes to push against the people of God: but all to no purpose: God disappointed the devices of those malignants. So the Vulgar rendereth this text, which the Chaldee appropriateth to Pharaoh and his Counsellors, who said, Come, and let us deale wisely, when as (in laying hard taskes upon the Israelites) they kept them from increasing, they never dreamt of any policy for who knows not that your labouring men have the most and the fullest children? So that their hands cannot perform their enterprise] This could not give them plenum an actuall being or subsistence. That Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, Jerome, Broughton rendreth it. Others thus, ... that is, ... what they had projected. Chrom. the Pharisees, John 11. 49. Nimrod ... those cruel-crafties of the primitive times, sounded the triumph before-hand, and engraved Καταστροφὰ μιμῶ.

ved the victory upon the pillars of marble: but the Church may ſtill ſing as of old, Pſal. 20.8. They are brought down and fallen, but we are riſen and ſtand upright. Charles the fifth and the French King had covenanted the utter extirpation of the Lutheran faction throughout their dominions; but God found them other employment, and gave his Church an happy Halcyon. And who knowes not how God hath hitherto helped us of this Nation againſt the power and policy of earth, and of hell?

Verſe 13. He taketh the wiſe in their own craftineſſe] Thoſe wiſe to do evil, worldly wiſe, meere machiavellians; for though the Florentine Secretary was not born of ſome thouſands of yeeres after Eliphaz ſpeke this, yet the divel was well nigh as great a maſter then as now, and had his crafty cubs, ſtudents, and great proficients in that wiſedome which St. James affirmeth to be from beneath, and not from above (like the wings of the Oſtrich, it may help a man to out-run others upon earth, but helpes not at all towards heaven) and further deſcribeth it to be earthly, ſenſuall, divelliſh. Earthly, as managing the luſts of the eyes unto the ends of gaine; Senſual, as managing the luſts of the fleſh unto ends of pleaſure: and Divelliſh, as managing the pride of life unto ends of power: theſe ſubtile Sirs, theſe profound politicians, that dig deepe to hide their counſels, not from men only, but (which is impoſſible) from the Lord, Iſa. 29.15. that think they can work out any thing, and that none can prevent them (as the Apoſtles word from this text importeth) God takes and makes fooles of them; he fruſtrateth the tokens of theſe lyars, and maketh the diviners mad: he turneth wiſe men backward, and maketh their knowledg fooliſh, Iſa. 44.25. Surely the Princes of Zoan are fools, the counſel of the wiſe counſellors of Pharaoh is become bruitiſh ——— they have alſo ſeduced Egypt, even they that are the ſtay of the tribes thereof: the Lord hath mingled a ſpirit of perverſities in the midſt thereof, and they have cauſed Egypt to erre in every worke thereof, as a drunken man ſtaggereth in his vomit, Iſai. 19.11, 13, 14. Did ever any man deal ſo unwiſely as Ahitophel that Oracle, 2 Sam. 17.23. Curious to provide for his family after his death, and yet careleſſe to preſerve himſelf from eternall death? Was not this a madneſſe even to a miracle? He ſhould firſt (ſaith a Reverend man) have ſet himſelf in order, and then he might have hanged his houſe with coverings of tapeſtry, Pro. 7.16. and with broidered work of Egypt, Ezek. 27.7. And if he had bridled his anger when he ſaddled his Aſſe, he would not have broken the lanthorn of his body, and quenched the light of his life; he would not have put his houſe in order, and himſelf into ſuch a deſperate and irrecoverable confuſion. But what ſaith Solomon? His own iniquities ſhall take the wicked himſelf, and hee ſhall be holden with the cords of his ſinnes, Prov. 5.22. The Lord is known by the judgment which he executeth; the wicked is ſnared in the worke of his own hands, Higgaion, Selah, Meditate, as one readeth it, Pſal. 9.16.

wanupyia, 1 Cor. 3.19.

Lib. 2. de Invent.

And the counſel of the froward is carried headlong] More haſte it maketh then good ſpeed, though it be no counſel that is the extract of reaſon, the reſult of ſerious and ſad debates (as Tacitus deſineth it) becauſe it proceedeth from froward perſons, obſtinati, contortuplicati, ſuch as have one crafty device twiſted within another, like a rope, ſuch as of whom we uſe to ſay in a proverb, there never wanteth a new knot in a leaves cap.

Verſe 14. They meet with darkneſſe in the day-time] They are infatuated and beſotted, a ſpirit of giddineſſe ſeizeth them: ira ut in re clariſſimâ deſtituantur prudentiâ, ſaith Vatablus, ſo that they cannot diſcerne things that are evident and cleare as the Sun at noone day; they have light without, but want light within; they have diſcretion and judgment to do for the beſt: this was threatned, Deut. 28.29. and accordingly fulfilled upon thoſe blind Phariſees, as our Saviour often calleth them, and now upon that whole nation, Rom. 11.8. 2 Cor. 3.14. Since they crucified the Lord of glory, they never proſpered in any thing they undertooke: neither will they be reclaimed of that fooliſh paſſion of a fooliſh age wherein to they have long ſince wrought themſelves. They had forced our Williams Rufus to bear them, and ſo ſwept in his diſpoſition (againſt the Chriſtians) but they loſt the day, and their money too. [illegible] Alfred. Chron. 428. Pius the Emperour, and thought to have proſelyted him, but it would not bee. [illegible] upon Charles the fifth in the yeer of grace 1538 to overcome him to Judaiſme, but with ill ſucceſſe, for they were preſently presently imprisoned, and shortly after executed; Rabbi Salomon at Adantua, and Rabbi David in Spaine. How they are benighted in their expositions of Scripture, troubling those cleare fountaines with their ridiculous conceits and foolish fables, I need not relate. Neither are many of the Popish Interpreters (as they will be accounted) much wiser, being judicially blinded, given over to an injudicious mind, Rom. 1. 28. to the efficacy of error, 2 Thes. 2. 11. so that

They grope at noone day, as in the night.] They have neither light nor sight left them, and this by a just hand of God upon them, because they closed up their eyes lest they should see, Act. 28. 27. they would not receive the love of the truth, 2 Thes. 2. 10. Therefore now it is hid from their eyes, and the light that is in them is darkenesse. Women and children see further into the mysteries of religion, then many of these learned Doctors, these Idol-shepherds; Gods sword being upon their arme, and upon their right eye, Zach. 11. 17. that is, both upon their power and policy, so that they are like Owles, that can see better in the dark then in the light: and like Moles, that dig dexterously under ground, but are blind above ground: neither do they ever open their eyes till the pangs of death are upon them.

Verse 15. But he saveth the poor from the sword] From the teeth of wolves, from the hurt of it, not alwayes from the smart of it; for all such promises as this of temporall deliverance, are ever to be taken with exception of the crosse, which yet shall be so sanctified, that the Saints shall say, It was good for us to have beene afflicted. Provided, that they be poore in spirit (for God will save the humble person, Job 22. 29.) and sue in forma pauperis, as spirituall beggars, such as get their living by begging; the word signifieth needy and desirous of relief, very indigent, and therefore humbly suppliant for supply of things necessary: This poore man cryed, and the Lord heard him (meaning himself) and saved him out of all his troubles, Psal. 34. 6. Forget not the congregation of thy poor for ever, Psal. 74. 19. Hee will not, he cannot, for they are written upon the palmes of his hands, so that hee cannot look beside them. Who hath not heard how gratiously poore Geneva hath beene preserved? Rochel relieved, as it were, by a miracle? Leyden rescued from the Duke of Alva's sword, that very night that he thought to have stormed it, the winds turned, the tide swelled, and the waters came in, and forced him to raise the siege: how well might these poor saved ones sit and sing with David, Psalm 68. 20. He that is our God is the God of salvation; and unto God the Lord belong the issues from death? Anno 1573.

From their mouth] Which is a sword, so some sense is: God saveth his poore from the sword of their enemies mouth, or the sword that comes out of their mouth. A gladio oris eorum, saith the Vulgar: David felt the false tongues of his enemies as a murthering weapon in his bones, Psal. 42. 10. The tongue is thin, broad, and long, like a sword, it is also red like a flaming sword: by calumnies and false testimonies many are those that fall down wounded, Prov. 12. 6. and 18. 8. and 26. 22. Cain and his complices flick not to object to the meekest of men with one breath, pride, ambition, and usurpation of authority, but God vindicated his reputation. Mary was accused three several times: the Pharisees accused her of presumption, Luke 7. 39. Martha of carelessenesse, Luke 10. 40. Judas of wastfulnesse, John 12. 5. but Christ ever answered for her, and tooke her part. And was it not so with Job chap. 42? Is there not a promise to all Saints Psalme 37. 6?

From the hand of the mighty.] God saveth his, not only from the virulent tongues, but from the violent hands also of the mighty, that might overcome not right, that the poore fall not by his strong ones, or into his strong power and paws, Psal. 10. 10. where oppressors are fitly compared to lions lying in wait for their prey. Now to be thus saved from the slaying sword, the slandering tongue, and the oppressing hand, is complete salvation.

Verse 16. So the poore hath hope.] How should it be otherwise? experience will breed confidence. Thus hath, thus hath is an ordinary Scripture-emphasis, Psalme 89. 1, 2, 3, 4. and 2 Cor. 1. 10. So, the poore helplesse, hopelesse person, who is pined away, spent and utterly exhausted and undone, both for health and wealth; he hath hope (spem majorem ex melioribus, as Aristotle, from past and hard given away all) and this holds head above water, makes wants glorious, and begets calamity a good company doth the way. Neither is hope [illegible] rate stitute in all mens eyes, is at lowest. I was brought low (or drawn dry, the same word as here) and he helped me, Psal. 116. 6. So He will regard the prayer of the destitute, Psal. 102. 17. The Hebrew word there signifies a poor shrub that is in the wilderness low and slender, trod upon by beasts, unregarded, worthlesse; such an one lobketh unto God and is lightened, Psal. 34. 5. conceiveth lively hope, hope unfailable through faith unfained, having earnest expectation (as the word signifieth) of strong consolation, so that he can truly say with Saint Paul, when I am weake, then am I strong, 2 Cor. 12. 10. Such prisoners of hope can turn them to the strong hold, Zech. 9. 12.

And iniquity stoppeth her mouth] Iniquity, that is, the workers of iniquity, those worst sort of sinners (the word importeth men of manifold perverseness) amazed at godly men's good successes, contrary to their expectations, shall stand speechlesse, as they did, Matth. 22. 12. convicted of their wickednesse, and confounded at Gods wonderfull workes. See the like Isa. 52. 15. Psalm 107. 42. Mic. 7. 16. Psal. 8. 2. Thus Jannes and Jambres were silenced and convinced, but not converted. No more are many now a-dayes, who yet have as little to say as they.

Maligni & nocendi studiosi. Aquinas.

The full accomplishment of this promise is not to be looked for till the last day.

Verse 17. Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth] This Behold holds forth a paradox, a strange sight, viz. An afflicted man a blessed man; this the world wondreth at, and can as little conceive of, or consent to, as the Philistines could of Samsons riddle of meat out of the eater &c. How can these things be, say they? It will never be, saith Sense; it can never be, saith Reason, it both can bee, and will bee, saith Faith, the property whereof, is to gather one contrary out of another, life out of death, happinesse out of misery, assurance of deliverance out of deepest distresses, and to believe God upon his bare word, and that against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things incredible. What if the afflicted man be Enosh (that's the word here) a sorry, sickly, miserable man, so the world esteemeth him? yet Blessed is the man (there he is called Gebir the gallant man) whom thou rebukest, O Lord, and teachest him out of thy Law, Psal. 94. 12. Oh the happinesse, the μακαριότης, the present and future happinesse of that man whom God correcteth, and withall instructeth; chastening him with pain upon his bed, and withall opening his eares to counsel, and sealing his instructions, Job 33. 16, 19 disputing him out of his evil practises, with a rod in his hand.

Therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty] Faint not, be not so impatient as to think that either thy crosses come not from God, or not in mercy, or that he is not All-sufficient to beare thee up under them, or to help thee out of them. Set not light by his love-tokens (this is one of those two extremes Salomon warnes us of Prov. 3. 11. neither despise afflictions, nor despond under them) See my Treatise called Gods love-tokens, and the afflicted mans lessons, page 37. 138. 39. &c. Loath we are to take up the crosse, and when called to carry it, we shrink in the shoulder: no chastening seemeth joyous but grievous, as averse the best may be to it, as a sick man is to those physicall sibbes-sawces, he had as lieve die almost as take them down. How then, alas, will wicked men doe to drink off that cup of Gods wrath that hath eternity to the bottome? Let the saints be content, and say, Feriat modo, ne graviora feram, It is the Lords mercy that we are not consumed, Lam. 3. 22. that wee are set safe from the wrath to come, what ever here befideth us: it is the chastening of the Almighty, who could as easily crush us as correct us. See Isai. 13. 6. Joel 1. 15.

Psal. 75. 8.

Verse 18. For he maketh sore, and bindeth up] As a Surgeon maketh an incision, to let out the imposthumed matter, and then heals up the wound againe: God hath a salve for every sore, a medicine for every malady; he is both a Father and a physitian, thee knoweth us not unlesse need be, 1 Pet. 1. 6. Wee are judged of the Lord, that we may not be condemned with the world. Would wee that God should let us alone to perish in our corruptions, (as he did Ephraim, Hos. 4. 14.) and not meddle with us? lotsaw he should not cut off our hands before they are set, and lop up our sores before they are festred: this were a mercy more cruel then any cruelty, as a Father calls it. And yet such perverse are of that country-mans mind, spoken of by Luther, who being on his sick bed urged by his Minister to take in good part his present pain, as a token of Gods love answered, Ah quam velim alios amare, non me! If this be his love, I could wish he would love others, and not me. Luth. in Gen.

He woundeth] This is more then to make sore or sick, like as Heb. 12. 6. Scourging is worse then Chastening. God sometimes makes bloody wales upon the backs of his best children, he wounds them with the wound of an enemy, Psal. 69. 21. & 110. 5. and leaves them all gore blood, as the word here used importeth. מחץ cruentavit.

And his hands make whole] He hath, as a Chirurgion should have, a Ladies hand, soft and tender, a fathers heart relenting over his pained Ephraim. Hos. 11. 8. Hee afflicteth not willingly, or from the heart; it goeth as much against the heart with him, as against the hair with us; and evermore Lam. 3. 33

Dejicit ut relevet, premit ut solatia præstet:
Exerat, ut possit vivificare Deus.

Verse 19. He shall deliver thee] Heb. Snatch thee away, or pull thee out, as a brand out of the fire, or as a prey out of the teeth of a wilde beast. Thus God snatcht Lot out of Sodom, David out of many waters, Paul out of the mouth of the Lion, Jonah out of the belly of hell &c. As birds flying, so will I defend Jerusalem, Isa. 31. 5 A metaphor from the Eagle and other birds, which when they flie highest, set a watchfull eye upon the nest to rescue their young ones in case of danger.

In six troubles] Of straits, such as enemies or other evils put men to. Israel at the red sea, for instance, where they were sorely distressed, encircled with troubles, neither was there any way of escape, unlesse they could have gone up to heaven, which because they could not, heaven came down to them and delivered them.

Yea in seven] A certaine number for an uncertain, boundlesse deliverances will God grant to his people, even as oft as they shall need deliverance, enemies oft plow upon their backs, and God as often cuts their traces, Psal. 129. 3, 4. As Cato was two and thirty times accused, and two and thirty times cleared and absolved, so shall it be with the Saints, and this not only at the end of the world, as Gregory and others interpret this text (as if by six and seven, allusion were made to Gods creating the world in six dayes, and resting on the seventh, and so must his servants labour here under afflictions, and rest in heaven) but in this life present, where many are the troubles of the righteous, (millions some render it) but the Lord delivereth them out of all, Psal. 34. 19. Yea, in them all, as this text hath it, by his supporting grace, and those divine comforts, which, as blown bladders, beare them aloft all waters.

There shall no evil touch thee] Sc. tactu qualitativo, with a deadly touch. God chargeth afflictions as David did his Captaines concerning Absolom, Handle the young man gently for my sake. Touch not mine anointed &c. Either touch them not at all, or not to hurt them. Troubles may touch the Saints, but evils must not, 1 Cor. 10. 14.

Verse 20. In famine he shall redeem thee from death] They that be slaine with the sword, are better then they that be slaine with hunger, Lamen. 4. 9. Famine therefore is here set as the first and greatest of the six ensuing evils, the forest of Gods judgments, Ezek. 6. 11. Jer. 24. 10. The certaine harbinger of death, as here. From this so great a death God delivered Abraham, Gen. 12. Isaak, Gen. 26. Jacob and his family, Gen. 47. The poor widow, 1 Kings 17. The Israelites in the wilderneſse by quailes, the Rebellers by a miraculous shoale of shel-fish, cast up into their town in a strait siege &c. There is a promise that the Lions shall lack and suffer hunger, but so shall not any such as seeke the Lord, Psalm 34. 10. There shall bee speciall provision made for such, and God shall redeeme them from this evil by a wonderful separation, as he did in another case, Exod. 8. 22. either he will send them in meat, or take away their stomacks, as Hee once said. Fides famem non formidat, Faith feareth no famine: having trusted God for a crowne, she will not distrust him for a crust.

And in warre from the power of the sword] Here is the Saints safety, or their writ of protection. True it is, that the sword devoureth one as well as another, 2 Sam. 11. 25. and pale death cutteth its way oftentimes through a wood of men, out of the mouth of a murdering peece without distinction. But though the Saints, with Josiah, bee slaine in battel, yet they dye in peace, 2 Kings 22. 20. with chap. 22. 20. for their eyes see not the evil that God bringeth upon others that outlive them, as it followeth followeth there. Beſides, they are gathered to their fathers, who enjoyed peace. Redeemed they are from the power or hands of the ſword, which may kill them, but cannot hurt them, take away their head, but not their crown.

Ἀποστῆναι δύναται, βλάπτειν δὲ οὔ.

Back-biting is back-beating. Sped.

Verſe 21. Thou ſhalt be hid from the ſcourge of the tongue] That is, from reproaches and ſlanders, which is a tongue-ſmiting, Jer. 18. 18. as ſmart as any hand-ſmiting, and drawes blood, Ezek. 22. 9. The divel is both a liar, and a murtherer, John 8. 44. Humphrey Duke of Glocester, was by the people of England thought to be doubly murthered (ſaith the Chronicler) viz. by detraction and deadly practiſe. Plato commendeth that law of the Lydians, that puniſhed detracters like as they did murtherers, becauſe their words are ſwords, and their breath as fire devoureth, Iſai. 33. 10.

Dabhar is the Hebrew for a word, Debher for a Peſt. Druſ.

Now from ſuch peſts the Lord promiſeth to hide his people, that either the Traducer ſhall not find them, or not faſten upon them: their names ſhall bee ſo oyled, that ſlanderous aſperſions ſhall not ſtick to them. Some render the text thus, Hee ſhall bee hid, cum vagabitur lingua, when the tongue wandereth or walketh about. Their tongue walketh through the earth, Pſal. 73. 9. it runs all the world over, and like a mad dog, ſnaps at every one. Hence the Hebrew word Ragal to defame or ſlander, Pſal. 15. 3. properly noteth a footing it up and down, a going to and fro to carry tales and rumours, 2 Sam. 19. 27. Now from ſuch a miſchiefe, from the laſh of ſuch lewd tongues, God will hide his people under the hollow of his hand, becauſe hee knowes that many a good heart is more afflicted with words then with blowes, Pſal. 42. 3. Saint Paul reckoned, that it were better for him to die, then that any man ſhould make his glorying void that is take away his good name, and ſo diſable him from doing good by his Miniſtery, 1 Cor. 9. 15.

Neither ſhalt thou be afraid of deſtruction when it cometh.] Much leſſe at the rumour of it, Matth. 24. 6. Luke 24. 9 Thou ſhalt walk about the world as a conqueror, being above fear, then when others are below hope. Noah-like thou ſhalt be, ——mundo tranquillus in undis, and not as Magor-miſſabib, a terrour to thy ſelf and all about thee, Jer. 20. 3.

Verſe 22. At deſtruction and famine thou ſhalt laugh] viz. by the force of thy faith, which (like perfect love) caſteth out unfull feare, as grounding upon Gods infallible promiſe, and knowing that all the pathes of the Lord are mercy and truth unto ſuch as keepe his covenant and his teſtimonies, Pſalm 25. 10. All the paſſages of his providence are to ſuch not only mercy, but truth; they come to them in a way of a promiſe, as bound to them by covenant: and hence their holy courage lifteth them up ſo farre above dangers and feares, that they even laugh at them, as Leviathan laugheth at the ſhaking of the ſpeare, Job 41. 29. They famiſh famine, and deſtroy deſtruction it ſelf, like as Chriſt Jeſus the Captaine of their ſalvation, ſwallowed up death in victory; and as many of the Martyrs baffled it, deriding their tormentors.

Neither ſhalt thou be afraid of the beaſts of the earth.] i.e. wilde beaſts, that devour men and cattel, as Lions, Beares, Bores, Wolves, &c. whereunto we may adde thoſe Cannibals, man-eating perſecutors, who eat up Gods people as they eat bread, Pſalm 14. 4. Such Lycanthropi, or beaſts in the ſhape of men, Paul fought with at Epheſus, and God had delivered him out of the mouth of that Lion Nero, 2 Tim. 4. 17. Who yet afterwards martyred him. But the viper at Malta did him no hurt: no more did the Lions Daniel: neither would they meddle with ſome of the primitive Martyrs, caſt before them to be devoured.

Verſe 23. For thou ſhalt be in league with the ſtones of the field] Thou ſhalt not daſh thy foot againſt them (the Latines call a ſtone lapidem a ledendo pede, from hurting the foot that lighteth againſt them) Pſal. 91. 12. They were wont of old to go barefoot (as Vadabius here noteth.) And our Chronicler telleth us of King Henry the ſecond, that for a penaunce, going to Canterbury to the ſhrine of Thomas Becket, his bare feet with the hard ſtones were forced to yeild bloody tokens of his devotion on the way, or elſe. The ſtones of the field ſhall not hinder thy harveſt, as Matth. 13. 4. Or being pile up for a mound or wall, they ſhall not fall upon thee, and braine thee, as the ſtones of the wall of Aphek did the blaſphemous Syrians: as the towne-houſe did the mocking Philiſtines, Judg. 16. 30. as the houſe did Jobs children &c. or the ſtones out of the wall ſhall not cry out againſt thee, as Hab. 2. 11. but all creatures ſhall be thy confederates; not only not hurting, but helping thee, all that may be. For as they are all armed against the wicked as rebels and traitors to the divine Majesty: so God hath promised to make a covenant for his Saints with the beasts of the field, and with the foules of heaven &c. Hos. 2. 18. See the Note there.

1 King. 20. 30.

that

Rebellis facta est; quia homo munini, creatura homini. Aug.

And the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee] The tame beasts shall not only not mischieve thee (as some they have done: Euripides the Poet was torn in pieces with dogs; horses have been the death of many &c.) but shall be serviceable and profitable unto thee; some alive, not dead, as the dog, horse: some dead, not alive, as the hog: some both, as the oxe, sheep, &c. Ambrose hath a very strange story of a man slain at Antioch by night, by a souldier, in hope of spoile: this mans dog would not away from his masters dead corps, but lay howling by it till day-light, many came in the morning to see that sad sight, and the murtherer among the rest came, that he might be the lesse suspected. The dog no sooner saw this souldier, but he ran fiercely at him, and would never give over barking and baiting at him till he saw him apprehended and carried to prison, where he confessed the fact, and was for the same deservedly executed. Amb. in Hexaem.

Verse 24. And thou shalt know] Thine owne eyes shall see it, and thine experience seale to it: thou shalt be well assured of it: this is a sweete mercy: it is the sweet-meates of the feast of a good conscience, saith Latimer, to know, that all shall go well with us here, and that our names are written in the book of life; to be able to conclude from temporal blessings to eternal, as David doth, Psal. 23. 5, 6. to have not only sustentation, but suavities spiritual, as one speaketh.

That thy Tabernacle shall be in peace] i.e. thy house, houshold, and houshold-stuffe shall be in safety; and all shall be as well with thee as heart can wish. Or, thy Tabernacle shall be peace. Thou shalt bee free from domestical dissensions. It is a sign of a Christian-family, if the son of peace be there, and peace rest in it, Luke 10. 6. This turneth water to wine, and the contrary: where envying and strife is, there is confusion (or unquietnesse) and every evil work, Jam. 3. 16. such a tabernacle is more like to a kennel of hounds, then a family of Christians.

And thou shalt visit thy habitation] As a busie bishop within thine own dioceſse, thou shalt carefully enquire into the state of thy family, and take an account of all that are under thy roofe; that God be sincerely served there, and all things well husbanded, Prov. 27. 26, 27.

And shalt not sinne] viz. by too much indulgence to children and servants, Elies sin, who brought up his children to bring down his house: Or, thou shalt not be found guilty, &c. of thy families faults imputed unto thee: or, thou shalt not miss, &c. of thy desire and expectation, but all shall go as well within doores, as heart can wish.

Verse 25. Thou shalt know also that thy seed shall be great] Thou shalt live to see thy children (whereof thou art now bereft) not only restored, but increased. Children are the seed, parents are but the husk, as it were: to have these multiplied, is no small mercy, Psalm 128. 3. especially when the wife is as the vine, and the children like olive-plants, two of the best fruits; the one for sweetnesse, the other for fatnesse, Judg. 9. 13. when they prove to be as arrowes of a strong man, such as whose naturall knottinesse is reformed and smoothed by grace, such as for the workmanship of grace and holinesse in their hearts and lives, are become like the graving of a Kings palace, Psalm 144. 12. What can better preserve Jacob (Job) from confusion, or his face from waxing pale, than if he might see his children, the work of Gods hands, framed and fitted by the Word in regeneration, and the duties of new obedience? this would make religious parents to sanctifie Gods name, even to sanctifie the Holy One, and with singular encouragement from the God of Israel. Isa. 29. 22, 23.

And thine off-spring as the grasse of the earth] Thy Nephewes shall be not onely numerous, but innumerable, they shall also flourish as grasse in its prime.

Verse 26. Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age] In a good old age, or (as the Hebrew hath it, Gen. 25. 8.) with a good hoare head, in an ivyneia, when thou hast even a satiety of life, and art as willing to die as ever thou wast to dine, or to rise from table after a full meale. The Hebrewes made a feast when they were past 60 yeares of age: and some of them observe, that the numerall letters of Chelech (the word here used) make up threescore, but that's not a full old-age, rather it is, the followeth there. Besides, they are gathered to their fathers, who enjoyed peace. Redeemed they are from the power or hands of the sword, which may kill them, but cannot hurt them, take away their head, but not their crown.

Ἀποστῆναι δύνασαι, βλάπτει δὲ οὔ.

Back-biting is back-beating. Speed.

Verse 21. Thou shalt be hid from the scourge of the tongue] That is, from reproaches and slanders, which is a tongue-smiting, Jer. 18. 18. as smart as any hand-smiting, and drawes blood, Ezek. 22. 9. The divel is both a liar, and a murtherer, John 8. 44. Humphrey Duke of Glocester, was by the people of England thought to be doubly murthered (saith the Chronicler) viz. by detraction and deadly practise. Plato commendeth that law of the Lydians, that punished detracters like as they did murtherers, because their words are swords, and their breath as fire devoureth, Isai. 33. 10.

Dabbar is the Hebrew for a word, Debber for a Pest. Drus.

Now from such pests the Lord promiseth to hide his people, that either the Traducer shall not find them, or not fasten upon them: their names shall bee so oyled, that slanderous aspersions shall not stick to them. Some render the text thus, Hee shall bee hid, cum vagabitur lingua, when the tongue wandereth or walketh about. Their tongue walketh through the earth, Psal. 73. 9. it runs all the world over, and like a mad dog, snaps at every one. Hence the Hebrew word Ragal to defame or slander, Psal. 15. 3. properly noteth a footing it up and down, a going to and fro to carry tales and rumours, 2 Sam. 19. 27. Now from such a mischiefe, from the lash of such lewd tongues, God will hide his people under the hollow of his hand, because hee knowes that many a good heart is more affected with words then with blowes, Psal. 42. 3. Saint Paul reckoned, that it were better for him to die, then that any man should make his glorying void that is take away his good name, and so disable him from doing good by his Ministery, 1 Cor. 9. 15.

Neither shalt thou be afraid of destruction when it cometh.] Much lesse at the rumour of it, Matth. 24. 6. Luke 24. 9. Thou shalt walk about the world as a conqueror, being above fear, then when others are below hope. Noah-like thou shalt be, ——cuncta tranquilla invenit, and not as Magor-missabib, a terrour to thy self and all about thee, Jer. 20. 3.

At destruction and famine thou shalt laugh] viz. by the force of thy faith, which (like perfect love) casteth out tormentfull feare; as grounding upon Gods infallible promise, and knowing that all the pathes of the Lord are mercy and truth unto such as keepe his covenant and his testimonies, Psalm 25. 10. All the passages of his providence are to such not only mercy, but truth; they come to them in a way of a promise, as bound to them by covenant: and hence their holy courage lifteth them up so farre above dangers and feares, that they even laugh at them, as Leviathan laugheth at the shaking of the speare, Job 41. 29. They famish famine, and destroy destruction it self, like as Christ Jesus the Captaine of their salvation, swallowed up death in victory; and as many of the Martyrs baffled it, deriding their tormentors.

Neither shalt thou be afraid of the beasts of the earth.] i.e. wilde beasts, that devour men and cattel, as Lions, Beares, Bores, Wolves, &c. whereunto we may adde those Cannibals, man-eating persecutors, who eat up Gods people as they eat bread, Psalm 14. 4. Such Lycanthropi, or beasts in the shape of men, Paul fought with at Ephesus, and God had delivered him out of the mouth of that Lion Nero, 2 Tim. 4. 17. Who yet afterwards mastered him. But the viper at Malta did him no hurt: no more did the Lions Daniel: neither would they meddle with some of the primitive Martyrs, cast before them to be devoured.

Verse 23. For thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field] Thou shalt not dash thy foot against them (the Latines call a stone lapidem a laedendo pede, from hurting the foot that lighteth against them) Psal. 91. 12. They were wont of old to go barefoot (as Vatablus here noteth.) And our Chronicler telleth us of King Henry the second, that for a penance, going to Canterbury to the shrine of Thomas Becket, his bare feet with the hard stones were forced to yeild bloody tokens of his devotion on the way, or else. The stones of the field shall not hinder thy harvest, as Matth. 13. 8. Or being piled up for a mound or wall, they shall not fall upon thee, and braine thee, as the stones of the wall of Aphek did the blasphemous Syrians: as the towne-house did the insulting Philistines, Judg. 16. 30. as the house did Jobs children &c. or the stones out of the wall shall not cry out against thee, as Hab. 2. 11. but all creatures shall be thy confederates: not only not hurting, but helping thee, all that may be. For as they are all armed againſt the wicked as rebels and traitors to the divine Majeſty: ſo God hath promiſed to make a covenant for his Saints with the beaſts of the field, and with the foules of heaven &c. Hoſ. 2. 18. See the Note there.

1 King. 20. 30.

that

Rebellis facta eſt; quia homo nomini, creatura homini. Aug.

And the beaſts of the field ſhall be at peace with thee] The tame beaſts ſhall not only not miſchieve thee (as ſome they have done: Euripides the Poet was torn in pieces with dogs; horſes have been the death of many &c.) but ſhall be ſerviceable and profitable unto thee; ſome alive, not dead, as the dog, horſe: ſome dead, not alive, as the hog: ſome both, as the oxe, ſheep, &c. Ambroſe hath a very ſtrange ſtory of a man ſlain at Antioch by night, by a ſouldier, in hope of ſpoile: this mans dog would not away from his maſters dead corps, but lay howling by it till day-light: many came in the morning to ſee that ſad ſight, and the murtherer among the reſt came, that he might be the leſſe ſuſpected. The dog no ſooner ſaw this ſouldier, but he ran fiercely at him, and would never give over barking and baiting at him till he ſaw him apprehended and carried to priſon, where he confeſſed the fact, and was for the ſame deſervedly executed.

Amb. in Hexaem.

Verſe 24. And thou ſhalt know] Thine owne eyes ſhall ſee it, and thine experience ſeale to it: thou ſhalt be well aſſured of it: this is a ſweete mercy: it is the ſweet-meates of the feaſt of a good conſcience, ſaith Latimer, to know, that all ſhall go well with us here, and that our names are written in the book of life; to be able to conclude from temporal bleſſings to eternal, as David doth, Pſal. 23. 5, 6. to have not only ſuſtentation, but ſuavities ſpiritual, as one ſpeaketh.

That thy Tabernacle ſhall be in peace] i.e. thy houſe, houſhold, and houſhold-ſtuffe ſhall be in ſafety, and all ſhall be as well with thee as heart can wiſh. Or, thy Tabernacle ſhall be peace. Thou ſhalt bee free from domeſtical diſſenſions. It is a ſign of a Chriſtian-family, if the ſon of peace be there, and peace reſt in it, Luke 10. 6. This turneth water to wine, and the contrary: where envying and ſtrife is, there is confuſion (or unquietneſſe) and every evil work, Jam. 3. 16. ſuch a tabernacle is more like to a kennel of hounds, then a family of Chriſtians.

And thou ſhalt viſit thy habitation] As a buſie biſhop within thine own dioceſſe, thou ſhalt carefully enquire into the ſtate of thy family, and take an account of all that are under thy roofe; that God be ſincerely ſerved there, and all things well husbanded, Prov. 27. 26, 27.

And ſhalt not ſinne] viz. by too much indulgence to children and ſervants, Elies ſin, who brought up his children to bring down his houſe: Or, thou ſhalt not be found guilty, &c. of thy families faults imputed unto thee: or, thou ſhalt not miſs &c. of thy deſire and expectation; but all ſhall go as well within doores, as heart can wiſh.

Verſe 25. Thou ſhalt know alſo that thy ſeed ſhall be great] Thou ſhalt live to ſee thy children (whereof thou art now bereft) not only reſtored, but increaſed. Children are the ſeed, parents are but the huſk, as it were: to have theſe multiplied, is no ſmall mercy, Pſalm 128. 3. eſpecially when the wife is as the vine, and the children like olive-plants, two of the beſt fruits; the one for ſweetneſſe, the other for fatneſſe, Judg. 9. 13. when they prove to be as arrowes of a ſtrong man, ſuch as whoſe naturall knottineſſe is reformed and ſmoothed by grace, ſuch as for the workmanſhip of grace and holineſſe in their hearts and lives, are become like the graving of a Kings palace, Pſalm 144. 12. What can better preſerve Jacob (Job) from confuſion, or his face from waxing pale, than if he might ſee his children, the work of Gods hands, framed and fitted by the Word in regeneration, and the duties of new obedience? this would make religious parents to ſanctifie Gods name, even to ſanctifie the Holy One, and with ſingular encouragement from the God of Iſrael. Iſa. 29. 22. 23.

And thine off-ſpring as the graſſe of the earth] Thy Nephewes ſhall be not onely numerous, but innumerable, they ſhall alſo flouriſh, as graſſe in its prime.

Verſe 26. Thou ſhalt come to thy grave in a full age] In a good old age, or (as the Hebrew hath it, Gen. 25. 8.) with a good hoare head, in an ivyneld, when thou haſt even a ſatiety of life, and art as willing to die as ever thou waſt to dine, or to riſe from table after a full meale. The Hebrewes made a feaſt when they were paſt 60 yeares of age: and ſome of them obſerve, that the numerall letters of Chaiach (the word here uſed) make up threeſcore, but that's not a full old-age, rather it is, the beginning of it. Thou shalt dye in lusty old age, so Broughton rendreth it, old, and yet healthy and comfortable, as was Moses, Deut. 34. 7. And Mr. Doe that Moses of our times. Of Mr. Samuel Crook likewise it is recorded, that when he saw no more ability for labours, he desired to die in a satiety and fulnesse of life: not as a meat loathed (as many times naturall men do) but as a dish though well liked, that he had fed his full of; few men having ever run so long a race without cessation or assistance, so constantly, so unweariably, so unblameably. Lo such an hoary head, was a crown of glory, as being found in the way of righteousnesse, Prov. 16 31. But so are not all that yet are long-lived: A sinner may do evill an hundred times, and yet have his dayes prolonged, Eccles. 8. 12. Manasseh had the longest reigne of any King of Judah, Pope Iohn 22 held the mortality of the soule, and was otherwise erroneous and vitious, yet he lived longest of any Pope, and died richest, Anno Dom. 1335. howbeit he died tempore non suo, too soone for himself, Eccles. 7. 17. He went not to his grave in a good old age, ripe and ready.

In his life by W. G.

As a shock of corn cometh in, in his season] As corn when ripe is reaped, shockt up, and carried into the barn for the masters use. Dei frumentum ego sum; I am Gods bread-corn, said that ancient Martyr.

Verse 27. Lo this we have searched it, so it is] Wee are sure that all this is true, and may be trusted to, for we have tryed it: wee have it not by tradition, neither take we it up upon trust from others: but we believe and know, as Peter spake Joh. 6 69 we believe, and therefore speak it, as Paul (after David) 2 Cor. 4. 13. Psal. 116. 10. Thou maiest write upon this whole chapter, as those Ancients did upon their Oracles Deus, Deus, God, God, or as John the Divine did upon his Revelation, These sayings are faithful and true, Rev. 22. 6. Vera tunquam ex tripode, as true as Gospel, as we say. Those that take upon them to teach others, should goe upon sure ground, and be masters of what they teach; how else will they teach with authority? those also that come to heare, must strive to find out that which St. Luke calleth the certainty of things, Luke 1. 4. and not be led by conjectural suppositions, or the Tenents of their teachers, but be fully perswaded: verse 1.

Heare it] With utmost attention of body, intention of mind, retention of memory, and practice, else all is lost.

And know thou it for thy good] Make thy best use of this our diligence and experience so freely and friendly communicated unto thee. Let not all this that hath beene spoken be spilt upon thee, but prove every whit as profitable to thee, as I conceive it seasonable for thee. Some knowing men are not a button the better for all they know. The divels are full of objective knowledge, but they get no good by it: no more do graceless men, that draw not their knowledge into practice, but detaine the truth in unrighteousnesse, it swimmeth in their heads, but sinketh not into their hearts, it maketh them giddy, as wine fuming all up into the head, but never coming at the heart to cheare it. Such a man may cast out divels, and yet be cast to the divel; he may go to hell with all his unprofitable knowledge; like as a Bull with a coronet and garland goes to the slaughter. Unlesse a man heare and know for himself, he shall find no more comfort of it, then a man doth of the Sun when it shineth not in his own Horizon; or then a traveller doth of the fatnesse of a farre Country, which he only passeth through, and taketh a light view of. If therefore thou bee wise, be wise for thy self, Prov. 9. 12. Let thy knowledge be not only apprehensive, but affective, illightning, but transforming (2 Cor. 3. ult.) discursive, but experimental, and practical. For hereby we know that we know him, if we keepe his commandments, 1 John 2. 3.

CHAP. VI.

Verse 1. But Job answered and said]

Eliphaz thought he had silenced him, and set him down with so much reason, that he should have had nothing to reply; yet Job desirous to disaspersi himself, and to cleare up his reputation, answered and said. For indeed Negligere quid de se quisque quisque sentiat, non solum arrogantis est, sed & dissoluti, saith one; that is, altogether to neglect what others think or speak of a mans self, and not to make apology, is the part not only of a proud, but of a dissolute person: silence sometimes argueth guiltinesse, or at least it strengtheneth suspicion.

Verse 2. Oh that my grief were thoroughly weighed] Heb. were weighed by weighing. The word rendred griefe signifieth also Anger, and is the same with that wherewith Eliphaz began his speech, chap. 5. 2. where he saith, Wrath killeth the foolish man, pointing at Job, as an angry man exalting folly. Here therefore Job beginneth his refutation: wishing, that that anger or griefe of his, so hardly censured, were duely weighed in an even ballance: for then it would appeare that there was some reason for his passion, that he had enough upon him to cry for, and that he had not complained without a cause. We read of a certaine Philosopher, who hearing of his sons death, brake out into a loud lamentation: for which being reproved, Permitte, inquit, ut homo sim, suffer me, I pray you, (said he) to shew my self to be a man, that is, sensible of my sufferings.

And my calamity laid in the balances together] That is, that my calamity were accurately set against my grief, my laments and my torments equally poised, it would then appear that I have not yet grieved or complained up to the height or weight of those calamities which are upon me. Even to day is my complaint bitter, (saith he elsewhere in answer to Eliphaz too, interpreting his complaints to be rebellion against God) My stroke is heavier then my groaning, chap. 23. 2.

Verse 3. For now it would be heavier then the sand of the sea] How light soever thou, O Eliphaz, esteemest it, as being in a prosperous condition. It is easie to swim in a warm bath: and every bird can sing in a sunshine-day. But grief lieth like a load of lead upon the soule, heavy and cold; afflicting it, as an unsupportable burden doth the body. It so oppressed the poor Israelites in Egypt, that they had no mind to hearken to Moses, Exod. 6. 9. Solomon cryes out, A wounded spirit who can beare? Prov. 18. 14. My soule is very heavy, and exceeding sorrowful, even unto death, saith our blessed Saviour, Matth. 26. 37, 38. then when the Father made all our sins to meet upon him, and he bare our griefs, and carried our sorrows, Isa. 53. 4, 12. Sure it is, that had he not been God as well as man, he had been utterly crushed by that unconceivable weight of sin and wrath that he then groaned under. Oh what will all Christ lesse persons do in hell, where God shall lay upon them and not spare! they would faine flie out of his hand, Job 27. 22. but that cannot be.

Therefore my words are swallowed up] Vix loqui possum, vox faucibus haeret: I want words, which yet, if I had them at will, would be far too weak to utter the grief of my mind. Broughton rendreth it, Therefore my words fall short, they are semesa, saith Junius, half-eaten before spoken: I am (as it were) gagg'd with grief: or, my words are even smothered up with sighs and sobs. Thus Job rhetoricates, and yet thinkes himself greatly mordebound.

Verse 4. For the arrowes of the Almighty are within me] What marvel then though his flesh had no rest, but he was troubled on every side, fightings without were fearfull, within were fearfull, 2 Cor. 7. 5. The arrowes not of a mighty man, as Psal. 127. 4. but of an Almighty God. Troubles without, and terrours within? David felt these arrowes, and complaineth of them heavily, Psal. 38. 1, 2. He shall shoot at them with an arrow, suddenly shall they be wounded, saith he of those his enemies who had bent their bow, and shot their arrowes at him, even bitter words, Psal. 64. 3, 7. God will make his arrowes drunk with the blood of such persons, Deut. 32. 42. But the arrowes Job here complaines of, were poisoned or invenomed arrowes.

The poison whereof drinketh up my spirits] Dryeth them up, and corrupts the blood in which the spirits are, sprinkling in my veines a mortall poison, working greatest dolour, and distemper. The Scythians and other nations used to dip their darts in the blood and gall of Asps and Vipers, the venemous heat of which, like a fire in their flesh, killed the wounded with torments, the likest hell of any other: and hereunto Job alludeth.

The terrours of God do set themselves in array against me] i. e. the terrible strokes of God who seemeth to fight against me with his own hand, to rush upon me as the Angel once did upon Balaam with a drawn sword in his hand, threatning therewith to cut off my head, as David did Goliah's, yea to send me packing to hell in the very suburbs

ſuburbs whereof, methinks, I feel to be already, and ſhall not I be ſuffered to complain? a galled ſhoulder will ſhrink under a load, though it be but light, and a little water is heavy in a leaden veſſel. But the word here uſed for terrors, noteth the moſt terrible terrors, helliſh terrors, and worſe, for they are the terrors of God, ſurpaſſing great, 2 Cor. 5. 11. Which made Jeremy pray ſo hard, Be not thou a terrour to me, O Lord, and then I care not greatly what befalleth me. Whiles I ſuffer thy terrors, I am diſtracted, ſaith Heman, Pſalm 88. 15. Adde hereunto, that theſe terrours of God had ſet themſelves in array, they were in a military manner marſhalled and imbattailed againſt him, as Jer. 50. 9. God afflicted Job methodically and reſolvedly, he led up his army (as a Reverend man phraſeth it) exactly form'd to a pitcht battel againſt him, and this was truly terrible; for who, ſaith Moſes, knoweth the power of his wrath? ſith the apprehenſion and approach of it was ſo terrible to an upright-hearted Job, to an heroicall Luther, upon whom Gods terrors were ſo heavy for a time, ut nec calor, nec ſanguis, nec ſenſus, nec vox ſupereſſet; that neither heat, nor blood, nor ſenſe, nor voice remained, but his body ſeemed dead, as Juſtus Jonas an eye-witneſſe reporteth: agreeable whereunto is that memorable ſpeech of Luther, Nihil eſt tentatio vel univerſi mundi, & totius inferni in unum conflata &c. The temptation and terrour of all the world; nay, of all hell put together is nothing to that, wherein God ſetteth himſelf in battle-array againſt a poore ſoule: In which caſe, that is excellent counſel that one giveth in theſe words, When thy ſins and Gods wrath meeting in thy conſcience make thee deadly ſick, as Iſai. 33. then powre forth thy ſoul in confeſſion: and as it will eaſe thee (as vomiting uſeth to do) ſo alſo it will move God to pity, and to give thee cordials and comforts to reſtore thee.

In epiſt. ad Melanc.

Verſe 5. Doth the wilde aſs bray when he hath graſſe?] q. d. Sure they doe not. As if theſe creatures, wilde or tame, want neceſſary food, you give them leave to fill the aire with their out-cryes; yea, you ſupply their wants; but for me ye will do neither, ſuch is your tenderneſſe and love toward me. Nay, ye condemne me for that which is naturally common to all creatures. Ye muſt needs think I am not without aylement that make ſuch great lamentations, unleſſe ye conceit that I am fallen below the ſtirrup of reaſon, nay, of ſenſe. It is eaſie for you who want neither graſſe nor fodder, or mixt meat, (as the word ſignifieth) who lie at rack and manger, as it were, and have all that heart can wiſh, or need require; it is eaſie, I ſay, for you to reſt contented, and to forbeare complaints. But why am I ſo ſeverely cenſured for impatient, who am ſtript of all, and have nothing left me, præter cœlum & cœnum, as he ſaid, but only aire to breath in, and a dung-hill to ſit on; not to ſpeak of my inward troubles &c.

Verſe 6. Can that which is unſavory be eaten without ſalt?] Or can that which is unſavory for want of ſalt be eaten? Hunger will downe with unſavory or unpleaſant food, though ſalt or ſawce be wanting: but when meat is putrified for want of ſalt, and full of maggots, it will hardly be eaten, unleſſe it be in extreme famine: it is as if he ſhould ſay, a man doth with no good will feed upon unſavory or loathſome meats; how then can I uſe ſuch moderation as you deſire I ſhould, my evils being extreme, ſweetned with no kind of comfort, nor ſeaſoned with any thing that is any way toothſome or wholeſome? that I ſpeake not of your taſteleſſe and inſulſe ſpeeches, which are no ſmall vexation to me.

Verſe 7. The things that my ſoul refuſed to touch &c.] I ſuffer ſuch torments even in my very ſoule, as the very thought of them would heretofore have affrighted me. Thus Mr. Diodate. Others take ſoule here for the appetite, and ſo make this the ſenſe: Thoſe things which I exceedingly loathed, and would once have thought ſcorn to have touched, are now my ſorrowful meat: I am forced with an heavy heart to feed upon them for want of better: and they go down the worſe, becauſe you vex me with your hard words (who have little need of ſuch choke-peares) and will not allow me the liberty of a needfull lamentation, which yet I muſt needsly take (leſt heart ſhould breake) and ſay as before chap. 3. though with ſome more reſpect to God, the object of my preſent prayer.

Verſe 8. O that I might have my requeſt!] How heartily begs Job for death, as a medicine of all his maladies and miſeries, as that which would bring him mehrum adeptionem, frurum adeptionem, freedome from all evil, fruition of all good? By the force of his faith, he lookes upon death as the best physician that would cure him of all infirmities inward and outward, and of all at once, and for ever. Job might likely be of the same mind that Chaucer was, who took for his English motto Farewell Physick; and for his Latine one, Mors ærumnarum requies, death will be a sweet rest from all my labours: the same to a believer death is, that mount Ararat was to Noah, where his ark rested after long tossing: or as Michol was to David, a meanes to shift him out of the way when Saul sent to slay him: or as the fall of the house was to Samson, an end of all his sorrowes and sufferings: hence it is that he rejoyceth under hope, and with stretcht out neck, looks and longs for deaths coming, as deerely as ever Sisera's mother did out of a window for the coming of her son laden with spoiles from the battel. As when death is come indeed, he welcometh it, as Jael did the same Sisera (but much more heartily) with Turn in my Lord, turn in to me, Judg. 4. 18. and further he speaketh it, as Jacob did his brother Esau, at their interview, Surely I have seen thy face, as the face of God who hath made thee to meet me with kisses in stead of frowns, and hath sent thee to guard me safe home to my fathers house.

the

And that God would grant me the thing that I long for.] Or, have long looked for. Heb. my hope or my expectation. as that which will put a period to my miseries, and possesse me of heavens happinesse, as that which will be a postern to let out temporall life, but a street-door to let in eternal.

Verse 9. That it would please God to destroy me.] That is, to dispatch me out of this world, and send me to a better. A dissolution would be far more acceptable to Job, then that restitution which Eliphaz fained to promise him, chap. 5. 24. It's as if Job should say; Take you the world amongst you, sith you like it so well, I have more then enough of it: I am neither fond of life, nor afraid of death, but the cleane contrary: I had rather die then dine, and crave no greater favour then to have more weight laid upon me that I may die out of hand. Feri Domine jam: nam à peccatis absolvo me tuus, as Luther once said, strike Lord, strike deepe, for thou hast pardoned my sins, and wilt save my soule.

That he would let loose his hand.] That now seemeth tied, or bound behind him, Manus ligata videtur quando parcit, saith Vatablus. God had chained up Satan, and strictly charged him not to take away Jobs life: but this is it that Job would fain have done. Mortality he would account no small mercy: he desired nothing more then to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, he might do it because he knew that his Redeemer liveth, &c. So might Simeon, because he had seen Gods salvation: and so might Paul who had fought a good fight, and kept the faith. But how could Plato say in the eighth of his lawes, The communion of the soule with the body is not better then the dissolution, as I would say, if I were to speak in earnest? His master Socrates, when to die, was nothing so confident: for he shut up his last speech with these words, as both Plato himself, and Cicero tells us, Tempus est jam hinc abire: It is now high time for us to go hence; for me to die, and for you to live longer: and whether of these two is the better, the gods immortall know, hominem quidem arbitror scire neminem, it is above the knowledge, I believe, of any man living. Thus he: but Job was better perswaded, otherwise he would have been better advised then thus earnestly to have desired death.

Κοινωνία ψυχῆ καὶ σώματος διαλυσιν ἐν τῷ παρόντι, ὡς ἐγὼ φαίην ἂν σπουδῇ λέγων. Plato.

And cut me off.] Avidè me absumat quasi ex morte mea ingens lucrum reportaturus. Let him greedily cut me off (so the word signifieth) even as if he were to have some great gain, or get some rich booty by my blood. Pineda.

Verse 10. Then should I yet have comfort, yea, I would harden my self in sorrow &c.] I would take hard on, and bear what befalleth me as well as I could, by head and shoulders, had I but hopes of an end by death, as having this for my comfort,

I have not concealed the words of the Holy One.] I have boldly professed the true Religion, Ps. 40. 10. & 116. 10. & 119. 43. not feared to preach the truth sincerely to others for Gods glory, and their good, however you may judge of me. I never rejected the words of God, but have highly honoured it, so that my desire of death is not desperate, as you may conceive, but an effect of good assurance that by death heaven advanceth forward that happy term, when all my miseries shall end at once: and hence it is, that I am so greedy after the grave.

Verse

Verse 11. What is my strength, that I should hope?] q. d. Thou hast told me (O Eliphaz) that if I frame to a patient and peaceable behaviour under Gods chastisement, I shall go to my grave in a good old age, &c. but, alasse, it is now past time of day with me for that matter: my breath is corrupt, my dayes are extinct, the graves are ready for me, chap. 17. 1.] Were I as young and lusty as ever I have been, some such things as ye have promised me might be hoped for; but alasse, the map of age is figured on my forehead, the calenders of death appeare in the furrowes of my face: besides my many sores and sicknesses, which if they continue but a while, will certainly make an end of mee.

And what is mine end] viz. The latter part of my life: what is that else, but trouble and sorrow? see this elegantly set forth by Solomon, Eccles. 12. 2, 3, 4, &c.

De re rust. lib. 1. cap. 1. That I should prolong my life] That I should desire my life to be prolonged or eeked out to that? Rather let it be my care with Varro, ut suricinas calligam antequàm proficiscar è vita, to be ready for death, which seemeth so ready for mee.

Verse 12. Is my strength the strength of stones? Or, Is my flesh of brasse?] Is it made of marble, or of the hardest metal? as it is said of one in Homer, that hee was χαλκοβοὴς Ἄρης, of brazen bowles, and of Julius Scaliger, that he had a golden soule in an iron body: he was a very Iron-sides, but so was not Job: he had neither a body of brasse, nor sinewes of iron, to stand out against so many stormes, and beare so many batteries; he felt what he endured, and could not long endure what he felt. As for the damned in hell, they are by the power of God upheld for ever, that they may suffer his fierce wrath for ever; which else they could never do. And as for those desperate Assasines; Balthasar Gerardus the Burgundian, who slew the Prince of Orange Anno Dom. 1584. and Ravillac (Ferale illud prodigium, as one calleth him, that hideous hell-hound) who slew Henry the fourth of France in the midst of his preparations, and endured thereupon most exquisite torments; this they did out of stupidity of sense, not solidity of faith, and from a wretchlesse desperation, not a confident resolution.

Verse 13. Is not my help in me?] Have I not something within wherewith to sustaine me amidst all my sorrowes, viz. the testimony of my conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, I have had my conversation in the world, 2 Cor. 1. 12. Lo, this is my rejoycing, this is my cordial &c. Innuit innocentiam suam, ac vitæ integritatem, saith Drusius: he meaneth the innocency and integrity of his heart, and this sums the help Job knew he had in store, this was the wisedome or right reason he speaketh of in the following words, and is wisedome (or vertue) driven quite from me? no, no, that holdeth out and abideth when all things else in the world passe away and vanish, as the word Tushijah importeth. Job had a subsistence still: for his life consisted not in the abundance which he had possessed, but was now bereft of. The world calleth wealth substance, but God giveth that name to Wisdome only. The world he setteth forth by a word that betokeneth change, for its mutability, Prov. 3. 8. and the things thereof he calleth Nauseatia, Prov. 23. 5. Wilt thou set thine eyes, saith he, upon that which is not? and which hath no price but what opinion setteth upon it? Grace being a particle of the divine nature, is unloosable, unperishable. —— Virtus post funera venit.

Verse 14. To him that is afflicted] Heb. melted, viz. in the furnace of affliction, which melteth mens hearts and maketh them malleable, as fire doth the hardest metals, Psal. 22. 15. Josh. 7. 5.

[Pity should be shewed from his friend] By a sweet tender melting frame of spirit, such as was that of the Church, Psal. 102. 13. and that of Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 29. Who is weak, and I am not weak, &c. by way of sympathy? who is offended, and I burne not? when others are hurt, I feele twinges: as the tongue complaineth for the hurt of the toe, and the heart condoleth with the heele, and there is a fellow-feeling amongst all the members: so there is likewise in the mysticall body.

Ἀρίλον τὸ δυσυχὲς. Et cum fortuna statque cadúque fides. From his friend] who is made for the day of adversity, Prov. 17. 17. and should shew his love at all times, and especially in evil times: but poor Job bewaileth the want of such faithfull friends. David also complaineth to God (his onely fast friend) of those that would be his causes, but not the companions of his calamity, that would fawn upon him in his flourish, but forsake him in his misery, My lovers and friends

stand

ſtand aloof &c. they looked on him, and ſo paſſed by him as the Prieſt and the Levite did the wounded paſſenger, Luke 10. 32. But God takes it ill that any ſhould once look upon his afflicted, unleſſe it be to pity and relieve them, Obad. 12. 13. and hath threatned an evil, an only evil, without the leaſt mixture of mercy, to ſuch as ſhew no mercy to thoſe in miſery, Jam. 2. 13.

But he hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty] Which whereſoever it is in the power of it, frameth a man to all the duties both of piety and charity. Obadiah feared God greatly, and it well appeared by his pity to the perſecuted Prophets. Cornelius feared God, and (as a fruit of it) gave much almes, Acts 10. 2. Not ſo Nabal, that ſapleſſe fellow, who ſe heart was hardened from Gods holy fear: nor Judas the traitor, who had no bowels of compaſſion toward his innocent maſter; and therefore he burſt in the midſt with an huge crack, and all his bowels guſht out, by a ſingular judgment, Acts 1. 18. There are many other readings of this text, as that of the Tigurine tranſlation, It were fit for friends to ſhew kindneſſe to their friend that is in miſery: but the feare of the Almighty hath forſaken me, as you pleaſe to ſay. See what Eliphaz had ſaid to this purpoſe, chap. 4. 6. with the Note. Others read it thus, to him that is afflicted ſhould reproach be given, that he hath forſaken the feare of the Almighty? q.d. Muſt a man therefore be reviled as irreligious, becauſe he is calamitous? The vulgar tranſlation runnes thus, He that taketh away pity from his friend, hath forſaken the fear of the Almighty &c. ἐλλιπορμήσος Verſe 15. My brethren have dealt deceitfully as a brooke] Even you, whom I eſteemed as my brethren (for to them he applyeth this ſpeech, verſe 21.) prove hollow and helpleſſe to me: like the river Araris, that moveth ſo ſlowly, that it can hardly be diſcerned, ſaith Cæſar, whether it flow forward or backward: or rather, to a certaine fiſh in that river Araris, called Scolopidus: which at the waxing of the Moon, is as white as the driven ſnow; and at the wayning thereof is as black as a burnt coal. Caſ. de bell. Gal. l. 1.

Job here elegantly compareth them not to a river which is fed by a ſpring, and hath a perennity of flowing; but to a brook ariſing from rain or melted ſnow, the property whereof is, in a moiſture (when there is leaſt need of them) to ſwell; in a drought (when they ſhould do good) to fail. It is reported of the river Novanus in Lombardy, that at every mid-ſummer-ſolſtice it ſwelleth and runneth over the bankes, but in mid-winter is quite dry. Such were Jobs deceitfull brethren; good ſummer-birds &c. The ſame Author telleth us, that in that part of Spaine called Carrinenſis, there is a river that ſhewes all the fiſh in it to be like gold: but take them into thine hand, and they ſoon appeare in their natural kinde and colour. Job found that all is not gold that gliſtereth. Plin. lib. 2. cap. 103. Idem ibid.

And as the ſtream of brooks they paſſe away] i.e. as an impetuous land-flood, they faile me; and now, that I have moſt need of their refreſhments, they yeild me none; but the contrary rather: like as land-floods by their ſudden and violent overflow doe much hurt many times to corn and cattle. I can goe to theſe ſtreames of brookes, ſaith Job, and ſhew my friends the face of their hearts in thoſe waters.

Verſe 16. Which are blackiſh by reaſon of the ice] Or froſt, a black-froſt we call it, which deceiveth thoſe that tread upon it. Or if hard enough to beare up paſſengers it promiſe to be a ſtore-houſe of preſerving ſnow and water againſt the ſcortching time of Summer, yet there's no truſting to it: for theſe waters as they are in winter lock'd up with froſts, ſo they will be in Summer exhaled, and dried up by the Sun.

Verſe 17. What time they wax warm, they vaniſh: when it is hot &c.] Lo ſuch is the fruit of creature-confidence, of making fleſh our arme, of truſting in men or meanes; whereas Deo confidi nunquam confuſi, they that truſt in the Lord ſhall never be diſappointed. This thou canſt never do, unleſſe (unbottomed of thy ſelf and the creature) thou ſo lean upon the Lord, as that if he fail thee thou ſinkeſt, and not otherwiſe.

Verſe 18. The paths of their way are turned aſide.] i.e. They being (as it were) cut into divers ſmall rivers running here and there, by little and little, and being reſolved into vapours, at length quite vaniſh away. Beza.

They go to nothing and periſh] Metaphora inſignis & Hieroglyphicum, ſaith an Interpreter; this is an excellent metaphor, and a lively picture of the vanity of ſuch as make a great ſhew of piety and charity, which yet floweth not from the ſpring of true faith, and therefore cannot but after a while, go to nothing and periſh. A failing brook, ſaith another, is a cleare emblem of a falſe heart, both to God and man. Lavater thus explaineth the compariſon: 1. As brookes run with waters then when there is leaſt need of them: ſo falſe friends are moſt officious when their courteſie might beſt be ſpared. 2. As the ice of ſuch brooks is ſo condenſed and hardened, that it beareth men, horſes, and other things of great weight, ſo counterfeit friends promiſe and pretend to be ready to doe their utmoſt to ſuffer any thing for our good and comfort. 3. But as thoſe brookes are dried up in ſummer, and frozen up in winter, ſo that we can ſet no ſight on them: in like ſort theſe are not to be found when we are in diſtreſſe and affliction. 4. As brooks in winter are covered with ſnow and ice: ſo theſe would ſeem to be whiter then ſnow when their affections towards us are colder then ice. 5. Laſtly, as the ice that was hard and firm, upon a thaw breaketh and melteth: ſo falſe friends leave us many times upon very ſmall or no diſlikes, as being conſtant only in their unconſtancy.

Verſe 19. The troopes of Tema looked, the companies of Sheba waited for them.] The troops, that is, the travellers, the Caravan or company of merchants from thoſe parts, paſſing through dangerous and dry deſerts, expected reliefe from thoſe brooks which they had marked out for themſelves againſt ſummer: But with what ſucceſſe?

Verſe 20. They were confounded, becauſe they had hoped &c.] Heb. They bluſhed, or they were aba ſhed, becauſe diſappointed and defeated of their hope and expectation. See Jer. 14. 3, 4. Joel 1. 10, 11. Gods people have a promiſe, that hoping in him they ſhall never be aſhamed, Joel 2. 26. Rom 9. 23 Their hope is unfallible Rom. 5. 5. becauſe founded upon faith unfained, 1 Tim. 1. 5. Hence they are commanded to rejoyce in hope, Rom. 12. 12. and to conceive gaudium in re, gaudium in ſpe, gaudium de poſſeſſione, gaudium de promiſſione &c. joy for what they have in hand, and in preſent poſſeſſion, joy alſo for what they have in hope, and in reverſion. Wicked mens hopes may hop headleſſe (as the proverb is, and as theſe troopes of Tema experimented) they come to the worlds felicities, as they do to a lottery with heads full of hopes, but return with hearts full of blanks; not ſo the Saints: God will be better to them then their hopes: and when at worſt, they can confidently ſay, it is well for the preſent, and it will be better hereafter.

Verſe 21. For now ye are nothing] i. e. To me nothing worth: I have no more joy of you then if you were not at all: ye are not unlike him who ſaid to his friend, I am all yours, except body and goods: ye are not ſo much as friends at a ſneeze, who will come out with a God bleſſe you: or as thoſe great benefactors in St. James, chap. 2. 15, 16. that were free of their mouth-mercy: ye are meere mutes and ciphers, nullities, as to me juſt nothing, that is, ye are no ſuch thing as I expected. And here Job brings the fore-going ſimilitude home to his friends by cloſe application. And according to the Hebrew margin called Keri, it may be rendred, Fuiſtis ei ſimiles ſc. Torrenti; ye are like to it, that is, to the brook forementioned: ye fail me as much as it did the thirſty paſſengers. Druſ.

For ye ſee my caſting down, and are afraid] There is an elegancy in the Original that cannot be engliſhed; your eyes ſee what you had before heard of only by the hearing of the eare, that I am at a great under, dejected and impoveriſhed: you are therefore afraid of me, leſt I ſhould aſk you ſomething for the ſupply of my wants, or elſe you keep at a diſtance, as more afraid of catching mine evill, then deſirous of curing it, ye viſit me, but are not moved with any compaſſion toward me. So the Septuagint. Horrore perculſi reſiluiſtis à me veluti ſi quiſpiam viperam calcaſſet. Lav.

Verſe 22. Did I ſay, bring unto me? or give &c.] Did I ever charge you for my reparation or redemption? This interrogation is more emphaticall then a ſimple negation, q. d. I never did it, and therefore unleſſe you had been at more charge with me, you ſhould have beſtowed better words upon me: thoſe would have coſt you nothing certainly.

Verſe 23. Or deliver me from the enemies hand &c. Reſcue me, ranſome me from thoſe that have robbed and wronged me: fetch back my loſt goods by price or force. The word rendred mighty, ſignifieth alſo formidable, terrible, breach-makers. The word is opened by St. Paul, Phil. 1. 28. Where he uſeth a metaphor from horſes, ſnorting and ſtarting when frighted. Πτυόμενοι.

Verſe 24. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue.] If I be in an errour, I am willing to be rectified. Hitherto you have miſtook my caſe, and ſo your ſpeech hath been to small purpose. But if you will come home to my case indeed, and weigh things in an even ballance, I shall gladly submit to your more mature judgement and direction. Teach me, and you shall find that I am not indocible, that I am not as horse and mule that have no understanding, Psalm 32. 9. nor will learn any muchlesse then the creature called Rhinoceros, untameable and untractable. It shall appear to you that I am not utterly uncounsel-able, as those of whom Bucer complaineth, quæ sit veritas nec sciunt, nec discere curant, that neither know what truth and right is, nor will endure to be taught it. Job was not to be told that it was easier to deale with twenty mens reasons, then with one mans will: he promiseth therefore not to stand out against his friends, because hee will stand out. It is not my will, saith he, that opposeth what you have spoken, but my understanding. I am a slave to right reason: and if convinced thereby, I shall soon lay down the bucklers. Teach me, and I will hold my tongue, and not strive for the last word to lengthen out the contention: I am willing to reason, but not to wrangle. See Prov. 30. 32. Epist. ad Euagr. 16.

Cause me to understand wherein I have erred.] An humble man will never be an heretick: erre he may (that's common to mankind, insita mortalibus infirmitas) but convince him by solid reasons, and good arguments, and he will not long stand out, a little child shall lead him, Isa. 11. 6. It is by pride that contention cometh, Prov. 13. 10. for it maketh a man drunk with his own conceit, Hab. 2. 5. and who so wilfull, so quarrelsome as he that is drunk? An heretick may be condemned of himself, Tit. 3. 10. but he will not be convinced by another (such is his pertinacy, or rather, obstinacy) no, though he be stoned with hardest arguments, holden out of that crystal-brook of the holy Scriptures, he stands as a stake in the midst of a streame: and you may as soon remove a rock, as cause him to understand wherein hee is out in his judgment or practise. Lapidandi sunt hæretici, Athan.

Verse 25. How forcible are right words!] How sweet, saith the Chaldee interpreting it by Psal. 119. 103. It may be he read Nimlesu for Nimresu, but the word is well rendred forcible, potent, valid. It noteth also, saith one, acrimony, sharpnesse, or smartnesse, because right words have a pleasing acrimony upon the palate of the soule, and a power upon the judgment to sway and carry it. Ille regit dictis animos &c. Audite juvenes qui in juventem sævis desinerunt, these few words from Augustus falling right, quieted the mutineers in his army: and the like is reported of Alexander the great, of Menenius Agrippa &c. But we have better instances, as that of Abigail treating with David; the woman of Abel with Joab; Nicodemus by a few seasonable words, dissolving the Council gathered together against Christ, John 7. 50. 51. Papanutius stickling for the married Clergy at the Nicene Council, &c. One seasonable truth falling on a prepared heart, hath oft a strong and sweet operation. Luther having heard Staupicius say that that is kind repentance which begins from the love of God, ever after that time the practice of repentance was sweeter to him. This speech also of his took well with Luther. The doctrine of predestination beginneth at the wounds of Christ: but before any of this he was much wrought upon by conference with an old Priest about justification by faith. So was that Italian Marquesse Galeacius Caracciolus by a similitude used by Peter Martyr reading upon the first to the Corinthians. Nescio quid divinum in auscultatione est, saith one, there is a kind of divine force and efficacy in hearing, more then in reading the word: we may say of it as David once did of Goliahs sword, There is none to that. And yet it cannot be denied, that the word read also hath a mighty force and powerfull influence upon the conscience. Hence those many praises of it in Psal. 19. 7, 8. The statutes of the Lord are right &c. right for every mans state and purpose, so penned, that every man may think they speak de se in re sua, of himself in his particular case, as Chrysostom hath it. So right the good word of God is, and suitable; how then can it be but forcible? (See Heb. 4. 12. 2 Cor. 10. 4, 5.) And how forcible it is none can tell but those that have felt it; nor those neither lament this regretfully by way of admiration: Oh how forcible are right words!

But what doth your arguing reprove? [Heb. 6. 1. What doth your arguing reprove?] What force, what energie is in your arguments? how true and throughly wrought? how dull soever they appear they are, and how fitted to the purpose! Tam fabricatum est hominum argumentatio vestra, quam vulpes cauda fuit. I can [illegible] off my hand. Strong is the Truth (I grant) and easily convicteth the things that are true; but to conclude truths from falſhoods (as that I am an hypocrite becauſe afflicted) that ye can never do.

Verſe 26. Do ye imagine to reprove words?] Idle and haſty words, which have more ſound then ſenſe? Think you that I doe onely make a noiſe, or rave like a mad man, and am accordingly to be dealt with? ye have not hitherto had vaine windy words from me, but words full of weight and matter, words of truth and ſobernesſe: wherefore then do ye ſpeak thus? Do ye imagine to reprove words?

And the ſpeeches of one that is deſperate, which are as wind?] Do ye thinke I ſpeake like one that is diſtracted, who knowes not what he ſpeakes? or that I have at once loſt my hope and my wits? It is an eaſie and a compendious way of refuting all a man can ſay, to ſay, he is mad, his words muſt needs be but wind without weight, ſince he is himſelf without reaſon. Mr. Broughton readeth, Do ye weld the words of one forlorne wind? ſhall the poor mans wiſedom be deſpiſed (as Solomon asketh) and his words not be heard? Ecc. 9.16 Some refer this alſo to the friends, reading it thus, Ye frame ſpeeches onely to reprove (ye are good for little elſe but to find fault) and bring forth words againſt the wind: ye beat the empty air with your bubbles of words, and fenſeleſſe flying.

Verſe 27. Yea, you overwhelm the fatherleſſe] Heb. ye throw your ſelves upon the fatherleſſe, that is, upon miſerable me, who am helpleſſe, friendleſſe, comforteleſſe. See Gen. 43.18. that he may fall himſelf upon us, and fall upon us; ſay they there, as hunters and wilde beaſts fall upon their prey.

And you dig a pit for your friend] Who had better deſerved of you, and expected better uſage from you. Here he taxeth them for craft, as before for cruelty, and this to their friend, whom they ſought to circumvent, and to drive into deſperation. Some read the words thus, you make a feaſt upon your friend; you banquet upon your companion and make great cheer, as being glad of my calamity which you make an argument of mine impiety. See chap. 41.6. 2 King. 6.23.

Verſe 28. Now therefore be content, look upon me] Let it ſuffice you to have thus hardly handled me; caſt now a more benigne aſpect upon me, and be not henceforth ſo hot, and ſo harſh. Now therefore be content, regard me: ſo Mr. Broughton tranſlateth it, or look upon me, &c. with a critical eye: what guiltineſſe can you find in my face? do I look like an hypocrite, and can you read my conſcience in my countenance?

It is evident to you if I lie] You may ſoon ſee mine integrity if you pleaſe: for my heart fretteth and ſheweth it ſelf in my fore-head, neither can I collude, I am one of thoſe children, that will not lie, So be God my Saviour, Pſa. 85.8.

Verſe 29. Return, I pray you] Change your minds of me, and your language to me: hanſe ur by gue: what need all this heat of ſpeech, all height of paſſion, be better adviſed, I beſeech you, Ch. 7.11. and 19.28. ſome think that Job findes himſelf relenting to be gone: and he gladly calleth them back again.

Let it not be iniquity] Judge charitably, and make not the work of nature ſin: I may be weake, but am not wicked. Or thus, take heed that God finde you not foul uſurping his right: taking upon you to judg of ſecret things, even againſt your neighbour, with calumniations and cruelty.

Yea, return again] See you do it at your peril: either you muſt doo it, or doe worſe.

My righteouſneſſe is in me] I am ſurely in the right: and that will appear to you upon better conſideration. I ſhall be cleare in judgment, and you utterly miſtaken. Uprightneſſe hath boldneſſe, and dare put it ſelf upon Gods examination, as David did. Pſalm 139.23. Try me, O God, and ſearch the ground of my heart, &c.

Verſe 30. Is there iniquity in my tongue?] Yes, or elſe muſt paſſe for a perfect man, and well able to bridle the whole body. Jam. 3.2. Mark Rabbi, who aſcribeth unto natural parts, ſtrength more then to the organs of ſpeech, the tongue, lips, mouth, throat, &c. then unto all the other members. He was a perfect and an upright man, and had the quiteſt take heed to his wayes, that the ſubtileſt ſerpent could poſſibly ſuggeſt: he was alſo convinced of this, that if any man ſeeme [illegible] religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this mans religion is vaine. Jam. 1.26. Secretly and willingly with the allowance of ſuperfluous humours did not [illegible] cannot I diſcerne perverſe things?] Cannot I diſtinguiſh betweene ſound and rotten, wrong wrong, truth and falſhood? Job 12. 11. and 34. 3. Is my mouth to farre out of caſe &c. It is an heavy judgement to be given up to an injudicious mind. Rom. 1. 28. a reprobate ſenſe.

CHAP. VII.

Verſe 1. Is there not an appointed time to man upon the earth?] Here is certainly. Our bounds are preſcribed us, and a pillar ſet by him who beades up the heavens, which we are not to tranſpaſſe. Stat ſua cuique dies, ſaid the Heathen Poet, our laſt day ſtands, the reſt run. It is ſaid of the Turkes, that they ſhun not the company of thoſe that have the plague, but pointing upon their foreheads, ly, it was written there at their birth when they ſhould die. How if there be an appointed time &c. what meane the Lutherans to teach that God hath not determined the period of mens dayes, but it is in mans power to lengthen or ſhorten them: In this one verſe we have two metaphors, both which do evince the contrary. The firſt is from ſouldiers, implyed in the word צבא tranſlated an appointed time, or warfare, becauſe there was a ſet time for ſouldiers to fight, and a ſet time alſo for them to ſcare. The ſecond is from an hireling.

Virg. Æneid. 10.

Sr. H. Blounts Voyage into Levant.

Humanæ vitæ terminus non eſt decreto ſimplici & abſoluto conſtitutus. Heming.

Are not his dayes like the dayes of an hireling?] Deſcribit humanæ vitæ brevitatem. ſaith Vatablus. Here he deſcribeth the ſhortneſſe of mans life, and withall that his dayes are determined, for with an hireling we agree to worke with us for a certaine time, and finally for a day, or by the day, and hence we call them dayelabourers, but in peeuiſh then that the time of mans life is ſhort and ſet for hirelings are appointed to an houre. See Job 14. 14. Eccleſ. 2. 3. Job 7. 1. Iſai. 38. 5. Fifteene yeares juſt were added to Hezekiahs life: our haires are numbred, much more our dayes. This Job alledgeth to ſet forth his own extreme miſery, as one condemned to perpetual torments without any reſpite or refreſhing: and therefore in a worſe caſe then any ſouldier or ſervant.

Verſe 2. As a ſervant earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow &c.] Heb. expecteth after, or gaſpeth for the ſhadow: that is, for ſome place of cool repoſe after his hard labour in the hot ſun-ſhine, as in harveſt, or for the ſhadow, that is, for dark night, or for the evening.

Umbra dat refrigerium aeſtivi umbræ.

And as the hireling looketh for the reward of his work] Heb. expecteth his work, that is, his wages. Gods work is its own wages: and in doing thereof (not only for doing thereof) there is great reward, Pſal. 19. 11. Righteouſneſſe is its own recompence of the poore hireling looketh for his wages, he ſets his heart upon it. Deut. 24. 15. and God provideth there, that it be duely paid him: and thoſe that detaine it are ſorely threatned, Jer. 22. 13. Jam. 5. 4. as crying out. The whole verſe may cohere with the former, and be thus rendred, As a ſervant that earneſtly deſireth the ſhadow &c. and as an hireling that looketh for the reward of his work? but it is better to ſay it with that which followeth, according to our Tranſlation.

Virg. Eclog.

Verſe 3. So am I made to poſſeſſe months of vanity] So, but a great deale worſe then now it is with me. The labouring ſervant hath his wages, the painfull hireling hath his hire in the ſet time, but I am made to poſſeſſe, or have aſſigned to me for my inheritance, moneths of dayes, but whole moneths of vanity, that is, of miſeſſation and miſery, void of the leaſt comfort or hope of amendment. The ſouldier, ſervant, labouring man, ſubſiſting in hope of better; but with me it is every day worſe then other, and were it not for the hope of heaven, the life I lead here would be little hell to me. From the months of vanity here mentioned (Cyrus months ſome render them) but more he hoped for ere, but found none; it may be gathered, that Jobs calamities laſted a long time, twelve months, ſay the Hebrewes, ſeven years, ſaith Iunius. If we note one ſuch impatience but once in any ſort, we think our [illegible] be reviled and [illegible] For Chaldee Dayes, ſome reade nights, as in Job moone were ſpoken in the wane, or ever in the Eclipſe.

And

And wearisome nights are appointed to me.] sc. by God: and that so exactly as if he had numbred them to a night. See Dan. 10. 1. Posuere, mensurâ, numero Deus omnia fecit: It is he that cutteth us out our conditions, that prepareth for us troublesome dayes and tiresome nights, and purposely that he may take us off from the inordinate love of life: like as by strait binding (which mortifieth and deadeth the flesh) men are made more able to beare the cutting off of a member; so shall we take our cutting off from this world the more gently, by how much the more painful, pinching dayes and nights we have endured.

Verse 4. When I lie down, I say, when shall I arise &c.] Here is a graphicall description of a wearisome night. The night is most laborious and irkesome to sick people: then they revolve their troubles, and being free from visits of friends, they visit their own afflictions, and study their owne distempers freely, then they lye all night wishing for day, telling the clock, hearkning for the cock (that natural clock) tossing to and fro unto the dawning of the day, not able to get the least wink of sleep, that nurse of nature, and sweet parembolè of mens griefes and cares. Oh present the condition of a restlesse sick man to your thoughts, (saith an Interpreter here) praise God for quiet nights, and pity those to whom wearisome nights are appointed.

Verse 5. My flesh is clothed with wormes.] Here Job sheweth how and whence his nights were so wearisome and restlesse; he was in his grave-clothes before he died (saith one) viz. a gowne of wormes set or embroidered with clods of dust. Covered he was with sores, and putrified ulcers full of wormes, which made him an abhorring to himselfe. Mr. Caryl.

And clods of dust] A fit dresse for a dying man. The word signifieth, the filings of any metall, or the scrapings of an unclean thing. He meaneth then the scurfe, scraped off from him, or the dust contracted by his sitting upon the ground, chap. 2. 8.

My skin is broken] Or, clefts and chaps (as the earth is in drought) in most loathsome and formidable manner.

And becomes loathsome] Or melted, as in that distemper which Physicians call corruptionem totius substantiæ: or as in the leprosie or gangrene, when the flesh falleth off from the bones. Hinc igitur discè patientiam in morbis, saith Lavater. Hence then learne to be patient under the most noysome and troublesome diseases. What though thou be in such a pickle all over, that thou canst neither stand nor walke, nor sit, nor lye, nor live, nor die: was not this holy Jobs condition, and worse? Remember that there are not a few sick as heart can hold, sore all over, and want necessary food and physick which thou dost not: consider that God could, and justly might lay more and heavier plagues upon thee, &c. When Dr. Moufet was sick, and some friends came to visit him, being very sorry for the paines he was put to by the ulcers of his body; O my deare friends, said he, these biles and blaines gemmæ sunt & pretiosa ornamenta Dei, are Gods gemmes and Jewels wherewith he adorneth his friends, that hee may draw them to himselfe, which ornaments let us esteem far more precious then all the gold and wealth of this whole world; soon after which speech, he piously and peaceably fell asleep in the Lord. Graserus also when he saw his body begin to swell with a dropsie, and other distempers, Ergo Deo sit laus & gloria, said he, Oh blessed be God, that my deliverance is at hand; & bernia gravissima, and that sweet hour that shall put an end to all my miseries. Job. Manl. loc. com. 127. Melch. Adam.

Verse 6. My dayes are swifter than a weavers shuttle.] Which is of a very swift and sudden motion. Nights and dayes passe the threads of our life forward and backward, to and again. The night cuts it to the day, and the day to the night, between these two, time quickly weares off the thread of life. I have cut off like a weaver my life, saith good Hezekiah, Isa. 38. 12. And the heathen hammered at this in their fiction of the three sister-Destinies, whereof the Poet saith, Clotho colum baiulat, Lachesis trahit, Atropos occat.

You that are weavers, saith Lavater, or lookers on them at their work, thinke of this text, and learne to live holily.

And they are spent without hope. Heb. in non spem. I cannot conceive that I shall ever recover, or be restored: whatever thou, O Eliphaz, hast given cause to put me in hope. All your delusive words, which he looked upon as the readiest remedy of all.

Verse

Verse 7. O remember that my life is wind] Before swifter or lighter then a weavers shuttle (or then a word or speech, as the Septuagint there render it) now, my life is a wind, or as a wind (so the Chaldee paraphraseth) that speedily passeth away, and returneth not. So St. James, What is your life? saith he, It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away. Jam. 4. 14. One hath well observed, that the Holy Ghost giveth us very many Items of this (and especially in this book) which shewes, that we are very apt to forget it. A point this is easie to be known, but very hard to be believed: every man assents to it, but few live it, and improve it to reformation. ἐλαφρότερος λαλίας.

Mine eye shall no more see good] sc. in this world, for in the world to come hee was confident of the beatificall vision, chap. 19. 27. Hezekiah hath a like expression when sentenced to die: I said in the cutting off of my dayes, I shall not see the Lord, even the Lord in the land of the living; (that is, in this life present, Psal. 27. 13. and 52. 5. and 142. 5. Isa. 53. 8. called also the light of the living, John 9. 4. Psal. 56. 13.) I shall behold man no more with the inhabitants of the world. Isa. 38. 11. And this, both sick Job, and sick Hezekiah tell the Lord, and both of them begin alike with O remember, Isa. 38. 3. God forgetteth not his people and their condition: howbeit he requireth and expecteth that they should be his Remembrancers for their own and others good, Isa. 62. 6, 7. See the Margin.

Verse 8. The eye of him that hath seen me, shall see me no more] In death we shall neither see, nor be seen, but be soon both out of sight and out of mind too. It is storied of Richard the third, that he caused the dead corps of his two smothered Nephews to be closed in lead, and so put in a coffin full of holes, and hooked at the ends with two hookes of iron, and so to be cast into a place called the Black-deeps, at the Thames mouth, whereby they should never rise up, nor be any more seen. Such a place is the grave till the last day: for then the sea shall give up the dead which are in it, and death and the grave shall render up the dead that are in them, Rev. 20. 13. then shall Adam see all his nephews at once &c. Speed 935.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not] Thou even lookest me to death, like as elsewhere God is said to frown men to destruction, Psalm 80. 16. and Psalm 104. 29. they are not able to endure his flaming eyes, sparkling out wrath against them. What mad men therefore are they that speak and act against Him who can so easily do them to death? If God but set his eyes upon them for evil (as he oft threatneth to do, Amos 9. 4. Job 16. 9.) they are undone.

Verse 9. As the cloud is consumed and vanisheth away] A cloud is nothing else but a vapour thickened in the middle Region of the aire by the cold encompassing and driving it together, Psalm 18. 19. vessels they are as thin as the liquor that is in them; but some are waterlesse: the former are soon emptied and dissolved, the later as soon scattered by the wind, and vanish away. See the Note on verse 7.

So he that goeth down to the grave shall come up no more] sc. to live and converse here with men, as ver. 10. Or, he shall come up no more, sc. without a miracle (as Lazarus and some others long since dead rose againe) he cannot return to me, said David of his deceased child, 2 Sam. 12. 23. God could send some from the dead to warn the living; but that is not now to be expected, as Abraham told the rich man, Luk. 16. Those spirits of dead men that so oft appeared in times of Popery (requiring their friends to sing Masses and Dirges for them, and that drew this verse from Theodorus Gaza, sent aliquid manet, lethum non omnia finit) were either delusions, or else divels in the shape of men. That Job doubted of the Resurrection, or denied it, (as Rabbi Solomon, and some other, both Hebrew and Greek writers conclude from this text) is a manifest injury done to this good man, and a force offered to the text, as appeareth by that which next followeth.

Verse 10. He shall return no more to his house] Either to dispatch businesses, or to enjoy comforts: he hath utterly done with the affaires of this world. Melanchthon telleth of an aunt of his, who having buried her husband, and sitting sorrowfully by the fires side, saw (as she thought) her husband coming into the roome, and talking to her familiarly about the payment of certaine debts, and other businesses belonging to the house: and when he had thus talked with her a long time, he bid her give him her hand, she at first refused, but was at length perswaded to do it: he taking her by the hand so burnt it, that it was as black as a coal, and so he departed. Was not this the divel?

Neither

Neither ſhall his place know him any more] His place of habitation, or his place of honour and ruledome: theſe ſhall no more acknowledge him, and welcome him back, as they uſed to do after a journey. Death is the concluſion of all worldly comforts and relations. Hence wicked people are ſo loth to depart, becauſe there is ſtruck by death an everlaſting parting-blow betwixt them and their preſent comforts, without hope of better. Spes & fortuna valete, ſaid one great man at his death. Cardinall Burbon would not part with his part in Paris for his part in paradiſe. Fie, ſaid another rich Cardinall, will not death be hired? will mony do nothing? Never did Adam go more unwillingly out of paradiſe, the Jebuſites out of the ſtrong-hold of Zion, the unjuſt ſteward out of his office, or the divels out of the demoniack, then graceleſſe people do out of their earthly tabernacles, becauſe they know they ſhall return no more, and having hopes in this life only, they muſt needs look upon themſelves as moſt miſerable.

Verſe 11. Therefore I will not refraine my mouth] Heb. I will not prohibite my mouth, ſc. from ſpeaking, I will bite in my grief no longer: but, ſith death, the certaine end of all outward troubles, is not farre from mee; I will by my further complaints, preſſe the Lord to haſten it, and not ſuppreſſe my ſorrowes, but give them a vent.

I will ſpeake in the angriſh of my ſpirit] Heb. In the ſtraitneſſe or diſtreſſe of my ſpirit, which is almoſt ſuffocated with grief.

I will complaine in the bitterneſſe of my ſoul] His greateſt troubles were inward: and if by godly ſorrow for his ſinnes he had powred forth his ſoule in an humble confeſſion (as ſome underſtand him here) he had taken a right courſe: but thus boiſterouſly to break out into complaints, ſavoureth of humane infirmity, and ſheweth quanta ſint hominis vires ſibi à Deo derelicti, what a poor creature man is when God leaveth him to himſelf, and ſubjecteth him to his judgments. Mercer.

Verſe 12. Am I a ſea, or a whale] Can I bear all troubles, as the ſea receives all waters, and the whale beares all tempeſts? This (as is well obſerved) was too bold a ſpeech to God from a creature: for when his hand is on our backs, our hands ſhould be upon our mouths, as Pſalm 39. 9. I was dumb, or (as others read it) I ſhould have been dumb —— becauſe thou didſt it. But it is a faire ſtep to perfection and victory, when one can kiſſe Gods rod and ſay, as Pſalm 44. 17. All this is come upon us, yet have we not forgotten thee, nor declined from thy way. Job was not without his impatiencies: but being he was right for the maine, and at length bewailed them, God looked not upon him as he doth upon thoſe refractaries, who to their impatience adde impenitence, and to their paſſive diſobedience, active.

That thou ſetteſt a watch over me?] That thou ſurroundeſt me with ſorrowes, and wilt not ſuffer me to die? Here Job ſhould have ſet a better watch over his lips then thus boiſterouſly to have bluſtered againſt God (who is ἀναπύθυνος, not to be called to an account for his proceedings) like the raging ſea, or unruly whirle-poole. He ſhould have conſidered, that the beſt men have ſomewhat of the ſea in them, that muſt be bounded, and ſomewhat of the whale, that muſt be watched and kept under: and that God never layes more upon a man then there is need, though he may think otherwiſe. Pſal. 39. 1. Pſal. 141. 3.

Verſe 13. When I ſay, my bed ſhall comfort me] The bed was the moſt proper and probable meanes of refreſhment: but it is not the bed that can give ſleep, nor the couch, eaſe. Creatures are not able of themſelves to give out the comforts committed to them: their common nature muſt be aſſiſted with a ſpecial word of bleſſing, or elſe they do us no good: Man liveth not by bread only &c. God maketh the merciful mans bed, Pſalm 41. 3. So he giveth his beloved ſleep, quiet ſleep: (Shena with an Aleph quieſcent:) Pſal. 127. He is the God of all mercies, and the Father of all conſolation, 2 Cor. 1. 3. It is he that ſhines through the creature, which elſe is but as the aire, without light. Look how the aire lights us not without the Sun; nor fuel heats us not without fire: ſo neither can any man or means comfort or content us without God.

My couch ſhall eaſe my complaint] Heb. ſhall lift up, or take away, viz. the burthen of my cares and griefe: ſome part of my load at leaſt: but it fell out otherwiſe: for saith Vatablus; and the divel doubtleſs, had a great hand in this buſineſs, (for it was within his commiſſion, and he would not neglect any part of it;) but Job taketh notice of none but God the chief agent, and to him he applieth himſelf. His providence is exerciſed even about dreams, which in melancholy people, fall out (eſpecially when they are ſick) to be oftentimes very horrid and hideous; as that they fall down from ſome high place, commit ſome capital offence, are ſlain, torn in pieces by divels &c. Biſhop Felters terrible night-viſion was before mentioned. Richard the third after the murther of his two innocent Nephews, and Charls the ninth of France after the Pariſian maſſacre had ſuch dreadful dreams, that they became a terror to themſelves and to all about them. But to inſtance in better men; Calvin in the year of grace 1562 being ſick of the gout, dreamed, that he heard a great noiſe of drums beaten up moſt vehemently, as they uſe to be in warlike marches. Parens alſo Anno 1618 ſaw in a dream the City of Heidelberg ſet on fire in many places, and the Prince Electors palace all on a light flame: this he ſet down the next morning in his day-book, and added theſe words, O Deus clementiſſime averte ſiniſtrum omen &c. Such fearful dreams cauſe a ſick ſleep, and a worſe waking. This Job complaineth of here: and yet more fully in the next words.

Verſe 14. Then thou ſkareſt me with dreames] Extremam tentationem deſcribit, ſaith

Beza in vita.

Philip. Par. in vita Parit.

Verſe 15. So that my ſoul chuſeth ſtrangling] i. e. Quamvis duriſſimam ſed præſentiſſimam mortem, any violent or ignominious death, ſo it were a ſpeedy death. Hippocrates telleth us, that many have been ſo affrighted with dreams and apparitions, that they have hanged themſelves, leaped into deep pits, or otherwiſe made themſelves away. Let thoſe that either have not been ſo terrified, or ſo tempted, or ſo deſerted of God, bleſs him for that mercy.

And death rather then life] Heb. Rather then my bones; that is, any kind of death rather then ſuch a body, which is now nothing elſe but a bag of bones: or then ſuch rotten bones full of ſores and ulcers: he maketh mention of his bones, becauſe his pain had pierced as farre as his very bones; the putrefaction had ſunk down into his marrow.

Verſe 16. I loath it, I would not live alway] I loath or abhor it, that is, my life, or I loath them, that is, my bones, verſe 15. I would not live alway, that is, long in this world, and in this condition. Plotinus the Philoſopher held it a ſpecial mercy of God to men, that they were mortal; and did not alwaies live to labour under the miſeries of this wretched life. Cato profeſſed, that if he might have his age renewed as the Eagles, ſo that he might be made young again, he would ſeriouſly refuſe it. How much better might Job ſay thus, ſith the righteous hath hope in his death; and might well take up that of the Poet.

Aug. de civitate Dei, l. 9. c. 10.

Cic. Cato Major

Uſque adeóne mori miſerum eſt?

The dayes of the beſt are ſo full of evil both of ſin and pain, that it is good they are not fuller of dayes: if they ſhould have length of life added to heaps of ſorrows, and perpetuity with all their miſery; how miſerable were they! Chriſt promiſeth it as a point of favour to his, that the dayes of trouble ſhould be ſhortned, Matth. 24. 22. and that he may put an end to the world, he diſpatcheth away the generations with all the convenient ſpeed that may be.

Therefore let me alone] Some read thus, I cannot live for ever, or very long, therefore let me alone, that is, give over afflicting me, and let me go quietly to my grave, Pſalm 39. 13. Here one well obſerveth, that the world and time, while they continue, are alwaies ceaſing; and therefore have their denomination from this word which ſignifieth to ceaſe.

Quod citò ceſſat & deficit. Mercer in Pagnin.

For my dayes are vanity] Hebel, a puffe of wind, or a bubble on the water. Mans body is a bubble, his ſoul the wind that filleth it. The bubble riſeth higher and higher, till at laſt it breaketh: ſo doth the body riſe from infancy to youth, from youth to age &c. till at length it cracketh and diſſolveth. The life of man is a vain life. This Job often beats upon, and why, ſee the Note on ver. 7.

Verſe 17. What is man that thou ſhouldſt magnify him?] i. e. Make ſo much adoe about him, or look upon him as a fit match for the great God to grapple with, Pſalm 14. 3. or to take care of his affairs? Debile argumentum, ſaith Vatablus here, a poor argument: but Job maketh uſe of all kind of arguments to move God to make an end of him: Domine fac finem, fac finem, ſaid dying Eraſmus; but what he meant by thoſe words, I know not, ſaith Melanchthon, who reporteth it.

And that thou ſhouldſt ſet thine heart upon him?] So as to make any account of ſo mean and miſerable a creature, Pſalm 144. 3. to magnifie him whom thou mighteſt rather vilifie, or indeed, nullifie; or, that thou ſhouldſt ſet thy heart againſt him, &c. to deſtroy him, as chap. 34. 14. That's but an ignoble conteſt; ubi & vincere inglorium eſt, & atteri ſordidum.

Verſe 18. That thou ſhouldſt viſit him every morning] Be at ſo much pains, as it were, with him, as to chaſten him: and every morning to do it, that is, certainly and early; God took Job to taſk ſo ſoon as he was awake every morning; and this hee thought much of, and had rather have been without: but that was his weakneſs, ſith the rod is as neceſſary as food.

And try him every moment] Proving by affliction both what corruption, and what grace is in his heart; this David reckoneth upon the ſcore of Gods favours, and prayeth for, Pſal. 139. ult. This God promiſeth as a ſpecial bleſſing, Jer 9. 7. and withall aſſureth, that he will try and refine his people, but not as ſilver, Iſa. 48 10. He will not deal with them as in rigour of juſtice he might do, becauſe if he ſhould do ſo, they having more droſs in them then good ore, more corruption then grace, they would ſoon be conſumed in this fiery trial: this God conſidered, and ſo ſhould Job have done, and have given over his growling.

Verſe 19. How long wilt thou not depart from me?] Here he ſeems deſirous to be Pſalm 139.10. rid of Gods company, of his afflicting preſenſe: ſo true is that of the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 11. No chaſtening for the preſent ſeemeth to be joyous, but grievous, till patience come to have her perfect work, and men be brought to cry out, as one did under a great fit of the ſtone, The uſe Lord, the uſe; not ſo much eaſe of my pain, as a good uſe of my ſuffering; this Job came to at length, no doubt: mean while, we have in him, as Mercer obſerveth, mirum ubiq; ſpecimen, a wonderful inſtance of that conflict between Fleſh and Spirit that is in the Saints.

Nor let me alone, till I may ſwallow down my ſpittle] That is, not afford me the leaſt intermiſſion, no not a ſpitting-while. He will not ſuffer me to take my breath, chap 9.18. Hierome thinks that Job was troubled with a ſquinſey or ſore throat, which hindred the ſwallowing of his ſpittle; neither had he power to ſpit out the corrupt matter that ran down his throat. Oh what a ſweet mercy is health! and how ill able are the beſt without ſpecial ſupport from heaven to bear ſickneſs! the Stoicks, who ſaid, that he who lived honeſtly might live chearfully though under many bodily Wolfius. weakneſſes, ſenſerunt ipſi in morbis ſe magnificentius locutos eſſe quàm verius, ſaith one; that is, when it came to their own turn to be ſick, they well perceived, that they had ſpoken rather bravely then truely.

Verſe 20. I have ſinned] or, Have I ſinned? Have I fallen into any foul offence, as theſe men charge me? Am I guilty of any thing more then involuntary failings, unavoidable infirmities? although I know that theſe alſo are downright ſins, fruits of the fleſh properly ſo called, miſſings of the mark, as the word here ſignifieth, and for ſuch I humbly confeſſe them, I put my ſelf into the hands of thy juſtice in hope of thy mercy: and what wilt thou more of thy poor creature?

What ſhall I do unto thee] No ſooner had Job confeſſed his ſin, but he is deſirous to know a remedy. Reprobates can cry Peccavi, I have ſinned: but then they proceed not to ſay as here, What ſhall I do? they open their wound, but lay not on a plaiſter, and ſo the wounds made by ſin are more putrified, and grow more dangerous. Job would be directed what to do for remedy: he would have pardoning grace and prevailing grace upon any terms: and more then this, what can I do unto thee? as the Συνήσομαι σοὶ ἐρεῖν. Septuagint render this text.

O thou preſerver of men?] Of all men, but eſpecially of them that believe, 1 Tim. 4. 10 The Grecians called their Jupiter σωτῆρα ☉, the Deliverer or Preſerver of their perſons: and again τεῖχον ☉ from τεῖχος a wall, as if he were the watch and defender of
Some render it O thou obſerver of men. their houſes. But theſe are praiſes proper to the true God the Keeper of his Iſrael, Pſalm 121. 4. The Preſerver of the Faithful, Pſalm 31. 23. Whom he keepeth as the apple of his eye, Pſalm 17. 8. that tendereſt piece of the tendereſt part, moſt diligently and ſtrongly guarded by nature with tunicles. It is the wiſedom of a Chriſtian in his addreſſes unto God to make choice of fit and appoſite titles and Attributes: for the ſtrengthening of his faith, and increaſing of his fervency.

Why haſt thou ſet me as a mark againſt thee] As a bul-wark, as an object, or as a rock of offence, against which thou mayest alwaies dash: so Vatablus rendreth it: to the same sense Job asketh chap. 19. 11. and 13. 24. Wherefore holdest thou me for thine enemy? So Lam. 3. 12. and Job 16. 13. Job conceived, that God dealt with him no otherwise then the Turks did with the great Crucifix of Constantinople, upon the head whereof they put a Turks cap, and so setting it up in derision, shot at it with their arrows, calling it the God of the Christians: Or as the same Turks at the taking of Tripolis in Barbary, dealt with one John de Chabas a French man, who in the time of the siege had shot off the hand of the Clark General of the Army. They brought him into the town, saith the story, and when they had cut off his hands and nose, they put him quick into the ground to the waist, and there for their pleasure shot at him with their arrowes, and afterwards cut his throat. Turk. hist. 347 Ibid. 756.

rock

So that I am a burden to my self] How can he be otherwise, who is a but-mark for Almighty God, who cleft his very reins asunder, and powred out his gall upon the ground, Job 16. 13. Job had once before complained, that the poison of Gods arrows had drunk up his spirits chap. 6. Neither did any thing lie so heavy upon him, or was so burdensome to him as this, that God seemed to frown upon him, and to fight against him with his own hand. The Septuagint and Talmudists read thus, So that I am a burthen unto thee, viz. with my complaints and expostulations: this, say they, was the ancient reading.

Verse 21. And why dost thou not pardon my transgression] Heb. Lift up or take away: for sin was Jobs greatest burden, which therefore he prayeth to God to pardon: and that not in heaven only, but in his own conscience: and then no darkness can be so desolate, no cross so cutting, no burden so importable, but he shall by Gods grace be able to deal with it. Hence this vehement expostulation of his for remission and removal of sin first, and then of its evil consequents; for pardon of sinne is a voluminous mercy; and being justified by faith we can glory in tribulation Rom. 5. 1, 3.

For now shall I sleep in the dust] In the dust of death: and therefore must have help presently, or not at all: sith a man once departed is no more to be found in this world, though never so diligently sought for. See verse 7, 8. One paraphraseth these words thus, For now I shall die, and then when thou lookest to receive thy morning sacrifice of praise as aforetime, I shall not be found to give it thee. Psal. 22. 15.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1. Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said]

BIldad (who was of the posterity of Shuah Abrahams son by Keturah, Gen. 25. 1, 2.) interrupteth Job, and indeavours to maintain what Eliphaz had spoken: Nevertheless it appeareth by this chapter, verse 5, 6, 20, 21. that his opinion was not so rigid, as that of Eliphaz: for he grants that a righteous man may be afflicted, but yet so, that if God restore him not speedily, he may be censured, cast and condemned as unrighteous. He passeth (as they do all) some hard censures upon Job, and is paid in his own coyn by him: who saith, that he was according to his name, a wicked kinsman: for בלד is naught, and דוד an Uncle. With what judgment men judg, they shall be judged. Matt. 7. 2.

Verse 2. How long wilt thou speak these things?] Quousque effaberabis iste? q. d. Hast thou nothing better then this to utter? Be silent for shame, or forbear at least to vent thy spleen against God, of whose proceedings with thee thou hast heavily complained: thy words have been stout against the Lord, and thou hast taken too much liberty of language in this tempest of talk. Tremel.

And how long shall the words of thy mouth be like a strong wind?] Big and boisterous, rude and robustuous, as if thou wouldst Dominum impetere, evertere, & dejicere blow down God and his proceedings at a breath. The Tigurine translation is, Quandiu verba oris tui sonabunt pertinaciam? How long shall the words of thy mouth sound out thine obstinacy? If evil thoughts be majoris reatus, of greater guilt, as the Schools speak, yet evil words and works are majoris infamiæ, of greater scandal, Mercer.

and do more corrupt others. This Bildad was ſenſible of, and conceiving that Job complained of God as dealing hardly with him, and unjuſtly afflicting him: he addeth, Verſe 3. Doth God pervert judgment?] By not puniſhing the wicked: or doth the Almighty pervert juſtice? by not rewarding the righteous (ſo the Hebrews expound it) Why no: neither did Job ever ſay ſuch a thing; only he had pathetically ſet forth the greatneſs of his pain, and the unkindneſs of his friends, and wiſhed to die rather then to endure it. Now this was conſtrued for blaſphemy, or little leſs: and Bildad is very hot in his invective againſt Job, as good reaſon he had, if he had not been ſo miſtaken. Here he wreſteth in a moſt true propoſition (commodam ſanè ſed non accommodam) but yet ſuch a one as very little concerned this preſent diſputation: and he doth it with as ſmall wiſedom and diſcretion, ſaith Beza, as with great pride and confidence. For doth it either argue Job an hypocrite, and wicked man, or charge God with injuſtice if it be ſaid, that Job for his ſins was not ſo afflicted by God (whereas he in the mean time denieth not himſelf to be a ſinner, and to have deſerved Gods heavy hand upon him) but rather proved and tryed by him according to his good pleaſure? yet Bildad goeth on as if he had done very well: and in the next verſe in plain words boldly avoucheth that Jobs children were by Gods judgment deſtroyed with the fall of the houſe, whatever betid their ſouls.

Verſ. 4. If thy children have ſinned againſt him] As what man is he that liveth and ſinneth not? But Bildad meant that Jobs children had hainouſly ſinned, had been grievous ſinners againſt their own ſouls (as afterwards were Core and his complices) had not ſinned common ſins, and therefore died not common deaths: indeed they died early and ſuddenly, and eating and drinking (wherein there might be ſome exceſs) and before ſacrifice offered for them, as formerly: all this was ſad, and moved Job more then any thing elſe. But did it therefore follow that God hath caſt them away? &c.

And he have caſt them away for their tranſgreſſion] Or, And he have expelled or abandoned them into the hand (ſo the Hebrew hath it elegantly) of their tranſgreſſions or rebellions, as ſo many executioners. Some render it thus, He hath driven them out of the world for their tranſgreſſion. The Chaldee Paraphraſt goeth further, interpreting hand here for place. If God have ſent them, ſaith he, into the place of their wickedneſs, that is, into hell prepared for the wicked. Now ſurely, ſaith Lavater, Inhumaniſſimus fuit Bildad, qui iſta calamitoſiſſimo objicere non dubitabat: Bildad was a moſt unmerciful man, who doubted not to lay theſe things in the diſh of him that was before ſo heavily afflicted, and to heap more load upon him who was ready to ſink under his burden: but he did it, ſay ſome, of a good intent, to bring Job to a ſenſe of his ſin, and to put him in hope of appeaſing Gods wrath, who had yet ſpared his life that he might make his peace, and not ſuddenly ſlay him as he had done them: and therefore he aſſureth him in the following verſes, as Eliphaz had done before, that all things ſhall go well with him if he repent. Albeit thy children have ſinned, &c. yet

Pagnin.

Verſe 5. If thou wouldſt ſeek unto God betimes] If warned by the evil end that befell thine unhappy children, thou wouldſt early and earneſtly ſeek unto God for mercy, for which purpoſe it may ſeem that thy life hath been graciouſly ſpared, when thy children have been deſtroyed, that thou mightſt be made wiſe at their expence. Such counſel as this is, Eliphaz had given Job before, chap. 5. 8.

And make thy ſupplication to the Almighty] Pray for mercy out of free-grace alone, ſo the Hebrew word ſignifieth: plead for pity, ſpeak ſupplications as the poor man doth, Prov 18. 23. Be poor in ſpirit, a ſtark beggar and bankrupt, leſſe then the leaſt of all Gods mercies, Gen. 32. 10. and in this mind addreſſe thy ſelf to the All-ſufficient, the Cornucopia, the God rich in mercy to all that call upon him, for pardon of thy great ſin in ſtanding out in contention with his Majeſty, and reſiſting his fatherly viſitation.

Verſe 6. If thou were pure and upright] If thou didſt lift up pure hands to God in prayer, &c.

Οὐς κε θεοῖς ἀπιθήσας μάλα τ' ἄκλυτον ἀυτῇ. Hom.

Plura Deus meruit, purâ cui mente vocari:
Et pura, poſſit pauca habere, preces.

The fountain of goodneſſe will not be laden at with foul hearts and hands, Jer. 2. 14.

Jam.

Jam. 4.8. Isai. 1.15, 16. Joh. 9.31. 1 Tim. 2.8. Bias, an heathen Philosopher, being at sea in a great storm, and perceiving many wicked wretches with him in the ship calling upon the gods, Silete, inquit, ne Dii vos hic navigare sentiant, Hold your tongues, said he, pray not, lest the gods take notice that you are here, and we all perish for your sakes. There are that take these words for Reformation, as the former verse for Humiliation, those two parts of true repentance: if thou wert pure and upright, as a right penitentiary would be; if thou wouldst break off thy sins by repentance, and especially thine hypocrisie which hath brought this punishment upon thee from the Lord. If thou wouldst not only repent for thy sins, but also from thy sins, and frame to lead a new life, which is, Optima & aptissima pœnitentia, saith Luther, the best and soundest repentance.

Surely now he would awake for thee] Thou shouldst undoubtedly find speedy and unmiscarrying returns of thy prayers, and all good acceptance of thy services: he will hear thee for deliverance, so the Septuagint render it: he will up and do it, he will arise and have mercy upon Zion (Psalm 102. 13.) for now that she prayeth and purgeth her self from all filthinesse of flesh and spirit, the time to favour her, yea, the set time is come. I am come for thy words, saith the Angel to Daniel, chap. 10 12.

And make the habitation of thy righteousnesse prosperous] i. e. He will blesse thy well ordered family, and whatsoever thou dost therein shall prosper, Psalm 1. 3: Thy children and servants shall live together in peace, and all good agreement: thy stock also, and thy store shall be increased. He shall restore it to, or repair it for thee, as the Septuagint here render it: peace, plenty and prosperity shal be heaped upon thee, this is the import of the word נָוֶה. Some of the Hebrews by habitation of righteousnes, here understand the soul, in which dwelleth righteousnes. Others of them take it for the body, the habitation of the soul, wherein righteousnesse is seated. But these senses are far fetcht. ἀποκαταστήσει σοι. Sept.

Verse 7. Though thy beginning was small, yet thy later end should greatly increase] Thy late losses God will recompence with interest: and the felicity which he prepareth for thee shall be far greater then that, the losse whereof thou dost now regret; for he will enrich thee to admiration, thy later end shall be ineffable (so the Septuagint have it) such as none shall be able to utter or describe. See chap. 40.10, 12. The day of small things is not to be despised, Zech. 4. 10. Every former mercy is a pledg of a future, and to him that hath shall be given. God delighteth to help his people with a little help at first, to crumble his mercies to us, as one phraseth it: to give us his blessings by retail, to maintain trading and communion between him and us. So the cloud emptieth not it self at a sudden burst, but dissolveth upon the earth drop after drop. τὰ ἐγκλα σὺ ἀμυθητα.

Verse 8. For enquire, I pray thee] Bildad speaks fair, as Eliphaz had done, whom he all along imitateth.

A bove majori discit arare minor.

Of the former age] The generations afore-going, the Kadmonim, as the Jews called their Ancestors, and used this saying concerning them, Cor priscorum fuit sicut porta &c. the heart of our progenitors was as the gate of the porch of the Temple, ample and beautiful: but the heart of their posterity, is as the eye of a needle, narrow and of no receipt in comparison. Of witnesses Aristotle witnesseth, that the more ancient they are, the more creditable, because lesse corrupt. Nihil mihi antiquius, say the Latines; Nothing is more ancient to me, that is, more highly reputed. And New things are nothing, say the Greeks. Siculus maketh mention of an Egyptian Priest, who said to Solon one of the Greek Sages, you Grecians are very boyes (ye are but of yesterday, as it is in the next verse) neither is there an old man (that is, a man versed in ancient histories, or acquainted with antiquities) to be found amongst you all. Much of the ancient Divinity was traditional, till Moses set pen to paper: the mind of God was either immediately revealed, or handed down and transmitted from father to son, from generation to generation. Hence Bildad here bids Job enquire of the former ages: and thereto refers him for further information: so doth Moses the Israelites, Deut. 4.20. and 32. 7. Antiquity, so it be right, is of no smal authority: that's a received rule, Quod antiquissimum verissimum, that is truest which is ancientest: as we prefer the newest Philosophy, so the ancientest Divinity. The Rara datur longo prudentia temporis usu. Talmud. Πιστότατοι αἱ παλαιοὶ, ἀδιάφθοροι γάρ. Rhetor. lib. 1. τὰ καινὰ κακά. Seris venit usus ab annis. Γέρων δὲ ἀνὴρ οὐκ ἔστιν ἐν Ἕλλησι. Diod. Sic.

Papists

Papists boast much of Antiquity (as the Gibeonites did of old shooes and mouldy bread): but when they come to prove it, they go no higher then to about a thousand years ago. They scornfully look upon us as Novellers, and ask where our religion was before Luther? We answer them, that our religion was alwaies in the bible, where their religion never was. This is the old commandment, saith St. John, which was from the beginning, 1 John 2. 7.

And prepare thy self to the search of their fathers] Or fit thy self, fix thy mind upon it, as Psam 100. 1. We must not think to find truth, but upon a serious search, Prov. 2. 3. Anaxagoras complained omnia esse circumfusa tenebris, that all things were full of darknesse. Empedocles, that the inlets of the senses were very narrow. Democritus, that Truth lay hid as it were in a deep pit that could hardly be fathomed. St. Paul cryes out, O the depth! How unsearchable are Gods judgments, and his wayes past finding out! Prepare therefore to this search after God, and pray as that poor man did that cryed after Christ, and when he was asked what wouldst thou have? Lord, said he, that mine eyes might be opened.

Verse 9. For we are but of yesterday] Heb. We are yesterday, that is, yesterdays off-spring, upstarts, mushrooms, novices, of very small standing in the world. And yet they were old men, chap. 15. 10. Eliphaz is esteemed to be an hundred and fifty, Bildad an hundred and forty, Zophar an hundred and twenty years old; and yet, in comparison of the fathers before the flood, they were but of yesterday, they had lived but a very little while, and were but of late time.

And know nothing] Neque experti sumus, saith Tremellius: the greatest part of our knowledg is but the least part of our ignorance: how can we know much, when our abode here is so short, our experience so little? Ars longa, vita brevis, said Hippocrates, life is short, and art is long. Themistocles though he lived an hundred and seven years, yet at his death complained, saying, Now I am to die when I begin to be wise. Solon said, that though old, yet he thought not himself too old to learn: and Julian the Lawyer was wont to say, that when he had one foot in the grave, yet he would have the other in the School.

Because our dayes upon earth are a shadow] Fluxa, instabilia, & ipsa ultro abiens, saith Junius, unsubstantial, unsetled, uncertain, there is no hold nor tack in it, Psalm 102. 11. 1 Chron. 29. 15. What is man but a dream of a shadow, saith Pindarus, a shadow of smoke, saith Sophocles; a shadow of a shadow, saith Æschylus. He is therefore not a man, but a shadow of man (as Lamechs second wives name was Zillah a shadow of a wife; and as Menander calleth a false friend εἴδωλα σκιᾶς, the shadow of a friend) he hath not so much as shadow of reason or true understanding, who by spending the span, by wasting the shadow of this short life, after the wayes of his own heart, bereaveth himself of a room in that city of pearls, and loseth the comforts of that life which lasteth for ever.

σκιᾶς ὄναρ, καπνὸ σκιὰ, εἴδωλον σκιᾶς. Tsillah. umbra ipsius.

Verse 10. Shall they not teach thee, and tell thee] They, that is, the forefathers, vers. 8. these, though dead and gone, yet by their records and monuments, by their Apopthegmes and Oracles (for the words of dying men are living oracles) do still teach us and tell us their minds, as if they were yet living, Heb. 11. 4. Luke 16. 29. Books are mute matters, silent voices. The way to be wise, said an Heathen, is to converse with the dead. Histories are faithful Counsellors, and by the reading of them, many young men have attained to more understanding then their elders, as Augustus, Theodosius, Macarius, who was sirnamed παιδαγέρων, the old youth, for his wisedom and gravity above his years gotten by reading and prayer, as saith Nicephorus.

τοῖς νέκροις συγχρῆσθαι.

And utter words out of their hearts] Discourses digged out of their own hearts, things new and old, thrown out of that good treasure: they were egregie cordati homines, hearty good men, and their speeches were heart-sprung dipt in their hearts, and there recalled ad limam, priusquam ad linguam, weighed before uttered. They spake not as thou dost Job, rashly and at random, but judiciously, solidly, oraculously: consult them therefore, and as they speake from their own heart, so let them speak to thine. With the ancient is wisedom, and in length of dayes understanding, chap. 12. 12.

ἐ cordibus, non ἐ codicibus.

Verse 11. Can the rush grow up without mire?] Jam subjungit quod illi exploratum habuerant, & perfectum, sed elegantissimilitudine, saith Mercer: That is, here Bildad setteth forth what the fathers had observed, taught, and told them: and this

this he doth by three elegant ſimilitudes, which was a way of teaching uſual among the ancients, ut quod per ſimplex præceptum teneri non poſſit, per ſimilitudines teneretur, that that which could not be remembred by ſimple precepts, might be retained by ſimilitudes drawn from natural things, which are as ſhadows to us of ſpiritual. And firſt from the ruſh, which hath its name from drinking; becauſe it lives in liquor, it loves and delights in a mooriſh ſoyle. Can the ruſh (or bul-ruſh, Exod. 2. 3. Iſai. 18. 2.) grow up? Heb. peirk and pride it ſelf, bear the head aloft, ſhoot up amain, without mire or moiſture, ſuch as are the fennes, chap. 40. 21.? The meaning hereof is, ſaith Ferus, Look how the ruſh and flag grow not but in miry places; remove them to dry and firm ground, and they ſoon wither: So the wicked hypocrite in proſperity maketh a great ſhew of piety; but in adverſity he loſeth that very ſhew, and by his impatiency maketh the hollowneſſe of his heart appear to all men: and herein Bildad aimed at the making of Jobs caſe odious, whom he now held for an hypocrite. Hieron. in cap. 19. Matth.

Can the flag] Or graſſe of the meadow? Gen. 41. 2. it hath its name from brotherhood, becauſe many piles of graſs or ſedg, grow from one and the ſame root, but not without water. See 1 Kings 18. 5. Sic mala quædam olitores Germanitatis vocant.

Verſe 12. whilſt it is yet in his greenneſſe &c.] And ſo withereth not through age, as being but in its ſhooting up.

And not cut downe] Or, cropt off, either by the hands of men, or teeth of beaſts.

It withereth] for want of water, without ſtore whereof it cannot live. The Hypocrite is a ſenſualliſt, Jude 18. 19. Job 21. 11. Hoſ. 4. 11. he liveth in ſuch miry places, as cannot be healed by the waters of the Sanctuary, Ezek. 47. 11. He ſaith, as the Vine and the Olive in Jothams parable, I cannot leave my wine, my fat and ſweet ſins, take away my liquor, you take away my life: He ſerveth not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt (whatever he pretendeth) but his own belly, Rom. 16. He followeth Chriſt for the loaves only.

Before any other herb] That is, of leſſe ſhew, but better rooting: theſe retain their verdure, and look on, as it were, to ſee the ruſh wither; ſo David did by Doeg, Pſalm 52. 5, 6, 8.

Ver. 13. So are the paths of all that forget God] To remember God is as neceſſary as to draw breath, ſaith Chryſoſtome. This the wicked man doth not, Pſalm 9. 17. He will neither have God in his head, Pſalm 10. 4. nor heart, Pſalm 14. 1. nor words, Pſalm 12. 2. nor wayes, Tit. 1. 16. What wonder then though his paths wither, though his life, health, wealth, power, periſh, ſith he is in ſuch a poſture of diſtance from, and defiance with the fountaine of living waters, the Father of all mercy and conſolation; by whoſe favour ſuch flouriſh for a time, ſed exoriuntur, ut exurantur?

And the hypocrites hope ſhall periſh] Every wicked man is an hypocrite, and if there were nothing elſe to evince it, yet his very hope and groundleſſe confidence in the mercies of God without warrant of a promiſe, would undoubtedly prove it. Præſumendo ſperat, & ſperando perit, ſaith an Ancient; he preſumptuouſly hopeth, and by hoping periſheth: he layes his own ſhadow for a bridg, and ſo muſt needs fall into the brook: Truſt thou in the Lord and do good, ſaith David, Pſalm 37. 3. But this man, though he cannot tell of one tear for ſin, nor one hour ſpent in the practice of mortification, yet he affirmeth deeply of going to heaven, and is ready to rap, yea bounce at heaven-gate with Lord, Lord, open unto us: But what ſaith the Pſalmiſt? As for ſuch as turn aſide into their crooked wayes (though they do it never ſo ſlily, as if they would ſteal a paſſage to hell, and the world never the wiſer) the Lord ſhall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity, with groſſe offenders, as malefactors are led forth to execution: and when the filthy ſinner (ſo the word here rendred hypocrite ſignifieth) goes damned to hell, what ſhall become of the zealous profeſſor, with all his fair hopes and poſſibilities? Surely God rejecteth their confidences, they ſhall not proſper in them, Jer. 2. 37. Pſal. 125. 5.

Verſe 14. Whoſe hope (or whoſe folly, that is, whoſe fooliſh hope) ſhall be cut off] The Latine tranſlation hath it, his folly ſhall not pleaſe him, ſc. when once he ſeeth by the diſappointment of his high hopes, what a fools paradiſe he had wrought himſelf into, what pains he hath taken to go to hell, his hope ſhall be cut off: and that is the greateſt cut in the world. This, Bildad telleth the hypocrite twice over: becauſe he will hardly be drawn to believe it. But that he telleth Job ſo, as if he were this hopeleſſe hypocrite, he is quite beſide the cuſhion, as we ſay.

that

Hypocritis nihil ſtupidius.

And whoſe truſt ſhall be a ſpiders web] Wherein there is much artifice, but no ſtrength. Truſt is ſomewhat more then hope: it is a bearing a mans ſelf bold upon aſſurance that all ſhall be well: ſuch was that of Babylon in their proviſion, laid in to hold out a ſiege of 20 years laſting. Such alſo is that of myſtical Babylon, who ſaith, I ſhall ſee no ſorrow, Rev. 18. 6. But this truſt never triumpheth. It is (by a ſecond compariſon) here fitly ſet forth by a ſpiders web, Heb. a ſpiders houſe; ſo called becauſe therein the ſpider lodgeth her ſelf, as if ſafe, and out of harms way, which is nothing ſo. A Reverend man cleareth the compariſon thus, Firſt, the ſpiders web is made out of her own bowels, (her motto was mihi ſoli debeo) ſo is the hypocrites hope meerly from his own brain and imagination. Secondly, though this web be curiouſly framed, yet it only catcheth flies: ſo do hypocrites look after ceremonies, and not ſubſtance. Thirdly, the ſpider is full of poyſon, and remaineth in a duſty naſty hole, though ſhe work never ſo curiouſly: ſo doth the hypocrite abide in his unregeneracy &c. Fourthly, ſhe gets to the top of the window, as high as ſhe can: and then when ſhe falls, ſhe falls to the bottom, for nothing ſtayes her: ſo here. Fifthly, when the beſome comes, ſhe and her web are ſwept away, and ſhe is trodden under foot: ſo are all preſumptuous hypocrites. Beckets friends adviſed him (for his ſecurity) to have a Maſſe in honour of Saint Steven, to keep him from the hands of his enemies: he did ſo, but it ſaved him not. Contrarily, a poor perſecuted Hugonot in the Maſſacre at Paris had crept into a hole, a ſpider comes and weaves a cobweb over it. The murtherers therefore preſumed him not there, and ſo he was preſerved. What cannot the Lord do by the weakeſt means that may be?

Iſa. 59. 5.

Verſe 15. He ſhall lean upon his houſe] The ſpider ſhall, ſo Vatablus taketh it: but better, the hypocrite leaneth, or layeth his whole weight upon his houſe, that is, wealth, children, friends, clients, tenants &c. as did Doeg, Pſal. 52. 7. Haman, Eſth. 4. 11. That profane Earl of Weſtmorland, who ſaid that he needed not at all to pray to God, for he had tenants enow to pray for him. Bildad probably glanceth here at Job, as if he had once truſted in his riches, relations &c. which yet Job diſavoweth, chap. 31.

But it ſhall not ſtand] No more then the ſpiders houſe doth, born down ſometimes by her very waight, and not only by the wind. Hypocrites ruine their own houſes by their ſins, and particularly by relying on them. Though thou build thy palace as high as heaven, ſaid the Oracle to Phocas, yet ſin that lieth at the bottom will be the ruine of it.

He ſhall hold it faſt] Mordicus tenebit, he ſhall hold it, not with his hands only, but with his teeth alſo, as Cynegirus did the Perſian ſhip, or as a drowning man doth the branch of a tree.

But it ſhall not endure] All will not do, riches avail not in the day of wrath &c. An hypocrite runs in his trouble to former falſe refuges, he truſted to his legs, or repairs to his buſhes, as the hunted hare doth to the places that ſhe uſed when ſhe lived at quiet, thither ſhe flies when ſhe knows not how elſe to eſcape, but all to no purpoſe.

Verſe 16. He is green before the Sun] Succoſus eſt, ſaith Tremellius, he is ſappy and juicy, having a confluence of all kind of comforts and contentments, even more then heart could wiſh, as David expreſſeth it, Pſalm. 73. 7. The hypocrite is all this; the height of whoſe happineſſe is here ſet forth by a third ſimilitude, leſt any ſhould think that the two former did not reach home to the thing intended. Look how, ſaith Bildad, a great and tall tree, having many roots and branches, may be ſo cut up and thrown down, that no foot-ſtep, or ſign of it may any more appear: So may it fare with a wicked man, though he be as a tree green or juiceful before the Sun, or when the Sun ſhineth hotteſt upon him: the ruſh may then wither, but not the tree. See Pſalm 37. 35. An hypocrite may abound exceedingly in outward proſperity; yea he may be green for a while before the Sun of perſecution, as was Alexander the Copperſmith, Acts 19. 32. with 2 Tim. 4. 14. The thorny ground ſtood out the heat of the Sun-beams, and ſhrank not in the wetting &c.

And

And his branch ſhooteth forth in his garden] Mr. Broughton tranſlates, His ſuckers ſprout out over his orchyard, that is, he growes luxuriouſly eminent in the place where he liveth, which he hath made to become a kind of a paradiſe, or garden of delight. By garden here we are to underſtand, ſaith Mercer, all thoſe waies and means whereby a wicked man fenceth and increaſeth his own greatneſſe. Some of the Jew-Doctors, and others alſo after them, think that Bildad here beginneth to ſpeak of the godly mans happineſſe; and they read the text thus, But the perfect man (ſo they ſupply the text out of verſe 20.) is green before the Sun, and his branches &c. His roots are wraped near the fountain, and he windeth himſelf about the ſtony building; (that is, it ſpreadeth and twiſteth its boughs round about the fountain-vault; being ſtrongly built with ſtone) ſhall he be taken out of his place, which may deny, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee? No, that cannot be. Lo this ſhall be that joy of his way, even out of his mould ſhall others grow, i. e. his very duſt ſhall live and grow up after him. Thus Beza, and after him Diodate: he is like an exquiſite tree ſet in a pleaſant garden in ſight of his maſters palace, ſucking the ſweet moiſtneſſe of the quick-ſprings, without ever fading or withering, Pſalm 1. 3. Jer. 17. 8. That is to ſay, he ſhall have a lively root of faith, continually nouriſhed by Gods grace; under his ſafe-guard and favour he ſhall be ſtrong in all aſſayes, abundant in good works, and all manner of bleſſings. Uterque ſenſus egregius eſt, ſaith Mercer; this alſo is a good ſenſe, but the former I conceive to be the better, and more agreeable to the letter of the text.

Verſe 17. His roots are wrapped about the heap &c.] i. e. they are deeply intrenched, and ſtrongly incorporated into the ground, wreathed in with the heap, as thorns about a hedge. The hypocrite ſeemeth to be notably well rooted, not in the world only, but in the Church too, which we may compare (as Plato doth man, whom he calleth φυτὸν ἔφθιον, an heavenly plant) to a tree inverted, with the root above, and the branches below. Our Saviour ſpeaketh of branches in him (ſeemingly ſo) that bear not fruit, John 15. 2. Theſe are hypocrites, who think themſelves to be rooted in Chriſt, and others alſo think no leſſe of them, but it proves otherwiſe, for they are fruitleſſe; as a poll fixed in the earth, but not rooted there, as a rotten leg cleaves to the body, but is no part of it; or as wens and ulcers which are taken away without any loſſe to it. How farre an hypocrite may go, ſee the parable of the ſtony and thorny grounds, Matth. 13. See alſo Heb. 6. 4, 5. and 10. 29 2 Pet. 2. 20, 21. He may come as far as Kadeſh-barnea, within eleven dayes journy of the heavenly Canaan, and yet fall ſhort of it: he may ſeem to be ſtedfaſt and unmoveable, as a tree whoſe roots are wrapped about a rock. Intricantur.

He ſeeth the place of ſtones] Mr. Broughton rendreth it, He platteth about the houſe of ſtone: others, He looketh into the houſe of ſtone; he looks in at the windowes, and ſo hindreth the light, annoying the maſters houſe both below and above, who therefore reſolves to have him down: as it followeth.

Verſe 18. If he deſtroy him from his place] If he ſtub up this green tree, no better ſurely then the Cyparit, of which Pliny writeth that it beareth fruit to no purpoſe, ſmall berries, bitter leaves, that it yeilds an ill ſmell, and no pleaſant ſhade: or as the box-tree, green indeed all the year about, but of an offenſive ſmell, no fruit, and ſuch a ſeed as all living creatures hate. Now if he, that is, Almighty God, deſtroy him, that is, the hypocrite, as he will do queſtionleſſe (totally and ſpeedily ſwallowing him up) what then? Plin. lib. 16.

Then it ſhall deny him, ſaying, I have not ſeen thee] Heb. It ſhall tell a lie of him &c. the place as aſhamed to own him, ſhall feign and ſay, We have not ſeen him, we know not what is become of him. So Pſalm 37. 35, 36. As they have denyed the Lord that bought them, 2 Pet. 2. 1. So they ſhall one day be denied by the places they have bought or builded, by the people that once clawed them, and cryed them up.

Verſe 19. Behold, this is the joy of his way] q. d. A goodly joy! ſure the hypocrites joy is but the hypocriſie of joy, a little counterfeit complexion, like a ſlight daſh of rain, a handful of bruſh wood, or ſear thorn under the pot, Eccleſ. 7. 6. or as weeds that grow on the top of the water, floating aloft, but touch not the bottome. Though it be an exulting joy, (as the word ſignifieth) a leaping joy (ſuch as is that of dogs leaping upon their maſters returning home after a journey) yet it is not Ut canes ſolent quando peregrè advenienti Domino adulantur.

laſting; it goes out as a ſnuffe, or as a blazing ſtar, or at beſt as the fire of thornes, Pſalm 118. 12. Yea, though for the time it hath been ſo great, that if it had continued but a while, it would have overwhelmed them, ſo that their ſpirits would have expired, as ſome Apoſtates have profeſſed; they have thought themſelves in heaven ſometimes, and have rejoyced accordingly. ὡδὲ δὲ προσποιοῦσιν μάτην. Nat.

And out of the earth ſhall others grow] Alii qui alieni erunt ab eo. Others who had no relation to him ſhall ſucceed him, enjoy his eſtate, and eat the ſweet of all his labours, chap. 27. 16, 17. Eccleſ. 2. 18. and 4. 8. Prov. 12. 3. A man ſhall not be eſtabliſhed by wickedneſſe; but the root of the righteous ſhall not be moved. See another ſenſe of this, and the three foregoing verſes, verſe 16. Druſ.

Verſe 20. Behold God will not caſt away a perfect man] Epilogus ſermonis Bildad: This is the Epilogue or cloſe of Bildads ſpeech to Job; and it hath been the tartneſſe of a threatning mixed with the ſweetneſſe of the promiſe: ſowre and ſweet, we ſay, make the beſt ſawce. The ſtrong God will not uſe, or rather, abuſe his power, to the rejecting or reprobating (as the Septuagint render it) of an upright perſon; but will help him by taking him by the hand, as it followeth in the next clauſe, and taking it ill if others do not ſo too, Iſa 51. 18. He will never leave them (or if ſometimes he ſeem to leave them, yet) he will not forſake them, Heb. 13. 5. forſake them he may, in regard of viſion, but not of union, defert them for a time (as he did Chriſt himſelf) but not diſ-inherite them. When they be in the land of their enemies (and ſo may ſeem quite caſt away) I will not caſt them away, neither will I abhor them to deſtroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them, for I am the Lord their God, Lev. 26. 44. Lo this is the portion of a perfect man. As for hypocrites (who are ſemiperfectæ virtutis homines, as Philo calleth them, cakes half-baked, Hoſ. 7. 8. Chriſtians almoſt, but not altogether, Acts 26. 29.) My God will caſt them away, becauſe they did not hearken unto him, Hoſ. 9. 15. Mercer.

Neither will he help the evil doers] Heb. He will not lay hold upon the hand, viz. to help them; or he will not take by the hand the evil-doers that make a trade of ſin; he will have no communion or commerce with ſuch, he will not ſtrike hands, or joyn hands with them, but waſh his hands of them for ever, ſhake them off with a Diſcedite, Depart ye, be packing: ſo ſhould we. See Deus both practice Pſal. 26. 4, 5 and prayer, verſe 9. Gather not my ſoul with ſinners &c. It was once the prayer of a good Gentlewoman, when ſhe was to die, being in much trouble of conſcience, O Lord, let me not go to hell where the wicked are; for, Lord, thou knoweſt I never loved their company here. Non porriget manum malignis. Vulg.

Verſe 21. Till he fill thy mouth with laughing &c.] Here he applies the promiſe of the divine help to Job, and that which is here ſpoken, debent & reliqui fideles ad ſe transferre, ſaith Lavater, every true believer muſt take home to himſelf: God will turn all their ſadneſſe into gladneſſe, all their ſighing into ſinging, all their tears into triumphs, their ſorrowful out-cryes into joyful jubilees. In the tranſgreſſion of an evil man there is a ſnare or a cord, viz. to ſtrangle his joy with, to check and choak all his comforts; but the righteous ſing and rejoyce Prov. 29. 6. They may do ſo here amidſt all their troubles, 2 Cor. 7. 4. As the Lily looks freſh and beautiful, and blithe, though among thorns: they ſhall do ſo hereafter, when they enter into the joy of their maſter. See Iſa. 65. 13. A joy fitter to be believed, then poſſible to be diſcourſed. See a ſhadow of it, Pſalm 126. 1, 2.

Verſe 22. They that hate thee ſhall be clothed with ſhame] It ſhall cover their faces, Pſalm 69. 7. yea, over-cover the whole man; when beyond all expectation they ſhall ſee thee reſtored to thy former proſperity. Where it is worth conſidering, ſaith one, how truly this fell out touching Job, and theſe his friends; he was reſtored, and they by Gods reproving them, covered with ſhame, as it appeareth chap. 42.

And the dwelling place of the wicked ſhall come to nought] Heb. ſhall not be. See ver 18. Underſtand it not of his tabernacle only, or dwelling-place, but of his whole eſtate, both temporal and ſpiritual, all ſhall come to wrack and ruine. God ſhall utterly overturn them, as Ziſca did thoſe three hundred Monaſteries, and among the reſt that famous Monaſtery called, the Kings Court, a mile from Prague: in the walls whereof, the whole Bible was moſt exquiſitely written in letters of gold. The houſe of the wicked ſhall be overthrown, but the tabernacle of the upright ſhall flouriſh, Prov. 14. 11. Mr. Clark in his life.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

Verſe 1. Then Job anſwered and ſaid]

HE anſwered to his two friends who had formerly ſpoken: firſt, to that of Eliphaz, chap. 4. 17. And next to that of Bildad, chap. 8. 3. Bildad had interrupted him when he would have excuſed himſelf, that he did by no means deny the juſtice of God, as they miſtook him. Now therefore, that Bildad had ſpoke his utmoſt, Job beginneth to diſpute and to declare his judgment concerning that ſubject: and this he doth longè magnificentiùs & auguſtiùs quàm ſocii, ſaith Mercer, far more magnificently and majeſtically then his two friends had done; proving that God is juſt, even then when he afflicteth the innocent: neither have ſuch any juſt cauſe to except againſt his proceedings in that behalf, ſith he fetcheth not the cauſes of his decrees and purpoſes from the things which he governeth, but his will, which is before all things, is the rule of all juſtice. St. Paul alſo had reſpect unto this, Rom. 9. 20. & 11. 32. riſing a great deal higher, namely, to the eternal decree of Election and Reprobation: after this, Job ſetteth forth what is the condition of men, and what poor things they are in compariſon of God, thereby to bring himſelf and others to the true knowledg of God, and of themſelves, which is the higheſt wiſedome in the world.

Verſe 2. I know it is ſo of a truth] Bildads argument was, God who hath puniſhed thee is juſt, therefore thou art unjuſt. Job grants the Antecedent here, but denies and refutes the conſequent, verſe 22, 23. &c. To Eliphaz alſo Job grants, not only that man could not be more juſt then God, as he had ſaid, chap. 4. 3. but alſo that none could ever be found ſo juſt, that he might any way be compared to God. Job is one of thoſe Candidates of Immortality, who can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth, 2 Cor. 13. 8. every parcel whereof he accounted precious, and could not but be a friend to it, though brought by them who ſeemed his enemies; this ſpoke him ingenuous and humble, a well-tempered champion for the truth: Athanaſius is ſaid to be ſuch another, and ſo Mr. Bucer. Helvidius is taxed by Hierome, for the contrary, and B. Mountague, by D. Rivet.

But how ſhould man be juſt with God?] Mr. Broughton tranſlateth, And how can man be juſt before the Omnipotent? Sorry, ſickly, wretched man, how can he be juſt (ſc. by an inherent righteouſneſſe; by an imputed he may) before the moſt Holy and Almighty God; or compared to him? Job afterwards ſetting himſelf by God, and conſidering the infinite diſtance and diſproportion, crieth out, I abhor my ſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes, chap. 42. 5. 6. I ſay likewiſe, Woe is me, for I am undone, chap. 6. 5. He that hath looked a while intentively upon the body of the Sun, is ſo dazeled with the beams thereof, that he can ſee nothing.

Verſe 3. If he will contend with him] If any one would be ſo fool-hardy, or adventurous, as to diſpute with God about his judgments, he could not, though hee were never ſo wiſe, or well-skilled, anſwer him one objection of a thouſand, but muſt needs yeild and ſay, I am no fit match for God. The Jew-Doctors (and after them Vatablus) ſet this ſenſe upon the text, If he (that is, if man) ſhould contend with him, (that is, with God, as through the Luciferian pride of his heart, he is apt enough to do) he would not anſwer him one of a thouſand: God would not honour him ſo far as to anſwer ſo contemptible an adverſary, and ſo ſlight and ſenſeleſſe arguments; if he vouch ſafe an anſwer, it ſhall not be ſo much as the Eccho giveth the voice: it ſhall not be to one article or argument of a thouſand. Egregius quidem ſenſus, ſaith Mercer: this is a good ſenſe, but the other is better, and well agreeth with verſe 14.

Verſe 4. He is wiſe in heart, and mighty in ſtrength] And muſt therefore needs be a moſt juſt judg, ſith he neither wanteth wiſedome to judge, nor power to execute: what then ſhould turn him out of the track of Juſtice? Let God be juſt and true, but every man a liar: as it is written, That thou mighteſt be juſtified in thy ſayings, and mighteſt overcome (or be clear) when thou judgeſt, or when thou art judged: for at Pſalm 51. 4. Rom. 3. 4.

the ſame time that God doth judg, or execute judgment upon any, he may alſo be ſaid to be judged: whilſt men paſſe their cenſures, either as applauding or diſliking his judgments: and then may he be ſaid to overcome, when judged, when men acknowledge the juſtice of his judgments, when they conclude him wiſe in heart, that is, the only wiſe God, 1 Tim. 1. 17. and mighty in ſtrength, that is, the mighty ſtrong God, Iſai. 9. 6. Who doth whatſoever he will in heaven and earth, Pſal 115. 3. In ſpeaking of theſe and other his moſt glorious attributes, we ſpeak non quantum debemus, ſed quantum poſſumus, not ſo much as we ought, but ſo much as we are able. As for the wiſedome of God, Nemo ſapientiam Dei immenſam in omnem æternitatem exhauriet, (ſaith Gratian the Emperour in an Epiſtle to Ambroſe) no man ſhall ever be able to fathome or find it out. And as for his power, ſo infinite is the diſtance betwixt God, and the greateſt Noble, that it is an honour that they may be ſuffered to live in his ſight, Exod. 24. 10, 11. And it is all one with God whether againſt a man, or a nation, Job 34. 29.

Who hath hardened himſelf againſt him, and hath proſpered?] Inſtance but any one, whether tongue-ſmitter, or hand-ſmiter, that could ever boaſt of the laſt blow, or could cry, Victoria; Quis dura locutus eſt ei? ſo ſome render it. Who ever uttered hard ſpeeches (Jude 15) ſtout words, Mal. 3. 13. againſt God, and proſpered, ſcaped ſcot-free, as we ſay, and had not his full payment? Blaſphemers ſet their mouths againſt heaven, witneſſe Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Julian, &c. dealing with Almighty God, as if Auguſtus Cæſar were dealing with ſome god Neptune; Caligula with his Jupiter, whom he dared to a duel: or the three ſons trying their archery at their fathers heart, to ſee who can ſhoot higheſt. But ſhall they thus eſcape by iniquity? No; In thine anger caſt down the people, O God. Pſalm 56. 7. The wall of Aphek did execution upon the blaſphemous Syrians; the Angel of God upon the Aſſyrians: his viſible vengeance fell upon Julian, Arius, and Olympius an Arian biſhop, who denying the Trinity, was ſtruck with three thunderbolts, and killed in a bath. Others underſtand here the word Libbo, and read it thus, who hath hardened his heart againſt him? &c. Surely if men harden their hearts, God will harden his hand, and haſten their deſtruction. See Prov. 29. 1. Iſai. 6. 10, 11. Rom. 2. 5. and get thy flinty heart made fleſhy, ſith an hard heart is in ſome reſpect worſe then hell (which is the juſt hire of it) ſith one of the greateſt ſins is far greater in evil, then any of the greateſt puniſhments.

ἢ μ' ἀνδρὶ ἢ ἐγὼ σε. Lonicer. theat. hiſtor.

Verſe 5. Which removeth the mountains, and they know not] For further proof of Gods power firſt (and then afterwards of his wiſedome) Job produceth divers particular acts of his upon the creatures, both unreaſonable and reaſonable. Eliphaz had ſaid ſomewhat to this purpoſe chap. 4. Sed hic admirandus eſt Job, ſaith Mercerus, Job doth it admirably: his tongue like a ſilver trumpet, ſets forth the high praiſes of God far more plainly, plentifully and magnificently then any of his friends, who yet have done it very well too. God to ſhew his power, removeth the mountains, ſaith Job, ſc. by ſtupendious earthquakes, and otherwiſe, at his pleaſure, Nahum 1. 5. Pſalm 97. 4, 5. Iſa. 40. 15. he taketh up the Iſles as a very little thing; he can remove mountains with a wet finger, as we ſay, though ſo mighty in bulk, and ſtrongly founded. Dionyſius thinketh, that in thus ſpeaking, Job aimeth at that which was done in the time of Noahs flood, when the waters with their mighty force, galled and bare down many great mountains, but that's uncertaine. Great things God will do by the fire of the laſt day, when mountains ſhall melt, rocks rent, and the earth with the works therein, ſhall be all burnt up, 2 Pet. 2. 10. And what deſolations he hath made in ſundry parts of the earth by terrible earth-quakes, as at Antioch often (which was there-hence called Θεόσεισις, becauſe ſo viſited by God) in divers places of Italy, Sicily, Burgundy, Helvetia, and here in Hereford-ſhire, mention is made in Pliny, Stumpfius, Jovius, and other hiſtorians, all making good this of Job, and that of the Pſalmiſt, The mountains will skip like rammes, and the little hills like lambs, when the Lord is diſpleaſed, Pſalm 114. 4.

Joſeph. Celven. Plin l. 2. cap. 83. Camb Britan.

And they know it not] Dicto citius, it is done with a trice, ſpeedily and ſecretly, before the mountains (if they could at all know) could know what is done to them; or before the mountaineers or the neighbourhood could foreſee and avoid the danger of being overwhelmed and buried alive.

Which overturneth them in his anger] Or, that he overturneth them in his anger.

Men

Men are not ſenſible of Gods anger for ſin, no not in the greateſt commotions, ſuch is their ſtupidity; but will needs ſwelter and pine away in their iniquities as if nothing could awake them, Levit. 26. 39.

Verſe 6. Which ſhaketh the earth out of her place] By mighty earthquakes, diſlocating the earth, ſome part of it; for the whole was never removed, though God can take up the whole Globe as a man would do a ball, toſſing the very center it ſelf whereon it is eſtabliſhed, 2 Sam. 22. 8. &c. There is a twofold power of God, 1. Abſolute. 2. Actual. By the former he can do more then he doth: By the latter, whatſoever he willeth, that without impediment he effecteth. As for the earth, as God upholdeth it by the word of his power, Heb. 1. 3. ſo he hath poiſed it meerly by its own weight, that it ſhould not be removed for ever, Pſalm 104. 5. For if you imagine that the earth could be removed out of its natural place, which way ſo ever it be removed, it ſhall move towards heaven, and ſo ſhall naturally aſcend: but to do ſo is utterly repugnant to the nature of the earth, which is, to bear downward. All which notwithſtanding, the God of nature, as he is in the heaven, ſo he doth whatſoever he will in heaven and earth.

Verſe 7. Which commandeth the Sun, and it riſeth not] God in framing the world, began above, and wrought downward: but Job in deſcribing the great works of God here, began below: and now goes upward from earth to heaven. It is as natural to the heaven to move, as to the earth to ſtand ſtill. Copernicus his opinion, that the earth turns round, and heaven ſtands ſtill, is worthily exploded: round the earth is indeed, notwithſtanding the hills and vallies (as an apple is round, notwithſtanding ſome knots and bunches in it:) and being round, it is naturally apt for motion (the Pythagoreans held, that the earth was naturâ ſuâ mobilis, as the heavens are) but God hath fixed and made it unmoveable, whiles the heavenly bodies are reſtleſſe in their courſes. The Sun (the gliſtering Sun, as the word here ſignifieth) rejoyceth as a ſtrong man to run his race, Pſalm 19. 5. Bellarmine ſaith, that in the eighth part of an hour the Sun runneth 700 miles. But God the Soveraign of the Sun can ſpeak to it, and it riſeth not. If he do but give the word of command to the Sun not to riſe, the morning ſhall be made darkneſſe, Amos 4. 13. and the day dark with night Amos 5. 8. Was it not ſo in that three dayes darkneſſe in Egypt? in that miraculous ſtanding ſtill of the Sun in Joſhua's dayes, when the Sun roſe not with the Antipodes one morning, and the ſtars were ſealed up part of the night? in that diſmal darkneſſe (mentioned by Lavater upon this text) March 12. 1585, laſting for a quarter of an houre, and being ſo like the night, that the fouls went to rooſt at noon, and many fell to their prayers for pardon of their ſins, as thinking verily that the day of judgment was come. St. Paul in the tempeſt at ſea ſaw neither Sun nor ſtars for many dayes, Acts 27. 20. And I have read of a forraigner, who having been in theſe parts in the deep of winter, and returning home again, deſired one that was then bound for England to commend him to the Sun when he next ſaw him, for I have not ſeen him there, ſaid he, of a whole fortnight together. Ezek. 32. 7. I will cover the Sun with a cloud; and, in that ſenſe, ſpeak to it that it riſe not.

De aſcenſ. ment. in Deum. grad. 7

Exod. 12. 21. Joſh. 10. 13.

And ſealeth up the ſtars] Heb. Sets a ſeal upon the ſtars, making them hide their heads, and with-draw their influences: for ſtars are Gods ſtore-houſes, Deut. 28. 12. which he openeth or ſhutteth at his pleaſure. Every ſtar is like a purſe of gold: out of which God can, when he will, throw down riches and plenty into the earth: but many of them never appear to us, though viſible to the Antipodes, Job 37. 7.

Verſe 8. Which alone ſpreadeth out the heavens] Without the help or counſel of any other. As God was alone and by himſelf in making the world, Iſa. 44. 24. ſo he is in ordering it, Job 37. 18. Pſalm 104. 1, 2. The Hebrews, as they held with Pythagoras in the point of tranſanimation, ſo with Plato in that falſe opinion of his, that the Angels were the movers of the heavens, and the governours of the whole world; whence grew that Angel-worſhip amongſt them, Col. 2. 18. As God made the heavens alone, even that whole Expanſe or Firmament, Gen. 1. 6. the whole region of the Ayre; ſo he ſtill ſpreadeth it out as a curtaine, which he draweth before the Sun and ſtarres, masking and muffling them up with clouds, whenſoever he pleaſeth.

And

And treadeth upon the waves of the ſea] Or, ſpurneth, exerciſing a regiment over the raging ſurges of the ſeas, though they ſeem to ſwell againſt him. Thus Job fetcheth evidences of Gods power from all places. See Pſalm 89. 9.

Verſe 9. Which maketh Arcturus, Orion and Pleiades] Thoſe glorious conſtellations, which do after a ſort, govern the four ſeaſons of the year: but are governed by God, from whoſe power all their influence and vertue is borrowed, even that which they exerciſe upon the raging ſeas. The Learned interpreters have not unfitly tranſlated Has Acturus, Cheſil Orion, Chimah Pleiades, or the ſeven ſtars, and the Climates of the South, the Summer ſignes; altogether neglecting the toyes of the unlearned Rabbines: which ſtars or ſigns are anſwerable to Autumn and Winter, the Spring-time, and Summer. But I had rather (ſaith Reverend Mr. Beza) retain ſtill the Hebrew words, then uſe the other: which have been ſo much abuſed with gloſure and impure tales and devices of the wicked and profane Poets. See the Note on Job 38.31.

Beza.

And the Chambers of the South] Interiora Auſtri, the moſt remote, hidden and ſecret parts of the South; ſo called, becauſe the ſtars which are under the Southern pole are hidden from us, and are encloſed and lodged as in a chamber. Thoſe ſtars (and ſo all the reſt) God maketh, that is, he maketh them to appear and do their office for the uſe and good of man. It is He alone that telleth the number of the ſtars, he calleth them by their names: neither can they do any thing but as they receive order and commiſſion from him. That was an idle brag of Aratus the Aſtrologer, that he had found out and ſet down the whole number of the ſtars: and that is a ſtrange arrogancy of the Kings of Mexico, who when they are conſecrated, are reported to take this oath, I ſwear that the Sun, during my life, ſhall hold on his courſe: and that the clouds ſhall ſend down rain, the rivers ſhall run, and the earth bring forth all manner of fruit &c.

Mr. Caryl. Pſalm 147. 4.

Aug de civ. Dei lib. 16.

Lopez de Gomara.

Verſe 10 Which doth great things &c.] See the Note on chap. 5. 9. whence this verſe is taken verbatim. If Eliphaz ſay the truth of Gods wiſedome and power, Job will ſoon ſeal to it: he can find in his heart to ſpeak all good of a wounding God, of a killing God, and not wiſh as Spira did, O that I were above God, and could overpower him! Or as Hacket here did, Anno 1591. threaten God to fire the heaven about him, to pluck him out of his throne &c.

Camd. Eliz. fol. 403.

Verſe 11. Lo he goeth by me, and I ſee him not] As he is powerful in his deeds, ſo he is ſecret in his deſigns, paſſing, and not repaſſing daily, but yet unſeen: he is every where preſent, and not ſo farre from any one of us, as the bark is from the tree; for in him we live, move, and have our being; and therefore we had need take heed what we ſay or think of him in any extremity or miſery, for he over-heareth us; yea, he knoweth our thoughts long before, Pſalm 139. 2. As a circumſpect judg that goeth obſcured under ſome diſguiſe, to hear and ſee what is ſaid and done by thoſe that are to be judged by him. Or as the Great Turk ſtanding behind the Arras, at the dangerous door, to hear all the debates and decrees of his Senate, and to call them to a ſtrict account of all afterwards: God, as he is inviſible, too ſubtile for ſinew or ſight to ſeize upon; ſo he is ὁλόφθαλμος, All-eye, to ſurvey and look round about us; yea, to ſee through us: The Lord is in his holy Temple, the Lords throne is in heaven: Howbeit, he is not ſo confined or ſhut up there (as the Epicures dreamt) but that his eyes behold, his eye-lids try the children of men, Pſalm 11. 4. The one points out his knowledge, the other his judgment, or his critical deſcant: he prieth into the very entrals of the ſoul, the heart of the heart, the reins, thoſe ſeats of luſt, and moſt abſtruſe parts of the body. No man needs a window in his breſt (as the Heathen Momus wiſht) for God to look in at: every man before God is all window, and he like the Optike vertue in the eye, ſeeth all, and is ſeen of none. Look to it therefore, and walk exactly. Cave, ſpectat Cato, Take heed, Cato ſeeth you, was an ancient watchword among the Romans, and a great retentive from vice: how much more ſhould this amongſt all men, Take heed, the Lord looks on? What though he be inviſible, and we ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, and we perceive him not; ſhall we, like the fooliſh Buſtard, thruſt our heads in an hole, and then think that becauſe we ſee none, we are therefore ſeen of none? The whole world is to God as a ſea of glaſſe, clear and tranſparent, Rev. 4.6. and his eyes are as a flaming fire, Rev. 1, 14. that need no outward light, but can ſee by ſending out a ray. God, that fills and sees all (saith Nazianzen) though he lighten the mind, yet flies before the beams thereof, still leaving it as it is able in sight to follow him; and so draws it by degrees to higher things: yet interposeth betwixt it and his incomprehensible Essence, as many vails as were over the Tabernacle. In carm.

Verse 12. Behold he taketh away] Raptim auferet, He snatcheth away, or taketh by force, as a Lion doth his prey, or a thief doth another mans goods: Confer Prov. 23.28. Which if he do, who can repel or turn him back? Here Job plainly alludeth to the taking away of his children, servants, and cattle, the likelihood also of losing his life (according to the Chaldee paraphrast) by his present miseries, which if it should befall him from God, it would not be safe for him to cavil, or once question Gods proceeding, to urge him to restitution, or charge him with oppression; sith he is chief Lord of all, and may do with his own what he pleaseth. He is uncontrollable as Nebuchadnezzar at length acknowledged, Dan. 4. 35. and his will is the true and only rule of justice it self, nec solum regula, sed & regula. Wherefore let all the earth keep silence before him, Hab. 2. 20. and let none presume once to ask him what he hath done, either to question his right to do it, or to question his righteousnesse in doing of it.

Verse 13. If God will not with-draw his anger] That is, of his own free accord forbear to execute his judgments, the stoutest must stoop; for he is in one mind, and who can turn him! and what his soul desireth even that he doth, Job 23. 13. his power is altogether irresistible. Men, though never so puissant, may be withstood and over-matched, as Asa was, 2 Chron 14. 8, 9. Nature may be resisted, and her power suspended, as when the fire burned not the three worthies, the red Sea drowned not the Israelites passing through it. In the creatures there is an essence, and a faculty whereby they work; between these God can separate, and so hinder their working. In the Angels there is an essence, and an executive power: God comes between these sometimes, and hinders them from doing what they would. But God is most simple and entire, and therefore the strong helper: Qui portant orbem, saith the Vulgar, that bear up the pillars of the world (which some understand of the Angels, others of the Saints, who stand in the gap, Ezek. 22. 30. and others again of carnal Combinations) shall not hinder him, but shall stoop and buckle under him, or under it, viz. his wrath, as not able to bear up: helpers shall prove no helpers against the mind and purpose of God: no, though they be as potent and as proud as Egypt (such an allusion there may be in the Hebrew text) or although they be helpers of latitude, as one rendreth it, that is, of the largest extent, either in power, or by an elate mind, and so the meaning is. None are so mighty, or so high-conceited of their own ability, but if he be angry, he wil make them to stoop under, as not being able to bear his wrath.

Verse 14. How much lesse shall I answer him] If heaven, earth, sea, cannot stand before him, if strongest men, and strongly befriended, and seconded, cannot make their party good with him, it is not for me to stout it out: but rather to stoop and strike sail, seeking to disarm his indignation by an humble yeildance; especially since I am not able to hold discourse with him, to answer him one of a thousand; I not only have not arguments, but I want fit words; not argumentative words only, but perswasive also.

And chuse out my words to reason with him?] Heb. Shall I chuse out words with him? Broughton renders it, Shall I chuse to word it with God? Surely my best eloquence in this case will be a submissive silence. It can be neither wisedome nor duty in me to deal with, and undertake God, either with an open or a closed hand; either with Logical subtilties, or rhetorical flourishes. If I should either be Respondent or Opponent, I should come off with losse.

Verse 15. Whom though I were righteous] Legally righteous, as none ever were, but the first and second Adam.

Yet would I not answer] viz. by pleading mine own righteousnesse, sith no created righteousnesse can answer God. Some render it, non attollam vocem, no hiscero quidem audebo, I will not lift up my voice, nor dare to mute against him. (See 1 Cor. 4. 4.) No though I were never so innocent, and did suffer this misery undeservedly.

But I would make supplication to my Judge] As he doth, though it were a good while while firſt, in the end of the next chapter. It is likely that he intended to do it ſooner, but was put by by his paſſions; which when they fume up into the head, gather ſo't into ſo thick a cloud, that we loſe the ſight of our ſelves, and what is beſt to be done. Jonas thought to have prayed chap. 4. 1, 2. but it proved a brawle; and when as by prayer he thought to overcome his anger, anger overcame him and his prayer too.

Verſe 16. If I had called and he had anſwered] If in confidence of mine own righteouſneſſe I had ſought ſome good thing at his hands, and he had therein condeſcended to me; yet would I not believe that he had (in mercy) hearkned to my voice; but rather, for a further miſchief, that he might roll himſelf upon me, as Joſeph upon his brethren, and as God did upon the Iſraelites after their quails; that he might tear them with his tempeſt &c. Some think that Job ſpeaketh theſe words, as deſpairing of audience, or denying Gods particular providence: but neither of theſe is likely. Rather it ſeemeth (ſaith Pineda) to be the ſpeech of a mind marvellouſly caſt down, and meanly conceited of himſelf, and of his prayer: and truſting to the goodneſſe of God alone; ſo Druſius. Job ſpeaketh not this, ſaith he, out of diffidence, but out of fear of Gods judgments; and ſenſe of his own imperfections.

Yet I would not believe that he had hearkned unto my voice] Namely, for any worth that he findeth in it: what am I poor creature, that I ſhould think I had carried the matter with God?

Verſe 17. For he breaketh me with a tempeſt] q. d. This is one thing alſo that maketh me think I am not heard, becauſe I am not helped; but after my prayer I am in as bad a caſe as before, and ſeem to have a repulſe from God. Afflictions continued are no evidence that prayer is not heard; yet uſually it is very inevident to an afflicted perſon, that his prayer is heard. The Hebrew (and ſo the Vulgar) hath it, He will break me, that is, ſaith one, If I ſhould plead before him as pure, although I might temporally, or for a time be delivered, yet I ſhould not finally eſcape deſtruction, although I ſhould give him none other cauſe. Whereby we may ſee upon what danger of being torn in pieces by Gods judgments, our juſticiaries put themſelves, that will needs go to God in their own righteouſneſſe, as the proud Phariſee, Luke 18. The calamity of theſe merit-mongers ſhall riſe ſuddenly. Behold a whirle-wind, or a tempeſt of the Lord goeth forth in fury, even a grievous whirle-wind; it ſhall fall grievouſly upon the head of theſe wicked ones, Jer. 23. 19. This Saint Paul knew, and therefore did his utmoſt that he might be found in Chriſt (ſc. when ſought for by the juſtice of God) not having his own righteouſneſſe, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Chriſt, the righteouſneſſe which is of God by faith. Philip. 3 9.

And multiplieth my wounds without cauſe] i. e. Without any other cauſe then to try me, and prove my patience, which now Job began to perceive, as Philip gathereth, or without any manifeſt cauſe, and perceivable by an afflicted man, ſo Aquinas ſenſeth it. God hath not told me the reaſon of his chaſtenings; but to increaſe my grief, he concealeth from me the cauſe of them; and yet he multiplieth ſtill my ſores and my ſorrows. Or without cauſe, that is, without any ſuch cauſe as his friends alledged againſt him, viz. that he was a rank hypocrite.

Verſe 18. He will not ſuffer me to take my breath] I am ſo far from a period, that I have no pauſe of my troubles. I cannot get any interſpiria's, or free breathing-whiles. See chap. 7. 19. And in the former verſe he had complained, that God had ſtormed him. Interim per Pathos, ſaith Mercer; here he returns to his old practice of expoſtulating about the greatneſſe of his grief, and ſpares not to hyperbolize. Beda, and others underſtand this text of a bodily diſtemper upon Job, which had made him ſhort-winded. And Lavater hath this good note here, Hoc cogitandum nobis eſt &c. Let this text be thought upon when our ſpirits begin to ſink; as alſo when by reaſon of the Ptiſick, or any other like diſeaſe, we feel a difficulty of breathing, and a ſtraitening of our pectorals, or be otherwiſe compaſſed about with great ſorrows.

But filleth me with bitterneſſe] Heb. He ſatiateth me with bitterneſſes, i. e. with ſore and ſharp afflictions, which are no way joyous, but grievous to the fleſh, Heb. 12. 11. Job had his belly-full of gall and worm-wood: he had not only a draught or two, but a diet-drink made him of moſt bitter ingredients. Of this he complaineth eth heavily: what then will the wicked do that muſt ſuck up the dregs of Gods cup, Pſalm 78. 8. which hath eternity to the bottom?

Verſe 19. If I ſpeak of ſtrength, lo he is ſtrong] Neither by might nor right can I deal with him: Broughton renders it, As for force, he is valiant; the Lord is a man of warre, ſaith Moſes, Exod. 15. 3. Yea, he is the Lord of armes, ſaith David, Pſal. 84. Yea, He alone is a whole army of men, Van & Rere both, ſaith Iſaiah cap. 52. 12. there is no doubt then, but he will carry the day, ſith no creature is able to grapple with him. The weakneſſe of God (if any ſuch thing there were) is ſtronger then men, 1 Cor. 1. 25. and by weakeſt means, he can effect greateſt matters, as once he did in Egypt.

And if of judgment, who ſhall ſet me a time to plead?] Who ſhall appoint the time and place of our meeting? If I ſhall go about to ſue him at law, I ſhall have but a cold ſuit, an ill pull of it: for who ſhall make him appear, or bring him to his anſwer? and where ſhall I find an advocate, a patron to plead my cauſe? yea, where ſhall I get a witneſſe? for ſo the vulgar reades it, Nemo audet pro me teſtimonium dicere: No man will be ſo bold as to give an evidence for me, or be a witneſſe on my ſide.

Verſe 20. If I juſtifie my ſelf] If, in default of other pleaders, I ſhould undertake to manage my cauſe my ſelf, I ſhould be never the neer.

Mine own mouth ſhall condemn me] i. e. God out of mine own mouth, as finding mine arguments weak and worthleſſe: He knowes us better then we know our ſelves, and when he comes to turn the bottom of the bag upwards (as once Joſephs ſteward did theirs) all our ſecret thefts will out, and thoſe will appear to be faults that we little thought of. A Dutch Divine, when to die, was full of fears and doubts, ſaid ſome to him, you have been ſo employed, and ſo faithful, why ſhould you fear? Oh, ſaid he, the judgment of man, and the judgment of God are different. Va hominum vitæ quantumvis laudabili, ſi remotâ miſericordiâ judicetur; Wo to the moſt praiſe-worthy man alive, if he meet with judgment without mercy. The beſt lamb ſhould abide the ſlaughter, except the ramme were ſacrificed, that Iſaak might be ſaved.

If I ſay, I am perfect] What if God had ſaid ſo, chap. 1. 1. yet Job might not; Prov. 27. 2. 2 Cor. 10. 18. Or if he do at any time juſtifie himſelf, as chap. 29. & 30 he doth, it is in his own neceſſary and juſt defence, againſt the charge of his friends. Real apologies we muſt ever make for our ſelves when wronged: verbal, if any, muſt be managed with meekneſſe of wiſedome.

Verſe 21. Though I were perfect] That is, of an unblameable converſation, yet could not I know mine own ſoul, that is, thoſe ſecret ſins Pſalm 19. 12. thoſe litters of luſts that lark therein, therefore I deſpiſe my life, I have no joy at all of it, but could wiſh to be out of the world, to be rid of theſe evil inmates, that will not out of doors till the houſe fall upon the heads of them, till the earthly Tabernacle that harboureth them be once diſſolved. Others read and ſenſe the words thus, I am perfect or upright, neither do I know mine own ſoul, i. e. quicquam perverſi in anima mea, any allowed ſin in my ſoul; yet I am ſo afflicted, that I deſpiſe my life, as being but a continued death. Aben-Ezra reads the verſe with an admiration, thus, Perfect I am; and think you that I know not mine own ſoul? that I am ſo great a ſtranger to my ſelf! or, that I have ſo little care of mine own good, as that I deſpiſe my life, and walk at all adventures? Tremellius thus, I am upright, whatever you my friends would make of me, neither value I my life or ſoul in compariſon of mine integrity: my life is but a trifle to my conſcience &c.

Verſe 22. This is one thing, therefore I ſay it] And will ſtand to it, though I ſtand alone; this being the one thing wherein I differ in opinion from you, and becauſe it is the hinge upon which the whole diſpute betwixt us is turned, therefore I will abide by it, and be Doctor reſolutus, reſolute in the maintenance of it, viz.

He deſtroyeth the perfect and the wicked] A harſh doctrine, yet a good one, ſaith an Interpreter: Grace is no target againſt the greateſt affliction. See Eccleſ. 9. 1, 2, 3. Mal. 3. 14. Ezek. 21. 3. Heb. 11. ſhewes that none out of hell have ever ſuffered more then Gods deareſt children: and Heb. 12. 6. He not only chaſteneth, but ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth. God will not caſt away a righteous man ſaid Bildad, chap. 8. 20. That is, totally destroy him in temporals, but restore him again: no such matter, saith Job, for it may, and many times doth fall out, that a godly man may as to this life present, perish, as well as a wicked man: he may be totally and finally bereft of outward comforts, The righteous perisheth, Isa. 57. 1. Only with this difference, as hath been before noted, Gods judgments on the wicked are penal and typical of eternal torment; whereas upon the godly they are no more then medicinal or probational &c.

Verse 23. If the scourge slay suddenly] By scourge here is meant a common calamity, such as rides circuit, compassing a country as a scourge doth a mans body round about. Any sweeping judgment is a swinging scourge in Gods hand; such as is the sword, Isai. 10. 26. which when it rides circuit (as a judge) it is in commission, Ezek. 14. 17. Jer. 47. 6, 7. devouring flesh, and drinking blood. Thus Attila the Hunne stiled himself Gods scourge. Tamerlane was commonly called The wrath of God, and terrour of the world. Think the fame of famine, pestilence, wilde beasts, Ezek. 14. 12. &c. these oft slay suddenly Isai. 30. 13. Jer. 18. 22. as did the sweating sickness here in England, the Massacre of France, and that later of Ireland, that scourge, if ever any, slew suddenly the perfect and the wicked. When an over-flowing storm sweeps away the wicked, the tail of it may dash their best neighbours.

Turk. hist. 211

He laugheth at the trial of the innocent] The Vulgar readeth, He will not laugh at the trial of the innocent: but there is no Not in the Original: others thus, will he laugh at the trial of the innocent? q. d. No, he will not. God may seem to slight his own in affliction, as Psalm 77. 2, 3. The Lion lets her whelps roare sometimes, till they do almost kill themselves with roaring. The truth is, (and I think the true sense of this Scripture) God scorneth the allegation of innocency, or the justification and plea of the most upright man breathing, in the way of exemption or prevention of his just and wise dispensations, when he pleaseth to inflict them, involving good and bad in the same common calamity.

Mr. Abbot.

Verse 24. The earth is given into the hand of the wicked] God many times suffereth the wicked most licentiously to raign in the world, Jer. 27. 6. Dan. 5. 18, 19. And it is thought by some, that Job speaking here in the singular number, aims at some famous tyrant in those parts, known both to himself and to his friends: such as was Phocas the Emperour, who when he had slain his Master Mauritius, and was set up in his stead; there was an honest poor man (saith Cedrenus) who was wonderful importunate at the throne of grace to know a reason why that wicked man prospered so in his design? he was answered again by a voice, that there could not be a worse man found; and that the sins of Christians, and of the City of Constantinople did require it.

He covereth the faces of the Judges thereof] i. e. That Tyrant above-mentioned, subverteth all order of justice, condemneth and putteth to death even the Judges themselves, if they will not pervert justice, as Bassianus did Papinian. The covering of the face was the mark of a condemned man, Esth. 7. 8. Job. 40. 8. Isai. 12. 17. Mar. 14. 65. Or thus, God blindeth the Judges by giving them over to error, or permitting them to take bribes; so that they cannot discern right from wrong &c. Some by judges here understand the Saints, who shall one day judg the world, but are in the mean-while grievously afflicted by the wicked.

Spartian.

If not, where, and who is he?] Which things, if we say they are done, besides the will and foreknowledg of God, we shall thrust God out of the world, and set up fate and blind fortune: or thus, It is even so, or if not, where is he, and who is he (see Esth. 7. 5. Mat. 2. 17) that can disprove what I have asserted? prodeat, fignis me potest fallere argutus, I would fain see the man that can convince me of errour.

Mercer. pagnin. Vatab.

Verse 25. Now my dayes are swifter then a post &c.] Not my prosperous dayes only (as Broughton gloseth) but the whole course of my life; the vanity whereof Job expresseth by many similitudes, and here search is made into three of the four Elements, earth, water, and ayr, to find out a fit one. What is swifter upon earth then a post, who rides without stop or stay, and spares for no horse-flesh: indeed he taketh some time to rest in, but so doth not mans life, it is ever in motion, and every moment we yield somewhat to death. Animantis cujusque vita fluxa, saith the Philosopher, our last day stands, the rest run. Cum crescit vita, decrescit, to live is but to lie a dying.

Sen.

They

They flee away] As David fled from the face of Absolom, Psalm 3. 1. as Brutius was adviſed by that Senator of Hala to flee for his life citò, citius, citiſſimè, with all poſſible ſpeed, ſith they were at hand that ſought it. See 1 Sam. 19. 11, 18.

They ſee no good] But are few, and withall evil, Gen. 47. 9. Job 14. 1. See the notes there. Some good dayes Job had had, but they were ſo ſoon over (and his preſent preſſures ſo great) that he was ſcarce aware of them, nor could take the comfort of them now: the Epicures indeed held that a man might be cheerful amidſt the moſt exquiſite torments ex præteritarum voluptatum recordatione, by the remembrance of thoſe pleaſures and delights that formerly he had enjoyed. Job held this but a ſlight comfort: his care was in proſperity how to make the beſt uſe of it: his thoughts ran upon the uncertainty of all creature-comforts, that he might hang looſe to them, and hold them no otherwiſe then a child doth a bird in his hand, open &c. Cic. de Fin. l. 2. Sen. de benef. l. 4. c. 22.

Verſe 26. They are paſſed away as the ſwift ſhips] Heb. They are changed (gliding away inſenſibly) as the ſhips of deſire (ſo called, becauſe they ſeem willing to be at the haven as ſoon as may be) or as the ſhips of Ebeh, a very ſwift river in Arabia, ſaith Rabbi Solomon; or as the Pirates ſhips, ſo Broughton, ſuch as are your nimble Frigots, fly-boats, and catches &c. Let our ſouls be like a ſhip which is made little and narrow down-ward; but more wide and broad upward. Let them be ſhips of deſire, haſtning heaven-ward; and then let our dayes paſſe away as they can, we ſhall but be the ſooner at home: Mortality ſhall appear to be no ſmall mercy. Labitur unda vadis abies. Virg.

As the Eagle that haſteth to the prey] When hunger addeth ſwiftneſſe to her wings, and maketh her pour, or ſowce down upon the prey like a thunderbolt; ſo tranſitory is our time: redeem it therefore. It is reported of Ignatius, that when he heard a clock ſtrike, he would ſay, Here is one houre more now paſt, that I have to anſwer for.

Verſe 27. If I ſay, I will forget my complaint,] And ſuffer in ſilence, as thou Bildad haſt adviſed me, chap. 8. 2. Sorrows are not ſo eaſily forgotten, Lam. 3. 19. remembring mine affliction and my miſery, the wormwood and the gall. The Stoicks boaſting of their indolency, or ability to bear afflictions, without making moane, or complaining, when it came to their own turn, found by experience that they had ſpoken more trimly then truely; and therefore one Dionyſius, ſirnamed Μεταθέμενος, or the Flincher, fell off (for this reaſon) from the Stoicks to the Peripateticks.

I will leave off my heavineſſe] Heb. my face, viz. the ſowrneſſe that uſed to ſit upon it, as 1 Sam. 1. 18. The Phariſees were vultuoſi tetrici inamœni, Matth 6. 16. of a ſad and ſowre countenance, grim, and ghaſtly: they affected to look like Scythians, as the word ſignifieth, that they might ſeem great faſters, when as inwardly they were merry and pleaſant. Jobs caſe was far different: his heart was heavy as lead, nevertheleſſe, to give content to his friends, he would endeavour to look lightſomely, but found a very hard task of it.

And comfort my ſelf] Heb. ſtrengthen, viz. ſo as not to make moane, but bite in my pain. Invalidum omne naturâ querulum, the weaker any thing is, the more apt it is to complaine; and on the contrary, ſome mens fleſh will preſently rankle and feſter, if but razed with a pin onely: ſo ſome mens ſpirits, they are ever whining.

Verſe 28. I am afraid of all my ſorrows] That come thronging thick about me, and terrifie me; they will ſurely be doubled and trebled upon me; hence my ſorrow is uncurable, if I ſhould reſolve never ſo much againſt it, I ſhould break my reſolution, and fall to freſh complaints, Pſalm 39. 1, 3. Hic vides, ſaith Lavater. Here we may ſee how little is to be aſcribed to mans free-will in the things of God, ſith it is not in our power to comfort and chear up our ſelves under afflictions, though we would never ſo fain.

I know that thou wilt not hold me innocent] But wilt hold me guilty, and accordingly puniſh me. This was the language of Jobs fear: had his faith been in heart, it would have quelled and killed ſuch diſtruſtful fears, and have gathered one contrary out of another, life out of death, aſſurance of deliverance out of deepeſt diſtreſſes, Deut. 32. 36. So 2 Kings 14. 26. going into captivity was a ſigne of Iſraels returning out of captivity.

Verſe 29. If I be wicked] Heb. I am wicked, ſc. in your thoughts, and you have ſo earneſtly and effectually affirmed it, and confirmed it, that I am almoſt ready to ſay as you ſay, I am wicked. Plato brings in Socrates in his apology to the Judges, thus beſpeaking them, My Lords, I know not how you have been affected with mine accuſers eloquence whiles you heard them ſpeak: for mine own part, I aſſure you that I whom it toucheth moſt, was almoſt drawn to believe that all they ſaid, though againſt my ſelf, was true, when they ſcarcely uttered one word of truth. The Chaldee paraphraſe reads it, I ſhall be culpable, or, I ſhall be condemned.

Why then labour I in vain?] Or, for nothing, as the Chaldee hath it. See the like Pſalm 73. 13, 14. Why put I my ſelf to ſo much fruitleſſe pains, either in praying to God, or apologiſing to you my friends, ſith by God I am ſtill afflicted, and by you reputed a wicked perſon? Jobs hope was low, his endeavour was therefore little. Si nihil ſperarem, nihil orarem, ſaith one. Let us pray on: God ſometimes defers to come, till men have even left looking for him, till he ſcarce findeth faith upon earth, Luke 18. 8.

Verſe 30. If I waſh my ſelf with ſnow-water] Some take the former words I am wicked, to be Jobs confeſſion of his own ſinfulneſſe in compariſon of Gods ſurpaſſing holineſſe. And then this followeth very fitly, Though I waſh my ſelf with ſnow water, i. e. with water as clear as ſnow is white. Some read it aquis vivis for aquis nivis, ſpring-water for ſnow-water.

And make my hands never ſo clean] Though I waſh my hands with ſoap, (ſo ſome read it) as Jer. 2. 22. Mal. 3. 2. Or, Though I waſh mine hands in a well (where there is no want of water) both in-ſide and out-ſide, as Jam. 4. 8.

Verſe 31. Thou ſhalt plunge me in the ditch] Thou ſhalt declare me to be no leſſe loathſome, then he that having fallen into a foul guzzle, or naſty jakes, abhorreth himſelf and his own clothes, being ready to lay up his gorge at the ſight and ſmell of them. The Vulgar hath it, Sordibus intinges me, thou ſhalt dip me in the dirt over head and ears, and ſtain me all over, as Diers doe the cloth they colour. By the ditch, Beza and others underſtand the grave; and by cloaths, grave-cloaths, q. d. My very winding-ſheet ſhall abhor my filthineſſe. Take the proud Phariſee for inſtance, and Popiſh merit-mongers, whom the Lord abhorreth.

Verſe 32. For he is not a man as I am] He is not ſuch an one, nor can be, as I am, and muſt be: he hath other eyes, and thoughts, and wayes then creatures have. He who is juſt before men, is unjuſt before God; therefore he is no fit match for me to contend withal: Have I an arm like God? or can I thunder with a voice like him? chap. 40. 9? Is it ſafe to contend with him that is mightier then I, Eccleſ. 6. 10? Surely if I ſhould be ſo mad as to juſtifie my ſelf, yet I ſhould ſoon be given to know, that that which is highly eſteemed amongſt men, is an abomination in the ſight of God, Luke 16. 15.

And we ſhould come together in judgment] How can that poſſibly be, when as God is the ſupreme Judge; neither is there any appealing from, or repealing of his ſentence?

Verſe 33. Neither is there any Dayes-man betwixt us] Heb. Any Arguer or Reprover, as Gen. 31. 24. We call him an Umpire or Referree, who hath power to reprove and to lay the blame where he findeth it, and finally to compromiſe the buſineſſe. The late Judg Dyer amongſt us, if there came any controverſies of poor men to be tried afore him, would uſually ſay, that either the parties are wilful, or their neighbours without charity, becauſe their ſuits were not quietly ended at home. Now, ſaith Job, as there is no Judg, ſo there is no dayes-man betwixt me and God. If one man ſin againſt another, ſaith good old Eli, the Judg ſhall judg him; but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who can mediate? 1 Sam. 2. 29.

That may lay his hand] To moderate and keep us both in compaſſe, and to compoſe the difference.

Verſe 34. Let him take his rod away from me] Having ſufficiently ſet forth that he will not once offer to contend with God, he here humbly begs of God, no further to contend with him, but to grant a truce at leaſt-wiſe during the treaty, and either to take away or (howſoever) to mitigate his ſorrows and ſores. See the like chap. 13. 20, 21.

And

And let not his fear terrifie me] i. e. His formidableneſſe (ſee chap. 7. 14.) let it not ſcare me, or put me, as it were, beſide my wits. Pſalm 88. 15. Ne me tranſverſum agat. Sept.

Verſe 35. Then would I ſpeak and not fear him] I would come boldly to the throne of grace, and freely pour out my ſoul into his boſome. If he meant that he would maintain his own cauſe againſt Gods proceedings (as ſome underſtand it, grounding upon chap. 33. 6, 7.) he was queſtionleſs in a very great error, and the fleſh had got the hilt of the Spirit.

But it is not ſo with me] So, how? ſo as you imagine: Non ſum talis, qualem me eſſe putatis, I am no ſuch one as you take me for, viz. an hypocrite: I am not ſo ſelf-guilty, ſay the Septuagint: or thus, It is not ſo with me: that is, I do not find God anſwering my ſuit: for I am ſtill ſcourged and frighted, ſo that I ſcarce know what I ſay. Vatab.

CHAP. X.

Verſe 1. My ſoul is weary of my life.]

BEcauſe it is a lifeleſſe life. Mortis habet vires, a death more like. Life is ſweet, and every creature maketh much of it, from the higheſt Angel in heaven, to the loweſt worm on earth. The Scripture ſetteth it forth as a ſweet mercy, Gen. 45. 28. Lam. 3. 39. Eſth. 7. 3. Jer. 39. 18. and 45. 5. But God can ſo imbitter it with outward and inward troubles, that it ſhall become a burthen. I am weary of my life (ſaith good Rebecca, Gen. 27. 46.) and what good ſhall my life do me? David forced to be in bad company, cryes, Oh that I had the wings of a dove &c. Woe is me that I ſojourn in Meſhech &c. Elias fleeing from Jezabel, requeſted for himſelf that he might dye, ſaying, It is enough Lord, take away my life, for I am not better then my fathers, 1 Kings 19. 4. No: but God had provided ſome better thing for him (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh in another caſe) for he was ſhortly after tranſlated and taken out of the reach both of Jezabel whom he feared, and of death which he deſired; Sed multi magni viri, ſub Elia junipero ſedent, ſaith one, Many good men ſit under Elias his juniper, wiſhing to be out of the world, if God were ſo pleaſed, that they might reſt from their labours, and be rid of their many burdens and bondages; as in the mean while, they rather endure life then deſire it, as holding it little better then hell, were it not for the hopes they have of heaven hereafter. Heb. 11:

I will leave my complaint upon my ſelf] Liberty I will take to complain, whatever come of it: I will lay the reins in the neck, and let my paſſions have their full ſwinge at my peril. See the like chap. 13. 3. Verùm Job hac in re nimius, ſaith Mercer, but Job was too blame in doing and ſaying thus; and it is to be attributed to the infirmity of his fleſh, wherewith, although the ſpirit do notably combat, yet the fleſh ſeemeth ſometimes, and in ſome ſort to get the better; Nimis angusta res eſt, noſpam errare, ſaith one; Triſte mortalitatis privilegium eſt, licere aliquando peccare, ſaith another. The ſnow-like ſwan hath black legs: and in many things we offend all: Gold is not to be refuſed becauſe it wanteth ſome grains, and hath a crack &c. Barclai. Euphorm.

I will ſpeak in the bitterneſſe of my ſoul] And ſo ſeek to eaſe my grief by giving a vent unto it. But it is evident, that ſuch out-burſts and overflowings of the gall and ſpleen come from a fulneſſe of bad humours.

Verſe 2. I will ſay unto God, Do not condemn me] You may ſay ſo, as an humble ſuppliant, but not as holding your ſelf innocent, and therefore harſhly dealt with. The Hebrew is, Do not make me wicked: rather do good, O Lord, to thoſe that be good, and to them that are upright in their hearts, but lead me not forth with the workers of iniquity, as a maleſactor is led forth to execution, Pſal. 125. 5.

Shew me wherefore thou contendeſt with me] i. e. Quare ſic me affligas, ſaith Vatablus, why thou thus afflicteſt me, whether for ſin, or for triall; and this Job deſired to know, not to ſatisfie his curioſity, but his conſcience, as one well obſerveth; and that the world might be ſatisfied, the raſh judgment of his friends confuted, and anſwered by a determination from heaven.

Verſe

Verſe 3. Is it good unto thee that thou ſhouldſt oppreſſe?] It is the guiſe of wicked judges to take this counſel, to follow this courſe; whom thou, being a moſt juſt and righteous judge, canſt not confirm or encourage by thine own example, as it were by a light ſhining from above. Thus Job rhetoricateth; his complaints are high, yet ever with an allay or mixture of modeſty. Beza.

That thou ſhouldſt deſpiſe the work of thine hands] i.e., Me thy poor creature; wilt thou do and undo? make a man, and unmake him again for thy minds ſake? Builders uſe not to ruin what they have built: Artificers love and plead for their own handy-work: Fathers foſter their children with all tenderneſſe. Some Authors dote upon their own doings, as Laurentius Valla did upon his Logick, as if there had been none ſuch; calling it in a bravado Logicam Laurentianam: and as Campian the Jeſuite did upon his ten leaden reaſons, which he deemed and boaſted to be unanſwerable. Heliodorus would rather be unbiſhopped, then yeild that his Ethiopick hiſtory (a toileſome toy, but the brat of his brain) ſhould be aboliſhed. The Saints are Gods building, 1 Cor. 3. 9. Handy-work; Epheſ. 2. 18. Children, Job 1. 12. Epiſtle known and read of all men, 2 Cor. 3. 2, 3. This if we plead, when ſorely afflicted (as the Church did Iſa. 64. 8. And David, Pſalm 138. 8. and Job here) we may have any thing. See that notable text Iſaiah 45. 11. And that other Iſai. 59. 16.

And ſhine upon the counſel of the wicked] That is, favour and further their deſigns: God makes his Sun to ſhine upon ſuch, but himſelf never ſhineth upon them: he may be angry enough with men, though they outwardly proſper; yea, to proſper in ſin is a moſt heavy judgment. See Zach. 1. 15. with the note there.

Verſe 4. Haſt thou eyes of fleſh?] Which ſee but the ſurface of things, and not that neither in the dark. Haſt thou not fiery eyes Rev. 1. 14. that need no outward light, but ſee by ſending out a ray, and pierce the inward parts alſo? Haſt thou not made the eye? yea, the optick vertue in the eye, which ſeeth all, and is ſeen of none? If the Sun be the eye of the world, God is much more; the Greeks give him his name from ſeeing, becauſe he ſeeth through and through: eyes he hath, but not of fleſh: he ſeeth, but not as man. Θεὸς ἀ Θεᾷν.

Or ſeeſt thou as man ſeeth?] Art thou ſubject to errour, ignorance, partiality, popularity, &c. Proceedeſt thou not according to truth (yea, truth in the inward parts) and not according to opinion or appearance? Of a good Judg it is ſaid, that he doth neque ſuſpicere, nec deſpicere, nec reſpicere, nec circumſpicere, neither look up nor down, nor this way nor that, but ſtraight forward to the cauſe, and not to the perſon. Of a juſt law it is ſaid, that it is an heart without affection, an eye without luſt, a mind without paſſion, a treaſurer which keepeth for every man what he hath, and diſtributeth to every man what he ought to have; ſo and much more then ſo is God, whatever thoughts might ariſe ſometimes in Jobs heart to the contrary.

Verſe 5. Are thy dayes as the dayes of man?] Art thou mortal and ſhort-lived as ſorry man is, that thou proceedeſt in this ſudden and ſevere manner, as if thou ſhouldeſt not have time enough to try me, and to take an order with me? Art not thou eternal, and doſt thou not know in the indiviſible moment of thine eternity, all what hath been, is, and ſhall be? Known unto God are all his works from the beginning of the world, Acts 15. 18. yea, long before. The truth is, neither foreknowledg, nor remembrance are properly in God, ſith all things both paſt and future are preſent with him, Rom. 4. 17. 2 Pet. 3. 8. Jer. 1. 5, 6, 7. Pſal. 139. 2. and all things without him are but as a point or ball, which with as much eaſe he diſcerneth, as we turn our eyes.

Are thy years as many dayes;] It is well obſerved that Gods time is ſet out by years, mans by dayes; his time is ſo ſhort, that it is reckoned by the ſhorteſt compleat time, a day. The dayes of our years are threeſcore and ten, Pſalm 90. 10. As for God, he is not only the Ancient of dayes, Dan. 7. 9. But the dayes Ancient, for he made the day.

Verſe 6. That thou enquireſt after mine iniquity &c.] viz. By ſtrong pains, and mighty terrours: as judges ſometimes make inquiſition by torture, to find out treaſon or other hainous offence. What, wouldſt thou that I ſhould confeſſe my ſelf a wicked perſon?

Verſe

Verse 7. Thou knowest that I am not wicked] A lewd liver, and a rank hypocrite as these men would make of me; a sinner I am, but I allow not, wallow not in any known sin: there is no way of wickednesse found in me; hypocrisie reigns not in my heart: Haret in regenitis peccatum, saith one, sin abideth in the best; yet they may not, they must not be called wicked. Julian the Apostate affirmed that Peters halting at Antioch, was so taxed by Paul, that Peter must needs be an hypocrite; but this cavil and calumny can never be proved from Pauls words, for not every one that through infirmity dissembleth sometimes, is presently an hypocrite. It is upon thy knowledge, saith Job, that however I am weak, yet wicked I am not: my great scumme is not in me, Ezek. 24.11, 12. The good heart admits not the mixture of any sin; like right wine or hony, as the scumme ariseth, it ever casteth it out: as spring-water worketh it self clean: as the sea will endure no poisonful thing, but casts it up upon the shore, so a Christian cleareth himself of sin. Well it may cleave to it for a while, as drosse doth to silver, but it entreth not into the frame and constitution: Job is confident of that, and will venture all upon it. Cyril. lib. 9. in Julian.

And there is none (or nothing) that can deliver out of thine hands] q. d. Thus thou, Lord, knowest it to be with me, that I have no wicked heart: but for this, I expect not to be delivered, for thou canst still find matter in me for which to lay thine hand upon me: But the more I submit my self, the more mild shouldst thou surely be in thy dealings toward me; as a Lion to a man crouching to him: as Paul said, I know nothing by my selfe, yet am I not thereby justified 1 Cor. 4. 4. So Job saith, Lord, thou knowest nothing by me, yet hereby I cannot be delivered. Junius.

Verse 8. Thine hands have made me,] Or throughly and accurately wrought me, as it were, with much pains and labour: thou hast exactly fashioned all my members; not that God either hath hands, or putteth himself to pains; for he doth his worke without either tool or toil, Isai. 40. 28. But this is attributed to him after the manner of men, to shew the curious workmanship shewed in mans creation, the masterpiece of all his works of wonder. This David sweetly singeth of Psalm 139. and Galen admireth in that excellent book of his De usu partium humani corporis, setting forth the praises of that God whom he knew not, and singing an hymn unto him. Man, saith one, is cura divini ingenii, he is Gods scutcheon wherein he hath portrayed all the titles of the most excellent beauties of the world. The Sun, Moon, and Stars, are but the works of Gods fingers, Psalm 8. but man is the work of his hands, Psalm 139. 14. He is the most beautiful building of a most wise architect, saith Euripides: the bold attempt of daring nature, saith another heathen: the greatest of all miracles, saith a third. David speaking of him, and of Gods goodnes to him, begins to wonder before he speaketh, and leaves off to speak, but not to wonder, Psalm 8. 1, 9. Lib 3.

And fashioned me together round about] A metaphor from potters, who make their work by turning it round till it be all finished. Jer. 18 3. Thou hast fashioned me round and made me in every point, so Broughton rendreth it. Totum me, undiquaque. Thou hast made the whole, and every part of me from top to toe, not my nailes excepted, (as Mercer hath it) with extraordinary care and cunning, bestowing upon me mercies enow betwixt head and foot, to fill a volume. Who is there (saith Galen) which looking but upon the skin only of mans body, wondreth not at the artifice of the Creator? but especially he was amazed at the manner of the motion of the lungs by Systole and Diastole, and would needs offer hecatombs to that God whosoever he were, that was Author of so admirable and excellent a piece of work.

Yet thou dost destroy me] And this seemeth strange to me. Dost thou yet destroy me? (so some read this text) wilt thou swallow me up quick and devour me, as the greater fishes do the lesser? (See the Note on verse 3.) Canst thou not thit I am thy workmanship created unto good works, Eph. 2.10? One in whom thou hast erected the fair fabrick of the new man? for this also Job may here very likely referre to.

Verse 9. Remember, I beseech thee, that thou hast made me as the clay] Remembrance and foreknowledg are not properly in God, as was noted before on verse 5. But he is said to remember us, when he relieveth us, Psalm 136. 23. and 9. 18.

1 Sam.

1 Sam. 1. 19. That thou haſt made me &c. viz. in thoſe Protoplaſts, my firſt parents, formed out of the ground, Gen. 2. 7. whence the Heathen Philoſopher could ſay, that man is nothing elſe but a piece of clay weakly made up: or thou haſt wrought me like clay, ſc. in the womb, where thou haſt framed and formed my body, as the potter worketh his clay, well-tempered, into an earthen veſſel. Here then Job in-minds the Lord (by the matter whereof he was made) of the frailty, vility and impurity of his nature (Lutum enim conſpurcat omnia, ſic & caro) to move him to a mitigation of his miſery. See Pſal. 103. 14. and 78. 39.

πηλὸς κόμ-ψως πεφυρ-μένος
Arian. in Epict.

Wilt thou bring me into the duſt again] viz. By thoſe grievous torments: Or, And that thou wilt bring me into duſt againe: for ſo thou haſt ſaid, to duſt ſhalt thou return, Gen. 3. 19. And it is appointed for all men once to die, Heb. 9. 27. Oh therefore that I might have ſome ſmall reſt and reſpite, before I go hence, and be no more ſeen, Pſal. 39. 12, 13.

Verſe 10. Haſt thou not poured me out as milk] Or, melted me, that is, made me of ſome ſuch thing as liquid and white milke. Generationem hominis deſcribit; Vatab. Man is a very mean thing in his firſt conception, modeſtly here ſet forth by the making of cheeſes.

Unda ſuperbit homo, cujus conceptio turpis,
Naſci pœna, labor vita, neceſſe mori.

Concerning mans formation in the womb, ſee the Naturalliſts, and Lactantius de Opificio Dei cap. 12. but eſpecially Pſalm 139. where, and in this text there is enough ſpoken to ſatisfie us about this great natural myſtery, ſaith Mercer: that is a good Moral that one maketh of it; God ſtrains out the motes of corruption from a godly man, while his heart is poured out like milk with grief and fear, whereby the iniquity of Jacob is purged, and this is all the fruit to take away his ſinne, Iſa. 27. 9.

And curdled me like theeſe] Sic caſtiſſimo ore, & elegantibus metaphoris, ſaith an Interpreter, i.e. Thus in a moſt modeſt manner, and with elegant metaphors, doth Job, as a great Philoſopher, ſet out mans conception in the womb. Ariſtotle (whoſe manner is obſcurioribus obſcura implicare, as Bodin obſerveth) hath ſome ſuch expreſſion as this, but nothing ſo clean and full. Bodin. theat. natur. 434. Ariſt. de gen. anim. cap. 20.

Verſe 11. Thou haſt clothed me with skin and fleſh] Out of that ſoft and liquid ſubſtance (the ſlime of my parents loins) groſſed firſt into a rude fleſhy maſſe, and conſolidated; Thou haſt made not only a thin skin, and firm fleſh, but alſo hard bones, and knitting nerves; and all this for a garment or guardment to thoſe more noble inward parts, the brain, heart, liver, &c. which Job here accounts to be the man, when he ſaith, Thou haſt clothed me, that is, my vital parts with the upper garment of skin, and with the under-garment of fleſh, all which, and the reſt of the parts, both ſimilar and organical, are in their original but the ſame matter which God hath thus diverſified, and all by the book, Pſalm 139. 16. Had he left out any member in his common-place-book, thou hadſt wanted it, ſaith one.

And haſt fenced me with bones and ſinews] Bones are the pillars of the body, giving it ſtability, ſtraightneſſe and forme. The Rabbines ſay, there are as many of them in mans body, as there are affirmative precepts in the law, that all his bones may ſay, Lord, who is like unto thee &c.? Pſal 35. 10. By the ſinews are the bones knit together, that upon them man may move from place to place, as he pleaſeth. Senſe alſo and Motion is by theſe, in their wonderful and inexplicable conjugations, conveyed to the reſt of the parts. It is God alone that knoweth how the bones (think the ſame of the ſinews, arteries, veins, griſtles, fleſh and blood &c.) do grow in the wombe of her that is with child, Eccleſ. 11. 5. The Anatomiſts find out every day almoſt new wonders, and an Ancient ſaileth, Man the miracle of miracles. Beſides what is ſeen, God hath packed many rarities, myſteries, yea, miracles together in mans cheſt. And ſurely, ſaith one, if all the Angels in heaven had ſtudied to this day, they could not have caſt man into a more curious mould, or have given a fairer, or more correct edition of him. Mr. Caryl.

Verſe 12. Thou haſt granted me life] i.e. Into my body thus formed and organized, thou haſt infuſed a ſoul, that principle of life quickned me in the womb, and brought me alive out of it, which becauſe it is a miracle of mercy, therefore Job addeth favour, thou haſt granted me (Heb. thou haſt wrought with me) life, and favour. Vatab.

Thou

Thou haſt dealt life and goodneſſe unto me; that is, thou haſt given me life accompanied with thy goodneſſe and bleſſings; ſo Beza ſenſeth it. Some underſtand it of the reaſonable ſoul; others of the beauty of the body according to Iſa. 40 6.

And thy viſitation hath preſerved my Spirit] i. e. Thy good providence hath ſafe guarded me from innumerable deaths and dangers. Puerilitas eſt periculorum pelagus, children are apt to run into miſchief; and thoſe of riper years are ſubject to a thouſand diſaſters and evil-occurrences. Gods ſpecial care is exerciſed over his, as is ſweetly expreſſed Pſalm 121. and Pſalm 23. (Davids paſtoral:) and Pſalm 3. where David doubteth not of ſafety, though aſleep, and in the midſt of enemies, becauſe God ſuſtained him: when as Samſon and Iſhboſheth, a ſleep in the midſt of friends, were circumvented, becauſe deſerted by him: oh pray, pray, that the Lord Jeſus Chriſt would be ever with our ſpirits: viſit him in duty, that he may viſit us in mercy.

Verſe 13. And theſe things haſt thou hid in thine heart] Legendum hoc cum ſtomacho, ſaith Mercer: And haſt thou indeed hid theſe things in thine heart? What things meaneth Job? his afflictions, which God was long before preparing for him, and now took his time to lay load upon him, to be revenged on him at unawares, and at greateſt advantage. If this be the ſenſe of Jobs words (as ſome would conclude from the next verſes) he was mightily miſtaken; and this was atrox querimonia, a grievous complaint, and unworthy of God, who lieth not at the catch, nor pretendeth fair, when he intendeth otherwiſe. A Cain may do ſo to Abel, Eſau to Jacob, Abſalom to Amnon, Joab to Amaſa &c. The Creator needs not daub or prevaricate thus with his creatures: if Job thought he did with him, Job was utterly out, though for confirmation he adde, I know that this is with thee; I am ſure that thou haſt dealt thus cloſely and covertly with me, and that thy plagues have ſurprized me. O theſe ſtill revenges! Merlin and others underſtand by theſe things hid in Gods heart, and which he was well aſſured could not have befallen him without Gods will and decree, the mercies which in the former verſes Job had recounted and reckoned up, viz. his conception, quickening, preſervation; all which he looked upon as love-tokens coming out of the heart of God, and from the ſpring of ſpecial love. Here then we ſee whence we may fetch comfort when moſt hardly beſtead: namely, from thoſe effects whereby God ſealed up his love to us in forming us in the womb; but eſpecially in his Covenant of Grace, that bee-hive of heavenly honey, whereby he hath ingaged to be our God even from the womb to the tomb; yea, to all perpetuity. Hereunto Job had reſpect, and ſo had David, Pſalm 22. 10, 11. and Pſalm 25. 10.

Verſe 14. If I ſin, then thou markeſt me] Though through humane frailty only I offend (& ni is deſignatur mortalitatem qui peccaſſe erubeſcit,) thou ſoon noteſt it, thou followeſt me up and down, as it were, with pen, ink and paper, to ſet down my faults. How then, ſay ſome, that God ſees not ſin in his children? Job thought the Lord was over-ſtrict with him (which yet could not be) and that he put no difference betwixt him and thoſe that were notoriouſly wicked, as the next words import. Euphorm.

And thou wilt not acquit me from mine iniquity] That is, from the puniſhment of mine iniquity. Verba diffidentis, ſaith Mercer: words ſpoken according to the judgment of the fleſh, ſaith Diodate, which holdeth Gods viſitations to be puniſhments and vengeances.

Verſe 15. If I be wicked, woe unto me] Here he bringeth a Dilemma, whereby he declareth himſelf every way miſerable, ſaith Mercer; whether he be bad or good, ſuffer he muſt without remedy. If I be wicked, woe unto me, woe is the wicked mans portion; tell him ſo from me, ſaith God, Iſai. 3. 10, 11. Though he love not to hear on that ear, but can bleſſe himſelf in his heart, when God curſeth him with his mouth, Deut. 29. 19. And a godly man ſetteth the terrour of ſins woes before his fleſh, that ſlave, that muſt be frighted at leaſt with the ſight of the whip. Woe be to me, ſaith Paul, if I preach not the Goſpel, 1 Cor. 9. 16. Or if, when I have preached to others, I my ſelf ſhould be a caſt-a-way verſe 27. which to prevent, he kept under his body (his corruption) and gave it a blue eye: for we are not debters to the fleſh, ſaith he, Rom. 8. 12. We owe nothing but ſtripes and menaces, curſing it in every cruſe &c.

And if I be righteous, yet I will not lift up my head] Indeed I cannot, because I am so bowed down with changes of sorrows, armies of afflictions: my pains are continued, and I shall surely sink under them: much adoe I have now to keep head above water. Others make this a description of Jobs humility, I will not lift up my head, viz. in pride, but humble my self to walk with my God, as that poor publican did who stood afarre off, and would not lift up so much as his eyes to heaven, Luk. 18. 13.

I am full of confusion] Cast upon me by my friends, who reproach me for an hypocrite, and make my cheeks glow. The fulnesse of an aspersion may possibly put an innocent person to the blush: and it is the property of defamations to leave a kind of lower estimation many times, even where they are not believed. This was the confusion that Job complained of, the stomack of his mind was full of it, even to satiety and surfet.

Therefore see thou mine affliction] My pressing and piercing affliction, see it and remedy it, as Psalm 119. 153. Let not all my trouble seem little unto thee, as Nehem. 9. 32. See Lord, see, behold it is high time for thee to set in.

Verse 16. For it increaseth] Heb. For it listeth up it self: it even boyleth up to the height, or it waxeth proud, as the proud surges of the sea: Broughton rendreth it, Oh how it fleeth up! Why how? Surely, as a fierce lion, so it hunteth me: it riseth upon me, as a Lion rampant doth upon his prey, or as a Lion when he is pursued, gives not place, hides not his head, but comes into the open fields, as holding it a disgrace to withdraw, so some sense it: Or,

Isa. 38. 13. Hos. 5. 14. Hos. 13. 7. Thou huntest me as a fierce Lion] Tanquam le. God when he afflicteth men, is oft compared to a Lion: or Tanquam leonem, as if I were a ravening Lion, so thou huntest me, setting thy nets and toyls, making thy snares and pits ut capiar ad occisionem (so the Septuagint) that I may be taken and destroyed, as 2 Pet. 2. 12.

And again thou shewest thy self marvellous upon me] Heb. And thou returnest. Here Job sheweth, saith an Interpreter, what a confidence he had, that God returning to him in mercy would do wonderfully for him in the end: the word turning here, and the turning his captivity, chap. 42. so aptly answering the one to the other to approve this exposition. But others understand it of the continued or repeated acts of Jobs affliction una vice post aliam, as if he should say, thou clappest on one affliction upon another: my pains know not only no period, but no pause: thou layest upon me extraordinary sorrows, as if thou wouldst declare in me alone, quam mirus sis artifex, what an excellent artisan thou art when thou pleasest, and what thou canst do against a poor creature: surely thou hast made my plagues wonderfull, Deut. 28. 59. So the Apostles were made a gazing-stock, a theatre, a spectacle of humane misery, 1 Cor. 4. 9.

Ab. Ezr.

Verse 17. Thou renewest thy witnesses against me] These fresh witnesses were divels say some; Jobs friends, say others, his dolorous sufferings rather, saith Grotius, those open witnesses of some secret wickednesse in Job, as the world would esteem them. See ch. 1. 16. 8. Ruth 1. 21. Thus the Jewes censured our Saviour, Isa. 53. 3, 4. The Barbarians Paul, Acts 28. and those in the Gospel them that perished by the fall of the tower of Siloam. And how many precious men as well as Job, have been cast upon this evidence for traitors and rebels against the highest majesty? Jerome thinks, that when Job uttered the words of this text, he felt some new pains growing upon him and increasing.

Thou increasest thine indignation upon me] Or within me, as chap. 6. 4. and this was it that put a sting into his sufferings: Gods heavy displeasure seemed to be kindled against him. Be not thou a terrour unto me ô Lord, said Jeremy, and then I shall do well enough with the rest.

Changes and warre (or armies) are upon me, or against me] Variety of troubles come trooping and treading, as it were, on the heels of one another: finctus fluctum rudit, there is a continual succession of my sorrows, fresh forces sent against me &c. We see then that Job complained not without cause, though he kept not alwaies within compasse, as appeareth by that which followeth.

Verse 18. Wherefore hast thou brought me forth out of the womb?] Why? but was not that a mercy? David esteemed it so, and gives God the glory, Psalm 22. 9. But discontent is an utter enemy to thankfulnesse. The bird sings not till she have taken up her ſtand to her mind. Some mens eyes are ſo bleared and glazed with tears for what they want, that they cannot ſee what good they have, cannot ſee mercies for bleſſings. Job here in a diſtemper wiſheth himſelf, (as he had done before, chap. 3. Who can underſtand his errors? Pſalm 19. 12.) either unborn, or preſently dead, without the diſtance of one day betwixt his birth and his burial. In quo errorem erravit non levem, vir alioqui pientiſſimus; this was a worſe wiſh then if he had deſired that his life might be preſently taken away from him, for herein he ſheweth himſelf unthankful to God for all his former benefits: and not ſo only, but angry with God for the good he had done him: thus we have ſeen dogs in a chaſe fly at their maſters, and children in a pelt ſtrike at their parents. But theſe were the voices of the fleſh luſting againſt the ſpirit, which afterwards (being juſtly reprehended for them, firſt by Elihu, and then alſo by God himſelf) he repreſſed and repented of in duſt and aſhes, Pſalm 42. 6.

Oh that I had given up the ghoſt, and no eye had ſeen me] ſc. with delight; for what pleaſure is there in ſeeing a dead corps, eſpecially a ſtill-born child? ſee Gen. 23. 4. with the Note. This text teacheth us, ſaith an Interpreter, what ſad effects extreme grief and pain worketh in the very beſt: it diſtempereth their ſpirits, and ſo diſturbeth them, that their complaints look like the blaſphemies of the wicked, and they ſometimes wiſh abſurd things, diſhonourable to God, and prejudicial to themſelves.

Verſe 19. I ſhould have been as though I had not been] Here he ſings the ſame ſong as chap. 3. and 6. It is hard to ſay how oft a child of God may diſcover the ſame infirmity. Our lives are fuller of ſins then the firmament is of ſtars, or the furnace of ſparks.

I ſhould have been carried from the womb to the grave] He makes mention of the grave as a deſirable place, which yet in the two laſt verſes he deſcribeth as a place of darkneſſe and diſorder. Thus Job himſelf was in the dark, and in his paſſion he throweth out words without wiſedome; Itaque ſolicitè orandus eſt Deus, ſaith one here, God is therefore to be earneſtly intreated, that when we are hard put to't with pain and miſery, we may not give way to unruly paſſion, nor ſuffer our tongues to out-laſh, as they will be apt to do. See Pſal. 39. 1. confer Pſal. 22. 77. 88 & 89. and we ſhall ſee David well nigh as far out, as Job in his complaints and wiſhes; but God can put a difference between the godly and ſin in them, as between poiſon and the box that holdeth it. He can alſo pity them, as we do poiſon in a man, which yet we hate in a toad &c.

Verſe 20. Are not my dayes few?] And oh that they might not be alſo evil! ſith I ſhall not much trouble the world, oh that I might not find much trouble in the world! What man is he that would fain ſee good dayes, ſaith David, Pſalm 34. 12? What man is he that would not, ſaith Auſtin in anſwer to him? Job and David joyn in one and the ſame ſuit for a truce from trouble, ſith their time here was ſo very ſhort, Pſalm 39. 13. and 89. 47.

Ceaſe then, and let me alone] After he had vented his paſſions, he falls again to his prayers. Ye have done all this wickedneſſe (ſaith Samuel to the people who had been over-importunate for a King) yet turn not aſide from following the Lord &c. 1 Sam. 12. 20. Whileſt prayer ſtands ſtill, the whole trade of godlineſſe ſtands ſtill. Saints, though they have ſinned, yet muſt not reſtrain prayer, but go home to God again with ſhame in their faces, and tears in their eyes, and he will ſpeak peace; only they muſt be ſenſible that their Father hath ſpit in their faces &c.

That I may take comfort a little] A modeſt requeſt: the poor man ſpeaks ſupplications, begs a farthing. They who are lowly make low demands. Oh that I were but a door keeper! oh that Iſmael might live in thy ſight &c.

Verſe 21. Before I go whence I ſhall not return] Before I go out of this world never more to return hither to enjoy the comforts that are here to be had. Death is a departure hence, 1 Pet. 1. 15. Luke 9. 31. And ſo the Ancients (Irenæus, Clement, and others) uſed to call it: I ſhall change my place, but not my company, ſaid that dying Saint who had here walked with God in uprightneſſe, and was now to bid adieu to all worldly intereſts. The old Romans were wont to ſay of a dead friend, Abiit, & remeaturus eſt, He is gone, and will come again. It ſeems hereby that they had ſome darke notions of a Reſurrection, whence alſo Tertul.

their Poets called a dead body, a ſoul; — animamque ſepulchro condimus. The Hebrew did the like, Numb. 5. 2. and 6. 10. and 19. 11. Hag. 2. 14. as having a more ſure word of Prophecie: and Job was clear in this point, firmly believing the reſurrection of his body, chap. 19. 26, 27. It muſt needs be therefore that he ſpeaks here of not returning into this world. See the like chap. 16. 22. Pſalm 39. 13. 2 Sam. 12. 23.

Virg. Æneid.

Even to the land of darkneſſe &c.] See the Note on verſe 22.

Verſe 22. A land of darkneſſe &c.] This is not a deſcription of hell, and of the ſtate of the damned (as ſome would have it) for Job never meant to come there, no more then Jacob did, Gen. 37. 35. and 42. 38. But it is ſuch an elegant deſcription of the grave, as exceedeth the phancie of Poets, and the rhetorick of all heathen Orators. There is ſomething like it in David's Pſalms, eſpecially Pſalm 88. 11, 12. where the grave is called a place of perdition, a land of forgetfulneſſe, and of darkneſſe, wherein they who deſcend, praiſe not God, Pſalm 115. 17. In reſpect of their bodies they do not, they cannot, Iſai. 38. 18. Hell, indeed, is much more a land of darkneſſe, as darkneſſe it ſelfe; it is that outer-darkneſſe, a darkneſſe beyond a darkneſſe, as the dungeon is beyond the priſon; and the pains of hell are the chains of darkneſſe. now death is hels harbinger to the wicked, and hence it is ſo dreadful in the apprehenſion and approach of it, that mens hearts do even die within them, as Nabals did, through fear of death; and they tremble thereat as the trees of the wood, or leaves of the foreſt, with Ahaz, Iſai. 7. 2. Darkneſſe we know, is full of terrour: the Egyptians were ſorely affrighted by their three dayes thick darkneſſe, in ſo much as that none ſtirred off his ſtool all that while, Exod. 10. 23. and it was the more terrible, doubtleſſe, becauſe they had no warning of it, as they had of other plagues. How oft do men chop into the chambers of death (their long-home the grave) all on the ſudden, as he that travelleth in the ſnow, may do over head and ears into a marle-pit? Death of any ſort, is unwelcome to nature, as being its ſlaughterman: but when ſudden, it is ſo much the more ghaſtly; and thoſe that deſperately dare death to a duel, cannot look it in the face with blood in their cheeks. Only to thoſe that are in Chriſt, the darkneſſe of death is gone, the ſting of it is pulled out, the property altered, as hath been already noted. Chriſt, the Sun of Righteouſneſſe, ſaith a Learned Expoſitor here, lay in the grave, and hath left perpetual beams of light there for his purchaſed people. The way to the grave is very dark, but Chriſt hath ſet up lights for us there.

Mr. Caryl.

And of the ſhadow of death] The ſhadow is the dark part of the thing; ſo that the ſhadow of death is the darkeſt ſide of death, death in its moſt hideous and horrid repreſentations: the ſhadow of death is the ſubſtance of death, or death with addition of greateſt deadlineſſe.

Without any order] Heb. and not orders, What then? confuſion ſurely, without keeping to rules or ranks: mens bones are mingled in the grave, whether they have been princes or peaſants, it cannot be diſcerned: Omnia mors æquat, as cheſſe-men are put up all together in the bag when the game is ended, without diſtinction of King, Duke, Biſhop, &c. ſo here: Junius rendreth it, expertem viciſſitudinum, without any interchanges, diſtinctions, viciſſitudes, or varieties (as of day, night, ſummer, winter, heat, cold, &c.) of which things conſiſteth the greateſt part of the brevity of this world.

And when the light is as the darkneſſe] How great then muſt needs be that darkneſſe? as our Saviour ſpeaketh in another caſe, Matth. 6. 23. Surely when by the return of the Sun, there is light in the land of the living, in the grave all is abyſſed and ſunk into eternal night. As the bodies of thoſe two murthered Princes were by their cruel Uncle Richard the third, in the black-deeps, a place ſo called at the Thames-mouth: in the grave light and darkneſſe are both alike: and as the Images in Popiſh Temples ſee nothing, though great wax candles be lighted up before them: ſo the cleareſt light of the Sun ſhining in his ſtrength would be nothing to thoſe that are dead and buried. Let this be much and often thought on: mors tua, mors Chriſti, &c. Cyrus that great Conqueror lying on his death-bed, praiſed God, ſaith Xenophon, that his proſperity had not puffed him up; for he ever conſidered that he was but mortal, and muſt bid adieu to the world. Charls the fifth Emperour of Germany cauſed his ſepulcher and grave-clothes to be made five years before his death, and carried them closely with him whithersoever he went. Samuel sent Saul newly annointed to Rachels sepulcher, 1 Sam. 10. 24. that he might not surfet upon his new honours, &c.

Tyrrel.

cloſely

CHAP. XI.

Verse 1. Then answered Zophar the Naamathite.

WIth a most bitter invective, savouring more of passion, then charity, Zophar rejoyneth; or rather revileth innocent Job, mis-interpreting his meaning, verse 4. and laying to his charge, 1. Loquacity or talkativeness. 2. Lying. 3. Scoffing at Gods good providence, and mens good counsel. 4. Self-conceitedness and arrogancy, besides rashness, boldness, &c. For want of better arguments against him, he falls foul upon him in this sort. And if the adversaries of the truth do the like by us (as our Saviour saith they will, Matth. 5. 11. and as himself, after Job and many other of his members, had the experience of it) we must not be over-troubled. Zophar signifieth a watcher, he watched for Jobs halting, and took him up before he was down: he is stiled the Naamathite from Naamah (a city in the land of Uz, eighteen miles from Jobs Pyramis, saith Adricomius) which signifieth Fair. But he dealeth not so fair with his friend, as had been fit, for he giveth him no honour or respect at all, but treateth him with singular sharpness and violence, or rather virulence of speech: hear him else.

Verse 2. Should not the multitude of words be answered] Should not he who speaketh what he will, hear what he would not? yes, Job shall now, or you'l want of your will: but if Job have talked more then his part came to (the truth is, his speeches are longer then any of those his three friends, which are all, except that first made by Eliphaz, chap. 4. and 5. comprehended in one chapter, whereas his take up two, three, or more) he may well be excused, considering the sharpness of his disease, the ungentleness of his friends, and the sense of Gods displeasure, which his soul laboured under. Zophar and the rest looked upon him as a wretched hypocrite, and were angry that he would not yeild himself so; they accused his former conversation as wicked, what way had he therefore to defend and assert his own integrity, but by words? and must he yet passe for a prating fellow, a man of lips, a very wordy man, one that loveth to hear himself talk, because he will not be by them out-talked, and over-born by their false charges? Most sure it is, that profane and profuse babblings are to be avoided, and to bring fulness of matter in fewness of words, it is very commendable. Quàm multa quàm paucis! said Tully of Brutus his Lacónical Epistle; how much is here in a little! but 1. Every man cannot be a short-spoken Spartan: It is reported that in Luthers house was found written, Melanthon hath both matter and words: Luther hath matter, but wants words; Erasmus hath words at will, but wants matter. Every one hath his own share: all are not alike-gifted. 2. He is to be accounted talkative, who uttereth unprofitable words, and far from the purpose, beside the point: and so Zophar himself was to be blamed in this whole discourse of his, wherein he talketh much, but speaketh little. Concerning the infinite and unsearchable wisedom of God, he argueth truly and gravely, but yet nothing fitly to convince Job, who himself had said as pithy and more of the same subject. The counsel also that therehence he giveth Job, doth little or nothing concern him: it being the same in effect that Eliphaz and Bildad had said before him. Zophar therefore was the loquaculeius, the talkative man here mentioned, rather then Job, the lipi-man, adversus sua ipsius vitia fabulans satis: and as Dion was wont to say, that the Grammarians of his time could discourse well of the errors of Ulysses, but not at all see their own; so it befell Zophar.

Nunquid qui multa loquitur, non & audiet? Vulg.

And should a man full of talk be justified?] Heb. a man of lips, so called, as if he were made all of lips, and had no other members. Shall such an one be ever a whit the better thought of? Not among wise men surely, what ever he may among his fellow fools: for in multiloquio non fugit peccatum: Some gravel and mud passeth passeth away with much water; some vanity with much talk: it is no wisedom for a man to lay on more words then the matter will well bear. A good Orator, saith Plutarch, will see that his words and his matter be matches. And Hesiod saith, that words, as a precious treasure, should be thriftily husbanded, and warily wasted: especially sith an account is to be rendred, as our Saviour assureth us, Matth. 12. 36. yea, by thy words (he saith not, for thy words) thou shalt be justified, and by thy words (if superfluous and sinful, wast and wicked) thou shalt be condemned, verse 37.

Vers. 3. Should thy lyes make men hold their peace?] Or, Thy toyes, toilsome toyes, hammered in thine own head, hatcht in thine own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and so a fit shop to frame lies in: but should we be silent at the hearing of them, and so become guilty of thy sin by a tacit consent? Can any mortall wight hear what thou hast said in behalf of thine own imaginary innocency? chap. 6. 29, 30. And how bold an appeal thou hast made to God as a witnesse thereof chap. 10. 7. and not reply upon thee, and reprove thee? The truth is, had Job been a liar, as Zophar would make of him, (even mendaciorum loquacissimum, as Tertullian saith of Tacitus, one that fearing his many words would not carry his cause, had intermixed divers untruths the better to grace the businesse) he ought not to have been forborn by Zophar or any else, that wished well to his soul: But it was far from good Job to be guilty of this foul sin, so hated of God, so like the divel, so inconsistent with religion. Christianus est, non mentietur, he is a Christian, you may be sure he will not lie, was the old argument; he will rather die then lie. David indeed in a distresse, roundly told two or three lies together to Abimelech the high-priest, who suspected that he fled as a proscribed person 1 Sam. 21. 2, 8. So 1 Sam 27. 10. But that he allowed not this sin in himself it appeareth in that 1. He had chosen the way of truth, his election was truth Psalm 119. 30. And 2. He prayed against the contrary evil, Remove from me the way of lying, Psalm 119. 29. He was not one of those that took fast hold of deceit, as Jeremiah phraseth it chap. 8. 5. Much lesse was Job; however Zophar was mistaken in him, as he was much more in his next charge, wherein he maketh him a scoffer of God and good people.

And when thou mockest, shall no man make thee ashamed?] Job is made a mocker here; yea, a scorner, and derider, as the word signifieth, such as David describeth, Psalm 22. 6. and the Author to the Hebrewes, chap. 11. 36. where he speaks of cruel mockings, such as the Scripture every where (but especially in the Proverbs) brandeth for the worst sort of sinners: See Psalm 1. 1. where the Septuagint translate for scorners, Pestes: as elsewhere Incorrigible, Prov. 21. 1. Naught, Prov. 9. 12. Proud, Prov. 3. 34. Workers of iniquity Psalm 119. 51. But where did Job mock in Zophars judgment? First, he spoke contemptuously (as he thought) of God, as chap. 10. 3. Is it good unto thee that thou shouldst oppresse? &c. And whereas he spake better sometimes of Gods wisdom and righteousnesse, Zophar thought it was but from the teeth-outward: but poor Job had little list or leisure to mock and jear: next, he mocked his friends for saying that he was justly afflicted; saying, that they were cold comforters, void of Gods fear, mercilesse men &c. This they took in very ill part, and Zophar thinks to make him ashamed of it: for saith he, λοίμοι. ἀκόλαστος, κακὸς, ἀσεβὴς. παιγνιώμων.

Shall no man make thee ashamed?] sc. By refuting thee, and by bringing thee to a due sight of thine error: this good office he that shall undertake to do for another, must be sure that he be able to do it effectually, else better not to attempt it. When Carolostadius opposed Luthers Consubstantiation but weakly and insufficiently, Zuinglius said, he was sorry, that so good a cause wanted shoulders.

Non satis humerorum habuerat.

Vers. 4. For thou hast said] Thou hast confidently affirmed; and this he makes to be a loud lie, and not an idle word only. But where and when had Job said it? Did not Zophar openly play the Sophister, so interpreting what Job had spoken chap. 6. 10. and 9. 22. and 10. 7. in defence of his innocency, as if Job had maintained that he was free from all sin; whereas notwithstanding, he had very often witnessed and confessed himself to be a sinner, insomuch, as that albeit he were without sin, yet he could not be accounted clear and pure in the sight of God? But Zophar took these for good words only, and was therfore so sharp-set against him. So Cyril and Theodoret mistook one another, and objected heresie mutually: when when as afterwards it appeared, that they were both of one judgment. Charity would have taught Zophar to have taken Job in a better sense, and to have said of him as Cruciger did of Luther, enim commodius sentire quàm loquitur, dum effervescit, that he held right, though in his heat he spake not so fitly as might be wished; good mens words are reverenter glossanda (as one said of the Lawes) to have a reverent glosse put upon them, and not by a spiritual unmannerlinesse, to be taken with the left hand, when they might and ought to be taken with the right.

My doctrine is pure] Clear as chrystal, transparent as a chrystal glasse with a light in the midst, you may see through it, and find no flaw or filth in it: Job was no professed preacher, yet he had not concealed the words of the Holy One, chap. 6.10. As he had received the knowledg of the truth from parents and teachers (the word here rendred doctrina, comes from a root that signifieth to receive) so he had freely and purely imparted it to others, commending it unto them as sound and sincere, and therefore well worthy of all acceptation. But that which troubled Zophar and his two fellows was, that Job should affirm that God did afflict good men in this world as heavily as bad men, which yet was an irrefragable truth, such as Job resolved to live and die in.

And I am clean in thine eyes] i.e. I am not sinlesse, but sincere and upright, no hypocrite (as you have charged me) no worker of iniquity, but one that would be cleansed from all filthinesse of flesh and spirit, and do by the daily practice of mortification, purifie my self as God is pure: more then this Job said not, though Zophar thought he did, and therefore wisheth in the next words that God himself would convince him of his errour.

Verse 5. But oh that God would speak &c.] For we do but lose our sweet words upon thee, sith thou art set, and so wedded and wedged to thine own will and way, that thou canst not be removed and rectified, but by an extraordinary touch from the hand of heaven; O therefore that God would speak and open his lips against thee, and for us: for so Zophar doubts not but he would do, but if it proved otherwise chap. 42. Job was justified, and these three condemned, because they had not spoken of God, (or to God, as in this text) the thing that was right, verse 7. but had been Satans instruments to discourage Job, and to drive that good man to many passionate speeches. Some men (and women too, as Sarah, Gen. 16. 5.) are over-hasty to send for God, as it were, by a post, to decide their controversies: who, if he should come at their call, would certainly pronounce against them. Fret not thy self therefore to do evil: be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing in this kind before God, or to interest him in thy quarrels and controversies, for he will surely passe an impartial sentence, neither is there any iniquity with the Lord our God, nor respecting of persons, nor taking of gifts, 2 Chron. 19. 7. One Interpreter from this wish of Zophar noteth, that it is an ordinary practice of hereticks (Satans factors) to mention God, as approving of their errors, if by speaking he would from heaven declare himself plainly, and that therefore we should take heed of those that labour to work upon us this way, when by right reason they are able to evince nothing that they say. Psal. 37. Eccles. 5. 2.

Vers. 6. And that he would shew thee the secrets of wisdom] This may be understood of Gods law (saith Diodate) or of the hidden wayes of his providence; which if God would shew Job, he should at once see that he mistook much, and knew little of those many mysteries that are both in the word and works of God, in all divine dispensations, which are such as none can unriddle but God himself, neither can we see them till he shew them. It is well observed, that the word here rendred [shew] signifieth to interpret and expound that which is dark, mysterious and enigmatical; and till God shew us in this sort, we remain ignorant both in the book of the creatures, and in the book of the Scriptures. Oh pray that ye may be all taught of God, that he would shew you great and mighty things which you know not, Jer. 33. 3. that he would open your eyes, that ye may behold wondrous things out of his Law, Psalm 119. 18. &c.

That they are double to that which is] Sunt enim Deo judicia sua duplicia, so the Vulgar translate the words, for God hath judgments of two several sorts, viz. open and secret, such as thou with all thy skill canst no divine into. The Hebrew is is, double to the being; that is, ſaith one, manifold more then is by thee apprehended; and although God hath afflicted thee according to what he hath revealed, yet he might afflict thee more, if he ſhould proceed according to the height of his ſecret wiſedome: thy plagues ſhould be double to that which is, if God ſhould deal rigorouſly with thee: there is reaſon therefore thou ſhouldſt be patient, ſith thy ſins are far more then thy ſufferings.

Know then that God exacteth of thee leſſe then thine iniquity deſerveth] This is a meditation that may be of ſpecial uſe, as to humble us, ſo to ſtanch murmuring, and to ſtrengthen patience under preſent preſſures. See Ezra 9. 13. with the Note. Junius rendreth it acknowledg at leaſt that God exacteth ſomewhat of thee for thine iniquity: ſomewhat it is, and but ſomewhat, ſith hell is the juſt hire of the leaſt ſin, and it is the Lords mercy that we are not conſumed Lament. 3. 22.

Verſe 7. Canſt thou by ſearching find out God?] i. e. The nature of God, or the courſe of his providence, and the reaſon of his proceedings? thou canſt never do it: Neither did Job ever take upon him to do it, but had excellently and accurately ſet out the ſame things chap. 9. 4. &c. that Zophar here doth; ſo that he might well have ſpared his pains in this diſcourſe as to Job; but that being too pertinacious in his evil opinion of him, he choſe rather to thwart him, then to cloſe with him, as contentious people uſe to do.

Canſt thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?] No nor the brighteſt Angel in heaven, the higheſt graduate in glory. Find him we may poſſibly, but not find him out, much leſſe find him out to perfection. Tantum recedit, quantum capitur, ſaith Nazianzen. The nearer you draw unto God, the further off he is from you, and you are as much to ſeek as ever: he is indeed like the pool Polycritus writeth of (cited by Ariſtotle) which in compaſſe at the firſt ſcarce ſeemed to exceed the breadth of a ſhield, but if any went in to waſh, it extended it ſelf more and more. A Country fellow thinks, if he were upon ſuch a mountain, he could touch heaven, and take a ſtar in his hand; but when he comes thither, heaven is as far off as it was &c. So it is here; eye hath not ſeen, nor ear heard &c. 1 Cor. 2. 9. Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of Gods love in Chriſt, ſaith, I am like a man digging in a deep ſpring: I ſtand here, and the water riſeth up upon me, and I ſtand there, and ſtill the water riſeth upon me. What the Apoſtle ſaith of this infinite love of God, that it paſſeth knowledge, as having all the dimenſions Epheſ. 3. 18, 19. the ſame is true of the wiſedome of God, as Zophar ſetteth forth in the following verſes.

Orat. 1.

De mirabil. auſcult.

Verſe 8. It is as high as heaven, what canſt thou do?] And much higher; it is as the highneſſes of heaven (ſo the Hebrew hath it) which is ſo high, that one would wonder we ſhould be able to behold the ſtarry skie (which yet is but as the marble wall round about the palace) and the very eye not be tired in the way. See the Note on Prov 25. 3. How high that ſecond heaven is, may hereby be gathered, in that the ſtars (whereof thoſe of the firſt magnitude are ſaid to be every one above 107 times as big again as the whole earth) do yet ſeem to us but as ſo many ſmall ſparks or ſpangles: but how high the third heaven is above them, cannot be conjectured Epheſ. 4. 10. And yet the wiſdom of the Almighty is far above that. But what meaneth Zophar by theſe cutted queſtions of his, What canſt thou do? and what canſt thou know? He thought belike, that either Job conſidered not what he had ſaid, when he ſo ſet forth Gods wiſedom, and his own ſhallowneſſe: or elſe that he contradicted himſelf, when he neverthelesſ ſtood ſo much upon his own integrity, and complained ſo greatly of his miſery, as of an injury.

Deeper then hell] Which where even it is, appeareth by this and other texts of Scripture; as Revel. 9. 11. Deut. 32. 22. Pſalm 55. 15. Prov. 15. 24. &c. To be ratum, Ubi ſit, ſcrutando, qui curioſius quærunt, ſaith one, where it is, they ſhall find one day, who over-curiouſly enquire. The word here rendred hell, ſignifieth the lower and more remote parts of the earth: and David telleth us, that the wicked ſhall be turned into hell, into the loweſt part of it, as the Hebrew there implieth Pſalm 9. 17.

Verſe 9. The meaſure thereof is longer then the earth] Wherein, ſome kingdomes are of a very great length, as thoſe of the Turks, and of the Tartars at this day. How long then is the earth it ſelf? Some have undertaken to tell in how many dayes a nimble footman might measure it, but that's but a conjecture. It must be remembred that these things are spoken after the manner of men; for the wisedom of God can neither be measured nor numbred: of his understanding there is no number, saith the Prophet, Psalm 147. 5. Archimedes the Mathematician vaunted, that he by his skill in Arithmetick, could number up all the sand or dust that is in the whole world habitable and inhabitable. But who can cast up the extent of the Divine wisedom.

nimble

And broader then the sea] Which yet David calleth the great and wide sea, Psalm 104. 25. Breadth is ascribed to the sea, because of its huge extension; marriners for many dayes together whiles they sail upon the main, see no land, but only sky and water. Gods wisedom goes beyond all these: neither must we think to lade this Ocean with our cockle-shell. We may sooner drain the sea with a spoon, then the perfections of God with our largest understandings.

Verse 10. If he cut off and shut up] Heb. If he change, viz. his course or way of proceedings toward men, either to shut them up close prisoners, or otherwise to put them to such straits that (Job-like) they know not what to do, or which way to turn themselves.

Or gather together] viz. His witnesses, say some, against an offender, his armies and military forces, saith the Chaldee paraphrast, to ruine his enemies: his out-casts, say some interpreters, according to that Psalm 147. 2. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem, he gathereth together the out-casts of Israel. If he do any or all of these to shew his soveraignty, as well he may,

Then who can hinder him] Heb. turn him away, or put a stop to him? If God should do and undo, confound all things, turn the world upside down, who shall contradict him or question him? May he not do with his own as he pleaseth? And might not Zophar have spared thus to have spoken to Job, sith Job had said the same to him in effect before? But Zophars design was to prove hereby that he who is by God brought into straits, is a wicked liver. He therefore in the two following verses glanceth at him as vain, wicked, bruitish, and not unlike to a wilde asse-colt, such as God would surely tame and tutor to better things by afflictions, and so bring him to hand.

Atqui non erat necesse hæc à Zophar dici, quum de his jam & eadem dixisset Job. Marc.

Verse 11. He knoweth vain man, he seeth wickedness also] Doubtlesse he beholdeth faithlesse men, mortals of vanity, head-long and head-strong wights; homines falsitatis (so Cajetan rendreth it) men of falsehood, homines mendaces (so Pagnine) lying persons, such as thou Job art presumed to be by thy impious words, and grievous punishments: He seeth wickedness, inanitatem & iniquitatem, vanity and villany: God seeth all, how closely and cleanly soever hypocrites think to carry the matter, first, hiding God from themselves, and then vainly hoping to hide themselves also from God, but his eye-lids try the children of men, Psalm 11. 4. He seeth their wickedness or unreasonableness (as the word properly signifieth) for wicked men are absurd men, 2 Thes. 3. 2. they are compact of meer incongruities, solecizing in opinion, speeches, actions all,

Will he not then consider it?] sc. To judg and punish it? Man maketh no great matter of sin, but God doth. He will bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil, Eccles. 12. 14. he will see that every transgression and disobedience shall receive a just recompence of reward, Heb. 2. 2. This Zophar doth not only affirm, but puts it home strongly by a question (wherein he closely taxeth Job of hypocrisie) will he not consider it? Some read it without a question thus, But he (that is man) considereth not, is without understanding of Gods wisedom and justice, being dull and stupid like a wild asse-colt, as it followeth.

Verse 12. For vain man would be wise] Heb. Hollow man, that is, as void of grace, as an hollow tree is of heart of oak. would be wise] Heb. would be hearty, egregiè cordatus homo, there is an elegancy in the Original that cannot be Englished. Wilt thou know, O vain man, saith St. James chap. 2. 20. The Greek is, thou empty man, thou that hast nothing in thee, and yet art highly conceited: thou that art (Ephraim-like) a silly dove without an heart, Hos. 7. 11. and yet in superbiam erectus (as the Vulgar here hath it) raised up to pride: that little knowledge he hath, puffeth him up, 1 Cor. 8. 1. So bellows-like is the natural soul, or rather so bladder-like, like, that filled with earthly vanities, it growes great, and ſwelleth in pride: but prick'd with the leaſt pin of piercing grief, it ſhriveleth to nothing. The Prophet Iſaiah fitly compareth it to a bul-ruſh, chap. 58. 5. the colour whereof is freſh, the skin ſmooth: but if you pill it, what is under but a kind of ſpongious, unſubſtantial ſubſtance, of no uſe in the world worth the ſpeaking of? Formaliſts and pretenders to holineſſe, are flat nothing, worſe then nothing, iniquity, Matth. 23. 28.

Eph. 4.

Though man he born as a wilde aſſes colt] Take him in his pure naturals, he is no wiſer; created he was in Gods image, which conſiſted in knowledg, righteouſneſſe and holineſſe: knowledg in his underſtanding, rightneſſe or ſtraightneſſe in his will, and holineſſe in his affections. But ſince the fall, all this is loſt and gone quite: he hath principium læſum, neither can he know the things of God, no though he be ψυχικὸς, a ſouly man, one that doth excolere animam, ſuch as Tully and Ariſtotle: yet is he in ſpirituals, as blind as a beetle, a meer aſſe-colt: a colt is none of the wiſeſt creature, much leſſe an aſſe-colt, leaſt of all a wilde aſſe-colt; and yet ſuch is man, ſenſual man, Judg. 19. ſapleſſe man, Pſalm 14. 1. he is as an aſſes foale for rudeneſſe, a wilde aſſes for unrulineſſe, untamed, and untractable. Surely, as a wilde aſſe-colt, (ſaith Gregory upon this text) not uſed to the yoak, runneth up and down the large fields and woods at his pleaſure, and when he is weary, lieth down, and thus doth from day to day: So man by nature is licentious, running as his luſts carry him, to all manner of ſin, and giveth not overrunning till he is weary: he will not be held in by any reins, or kept to do the work he ſhould by any yoak which the Lord by teaching ſeeks to put upon him. Surely (ſaith another) God is fain to deal with ſuch, as men do with friſking jades in a paſture, that cannot take them up, till they get them to a gate: ſo till the hour of death &c. Thomas Blaverus chief counſellour ſometime to the King of Scots, believed not that there was God or divel, heaven or hell, till he came to die, and then cryed out, he was damned: ſo alſo died one Arthur Miller: and before him, a deſperate Dean of Pauls. When death comes (ſaith Sir Walter Raleigh) which hates and deſtroys men, that is believed. But God that loveth and maketh men, he is not regarded. O eloquent death! O mighty death! whom none could adviſe, thou art able to perſwade &c.

Marbury.

Theatr. hiſt. pag 127, 128.

Sword againſt ſwear. pag. 34. Hiſt. of world.

Verſe 13. If thou prepare thine heart] viz. to meet God, Amos 4. 12. humbly ſubmitting to his juſtice, and heartily imploring his mercy. The ſumme of what Zophar ſaith in the following verſes, is this; if thou truely repent, thou ſhalt proſper: as if not, thou ſhalt periſh: this he might have ſaid more fitly to moſt of us, who are deeply guilty (ſaith Lavater) then to Job, who was nothing ſo ſinful as we are, and yet much more penitent. But Zophar calls upon him to quarrel with his faults, and not with his friends, and to break off his ſins by repentance, without which, if he ſhould have peace, it would be but like thoſe ſhort interims between the Egyptian plagues.

And ſtretch out thine hands towards him] Heb. And ſpread thy palmes to him; ſo in prayer for pardon of ſin, and power againſt ſin: for this ſtretching out, or ſpreading of the hands, is a prayer-geſture, wherein Gods people come formâ pauperis, holding out the hand to receive mercy, as beggars do an alms; or as men beg quarter for their lives with hands held up: or laſtly, as he that is faln into a ditch, or deep pit, and cannot get out, lifteth up his hands, and cryeth out for help. See Exod. 17. 11, 12. and 19. 20. 1 Kings 8. 22. Pſalm 141. 2. It appeareth that the Ancients prayed not with their hands joyned together, or a little way lifted up, but with their arms ſtretcht abroad, and the palms of their hands turned up towards heaven.

Verſe 14. If iniquity be in thine hand, put it far away] Caſt away all thy tranſgreſſions, and throw thy luſts out of ſervice. Hands lifted up in prayer muſt be pure, 1 Tim. 2. 8. for the fountain of goodneſſe will not be laden at with foul hands Iſai. 1. 15, 16. Good therefore is the counſel of Jeremiah, chap. 4. 14. and of St. James, chap. 4. 8. The Prieſts had their laver to waſh in before they ſacrificed, and their brazen altar to offer on before they burnt incenſe. He that comes to pray, having not firſt purged himſelf of all filthineſſe of fleſh and ſpirit, doth (ſay the Jew-doctors) as he that cometh to offer a clean beaſt, but holds an unclean one in his hand. By iniquity in the hand here, Beza and others underſtand wrong-dealing, either either by fraud or force, by ſtrength or ſlight of hand: and then Zophar preſſeth Job to reſtitution: away with it, ſaith he, ſend it home to the right owner: elſe you will cough in hell, and the divels will laugh at you, ſaith Latimer.

And let not wickedneſſe dwell in thy Tabernacles] i. e. In thy family, and where-ever elſe thou haſt to do; I and my houſe will ſerve the Lord, ſaith Joſhuah: I and my maids, ſaith Eſther. Davids care for the reforming and well-ordering of his houſhold, and of his whole kingdom, See Pſalm 101. throughout. Such a man is really as he is relatively. Thoſe Governors of families and countries ſhew themſelves perfect ſtrangers to the practice of repentance, who make no other uſe of their ſervants and ſubjects, then they do of their beaſts; whiles they may have their bodies to do their ſervice, they care not if their ſouls ſerve the divel. This will lye heavy one day. Joſh. 24. 15. Eſth. 4. 16.

Verſe 15. For then ſhalt thou lift up thy face without ſpot &c.] Repentance muſt be performed in faith, or elſe it will prove to be pœnitentia Iſcariotica, a Judas-like repentance. Lord (ſaid that dying Saint) caſt me down as low as hell in repentance, and lift me up by faith into the higheſt heavens in confidence of thy ſalvation. Zophar, that he may move Job kindly and rightly to repent, promiſeth him thereupon malorum ademptionem, bonorum adeptionem, freedome from evil, and fruition of good. And firſt, thou ſhalt lift up thy face without ſpot, i. e. Thou ſhalt be full of comfort and of confidence, not caſting down thy countenance, as guilty Cain, but looking up boldly and cheerfully, as St. Steven did, Acts 7. 15. they ſaw his face as it had been the face of an Angel.

Ibat ovans animis & ſpe ſua damna levabat.

Yea, thou ſhalt be ſtedfaſt] Or durable and compact as a molten pillar; thine heart ſhall be eſtabliſhed with grace, thy mind with peace: thine outward eſtate with a laſting felicity.

And ſhalt not fear] ſc. The loſſe of thoſe enjoyments. To be freed from the fear of evil, is better then to be freed from evil: and a great part of the Saints portion both on earth and in heaven, lies in their deliverance from fear, Luke 1. 74. Pſalm 112. 7. See Zeph. 3. 13. Iſa. 17. 2. Repent, and thou ſhalt fear no more a revolution of any thy troubles.

Verſe 16. Becauſe thou ſhalt forget thy miſery] There being no fear left, or foot-ſtep thereof remaining to renew thy grief, Gen. 41. 30. Remember thy former trouble thou ſhalt, with thankfulneſſe for a better condition now, but no otherwiſe: all the marks of former affliction ſhall be worn out. See Iſa. 65. 16, 13. ſo that thou ſhalt diſcount all the evil thou haſt endured.

And remember it as waters that paſſe away] As a land-flood, ſoon gone, as a light cloud quickly over: or as Noahs flood which that good man thought upon: when it was paſt, with thankfulneſſe to God, offering ſacrifice for his ſafety. So ſhalt thou Job: and as a man ſeldome thinketh how much water paſſeth by his habitation by day and by night; or if he do, yet its no trouble to his mind, no more ſhall the remembrance of by-paſt miſeries be to thine.

Verſe 17. And thine age ſhall be clearer then the noon-day] The reſt of thy life which thou giveſt for loſt, ſhall be the very prime part of thy time for glory. Solid glory ſpringeth out of innocency of life, beneficence toward all men, acts done valiantly and ſucceſsfully with juſtice and moderation of mind: whereunto is added the conſtant applauſe of good men, proceeding from an admiration of ſo great vertue. This Zophar promiſeth Job upon his true repentance, with a daily increaſe thereof, as the Sun ſhineth more and more unto the perfect day. Fame followeth vertue, as the ſhadow doth the body at the very heels. If there be any vertue, if any praiſe, ſaith the Apoſtle Philip. 4. 8. Where the one is, the other will be. Abel for his faith and righteouſneſſe is yet ſpoken of (as ſome render Hebr. 11. 4.) though dead long agoe. The Righteous ſhall be had in everlaſting remembrance, Pſalm 112. 6.

Thou ſhalt ſhine forth, thou ſhalt be as the morning] Iſai. 58. 8. Or, If thou doſt wax obſcure, yet thou ſhalt match the morning which diſperſeth darkneſſe, and conquers it by the approaching light. Look how the Moon wadeth out of a cloud, ſo ſhall thine over-caſt righteouſneſſe break forth as the light, and thy judgment as the noon-day, Pſalm 37. 6.

Verſe 18. And thou ſhalt be ſecure, becauſe there is hope] It's a ſpiritual ſecurity that's here promiſed, which is a fruit of faith, quelling and killing diſtracting and diſtruſtful fears; faith, I ſay, unfaigned 1 Tim. 1. 5. which produceth hope unfailable Rom. 5. 5. Hope is the daughter of faith, but ſuch as is a ſtaffe to her aged mother.

Yea, thou ſhalt dig about thee] That is (ſaith one Interpreter) by ſearching to find out how to do all things for the beſt, thou ſhalt proſper in all. Others ſenſe it thus, thou ſhalt be ſecure as they that lye in trenches. Rabbi David, Thou ſhalt dig only about thy city, and not need to make any walls about it for thy ſecurity. Others, thou ſhalt labour hard, and ſleep ſoundly thereupon. Or thus, God ſhall ſo encompaſſe thee with his ſafe protection, as if thou doſt but dig a place to pitch thy tent in, thou ſhalt enjoy thy ſelf ſafelier therein then otherwiſe thou wouldſt do in a walled city.

Eugub. Tigur. Lavater.

And thou ſhalt take thy reſt] God will keep off thoſe gnats of cares and fears, that might diſquiet thee. We read of ſome great Princes that could not ſleep, as Ahaſuerus Eſth. 6. 1. Richard the third of England; and Charls the ninth of France, after that barbarous Maſſacre at Paris: but David could Pſalm 3. and 4. becauſe God was his keeper. No marvel that Philip ſleepeth ſoundly, when Antipater (his faſt friend) watched by him the while. Job and all Gods beloved ones ſhall ſleep on both ears, Pſalm 127. 2. reſt ſecurely and comfortably. What ſhould hinder, when the keeper of Iſrael, who neither ſlumbreth nor ſleepeth, ſhall watch over them for good?

Daniel Thulin. In utramvis aurem.

Verſe 19. Thou ſhalt lie down, and none ſhall make thee afraid] Thou ſhalt walk about the world like a conquerour, being ever under a double guard, the Peace of God within thee, Philip. 4. 7. and the Power of God without thee 1 Pet. 1. 5. neither ſhall any enemy come upon thee in the night to fright and to diſturb thee, which is a great mercy. It is not long ſince we of this Nation did eat the bread of our ſouls in peril of our lives, neither could we reſt in our beds for the ſound of the trumpet, the alarm of warre: Deſtruction upon deſtruction was cryed &c. Jer. 4. 19,20. Should this ever be forgotten?

Yea, many ſhall make ſuit unto thee] Heb. Shall intreat thy face: yea, they ſhall tire thee out with their intreaties. Many ſeek the Rulers favour, Prov. 29. 26. he is even thronged with ſuitors, ſo that he cannot be without a Maſter of Requeſts. Hence the Poet Orpheus faineth that Litæ or Supplications and Petitions are Jovis daughters: and that they are ever attending at his throne. Here then Zophar promiſeth Job, that upon his return to God he ſhall be as great a man as ever, and that many, yea, that his very enemies ſhall not only not moleſt him, but fear his power, and beg his favour. And whereas once it was, this is Job whom no man ſeeketh after, then the rich among the people ſhall intreat thy favour, Pſalm 45. 12. and all that deſpiſed thee ſhall bow themſelves down at the ſoals of thy feet, Iſai. 60. 14. See Iſai. 45. 14. Rev. 3. 9. Prov. 19. 6. To this is the honour God putteth upon holineſſe, Holy and reverend is his name; and therefore reverend becauſe holy: ſo alſo is ours, Iſai. 43. 4. Howbeit we have cauſe to complain, that in theſe laſt and worſt times, as the Turks count all fools to be Saints, ſo men with us account all Saints to be fools, and not a few turn to unholineſſe, leſt they ſhould be deſpiſed.

ὧδ ἅλιμοι ἱκετεῖς Ζηνὸς κέκρηγε λίται. Orph. in Arg.

Jer. 30. 17.

Pſalm 111. 9.

Omnes quodammodo mali eſſe coguntur, ne viles habeantur. Sal. lib 4.

Verſe 20. But the eyes of the wicked ſhall fail] Contraries illuſtrate one another: and Zophar willing his words ſhould ſtick and work, thinks to leave a ſting in Job's mind by telling him what he muſt truſt to if he perſiſt in his ſin. And firſt, his eyes ſhall faile: The eye is a principal part of the body; and the failing of the eyes followeth either upon ſome ſudden fright, or upon much weeping, Lament. 2. Pſalm 88. and 38. (we read of one Pandion ſon of Vortiger King of Britain, who wept out his eyes) or too long looking after the ſame thing, or on the ſame object. The wicked, ſaith Zophar, ſhall never want frights and griefs; they ſhall alſo look many a long look after help, but none ſhall appear Lam. 4. 17. their hopes ſhall be fruitleſſe their projects ſucceſſeleſſe.

Vt vehementius vellicet & fodiat inopinatum, ut putabat Jobi animum. Merl. Speed.

And they ſhall not eſcape] Heb. refuge or flight ſhall perish from them: miſeries and miſchiefs they ſhall never be able to avert or avoid, many ſorrows ſhall be to the wicked Pſalm 32. 10. and although they may think to get off, or out-run them, yet it will not be, Amos 2. 14. Pſalm 142. 4. Saul for inſtance. God hath forſaken me, ſaith he, and the Philiſtims are upon me, 1 Sam. 28. 15.

yet

Their hope ſhall be as the giving up of the Ghoſt] Broughton rendreth it, Their hope is nought but pangs of the ſoul. Of that which yeildeth but cold comfort, we uſe to ſay, It comforteth a man like the pangs of death: the Vulgar hath it, Their hope ſhall be the abomination of their ſoul: the Tigurine, Their hope ſhall be moſt vain, even as a puffe of breath which preſently paſſeth away, and cometh to nothing. Some Rabbines make this the ſenſe, Their hope ſhall be as the ſnuffing of the breath: that is, they ſhall be ſo angry at their diſappointments, that they ſhall vex and ſnuffe at it. According to our tranſlation, the wicked mans hope is ſet forth as utterly forlorn, and at an end for any good ever to befall him. The godly mans hope is lively, 1 Pet. 1. 3.. and the righteous hath hope in his death, Prov. 14. 32. Cum expiro ſpero is his motto: whereas the wickeds word when he dieth is, or may be, ſpes & fortuna valete, my life and hope endeth together; Spes eorum expiratione animæ, ſo Tremellius rendreth the text: Death cauſeth in the wicked a total deſpair, and a moſt dreadful ſchreek giveth the guilty ſoul, when it ſeeth it ſelf launching into an infinite ocean of ſcalding lead, and conſidereth that therein it muſt ſwim naked for ever.

CHAP. XII.

Verſe 1. And Job anſwered and ſaid]

BEing nipped and netled with his friends hard uſage of him, and harſh language to him, but eſpecially with Zophars arrogant and lofty preface in the former chapter, he begins now to wax warm, and more roughly and roundly to ſhape them an anſwer.

Verſe 3. No doubt but ye are the people] The ſelect peculiar people, the only Ones, as a man is put for a good man, Jer. 5. 1. a wife for a good wife, Prov. 18. 22. a name for a good name Eccleſ. 7. 1. As Athens was ſaid to be the Greece of Greece, and as one promiſing to ſhew his friend all Athens at once, ſhewed him Solon: or as the Latine Poet, ſaying of Fabius Maximus. Silius.

Hic patriæ eſt, murique urbis ſtant pectore in uno.

So ſaith Job by an holy jeer (not to diſgrace his friends, but to bring them to more modeſty and moderation, if it might be) Certes, ye are not one or two men, but ſpecimen totius orbis, an Epitome of the world, or at leaſt the Repreſentative of ſome whole people: ye have got away all the wit from my ſelf and others, whom ye look upon as ſo many wilde aſſes colts in compariſon of your ſelves. Thus the Pope (Simon Magus-like) giveth himſelf out to be ſome great thing, Acts 8. 9. even the Church-virtual: and that in his breſt, as in Noah's Ark, is comprehended all wiſedome and worth: ye know nothing at all, ſaith he (Caliphas-like) to all others, Job 15. 9. So do his Jeſuites, the Jeſuites, who will needs be taken for the only Scholars, Politicians, and Orators of the world. The Church, ſay they, is the ſoul of the world, the Clergy of the Church, and we of the Clergy: the Empire of learning is ours &c. Vatab.

And wiſedome ſhall dye with you] As being lockt up in your boſomes. Suetonius telleth us of Petronius the Grammarian, that he was heard to ſay, that Learning was born with him, and would dye with him. The Gnoſticks would needs be held the only knowing men: Illuminates in Spain the only ſpiritual men: Swenkfeldians in Germany called themſelves the Confeſſors of the glory of Chriſt: our Antinomians the Heavers of the Goſpel, adoreurs-grace. But what ſaith Solomon? Let another man praiſe thee, and not thine own mouth, Prov. 27. 2. And that which had been much to a mans commendation, if from another, ſoundeth very ſlenderly from himſelf, ſaith Pliny. Aben Ezra and Rabbi Levi ſee another ſenſe upon this verſe; as if it were no irony, but a plain aſſertion to this effect: Queſtionleſſe you are to be counted among the common ſort of people (ſee John 7. 49.) Neither is there in you any thing excellent or extraordinary; that ye ſhould be looked upon, as drained Ep. 8. lib. 1.

ned from the dregs, or ſifted from the brans of the very vulgar: your wiſedome, if ever you had any, is even dead and decaied with you, and you have out-lived your prime &c.

Verſe 3. But I have underſtanding as well as you] Think not that you have engroſſed all the knowledg, and that you have the monopoly of wiſedom in your breſts; for ſurely I may come into the ballance with you, and claim as great a ſhare in underſtanding as your ſelvs. Zophar was pleaſed to call me hollow and heartleſſe, chap. 11. 12. But I have an heart (ſo the Hebrew here hath it) that ſeat of underſtanding: and that ſhall appear in the enſuing diſcourſe, where Job proveth, that by ſolid arguments concerning Gods power, wiſedom, &c. which Zophar had but barely propounded. And whereas this patient man was not without his impatiencies, yet he diſcovereth more grace, even in his diſtempers, then his friends did in their ſeeming wiſe carriages. Breaking out in the body ſhewes ſtrength of nature. Some infirmities diſcover more good, then ſome ſeeming beautiful actions.

I am not inferiour to you] Heb. I fall not lower then you. See Nehem. 6. 16. Eſth. 6. 13. Job 13. 2. He meaneth, that he was much their ſuperiour, and did better underſtand the doctrine of Gods providence then they. This he ſpeaketh not out of any vain-glory, or ambitious boaſting; but as David, and Paul, and others after them did, commending themſelves, either in defence of their own wronged innocency, or when it appeared unto them, that the concealing of their good parts and practiſes might turn to the hindrance of the truth, or to the hurt of the Church, or to the impairing and impeaching of Gods glory. In theſe caſes, ſelf-commendation is not unſeemly: but a Job may lawfully ſtand upon, not his compariſons only, but his diſpariſons alſo.

Yea, who knoweth not ſuch things as theſe?] Viz. That God rewardeth the righteous, and puniſheth the ungodly. The Heathen ſaw this by the ruſh-candle of natures dim light. Doth not nature it ſelf teach you? ſaith Paul 1 Cor. 11. 14. And again, This ye know, that no whoremonger &c. hath any inheritance in the kingdome of God, and of Chriſt, Eph. 5. 5.

Verſe 4. I am as one mocked of his neighbour] Thoſe that ſhould countenance and comfort me, contemn and ſcorn me. I am their laughter and paſtime; ſo he took it, ſith they ſat ſo heavily upon the skirts of his conſcience, and would not weigh his reaſons brought in his own defence.

Who calleth upon God, and he anſwereth him] i. e. I Job do make God my refuge, when theſe jeering neighbours of mine do ſhame my counſel, Pſalm 14. 6. and would mock me out of my religion: but God favoureth me though men frown: and where humane help faileth, divine appeareth. Or thus rather: I am derided of thoſe who profeſſe to call upon God, and to hear often from heaven. They are hard-hearted to me, though themſelves have liberally taſted of Gods tenderneſſe: and they pull up the bridg of mercy before me, which themſelves have oft gone over.

The juſt upright man is laughed to ſcorn] Shame ſhall be the promotion of fools, Prov. 3. 35. and ſuch a diſſembler as Doeg may well be derided, Pſalm 52. 6, 7. But what hath the righteous done? And why ſhould juſt, upright Job be laughed to ſcorn? But this is no news: Chriſt and his people have ever been for ſigns, and for wonders in this mad world, alwaies beſides it ſelf in point of ſalvation. He that departeth from evil, maketh himſelf a prey, or is accounted mad, Iſai. 59. 15. If he will needs be a juſt upright man, if he will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus (if he be ſo ſet upon it, that none ſhall hinder him) he ſhall ſuffer perſecution, this of the tongue howſoever, 2 Tim. 3. 12. A wolf flieth not upon a painted ſheep; we can look upon a painted toad with delight: it is the reality of godlineſſe that is hated. Iſa. 8. 18.

Verſe 5. He that is ready to ſlip with his feet] He who is in a declining, tottering condition, ready to fall and periſh under the burden of his afflictions, though formerly he was looked upon and made uſe of as a lamp or torch, yet when he is at an under, and brought low, is ſhamefully ſlighted by ſuch as have the world at will: like as a torch when waſted and waxen ſhort is caſt out of the hands, and trodden on with the feet of him that held it. The holieſt men, if afflicted, do but ſmother in ſtead of ſhining. When Chriſt himſelf was a man of ſorrows, he was therefore deſpiſed and rejected of men, who hid, as it were, their faces from him, and eſteemed him not, Iſai. 53. 3. The Prodigals elder brother ſpeaks ſcornfully of him, becauſe poor,

Luke

Luke 15. 30. This thy son; he saith not, This my brother &c. Gregory saith, that the poor just man is here compared to a lamp extinct, because he shineth inwardly by the vertue of an upright heart: but outwardly is as it were extinct, because there is nothing outward to commend him; no glorious apparel, no goodly houses, &c. whence they are slighted by the rich wretches of this world. But such a lamp (saith he, following the Vulgar translation) is set for an appointed time; that is, the day of judgment, when he shall shine most brightly, even as the Sun &c. when the worlds favourites shall be thrust into utter darkness.

Verse 6. The tabernacles of robbers prosper] By Robbers here understand all such as sin against the second table, but especially oppressors, and wrong-dealers, whether by force or fraud. As by those that provoke God (qui vel Dei interturbant, so the Tigurines translate) that irritate and disquiet him, attempting to put him out of temper, are meant sinners against the first table. See the like 1 Tim. 1. 13. I was (against God) a blasphemer, (against man) a persecutor, against both injurious: but I obtained mercy, special mercy! So do not these Robbers and God-provokers in the text: thrive they may, and be in a peaceable condition; yea, they may be secure and confident of the continuance of their prosperity: confidences are to them, saith the Hebrew verity; for they trust in uncertain riches, whiles God bringeth into their hands, viz. whatsoever they wish, yet not as love-tokens, but as wrath-tokens: these fatting beasts are but fitting for the slaughter. God oft giveth that in wrath to some, which he with-holdeth from others in great mercy. Mean-while Zophars twofold assertion in the former chapter, verse 17, 20. that good men prosper here, and bad men suffer, falls to the ground, whiles Job disproves it, 1. By experience in this verse and the former. 2. By the testimony of the creatures, those Catholick preachers, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10. 3. By the testimony of the senses, and of ancient men, verse 11, 12.

Verse 7. But ask now the beasts of the earth, and they shall teach thee] Even the wildest of them that abide in the wilderness: there is not one of these, or else of the fouls of the air, but can both teach thee, and tell thee that the world is ordered by a providence, that God is Powerful, Wise, Just, &c. (and must therefore be loved and served. That he suffereth the bad to oppresse the good, as the great beasts do devour the little ones, as the hurtful fouls destroy the harmlesse, as the great fishes eat up the smaller: man, who was once the Captain of Gods school, is now, for his truantlineſse, turned down into the lowest form, as it were, to learn his A b c again; yea, to learn it of the meanest creatures. See Prov. 6. 6. Jer. 8. 7. Matth. 6. 26. where it appeareth, that in the Ant, Stork, Swallow, &c. God hath set before us, as in a picture, the lively resemblance of many excellent vertues, which we ought to pursue and practise. These are the right lay-mens-books, the images that may truly teach people the knowledg of God, and of his will, of themselves, and of their duties: which we should the rather learn, because God hath given us wisedome beyond them, Job 37. 11. and yet by sending us to them, shameth our dulnesse and disobedience.

Verse 8. Or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee] Teach thee? What? surely many good lessons, as that of humility and modesty, considering our original: that of fruitfulnesse, whiles she liberally yeilds her riches and strength, and brings forth food for the maintenance of those innumerable armies of creatures that live upon her: but especially, and for the purpose, this the earth teacheth, that the tabernacles of robbers prosper, that oppressors swallow down most of her delicates, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, ruffle in her silks, and riſle in her hid treasures of gold and silver.

Terra quam terimus docet terram quam gerimus.

And the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee] These mutes might have some what also to say to thee, and by a dumb kind of eloquence read thee a divinity-lecture, whilest they are able to produce many such particular examples of violence in the seas, and will further declare (or expound unto thee) how oft they are served up to great mens tables, and do fill the fat paunches of oppressors. It is not unlikely that Job, in this frequent sending Zophar to school to the unreasonable and inanimate creatures, closely twitcheth him with those quicker questions of his, chap. 12. 8. Who can't know that what can't thou know, &c.? giving him also to know that he need not travel so far as heaven or hell for instances of Gods infinite power and wisedome, sith

we

we may contemplate the foot-steps of God in each creature: and sith he is so neere unto us, that hee may bee almost felt with our hands, as Paul speaketh.

ψηλαφήσειαν Acts 17.

Verse 9. Who knoweth not in all these &c.] Or, By all these forementioned creatures &c. and therefore Zophar, you have shewed no more wisedome in your lofty discourse, then the birds, beasts, and fishes have taught and told us. It is a silly vanity to pretend mysteriousnesse about vulgar truths; to dig deep for that which lieth above ground; to talk of new truths, and never before heard of, when as the hearer may well say, as here, Who knowes not such things as these? Of some in these dayes it is observed, that they call upon their hearers to mark, it may be they shall hear that which they have not heard before: when the thing is either false, or if true, no more then ordinarily is taught by others.

Theologia cryptica.

That the hand of the Lord hath wrought this] That he alone made all without tool or toile, and that he alone manageth and ordereth all according to the good pleasure of his will: neither need he subscribe his name to his work; for the very things that he hath made, proclaim that he made them. Mean while, hereby we may see how much we are beholden to Aristotle, Elian, Gesner, and other Learned men, who have written bookes concerning the Natures of living creatures.

Verse 10. In whose hand is the soul of every living thing] That is, the life of every beast, flowing from a sensitive soul, Lev. 17. 10, 11. This, God both giveth to the creature, and conserveth it: he suffereth it not to be taken away from little sparrows, or the like, without order from him: much lesse befalleth any such thing to man without his singular providence, sith our very hairs also are numbred, Matth. 10. 30. Luke 12. 7. The Jew-doctors do therefore offer manifest injurie to Job, when they say, that he held indeed that God created, and doth preserve the several kinds of things, but permitteth the particulars and individua's to hap-hazard, whereas here he delivereth his judgment plainly to the contrary, when he saith,

And the breath of all mankind] Heb. The spirit of all mans flesh (and so Brough on readeth it) that is, of every mans body: hence God is called the God of the spirits of all flesh, Numb. 16. 22. and the Father of Spirits, Heb. 12. 9. and the Former of the spirit of man within him, Zech. 12. 1. My times are in thine hand, saith David, Psalm 31. 15. God preserves our lives as a light in a lantern: and we may be glad it is in so safe an hand; we should therefore honour him, as Daniel telleth Belshazzar, Dan. 5. 23. yea, let every thing that hath breath praise the Lord, Psalm 150. 6. Or as the Hebrew hath it, Let every breath praise the Lord: as oft as we breathe, we are to breathe out the praise of God, and to make our breath like the smoak of the Tabernacle: this we should do the rather, because our breath is in our nostrils, every moment ready to puffe out, and the grave cannot praise God, death cannot celebrate him, Isai. 38. 18.

Isai. 3. ult.

Verse 11. Doth not the eare try words &c.] The mind may as easily conceive of these truths, as the ear judgeth certainly of the variety of sounds, and the tongue of the diversity of tastes: neither may you think that I will, without any examination or distinction, allow of your discourses, or that I can take it well that you reject, as void of reason, whatsoever I have said, without once weighing it. The ear is one of the two learned senses, it is an instrument of discipline: only it should be kept clean and free from prejudice or passion, which will be as gall in the eare. See Prov. 6. 9. Demosthenes called oft upon his Athenians to get their eares purged of thoters: and Alexander, when he heard a cause, was wont alwaies to keepe the Accuser one eare free for the other party: he would not be prepossessed. Mercer observeth, that the Hebrew word for an eare, doth in the duall number signifie a pair of balances, to note, that a judicious Christian taketh not up truth upon trust, but considereth first, and afterwards believeth it, he tryeth all things, and then holdeth fast that which is good, but abstaineth from all appearance of evil, 1 Thes. 5. 21, 22. The eare and the mind are in the Greek tongue very like in sound: the mind judgeth of the truth of words by the eare, as the beam in a pair of balances determineth the just weight of things by the two scales. He that is spiritual discerneth all things, 1 Cor. 2. 15. his bath spiritual senses. Philip. 1. 9. senses exercised, habitually exercised, to discern good and evil, Heb. 5. 14. his service a reasonable service, Rom.

Quadam animalia fel in aure gestant. Oren moreh najin.

Ks. vüs.

Rom. 12. 1. his obedience the obedience of faith, Rom. 16. 26. Whereas the natural man is carried away as he is led, 2 Cor. 12. 2. pulled away with the errour of the wicked, 2 Pet. 3. 17. taken priſoner by ſeducers, 2 Tim. 3. 6. and by them made prize of, Col. 2. 8. as having either no skil, or no will to examine what is doctrinally propounded to him.

As the mouth taſteth his meat] Heb. the palate, which is the proper inſtrument of taſting: Now the order of nature requireth (ſaith one) that ſeeing our bodily ſenſes, are ſo nimble and able to diſcern what is ſowr, what ſweet, &c. our underſtandings alſo ſhould do the ſame by right reaſon: and the contrary is very abſurd and unbecoming a man; neither can there be any good excuſe made for our dulneſſe, if we bend not our minds to the ſearch of the truth, for as much as there is ſo much adoe made to pleaſe the palate, eyes, eares, and other ſenſes: Catullus wiſhed all his body were noſe, that he might ſpend all his time in ſweet ſmells. Philoxenus, that his neck were as long as a Cranes, that he might take more delight in meats and drinks (it ſeems that he placed taſting not in the mouth, but in the throat.) Boccace the Italian Poet ſaid, that he was born all' amore delle donne, for the love of women: and of a prodigal pleaſure-monger in London, we read, that to pleaſe all his five ſenſes at once, he allowed to the delight of every ſeveral ſenſe, a ſeverall hundred pound. See the Note on Amos 6. 6. There is a ſancta crapula, an holy gluttony, as Luther calleth an hearty feeding on divine viands, a finding fatneſſe and ſweetneſſe beyond that of the hony and hony-comb in Gods Ordinances, crying to Jeſus Chriſt as the Spouſe doth Cant. 8. 13. Cauſe me to hearken to thy voice: and obeying him, thus beſpeaking us, Eat ô friends, drink, yea, drink abundantly ô beloved, till you are even inebriated with loves, Cant. 5. 1.

Senſorium. Merlin in loc.

Theatre of Gods judgm.

Pſalm 63. 5, 6.

Verſe 12. With the ancient is wiſedome] Heb. with the decrepit, who have a long, long being upon earth, and are now become wondrous old, even four-ſcore and upward: with ſuch is wiſedome, or elſe it is a ſhame for them. See 1 John 2. 12. Heb. 5. 12. True it is, that wiſedome doth not alwaies lean upon a ſtaffe, nor look through ſpectacles. Age is no juſt meaſure of wiſedome: there are beardleſſe ſages, (as was Solomon) and gray-headed children, as Rehoboam. Macarius was called μικροπρεσβυτης, the old youth; (Samuel, Daniel, Timothy were ſuch.) When Arſacius, who ſucceeded Chryſoſtom, was an old dotrel of fourſcore years, adorandæ rubiginis, (as one ſaith of ſome ancient Authors:) and Nectarius who ſucceeded Nazianzen, was a meer novice, and preferred to that place, only becauſe he was of a venerable aſpect, and of a biſhop-like preſence and deportment. Of the Brabanter Eraſmus teſtifieth, that the elder they are, the fooliſher. And Job here ſeemeth to tax his friends, that though old, yet they were not over-wiſe, not worthy of their years: ſith they underſtood not what he ſpake concerning Gods providence: Is wiſedome with the ancient, ſaith he, and underſtanding in length of dayes? ſo ſome read it queſtion-wiſe, q. d. it ill appeareth.

Anton. tit. 10. cap. 9.

Venerandâ canitie, & vultu ſacerdote digno. Baron.

And in length of dayes, underſtanding] By reaſon of their much obſervation, and frequent experience, together with their ability to draw other things out of thoſe they have obſerved, and from former events to preſage future. This is to be underſtood of ſuch old men as are like flowers, which have their roots perfect, when themſelves are withering; as with roſes, keep a ſweet ſavour though they loſe their colour, as with the Sun, ſhine moſt amiably at their going down. But leſt we ſhould attribute too much to ſuch ſages, Job ſhewes in the next verſe, that all their wiſedome is but derivative, and that all their underſtanding is but a ſpark of Gods flame, a drop of his Ocean.

Verſe 13. With him is Wiſedome and ſtrength &c] Wiſedome, ſtrength, counſel, and underſtanding, are all concentred in the Ancient of dayes: compleat he is in all excellencies and perfections, all which do meet in him, and continue alwaies in the higheſt degree. The mighty God fainteth not, neither is weary: there is no ſearching of his underſtanding Iſai. 40. 28. He is alſo no leſſe good then great and wiſe, good, original, univerſal, all-ſufficient, and ſatisfactory, proportionable, and fiting for our ſoul, which as it was made by him, and for him, ſo it is never at quiet till it reſteth in him. See chap. 9. 4.

He hath counſel and underſtanding] Counſel he hath, but without conſultation: Wiſedome, but without experience: Knowledg, but without diſcourſe: Decree, but without deliberation: Loquimur de Deo &c. We speak of God, saith one, not as we ought, but as we are able. And these things we speak of God (saith another Father) because we find not what better to speak of him. But Job hath a mind to say the utmost that may be said.

Aug.

Verse 14. Behold, he breaketh down, and it cannot be built again] As he did the old world, Sodom and Gomorrah, many Monarchies and Empires, the Tower of Babel, and other castles and houses which now lie by some only, if at all. If God have a mind to ruine these, who shall raise or repair them? Julian the Apostate, in spite to the Christians, set the Jewes awork to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem, but they could never effect it, by reason of a terrible earth-quake, that slew the workmen, and marred the materials. The Arian Bishops held a second Council at Nice, with purpose to have abolished the memory of the first, together with the Nicene Creed, and to have established Arianism: but God disappointed them, and sent them packing thence by a huge earth-quake, which overturned a great part of that city, and destroyed a number of people. Constans Nephew to Heraclius the Greek Emperour, and (three hundred years after him) Otho Emperour of Germany, indeavoured, but in vain, to make Rome the seat of their Empires, as anciently it had been. God would not suffer it so to be, saith Goubrand, because the Kingdom of the Church, foretold by Daniel, was to have its seat there. If he had said, the kingdome of Antichrist foretold by Paul, and John the Divine, he had hit the nail on the very head.

Am. Marcel. lib. 23. Socrat. 3. Theod. Ruffin.

Func.

Theophanes. Zonaras. Cedrenus. Joh. de Columna in Mari historiarum. Gen. Chronol.

He shutteth up a man, and there can be no opening] He clappeth him up close prisoner, as Manasseh, Zedekiah, Bajazet, Boniface the 8. &c.) or fasteneth him to his bed by some chronical disease (as he did Abimelech, Ahaziah, Asa, Æneas, Acts 9. 33.) or otherwise straiteneth him that he knows not how to help himself, as he did Pharaoh, Saul (when the Philistims were upon him on every side) those refractaries in Isaiah, chap. 9. 2. and shall do the whore of Babylon, Rev. 18. when her lovers shall bewail her, but not be able to bestead her, ver. 9, 10. For when God shutteth up any in this sort, they must lie by it till he please to release them, and extricate them as he did Joseph, Jehoshaphat, David, Peter, Valentinian, and many others, when they were even forsaken of their hopes.

Verse 15. Behold he withholdeth the waters, and they dry up] He not only when he pleaseth imprisoneth men, but waters also, that they cannot get out of the clouds, those bottles of rain, those airy sponges, vessels as thin as the liquor that is contained in them: it is from the power of God that they dissolve not upon us at once, and overwhelm us. Bartholinus reports that in the year of grace 1551. a great number of men and cattle were drowned by the sudden breaking of a cloud, divers vine-yards, stone walls, strong houses, were destroyed and ruined. At sea sometimes, ships are by the same means sunk, sea-men call it a spout. Again, it is by the anger and judgments of God that the clouds are sometimes so closed up, that they yeild no more water then iron or adamant: If I shut up heaven, saith he, that there be no rain, Chron. 7. 13. and Deut. 28. 23, 24. God threateneth, as a punishment of mens sin, that the heavens over their heads shall be brasse, and the earth under them shall be iron; that the rain of their land shall be made powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon them &c. by exceeding great drought, grains of dust shall ascend into the air with the wind, and come down as the drops of rain in a shower when it is kindly weather. Thus it was in Ahabs dayes 1 King. 18. See post 1. 20. with the Note.

De meteor. li. 2.

And they dry up] The rivers, fruits of the earth, roots of trees, all dry up, languish, and perish, feavers also, and other acute diseases abound.

Also he sendeth them out, and they overturn the earth] They did so with an accent in the general deluge, and in Deucalions flood in Thessaly, besides many other great tracts and parts of the earth over-turned by water. Pliny and Seneca give us sundry instances of towns and countries laid waste by water. What great hurt was lately done about Amsterdam by water, and what breaking down of bridges, mills, and other houses, by excessive rain, and floods thereupon, besides marring of grounds, and rotting of cattle in many places amongst us, needeth not here to be related.

Plin. Nat. hist. lib. 2. cap. 90, 92. Sen. Nat. quæst. lib. 6. cap. 23.

Verse 16. With him are strength and wisdome] i. e. Such strength as he exerciseth most wisely, mightily and righteously. Sic volo, sic jubeo, saith the Tyrant, Right or wrong, thus it shall be: Volumus & jubemus, saith that man of sin, wee will and command &c. neither must any one mutter or say so much as what dost thou?

upon

upon pain of damnation. When Conſtantius would have Paulinus, Lucifer, and other Biſhops ſubſcribe againſt Athanaſius, and communicate with the Arians, he yeilded to no other reaſon but this, Quod ego volo, pro canone ſit, Do as I bid, or get you into baniſhment. But God, though he hath all power in his hand, and may do whatſoever he pleaſeth, yet with him is ſtrength and equity (ſo Vatablus rendreth the word Tuſhiyah here uſed) or the being, ſubſtance, and permanency of all creatures (ſo Munſter) which ſubſiſt meerly by his maintention: or, the rule and certain law of wiſedome and judgment, by which wiſedome acteth, ſaith Mercer. So then the Lord, though he make his will a law, yet he cannot do otherwiſe then well, becauſe nothing but wiſedome and equity is in it.

The deceived, and the deceiver are his] This Job produceth as a proof of Gods inſuperable ſtrength, and unſearchable wiſedome, that he hath an over-ruling hand in the artifices and ſlights of men, even the cunning craftineſſe (as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh) *Eph.*4.14. whereby they lie in wait to deceive. Theſe he not only and barely permitteth in his juſt judgment upon the deceived (whether through ignorance, or idleneſs) but diſpoſeth alſo, & ordereth both the deceiver and the deceived, (whether in ſpiritual things, or civil) to his own righteous ends, and holy purpoſes. See *Ezek.*14.9. 1 *Kin.*22.19,20. 2 *Theſ.*2.11. *Iſa.*19.14. and then conclude with Job, that wiſedom and ſtrength are his, who can thus draw light out of darkneſſe, and powerfully order the diſorders of the world to his own glory, and the good of his people: For there muſt be hereſies, that they which are approved may be made manifeſt, 1 *Cor.*11.9. Mean-while, here is the comfort of every good ſoul, that none can take them out of the Fathers hands, *Joh.*10.29. and it is impoſſible that the elect ſhould be totally and finally deceived, becauſe both the deceived and the deceiver are Gods: by him, and from him, and for him are deceivers and deceived, (ſo Broughton tranſlateth this text). By him, for he ſuffereth and ordereth them: From him, for he ſendeth them: And For him, for they promote his glory, and ſerve his ends. He many times ſuffereth the tree of the Church to be ſhaken, that rotten fruit may drop off. There are that ſet this ſenſe upon the words; they are both in Gods hands, the deceiver to have revenge taken upon him; and the deceived who revengeth not himſelf to have his cauſe righted, as 1 *Theſ.*4.6. an argument both of Gods wiſedome to find out the deceiver, how ſubtle ſoever: and likewiſe of his power in puniſhing them, how potent ſoever.

Verſe 17. He leadeth counſellors away ſpoiled] Viz. Of wit, wealth, and honour. This ſhould be a warning to ſuch not to take ill cauſes in hand, not to call evil good, and good evil, not to juſtifie the wicked for a reward, and to take away the righteouſneſſe of the righteous from him, not to bolſter out a bad cauſe, and to outface a good, leſt if they improve their wits and parts to ſo evil an end, God make them as deſpicable as before they were honourable. They may ſee what the Lord did to Ahitophel that Oracle of his time, to Pharaohs counſellors, *Iſa.*19.11,12. to Pharaoh himſelf, *Ex.*1.10. with *Pr.*28.15.

And he maketh the Judges fools] Broughton rendreth the verſe thus, He brings Counſellors to badneſſe, and Judges to ſtark madneſſe: He infatuateth them, not by infuſing folly into them any more, then the Sun when he ſhineth not in our Horizon, cauſeth darkneſſe in the air, which of it ſelf, and of its own nature is dark: But when God with-holdeth that light of wiſedome which he had imparted to a man, his in-bred darkneſſe muſt needs ſhew it ſelf. More then this, it ſometimes cometh to paſſe, that when God delivereth a man up for his ſins to a reprobate ſenſe to an injudicious mind, he is thenceforth deprived ſometimes of natural wiſedome, and common ſenſe, that the divine revenge may be the more apparent.

Verſe 18. He looſeth the bonds of Kings] He degradeth them, taking away all command and authority from them, which is the bond that bindeth the people to obedience and ſubjection, Job 30.11. Iſai. 45.1,5. as our Henry the third, who was called Regni dilapidator, ill beloved of his people, and far a leſs King (ſaith the Chronicler) by ſtriving to be more then he was: the juſt reward of violations. Daniel.

And girdeth their loins with a girdle] With a rope, ſay the Vulgar: he brings them from the throne to the priſon: he layeth affliction upon their loynes, as Pſalm 66.11. An inſtance hereof (beſide the late King, and Corradinus King of Germany likewiſe beheaded at Naples) we had here in Richard the ſecond, brought forth in a royal robe to be depoſed, and then hunger-ſtarved in priſon: as alſo in Henry the ſixth, who having been the moſt potent Monarch for dominions that ever Val. Max. Chriſt. pag. 267.

England had, was afterwards (when deposed) not the Master of a mole-hill, nor owner of his own liberty, but baffled and beaten by every base fellow. Some Interpreters make the sense of this to be thus, God sometimes looseth the bonds, into which Princes are brought, and advanceth them again to kingly dignity, the ensign whereof, was of old a precious girdle. So it befell Manasseh, Nebuchadnezzar, Jehoiakim, restored and honoured againe as a king, by Evilmerodach, 2 Kings 25.28 Historians write, that Nebuchadnezzar was so offended with his son and successor Evilmerodach, as he cast him into prison, and that in prison he and Jehoiakim became acquainted together, whence his advancement afterwards.

Verse 19. He leadeth away Princes spoiled] Or Priests. Ducit sacerdotes inglorios, so the Vulgar translateth, He leadeth away the Priests without glory, dishonoured. Priests were generally much esteemed and priviledged in all ages. Alexander the great gave greatest respect to Jaddus the Jewish High-Priest. When the Gauls had burnt Rome, and were besieging the Capitol, Caius Fabius Dorso, attired as a Priest, with his sacrifice, and other necessaries in his hand, marched through the midst of the enemies, astonished at his resolution, offered his sacrifice on the hill Quirinalis, and returned in safety. The Bardi, a kind of Priests, were here in Albion of such esteem among the greatest commanders, that if two armies were even at push of pike, and a Bard had step'd in betwixt them, they would have held their hands, hearkned to his advice, and not have offered to strike till he were out of danger: Magna fuit quondam capitis reverentia sacri. Howbeit, such also have been carried captive, and slaine by the enemy, as was Seraiah the high-priest by Nebuchadnezzar, and before him the two sons of Eli (whose white Ephod covered foul sins) slain by the Philistims. The Lord hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, both the King and the Priest, Lam. 2. 6. Both the Prophet and the Priest go about into a land that they know not, Jer. 14. 18. The word Cohen is used indifferently to signifie a Priest, or Prince, an Ecclesiastical or secular Governor. Broughton rendreth it here Dukes; others, Presidents or prefects of Provinces: Honour is no shelter against the wrath of God.

And overthroweth the mighty] Such as might seem unmoveable, as a rock or tree firmly rooted, these God shaketh and shattereth to pieces, he rooteth them up, and ruineth them. Let no man think to prevail by strength, 1 Sam. 2. 9. sith the weakness of God (if any such thing there were) is stronger then men, 1 Cor. 1.25. He will smite his enemies (as so many puny-boyes) in the hinder-parts, and so put them to a perpetual reproach, Psalm 78. 66. Yea, he will not only smite them on the loins, but through the loins, (Deut. 32.11.) that they never rise again. Let them therfore learn to meddle with their match, Eccl. 6.10. and take heed how they fall into the punishing hands of the living God.

Verse 20. He removeth away the speech of the trusty] Or, of the eloquent, as Demosthenes the most eloquent of the Greeks, being by them frequently sent as an Ambassadour to Philip King of Macedony, thrice stood speechlesse before him, and thirty several times forgat those things which he had thought to have spoken, as Tzetzes testifieth. So Latomus of Louain, that Apostate and Persecutor of the truth, having prepared an elegant Oration to make to Charls the fifth Emperour, was so confounded, that he could hardly speak a word of sense; the grief whereof broke his heart. The Counsellor, and the Eloquent Orator, the Prudent, and the Ancient are reckoned up as the stay, and the staffe, the beauty, and bulwark of a Nation, Isa. 3.2,3 These God removeth at his pleasure, and for a general judgment, causing either them to dye, or their abilities to die and decay, or crossing their attempts that they shall speak perswasively, but not perswade people, but be slighted and exploded of all. Yea, though they be Truth-speakers (so the Vulgar hath it;) or Trusty (as our translation) Confiding men, as they are called, worthy to be trusted; such faithful counsellors as Polybius was to Scipio, who never miscarried in any thing wherein he followed his advice, as the Historian testifieth: yet God can remove or change the speech of such, by leaving them to their own unfaithfulnesse and inconstancy, as we have plentifully experimented in these late discriminating and shedding times.

Chilind. 7.

Veracium.

And taketh away the understanding of the aged] Heb. And taketh the sense, or savour, or taste of the Elders or Senators, that they shall be no more able to discern and determine what is true or false, right or wrong, then old Barzillai could skill of the Court-meates and musick. See this threatned, Isai. 29.14. Such old men as either were bred Scholars, or have had much experience in the management of great affairs, are presumed to be of great understanding: but God can either take such away, as he threateneth to do, Isa. 3.3,4. or take away their wisedome, to render them useleſſe to the publick: as it is reported of Theodorus Gaza, and of Albertus Magnus, those great Scholars, that for certain years before they died they did so dote, and were so childish, that they could not write their own names, or read a letter on the book. Let therefore the Eloquent, and the aged take heed they abuse not their abilities, leſt they forget and loſe them.

deter

Verse 21. He powreth contempt upon Princes] Or Nobles, or Gentlemen, which are, or should be free, bounteous, munificent benefactors, if they be not Nedibim, but Nebalim, liberal, but churlish, (see these opposed Isa. 32.5.) it is just in God to pour contempt, to lay abundance of shame and scorn upon them, as forlorn, penny-fathers, ignoble, Euclio's, poor-spirited men, the base brood, or rather blot of their better sore-fathers. Of our Edward the second it is chronicled, that never was Prince received with greater love and opinion of all then he, or never any that sooner lost it; for his very first action in recalling his minion Piers Gaveston, discovered an head-strong wilfulnesse, that was uncounsellable: hence he was slighted by his subjects, pursued by his wife and son, and at length cruelly murthered. Mercer observeth, that David hath the self-same words, Psalm 107.40. that are found here, and verse 24. Neither need we wonder, sith they both spake by the same spirit. ἐυεργέται. Daniel.

And weakneth the strength of the mighty] Heb. He slackneth the girdle of the mighty, that like strong streams in narrow straits, bear down all before them. So do Souldiers in warre; see 2 Sam. 22.16. Job 6.15. But God can loose their girdles (or belts, which bind their garments, and buckle their armour close to them) he can dispirit them, and make them feeble and faint-hearted, as he did Samson, and those Assyrians Psalm 76.5,6. By this whole discourse of Job it appeareth, that he had very diligently observed Gods providence, and way of administration in the several ranks of men, and alterations of common-wealths; whereby he had learned secretly to admire and adore Gods judgments, which thing we ought also semblably to do.

Verse 22. He discovereth deep things out of darknesse] As he did to Joseph and Pharaoh by dreams, to the Prophets by visions and revelations, and still doth to his people by his Spirit: for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God, 1 Cor. 2.10. He bringeth to light also the hidden things of darknesse, hellish conspiracies, as in the Powder-plot, the deep reaches of Kings to maintain their authority, and compasse their designs, resolving to suffer never a rub to lie in their way, that might hinder the true running of their bowle. Philip de Comines dived so deep, and wrote so plainly of the Stately affairs (those arcana imperii) that Katharine de Medices (Queen-mother of France) was wont to say, that he had made as many heretickes in policy, as Luther had done in Religion: He saw not that God had set Comines a work, and that he will yet further bring out to light (that all men may see) the shadow of death; that is, the things that are most abstruse, and most unlikely ever to have been discovered: see Matth. 10.26. with the Note: and say, Wo to them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, Isai. 29.15. The powder-plot was a deep thing of darknesse, it was under ground, they were so long digging in their vault of villany; and a long time it was secreted under oaths, and strongest concealments: But a bird of the air revealed it, and that which had wing told the matter, Eccles. 10.20. It was a quill, a piece of a wing brought all to light by a blind letter put (by a providence) into a wrong hand: the danger was at the very ἀκμὴ, within eight hours of being acted, when from a match ready fired, we received a matchlesse deliverance: Say then, Heyl. Geog.

Σοὶ χάριν ὅτι ἀπὸ θείης ἐναπλάγχνου μ' ἐφύλαξας.

Verse 23. Hee encreaseth the Nations, and destroyeth them] It is all one with God, whether against a single man, or a whole Nation, Job 34.29. when he once taketh them to do. The wicked shall be turned into hell, and (that they may not hope to escape because a multitude) all the nations that forget God, Psalm 9.17.

Soon

Soon after the flood, the Babel-builders were scattered, Sodom and her sisters were not only consumed with fire from heaven, Gen. 19. but thrown forth for an example suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. some Nations were ejected, and others substituted, Deut. 2. 10, 12, 20. Some utterly wasted and rooted out, as the Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, &c. that live by fame only, others not so much as by fame, their very names being blotted out from under heaven. The cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land is utterly desolate, Isai. 6. 11. Now all this is the Lords own doing, and should be marvellous in our eyes. Hee plants and plucks up, hee builds and breakes downe, Jerem. 31. 28.

‖ He enlargeth the Nations, and straiteneth them again] Or That he may straiten them again, so in the former clause, That he may destroy them: This if he may justly do to whole nations, why should it seem so strange, that he suffereth particular persons though wicked, to prosper for a season, and though righteous for a while, to suffer hardship?

Verse 24. He taketh away the heart of the chiefe of the people] That is, of the greatest part of the people of the world (say some) these God suffereth to walk in their own wayes, Acts 14. 16. To become vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart is darkned, professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, Rom. 1. 21, 22. As the Philosophers of old, and the Chineses at this day, who are known to be ingenious, and use to say of themselves, that all other nations of the world see but with one eye, they only with two; yet continue they grosse Idolaters, meer heathens, having no lesse then an hundred thousand gods, which they worship one while, and whip another, if they come not at a call. But the most Interpreters, by chief, or heads of the people, here understand their Governors, of whom though Job had said as much in effect before, (17) viz. that God dispiriteth and besotteth them for a plague to the people who follow their Rulers (and fall with them) as the body of a beast followeth the head, yet because few observe and improve this truth, therefore he repeateth and illustrateth it by three elegant Similies. And first, Descrip. of the world, of China and Cataia.

He causeth them to wander in a wildernesse &c.] Not knowing which way to extricate themselves, they beat their brains about it, but to no purpose; they are so bewildered and puzzled, as if they were treading a maze: and this God causeth, he is active in it, whiles he with-draweth his light, and delivereth them up to their own foolish hearts, and to the Prince of darknesse, to be further benighted, 2 Cor. 4. 4.

Verse 25. They grope in the dark without light] This is the second Similie, setting forth this judiciary act of God in taking away the heart of the heads of the earth: grope they do, and would fain find out a way by feeling, but they feel darknesse, and not light (so the Hebrew hath it) they try to help themselves and their people out of misery, as the last Greek Emperour did notably; but it would not be.

Turk. hist. 345.

And he maketh them to stagger like a drunken man] Who having lost the use of reason, knoweth neither where he is, nor what he was, but reeleth and falleth oft, and cannot rise again, much lesse go forward. So fareth it with evil rulers when God smiteth them with a spirit of giddinesse, and of slumber. See Isa. 19. 24. and 64. 20.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Verse 1. Lo mine eye hath seen all this] sc. All those effects of Gods providence, declared in the former chapter. I have not discoursed of Gods powerful and wise dispensations by rote, or without book, I have not blurted out what I believe not, or am not able to prove, as you have accused me, but I have spoken both that which I have seen (and what more sure then sight?) and that which I have heard and received from our Ancestors and Doctors (to whom you have frequently referred me, for better information) mine ear that sense of discipline, by which, not learning only, but life also entreth, Isai. 55. 3.) hath heard it, and understood it too; which he addeth for further assurance. Job was a Weighing Hearer, as Mr. Bradshaw was called the Weighing Divine: let us learn by his example heedfully to observe Gods works, laying up experiences, and diligently to listen and learn the things that are taught us, or written for us by others, that we may grow to a right and ripe understanding of divine truths, and be able confidently to commend the same to others, as being upon sure grounds. See Matth. 13. 51, 52. Mr. Clark in his life.

Verse 2. What ye know, the same do I know also] Heb. According to your knowledg I also know: this may seem an unbeseeming boast, which if his friends had taxed him for, he might have answered, as Paul did in a like case, Ye have compelled me, 2 Cor. 12. 11. The Rule is, let nothing be done through strife, or vain-glory, but in lowliness of mind, let each esteem other better then themselves, Philip. 2. 3. Non est tamen prodenda Dei veritas, aut integritas nostra ejus. Nevertheless no man ought to betray the truth, or his own integrity, lest he should be counted contentious. Merlin. in loc. See chap. 12. 3. where we have the same in effect as here; whence some do gather, that Jobs friends had a very high opinion of their own knowledg, and a very low one of Jobs. He that is thus proud of his knowledg, the devil careth not how much he knoweth.

Verse 3. Surely I would speak to the Almighty] It were far better for me to speak to God, then to you, and much fairer dealing from him I might expect, a God of truth, and without iniquity, just and right is he, Deut. 32. 4. but ye are forgers of lies, and ye load me with false accusations, depraving my speeches, as thou Zophar especially hast done, wishing withall that God himself would speak with me face to face, which, if it should come to passe, thou saidst, my misery and affliction would be redoubled. But oh that I might commune with the Almighty! surely and seriously I would rather do it, then with you my friends, and should hope so to defend mine innocency against your slanderous accusations, yea, so maintain Gods justice against you, in the presence and judgment of God himself. Of the confidence of a good conscience I see it in Abimelech, Gen. 20. 5. but much more in David, Psal. 7. 3, 4. And Psalm 139. 23, 24. In Jeremiah, chap. 12. 1. in every strong believer, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Those that walke uprightly, and speake uprightly, Mic. 2. 7. Not to every single Christian, or profligate professor, verse 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid, fearfulness surpriseth the hypocrites, &c. but good Job was none such, and God knew it to be so: what if to the wicked he be a devouring fire? yet to those that fear his name he is a reviving Sun, Mal. 4. 2. And upright Job feareth not to reason with him: upon the same ground John Huss, and other Martyrs cited their persecutors to answer them by such a time, before Gods tribunal. Ad Coloss. 4. Neh. 2. 4. Esth. 5. 4.

And I desire to reason with God] If he please. So the Septuagint adde, and make out Jobs meaning: as if he had used the like modesty and humility, as Nehemiah, and after him Esther did in their suits unto the King of Persia, when they said, if it seem good to the King, and if I have found favour in his sight. Others think that Job here desireth to plead with God as with a party that had dealt too hardly with him &c. that he challengeth God into the schools, as it were, there to crack an argument with him, and by reason to reduce him to milder dealing. And indeed, the Hebrew word here used, signifieth to dispute or argue, and from it the Rabbines Rabbines call Logick the Art of arguing. This boldneſſe is that, ſay our large Annotations, which both Elihu and God blame Job for in the end of the booke, though neither of them condemn him for an hypocrite: and that ſhewes that Job did ſpeak amiſſe of God in his paſſion, and is not altogether to be excuſed; much leſſe in every thing to be commended.

Verſe 4. But ye are forgers of lies] i.e. Ye create falſe maximes to judg me by; ye gather up without any order, and to no purpoſe whatſoever cometh in your way to ſtrengthen and maintaine your falſe accuſation againſt me. You are not onely concinnatores, forgers, but compactores, botchers, ſuch as by ſowing one lye to another, do patch up a falſe and frivolous diſcourſe. So David, Pſalm 119. 69. The proud have forged (or pieced together, made it up as of many ſhreds) a lie againſt me. David ſaith of hypocrites, that their tongue frameth deceit, Pſal. 50. 19 and of Doeg, that his tongue deviſed miſchief, like a ſharp razor, doing deceit, Pſalm 52. 2. Jeremiah ſaith of his country-men, that they had taught their tongues to ſpeak lies, and were grown Artiſts at it, chap. 9. 5. yea, that they had taken faſt hold of deceit, and could not be got off without ſtriving, chap. 8. 5. But theſe country-men of Job were none ſuch, for God ſaid, Surely they are my people, children that will not lye, Iſai. 63. 8. And although every man be a liar, either by impoſture, or by impotency, yet it muſt be underſtood that theſe good men aimed at truth, and intended not to deceive Job, but to undeceive him rather. They maintained errors, but unwittingly: they charged him alſo (but unjuſtly) with hypocriſie. Hence this ſo ſevere a high charge, ye are forgers of lies, ſuch as our Ruffians would revenge with a ſtab. But we muſt know, ſaith one, that in thoſe better times it was not ſo harſh a buſineſſe in a ſerious diſputation to call that a lie, which was falſely alledged by an adverſary, as now-a-dayes it is in this corrupt age of ours, wherein the greateſt liars, though taken in the manner, yet take it extreme ill to be told of their fault. Beſides, in the defence of Gods cauſe, and the labouring truth, plain-dealing, even with our beſt friends is beſt: ſo that the Apoſtles rule Eph. 4. 31. be obſerved, Let all bitterneſſe, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil ſpeaking be put away from you, with all malice.

Mendacia mendaciis aſſuitis.

Merlin.

Ye are all Phyſicians of no value] Becauſe you go to work upon wrong principles, and minifter miſtaken phyſick. Phyſicians he acknowledgeth them, and that they came with a good intent to comfort him: but for want of skill, in ſtead of curing, they had well-nigh killed him, becauſe they judged amiſſe of his diſeaſe, and uſed corroſives in ſtead of cordials. By the way obſerve, that Gods word is not only the food, but the phyſick of the ſoul, and may farre more fitly be ſo called, then the library of Alexandria was of old: for as the diſeaſes of the body are healed by phyſick ſeaſonably and rightly uſed: ſo are the diſtempers of the ſoul by Scripture-conſolations, neither ſhall we ever have cauſe to complain of them, as Cicero did of Philoſophical-comforts, neſcio quomodo &c. I know not how it cometh to paſſe, but this I find, that the diſeaſe is too hard for the Phyſick: or as the Romans did of Sylla's bloody government, that the Remedy was worſe then the Malady: how forcible are right words, ſaid Job, chap. 6. 25? And fair words, as phyſicians, cure the mind diſtempered with paſſion, ſaith the Poet. Once, when Luther was in a great heat about ſomething that had croſſed him, Melanthon pacified him by repeating this verſe, Οργῆς νοσέσης εἰσὶν ἰατροὶ λόγοι. Æſchyl.

Vince animum, iramque tuam, qui cætera vincit.

But Job friends, as they were botchers of lies, ſo they were bunglers at healing him: they did, ſaith Lavater, as a Surgeon, who applieth a plaiſter to the hand of him whoſe grief is in his foot; or as that Country-Mountebank in France, who was wont to give in writing to his patients for curing all diſeaſes, Recan. ſum. Theol. part. 1. cap. 16.

Si vis curari de morbo neſcio quali,
Accipias herbam, ſed qualem neſcio, nec quam:
Pones neſcio qua, curabere neſcio quando.

These verſes are by one thus Engliſhed,

Your ſore I know not what, do not forſlow
To cure with herbs, which whence I do not know:
Place them (I tell you not) I know not where, and then
You ſhall be perfect whole, I know not when.

Such Noſtrums, multitudes in the world, ſuch no phyſicians, ſuch idols, ſuch extreme

nothingneſſes

nothingneſſes, good for nothing (as that rotten girdle in Jeremiah, thoſe vine-branches in Ezekiel, chap. 15. 3. That idol in Saint Paul, 1 Cor. 8. 4.) were Jobs friends to him, miſerable comforters, chap. 16. 2. adding to his affliction, in ſtead of eaſing it, and puſhing at him, as the whole herd of Deer, doth at that one that is wounded. Jer. 13. 7.

Verſe 5. O that you would altogether hold your peace] Heb. In being ſilent, would be ſilent; q. d. I thought much at your ſeven-dayes-ſilence, chap. 2. 13. and now I am no leſſe troubled at your ſpeeches. O that you had either continued your ſilence, or elſe would frame to ſay ſomething better then ſilence: for hitherto ye have ſpoken much, but ſaid little. I could heartily wiſh therefore that you would now ſtop your mouths, and open your ears, as verſe 6. that you would be as mute as fiſhes, ſith I can hear nothing from you but what ſpeaks you to be meer mutes, ciphers, nullities, as verſe 4.

And it ſhould be your wiſedome] For even a fool when he holdeth his peace is counted wiſe, and he that ſhutteth his lips is eſteemed a man of underſtanding, Prov. 17. 28.

Πᾶς τὶς ἀνὴρ σιωπῶν φρονιμώτατος ἐν πᾶσιν.

As when the door is ſhut, it cannot be ſeen what is within the houſe: ſo the mouth being ſhut by ſilence, the folly that is within lieth undiſcovered: and as in glaſſes and veſſels, ſo in men, the ſound which they make, ſheweth whether they be crack'd or ſound. An aſſe is known by his ears (ſaith the Dutch proverb), and ſo is a fool by his talk. As a bird is known by his note, and a bell by his clapper, ſo is a man by his diſcourſe. Plutarch tells us, that Megabyſus a Noble man of Perſia, coming into Apelles the Painters work-houſe, took upon him to ſpeak ſomething there concerning the art of painting and limning, but he did it ſo abſurdly, that the prentices jeared him, and the maſter could not bear with him. Plut. de trang.

Verſe 6. Hear now my reaſoning &c.] Or, hear, I pray you. Be ſwift to hear, ſlow to ſpeak, ſlow to wrath: ſuffer the words of exhortation, and of reprehenſion: ſharp though it be, and to the fleſh irkſome, yet ſuffer it, ſith it is for your good. Quintilian teſtifieth of Veſpaſian, that he was patientiſſimus veri, one that could well endure to be told the truth: but there are few Veſpaſians. Many people are like the nettle; touch it never ſo gently, it will ſting you.

And hearken to the pleadings of my lips] Heb. The contentions of my lips; ſee that you not only hear, but hearken to it with attention of body, intention of mind, and retention of memory: neither God nor man can bear it, to ſpeak, and not be heard. See that ye refuſe not him that ſpeaketh &c. Heb. 12. 25. See that ye ſlight not, ſhift not off Chriſt ſpeaking to you in his Miniſters and meſſengers: for if they eſcaped not who refuſed him that ſpake on earth, much more ſhall not we eſcape if we turn away from him that ſpeaketh from heaven.

Verſe 7. will ye ſpeak wickedly for God?] Ought ye to defend Gods juſtice by unjuſtly accuſing me? Or muſt ye needs ſo free him from injuſtice, that ye muſt charge me with hypocriſie? Job had before called them, Phyſicians of no value; here he compareth them to Lawyers of no conſcience, that care not what they plead, ſo they may carry the cauſe for their client. But the Lord needeth no ſuch advocates; he ſo loveth truth, that he will not borrow patronage to his cauſe from falſhood: he ſo hateth flattery (though it be of himſelf) that he hath threatned to cut off all flattering lips, Pſalm 12. 3. and would one day ſay as much to Jobs friends, notwithſtanding their pretended zeal for his glory, as once Alexander the great did to Ariſtobulus the Hiſtorian, who preſented him with a flattering piece concerning his own worthy acts, which he extolled above meaſure: hee caſt the book into the river Hydaſpes, and told the Author he could find in his heart to caſt him after it.

And talk deceitfully for him] To talk for God is our duty: it is to make our tongue our glory: but to talk deceitfully for him, to ſeek to help his truth by our lie, (the Vulgar here hath it, Needeth God your lie?) that's altogether unlawful: for ſhall we do evil that good may come thereof? God forbid, Rom. 3. 8. And yet the Papiſts do ſo familiarly, and think they therein do God good ſervice: as when they deny his provident hand in ordering the diſorders of the world to his own glory, leſt they ſhould make him the Author of ſin: ſo they think to defend his juſtice by teaching predeſtination according to fore-ſeen works, by aſcribing to man free-will, righteouſneſſe of works, merit &c. So their doctrine of Equivocation for the relief of perſecuted Catholicks, their pia frandes (as they call them) their holy hypocriſie to draw infidels to the embracing of the faith, and to the love of vertue; their lying legends, made, ſay they, for good intention, that the common people might with greater zeal ſerve God and his Saints; and eſpecially, to draw the women to good order, being by nature facile and credulous, addicted to novelties and miracles.

Spec. hiſt. lib. 29.

Verſe 8. Will ye accept his perſon?] Whilſt you think to gratifie him, and to ingratiate with him by oppreſſing me? Can you find no other way of juſtifying Gods proceedings, then by condemning me for wicked, becauſe by him ſo afflicted? The truth is, theſe friends of Job out of a perverſe zeal of advancing Gods righteouſneſſe, unrighteouſly ſuſpected poor Job of wickedneſſe, and ſo rejected his perſon, to accept Gods. See the like done Iſa. 66.5. Jer. 50.7. John 16.2. O ſancta ſimplicitas! ſaid John Hus, when at the ſtake, he obſerved a plain country-fellow buſier then the reſt in fetching fagots to burn the hereticks.

Will ye contend for God?] Why not? Good blood will not belie it ſelf: the love of God conſtraineth his people to ſtand to him, and to ſtickle for him: Non amat qui non zelat, ſaith a Father. But then it muſt be a zeal according to knowledg: for elſe it will appear to be but baſe and reprobate metal, ſuch as though it ſeemeth to be all for God, yet it never received the image and impreſſe of Gods holy ſpirit, and therefore is not currant in heaven. But that I believe and know (ſaid that fiery Frier Bruſierd in a conference with Bilney) that God and all his Saints whom thou haſt ſo greatly diſhonoured, will take revengement everlaſting on thee; I would ſurely with theſe nails of mine be thy death. Another Frier preaching at Antwerp, wiſhed that Luther were there, that he might bite out his throat with his teeth, and with the ſame teeth receive the Euchariſt by Luther ſo diſhonoured.

Acts & Mon. 914.

Eraſm. Epiſt. lib. 16.

Verſe 9. Is it good that he ſhould ſearch you out &c.?] q. d. Could you have any joy of ſuch a ſearch? Will not all your warpings and partialities, your colloguing and ſiniſterity be laid open to your loſſe and ſhame? Will not God reprove in ſtead of approving you in that which ye have ſaid for him, but all againſt me? The time will come, when God will ſurely ſearch out all controverſies, that they all may be aſhamed who under a pretext of religion and right, have ſpoken falſe things, and ſubverted the faith of ſome. See 1 Cor. 3.17.

Or as one man mocketh another, will ye ſo mock him?] Be not deceived: God is not mocked, deluded, beguiled, as clients are by their corrupt lawyers: as patients are by their cogging quack-ſalvers. Sorry man may be mocked, and made to believe lies, as 2 Sam. 15.11. Acts 8.9.10. and Rev. 13.3. all the world wondred after the Beaſt. Judges, and other wiſe men, are ſhamefully out other-whiles, deceiving, and being deceived: Not ſo the All-wiſe God. They that would mock him, impoſturam faciunt & patiuntur, as the Emperour ſaid of him that ſold glaſſe for pearls; they deceive not God, but themſelves. Neither may they conceit that their good intentions will bear them out (as Merlin here noteth) any more then it did theſe contenders for God, who little thought of mocking him. A bad aim maketh a good action bad, as we ſee in Jehu; but a good aim maketh not a bad action good, as we ſee in Uzzah, and here.

Verſe 10. He will ſurely reprove you] That's all the thank you are like to have from God; your work in pleading for him ſo ſtoutly, though it be materially good, yet it will never prove ſo formally and efficiently, becauſe you ſo confidently determine of things you underſtand not, but only by a light conjecture. You do ſecretly, that is, cunningly and deceitfully accept perſons, that is, Gods own perſon, whilſt ye wrong me for his ſake, and under a pretence of doing him right, condemn me for a wicked hypocrite, whom till thus afflicted, you ever counted honeſt and upright. This the righteous Judg, who loveth judgment, and hateth robbery for a burnt-offering, Iſai. 61.8. will at no hand endure. No, but he will certainly reprove you, arguendo arguet, he will ſurely and ſeverely blame and puniſh you. Carry it never ſo cleanly, cover it never ſo cloſely, God who ſeeth in ſecret will reprove you openly, that is, he will chide you, ſmite you, curſe you for it (if Repentance interpoſe not to take up the matter), he will ſo ſet it on, as no creature ſhall be able to take it off.

off. Men reprove offenders ſometimes ſlighty and overly, deeſt ignis, as Latimer ſaid, whereby they do more harm then good; for their reproofs are rather ſoothings then reprovings. Perſonatæ reprehenſiones frigent: ſuch was that of Eli to his ſons, 1 Sam. 2.23. Such alſo was that of Jehoſhaphat to wicked Ahab, Let not the King ſay ſo. But when God took thoſe ſame men to do, he handled them after another manner: he gives it them both by words and blowes, till both their ears tingled, till their hearts aked, and quaked within them: ſo fearful a thing it is to fall into the puniſhing hands of the living God. Let all thoſe look to it, eſpecially that are in place of judicature, Pſalm 82. 1, 2, 3. Let them hear cauſes without prejudicate impiety, judiciouſly examine them without ſiniſter obliquity, and ſincerely judg them without unjuſt partiality, remembring that Acceptatio perſonarum eſt judiciorum peſtis, accepting of perſons is the peſt of judgments.

Funius.

1 Kings 22. 8.

Verſe 11. Shall not his excellency make you afraid?] Heb. His highneſſe, his Majeſty, his ſurpaſſing ſublimity and tranſcendent glory; ſhall not this affright you, and reine you in from wrong-dealing and warping? Who would not fear thee ô King of Nations? for to thee doth it appertain, Jer. 10. 7. And Fear ye not me, ſaith the Lord? will ye not tremble at my preſence, Jer. 5. 22. If an earthly King be ſo dread a Soveraign: if the glory of Angels hath ſo terrified the beſt Saints on earth, that they could hardly out-live ſuch an apparition; what ſhall we think of the great and terrible God, as he is called, Nehem. 1. 5. the firſt motion of whoſe anger ſhall put men into diſorder, and the brightneſſe of his offended Majeſty ſtrike their ſpirits with aſtoniſhment? It is reported of Auguſtus the Emperour, and likewiſe of Tamberlane that war-like Scythian, that in their eyes ſate ſuch a rare Majeſty, as a man could hardly endure to behold them without cloſing of his own; and many in talking with them, and often beholding of them, have become dumb. Now the Lord of glory as farre outſhineth any mortal wight, as the Sun in his ſtrength doth a clod of clay: and this made Job cry out, chap. 9. 34. Let not his fear terrifie me: Be not thou a terror to me, ô Lord, ſaith holy Jeremiah: and the Lord moſt high is terrible, ſaith David, Pſal. 47. 2. Moſt high he is, and therefore terrible.

Turk. hiſt. 336 & 415.

Jer. 17. 17.

And his dread fall upon you] Some read the whole verſe thus, Shall not this acceptation of him make you afraid, ſeeing his dread will fall upon you? q. d. Let the ſenſe of your ſinne, and the feare of his wrath ready to ſeize upon you, deterre you from paſſing an unrighteous ſentence, and from harbouring ſuch low conceits of God.

Verſe 12. Your remembrances are like unto aſhes, &c.] Mr. Beza readeth the whole verſe thus, Your ſpeeches are the words of aſhes, and your ſtately bulwarks are but bulwarks of clay: And thus he paraphraſeth, For theſe things which you alledg as matters gathered by long obſervation, and which you thunder out againſt me as if they were moſt certain and grounded axiomes, are indeed no more ſound and ſubſtantial then aſhes; and thoſe your high forts, as it were, and turrets, out of which you aſſaile me, are made but of dirt and mire. Others, by Your remembrances, underſtand with Mercer, quicquid in vobis memorabile eſt, whatſoever it is, for the which you are ſo often remembred and mentioned by others, as your wealth, dignity, power, ſplendor, name, and fame, yea, your very life is nothing elſe but aſhes, and all ſhall return to aſhes, and come to nought, according to that of Abraham, I am but duſt and aſhes, Geneſ. 18. 29. ſuch an infinite diſtance there is betwixt Gods unconceiveable Highneſſe, and your extreme meaneneſſe, or rather, utter nothingneſſe.

Your bodies to bodies of clay] i. e. To images made of clay, or earth: Or that which is higheſt in you, even your beſt enjoyments, your chiefeſt eminencies, or greateſt elevations are like to a lump of clay, terræ quam terimus, terræ quam gerimus. See Job 4. 19. with the Note.

Verſe 13. Hold your peace, let me alone &c.] This he had requeſted of them before, verſe 5. and now having nipt them on the crown by theſe rebating arguments, he calls upon them again for ſilence and audience; which he now requeſteth not, but requireth; and the rather haply, becauſe they began to take him off, as fearing leſt by his unadviſed expreſſions he ſhould provoke the Lord to lay yet more load upon him. Wherefore he addeth,

And let come on me what will] That is, At my peril be it, take you no thought:

let all the trouble that may enſue be on my ſcore, I will be accountable for it to God, who, I hope, will be more favourable to me, then you: Interim non ſine ſtomacho hoc dicit, ſaith Mercer. This Job ſpeaketh not without ſome heat, yet not as one deſperate, but rather reſolute; for he feared no hurt from God.

Verſe 14. Wherefore do I take my fleſh in my teeth?] q. d. Do ye think, ô my friends, that I am in a fit of ſpiritual frenzy, and ſo far out of my wits, that tearing as it were, my fleſh with mine own hands; I mean, to uſe any cruelty towards my ſelf, and willingly to betray mine own life? Non ſum ita crudelis, ut totus perdi velim, I am not yet ſo cruel to my ſelf (whatever you may gather by my complaints and out-cryes) as utterly to caſt away my confidence, and all care of my life and ſoul. See 1 Sam. 19. 5. To deſpair in part, and for a time, may befall a godly man. See Mr. Perkins his diſcourſe of ſpiritual deſertion, where he remembreth that Luther lay (after his converſion) three dayes in deſperation. And the like is recorded of Mr. Rob. Bolton. But of any good man that deſtroyed himſelf, we read not. Davids life was in his hand continually (and he in daily danger of loſing it) yet have I not forgotten thy law (ſaith he) which flatly forbiddeth all the degrees of ſelf-murther, as the worſt ſort. That Satan tempted Job to this ſin, ſome do probably collect from this text. A man is to expect, if he live but his dayes (ſaith a Reverend Caſuiſt) to be urged to all ſins, to the breach of every branch of the ten Commandments, and to be put to it in reſpect of every Article of our Creed.

Vatab.

Pſal. 119.109. Aliqui ſuſpicantur Jobum reſpondentem, &c. Pineda.

Verſe 15. Though he ſlay me, yet will I truſt in him] Though he ſhould multiply my miſeries, and lay ſtroke after ſtroke upon me till he had daſhed the very breath out of my body, yet he ſhall not be ſo rid of me; for I will hang on ſtill; and if I muſt needs die, I wil die at his feet, and in the midſt of death expect a better life from him. Dum expiro ſpero, ſhall be my motto: The righteous hath hope in his death, Prov. 14. 32. yea, his hope is moſt lively, when himſelf lieth a dying, ſupereſt ſperare ſalutem, my fleſh, and my heart faileth, ſaith he; but God is the ſtrength of my heart, and my portion for ever, Pſalm 73. 26. True faith in a danger (as the blood) gets to the heart, John 14. 1. and if it ſelf be in good heart, it will believe in an angry God, as Iſai. 63. 15, 16. (the Church there thought ſhe ſhould know him amidſt all his auſterities) yea, in a killing God, as here: yea, (as a man may ſay with reverence) whether God will or no, as that woman of Canaan Matth. 15. who would not be damped or diſcouraged with Chriſts either ſilence, or ſad anſwers; and therefore had what ſhe came for, beſides an high commendation of her heroical faith.

But (or nevertheleſſe) I will maintain mine own wayes before him] We have had the Triumph of Jobs truſt: here we have the ground of it, viz. his uprightneſſe, the teſtimony of his conſcience, that in ſimplicity and godly ſincerity he had his converſation in the world, 2 Cor. 2. 12. This was his cordial, without which, grief would have broke his heart, Pſalm 69. 20. this was his confidence, even the clearneſſe of his conſcience, 1 John 3. 21. Uprightneſſe hath boldneſſe; and that man who walks uprightly before God, may truſt perfectly in God. Job was either innocent or penitent: He would therefore either maintain his wayes before God, and come to the light, that his deeds might be manifeſt, that they were wrought in God, John 3. 21. Or elſe he would reprove and correct his wayes (ſo the Hebrew word ſignifieth alſo) that is, he would confeſſe and forſake his ſins, and ſo be ſure to have mercy, according to that ſoul-ſatisfying promiſe, Prov. 28. 13.

Quem pœnitet peccaſſe, pene eſt innocens. Sen. Agam.

Verſe 16. He alſo ſhall be my ſalvation] So long as I judg my ſelf, God will not judg me, 1 Cor. 11. 33. Nay, he will ſurely ſave me; for God will ſave the humble perſon, Job 22. 29. what is humiliation, but humility exerciſed? Non eſt igitur inanis electorum fides res evanida nec infirma, ſaith an Interpreter here: therefore the faith of Gods elect is no empty or vain thing, but a light ſhining from the ſpirit of God, and ſuch as overcometh the very darkneſſe of death. It is a ſure teſtimony of Gods good will toward us, and an infallible perſwaſion of our ſalvation, ſuch as ſlighteth the worlds falſe cenſures, overcometh temptations of all ſorts, laugheth at death, and through the thickeſt darkneſſe of affliction beholdeth the pleaſed face of God in Chriſt, through whom we have boldneſſe and acceſſe with confidence by the faith of him, Eph. 2. 12.

Merlin. in loc.

For an hypocrite ſhall not come before him] No, that's a priviledg proper to the Communion

Communion of Saints: therefore I am no hypocrite (as you have charged me to be, chap. 4. 6. and 8. 13.) for I dare both offer to maintaine my wayes before him to be upright for the maine, and I doubt not but he will be my ſalvation, and that I ſhall appear before him in heaven; this no hypocrite ſhall ever doe. How ſhould he (ſay) when as he is an unclean caytiffe, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth, flagitioſus (ſo Vatablus rendreth it) a flagitious, impious perſon, a very juggle (ſo the Septuagint) a fair profeſſor indeed, but a foul ſinner, moyled all over, and even buried in a bog of wickedneſſe: he is a wicked man in a godly mans cloaths, ſaith one. He doth but aſſume religion, ſaith another, as the divels do dead bodies without a ſoul to animate them. He is like the painted grapes that deceived the living birds; or the golden apples with this motto, No further then colours; touch them, and they vaniſh. He knowes that he is naught, and that God knowes it too: how then ſhould he approach him, or appear before his throne? No, he dare not, for the very ſhew of his face doth teſtifie againſt him, as the Prophet ſpeaks in another caſe: or if he do, he ſhall not be able to ſubſiſt there, Pſalm 5. 5. he ſhall not ſtand in judgment, Pſalm 1. 5. but ſhall runne away with theſe or the like words in his mouth, Who amongſt us ſhall dwell with the devouring fire? who amongſt us ſhall dwell with everlaſting burnings, Iſai. 33. 14? Woe unto us, who ſhall deliver us out of the hands of this mighty God, 1 Sam. 4. 8? None, for he ſhall ſurely aſſign you a part with the divel and hypocrites; when as the righteous ſhall give thanks unto Gods Name, and the upright only ſhall dwell in his preſence, Pſal. 140. 13.

Caneph. Coram Deo dolus non ingreditur.

Mat. 24. 51.

Verſe 17. Hear diligently my ſpeech] Heb. Hearing heare, that is, incline your ears and hear, as Iſai. 55. 3. Mark and attend; hear me not only, but heed me too: interrupt me not, neither give me the ſlip, as it may ſeem they were ready to do, when they heard him profeſſe ſuch a deal of faith and hope under ſo many and heavy afflictions; wherein they thought that either he was beſides himſelf, or at leaſt beſides the cuſhion, as we ſay, and utterly out. See verſe 6. and obſerve, that it is but needfull often to ſtirre up our auditors to attention. Job makes more prefaces then one to be heard; ſo do the Prophets often, Hear the word of the Lord, Hear and give ear, be not proud, for the Lord hath ſpoken it. So doth the Arch-prophet more then once, Revel. 2. & 3. And Matth. 13. 9. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear. All Chriſts hearers had not ears; or if they had, yet they were ſtopped; or if open, yet the bore was not big enough. O pray that God would ſay unto us Epphata, be opened, for a heavy ear is a ſingular judgment.

Verſe 18. Behold, now I have ordered my cauſe] Heb. my judgment: Hee had ſpoken before of his Declaration, which is conceived to be a Law-term; for in law-ſuits, the Plaintiffe putteth in a declaration of his grievance. Job had his declaration ready drawn, and craved audience: he asketh afterwards, Who will plead with me? and here in the like language he telleth us, that he had ordered his cauſe, he had marſhalled and methodized his arguments, he had ſet and ſtated the controverſie. Lo, here I ſtand ready prepared to plead, and am confident I ſhall prevail.

I know that I ſhall be juſtified] That is, I am perſwaded, or I am ſure (as Rom. 8. 38.) I believe and I know, as John 6. 59. ſc. with a fiducial knowledg, that I ſhall be juſtified, ſc. from my ſins, by Chriſts righteouſneſſe imputed (yea, that I am ſo already; and that for ever: for Peccata non redeunt, diſcharges in juſtification are not repealed or called in again) and that I ſhall depart from Gods bar acquitted in this particular controverſie. And ſo he did; for God juſtified Job, and reproved his three friends, chap. 42.

Verſe 19. Who is he that will plead with me?] Of my juſtification in both reſpects I am ſo confident, that I dare encounter any that ſhall deny it: Who is he? and where is he that ſhall lay any thing to my charge, ſith it is God that juſtifieth, Rom. 8. 33? Having ordered my cauſe, and cleared my conſcience by confeſſion, and ſelf-judging, and now being juſtified by faith, I can caſt down the gauntlet to all comers, and Goliah-like, call for an oppoſite to grapple with: in the name of the Lord of hoſts I will undertake him, and am ſure to come more off then a conquerour, even a Triumpher, 2 Cor. 2. 14. there being not any one condemnation (neither from God, nor the divel, from the law, ſin, or death) to them that are in Chriſt Jeſus, who walk not after the fleſh, but after the ſpirit, as Job did, Rom. 8. 1. 33. Here he chal-

lengeth

lengeth all the world, ſaith Gregory, if they could, to accuſe him for any thing outwardly done amiſſe by him. And herein if none could tax him; there was nothing but evil cogitations in his heart, of which he could be guilty: but for theſe, from which none can be free, he held not his peace, but ſpake and complained internally hereof to God by reproving his own wayes: and if he ſhould have been ſilent, and not ſpeak hereof, and bewail them, he ſhould die and periſh: for ſo he readeth the following words, according to the Vulgar tranſlation.

For now, if I hold my tongue, I ſhall give up the ghoſt] Vulg. Wherefore being ſilent I am conſumed. Broughton, If now I ſpeak not, I ſhould ſtarve. The Hebrew is, for now I ſhall be ſilent and die, q. d. My paſſion muſt have a vent, or elſe it will make an end of me (as chap. 7. 11.) ſo tormented I am with theſe aſperſions of my friends, that I know not how to live, unleſſe I may wipe them off; or at leaſt, unleſſe I pour out my ſoul into Gods bleſſed boſom.

Verſe 20. Only do not two things unto me] Accord me only two conditions, and then I will not fly the combate: he knew he might have any thing of God that was fit and lawful to be asked. When poor men make requeſts to Princes, they uſually anſwer them as the Eccho doth the voice, the anſwer cuts off half the petition; and if they beg two boons at once, they may be glad that they get one. But God dealeth by his ſervants and ſuppliants not only as the Prophet did by the Shunamite (when he bad her ask what ſhe needed, and promiſed her a ſon, which ſhe moſt deſired, and yet through modeſty asked not, 1 King. 4. 16.) but alſo as Naaman did by Gehezi, when asking one talent, he forced him to take two. This Job well knew, and therefore he beggeth two things at once; but better he had begged that one thing neceſſary, Patience; or if two, the beſt uſe of his preſent ſufferings. As we read of one good man, that lying under great torments of the Stone, hee would often cry out while his friends melted with compaſſion towards him, The uſe, Lord, the uſe: And of Mr. William Perkins, that when he lay in his laſt and killing torment of the ſtone, hearing the by-ſtanders pray for a mitigation of his pain, he willed them not to pray for an eaſe of his complaint, but for an increaſe of his patience: Thus if Job had done, he had done better: but by what he doth here, we may eaſily gather, that he expected no freedom from his miſery, but from God alone: and that hee was wont familiarly to impart to God all the thoughts and actings of his heart: and laſtly, that he acknowledged him to be a moſt righteous Judge, who would not deale with his people upon unequal conditions, but give them a faire trial.

Mr. Leigh his Saints encouragement &c. pag. 164. Dr. Halls Rem. of prophaneneſſe. p. 143.

Then will I not hide my ſelf from thee] i. e. I ſhall have no cauſe, either through fear or ſhame to hide my ſelf. It is not ſafe for a man to indent with God, and make a bargain with him: for ſo one may have the thing he would have, but better be without it; as thoſe workmen Matth. 20. who bargained for a peny a day, and yet when they had it, were no whit contented. Socrates thought it was not fit to ask of God any more then this, that he would beſtow good things upon us; but what, and how much, to leave that to him, not being over-earneſt, or preſuming to preſcribe ought. Sir Thomas Moors wife was mightily deſirous of a boy (that was her word) and ſhe had one that proved a fool; and ſaith her husband, you were never quiet till you had a Boy, and now you have one that will be all his life a Boy. But what were thoſe two things that Job was ſo earneſt for?

Verſe 21. With-draw thy hand far from me, and let not &c.] Neither afflict me, nor affright me. See the ſame requeſt chap. 9. 34. and granted by God, chap. 38. 3. and 40. 7. They muſt be very ſorry prayers indeed that God will not heare, if they come from honeſt hearts, Pſalm 31. 22. I ſaid in my haſte, I am cut off from before thine eyes: Neverthleſſe thou heardſt the voice of my ſupplications when I cryed unto thee. For the ſenſe of this whole verſe, ſee the Notes on chap. 9. 34.

And let not thy dread make me afraid] Appear not unto me in thy Majeſty, but in thy mercy: come not upon me in ſuch a terrifical manner, as through aſtoniſhment at thy ſurpaſſing glory to kill me, for who can ſee thy face and live? Surely as the ſight of the eye is dazeled with the Sun, or a chryſtal glaſſe broken with the fire; ſo there is ſo much dread in the face of God, that the beſt cannot behold it. Deſtruction from God was a terrour to me, and by reaſon of his highneſſe I could not endure, Job 31. 23.

Verſe

Verſe 22. Then call thou, and I will anſwer &c.] Here Job gives God his choice, offering to be either Defendant or Plaintiffe; Reſpondent or Opponent: Hoc multum erat, ſaith Lavater, this was much, and indeed too much: for if God ſhould enter into judgment with his beſt ſervants, no man living ſhould be juſtified in his ſight, Pſalm 143. 2. The beſt may bear a part in that ſong of mercy, Aſperge me Domine, purge me with hyſop, and I ſhall be clean; waſh me, &c. Pſalm 51. 7. Job is confident of his innocency, and he might be for that particular wherewith his friends charged him (viz. that he was an hypocrite) but yet in defending himſelf, and charging God ſo highly, as he doth in this and the next Chapter, he cannot be excuſed; what though he knew himſelf juſtified by Chriſts righteouſneſſe, imputed according to the Covenant of Grace; Omnino tamen ſemper eſt Job immodicus, ſaith Mercer here; yet ſurely, he paſſeth the bounds of moderation, and is over-bold in this offer of his, laying the reins in the neck of his paſſions, Fertur equis auriga &c. Cajetan ſaith, theſe words are arrogant and ſcandalous; and Eliphaz is ſuppoſed for this paſſage to tax Job as he did, chap. 15. 4. yea, thou caſteſt off fear.

Or, let me ſpeak, and anſwer thou me] i. e. I will be plaintiffe or Opponent, I will be bold to ſay, it is not ſeemly to handle him as an enemy, who knowes nothing by himſelf. If there bee any thing more then involuntary and unavoidable infirmity in me; Shew me what, and how many my ſins are, that require ſo many and great puniſhments.

Verſe 23. How many are mens iniquities and ſins] How many? too many to be reckoned: Sin imputed to thee, ſins inherent in thee, ſins iſſuing from thee; commiſſions, omiſſions, failings in the manner of performance (for a good work may be marr'd in the doing, as many a garment is in the making, and many a tale in the telling) thy life is fuller of ſins, then the firmament is of ſtars, or the furnace of ſparks, beſides thy birth-blot and inward evils which might juſtly cauſe thy deſtruction, as a man may die of inward bleeding. When the houſe is well ſwept, and all rooms ſeem very clean, if the Sun do but ſhine into it through the windows, the beams thereof diſcover an infinite number of motes in all places: ſo will it be with the beſt, if narrowly examined. Leſſer ſins, ſecret faults, are of daily, and almoſt hourly incurſion; yet we muſt be cleanſed from them, Pſalm 19. 12. or elſe va hominum vitæ quantumvis laudabili, ſaith one, Wo to the life of men, though praiſe-worthy, as the world judgeth. A pardon there is of courſe for ſuch ſins, and they do not uſually diſtract and plunge the conſcience: but yet that pardon muſt be ſued out, and thoſe ſins muſt be diſliked and bewailed.

Make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin] That particular ſin that thou chiefly ſtrikeſt at: for every affliction hath a voice in it, Mic. 6. 9. and ſaith to the ſufferer, as thoſe marriners did to Jonas, chap. 1. 8. what evil haſt thou committed or admitted? what good haſt thou omitted, or intermitted? Up and ſearch; Iſrael hath ſinned: why lieſt thou upon thy face, as the Lord once ſaid to Joſhua, chap. 7. 10, 11? ſomething ſurely there is amiſſe that God would have amended: It is therefore meet to be ſaid unto him, Make me to know my tranſgreſſion and my ſin, yea, the iniquity of my ſin, the filthineſſe of my lewdneſſe, all my tranſgreſſions in all my ſins (as the phraſe is Lev. 16. 21.) that is, how many tranſgreſſions are wrapped up in my ſeveral ſins, and their circumſtances. This either Job meant here, or elſe he was afterwards by Elihu tutored to it, chap. 34. 31, 32. Surely it is meet to be ſaid unto God, I have born chaſtiſement, I will not offend any more. That which I ſee not, teach thou me; if I have done iniquity, I will do no more.

Verſe 24. Wherefore hideſt thou thy face?] Who waſt wont to ſhine upon mee, chap. 29. 2, 3. He that hideth his face, ſheweth, that he neither pitieth, nor purpoſeth to relieve. God ſeemed to look upon Job no otherwiſe then as under Satans cloak, ſaid that Martyr. But he hideth his love ſometimes out of increaſement of love, as Joſeph did to his brethren; and is never ſo near us, as when with Mary Magdalen, we are ſo bleared with tears for his abſence, that we cannot ſee him, though at hand. A child of light may walk in darkneſſe, Iſai. 50. 10. which when he doth, he muſt reſolve, as Iſai. 8. 17. I will wait upon the Lord who hideth his face from the houſe of Jacob, and I will looke for him: he muſt alſo in that dark condition caſt anchor, as they did in the ſhipwrack, Acts 2. 7. and pray ſtill for day, waiting till the day-ſtar ariſe in their hearts, and all clear up.

And

And holdeſt me for thine enemy?] Which if God ſhould have done indeed, it would have been wide with Job, and far worſe then ever yet it had been; for if a man find his enemy, will he let him go well away, 1 Sam. 24. 19? I trow not, unleſſe it be for a greater miſchief at another time. But Job was out when he judged himſelf hated of God, becauſe afflicted, ſith he ſcourgeth every ſon whom he receiveth, Heb. 12. 5. See my Love-tokens, pag. 23. and 54.

Indignum eſt majeſtate tua, ut miſellum bomuncionem &c. Jun.

Verſe 25. Wilt thou break a leaſe driven to and fro &c?] q. d. egregiam verò laudem; Thinkeſt thou to get any honour by encountring and overturning me, who was at my beſt but as a leaſe, or as ſtubble, weak, and worthleſſe; and am now, by reaſon of mine afflictions, but as a leaf blown off, and whirled up and down; or as ſtubble fully dried, which is ſoon ſcattered by the wind, Pſalm 1. 4. or quickly burnt by the fire, Nah. 1. 10. David reaſoneth in this manner with Saul, 1 Sam. 24. 14. After whom is the King of Iſrael come forth? after whom doſt thou purſue? After a dead dog? after a flea? A great purchaſe ſurely! a great victory! —— An gloria tanta eſt

Tibul.

Inſidias homini ſuppoſuiſſe Deum?

The truth is, God doth not afflict any man (whom he knowes to be a thing of nothing) on purpoſe to try his ſtrength, or to ſhew his power; but either to exerciſe his juſtice upon the wicked, or to prove the faith of his people, and to promote their ſalvation.

Humanitùs dictum ex uſu forenſi. Jun.

Verſe 26. For thou writeſt bitter things againſt me] As it were by a judicial reſcript thou decreeſt my doom; and accordingly thou inflicteſt hard and heavy things upon me, as is moſt elegantly deſcribed in the following verſes by metaphors fetcht from the courſe of Courts. Sin is an evil, and a bitter thing, Jer. 2. 19. Heb. 12. 15. Acts 8. 23, and hath bitter effects, Ruth. 1. 20. Exod. 1. 14. This made that holy man Mr. Paul Baine, ſay: the ſweet wayes of my youth did breed ſuch worms in my ſoul, as that my heavenly Father will have me yet a little while continue my bitter worm-ſeed, becauſe they cannot otherwiſe be throughly killed. I thank God (ſaith he in another place) ſuſtentation I have, but ſuavities ſpiritual I taſte not any. It is reported of this good man, that when he came firſt to Cambridg, his converſation was ſo irregular, that his father being grieved at it, before his death left with a friend forty pounds by the year, deſiring that his ſon might have it if he amended his manners, elſe not: he afterwards had it, as he well deſerved, as proving a notable inſtrument of much good to many, and particularly to that Reverend Dr. Sibbs whom he converted; Howbeit in his laſt ſickneſſe he had many fears and doubts, and God letting Satan looſe upon him, he went out of this world with far leſs comfort then many weaker Chriſtians enjoy; his caſe being not unlike his, who ſaith in the next words,

Bains letters.

Mr. Clark in his life.

And makeſt me to poſſeſſe (or to inherit) the iniquities of my youth] Which I took for pardoned long ſince (and ſo no doubt but they were); but Jobs affliction renewed the remembrance of them to his conſcience (as it is the beſt art of memory.) Satan alſo made him believe, that now he was puniſhed for the new and the old, as we ſay, and that God meant to make him anſwer for all the ſins of his life at once, having watched a time to be revenged on him for all together. Youth is a ſlippery age, and ſoon ſlips into ſin. There is great cauſe that a young man ſhould cleanſe his wayes, Pſalm 119. 9. where the word Naanar (ſignifying a lad, or ſtripling) comes from a root ſignifying to ſhake off, or to be toſſed to and fro. And the other word rendred cleanſe, ſignifieth to be clean as glaſſe, which will ſoon gather a new duſtineſſe. Such muſt cleanſe their wayes by cleaving to the word: or otherwiſe, they may one day groan as much under the ſins then committed, as many do under the blows and bruiſes then received. See the former Note.

Verſe 27. Thou putteſt my feet alſo in the ſtocks] Mercer here obſerveth an elegant gradation in Gods proceeding with Job, as himſelf deſcribeth it, riſing higher and higher in his diſcourſe. 1. God hid his face, and denyed him his favour. 2. He counted him as his enemy. 3. He broke him like a leaſe or ſtubble. 4. He wrote bitter things againſt him. 5. He made him poſſeſſe the ſins of his youth. 6. For his young ſins he claps him up cloſe priſoner now in his old age, and there keeps him as with a ſtrict guard following him cloſe at heels, if he but ſtirre a foot, was there ever ſorrow like unto Jobs ſorrow? was ever greater ſeverity and rigour ſhewed upon any godly

godly person? Where then shall the ungodly and the sinner appear &c? Gods wrath is like Eliah's cloud, little at first, as a mans hand, but soon after very dismal and dreadful; or as thunder, of which we hear at first a little noise afarre off, but soon after a terrible crack. Well might Moses say, Who knoweth the power of thine anger? Psalm 90. 19.

Cavebis autem, si pavebis.

And lookest narrowly into all my paths] He saith not wayes, but paths. Gregory maketh this difference; Wayes are larger, Paths narrower; God then is said to look into all mens paths, when he looketh not only at the evil done by them, but at the intention of their mind, which is not so easily discerned but by him the searcher of all hearts. And for that which followeth, Thou settest a print upon the heels of my feet.] Gregory here observeth, that God looketh at the hurt done to others by examples given by mens evil doings unto them, leaving a print upon the ground, as it were, whereby others follow them, and so their sin is in this regard made the greater: to which purpose some sense those words Psalm 49. 5. When the iniquity of my heels shall compasse me about. Others make Jobs meaning here to be, Thou followest me with continual pursuit, as a prisoner that is dog'd at heels by his keeper from place, to place lest he should escape. Thou followest me close, and upon the track like a hunter, Job 10.16. The foot-steps of thy wrath (saith an Interpreter) are seen upon the soles of my feet (so that from top to toe I have no free part) like as prisoners feet are oft swelled with the weight of their fetters. Died.

Verse 28. And he as a rotten thing consumeth] Heb. waxeth old. He, that is, this poor man, this silly wretch, as David speaketh of himself, Psal. 34. 6. Or, This body of mine, as chap. 19.26. Job pointing to it, as 'tis like he did there. And Paul, 1 Cor. 15.53,54. As a rotten thing (Heb. as rottennesse) consumeth. When a thing once rotteth, as an apple, flesh, &c. it soon perisheth: such is man under pressing afflictions especially.

And as a garment that is moth-eaten] The beauty whereof is defaced, and the usefulnesse departed.

CHAP. XIIII.

Verse 1. Man that is born of a woman &c.]

Or, That is born about by a woman in her wombe. Jobs design is here to set forth the misery of man (whom in the last verse of the former chapter he had compared 1. To a rotten thing. 2. To a moth-eaten garment) ab exordio ad exodium, from his conception to his dissolution. Man, Earthly man, that is born of a woman, or mannesse that weaker vessel, who both breedeth, beareth, and bringeth forth in sorrow a weak sorry man, and is (as Gregory expresseth it) ante partum curiosa, in partu dolorosa, post partum laboriosa, every way calamitous: neither is her babe in a better condition, but born with a crosse on his back (as it is storied of Frederick the Elector of Saxony) and having his whole life over-spread with sins and miseries, as with a filthy morphew. Gen. 3.16. Fol. Manl. loc. com.

It of few dayes] Heb. short of dayes. Short indeed, every thing reckoned: For 1. Child-hood and youth are vanity. 2. Sleep, as a publican, takes off a third part of our time. 3. All the dayes of the afflicted are evil, and Omnia dulcet vitæ quæ trahitur inter gemitibus; it is not a life, but a death rather that is spent in sorrow: in which regard Plotinus the Philosopher held mortality a mercy, that we may not alwaies be held under the miseries of this life present. 4. Scarce one of a thousand live that little time that they are here, but wofully waste the flower of their age, the strength of their bodies, the vigour of their spirits in sinful pleasures, and sensual delights, and then either sit and sing all too late and in vain, Aug. de civ. Dei lib. 9. c. 10.

O mihi præteritos referat Jupiter annos!

Or else complain with old Themistocles, that now they must die when they do but begin only to be wise: the life of a wicked man runneth out, as the sand in an hourglasse that doth little good: He considereth not that upon this little point of time hangs the crown of eternity; and that the very next moment, he may be cut off from all possibility of repentance, acceptation and grace for ever. Hence his many troubles here: all which are but typical of those hereafter, besides the fear of death, which maketh him all his life time subject to bondage, Heb. 2. 15. It were much to bee wished that men would consider their time is short, their taske long, and that therefore they should use all speed and diligence; lest (so as children have usually torn their books) they have ended their lives before they have learned their lessons.

And full of trouble] Or, of indignation, commotion, perturbation. Those three vultures, Fear, Anger, Griefe, are frequently feeding upon his heart whiles he is in this world; and like a ship in a storm, he is tossed much, but saileth little or nothing. Few and evil are the dayes of my pilgrimage, saith good old Jacob, Gen. 47. 9. And she in the Poet could say as much of her son Achilles.

Thetis ap. Hom. Iliad.

Νῦν δ' ἅμα ὠκύμορος, καὶ δίζυος ἔπλετ' ἀνίαων
Ἔκλυον. ———

Verse 2. He cometh forth like a flower] What he had asserted concerning the shortnesse of mans life is here illustrated by two elegant similitudes frequently used, not in Scripture only, but in Heathen Authors, as were easie to instance. A flower hath a spring and a fall: so have men their times and their turns, their rise, and their ruine. Why, and how man in his flourish is like to a flower, See Psal. 103. 15, 16. where he is compared to a flower of the field (which lies open to all inconveniencies) not of the garden, which is much sheltered from sharpe winds, fenced from the teeth and feet of beasts, from the hands of children, strangers, &c.

Isa. 28. 1. and 40. 6. Jam. 1. 10, 11. 1 Pet. 1. 24.

And is cut down] Heb. cut round, or circumcised, sc. by some nipping or blasting wind, such as that East-wind, Gen. 41. 23. or some cropping hand, or its own fading nature, and then it is not, saith David, Psalm 103. 16. that is, it neither continues any longer in being, nor returns any more into being: no more doth man, though in his time never so flourishing.

He fleeth also] With post-haste, as one that fleeth for life, so doth he from life, every moment yeilding somewhat unto death: Orimur, morimur, finisque ab origine pendet; Life, as fast as it increaseth, decreaseth. It is improper, saith one, to ask when we shall dye, but rather when we shall make an end of dying?

As a shadow] As the shadow of a dial: our lives are continually hasting to their period, and never make stop. By these, and many the like comparisons (common in this book, and other Scriptures) we see how much God desireth that we should mind our mortality: too blame then are those who have one leg in the grave, and the other in hell, and yet do not far away thoughts of death, and under gray hairs nourish green hopes and desires: neither may young men be excused who bind upon long life, and boast of to morrow, Prov. 27. 1. sith they know not what a great-bellied day may bring forth. The Jewes have a proverb, that many times old camels carry young camels skins to the market. And how often see we elder folk carry young mens and childrens bodies to the graves?

Vita summa brevis spem nos vetat inchoare longam. Hor. lib. 1. carm. 4.

And continueth not] Heb. standeth not, as a pillar, but vanisheth as a shadow, yea, as a dream of a shadow, as the Greek Poet hath it. The Vulgar translateth, He continueth not in the same state. To have no shadow of turning, noteth the perfection of God, Jam. 1. 17.

Verse 3. And dost thou open thine eyes upon such a one?] sc. to observe his faults strictly, and to punish him for the same severely? doth this become so great a Majesty? This Job speaketh non citra stomachum, not without stomack, as forgetting himself through impatiency, saith Mercer, and seeking to ease himself any way of the pains and dolours he suffered, being carried out of himself by his unruly passions. By this question Job doth non tam admirari quam arguere, saith Brentius, not so much wonder, as warble with God, that he should care for so poor a creature, whom it might beseem him rather to contemn. But Job should have remembred, that God openeth his eyes upon man, not to punish him only, but to help and relieve him, Psalm 34. 15. And at another time Job could set it upon the score of Gods favours to man, that he visiteth him every morning (viz. by his fatherly chastisements) and tryeth him every moment, chap. 7. 17, 18.

And

And bringest me into judgment with thee] Poor me, who am τετραθλιωτατος, thrice a man; that is, most miserable, even me thou questionest in the rigour of thy righteous judgment. See a like expostulation, Psalm 89. and all to move God to compassion. Our frailty is a good pleadable argument to this purpose. Me gravissimis tuis judiciis extra ordinem divexas. Merl.

Verse 4. Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? Not one.] q. d. I confess I am unclean: but what can I do withal? or how can I do otherwise, sith I do but my kind? But was this a sufficient plea? David was of another mind, when he alledged this as a great aggravation of his blood-guiltinesse, Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me, Psalm 51 5. q. d. I have not only fallen into these foul sins, but I have done it out of the venemousnesse and vitiosity of my nature, commonly called original, and by the Apostle inhabiting sin, Rom. 7. 17. as by the Schools peccatum peccans, the sinning sin, as that which is the source and seminary of all actual disobediences. And because this uncleannesse is natural to us, therefore it maketh us as loathsome to God, as a toad is to us, because poison is in the nature of it. Papists say, (but not truly) that Original sin is the smallest of all sins, not deserving any more of Gods wrath then only a want of his beatifical presence; and that too without any pain or sorrow of mind from the apprehension of so great a losse. They hold also those motions of the heart not consented to, to be no sins, but necessary conditions, arising from our constitution, and such as Adam had in his innocency. Contrary-wise, Job here grants a birth-blot upon all, and layes his hand upon it as the cause of the length of mens troubles, and shortnesse of their lives: only he forgetteth himself (saith Mercer here) when hee pleadeth that hee should rather bee pitied, then thus sharply punished, because hee was naturally enclined to sinne, and cannot avoid it. For as Aristotle saith of drunkards, that they deserve double punishments; first, for their drunkennesse, and then for the sin committed in and by their drunkennesse: so do all men deserve double damnation; first, for the corruption of Nature (signified by those legall pollutions, by bodily issues) and then for the cursed effects of it, Gen. 6. 5. Rom. 7. 8. But it may bee Job here had an eye to that promise made to Noah after the flood, Gen. 8. 21. where the Lord moveth himself to mercy by consideration of mans native corruption, even from his child-hood, for he knoweth our frame &c. Psalm 103. 14. that is (as the Chaldee Paraphrast explaineth it) he knoweth our evill figment or thought which impelleth to sin: hee knoweth it, and weigheth it. See the like Isa. 48. 8, 9. Wee may beseech the Lord to spare us when we act sin, because our natures are sinful: but let not any go about either to palliate or extenuate their acts of sinne by the sinfulnes of their natures; as those doe, who being told of their evil pranks and practises, plead for them, saying, Wee are flesh and blood, &c. Διττὰ τὰ ἐν ἥμισι. Ethic. lib. 3. cap. 5.

Not one] Fortes creantur fortibus & bonis; but no meer man can bring forth a clean child out of unclean seed. Adam begat a son after his own image (Gen. 5. 3.) Corruptus corruptum, That which is of the flesh is flesh, John 3. Sin is propagated, and proceedeth from the union of body and soul into one man. That phrase Warmed in sinne, Psalm 51. 5. is meant of the preparation of the body, as an instrument of evil, which is not so actually till the soul come. But we should not be so inquisitive how sin came in, as how to be rid of it; like as when a fire is kindled in a city, all men are more careful to quench it, then to question where, and how it began. Now there is one only way of ridding our hearts of sinne, viz. to run to Christ, and to believe in him: For if the Son make you free, ye shall be free indeed: and hereunto both the Chaldee Paraphrast had respect (likely) when he rendred this text, Cannot One? that is, Cannot God? As also the Vulgar Latine, Nonne tu qui solus es? Canst not thou alone? sc. by thy merit and Spirit, according to that of the Apostle, 1 Cor. 6. 11.

Verse 5. Seeing his dayes are determined &c.] God hath set every man both his time (whether shorter, called here his dayes, or longer, the number of his months, they have both their bounds which none can passe) and also his task, Acts 13. 25. John fulfilled his course, & in brevi vitæ spatio tempora virtutum multa replevit, and he lived long in a little space, he wrought hard, as not willing to be taken with his task undone. So verse 36. David, after hee had served his owne Hieron. ep. ad Fu.

generation, and had done all the will of God, fell on sleep. See more of this on chap. 7. 1.

Thou hast appointed his bounds.] Heb. His statutes; It is appointed for all men once to die, Heb. 9. 27. once for all, and for ever it is appointed, and this statute is irrepealable. Here then we see the cause why some, likely to live long, die soon, and others more infirme live longer. God hath set the bounds of each ones life to a very day. The bounds may be passed which our natural complexion setteth; the bounds cannot be passed which the providence and will of God setteth. Stat sua cuique dies. —— Virg.

Verse 6. Turn from him that he may rest.] Heb. Look away from him, i. e. from me; look not so narrowly, and with such a critical eye upon mine out-strayes, thus to hold me still on the rack; look not so angerly, afflict me not so heavily, but let me rest or cease from my present pressures, and doleful complaints, and spend the span of this transitory life with some comfort, and then let the time of my departure come when thou pleasest.

Till he shall accomplish, as an hireling, his dayes.] That is, saith the Glosse, till I am as willing to die, as a labouring man is to go to supper, and to bed. The word rendred accomplish, signifieth properly to acquiesce, and rest in a thing, and vehemently to desire it. The Saints, when they die, shall rest in their beds, Isa. 57. 2. they rest from their labours, Rev. 14. 13. and that dwell presently, straight upon the stroke of death; no sooner have they passed under the flaming sword of that punishing Angel, but they are forthwith in Paradise. Here they are seldome quiet, but tossed up and down as the ball upon the racket, or ship upon the waves: and hence it is that they sometimes fret or faint, as Job, and speak unadvisedly with their lips; these firm mountains are moved with earth-quakes, these calm seas are stirred with tempests, and truly, whosoever hath set himself to do every dayes work with Christian diligence, to bear every dayes crosses with Christian patience, and is sensible of his failings in both; libenter ex vita, & quasi plenus passu egredierur, saith one, he will be full glad to be gone hence, and be as weary of his life, as ever any hireling was of his work. See the Notes on chap. 7. 1, 2.

Verse 7. For there is hope of a tree &c.] Here Job setteth on his request, verse 6. with a reason: God loveth a reasonable service, and liketh well that we reverently reason it out with him. And for the literal sense, all things, saith Gregory, are so plain, that there is no need to say any thing to that, it being no more then this, either I shall have comfort in this world before I die, or never here: therefore grant me rest now. This argument Job illustrateth 1. By a dissimilitude here. 2. By a similitude, verse 11, 12. The dissimilitude betwixt a tree and a man, is this; a tree may be hewed and felled, yet feel no pain. Again, succisa repullulat, imbribus irrigata, a tree cut down, if well watered, will spring and sprout up again. But now man, as he is very sensible of every stroke of Gods hand, neither can he suffer sickness or other affliction without smart, so when once cut down by death, he can by no means be recovered; he cannot revive without a miracle. Merlin.

Verse 8. Though the roots thereof wax old in the earth] And so the more unlikely to shoot forth again. Trees also have their old age wherein they decay.

Οὐτος δενδρων γερων, τελος ἐ δενδρον.

And the stock thereof die in the ground.] Heb. in the dust, as it needs must, when cut off from the root, it lieth along on the earth. It was by a miracle that Aarons rod flourished: not only all the plants of Gods setting, but the very boughs cut off from the body of them, shall flourish and be fruitful.

Verse 9. Yet through the scent of water it will bud.] Heb. from the smell of waters, a sweet Metaphor, saith Merlin, sense being attributed to things senseless, as smelling to the fire, Judg. 16. 9. and here to trees, which are said to turn themselves and their roots after a sort, to take in the smel of the water, and thereby refreshed to bud and bring forth boughs, like a plant. This is check to those that live under the droppings of the ordinances, and yet are like the Cypresse-tree, which the more it is watered, proves the lesse fruitful, and being once cut down, it never springs again: whence the Romans, who believed not a resurrection, were wont to place a Cypresse-tree at the threshold of the house of death, as Pliny and Servius tell us. Serv. in Virg. l. 4. Plin. lib. 16. cap. 32.

Verse 10.

Verse 10. But man dieth and wasteth away] Heb. strong and lusty man, dieth and wasteth away, or is cut off, sc. worse then a tree, for he growes no more, or is discomfited, vanquished, (as Exod. 17. 13. and 32. 18.) sc. by death, and so carried clean out of this world. Homo quantumvis robustus. Var.

Yea, man giveth up the ghost] Homo vulgaris & plebeius; All of all sorts must die, whether noble, or ignoble, as Rabbi Abraham here observeth. Job is very much in this discourse about death: and surely, as Nazianzen wisheth of hell, so could I of death, Utinam ubique de morte disserretur! oh that it were more in mens minds and mouths then it is!

And where is he?] q. d. No where above ground; or if he be, putrefit & teterrimè olet, he putrifies and stinks filthily: and as his life is taken away, so is his glory: yea, being once out of sight, he growes by little and little out of mind too, little thought of, less spoken of, many times not so much as his name mentioned or remembred in the next generation, Eccles. 1. 11. There is no remembrance of former things (or men) neither shall there be any remembrance &c. So Eccles. 2. 16. and 8. 10. and 9. 5. Hence the state of the dead is called the land of forgetfulnesse, Psalm 88. 12. And Psalm 31. 12. I am forgotten, as a dead man out of mind: Heathens also say the same.

Cum semel occideris, & de te splendida Minos
Fecerit arbitria,
Non, Torquate genus, non te facundia, non te Restituet pietas. Hor. lib. 4. Carm. 7.

Verse 11. As the waters fail from the sea] He sets forth the same truth by an elegant similitude drawn from the drying up of waters. Look how these after some exundation of the sea, or some great river, are separated and left (upon the reflux thereof) behind the rest upon the land, which cannot return (for then they must ascend, which is impossible to nature) nor continue, but do utterly dry up, and evaporate: So &c. verse 12. Others read it thus, As when the waters from the sea fail, the flood decaieth, and dryeth up: so when mans life is taken away, it returns no more while this world lasteth. God hath made in the bowels of the earth certain secret wayes, passages, and veins through which water conveigheth it self from the sea to all parts, and hath its saltnesse taken away in the passage. Thence are our springs, and from them our rivers: but in hot countryes, and dry seasons, springs are dry, and rivers want water exceedingly, as at this time they do, March 7. 1653. So when natural moisture decayeth in man, he faileth, and dieth: the radical humor, that supplement and oyl of life, is dried up, and can be no more renewed till the last day, when yet it shall not be restored to the same state and moisture, but instead of natural, rise spiritual, 1 Cor. 15. Sanctius Abbas.

Verse 12. So man lieth down] sc. in the dust of death, or in the bed of the grave; his dormitory, till the last day.

Ut somnus mortis, sic lectus imago sepulchri.

And riseth not] scil. To live again among men: so Psalm 78. Man is compared to a wind, which when it is past, returneth not again. If it be objected, that we read of three in the old Testament, and five in the new raised from death to life: besides, those many that arose and came out of the graves after Christs resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many, Matth. 27. 52, 53. It is answered, 1. These few raised by Gods extraordinary power, do not infringe the truth of what the Scripture here and elsewhere affirmeth of all mankind according to the ordinary course of nature. 2. Even those men also afterwards died again, and vanished; no more to return or appear again in this world.

Till the heavens be no more] i. e. Never (say some interpreters) to wit, vi suâ by his own strength, and to a better condition in the land of the living: so the word until is used, 2 Sam. 6. 13. Matth. 5. 26. and 1. 25. ut piè credimus. How sound and clear Job was in the point of the Resurrection, we shall see, chap. 19. and because he falls upon it in the words next following here, some understand these words thus, They shall not rise till the general resurrection, when these heavens shall be changed, and renewed, Psalm 102. 25, 26. Isaiah 65. 17. 2 Peter 3. 7. 10, 11. Rev. 21. 1.

They shall not awake] Out of the sleep of death: nor be raised] viz. by the found ſound of the laſt trump, till the laſt day. But raiſed they ſhall be, and ſleep no more, viz. when the heavens ſhall be no more. And till that time the bodies of the Saints are laid in the grave, as in a bed of down, or of ſpices, to mellow and ripen: this is matter of joy and triumph, Iſa. 26. 19. Dan. 12. 2. when they were to loſe all: ſo Heb. 11. 35. The wicked alſo ſleep in the grave, Dan. 12. 2. but ſhall awake to everlaſting ſhame and contempt, ib. their ſick ſleep ſhall have a woful waking, for they ſhall be raiſed by vertue of Chriſts judiciary power, and by the curſe of the law, to look upon him whom they have pierced, and to hear from him that dreadful diſcedite, Depart ye curſed &c.

Sepulchrum eſt quaſi ſcrinium vel capſa in quam reponitur corpus.

Verſe 13. O that thou wouldſt hide me in the grave] As in a ſweet and ſafe repoſitory, ſanctuary! my ſoul mean-while living and raigning with thee in heaven, expecting a glorious Reſurrection, and ſaying, How long, Lord, Holy, and True? The fable or fancy of Pſychopannychia hath been long ſince hiſſed out, though lately revived by ſome Libertines, that laſt brood of Beelzebub; our Mortaliſts eſpecially, who ſay, that the body and ſoul die together. But what ſaith the Apoſtle, Rom. 8. 10? If Chriſt be in you, the body is dead becauſe of ſinne, but the ſpirit is life becauſe of righteouſneſſe. Now that Job thus woos death, and petitions for the grave, it is manifeſt that he ſaw ſome good in it, and that he promiſed himſelf by it Malorum adeemptionem, bonorum adeptionem, freedom from evil, and fulneſſe of good: we ſhould learn to familiarize death to our ſelves, and put the grave under the faireſt and eaſieſt apprehenſions, think we hear God beſpeaking us as once hee did Jacob, Fear not to go down to Egypt (ſo down to the grave) for I will go with thee, and will ſurely bring thee up again, Gen. 46. 4. Or as he did his labouring Church, Iſa. 26. 20. Come my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and ſhut thy doors about thee: hide thy ſelf, as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpaſt.

That thou wouldſt keep me ſecret] In limbo Patrum, ſay the Papiſts, in parabola ovis capras ſuas quærentes.

Until thy wrath be paſſed] For it is ſuch, as I can of my ſelf neither avoid nor abide. Turn it away therefore, or turn it into gentleneſſe and kindneſſe, Pſal 6. 4. and be friends again, Jer. 2. 35. Or, ſecret and ſecure me til the reſurrection, when all thy wrath will be gone from me.

That thou wouldſt appoint me a ſet time] Heb. ſet me a ſtatute: ſet down even what time thou pleaſeſt, either to ſend me to bed, or to call me up again, ſo that thou wilt but be ſure at laſt to remember me.

And remember me] Job is willing to die out of the world, but not to die out of Gods memory, to be out of ſight, but not out of mind, that God ſhould bury him in the grave, but not bury his thoughts of him: he could be content to be free among the dead, free of that company, but not as the ſlain that lie in the grave, whom God remembreth no more, Pſal. 88. 5. Job would be remembred for good, as Nehemiah prayeth, and be dealt with as Moſes was, whoſe body once hid in the valley of Moab, did afterwards appear glorious in Mount Tabor at the tranſiguration.

Verſe 14. If a man dye, ſhall he live again?] This he ſpeaketh in way of admiration at that glorious work of the Reſurrection. See the like queſtion chap. 15. 11. Gen. 3. 1. and 17. 17. So the Apoſtle Rom. 8. 30, 31. having ſpoken of thoſe glorious things, predeſtination, vocation, juſtification, glorification, concludeth in theſe words, What ſhall we ſay then? We cannot tell what to ſay to theſe things, ſo much we are amazed at the greatneſſe of Gods goodneſſe in them. Surely, as they have a lovely ſcarlet bluſh of Chriſts blood upon them, ſo they are rayed upon with a beam of divine love, to them that are in Chriſt. We read of that godly and learned Scotch-Divine Mr. John Knox, that a little before his death, he gat up out of his bed, and being asked by his friends, why being ſo ſick, he would offer to riſe, and not rather take his reſt? he anſwered, that he had all the laſt night been taken up in the meditation of the Reſurrection, and that he would now go up into the pulpit, that hee might impart to others the comforts which thereby himſelf had received. And ſurely if he had been able to have done as he deſired, I know not what text fitter for his purpoſe he could have taken, then theſe words of Job, If a man die, ſhall he live again? He ſhall without queſtion, and thoſe that deny it or doubt of it (as the Sadduces of old, and ſome brain-ſick people of late) they erre, not knowing the Scriptures

tures (this among the reſt) which are expreſs for it, and the power of God. Mat. 22. 29. being herein worſe then divels which believe it and tremble, worſe then ſome heathens, who held there would be a reſurrection, as Zoroaſtres, Theopompus, Plato, &c. worſe then Turks, who at this day confeſſe and wait for a reſurrection of the body at ſuch a time as the fearful trumpet (which they call Soor ſhal be ſounded by Mahomet, ſay they, at the commandment of the great God of the judgment.

All the dayes of mine appointed time (or warfare) will I wait till my change come] i. e. till my death (Prov. 31. 8. men appointed to die, are called in the original children of change) or till the reſurrection come, when we ſhall all be changed, 1 Cor. 15. 51. our vile bodies ſhall be changed and conformed to Chriſts moſt glorious body (the ſtandard) Philip. 3. 23. in beauty, agility, impaſſibility, and other Angelical perfections. When I awake, ſaith David, ſc. at that general Reſurrection, I ſhall be full of thine image; Pſalm 17. 15. I ſhall be brought from the jawes of death, to the joyes of eternal life, where are riches without ruſt, pleaſures without pain &c. Three glimpſes of this glorious change were ſeen. 1. In Moſes his face. 2. In Chriſts transfiguration. 3. In Stevens countenance when he ſtood before the council. Such a change as this is well worth waiting for: what would not a man do? what would he not ſuffer with thoſe noble profeſſors, Heb. 11. to obtain a better reſurrection? I would ſwim through a ſea of brimſtone, ſaith one, that I might come to heaven at laſt. The ſtone will fall down to come to its own place, though it break it ſelf in twenty pieces: ſo we, that we may get to our center which is upwards &c. Surſum curſum noſtrum dirigamus; & minantem, imminentem & exterminantem mortem attendamus: ne ſimul, cum corporis fractura, anima jacturam faciamus. Let us wait and wiſh every one for himſelf, as he once did.

Mi ſine nocte diem, vitam ſine morte, quietem
Det ſine fine, dies, vita, quieſque Deus.

Verſe 15. Thou ſhalt call, and I will anſwer thee] At the Reſurrection of the juſt thou ſhalt call me out of the grave by thine All-powerful voice, uttered by that Archangel, with the trump of God, 1 Theſ. 4. 16. 1 Cor. 15. 52. Pſalm 50. 3, 4. and thou ſhalt not need to call twice: for as I ſhall not need then to fear (as the hypocrites will) to ſhew my face: ſo I will readily anſwer, Here I am; yea (as that dying Saint did ſo) I will ſay, I come, I come, I come. I will even leap out of the grave to obey thine orders: and I doubt not but to draw me out of that dark priſon, thou wilt lend me that hand of thine, whereof I have the honour to be the workmanſhip. Mr. Boroughs.

Thou wilt have a deſire to the work of thine hands] I know that thou thy ſelf (for the love thou beareſt me, of thy goodneſſe, who am thy creature, and on whom thou haſt ſhewn favour, and reprinted thine image) wilt long after the conſummation of my happineſſe; for then I ſhall be like unto thee (more like then ever) for I ſhall ſee thee as thou art, and appear with thee in glory, Col. 3. 4. being next unto thee, Luke 22. 30. Yea, one with thee, John 17. 21. and ſo above the moſt glorious Angels, Heb. 1. 14. The King ſhall greatly deſire my beauty, Pſal. 45. 11. and rejoyce over me, as the bridegrom doth over his bride, Iſa. 62. 5. See chap. 10. 3. The word here rendred Thou wilt have a deſire, ſignifieth, Thou wilt deſire as men do after ſilver: The Lord ſeemed to deal by Job, as men do by droſſe, to put him away as wicked, Pſalm 119. 119. nevertheleſſe, he believed that he would look upon him as ſilver; and although he now cruſhed him together, and brake him to pieces, as the ſilver-ſmith doth an old piece of plate which he means to melt, yet that he would in the grave, as in a furnace refine him, and at the Reſurrection bring him out of a new faſhion. Lo this is the right Logick of faith, to make concluſions of life in death, and of light in darkneſſe, to gather one contrary out of another. Abbot. 1 John 3. 2.

Verſe 16. For now thou numbreſt my ſteps] Or, But now thou numbreſt &c. thou keepeſt an exact account of every ſin of mine, of every ſtep that I have trod awry, yea, though it be but ſome wry motion of my mind (as the Septuagint here tranſlate) ſo curious art thou and critical in thine obſervations of mine out-ſtrayes, See chap. 10. 14. But is this Job that ſpeaketh, or ſome other? How confident was he erſe-while, and comfortable in the hope of a glorious reſurrection! but now, down ἐπιλογισμὸν. Ja.

again

again upon all four, as we ſay, and like an aguiſh man in a great fit of impatiency, which holdeth him to the end of the chapter? But for this, who knoweth not that every new man, is two men? that in the Saints, the fleſh is ever luſting againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh? that in the Shulamite, is as it were, the company of two armies maintaining a continual conteſt, Cant. 6. 13? Said, I am caſt out of thy ſight: yet I will look againe toward thine holy Temple, Jon. 2. 4. See the Note there.

Doſt thou not watch over my ſin?] This is the ſame with the former, but without a figure. The Rabbines have a ſaying, that there is not any doubt in the law, but may be reſolved by the context: the Scripture is its owne beſt Interpreter.

Verſe 17. My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag] As the writings or informations of a proceſſe which is ready to be ſentenced, Deut. 32. 34. Hoſ. 13. 12. Thou haſt, as it were, ſealed up, and made ſure work with all my ſins, ſaith Job, to have them forth-coming for the increaſe of my puniſhment. Look how the Clark of Aſſizes (ſaith one) ſeals up the indictments of men, and at the Aſſizes brings his bag, and takes them out to read the ſame againſt them: ſo God dealt with Job, in his conceit at leaſt. The truth is, God had not ſealed his tranſgreſſions in a bag, but had caſt them behind his back: a bag God hath for mens ſins, and a bottle he hath for their tears, Pſalm 56. 8. Now Job was one of thoſe penitents that helped to fill Gods bottle, and therefore he ſaw at length (though now he were benighted) all his ſins, bag, and all thrown into the ſea, and ſinking as a waighty milſtone in thoſe mighty waters of free-grace, and undeſerved mercy.

And thou ſoweſt up mine iniquity] Adſuéſne aliquid iniquitati meæ? ſo the Tigurines tranſlate, i. e. Wilt thou ſew or adde any thing to mine iniquity? wilt thou tye to it that tag (as a Martyr phraſeth it) of the Lawes malediction, conjoyning the puniſhment to the ſin? Some make this an explication of the former, q. d. the bag is not only ſealed, but for more ſurety, ſewed too, and that purpoſely for a purchaſe of puniſhment, as ſome ſenſe it.

Adſuere ad iniquitatem, eſt pœnas pœnis continenter adjungere. Merl.

Verſe 18. And ſurely the mountain falling cometh to nought] q. d. If thou, Lord, proceed to deal thus rigidly with me, viz. to number or cipher up my ſteps, to watch over my ſins, to ſeal them up in a bag &c. and all this in fierce wrath, that thou mayeſt lay load upon me; what mountain, what rock, what other creature is ever able to abide it? Job had ſaid before, Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? Am I a ſea, or a Whale? Were I theſe, or any the like robuſtuous creatures, yet could not I expect to ſtand before the diſpleaſed Omnipotency, who takeſt the hills like tennis-balls, and crackeſt the rocks like a Nut-ſhell. See Hab. 1. 4, 5, 6. with the Notes.

chap. 6. 12. chap. 7. 12.

And the rock is removed out of his place] As in earth-quakes it ſometimes falleth out. See on chap. 9. 5. or by reaſon of the ſea underlaking, it decayeth in time, and waxeth old, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth.

Verſe 19. The waters weare the ſtones] Gutta cavat lapidem &c. the weakeſt things wear out the hardeſt by often falling upon them, or continual running over them: ſo doth Gods wrath though ſet out in minimis, ſecretly, but ſurely conſume, Hoſ. 5. 12. I will be unto Ephraim as a moth, and to the houſe of Judah as rottenneſſe, or that little worm (teredo) that eats into the heart of wood, and rots it. Thus he plagued the Egyptians by lice and flies. There may be much poiſon in little drops.

Thou waſheſt away the things that grow out of the earth] Or, Thou over-flowſt, as once in the general deluge (when the face of the earth was grown ſo foul, that God was forc'd to waſh it with a flood), and frequently ſince, we ſee that after great rains there are huge floods that marre whole meadows and corne fields, not only diſcolouring, but drowning all their beauty and plenty. This is the fourth compariſon uſed in this and the former verſe, where a man would wonder, ſaith an Interpreter, audire Jobum in medias arumnas philoſophantem, to hear Job in the midſt of his miſeries, making uſe of his philoſophy, and travelling thus in his thoughts, for illuſtrations of his own caſe, over mountains and rocks, &c.

Olymp.

Thou deſtroyeſt the hope of man] viz. In deſtroying the things above-mentioned; or, ſo thou deſtroyeſt &c. though ſome reſerve the reddition to the next verſe, ſo

thou

Thou prevailest against him, &c. i.e. So thou never ceasest with thy might to cast down sorry men, till such time as they changing countenance, and departing with an heavy and sorrowful heart, thou violently throwest them out, their lives and hope ending together, if they have been wicked: as if godly, yet their vain and groundlesse hopes of prosperity and plenty, &c. come to nothing; though over the red sea, yet Gods people may be made to tack about two and forty times in the wildernesse.

Verse 20. Thou prevailest for ever against him.] This and the rest of the words to the end of the Chapter, some make to be the Application of the Similitudes; Others an Amplification only of what he had said, Thou destroyest the hope of man. Thou must needs, when thou overmatchest and over-mastrest him, and art never worsted. Exod. 15. 3. the Lord is called, A Man of War; the Chaldee there hath it, The Lord and Victor of Wars. And the word here rendred, Ever, cometh from a root that signifieth to finish, conquer, and triumph.

And he passeth.] scil. Out of the world by a violent or untimely death, with as ill a will many times as the unjust Steward did out of his Office, as the Jebusites did out of the Fort of Zion, or as the Devil out of the Demoniack. Sed voluntas Dei, necessitas rei; he passeth, because he can neither will nor chuse, as they say. Violenta mors aut certe immatura. Merlin.

Thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away.] Eleganter vero mors notatur, immutandi verbo, saith one. Elegant is death set forth by changing the countenance: for death taketh away the faire and fresh colour of a man, and makes him look wan and withered, pale and ghastly. It is easie to see death many times (before it come) in the sick mans face, in his sharp nostrils, thin cheeks, hollow eyes, &c. those Harbingers of death, whereby God sendeth for him, and so sendeth him away, (extrudit & amandet,) as once he did Adam out of Paradise. Lavaterus Note here, is, Propone tibi semper horribilem speciem mortis, ut eo minus pecces. Set before thy self always the horrid face of death, to restraine thee from sin. Facies Hippocratica.

Verse 21. His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not.] Whilst he lyeth sick, he regardeth no earthly thing, no not what becometh of his children (formerly his greatest care) whether they be advanced or impaired in their outward condition. As when he is dead he can take no knowledge of any thing done in this world, Isai. 63. 16 Eccles. 2. 19. and 9. 6. be his children or friends rich or poor, high or low, he is both ignorant and insensible. It was a base slander published by a Jesuit, some years after Queen Elizabeths death, That as she died without sense or feeling of Gods mercies, so that she wished she might after her death hang a while in the Aire, to see what striving would be for her Kingdome. As for that opinion of some Papists, That the dead do sometimes returne into the Land of the living, that they know how things go here, and make report thereof to those in heaven, it is contrary to the whole Scripture. Omnis in Ascanio chari stat cura parentis. Vir. Cambd. Elis. Prefat.

Verse 22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain.] That is, (say some) But as long as he is living, his body is afflicted with a thousand evils, and though his soul, by the condition of her creation, be exempt from them, yet she beares a part in them and becomes miserable with it. A dying man hath sorrow without, and sorrow within, the whole man is in misery, as Job here felt himself. Others hold, that this Poetical representation hath no other meaning, but that the dead have no manner of communication with the living. Broughton rendreth it, His flesh is grieved for it self, and his soul will mourn for it self; q.d. he takes no thought or care for his children or nearest relations. Aben-Ezra. Mercer. Deodate again upon all four, as we ſay; and like an aguiſh man in a great fit of impatiency, which holdeth him to the end of the chapter? But for this, who knoweth not that every new man, is two men? that in the Saints, the fleſh is ever luſting againſt the ſpirit, and the ſpirit againſt the fleſh? that in the Shulamite, is as it were, the company of two armies maintaining a continual conteſt, Cant. 6. 13? Said, I am caſt out of thy ſight: yet I will look againe toward thine holy Temple, Jon. 2. 4. See the Note there.

Doſt thou not watch over my ſin?] This is the ſame with the former, but without a figure. The Rabbines have a ſaying, that there is not any doubt in the law, but may be reſolved by the context: the Scripture is its owne beſt Interpreter.

Verſe 17. My tranſgreſſion is ſealed up in a bag] As the writings or informations of a proceſſe which is ready to be ſentenced, Deut. 32. 34. Hoſ. 13. 12. Thou haſt, as it were, ſealed up, and made ſure work with all my ſins, ſaith Job, to have them forth-coming for the increaſe of my puniſhment. Look how the Clark of Aſſizes (ſaith one) ſeals up the indictments of men, and at the Aſſizes brings his bag, and takes them out to read the ſame againſt them: ſo God dealt with Job, in his conceit at leaſt. The truth is, God had not ſealed his tranſgreſſions in a bag, but had caſt them behind his back: a bag God hath for mens ſins, and a bottle he hath for their tears, Pſalm 56. 8. Now Job was one of thoſe penitents that helped to fill Gods bottle, and therefore he ſaw at length (though now he were benighted) all his ſins, bag and all thrown into the ſea, and ſinking as a waighty milſtone in thoſe mighty waters of free-grace, and undeſerved mercy.

And thou ſowe'ſt up mine iniquity] Adſuéſne aliquid iniquitati meæ? ſo the Tigurines tranſlate, i. e. Wilt thou ſew or adde any thing to mine iniquity? wilt thou tye to it that tag (as a Martyr phraſeth it) of the Lawes malediction, conjoyning the puniſhment to the ſin? Some make this an explication of the former, q. d. the bag is not only ſealed, but for more ſurety, ſewed too, and that purpoſely for a purchaſe of puniſhment, as ſome ſenſe it.

Adſuere ad iniquitatem, eſt panas panis continenter adjungere. Merl.

Verſe 18. And ſurely the mountain falling cometh to nought] q. d. If thou, Lord, proceed to deal thus rigidly with me, viz. to number or cipher up my ſteps, to watch over my ſins, to ſeal them up in a bag &c. and all this in fierce wrath, that thou mayeſt lay load upon me; what mountain, what rock, what other creature is ever able to abide it? Job had ſaid before. Is my ſtrength the ſtrength of ſtones? Am I a ſea, or a whale? Were I theſe, or any the like robuſtuous creatures, yet could not I expect to ſtand before the diſpleaſed Omnipotency, who takeſt the hills like tennis-balls, and crackeſt the rocks like a Nut-ſhell. See Hab. 1. 4, 5, 6. with the Notes.

chap. 6. 12. chap. 7. 12.

And the rock is removed out of his place] As in earth-quakes it ſometimes falleth out. See on chap. 9. 5. or by reaſon of the ſea underlaking, it decayeth in time, and waxeth old, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth.

Verſe 19. The waters weare the ſtones] Gutta cavat lapidem &c. the weakeſt things wear out the hardeſt by often falling upon them, or continual running over them: ſo doth Gods wrath though let out in minimis, ſecretly, but ſurely conſume, Hoſ. 5. 12. I will be unto Ephraim as a moth, and to the houſe of Judah as rottenneſſe, or that little worm (teredo) that eats into the heart of wood, and rots it. Thus he plagued the Egyptians by lice and flies. There may be much poiſon in little drops.

Thou waſheſt away the things that grow out of the earth] Or, Thou ever-floweſt, as once in the general deluge (when the face of the earth was grown ſo foul, that God was forc'd to waſh it with a flood), and frequently ſince, we ſee that after great rains there are huge floods that marre whole meadows and corne fields, not only diſcolouring, but drowning all their beauty and plenty. This is the fourth compariſon uſed in this and the former verſe, where a man would wonder, ſaith an Interpreter, audire Jobum in medias aerumnis philoſophantem, to hear Job in the midſt of his miſeries, making uſe of his philoſophy, and travelling thus in his thoughts, for illuſtrations of his own caſe, over mountains and rocks, &c.

Olymp.

Thou deſtroyeſt the hope of man] viz. In deſtroying the things above-mentioned; or, ſo thou deſtroyeſt &c. though ſome reſerve the reddition to the next verſe, ſo

Thou prevailest against him, &c. i.e. So thou never ceasest with thy might to cast down sorry men, till such time as they changing countenance, and departing with an heavy and sorrowful heart, thou violently throwest them out, their lives and hope ending together, if they have been wicked: as if godly, yet their vain and groundlesse hopes of prosperity and plenty, &c. come to nothing; though over the red sea, yet Gods people may be made to tack about two and forty times in the wildernesse.

Verse 20. Thou prevailest for ever against him.] This and the rest of the words to the end of the Chapter, some make to be the Application of the Similitudes; Others an Amplification only of what he had said, Thou destroyest the hope of man. Thou must needs, when thou overmatchest and over-mastrest him, and art never worsted. Exod. 15. 3. the Lord is called, A Man of War; the Chaldee there hath it, The Lord and Victor of Wars. And the word here rendred, Ever, cometh from a root that signifieth to finish, conquer, and triumph.

And he passeth.] scil. Out of the world by a violent or untimely death, with as ill a will many times as the unjust Steward did out of his Office, as the Jebusites did out of the Fort of Zion, or as the Devil out of the Demoniack. Sed voluntas Dei, necessitas rei; he passeth, because he can neither will nor chuse, as they say. Violenta mors aut certe immatura. Merlin.

Thou changest his countenance, and sendest him away.] Eleganter vero mors notatur, immittendi verbo, saith one. Elegant is death set forth by changing the countenance: for death taketh away the faire and fresh colour of a man, and makes him look wan and withered, pale and ghastly. It is easie to see death many times (before it come) in the sick mans face, in his sharp nostrils, thin cheeks, hollow eyes, &c. those Harbingers of death, whereby God sendeth for him, and so sendeth him away, (extrudit & amandet,) as once he did Adam out of Paradise. Lavater. Note here, is, Propone tibi semper horribilem speciem mortis, ut eo minus pecces, Set before thy self always the horrid face of death, to restraine thee from sin. Facies Hippocratica.

Verse 21. His sons come to honour, and he knoweth it not.] Whilst he lyeth sick, he regardeth no earthly thing, no not what becometh of his children (formerly his greatest care) whether they be advanced or impaired in their outward condition. As when he is dead he can take no knowledge of any thing done in this world, Isai. 63. 16 Eccles. 2. 19. and 9. 6. be his children or friends rich or poor, high or low, he is both ignorant and insensible. It was a base slander published by a Jesuit, some years after Queen Elizabeths death, That as she died without sense or feeling of Gods mercies, so that she wished she might after her death hang a while in the Aire, to see what striving would be for her Kingdome. As for that opinion of some Papists, That the dead do sometimes returne into the Land of the living, that they know how things go here, and make report thereof to those in heaven, it is contrary to the whole Scripture. Omnis in Ascanio chari stat cura parentis. Vir. Cambd. Eliz. Præfat.

Verse 22. But his flesh upon him shall have pain.] That is, (say some) But as long as he is living, his body is afflicted with a thousand evils, and though his soul, by the condition of her creation, be exempt from them, yet she beares a part in them and becomes miserable with it. A dying man hath sorrow without, and sorrow within, the whole man is in misery, as Job here felt himself. Others hold, that this Poetical representation hath no other meaning, but that the dead have no manner of communication with the living. Broughton rendreth it, His flesh is grieved for it self, and his soul will mourn for it self; q.d. he takes no thought or care for his children or nearest relations. Aben-Ezra. Mercer. Deodate

CHAP. XV.

Verſe 1. Then anſwered Eliphaz the Temanite, and ſaid.]

Lapides, locutus eſt: In this ſecond encounter, Eliphaz falls upon Job, not ſo much with ſtronger Arguments, as with harder words; reproving him ſharply, or rather reproaching him bitterly, Facundiâ quadam caninâ, with more Eloquence then charity. So hard a thing is it (ſaith Beza) eſpecially in diſputing and reaſoning, to avoid ſelf-love, as even in theſe times experience daily teacheth us. He hinteth (I ſuppoſe) at the publick Conference betwixt himſelf and Jacobus Andreas at Mompelgard, whereby the ſtrife was rather ſtirred then ſtinted, as Thuanus complaineth. Or elſe at the Diſputation at Poſſiacum, wherein Beza, Speaker for the Proteſtant party, (before the Queen Mother of France, the young King Charles and many Princes of the Blood) entring into the matter of the Euchariſt, ſpake with ſuch heat (unleſſe the Hiſtorian wrongs him), that he gave but ill ſatisfaction to thoſe of his own ſide, ſo that he was commanded to conclude. Such meetings are ſeldome ſucceſſeful (ſaith Luther); becauſe men come with confidence and wit for victory rather then verity. In this reply of Eliphaz to Job, we may ſee what an evil thing it is to be carried away with prejudice and pertinacy, which make a man forget all modeſty, and fall foule upon his beſt friends. Here's enough ſaid to have driven this ſorrowful man into utter deſpaire, had not God upheld his ſpirit whiles, he is fiercely charged for a wicked man, and hated of God: neither doth any of his friends henceforth afford him one exhortation to repentance, or one comfortable promiſe, as Lavater well obſerveth.

Lib. 35. Hiſt.

Hiſt. of Counc. of Trent 453.

Non affert ullam conſolationem, non invitat eum ad penitentiam: ſed potius ad deſperationem compellat. Lav.

Verſe 2. Should a wiſe man utter vain knowledg.] Heb. Knowledg of the wind; light, frothy, empty diſcourſes, that have no tack or ſubſtance in them, but only words that are no better then wind, a meer flaſh or Aiery nothing. Solomon thinks, a wiſe man ſhould beware of falling into this fault, leſt he forfeit his reputation, Eccleſ. 10.1. Dead flyes cauſe the Oyntments of the Apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour, ſo doth a little folly, him that is in reputation for wiſdom and honour; as ſpots are ſooneſt obſerved in the whiteſt and fineſt garments; and envy, like wormes and moths, doth uſually feed on the pureſt cloth. Neh. 6. 11. A great many dead flies may be found in a Tar-box, and no hurt done, but one of them falne into a pot of ſweet Odours, or precious Perfumes, may ſoone taint and corrupt them.

And fil his belly with the Eaſt-wind.] Per ventrem, mentem intelligit, & per ventum Orientalem, vanam opinionem, ſaith Vatablus; By belly underſtand the mind, and by the Eaſt wind a vain conceit, or frothy knowledg, blown forth out of a ſwelling breaſt, to the hurt of others; for the Eaſt wind is deſtructive to herbs and fruits. Hoſ. 12. 1. Gen. 41. 6. But doth not Eliphaz here by theſe bubble of words, and bluſtering queſtions, betraying much choler and confidence, fall into the very ſame fault which he findeth with Job: Doth not he alſo fill his belly with heat, (ſo the Vulgar rendreth this Text) which kindling in his boſom, blazeth out at his lips? Doth not this angry man exalt folly, and ſhew himſelf none of the wiſeſt, though he were the oldeſt in all the company.

Verſe 3. Should he reaſon with unprofitable talk?] Why? But if he do, ſhould he therefore be thus rippled up, and rough-hewed? And not rather reduced and rectified with hard Arguments and ſoft words? Man is a croſs crabbed creature: Duci vult, trahi non vult; Perſwade him you may, compel him you cannot. A fit time alſo muſt be taken to perſwade him to better, for elſe you may looſe your ſweet words upon him. The Husbandman ſoweth not in a ſtorm: The Mariner hoyſeth not ſail in every wind: Good Phyſicians evacuate not the body in extremity of heat and cold. A brother offended is harder to be wonne then a ſtrong City, Prov. 18. 19. This Eliphaz ſhould have conſidered, and not ſo raſhly cenſured Job for a fool, and his talk for traſh, but rather handled him tenderly, conſidering his condition, and deſired him to explain ſuch of his ſpeeches as he thought not ſo well and wiſely uttered.

Or with ſpeeches wherewith he can do no good?] This is but the ſame with the former:

mer; and indeed this whole verſe is but a ſaying of that plainly, which in the foregoing verſe he had ſaid figuratively.

Varſe 4. Yea thou caſteſt off fear.] Heb. Thou makeſt void fear; that is, Religion, whereof the fear of God is both the beginning, Prov. 1.7. and the end, Eccleſ. 12.1. This is an heavy charge indeed; as if Job, by ſaying, the extreme miſeries of this life are common to the godly and the wicked, had by conſequence taught men to caſt off all Religion as unprofitable, which none but ſuch a ſhameleſſe man as thy ſelf, ſaith Eliph. 2, would ever have averred. It cannot be denyed, but that Job, through the bitterneſſe of his grief, and the unreaſonableneſſe of his adverſaries, was ſomewhat carried beyond the bounds of that reverence which is due unto God, and reaſoneth the matter ſomewhat hotly with God; but that thereby he bewrayed his manifeſt contempt of his Majeſty, caſting off all awful regard and recourſe thereto by Prayer, as the wicked, who call not upon God, Pſal. 14.4. This was a meer cavil, or rather an unſufferable injury done to the good man, who gave ſufficient teſtimony of his fearing God, and eſtſoons poured out his prayer in his preſence. All which notwithſtanding, he heareth in the next words,

And reſtraineſt prayer before God.] Thou forbeareſt to pray thy ſelf, and thou diſcourageſt others. If this had been true, it had been a foul fault indeed, for whiles Prayer ſtandeth ſtill, the whole Trade of godlineſſe ſtandeth ſtill likewiſe, and to caſt off Prayer, is to caſt off God: Jer. 10.25. We muſt take heed of falling from the affections of Prayer, though we continue doing the Duty. As veſſels of Wine, when firſt tapped, are very ſmart and quick, but at laſt grow exceeding flat: ſo do many Chriſtians, (through unbelief, and worldly cares and buſineſſes, or domeſtical diſcords, or ſome other diſtempers, whereby prayers are hindred, 1 Pet. 3.7.) either they pray not frequently, or not fervently, but in a cuſtomary formal bedulling way. And this Eliphaz might ſuſpect Job of, and aſſigne it as the cauſe of all his miſcarriages in word and deed. Sure it is, that as ſleep compoſeth drunkenneſſe, ſo doth prayer the affections: a man may pray himſelf ſober again, as a Reverend man gathereth out of this Text. Dr. Preſton.

Verſe 5. For thy mouth uttereth thine iniquity.] Heb. Thy crooked, wry diſpoſition that ſtandeth acroſſe to God and goodneſſe, Pſal. 51.5. Homo eſt inverſus decalogus. Solomon ſpeaketh of perverſe lips, as if the upper lip ſtood where the neather ſhould, Prov. 4.24. And Saint Jude ſpeaketh of hard ſpeeches, uttered by ungodly ſinners, Jude 15. ſuch as Job was none, whatever Eliphaz by miſ-interpreting, made of him, wreſting his words to a wrong ſenſe, as Pſal. 56.5. and by a ſpiritual unmannerlineſſe, making the worſt of that he ſpake; there being not any thing that may not be taken with the left hand. Now if this befel Job from his friends and thoſe godly perſons, what wonder though the like, and worſe be done to us by wicked enemies.

Qui id quod boni eſt excerpunt, dicunt quod mali eſt.
Nihil eſt quin malè narrando poſſit depravarier. Terent. Phorm.

And thou choſeſt the tongue of the crafty] Then the which, nothing is a greater enemy to piety, ſaith an Interpreter. Politicians formallize and enervate the power of truth, till at length they leave us a heartleſſe and ſapleſſe Religion, ſaith another. Such an one Eliphaz makes Job to be: q.d. Thou waſt wont to ſpeak prayer, but now thou ſpeakeſt Policy, yea, Thou choſeſt to do it, thou loveſt evil more then good, and lying rather then to ſpeak right. Pſal. 52.3. Thou haſt as many turnings and windings in thy mind, as the Serpent hath in his body (ſo the Hebrew word ſeemeth to ſignifie, Gen. 3.1.) Thus he heightneth his charge, and layeth on yet more load.

Verſe 6. Thine own mouth condemneth thee, and not I.] Yes you, and none but you. Jobs heart condemned him not (and thence his confidence toward God, 1 John 3.21) much leſſe his mouth, had not his words been miſconſtrued. But as charity maketh a good ſenſe of doubtful ſpeeches and paſſages, ſo prejudice and diſpleaſure takes all things (though well meant) at the worſt, and as Logicians do, Sequitur partem deteriorem. Eliphaz diggeth up evil, Prov. 16.27. and is like Achilles, of whom Homer ſaith, that he was a great find-fault.

Iliad. l. 9. Δειλὸς ἀνὴρ, ταχὰ κεν κ' ἀναίτιον αἰτιόωτο.

Yea, thine own lips teſtifie againſt thee.] Heb. Anſwer againſt thee. For Witneſſes ordinarily anſwer to Interrogatories. So the pride of Iſrael (breaking forth as a great maſter-pock in his fore-head) teſtified to his face, Hoſ. 5.5. and the Heretick is condemned of himſelf, Tit. 3.11. Virtually he doth ſo, though not formally. But Job did neither good Eliphaz.

Verſe 7. Art thou the firſt man that was born?] Or, Waſt thou made before Adam? Out of the mouth of Adam, as from a fountaine, flowed whatſoever profitable Learning, Skill or Wiſdom, is found in the world, ſaith the divine Chronologer. Job had taxed Zophar for a young puny and a Novice, chap. 12. This, Eliphaz kindleth at, and taketh upon him to anſwer in Zophars behalf. As indeed theſe three ſpeakers, Eliphaz, Zophar and Bildad ſtood to one another, as much as any one of them did for himſelf, as if they had all entred bond, and given ſecurity for reciprocal aſſiſtance. Here then Eliph. asketh, Art thou the firſt man born? that is, Art thou the wiſeſt man alive? and muſt we all be taught by thee, as Adams Nephewes were by him, in things divine and humane.

Ut vox Riſhon non ſignificet primus, ſed primus. Lavat. Bucholc.

Or waſt thou made before the hills?] i.e. Before the Angels, as ſome ſenſe it. But take it literally for the Mountaines, called for their Antiquity, the everlaſting hils, Gen. 49.26. Hab. 3.6. becauſe they were from the beginning, and ſhall continue to the end. Theſe appeared firſt at the ſeparation of the waters, Gen. 1. And Chriſt, to ſet forth his eternity, ſaith, Prov. 8.25. Before the mountains were ſetled, before the hills, was I brought forth. So Pſal. 90.21.

Verſe 8. Haſt thou heard the ſecret of God?] Thus he goes on to jear Job, and to accuſe him of inſolent Arrogancy, as if he had taken himſelf to be of Gods Cabinet-Councel, and ſo to have known more of his mind then any other. Now this never came into Jobs heart; but theſe hot ſpirited people, when their choler is once up, wil not ſtick to ſay any thing againſt another whom they deſire to gall, and to make the worſt of his words, when as themſelves cannot take a reproof, though never ſo juſt.

Bilioſi & bilioſa.

And doſt thou reſtrain wiſdom to thy ſelf?] Haſt thou engroſſed all the wiſdom in the world? and muſt it needs live and dye with thee? Is every man a fool preſently, who is not of thy mind and make? Epicurus indeed had ſuch a conceit, and Palæmon, in Suetonius, and Laurentius Valla, with ſome others of late: but Job was far from it, as appeareth by his many ſelf-abaſing expreſſions: and it had been well for him, if his three friends, had taken out that leſſon in wiſdomes ſchool, viz. to judge thoſe certaine good things found in another, better then they are, and certaine evils, leſſe, doubtful good things, certaine, and doubtful evil things, none.

An ſolus ſapis, ita ut te perenne ſit ipſa ſapientia peritura? Vatabl.

Verſe 9. What knoweſt thou, that we know not?] Here Eliphaz inveigheth againſt Jobs pride, ſed majori cum faſtu, but with greater pride, elſe what meaneth this arrogant compariſon? Did not a deceived heart burn him aſide, as the Prophet ſpeaketh in another caſe? and might it not be ſaid of him, as it was once of Antony, That he hated a Tyrant, but not Tyranny. See the Notes above on chap. 12.3. and 13.2.

Verſe 10. With us are the gray-headed, &c.] Job had ſaid, chap. 12.12. With the ancient is wiſdom, and in length of dayes is underſtanding. This, though modeſtly ſpoken, yet was very ill taken; and is here replyed unto with a great deal of heat; Sed ita ſolent importuni homines, &c. ſaith Mercer here: But ſuch is the courſe and cuſtome of unreaſonable men, to take every thing in the worſt way, and to deal rather by reproaches, then by reaſons; as Eccius, Sanderus, Genebrardus, the whole generation of Jeſuites, of whom Aurelius the Sorboniſt ſaith, and truly, that they are a ſort of men, qui nihil magis habent quàm arrogantiam Theologicam, nihil minus poſſident quàm Theologicam ſcientiam; Arrogant and yet ignorant, for whiles they think they know all things, they know nothing at all as they ought to know, 1 Cor. 8.2. As for Antiquity, (here ſo ſtiffely pleaded) it muſt have no more Authority then what it can maintain. Papiſts boaſt much of it, as once the Gibeonites did of old, ſhoes ſhooes and mouldy bread. But Antiquity ſevered from verity is of no value: for as Cyprian ſaith well, Conſuetudo mala, vetuſtas erroris eſt. And our Saviour ſaith not, I am cuſtome, but, I am the Way, the Truth, &c. And God ſaith, by the Prophet Ezekiel, Walk ye not in the ſtatutes of your Fathers, neither obſerve their judgments, &c. but walk in my ſtatutes, and keep my judgments, and do them, chap. 20.18,19. See the Notes on chap. 8.8,9,10. and on 12.12.

Verſe 11. Are the conſolations of God.] Sic faſtuoſe ſuas conſolationes appellat & ſociorum, ſaith Mercer: ſo Eliphaz with ſtate enough, calleth the comforts that he and his fellowes had miniſtred to Job, promiſing him mercy from God upon his ſound repentance; but telling him withal, that unleſſe he would yeeld himſelf an hypocrite, thoſe promiſes would profit him nothing at all. Had Job ſlighted the precious promiſes, thoſe conduits of comfort, he had been much to blame, as he was doubtleſſe, who ſaid, My ſoul refuſed comfort, Pſal. 77.2. Like ſome ſullen child, that will not eat his milk, becauſe he hath it not in the golden diſh. The ſoul is ready to turn the back of the hand, and not the palm, to the ſtaff of divine conſolations, ſaying, Oh my ſtubbornneſſe! &c. and rather to ſhift and ſhark in every by-corner for comfort, then to ſuck it out of thoſe breaſts of conſolation, and be ſatisfied, Iſai. 66. 11. The Apoſtle taxeth his Hebrewes, that they had forgotten the conſolation (ſo the words may be read) which ſpake unto them as unto children ſaying, My ſon, &c. Heb. 12.5. Wrangling with God by caviling Objections, when they ſhould rather have wraſtled with him by earneſt ſupplications, putting the Promiſes in ſuit, and drawing waters with joy, out of thoſe wells of conſolation, Iſai. 12.3. Job was not altogether clear of this fault. He was ſo poor and ſore without, and within ſo full of horrour and terrour, that he was ready with Rachel, to refuſe to be comforted. Mercies were offered unto him, but he was ſcarce in caſe to receive them. The ear which taſteth words as the mouth doth meat, was ſo filled with choler, that he could hardly reliſh any comfort. The eaſieſt Medicines or Waters are troubleſome to ſore eyes. The fleſh with her roarings and repinings maketh ſuch a din, that the voice of the Comforter cannot well be heard in the beſt heart ſometimes. The Spirit knocks but there is none to open: Hence he goes away grieving, and that ſhould not be.

Is there any ſecret thing with thee?] Haſt thou meat to eat that we know not of? Are there with thee conſolations of thine own better then thoſe of God, which we have miniſtred unto thee? Some render it, And lyeth there any hidden thing with thee? that is, Either ſome greater and more profound wiſdome then every man knoweth; or elſe ſome ſecret ſin which muſt be caſt out ere comforts can faſten. For as the wound cannot cloſe and heal, as long as any part of the iron weapon remaineth in it; ſo herein the Cordiaca paſſio, or paſſion of heart, the heart is ſo oppreſſed and over-covered, that the moſt refreſhing cordials cannot come at it, ſo that it is even ſuffocated with ſorrow. In alluſion whereunto, the Church prayes, Lam. 3.65. Give them ſorrow of heart. This was Spira's caſe; and for the time might be Job's. Poſſibly ſome ſin or ſorrow might lye at the fountain-head, and ſtop the courſe of his comforts. This Eliphaz fiſheth after, and would have found out, and remedied.

Verſe 12. Why doth thine heart carry thee away?] Violently tranſport thee; ſcil. beyond all bounds of reaſon and modeſty. There is another charge, and higher then the former, as if he had been emota mentis, not well in his wits, but wild and wood as they call it; or at leaſt, that his paſſions were ſo far too hard for his reaſon, as they did Quis te furor cordis exagitat? Pineda.

Rectam de cardine tollere mentem,

We are in no ſmal danger of our naughty hearts: It was no ill prayer of one, Lord, keep me from that naughty man, my ſelf. Nor was it any ill counſel of another, who ſaid, So take heed to thy ſelf, that thou beware of thy ſelf. Though there were no devil, yet our corrupt nature would act Satans part againſt it ſelf; it would have a ſupply of wickedneſſe (as a Serpent hath of poiſon) from it ſelf, it hath a ſpring to feed it. Keep thy heart therefore with all cuſtody, Prov. 4.24. it will get away elſe, and carry thee away with it.

Domine libera me à malo homine, meipſo. Ita cave tibi ut caveas teipſum.

And what do thine eyes wink at?] Nictant, celeriter ſcilicet, & ſubtiliter. Poſſibly Job, through pain and anguiſh might be made to wink whiles he was ſpeaking to them, them, or they to him; and this they misconstrue as done in contempt. See Psal. 35. 19. Or that he was plotting some mischief, Prov. 10.10. and 16.30. or pretending to some extraordinary devotion, and therefore shutting his eyes, that he might be the more reserved to God. The Vulgar hath it, Why doth thine heart lift thee up? and, as if thou wert thinking of some great things, why are thine eyes so set? It is for no goodnesse sure.

Verse 13. That thou turnest thy spirit against God.] A fowle fault surely, but meerly for want of a faire Interpretation. It is as if Eliphaz should have said, Thy spirit was right when thou bravely bare'st up under the afflicting hand of God, chap. 1. but because patience hath not had her perfect work, as appeareth by thine angry expostulations, thy contesting with God, and chatting against him and his proceedings, therefore I conclude that thou art not perfect and entire, all is not right. Why doth thy spirit swell against God? (so the Vulgar rendreth it) Behold his soul which is lifted up, is not upright in him, that's certain, Hab. 2.4.

Quid tumet contra Deum Spiritus tuus,

And lettest such words go out of thy mouth.] Contumelious and blasphemous words not fit to be named. Bona verba, quaeso Eliphaz. True it is, Job had spoken some things more freely then was fitting, and not without a tincture of bitternesse. But charity would have made the best of those speeches which you thus odiously aggravate against him, and have taught you to use the same equity toward others, that you would have others use towards your self. That faith (and so that love) is easily wrought, which teacheth men to believe and think well of themselves, and worse of others. We will make a good exposition, if we have but a good disposition.

Verse 14. What is man that he should be clean?] Eliphaz hath now done chiding (it is but time he should) and falls to reasoning; wherein nevertheless he sheweth himself an empty and troublesome Disputer urging again the same Arguments as before, chap. 14.17,18,19. and not resting satisfied in a sufficient answer. Did Job ever assert himself clean? Said he not the clean contrary in many places? see chap. 14. 4. Only as washed, sanctified, and justified in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of his God, 1 Cor. 6.11. he discoursed of his integrity and righteousnesse, not denying himself otherwise tainted with Original sin, and guilty of actual; which he begged pardon for, according to the tenour of the Covenant of Grace. And therefore Eliphaz might have spared these words, and better bestowed his pains in comforting Job, and exhorting him to patience. The Jesuites have at this day a device in handling Texts of Scripture by their nice distinctions to perplex and obscure the cleerest places; and for those that are doubtful, not at all to distinguish or illustrate them. Again, in points of controversie they make a great putther about that which we deny not, but say little or nothing to the maine businesse.

Haec quae desperant revitescere posse relinquunt.

Verse 15. Behold he putteth no trust in his Saints] Here he proceedeth to prove that which Job never denyed; and Bildad also hath the same chap. 25. Lege ejus verba, nam non male huc quadrant, saith Lavater; Lay his words to these, and they will lend light to each other. See also the Notes on chap. 4.18. There they are called his servants, here his Saints or holy ones; these were the old Patriarks, say the Septuagint, with whom God at sometimes was angry, and although he was a God that forgave them, yet took he vengeance of their inventions, Psal. 99.8. Others understand it of the Saints in heaven, or the holy Angels.

And the heavens are not clean in his sight.] Nor they of heaven be clean in his eyes, so Broughton rendreth it. The Angels are called angels of heaven, Matth. 24.36. and Gal. 1.8. Because made with and in the highest heavens, and appointed there to inhabite. Howbeit in the Apostate Angels, and in heaven, Gods holy and pure eyes found uncleanesse, and delivered them therefore into chaines of darknesse, 2 Pet. 2.4. Again, to be clean in Gods sight is another manner of matter then to be simply clean; like as to be just is one thing, and to be just before God, another, Luke 1.6. Sordet in conspectu judicis, quod fulget in conceptu operantis. Some understand the Text of the visible heavens, the purest of all inanimate creatures (and therefore Chrysostom speaking of those praying Saints that prayed Peter out of prison, Act. 12. saith, that they were ipso coelo puriores afflictione facti, more pure then the heavens, yet are they not pure in the ſight of God, but have their ſpots which we count their beauty ſpots.

yet

Verſe 16. How much more abominable and filthy is man?] And therefore abominable becauſe filthy, or ſtinking and noiſome, as putrified meat is to the noſe and palate. Now this is every mans caſe by nature, Pſal. 14. 3. there being never a barrel better herring, but all in a pickle, though few believe it. Circumciſion of old taught them, that that which was begotten by that part deſerved in like ſort, as abominable and accurſed, to be cut off and thrown away by God. And what elſe doth Baptiſm ſtill teach us? See Col. 2. 11, 12, 13. 1 Pet. 3. 21. David compareth man to the beaſts that periſh, pecoribus morticinis, to beaſts that dye of the Murrain, and ſo become carrion, and are good for nothing. He lyeth rotting in the graves of ſin, wrapt up in the winding ſheet of hardneſſe of heart, and (as a carcaſs crawleth with worms) ſwarming with noiſome luſts, ſuch as Gods ſoul abhorreth. This is his nature: and for his life,

He drinketh iniquity like water] He is as it were altogether ſteeped and ſoaked in ſin? he ſucks it in with delight as an Ox doth water, or a drunkard Wine, who had as liefe you take away his life as his Liquor, and could find in his heart to be drowned in a Butt of Malmſey: as George Duke of Clarence was in the Tower of London, and as ſome ſay, by his own Election. Sure it is that a draught of ſin is the only Merry-go-down to a carnal man; he drinks it frequently and abundantly, even till he ſwelleth therewith. One obſerveth here, that Eliphaz ſaith not, Man eateth, but, drinketh iniquity: becauſe to eat a man muſt chew, and this taketh up ſome time, and leaveth a liberty to ſpit out what he liketh not: but drink goeth down without delay, and we uſually drink oftner then we eat: So here

Verſe 17. I will ſhew thee, hear me.] Here Eliphaz uſeth a ſhort but a lofty preface, calling hard for attention, and raiſing in Job an expectation of no mean matters. But Quid dignum tanto ferret hic promiſſor hiatu. Horat.

This is his Argument:

That is to be held for true which experience evinceth, and wiſe men teach us, as themſelves have learned of their religious Anceſtors.

But, both continued experience, and conſent of men teach us, that wicked men have terrors within, and troubles without.

Therefore this is to be taken for a truth. Therefore alſo by conſequence, that is falſe which thou haſt ſpoken concerning the proſperity of wicked men, chap. 12. 6. Neither canſt thou avoid the charge of wickedneſſe who doſt ſuffer the puniſhments of the wicked. Now what is all this more then Eliphaz had ſaid in a former diſcourſe? (ſo that Job might have cried out, Apage ſæcculorum) only there he groundeth his Argument upon a night-viſion, here upon the teſtimony and conſent of certain wiſe men, commended by their power and juſtice. Some think he meaneth Noah and his pious poſterity.

That which I have ſeen, I will declare] Wilt thou not believe an eye-witneſſe? What can be more ſure then ſight? 1 John 1. 1. Surely, if we were well read in the Story of our own lives, and had laid up our experiences, we might have a divinity of our own. The 119 Pſalm is made up of experiments, and David oft telleth us what he had ſeen and obſerved.

Verſe 18. Which wiſe men have told from their fathers,] Who have carefully and faithfully tranſmitted it as a doctrinal truth to us their poſterity, from hand to hand. For in Jobs time 'tis likely that the Scriptures were not yet written. Which, or, which bringeth wiſe men] who did in their generations, Deum recte cognoſcere & colere, rightly know and worſhip God, which is the higheſt wiſdome, ſaith Lactantius. Have told] Have ſpoken it ſo plainly and plentifully, as if they had ſhewed us the things acted before our eyes. From their Fathers] Who were careful to inſtil good inſtructions and heavenly truths into the minds of their children, their familiars and families, as did Abraham, Gen. 18. and others according to Gods own appointment, Deut. 6.

And have not hid it] But communicated it for the good of many. Light is diffuſive Καλοὶ κἀγαθοὶ ἅμα τε καὶ ἐσθλοὶ ἅμα τε καὶ τετυγμένοι. Prov.

Pſal. 49. ult. Tremel.

sive of it self. Knowledg is perfected while it is communicated. The more you teach and impart to others, eo ditior ac doctior fias, saith One, the richer and skilfuller you become. It is not powring out, but want of pouring out that dryeth up the streames of grace, as of that Oyle, 2 King. 4.6. See Prov. 11.24,25. Psal. 78.2,3,4.

Bodin. theat. Nat. 9.

Verse 19. To whom alone the earth was given] Noah and his pious posterity (as was above noted) whom Methodius and other Ancients call, Maxdi chiliarchas, the Lords of the whole world, given them by the Possessor of heaven and earth, as Melchisedech first calleth God, Gen. 14. and from him Abraham another Prince of God, as those Heathens acknowledged him, and heir of the whole world, Rom. 4. As for Melchisedec (commonly taken to be Sem) he was King in Salem, and no stranger, that is, no enemy molested him; no not those great spoilers Kedarlaomer and his Complices; these never medled with Melchisedec and his subjects (probably out of respect to his wisdome and holinesse, for which he was famous) no not when marching against the Kings of Sodom and Gomorrah, they wasted and smot all the neighbour Countries. So true of his subjects and territories was that which followeth here, Merlin. Bold.

Gen. 23.

And no stranger passed among them] viz. in an hostile way, in a warlike manner, Nah. 1.15. Some read, No strange thing passed among them; As not the devouring sword, so neither the pestilence that walketh in darknesse, nor the destruction that wasteth at noon day, Psal 91.6. Such as was the raigne of Ferdinando the third, King of Spain for five and thirty yeares space; In quibus nec fames nec pestis fuit in regno. saith Lopez, wherein there fell out neither Famine nor Pestilence.

Gloss. in Prolog. par. 1.

Verse 20. The wicked man travelleth with pain all his dayes] He tormenteth himself, or thrusteth himself through (so some read it) 1 Tim. 6.10. He takes no more rest then one upon a Rack; he hath his hands on his loynes, as a woman in travel, Jer. 30.6. he smiteth upon his thigh, sicut mulierecula in puerperio facere solent, saith Luther in his Marginal Note on Jer. 31.19. And if he would do so for his sin (as he doth for his misery) pia esset illa tristitia. & (si dici potest) beata miseria, as Austin hath it; his grief would be godly, and his misery a blessing, God would pity him as he did his moan-making Ephraim and earnestly remember him still, ver. 20. But alas, the wicked wight, the hypocrite in heart, as he heaps up wrath, so he cryeth not, when God bindeth him, Job 36.16. Or if he do cry, 'tis perii, and not peccavi, I am undone, and not, I have done amisse. Hence God many times turneth loose upon him those three Vultures, Care, Fear and Grief, to feed upon his heart. It is seldome seen that God alloweth unto the greatest darlings of the world a perfect contentment. In the very pursuit of these outward vanities is much anguish, many grievances, fears, jealousies, disgraces, interruptions, discontentments. In the unsanctified enjoyment of them, something the wicked shall have to complain of, that shal give an unsavoury verdure to their sweetest morsels, and make their very felicity miserable; witnesse Ahab, Haman, &c. But then followeth the sting of conscience, that maketh a Cain, a Pashur, a Richard the third, to be a terrour to himself. And with this pain some wicked men travel all their dayes here, but hereafter it shall infallibly and inexpressibly torment the souls of them all, through all eternity. And this with the following illustrations is that Oracle or divine sentence which Eliphaz received from those famous men above mentioned, and which he not obscurely applyeth and wresteth against Job, whom herehence he would prove a wicked man, by his own confessions, chap. 3.25,26. and 7.13,14. compared with Levit. 26.36. Deut. 28.65. for that which Eliphaz had heard from his Ancestors, was but the same Law, for substance, that was afterwards written by Moses.

Aug. Epist. 545.

And the number of years is hidden to the Oppressour] Heb. to the terrible Tyrant, who as he hath not a more cruel Executioner then his own conscience, so not a more sensible displeasure, then to know that he is mortal, and yet to be ignorant when his Tyranny must end. The number of the years of his Tyranny is uncertain, saith the Vulgar translation. And from this uncertainty which he knoweth not how to remedy (though he run to light a candle at the devil sometimes, viz. by consulting with Soothsayers and Sorcerers to know of them how long he shall live, and who shall succeed him, as Tiberius and other Tyrants did) followeth suspicion and fear, saith Aquinas upon this Text.

Verse

Verse 21. A dreadful sound is in his ears] Heb. A sound of fear and terrors; Not one but many at once, so that he is a Magor-missabib, factus à corde suo fugitivus, as Cain that Caitiff, and those Hivites with their hornets of a clamorous conscience, worse to them then if their bodies had been tormented with stings, or torn with stripes. What a sound of terrour in their ears frighted those Syrians, 2 Kings 7.6? And those Persians and Saracens overcome by Theodosius? Panico terrore incussi, saith the Historian, afraid of their own shadowes, they desperately cast themselves into the River Euphrates, and there perished above an hundred thousand of them, Anno Dom. 394. The wicked flyeth when none pursueth, Prov. 28.1. The sound of a shaken leaf chaseth him, Lev. 26.36. when the righteous is bold as a Lion, and not dismayed at evil tidings, Psal. 112.7. His heart is balanced with the fear of God; and thence it is that he floateth steddily, blow what wind it will, he sailes to the Port; stormes and tempests do but beat him into it. Tertul. Exod. 23.28 Fusic.

In prosperity the destroyer shall come upon him.] Heb. In peace, when he shal say, Peace and safety, 1 Thes. 5.3 When he is at the highest he shall be destroyed, Dan. 4.30,31. In the fulnesse of his sufficiency he shall be in straits, Job 20.22. this short Spring shall have an eternal Winter, Psal. 92.7. Ultimus sanitatis gradus est morbo proximus, say Physicians, the utmost degree of health is nearest to sickness; so the wicked when neareſt misery, have greatest prosperity.

Verse 22. He believeth not that he shall return out of darkness] He despondeth and despaireth of a better condition, sighing out that doalful ditty, Spes & fortuna valete, he looks for no further light and delight of former comforts, he knowes that they that go down into the dark pit, cannot hope for Gods truth, Isai. 38.18. There being left them neither hope of better, nor place of worse. Desperat qui summus est diffidentiæ gradus. Jun.

And he is waited for of the sword.] Or, looked upon by the sword, which waiteth, as it were, an opportunity to slay him. Circumspectans undique gladium, so the Vulgar, He looketh this way and that way as fearing the Murderer, his guilt representing to him on all sides nothing but naked swords, he believeth that they will assassine him in his bed. This was the case of Saul, who suspected his best servants: of Dionysius the Tyrant, who durst not trust his own daughter with his throat: Of Alexander Pheræus, who would not go to bed to his wife Thebe whom he loved, till he had first searched the room and her pocket for edge-tools. Of Richard the third, who after the death of his two innocent Nephewes, had fearful dreames and apprehensions, insomuch that he did often leap out of his bed in the dark, and catching his sword (which alway naked stuck by his side) he did go distractedly about the Chamber, every where seeking to find out the cause of his own occasioned disquiet, saith the Chronologer. Tiberius felt the remorse of conscience so violent, that he protested to the Senate, that he suffered death daily through fear of death; whereupon the Historian maketh this profitable Observation, Tandem scelera & flagitia in supplicium vertuntur; Heinous sins will at length have heavy punishments. Tul. Offic. lib. 2. Dan. Hist. 249. Tacit.

Verse 23. He wandreth abroad for bread, saying, Where is it?] He is hard put to it for necessaries, and would be glad of a piece of bread, as 1 Sam. 2.36. This was the case of Pythius, once so rich, that he entertained a million of men (even Xerxes his whole huge Host) for three dayes space, at his own proper charge, but afterwards so poor, that he dyed through hunger. And the like befell Gillimer, King of Vandales, of whom it is storied, that being overcome and beleagured by Belisarius, he sent to him for a Sponge to dry his tears, a Cittern to ease his grief, and a piece of bread to save his life. Belisarius himself was afterwards glad to beg his bread. And Henry the fourth, Emperour of Germany, after ten years Raign, was despoyled and driven to the like exigent, whereupon he is said to have made use of those words of Job, chap. 19.21. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me O ye my friends, for the hand of God hath touched me. And there is no doubt but Eliphaz glanceth at Job in all these expressions, as if he were the man whom he here describeth with much Eloquence, but small charity. Herodot.

He knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at his hand.] His conscience telleth him, that he is not yet at worst, he knowes in himself, say the Septuagint, that further evil shall be upon him, that his misery is inevitable, and at next door by; and this this knowledg, being ful of feare, is alſo full of torment: it is even hell afore hand, and above ground.

Verſe 24. Trouble and anguiſh ſhall make him afraid] Or, Scare him, not only out of his comforts, but out of his wits and ſenſes too, as it did Charles the great Cardinal of Lorrain. See Deut. 28.34. Tullus Hoſtilius the third King of Romans deriding the Religion of his Predeceſſour Numa, as that which did emaſculate mens minds, was afterwards ſo terrified, that he ſet up and worſhipped two new gods; viz. Pavorem & Pallorem, Trouble and anguiſh, which he had perpetually preſent with him, as Lactantius reporteth. What a pitiful agony Vitellius the Emperor was in, when Veſpaſians Army marched toward Rome, is notably ſet forth by Dio in his life. Not long after that, at the ſack of Jeruſalem, ſome Jewes killed themſelvs, leſt they ſhould fall into the hands of Veſpaſians ſouldiers.

Mentis inops moritur. Epiſt. Hiſt. Gal. Plut.

Ἐμπλέκτως ἄνω καὶ κάτω ἐρίφεσθε ὥσπερ ἐν κλύδωνι.

Hic rogo; non furor eſt, ne moriare, mori?

They ſhall prevail againſt him:] Or, begirt him as a King is inviron'd in peace, by his Guard, in War by his Army. Or, They ſhall deſtroy him, as a King ready to the battle doth his enemies forces, which he routeth and ruineth. Fear hath a deadly force upon feeble ſpirits; neither is it any wonder that they ring their bells backward, when things begin once to be on fire.

Verſe 25. For he ſtretcheth out his hand againſt God.] Worthy therefore to have a dead Palſie transfuſed into it, or dryed up, as Jeroboams was, when but ſtretched out againſt a Prophet: and as Valens the Emperors hand was made unable to hold a pen, when he would have ſubſcribed a Warrant for the baniſhing of Baſil. Such a Giant-like generation there are to this day among men, as face the heavens, caſt down the gantlet againſt God, Erecto collo valido impetu, arrogantiâ incurvi cervicis, ſaith Brentius upon the Text, with ſtiff necks, full force, and inſufferable inſolence, as it were on purpoſe to croſſe the Almighty, and to wreſtle a fall with him: they ſin with an high hand, Levit. 26.21. Numb. 15.30. and do as wickedly as they can, Jer. 3.5. yea, with both hands earneſtly, Mich 7.3. Perſecuting his people who are unto him as the apple of his eye, and reſiſting the Holy Ghoſt alwayes. Surely, he would even deſtroy God if he could, for he hateth him, Rom. 1.30. With an helliſh hatred (as the word there ſignifieth) ſuch as ſtriketh at Gods very eſſence, Pſal. 10.41. confer 1 Joh. 3.15.

Act. 7.51 Θεομυγεῖς.

And ſtrengtheneth himſelf againſt the Almighty] Sed vana ſine viribus ira. To his ſinewes of iron, he hath added browes of braſſe, Iſai. 48.4. To his natural croſneſſe, habitual hardneſſe and hardineſſe: ſo that now, like a ſtout Warrior, he bends all his ſtrength againſt the Almighty, but with no better ſucceſſe, then to be broken in pieces, Iſai. 8.9. with his iron Mace, Pſal. 2.9. Sennacherib for inſtance. See the Note above on chap. 9.4.

Verſe 26. He runneth upon him, even on his neck:] Vulgar, He runneth upon him (God) with an erected neck: ſuch is his audacioufneſſe and impudence, daring to do any heinous wickedneſſe, and not fearing to run againſt the ſtrongeſt part of Gods Armour, though able to grind him to powder. Sin hath wounded ſuch an impudency in his face, that he dare with a full forehead encounter God, even upon the points of his Juſtice and righteous Judgments, wherein he is the ableſt, to give us the ſhock, &c. Thus ſome ſenſe the Text. Others (of good note alſo,) refer the word runneth, to God, and render it thus, God runneth upon him, even upon the neck, &c. He breaking his ſhields, how many and how thick ſoever they be, drags him by the neck as a miſerable vanquiſhed wretch, and layes upon him exquiſite and high puniſhments, according to that chap. 31.3. Is not deſtruction to the wicked? and a ſtrange puniſhment to the workers of iniquity?

Hervæus.

Upon the thick boſſes of his buckler.] Wherewith the Belialiſt, this Champion for hell, thinks himſelf beſt armed and ſecured, againſt the dint of the divine diſpleaſure. Bucklers, beſides other boſſes for ornament, had one great boſſe in the middle, with a ſharp pike in it for uſe, to pierce and wound the Adverſary. Now God runs upon this alſo, and is no whit hindred thereby from puniſhing the refractories, theſe high attempters, theſe monſtrous men of condition, that ſo fiercely and ſo fearleſly lift up their hands againſt heaven, as if they would pull God out of his throne, and throw the houſe, yea, the world out at the window. Surely, as Pride reſiſteth God in a ſpecial manner, ſo doth God in a ſpecial manner reſiſt it, 1 Pet. 5. 5. The reaſon whereof is given by Boetius. All other vices (ſaith he) flye from God, only Pride flyes at him, ſtands out, and makes head againſt him.

lift

Verſe 27. Becauſe he covereth his face with his fatneſſe.] This is given in as one chief cauſe of his inſolency; he is a belly-god, he maketh plaits upon the panch, ſo Broughton rendreth it: He hath larded his guts, ſo Calvin: He maketh it his buſineſſe to pamper his body; his heart alſo is fat as greaſe. Pſal. 119. 70. He is waxen fat, that is proſperity-proud, and kicketh, Deut. 32. 15. Pride and fulneſſe of bread were Sodoms twin-ſins. Ezek. 16. 49. When people are Provender-prick'd, (as we call it) they eaſily turn the grace of God into luſcivionſneſſe. Jude 4. and that fulneſſe breeds forgetfulneſſe; as the fed Hawk ſoon forgets his Maſter, and the Moon at fulleſt gets furtheſt off the Sun. Senſualliſts who love feaſts, Judg. 14. 10. are void of the Spirit, Jude 19. A full belly maketh a fowle heart. The rankeſt weeds grow out of the farteſt ſoil: and thoſe that make their gut a gulph, well they may have collops in their flanks, but they have leanneſſe in their ſoules: indeed they have (as Swine) their ſoules for ſalt onely, to keep their bodies from putrefying.

Benè curavit cutem ſuam in hoc mundo. Vat.

And maketh collops of fat on his flanks.] Heb And maketh moulds, that is, wrinkles upon his ſlanks: He is active about it, and makes it his buſineſſe to make proviſion for the fleſh, Rom. 13. ult. He labours for the meat that periſheth, John 6. 27. He lives to eat, and laughs himſelf fat, till his heart now hardned by the deceitfulneſs of his ſin, becomes as inſenſible as Dionyſius the Heracleot, who felt not when men thruſt needles into his fat belly; or thoſe Beares in Plin., that could not be ſtirred with the ſharpeſt prickles.

Verſe 28. And he dwelleth in deſolate Cities] Such as had been before deſolated, but are now by him re-edified, to get him a name and renown amongſt men, and to make himſelf formidable, as thoſe do, who build themſelves ſtrong holds upon high Rocks, as if they would wage war againſt heaven. Peradventure (ſaith Deodate here) he meaneth thoſe Kings of violent Empires, who repaired or built great Cities after the Deluge, as Nimrod, Aſſur and others, Gen. 10. 8. Job 3. 14. Iſai. 23. 13. and raiſed themſelves upon other mens ruines. Eliphaz his ſcope is to ſhew, that a man that hath great power amongſt men, begins to think himſelf ſtrong enough for God alſo.

Ad minimi contemptum & hominum terrorem. Merlin.

And in houſes where no man inhabiteth] For he hath driven away the Inhabitants through his oppreſſions. This is that crying ſin of Depopulatours, who build themſelves deſolate places, Job 3. 14. And Encloſers, who betray Townes, as Rome did Carthage, with a diſtinction, We will ſave the City, but deſtroy the Town. This hath been noted as a great fault in our Nation, and therefore Gorapius thinks the Engliſh were called Angli, becauſe they were good Anglers, and had skill to lay diverſe baites when they fiſhed for others mens livings. But that's his miſtake (though perhaps wilful,) for we were ſo called from the old Angli who came in with the Saxons, and were ſubdued by the Normans, whoſe Duke, William the Conqueror, paid dear for his depopulations at New Forreſt, wherein ſix and thirty Pariſh Churches had been demoliſhed, and the Inhabitants removed, to make room for beaſts or dogs game. Diverſe of his ſons and Nephews came there to untimely ends, ſo dangerous it is for men to prove Abaddons or Deſtroyers.

Which are ready to become heapes.] Heaps of ſtones, the ſtrongeſt ſtructures in the world are ſubject to ruine. Make ſure of Heaven, which the Philoſopher fondly dreamt to be made of ſtone (arch-work) and would one day come to ruine. But whatever becometh of the viſible heavens, which ſhall be purged by the fire of the laſt day, upon the inviſible we may well write, as Hyppocrates telleth us it was engraven on the gates of a certain City, Intacta manet, it remaineth untouched: And as the Venetians boaſt of their City, that ſhe is ſtill a Virgin, becauſe from the firſt founding thereof (which is 1200 years ſince, or neer upon) it never came into the hands of a forraine enemy.

Verſe 29. He ſhall not be rich, neither ſhall his ſubſtance, &c.] If he be rich, it is for a miſchief, neither is it likely long to continue with him, for God will blow upon, and blaſt his ſubſtance, which is the ſort and ſtrength, *Iſai.*10.14. He reſolvs he will be rich, 1 *Tim.*6.9. and is ſet upon it: God to croſſe him, ſaith here, He ſhall not be rich, but I will make a poor fool of him, according to that. *Jer.*17.11. As the Partridge ſitteth on eggs and hatcheth them not; ſo he that getteth riches, and not by right, ſhall leave them in the midſt of his dayes, and at his end ſhall be a fool. There is a curſe upon unlawful practiſes, though men be induſtrious, as in Jehoiachim, Jer. 22. It is God that giveth power to get wealth, Deut. 8. 18. Our care can no more add a penny to our eſtate, then it can a cubit to our ſtature, Mat. 6.27.

He ſhall not prolong the perfection thereof.] Vulgar, He ſhall not ſend forth his root in the earth, A man ſhall not be eſtabliſhed by wickedneſſe (ſaith Solomon) but the root of the righteous ſhall continue, Prov.12.3. See the Note there.

Verſe 30. He ſhall not depart out of darkneſſe] But be held under remedileſſe miſery, being ever blaſted and benighted, till God at laſt breathe forth upon him his final diſpleaſure. When God hath brought wicked men into ſtraits, there he holdeth them; not ſo the godly, *Pſal.*34.19. they are ſure of deliverance in due ſeaſon. And as before the morning light is the thickeſt darkneſſe; ſo before help, hardeſt trials. Poſt tenebras lux, is the Chriſtians motto; not ſo the ungodly; they are ex tenebris in tenebras, infeliciter excluſi, infelicius excludendi, as Auſtin hath it, to paſſe out of one darkneſſe into another, till they be caſt into utter darkneſs. *Hom.*16.

The flame ſhall dry up his branches] That ventus urens & exiccans of Gods wrath ſhal blaſt and conſume, not his Off-ſpring only, but all his beauty and bravery: hee ſhall be as a tree that is thunder-ſtruck. *Zech.*11.16.

And by the breath of his mouth ſhall he go away] God will blow him to deſtruction his very breath ſhall leave him breathleſſe, *Iſai.*11.4. *Pſal.*18.15. Job 4.9. See the Note there. Others underſtand it of the wicked mans mouth, and make this to be the ſenſe, He ſhall be ſo cholerick and impatient in his trouble, that he ſhall ſend out his laſt breath ſuddenly in a paſſionate fit. So did Nerva the Emperor, likewiſe Valentinian, Wenceſlaus King of Bohemia, and our Henry the ſecond.

Verſe 31. Let not him that is deceived, truſt in vanity.] Let it ſuffice him that he hath been once already deceived by the uncertainty of riches, which were never true to thoſe which truſted them, nor never will be, 1 *Tim.*6.17. As Charondas was wont to ſay of going to ſea, (and another of going to Law) That he wondred not at thoſe that go once, but at thoſe who go a ſecond time. So may we at thoſe that having found the deceitfulneſſe of ſin, and the inſtability of Creature-comforts, that they ſhould again be drawn in and deceived. This folly Eliphaz here forewarneth Job of, and would not have him twice ſtumble at the ſame ſtone, but deliver his ſoul, (if ever God ſhould reſtore him again) and ſay, Is there not a lye in my right hand? Why feed I upon aſhes? &c. Iſa.44.20.

For vanity ſhall be his recompence.] i.e. Poverty and miſery ſhall be his portion, as ſhame ſhall be the portion of fools, Prov.3.35. As he hath ſowed the wind, ſo he ſhall reap the whirlewind, whereof he is likely to have a great catch, Hoſ. 8.7. See the Note there.

Verſe 32. It ſhall be accompliſhed before his time.] Heb. in not his day. That recompence foremensioned of calamity and death ſhall be haſtened, ſo that they ſhall not live out half their dayes, *Pſal.*55.22. but dye tempore non ſuo, Eccleſ.7.15. then when it were better for them to do any thing rather then to dye, ſith they periſh in their corruptions, they are killed with death, *Rev.*12.33. See *Prov.*10.37. Death ever taketh a wicked man unprovided, Hæc enim vena nobis ab Adam aguata eſt, ut nullam nobis ad ſuſpendium aptam invenire poſſimus: neque quemquam cura mortem effugit, niſi pœna judicis. We naturally dream of an immortality here, neither yeild we to dye till there be a neceſſity. Abſtrahendum eſt animus, ſaith one: but it is a pitiful thing, that being all ſo deſirous of life, we ſhould ſo little care for thoſe things that would lengthen our lives (ſuch as are piety, juſtice, temperance, &c) we forget that ſhort way to long life, *Pſal.*34.12. Brent.in loc. Lavat.in loc.

His branch ſhall not be green] Heb. His crooked or bowed down branch; this is his full eſtate or numerous iſſue, thoſe boughs of his, laden and bowed down with fruit, ſhall not be green, but blaſted and dryed up: ramuſculus ejus non vireſcet. It is a miſery to be the branch of a wicked ſtock, for ſuch, as they leave the reſt of their ſubſtance to their little ones, Pſal. 17. 14. So they leave them Gods curſe, as Joabs Legacy, 2 Sam. 3. 29. or as Gehazies Leproſie, 2 King. 5. 27. a wretched bequeath.

ſtance

Verſ. 33. He ſhall ſhake off his unripe grapes as the vine] Filios intelligit per botra, & pueros per florem, ſaith Vatablus: i.e. By unripe grapes he meaneth the wicked mans ſons growne up; and by flowers of the Olive, his little ones; and ſo it is the ſame with the former, only flouriſhed over with two ſimilitudes. He (that is God) will ſnap off his ſowre grapes as the vines: ſo Broughton rendreth it. Luctuoſa fœcunditas (ſuch as was that of Læta in Hierome, who buried many children) is a ſore affliction. If the bud or flower decay, what hope can there be of fruit? Others underſtand it of the untimely death, as before, or of the decay of his wealth and poſſeſſions. Epiſt. 7.

Verſe 34. For the congregation of hypocrites ſhall be deſolate] Heb. Of the hypocrite; where he ſeemeth to point at Job, as by the unripe grapes, and blaſted flowers of the Olive, he had underſtood Jobs children and poſſeſſions, verſ. 33. Now the whole congregation or train and retinue of the hypocrite, God will waſte and ruinate, ſaith Eliphaz: they ſhall all be as one deſolated, ſo the Original hath it.

And fire ſhall conſume the Tabernacles of bribery] Heb. The Tabernacles of a bribe. Under theſe two heads, ſaith one, we may reduce all ſorts of ſinners; ſinners againſt God under the notion of Hypocrites; and ſinners againſt men under the notion of Bribe-takers; δωροδόκοι, ſay the Septuagint; that is, Receivers of Gifts: and the Hebrew word ſignifieth, a Gift in general: it is taken alſo for a bribe, becauſe very many gifts are bribes. Now houſes built by bribes or very many gifts, ſhall be conſumed and come to nothing, Jer. 22. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. Hab. 2. 9, 10, 11, 12. See the Note there. This Eliphaz caſteth in Jobs teeth, but herein he dealt with him as injuriouſly as Bonner did with Philpot the Martyr, when he ſaid to him, Alſo I lay to thy charge, that thou killedſt thy father, and waſt accurſed of thy mother on her death-bed, &c. Munera ſunt honoraria vel corruptoria. Lavat. in loc. Act. & Mon: fol. 1650.

Verſe 35. They conceive miſchief, and bring forth vanity] Here Eliphaz for a cloſe, by an elegant and uſual Metaphor taken from childbearing, ſheweth that all ſuch as conceive with guile or wrong to others, by that time they have reckoned their months aright, though they grow never ſo big, ſhall bring forth nothing but wind and vanity. Like as a woman that thinks ſhe hath conceived and is deceived, pleaſeth her ſelf with the thoughts of a child, but brings forth nothing but wind, water, or ſome dead maſs. Brentius exemplifieth this by the Papiſts, devising tot modos & formas confitendi & miſſandi, ſo many wayes and formes of Confeſſing and Maſſing. Poor ſouls when ſtung by the Fryers Sermons, or otherwayes troubled in mind, run to thoſe practices for help, but all in vain: for though ſtilled for a while, yet conſcience recoileth upon them, and making them miſerable, leaveth them deſperate, as Popery is a Doctrine of deſperation. Mean while, till they are confuted by the event, wicked men pleaſe themſelves not a little in their ſinful conceptions, they have a kind of a ſenſus veneris (which Scaliger will have to be the ſixth ſenſe, beſides thoſe five commonly counted of) a ſenſual delight in their ſinful projects. As one ſpeaking of the Councel of Trent, ſaith, That it was carried on by the Pope with ſuch infinite guile and craft, as that themſelves will even ſmile in the tryumphs of their own wits, (when they hear it but mentioned) as at a maſter ſtratagem. Theſe Heathens (ſo they are called, Rev. 11. 2.) conſider not, that whiles they thus tumultuate, they do but imagine a vain thing Pſal. 2. 1. and that the childs name is Vanity, as here. In male agendo voluptatem quæſierunt. Merlin. Spec. Europ.

And their belly prepareth deceit] Not their head, but their belly prepareth (ſeverely and ſtrongly prepareth, ſo the word ſignifieth) deceit, ſelf-deceit (ſo ſome ſenſe it) or rather to deceive and undo others whom they cannot over-come by might, to overcome by ſleight. And in theſe guileful projects they delight and take a contemplative kind of pleaſure, as the voluptuous perſon doth in his luſt, Pſal. 52. 1, 2.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVI.

Verſe 1. Then Job anſwered and ſaid.]

ALthough he had little or nothing to anſwer unto but what he had anſwered before, yet that he might not ſay nothing, he replyeth to Eliphaz his painted ſpeech, and giveth him to know, That Prudentibus viris non placent phalerata ſed fortia (as B. Jewel was wont to ſay) that is, that wiſe men look for matter, and not for words only, from thoſe that accoaſt them.

Verſe 2. I have heard many ſuch things.] Heard them over and over, till I am even ſated and nauſeated, Vexatus toties rauci; q. d. Your ſayings are ſuperfluous, your proofs inſufficient, you produce nothing new, nothing but what is trivial, and of very common obſervation; Hæc ſex centies audivi; Mine eares are grated and grieved with theſe unneceſſary repetitions, only re-inforced with greater bitterneſſe, which as it addeth nothing at all to the weight of your words, ſo it cauſeth me to add this,

Miſerable Comforters are ye all.] Heb. Comforters of miſery, or of moleſtation, onerous and burdenſome (ſo the Vulgar rendreth it) and in that ſenſe, weighty if you will, laying more load upon me who was before in a ſinking condition. You charge me for ſleighting the conſolations of God, and pretend to come purpoſely to comfort me; but ſuch cold comforters I have ſeldome met with; for inſtead of abating and allaying my ſorrowes, you do all you can to increaſe and heighten them. Is this your kindneſſe to your friend? Calvin noteth upon this Text, That ſome Comforters have but one Song to ſing, and they have no regard to whom they ſing it. But Saint Jude's rule is, Of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference, others ſave with fear, ver. 22, 23. which whiles Jobs friends obſerved not, they were juſtly ſtiled, Miſerable Comforters.

Ampullatur in arti.

Verſe 3. Shall vain words have an end?] Heb. Shall there be an end to words of wind? Bubbles of words, big ſwoln ſpeeches, full of pride, void of reaſon: when ſhall we once have an end of them? They that would comfort another indeed, muſt not multiply vain repetition (for theſe are very burdenſome to a ſerious ear, much more to a ſad heart), much leſſe bitter ſpeeches, leaſt of all taunts and buffooneries, as verſ. 4. For, like as if the eye be inflamed, the mildeſt Medicine troubleth it, ſo is it here: how much more when harſh and uncouth?

Or what emboldneth thee that thou anſwereſt?] That thou rejoyneſt, having been ſo fully anſwered before? Some men will never be ſaid or ſet down; ſuch is their pertinacy, they will not lay down the bucklers, though beaten to their heads. Sed præſtat barbam dare, quam turpiter pugnare: Better yeild, then ſtand out with diſhonour.

Verſe 4. I alſo could ſpeak as you do, &c.] Every whit as curiouſly and furiouſly. I could ſcold and ſcoff as freely as you do, but I know no warrant ſo to retort and retaliate. Being reviled we bleſſe, being defamed, we entreat, 1 Corinth. 4. 12, 13. To render railing for railing, is to think to waſh off dirt with dirt.

If your ſoul were in my ſoules ſtead] Some read it optatively, as Iſai. 64. 1. Would to God your ſoul were in my ſoules ſtead; for then I would heap up words againſt you, and act your part upon you: but Job was not ſo malicious or vindictive, as to think that tallying of injuries, is but juſtice. Hypocriſis nihil eſt crudelius, impatientius, & vindictæ cupidius, ſaith Luther. Hypocrites are cruel, ſpiteful, and revengeful: but Job was none ſuch. He therefore telleth his friends, that if they were in his condition, he would deal much more mildly with them.

Gen.

I could heap up words againſt you] I could, but would not. Poſſe & nolle, nobile eſt. Or thus, Would I heap up, &c. and handle you thus diſcourteouſly by ſpeeches and geſtures, as you do me? It were eaſie to wag a wicked tongue, and to ſhake my head at you in deſpite and mockery: but were this Religion? Doth not moral moral Philosophy say, If a wise man speak evil of thee, endure him: if a fool, pardon him? Vincit qui patitur, as David did Saul, overcoming evil with good, though when he marched against Nabal, how rough and rash was he in a resolution of revenge? 1 Sam. 25. 32.

Verse 5. But I would strengthen you with my mouth] I would speak to your hearts, and raise up your drooping spirits. True it is, that consolatiuncula creaturalia (as Luther calleth them) creature comforts are poor businesses: nevertheless God conveyeth comfort many times by one man to another, as the aire conveyeth light, or water heat. His comforts are either rational, fetch'd from grounds which faith ministreth; or real, from the presence of any thing that comforteth, as the sight and discourse of a friend. And herein, how forcible are right words? chap. 6. 25. They are of force, we see here, both to strengthen the feeble minded, and to abate the strength of their sorrowes, to asswage the most swelling floods thereof. And thus one man may be an Angel, nay, a God to another. Now whereas some might say, You that are so good at comforting others, and promise so fair, Why are you not comfortable? Job answereth, in the next verse, that this was their fault, who had unkindly kept him off from receiving any comfort.

Verse 6. Though I speak, my grief is not asswaged] Heb. If I speak, scil. to bewail my misery, or to maintain mine innocency; ye say 'tis good enough for me, and how can I be but wicked, who am so punished? As,

If I forbear, what am I eased?] Heb. What goeth from me? q. d. Ye conclude me guilty, because silent; as if I had nothing to say for my self. Some make the words to refer to God; as if Job had said, Whether I speak, or whether I forbear, God doth not come in to my help, I find no comfort from him, &c. and by the next verse it should seem that this is the right sense.

Verse 7. But now he hath made me weary] i. e. God, whom he acknowledgeth the Author of his afflictions; but he should better have born up under them, then to faint and fret even unto madnesse, as the Septuagint here translates. Job was now not only wet to the skin, but his soul came into urn, as Josephus once, Psal. 105. 18. Like Ezekiels book, chap. 2. he was written quite through with woes and lamentations. And he might say with Heman, Psal. 88. 15. While I suffer thy terrors I am distracted. The grief which he here describeth, Major erat, quàm ut verbis comprehendi, gravior quàm ut ferri, molestior quàm ut credi posset, saith Brentius; i. e. Was greater then could be uttered, heavier then could be born, more troublesome then can be believed. He therefore sets it out as well as he can, and amplifies it by figures and Hyperboles, to move God and his friends to pity him: and to shew that he complained not without cause.

Quis eum fatigavit? Dolor, vel Deus ipse? Lavat.

In locum.

Thou hast made desolate all my company] Heb. Thou hast wonderfully desolated or wasted all my company; that is, all my joints and members (so the Vulgar translateth it;) but they do better that understand it of Jobs family and familiar friends, who were either destroyed, or stood amazed at his so great affliction, and yeelded him little comfort. Ne te moveat turbet cuullatæ persona, saith Mercer here; the change of person need not trouble us: only the troubledness and uncevennesse of Jobs speech sheweth, that his spirit was troubled and unsettled. We meet with the like oft in the Psalms.

In nihilum redacti sunt omnes artus mei.

Verse 8. Thou hast filled me with wrinkles which is a witnesse against me] viz. that I am an afflicted man, but yet not a wicked man, such as Eliphaz had described by his pinguis aqualiculus, those collops in his flank, chap. 15. 27. Thou hast made me all wrinkled (so Broughton rendreth it) or, Thou hast wrinkled me. The Hebrew word is found in Job only: but in the Rabbins more frequently. Grief had made furrowes in Jobs face and his tears had often filled them.

Persius.

And my leannesse rising up in me] scil. By the continuance of my sores and sorrowes, which have made my body a very bag of bones, and cause me to cry out, My leannesse, my leannesse, wo unto me, Isa. 24. 16. My flesh, through my grievous anguish, being fallen from my bones, which rise up in a ghastly manner.

Beareth witnesse to my face] scil. That I am one of Gods Plagipatida, poor Afflicted: But what of that? Scourgeth he not every Son whom he receiveth? Heb. 12. 7. Others render it, In vultu faciei; where my leannesse sitteth, and is most conspicuous

ous: like as it is said of our Saviour, That with fasting and paines taking he had so wanzed and macerated himself, that at little past thirty, he was looked upon as one toward fifty, John 8.57. And as Mr. John Fox the Martyrologue, by his excessive paines in compiling the Acts and Monuments of the Church in the space of eleven years, grew thereby so lean and withered, that his friends hardly knew him to be the same man.

Mr. Clark in his life.

Verse 9. He teareth me in his wrath, &c.] Who did all this to Job? The devil say some; his Disease, say others: (that was a most uncharitable censure passed by Luther upon Oecolampadius, that he died suddenly ignitis Satanæ telis confossus, slain by Satans fiery darts, because he died of a Carbuncle.) But Job surely meaneth it of God, upon whom his heart was still, though he speak here somewhat unhappily of him, out of the sense of the flesh, and greatness of his grief.

Lib. de Missa. prin. Anno Dom. 1533.

Who hateth me] Heb. He Satanically hateth me. What strange language is this from him who elsewhere calleth God his Salvation, his Redeemer, chap. 13.15,16,18. and 19.25. and will by and by call him his witnesse in heaven, to whom his eye powreth out tears, vers. 19,20? How shall we reconcile these so contrary passions and passages, otherwise then by saying, that every good man is two men, &c? neither can it possibly be expressed how deeply sensible the Saints are of Gods displeasure, when they are more then ordinarily afflicted by him, and especially when he seemeth to fight against them with his own hand. Hereby (saith Ferus) we may easily see in what a perplexed estate wicked Reprobates shall be at the last day, when God shall declare himself to be such an enemy to them indeed; for so much as one of his Elect, and a most rare man, but conceiving him to be against him, because hee had no present sense of his favour, was thus extremely troubled.

He gnasheth upon me with his teeth.] as extremely angry, Act. 7.54. and by sharpning his teeth threatning destruction, Psal. 37.12.

Mine enemy sharpneth his eyes upon me] which cast forth as it were sparkles of fire. An elegant Hypotyposis, or description of his sad condition to the life, Ut non tam gesta res quam nunc geri videatur, saith Brentius, as if we saw it even acted before our faces.

Brent. in loc.

Verse 10. They have gaped upon me with their mouth.] They? who? Non solum Deus, nec solum amici mei, sed tota rerum machina mihi adversatur. Not God only, nor these friends of mine, but all the creatures are up in armes against me, and threaten to devour me at one morsel.

They have smitten me upon the cheek reproachfully] i.e. They have done me all the disgrace that may be. See Lam 9.30. 2 Cor. 11.20,21. Mic. 5.1. Act. 23.1,2 John 18.22. Our Saviour was so served according to the Letter; they gaped upon him, mowed at him, buffeted him on the face, gathered themselves together against him, as here. Hence some of the Ancients call Job a figure and Type of Christ, who was thus dealt with both literally and also figuratively.

They have gathered themselves together against me] Or, They have filled themselves upon me; as Exod. 15.7. They have taken their fill of pleasure at my miseries, as one rendreth it: Or, They come upon me by full troops; so Broughton. Men are apt to agree for mischief, Psa. 35.15. & 83.5,6,7.

Tigurin.

Verse 11. God hath delivered me to the ungodly] i.e. To the Devil, and his instruments, those Chaldean and Sabean Robbers, chap. 1.15,17. together with his hard-hearted friends, who for want of the true fear of God, added to his afflictions, chap. 6.14. See the Note there.

And turned me over, &c.] As a Magistrate doth a Malefactor to the Executioner. It is a sore affliction to be under the rule of wicked men: much more to be under the rage, which yet was the case of that noble Army of Martyrs, ancient and modern. The comfort is, that although the Lord turn his servants over into the hands of the wicked, whose tender mercies are meer cruelties, yet he never t[illegible]es them out of his own hand, neither will he suffer the rod of the wicked to rest upon the lot of the righteous. Psa. 125.3. His constant care is, that the choice spirits of his afflicted people fail not before him, and therefore he numbreth out their stroaks, and if their enemies over-do and go beyond their commission, so as to help forward the foreappointed affliction, he is sore displeased and jealous with a great jealousie against them, Zach. 1.15.

Verse

Verse 12. I was at ease, but he hath broken me asunder.] It is no small misery to have been happy. Fuimus Troes & fortis Mileſis. Euripides bringeth in Hecuba as ashamed to look Polymneſtor in the face, because of a Queen she was now a Captive; her former felicity was no small aggravation of her present misery: So was Jobs. Prosperam, sed disrupit me, saith he; I was wealthy, but he hath undone me; so Broughton rendreth it. The same Hebrew word signifieth both to be rich, and to be at ease; for such commonly sing Requiems to their souls, as he did Luke 12. 19, and say, I shall never be moved, Psal. 30. 6. I shall see no sorrow, Rev. 18. 7. But God can quickly confute them. Jobs worldly prosperity was quickly dasht and lost. He once hoped to have died in his nest, but God not only unnested him, but broke him to shivers, yea beat him to dust and atomes, as the word here signifies. Nay more,

He hath also taken me by the neck.] As a strong man doth his enemy, dashing him to the ground, and giving him his Pasport, as we say.

And hath shaken me to pieces.] Heb. He hath scattered and scattered me, as a stone crumbled to crattle, or a pitcher beaten to powder. Sunt illustres figura & elegantes hyperbola, saith Mercer. Here's brave Rhetorick.

And set me up for his mark.] Heb. For a mark to him; that I may feel all the arrowes of his judgments. See chap. 7. 20. with the Note there. God shot showrs of shafts at him, and seemed to take pleasure in so doing, as a man doth in his shooting at a mark.

Verse 13. His Archers compasse me round about.] i.e. His Instruments of my woe, whether persons or things, but especially my grievous sores putting me to intollerable paine: these are Gods Arrowes or Archers, and do make my poor body not unlike that shield of Sceva at the siege of Dyrrachium, which had two hundred and twenty darts sticking in it, when Cæsar came to his rescue. Densamque ferens in pectore sylvam. Lue.

He cleaveth my reines asunder.] As a skilful Archer, he hits the white, he cleaves the pin, as they call it, he shooteth exactly (to the very chining and dissecting of my back-bone) and so pierceth me to most exquisite pain and torment, Lam. 3. 13.

He poureth out my gall upon the ground.] My bowels, saith the Vulgar. The gall is affixed to the liver, and when that is poured out, the man cannot live, because his wound is mortal and incurable. Job held himself so, but it proved better: the Lord chastened him sore, but he gave him not over to death, Psal. 118. 18.

Verse 14. He breaketh me with breach upon breach.] So that I have hardly any breathing-while, Quis tot & tantis ferendis simul par fit? Let no man henceforth say, Never did any one suffer such hard and heavy things as I do. What! did not Job? This story of his is a Book-case to answer such an Objection, sith never any before, nor since his time was so handled, witnesse the lamentable moane he maketh here. And yet to shew his equanimity under the hand of God, Buxtorf and Amama have observed, that the Hebrew word, Perets, in this Text rendred, breach, hath a letter lesser then ordinary in the best Copies, to signifie, that Jobs great calamities seemed to him to be but little, because he hoped that God would turn them all to the best unto his soul. Non habet in nobis jam novæ plagæ locum. Buxtorf. Tiberias 167. Amama in Corand. Dissert.

He runneth upon me like a Giant.] With speed, strength and courage, fiercely and fearlesly. But now what doth Job? doth he stand stouting and sturdying at out with God? No, but in the next words he telleth us how he was affected with these afflictions; scil. that as Gods hand was heavy upon him, so he held out all the demonstrations and emblemes of an heavy heart; and as God had laid him low, so he carried his soul accordingly. God reined him with a rough bit, and he repented.

Verse 15. I have sowed sackcloth upon my skin.] Not Silks, but sackcloth is now mine immediate cloathing, next my very skin, which must needs be troublesome to a man so full of sores and other sorrowes. So far was poor ulcerous Job from that height and haughtinesse of spirit, wherewith Eliphaz had charged him, chap. 15. 12, 13, 25. as if Job had been low indeed, but not lowly; humbled, but not humble. Here was a real Apology, I have sowed sackcloth, &c. here was an ocular demonstration, and should have moved his friends to more moderation: for why ſhould any deale harſhly with him, who dealt ſo courſely with himſelf?

And defiled my horn in the duſt.] My horn, that is, my head ſay ſome. My ſplendour, ſaith the Chaldee, Omnia quondam magnifica, All that I formerly made any reckoning of, ſaith Brentius; who alſo hath this good Note upon the Text. The ſenſe of Gods wrath and judgements due for ſin, changeth all our gayety, maketh all our coſtly garments be laid aſide, putteth us into the habit of penitent Suppliants, cauſeth us to abhor our ſelves, and repent in duſt and aſhes, which were anciently the ſignes and ſymbols of true contrition. And now ſith Chriſtians ought to repent all their life long, and to grieve for their ſins, let them be alwayes cloathed with ſackcloth, not without, but within; and let them put duſt on their heads, by remembring that they are but duſt, and that they cannot be raiſed out of the duſt, and in ſtead of ſackcloth, be cloathed with the robes of glory, but by the mercy of God, through the merits of Chriſt, &c.

Verſe 16. My face is foule with weeping.] Is ſwelled, ſaith the Vulgar. Is ſhriveled up, ſay the Jew-Doctors: is double diſeaſed, ſo one rendreth it. So far was Job from ſtretching out his hand againſt God, and ſtrengthing himſelf againſt the Almighty, as Eliphaz had charged him, chap. 15.25. That he lay at Gods feet as a Suppliant with blubbered and beſlubbered cheeks; having furrowes in his face, and Icickles from his lips with continual weeping, yea, he had wept himſelf blind almoſt, for ſo it followeth;

And on mine eye lids is the ſhadow of death;] i.e. Mine eyes doe fail with teares, as Lam. 2 11. Lachrymarum copia acies oculorum obſtruente; they are even waſted away and ſunk into my head, as in a dying man. Much weeping ſpendeth the ſpirits, weakneth the viſive power, and ſometimes blindeth, as it did Fauſtus (the ſon of Vortiger King of this Iſland by his own daughter,) who is ſaid to have wept himſelf blind for the abominations of his parents. See Davids teares and the effects thereof, Pſa 6.7. and 38.10.

Mercer.

Verſe 17. Not for any injuſtice (Heb. violence or wrong doing) in my hands.] Job could waſh his hands of that rapine and bribery wherewith they had injuriouſly charged him, chap. 13.34. and ſafely lay off it, as afterwards Father Latimer did of Sedition; As for that ſin, for ought that I know, me thinks I ſhould not need Chriſt, if I might ſo ſay. Some failings there might be in him in doing juſtice, but no intendments of doing injuſtice.

3. Serm. before K. Edw.

Alſo my prayer is pure] As proceeding from an heart waſht from wickedneſſe, Jer. 4.14. and preſented with holy hands, lifted up without wrath or doubting, 1 Tim. 2.8. That he regarded not iniquity in his heart, he was well aſſured, Pſal. 66.17. Prayer is the powring out of the heart; if iniquity be harboured there, prayer will have the ſent and ſavour, and that incenſe will ſtrike off the hand which offereth it. God requireth, that in every place incenſe be offered unto his name, and a pure Offering, Mal. 1.11. It ſtandeth a man in hand to ſee that though his work be but mean, yet it be clean; though not fine, yet not foule, foiled and ſhubbered with the flur of a rotten heart. An upright man in afflictions is not without his cordial, as is to be ſeen in Job here, and 8 Pſal. 2 Cor. 1.12.

Verſe 18. O earth cover not thou my blood.] Job had made an high profeſſion of his innocency and integrity. This he further confirmeth, 1. By an imprecation againſt himſelf. 2. By an appeal to God, ver. 19. (In this imprecation or wiſh of his (which Mr. Broughton taketh to be meant by the foregoing words, Alſo my prayer is pure, rendred by him thus, But my wiſh is clean, Quare, Oh earth cover not, &c.) he hath an eye, no doubt to the hiſtory of Abels blood, ſhed by Cain, Gen. 4. and it is as if he ſhould ſay, If I have committed murder or any the like wickedneſſe, cover it not, O earth, but do thy office by crying out againſt me, yea, cry ſo loud to God for vengeance, as to drowne the voice of my ſupplication.

And let my cry have no place.] A moſt pathetical ſpeech, able to move the heart of his friends to relent to hear it, and ſtraightway to alter their opinion of him, while he thus beſpeaketh the earth, and maketh vel muta elementa, the dumb and lifeleſſe creatures his hearers.

Verſe 19. Alſo now behold my witneſſe is in heaven.] Here is his appeal to God.

So

ſo great is the confidence of a good conſcience. We alſo may do the like, if there be no other way left of clearing our innocency; provided that we do it with a cleare conſcience, and in a matter of conſequence; not in jeſt but in judgement. Some of the Martyrs appealed thus, and cited their Perſecutors to anſwer at Gods Tribunal. Yea, to help the truth in neceſſity, a private Oath betwixt two or more, may be lawfully taken, ſo it be done ſparingly and warily: for in ſerious affaires and matters of great importance, if it be lawful in private to admit God as a Judge, why ſhould he not as well be called to witneſſe? Again, the examples of holy men ſhew the practiſe of private Oathes as not unlawful, Jacob and Laban confirmed their covenant by a private Oath, ſo did Jonathan and David, &c.

Verſe 20. My friends ſcorn me] Or, Play the Rhetoricians againſt me. David likewiſe complaineth of his Rhetorical mockers at feaſts, that made as it were ſet ſpeeches againſt him. One rendreth it, My friends are Interpreters, or rather miſ-interpreters of my ſpeeches: For my love they are my adverſaries, but I give my ſelf unto prayer, Pſal. 109. 4.

But mine eye powreth out teares unto God.] Expletur lachrymis egeritur que dolor. The Hebrew hath it, Mine eye droppeth, or diſtilleth to God. Prayers and teares are the weapons of the Saints, whoſe eyes, glazed with teares, are fitly compared to the Fiſh-pools of Heſhbon. Cant. 7. 4. Theſe teares have a voice (Pſal. 39. 12. Hold not thy peace at my teares,) they are moſt powerful Oratours. Chriſt going to ſuffer on the Croſſe, could not but turn back and comfort thoſe weeping women. God will powre out comforts into their boſomes, who can poure out teares into his: they can never be at any loſſe, who find out God to weep to.

Verſe 21. Oh that one might plead for a man with God] Heb. And he wil plead for a man with God, and the Son of man for his friend; that is, (ſay our late learned Annotators, to whom we are greatly bound for this moſt ſweet and ſpiritual expoſition of the words) Chriſt who is God and man will plead my cauſe with his Father: He can prevaile, becauſe he is God equal to the Father; he will undertake it, becauſe he will be man like to me. This interpretation agreeth beſt with the coherence and the words following. And it ſeemeth that Job knew the myſtery of Chriſts Incarnation, chap. 19. 25, 26, 27. where he ſpeaketh of him, both as God, and as a viſible Redeemer. Chriſt is frequently called the Son of man in the New Teſtament, and believers are called his friends, John 15. 13, 14, 15. By this Text thus expounded, wee ſee that the Doctrine of a Mediatour betweene God and man was knowne and believed in the world, long before Chriſt came into the world. He is the Lamb of God ſlaine from the foundation of the world. Rev. 13. 8. and to the Jewes the Ceremonial Law was in ſtead of a Goſpel.

Verſe 22. When a few years are come, &c.] Heb. years of number; that is, years that may eaſily be counted and caſt up. The years of the longeſt liver are but few, they may be quickly numbred. This ran much in Jobs mind, and made him very deſirous to be cleared before he dyed, that he might not go out of the world in a ſnuff.

Then ſhall I go the way.] That way of all fleſh, 1 Kin. 2. 2. which Job feareth not to do, as knowing whom he had truſted, and that death ſhould be unto him the day-break of eternall brightneſſe.

Whence I ſhall not return. See chap. 7. 9, 10. and 10. 21. with the Notes.

CHAP. XVII.

Verſe 1. My breath is corrupt.]

WHich argueth that my inwards are Impoſthumated, and rotten, ſo that I cannot in likelihood have long to live; Oh therefore that I might have a day of hearing and clearing before I dye. But Job ſhould have remembered, that there will be at the laſt day a reſurrection of names, as well as of bodies; which he that believeth maketh not haſte. Howſoever it was not amiſſe for Job ſo grievouſly diſeaſed, and now well in years, to bethink himſelf of death, and to diſcourſe of theſe three particulars, that ſpeak him a dying man. In the old, the Palm tree is full of bloomes, the map of age is figured on his forehead, the Calendars of death appear in the furrowes of his face, the mourners are ready to go about the ſtreets, and he is going to his long home, according to that elegant deſcription, Eccleſ. 12. He ſhould therefore ſay with Varro, Annus octogeſimus me admonet, ut farcinas colligam, &c. It is high time for me to pack up, and to be gone out of this life: Or rather, as Simeon, Lord, now let thou thy ſervant depart in peace, &c.

Varro de re ruſt. l. 1. c. 1.

My dayes are extinct] As a candle, Prov. 13.9. Or, Cut off (as a web) ſo ſome read it. The Original word is found only here.

The graves are ready for me.] Heb. The graves for me; q.d. I bid adieu to all things elſe, and as the grave gapes for me, ſo do I gape for the grave, Ἐιθε μοι τάφος ἑτοῖμος. I would it were even ſo, as Baſil ſaid, when Valens the Arian Emperor threatned him with death. But why doth Job ſpeak of graves in the plural? Surely, to ſhew that he was beſieged with many deaths: or elſe, becauſe the dead are buried (as it were) firſt in their grave-cloathes, and then in the coffin, and then in the Bier or Hearſe, and laſtly in the Sepulcher, which every place did, as it were, proffer to Job, and threaten him with death, in regard of his many paines and preſſures, by the ſcoffs and taunts of his friends. For, Verſe 2. Are there not mockers with me?] Heb. If there be not mockers with me, q.d. deſperatum. Let me be puniſhed, or let me be blamed for wiſhing to argue it out with God: ſo ſome Jew-Doctors ſenſe it. Job had before complained of his friends jeering and girding at him, chap. 16.20. To be mocked in miſery is no ſmall aggravation thereof. See what is threathed, Prov. 1.26. The Proverb is, Oculus, fides, & fama non patiuntur jocos. There's no jeſting with a mans eye, faith, and fame. Junius rendreth the Text thus, For as much as there are no mockings with me, I meane honeſtly, and deal plainly, and yet mine eye continueth in their provocations, neither can I be ſet right in their opinions, ſo prejudiced they are againſt me.

And doth not mine eye continue in their provocations?] Heb. Lodg, or ſtay all night in their provocations, or bitternesſe? Brought to a deadneſs, In the following of my ſuit, and diligence. And indeed (ſaith he) a man may ſleep better upon bare boards, then upon hard words. Some refer it to the eye of his mind lifted up to God in prayer: but yet no ſweetneſſe coming from him either internally or externally. The former is rather to be followed.

Verſe 3. Lay down now, put me in a ſurety with thee] This Job ſpeaketh not to Eliphaz, (as R. Moſes, Beza, and ſome others would have it) but to God himſelf, as chap. 16.7. whom he deſireth to lay down or appoint (as Exod. 1.11.) and put in Chriſt as a Surety to plead for him. See Heb. 7.22. and ſo Brentius expoundeth it; There is one only ſurety (ſaith he) one only Interceſſor, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who if he appear not in the eyes of our faith, we have none elſe that can undertake for us to God; neither is there any creature which can ſtand in the judgement of God, though he would never ſo fain be Surety for us: Thus he. And accordingly our late learned Annotatours reading the words thus: Appoint I pray thee my Surety with thee, who is he then that will ſtrike upon my hand? that is, Appoint Chriſt, who is with thee in heaven, and hath undertaken to be my Surety: appoint him (I ſay) to plead my cauſe and to ſtand up for me, and then no man will dare to contend with me. And ſo it is futable to the Notes on *chap.*16.21. and to Rom. 8.33. The Vulgar Latine, (not altogether from the purpoſe, ſaith Brentius,) tranſlates the whole verſe thus, Put me near thy ſelf, and then let whoſe will contend with me.

is

Verſe 4. Thou haſt hid their heart from underſtanding.] that is, Thou haſt hidden underſtanding from their heart, thou haſt left them in the dark, deſtitute of a right judgement, whilſt they condemn me for wicked, becauſe grievouſly afflicted; and thence it is that I do ſo confidently appeal to thee in Jeſus Chriſt, ſith my friends are ſo far miſtaken in this controverſie. If God give not both light and ſight, if he vouchſafe not to irradiate both Organ and Object, the beſt will be bemiſted. Every good gift and perfect cometh from above, even from the Father of lights, Jam.1.17. It was he that made Reverend Doctor Sibbs (as one ſaith of him) Spiritually rational, and rationally Spiritual; One that ſeemed to ſee the inſides of Nature and Grace, and the world and heaven, by thoſe perfect Anatomies he had made of them all.

Therefore ſhalt thou not exalt them] Therefore thou ſhalt not give them honour: ſo Broughton rendreth it. But that's not all, Liptotes eſt, ſaith Mercer; it is a figure, wherein leſſe is ſaid, and more is meant: Thou ſhalt not only not exalt them, but thou ſhalt alſo abaſe and humble them: this conteſtation ſhall be nothing at all to their commendation in the end. It is the ſound knowledg of the truth according to godlineſſe, that exalteth a man, and makes him to be accounted of; and the contrary, Howbeit many great and good men have been greatly miſtaken in very great controverſies and tranſactions, as was Luther, Doctor Reſolutus, ſed non in omnibus Illuminatus. And yet how many Learned able men hath his name miſled in the point of Conſubſtantiation? Urſin was carried away with it a while, till he read his Arguments which he found to be little better then Paralogiſmes. Holy Greenham, when preſſed to conformity to the Ceremonies by the Biſhop of Ely, who urged Luthers approbation of them, and are you wiſer then Luther? His ſober and gracious anſwer was, I reverence more the revealed will of God in teaching Luther ſo many neceſſary things to ſalvation, then I ſearch into his ſecret will, why he hid his heart from underſtanding in things leſs neceſſary.

Verſe 5. He that ſpeaketh flattery to his friends.] As you my friends do to, and for God, in ſeeming to aſſert his juſtice in puniſhing me for my wickedneſſe, ſo ſoothing and ſmoothing up the Almighty (quod ipſum nihil aliud eſt quam falſo Deo blandiri, ſaith Merlin) and ſeeking to make the world believe by your great words, that you are his great Champions, whilſt you go about to cleare up his righteouſneſſe, by concluding me unrighteous. See *chap.*13.7,8. with the Notes.

The eyes of his children ſhall fail.] Not himſelf only ſhall ſmart (while the Lord cutteth off flattering lips, and the deceitful tongue, *Pſal.*12.3.) but his poor children ſhall rue for it. They ſhall lye languiſhing at Hopes Hoſpital, and after all be diſappointed, or their eyes ſhall fail with long looking after good, but nothing comes. They ſhall look for peace, and there is no good; and for a time of healing, but behold trouble, Jer.14.19. God will deſtroy flatterers, head and tail, branch and ruſh, like as the Theſſalians, once utterly deſtroyed the City called, Κολακεια, or Flattery. Hen. Steph. Apol. pro Herod.

Verſe 6. He hath made me alſo a by-word of the people.] Here Job returnes to his old task of ſetting forth his own miſery, for what men are moſt ſenſible of, that their tongues do moſt of all run upon. Job is a by-word or a Proverb to this day, for we ſay, As poor as Job; as of old they ſaid, Iro pauperior, &c. He was become a common proverb, a publick mocking-ſtock, yea he was pro cantione ad tympanum ſtrica; as ſome ſenſe the next words. And aforetime (or, to mine faces) I was (or I am) a Tabret: They ſing my miſeries to the Tabret, as a matter of mirth; they compoſe Comedies out of my Tragedies, and this greatneth my grief. I am openly a Tabret: ſo Broughton reads it. The Vulgar hath it, I am an example before them. The Chaldee Paraphraſt, I am as hell before them. The Hebrew word is Tophet, taken afterwards indeed for hell, but not ſo in Jobs time. The Septuagint, I became a ſport

γέλωις. a ſport to them; David met with the like meaſure, *Pſal.*69.10,11. and the Church, *Lam.*2.15. And Chriſt on the Croſſe was matter of mirth to the malicious Jewes. God had made Job all this. He (that is, God) hath made me, &c. his name he ſpares in reverence: but every where he acknowledgeth God the Author of his troubles, as Mercer here noteth. The whole verſe may be read thus: He hath made me alſo a by-word of the people, whereas aforetime, I was as a Tabret; that is, I am now a ſcorn to them who delighted in me in my proſperity.

Verſe 7. Mine eye alſo is dim by reaſon of ſorrow] Not only is my good name blaſted, but my body alſo is waſted: the nerves of mine eyes are contracted, the viſive faculty decayed, *Pſal.*6.7. Mine eye is conſumed becauſe of grief, yea my ſoul and my belly, *Pſal.*31.10. Not the viſive only, but the vital powers are waſted (ſee *chap.*16.16.) yea the intellective part, as well as the ſenſitive, underſtood by the formations in the next clauſe, that is, the cogitations, ſay they according to *Gen.*6. 5. But I rather take it according to our Tranſlation, for the members of the body.

R. Levi. Pagnin Vatab.

And all my members are as a ſhadow] My membra are but umbra, they look more like a Skeleton, an Anatomy, an Apparition, then a true body, nothing being left but skin and bone, ſo much meager'd are all my members. This is hyperbolica majorum ſuorum amplificatio, ſaith Merlin.

Verſe 8. Upright men ſhall be aſtonied at this] They ſhall ſilently admire and adore the fathomleſſe depth of the divine adminiſtration, when they ſee a man ſo upright to ſuffer ſuch heavy preſſures: yet ſhall they not cenſure me as you do, not condemn me for complaining, ſith there is a cauſe. They cannot indeed ſee far into Gods ſecret intentions, they do therefore mirari rather then rimari, like as the old Romanes dedicated unto Vilbory a certain Lake, the depth whereof they could not fathom.

And the innocent ſhall ſtir up himſelf againſt the hypocrite] He ſhall learn of me, not to be baffled out of his ſincerity, to be mocked out of his integrity, but to maintain and take comfort therein againſt all his falſe Accuſers. Oppoſition doth not weaken, but waken Heroick Spirits, 2 *Sam.*6.21,22. They proceed ſo much the more vigorouſly in the wayes of Holineſs, like as Lime burns the more for the cold water caſt upon it, and as the Palm-tree, which although it have many weights at the top, and many ſnakes at the bottome, yet it ſtirreth up it ſelfe, and flouriſheth, taking for its Poſie, Nec premor, nec perimor. Nothing hurteth or hindreth me.

Verſe 9. The righteous alſo ſhall hold on his way] Stumble he may for a time at his owne calamity, and worſe mens felicity, but as he that ſtumbleth, and yet falleth not, gets ground, ſo fareth it with the righteous in this caſe. Once David ſaid, Verily I have cleanſed my heart in vaine, and waſhed my hands in innocency: For all the day long have I been plagued, when bad men have been proſpered. Hence he began to repent of his repentance, and to miſcenſure the generation of Gods children as thrice miſerable, *Pſal.*73.13,14,15. but after a while, and upon better conſideration, he ſaid, This is mine infirmity; yea, he befooled and bebeaſted himſelf, *ver.*22. for ſo ſaying. And the like will all thoſe at length do, that belong to God, though for the preſent offended at Gods proceedings, and by their paſſions miſcarried to their coſt, yet they return to their right minds: forwards they may fall ſometimes, but not backwards, for that were far more dangerous. Lord, to whom ſhould we go, ſaith Peter? ſith thou alone haſt the words of eternal life, John 6.68. Neither know we where to mend our ſelves, by gadding about to change our way, *Jer.*2.36. The righteous ſhall hold on his way, meridiùs tenebit, he ſhall hold it roughly, hold it as with tooth and nail, not going aſide a nailes bredth; ἐπέξεται, he ſhall ſticke to it, as the Greek hath it.

And he that hath clean hands] Upright, Innocent, Righteous, cleane handed, theſe all are the good mans adjuncts and Titles of honour, far beyond thoſe of the worlds greateſt Magnifico.

Shall wax ſtronger and ſtronger] Heb. Shall add ſtrength. Not only ſhall he hold his own, but get more grace; not only perſevere, but proceed and make progreſſe. He ſhall take boldneſſe, ſay the Septuagint, and (by an holy Antiperiſtaſis) get get heart of grace, as they call it, from the evil attempts of others against him; the more outragious they, the more couragious he; like as by Saint Paul, bonds many waxed confident, Phil. 1.14. and as the Primitive Christians, the more they were killed up, the more numerous they became. True zeal is of a most masculine, and couragious nature: it is inkindled, by quench-coales, quickened by rubs and remoras. Barne repaired earnestly, bursting out into heat, Nehem. 3.20. Shall such a man as I flye? said that heavenly Spark, chap. 6.11. Shall I change my opinion, because hoc Ithacus velit? Remit of my diligence, because of a frown or a frump? because such a Persecutour threatneth me? Oh that I might enjoy those wild beasts prepared for my death, said Ignatius! Oh that I might have the maidenhead of that kind of suffering for Christ, said that Martyr to Bonner, threatning to whip him, &c. Plures efficimur quoties metimur. Tertul.

Sumet audaciam.

Verse 10. But as for you all, do ye return, &c.] Change your minds, as Mal. 3. 18. and close with me, lay aside your prejudicate opinions, deliver up your selves to my discipline, who am ready to teach you things both weighty and necessary, Siquis cultura patientem accommodet aurem.

For I cannot find one wise man amongst you.] Nihil hic ex odio dicit, saith an Interpreter. This Job speaketh not out of hatred to their persons, but freely uttereth that which he was perswaded to be the truth, and wisheth them a better understanding of the thing controverted betwixt himself and them at this time. Now it is no fault to speak of men as we find them. See 1 Cor. 6.5. I speak to your shame, is it so that there is not a wise man among you? and yet chap. 10.15. I speak as to wise men, judge you what I say.

Οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων αὐτὸς ἅπαντα σοφός. Theog.

Verse 11. My dayes are past] q. d. Its past time of day for me to hope for a returne of a prosperous condition, sith I am irrecoverably diseased, and cannot be long of life.

My purposes are broken off.] Or, My thoughts are plucke up by the roots, even the possessions of mine heart, that is, those thoughts that should wholly possesse me, and take me up entirely, seizing upon my spirit; q. d. I am not now in case to think settledly and seriously of any good, my sorrowes are so many, and my fores so grievous. The Chaldee hath it, The Tables of my heart are broken. How foolish then are they who put off their repentance till they are cast upon their sick-beds, when they may soon find enough to do to attend the paine and infirmity of their bodies? To suffer and be sick, (saith One) is work enough for any man at one time: he had not need to have his greatest work to do, when he hath such work to do.

Verse 12. They change the night into day.] i.e. My troubled thoughts render my nights restless, filling me with confusion, when the mind is unsettled the man cannot rest.

The light is short because of darkness] i.e. Comfort is long ere it cometh, and soon it expireth: Rara hora, brevis mora. The Vulgar, Post tenebras spero lucem, here, After darkness I hope for light (the ancient Motto of the Town of Geneva) is far fetch'd. Beri.

Verse 13. If I wait, the grave is mine house.] In that congregation house of all living, (as it is called chap. 30.23) both I and my hopes must be suddenly lodged. Some render it thus, If I build, the grave is my house. Solomon calleth it, The house of eternity, Eccles. 12.5. And the Egyptians accordingly call graves, everlasting houses, as Manetho saith Lib. 1.

I have made my bed in darkness] The grave was Jobs house, and therein he had made his bed to rest from his labours. There men follow their works no more, because followed by their works, Rev. 14.14.

Verse 14. I have said to corruption, Thou art my father] See how he bespeaks corruption and the wormes, Ac si jam juris illorum, & Domesticus esset as if he were of family with them, and neareſt of kin to them, so doth he court them, as it were, that they might be willing to receive him: shewing withal how willing himself was to dye, for whether do men in a strange Country, and in misery, desire rather rather to go, then to the house of their parents? Here also Job declareth what will be the end of all men, and what shall be their kindred in the grave. Of corruption we came (for what else is the seed and blood of generation?) to corruption also we go, as sons thereof; and Pulvu & Putredo we salute for sisters, that shall be most tender of us, and attendant upon us. Why then should any boast of high kindred? To the pit I cry, O father. O sister; O mother to the worm, so Broughton rendreth it. Why should any boast of bodily beauty, since corruption will shortly seize upon the fairest face, which is now but putrefaction and wormes, once removed, and to the same must suddenly move back again. Mihi experto credite, saith Austin, Believe me who have made trial of it? Open a grave, and upon the dead mans head you shall find toads leaping begotten of his braines, upon his loynes Serpents crawling, begotten of his raines; in his belly wormes abounding, arising out of his entrailes. Behold what now we are, and what we shortly shall be; Behold the Original and filthiness of sin, &c.

Serm. 48. ad frat. in erem.

Verse 15. And where is now my hope, &c?] Heb. And where is my hope? scil. of restauration to my pristine prosperity, which you have so often promised me, who am now ready set upon the confines of death? Job was past the Cape of good hope, in his own apprehension; but God turned again his captivity, chap. 42. Qui nil sperare potest desperet nihil. Job did well to propound death to himself, and prepare for it by such a forementioned familiarity: but yet he should have better bethought him of the infinite power and goodnesse of God, who raiseth the dead, and delighteth to help such as are forsaken of their hopes. Who delivered us from so great a death, and doth deliver: in whom we trust, that he will yet deliver, 2 Cor 1.10. The Hebrew word that signifieth hope, signifieth also a line, because by hope the heart should be stretcht out as a line to the thing it hopeth for; And because it signifieth also a Congregation, therefore some render this verse thus, And where now is my congregation? And as for my congregation, who shall see it? q. d. I have no other family or familiars, but what are to be found in the grave.

Jerem. 3.17
Gen. 1.19.

Verse 16. They shall go down to the bars of the pit.] That is, I and my things, or I and my hopes of prosperity, verse 15. and they that will see the good I hope for, must passe through the gates of death to behold it, and lye down in the grave with me, and then it shall appear. Cajetan thinks that this is spoken ironically to his friends, and by way of irrision, q. d. Belike you think I shall be rich in the grave (who promise so much to me, and make me such overtures of an happinesse here) for I have no hope to be rich in this world. And the Septuagint seem to favour this sense, rendring it, Shall my goods go into the grave with me? See 1 Tim. 6.7. with the Note.

Per irrisionem haec dicta sunt.

When our rest together is in the dust] Or, When I shall rest alone in the dust, (as chap. 34.29.) and then De Annibal. Sil. Ital.

——Modo quem fortuna fovendo,
Congestis opibus domisque reservit opimis,
Nudum tartareâ, portabit navita cymbâ.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verse 1. Then answered Bildad the Shuhite, and said.] NOT so much disputing, as inveying against Job in a sharp and angry Oration, wherein he elegantly describeth the woe of a wicked man, but wrongfully wresteth the same against good Job, who might well say with him in Tacitus, Tu lingua, ego aurium dominus. If I cannot command thy tongue, yet I can command mine own eares. Or with Another, Dicteria ille maledicat, & ego contemnare. This man hath learned to reproach, and I to slight his contempts and contumelies; unlesse I should yeeld, that wicked men only are grievously afflicted in this life present, that they are not to be reckoned wicked, who prosper in their way, but those only who suffer extremely.

Verse 2. How long will it be ere you make an end of words?] First he taxeth Job of talkativeneſſe, when himself talked much, but spake little, save only what he had spoken before, chap. 8. Though Job had sufficiently refuted him. But as nothing in the world is more unreasonable then an ignorant person, who thinketh nothing well done, but that which he doth himself, so those that bear themselves over-bold upon their owne knowledg, and over-ween their own abilities, account it a great injury if any dissent from them in opinion and judgement. And such a one here Bildad sheweth himself to be by his exordium exabrupto, as Junius phraseth it, his abrupt beginning, as if he could beare no longer with Jobs prattle; who if he were more prolix then his friends, he had greater reason, as being heavily afflicted, and falsly accused. Among the Romans the Plaintiff was allowed but three hours, the Defendant six. But why doth Bildad bespeak Job here in the Plural Number? Was it for Honours sake (as Cajetan holdeth?) I scarce think it. Was it because he thought Job to be possessed by an evil spirit (as Philip after Beda?) No neither. But this he seemeth to do, either as bending his speech to the by-standers, who seemed to favour Job, and sometimes to put in a word for him; whom therefore Bildad looked upon as his fellow hypocrites; or else, by an irony he speaks unto Job as unto many, because he seemed to set up his opinion above all theirs, and would needs have his counter to stand for a thousand pounds.

Mark, and afterwards we will speak.] Let thy words be henceforth dipped and died in thy heart before they be uttered, let our words also be duly weighed, that some end may be put to these altercations and disputes.

Verse 3. Wherefore are we counted as beasts, &c?] Here he taxeth Job of pride and arrogancy, grounding upon those words of his taken at the worst, chap. 12.7. and 17.4, 10. and not considering his case, that he was full of paine, which maketh wise men tetchy (as oppression maketh them mad, Eccles. 7.7.) and that they had sorely provoked him by their bitter taunts, and scurrilous invectives, which called for so sharp a curry-comb. Pessimo autem habet hypocrisis, si contemnatur; Hypocrisie loves not to be sighted, saith Brentius here. And Gregory upon this Text saith, That in Bildad Heretsicks are set forth, who stomack it much that the faithful take upon them to reprove them, as carried away by errour, as if the knowledge of the truth resided in themselves only, and all others had no more understanding then beasts. This people which knows not the Law are cursed, say those Pharisees, John 7.49. To know nothing at all, saith Caiaphas to his Assessors. The Gnosticks and Illuminati gave out themselves to be the only knowing men, &c. But if Bildad had been right set, he would neither have so far misconstrued Jobs words, nor yet have been behind to befool and bebeast himself, as Asaph in like case did, Psal. 73.22. Where he useth the Plural of the word here used in the Singular, calling himselfe, Behemoth, id est, magnum & crassum bestiam, a great and a grosse beast.

And reputed vile in your sight.] Heb. Polluted or unclean; that is, as beasts unfit for food, much lesse for sacrifice. The same Hebrew word signifieth polluted and vile. Every wicked man is a vile man, be he never so high and honourable in Ἀκλεὴς δεῖσος λίγειν ἢ ἀδυνατώτατος. De Alcibiade Plutarch.

Quando tandem finem loquendi seu nugandi potius facies? Lav.

Vos ô Calliope precor. Virg.

John 11.49.

the worlds account, as Antiochus, Dan. 11. 21. is called a vile person, and yet he was the great King of Syria, sirnamed Epiphanes, or Illustrious, and by the flattering Samaritans, he was stiled, Antiochus the mighty God. See Psal. 15. 4.

Verse 4. He teareth himself in anger.] Here he chargeth Job with desperate madnesse, as if through extreme impatience he fell foul upon his owne flesh, as did that Demoniack in the Gospel, Bajazet the great Turk in his iron Cage, Pope Boniface the eighth, when clapt up close Prisoner in Saint Angelo; and as they say the Tyger doth, when he heareth a drum struck up, he teareth his own flesh with his teeth: or as all ravenous Beasts teare in pieces the prey which they have taken. Many read the Text thus, O thou man which teareth his soul in his anger. Or, O thou which teares thy self, &c. The Moralist describeth an angry man forcibly held by his friends, biting his own lips, rending his cloathes, and dashing himself against the pillars, &c. Such a one Bildad maketh Job to be, here-mad, or Mad-kind, as we say: and he takes occasion likely, from those words of his, chap. 13. 14. But love would have thought no evil. Bildad herein sinned against the Law of love, as likewise he doth much more in the following vehement interrogation, charging Job with insolent boldnesse against God.

Labia mordet, caput quassat, vestimenta scindit, & se in columnas impingit. Senec.

Shall the earth be forsaken for thee?] Shall God cast off the care of his earthly Kingdome to gratifie thee, and to make good thine Assertion, That good men may suffer, and bad men go unpunished? Never think it: thou maist sooner expect him to overturn the whole world for thy sake, and put every thing out of that order he hath decreed and made it in, then cease to be just in punishing the wicked. The course of justice is as firmly settled as the course of Nature is. Fiat justitia, pereat mundus. Of Fabricius it was said, That the Sun might as easily be turned out of his track, as he out of his path of Justice; much more may it be so said of Almighty God, the Rock that cannot be removed, though he varieth the manner, the means, the times and seasons of executing Justice, as seemeth best unto his heavenly wisdom.

Verse 5. Yea the light of the wicked shall be put out:] The ensuing description of a wicked mans unhappinesse in life, at death, and after death, is very true, and daintily set forth, but fallily and wrongfully wrested against Job, Yea, or, of a surety, the light of the wicked shall be put out; though thou wilt not hear of it, but the truth shall be spoken, however it be taken, and thou shalt hereby see thy self to be a wicked man, because thy light is extinct, that is, thy outward prosperity fitly compared to light; because 1. It chearesh our minds. 2. Directeth our hands to every businesse. 3. Lesseneth our frights. 4. Rendreth us conspicuous. The light of the wicked shall put out it self, (so some render it:) he is commonly the cause of his own ruine.

Merlin.

And the spark of his fire shall not shine] He is quenched as the fire of the thornes, Psalm 118. 12. Whereof after a while, neither spark nor spunk remaineth.

Vers. 6. The light shall be dark in his Tabernacle] The glory of his family shall be obscured: he and his shall come to utter and unexpected ruine, as Haman did.

And his candle shall be put out with him] He and his prosperity shall dye together: he shall go out in a snuff, and leave nothing behind him but a detestable name. Sic cum fatis fugerat ipse, sic ille quærens hanc orbi quam ceciderat, saith Melanchthon concerning Eckius his last piece, De conjugio sacerdotum. Or, his candle shall be put out above him, so the Vulgar Interpreter: the Lamps which glistered over head, during the pride and pomp of his Feasts, shall give no more light: or if they give any, it shall be but to shine upon his Tomb.

Verse 7. The steps of his strength shall be straitned.] that is, saith Vatablus, he shall not do what he would and was wont. He shall lose his courage in the midst of his enterprizes, and not be able to effect his attempts.

And his own counsel shall cast him down] His cunning shall faile him, his counsel, whereby once he rose, shall serve but to advance his overthrow, and to precipitate him into misery. We use to say of a cunning pated fellow, that he never wanteth a trick wherewith to help himself: but there is neither power nor policy against the

Lord

Lord and his judgements. Of the Athenians it is said, that Minerva turned all their evil counsel into good unto them. Gods enemies have no such friend to help them at a dead lift. The stone cut out of the mountaine without hands, shall bring down the golden Image with a powder, and make it like the chaffe of the Summer-floor, Dan. 2. 35.

Verse 8. For he is cast into a net by his own feet.] Wicked men are even ambitious of destruction: judgements need not go to find them out: they run to meet their bane. Divine Justice and their own indiscretion undo them. He hath sent his feet into the net, so the Vulgar rendreth it. He is sent into a net by his own feet, so Mr. Broughton. His own iniquities shall take the wicked himself, and he shall be holden with the cords of his sins, Prov. 5. 22. these shall cast him into inextricable straits.

And he walketh upon a snare.] Upon a platted grin, saith Broughton; whereout the more he strives to get, the more he entangleth himself. Sic laqueus ferè dum jactat astringit. Sic aves viscum dum trepidantes exuunt, plumis omnibus illinunt. So the beast whilst he tosseth the snares wherein he is taken, straiteneth them: So the birds, while they think to shake off the birdlime, besmeare all their feathers with it. Sen. de ira lib. 3 cap. 6.

Verse 9. The grin shall take him by the heel] Or, He shal lay hold on the grin with his heel, so Mercer readeth it: that is, he foolishly runs upon his own ruine, he perisheth by his own oversight.

And the Robber shall prevail against him] Horridi sitibundi, the shaghaired Ruffians that have wasted their own estates, and now thirst after other mens. Broughton readeth it, The savage shall lay hold on him. So that either by secret contrivance, or open violence he shall be undone.

Verse 10 The snare is laid for him in the way, &c.] This heap of words, net, snare, grin, trap, cords, sheweth that God hath many wayes to catch the wicked with; and that usquam & nunquam non eis impendeat exitium, destruction is ready to meet them at every turning. God cannot want a weapon to beat a Rebel.

And a trap for him in the way] He walks as it were upon a Mine of Gun-powder. The Hebrew hath it, His trap; such as most of the Cesars, till Constantine the great met with; and among the rest Maximinus (that Mastive Tyrant eight foot high) who daily devoured forty pounds of flesh, and drank thereto six gallons of Wine. This foul beast after he had raised the sixth Persecution against the Christians, especially against the Pastors of the Church, and exercised many other great cruelties, was told to his teeth,

Elephas grandis est, & occiditur;
Leo fortis est, & occiditur:
Cave multos, si singulos non times. Mimus in theatro.

And it befel him accordingly; for at the siege of Aquileia in Italy, he was slaine as he slept at noon in his Tent by his own souldiers. Euseb.

Ezekiel foretelleth the degenerate sons of Josiah, that they shall be taken by the King of Babylon as beasts in a toil. So Pharaoh, that natural brute beast, was made to be taken and destroyed, 2 Pet. 2. 12. with Exod. 9. 16. So Saul complaineth that God had forsaken him, and the Philistines those savage creatures, were upon him, 2 Sam. 18. Behold I will send for many hunters, and they shal hunt them, &c. Jer. 16. 16.

Verse 11. Terrors shall make him afraid on every side.] These terrors are, as it were, the cruel Sergeants and mercilesse Officers of that King of terrors, verse 14. arresting him as it were in the Devils name, and bringing him to justice. How can it be but a terrible time with him; when death comes with a Writ of Habeas Corpus, and the Devil with a Writ of Habeas animam? when the cold earth must have his body, and hot hell hold his soul, according to that of the Psalmist, Let death seize upon them, and let them go down quick into hell; for wickednesse is in their dwellings, and among them, Psal. 55. 17. The sad forethought hereof causeth many unutterable griefs and gripings, perplexities of spirit, and convulsions of soul, a very hell above ground, and a foretaste of eternal torments. The word here rendred terror, signifieth Apparitores & lictores. Jun.

utmoſt affrightments, ſuch as put a man well nigh out of his wits and diſtract him. Cic. Orat. pro Roſc. Amer. R. Solomon underſtandeth it of devils; others of furies, ſuch as the Poets fain. Moſt certain it is, that a body is not ſo tormented with ſtings, or torn with ſtripes, as a mind with remembrance of wicked actions, and fear of future evils.

Tertul. And ſhall drive him to his feet.] As they did Cain that Caitiff, Qui factus eſt à corde ſuo fugitivus, who would fain have fled from his own conſcience (if he could have known whither) and became a Fugitive and a Vagabond upon the earth, Gen. 4. 12. ſeeking to outrun his terrors, which yet dogged him hard at the heels. They ſhal preſſe him at his feet, ſo Broughton readeth this Text.

Fit famelicum robur ejus. Verſe 12. His ſtrength ſhall be hunger-bitten] Heb. His ſtrength (or wealth) ſhal be famine. Or, Famine ſhall be his ſtrength. He, who whilom having health and wealth at will, fared deliciouſly and gathered ſtrength, ſhall be hunger-ſtarved, and hardly have priſoners pittance; ſo much only as will neither keep him alive, nor ſuffer him to dye. See 1 Sam. 2. 5. 36. 'Tis as much, ſaith Brentius, as we uſe to ſay of an extreme poore or feeble perſon, his wealth is poverty, his ſtrength weakneſſe.

And deſtruction ſhall be ready at his ſide] i.e. Shall ſuddenly and inevitably ſeize upon him, there will be no running away from it, for can a man run from his ſide? The word ſignifieth not an ordinary calamity, but a dreadful and direful deſtruction. Some underſtand it of the Pluriſie, or Ulcers in the ſide of a man: Others of rib-roſt, as they call it, tortures inflicted on condemned perſons (as Heb. 11. 34.) who are beaten with bats.

Verſe 13. It ſhall devour the ſtrength of his ſkin] i. e. his bones which ſupport his skin; theſe deſtruction ſhall devour or ſwallow up at a bit, as an hungry Monſter.

The firſt born of death ſhall devour his ſtrength] i.e. The Devil, ſay ſome, that Deſtroyer, Rev. 9. 11. that old Man-ſlayer, John 8. 44. Prince of death, Heb. 2. 14. (as Chriſt is called Prince of Life, Act. 3. 15.) and firſt born of death, as Chriſt is the firſt born of the Reſurrection, Col. 1. 18. Others underſtand it, De cruentiſſima ac funeſtiſſima morte, of the moſt tragick and cruel kind of death. See Iſai. 14. 30. Broughton readeth it, A ſtrange death ſhall eat the branches of his body, judgments ſhal come upon thee in their perfection, ſaith God to Babylon, Iſai. 47. 9.

Verſe 14. And his confidence ſhall be rooted out of his Tabernacle] Whatſoever he truſteth in about his houſe ſhall be pulled up by the roots, or grub'd up. Thus it befel Doeg, Pſal. 52. 7. And this diſappointment, this broken confidence of his, ſhall bring him (or make him go) to the King of terrors; i.e. to death that moſt terrible of terribles, as the Philoſopher calleth it. Or the Devil (as R. Solomon interpreteth it) that black Prince, Eph. 6. 12. to whom wicked men are brought by death, which to them is not only Natures Slaughterman, but Gods curſe, and hels Purveyour. Hence Rev. 6 8. death haleth hell at the heels of it. Ariſtot.

Verſe 15. It ſhall dwell in his Tabernacles, becauſe it is none of his] Heb. Not his: for why? the King of terrors hath turned him out of it, and taken it up for an habitation for himſelf. Some render it thus, nothing, or have nothing, (that is want) ſhall dwell in his Tabernacle, his houſe ſhall be repleniſhed with emptineſſe, ſcarcity ſhall be the furniture of his habitation.

Brimſtone ſhall be ſcattered upon his habitation] As is alſo threatned, Pſal. 11. 6. And as was executed upon Sodom and her ſiſters: as alſo upon Diocleſian the Tyrant, who giving over his Empire, decreed to lead the reſt of his life quietly. But he eſcaped not ſo, for after that his houſe was wholly conſumed with lightening, and a flame of fire that fell from heaven (not without a ſulphurous ſmell) he hiding himſelf for fear of the lightning, dyed within a little after. Euſeb. de Vita Conſt. lib. 5

Verſe 16. His roots ſhall be dryed up beneath, &c.] The meaning is, ſaith Diodate, he ſhall be deprived of Gods grace, which is the root of all happineſſe, and of his bleſſing, which is the top of it.

Verſe 17. His remembrance ſhall periſh from the earth] As a tree when root and branch is gone, is clean forgotten, and no man remembreth where it grew; ſo ſhall it be with the wicked, Non celebrabitur ejus nomen & fama, niſi in malum, Eccleſ. 8. 10. It is reckoned as a great benefit to a wicked man, to have his memory dye with him, which if it be preſerved, ſtinks in keeping, and remains as a curſe and perpetual diſgrace. Mercer.

And

And he shall have no name] i. e. no honourable Name, no renowne. A good name only is a name, *Eccles.*7.1. as a good wife only is a wife, Prov. 18.22. Every married woman is not a wife. Zillah Lamechs wife, was but the shadow of a wife, as her name also signifieth. In like sort, those only have a name in the streets or publick places, who are talked of for good; as the Martyrs, who have left their names for a blessing. *Isai.*65.15. when as their wretched Persecutors have left a vile snuff behind, their Lamps being put out in obscurity.

Verse 18. He shall be driven out of light into darkenesse] Heb. They shall drive him; scil. the devils shall drive him out of the light of life into outer darknesse, as they did that rich wretch, Luke 12.20. confer Mat. 8.12. and 25.30. The Dutch Translation readeth it, Men shall drive him. Others understand it of his troubles and sorrowes.

And chased out of the world] As Tarquin was by Collatine, as Phocas was by Heraclius, kickt off the stage of the world as one phraseth it, or as Job saith of some wicked, buried before half dead, *chap.*27.15. Men shall clap their hands at him, and shal hiss him out of his place, verse 23.

Verse 19. He shall neither have son nor Nephew, &c.] A sore affliction to be written childlesse, which yet is the portion of some good people, as Abel, many Prophets and Apostles, for whose comfort that is written, Isai 56.4,5. God, as he will be to his childlesse children better then ten sons; so he will give them in his house, and within his wals, a place and a name, better then of sons and of daughters: he wil give them an everlasting name that shal never be cut off. Not so the ungodly, those men of Gods hand, for though full of children, they leave the rest of their substance to their babes, Psal. 17.14. yet it will prove to be but luctuosa fœcunditas, as Hierom speaketh, they shall weep for their lost children, and not be comforted, because they are not. Or if they survive, they prove singular cuts and crosses to their wretched Parents, who have cause enough to cry out as Moses sometimes did, Let me dye out of hand, and not see my wretchednesse, Num.11.15. They are filled with unmedicinable sorrowes, in the losse either of their children or of their estates by their wasteful children, so that they praise the dead above the living, and wish they had never been born, *Eccles.*4,2,3. 1 Sam.1.8 Hist.98.5.

Nor any remaining in his dwellings] When the souldiers slew the Tyrant Maximinus and his son, at the siege of Aquileia, they cryed out, Ex pessimo genere ne catulum quidem habendum, Of so ill a kind, let not a whelp be kept alive.

Verse 20 They that come after him shall be astonied at his day] Future Ages hearing the relation of his dismal destruction, shall stand agast, as if they beheld the dirty ruines of some once beautiful City. Happy they, if in good earnest they could make that good use of it, which Herodotus the Historian saith, men should make of the overthrow of Troy; viz. to take notice thereby, that great sinners must look for great punishments from God. But Ham and his Posterity were little the better for the Deluge in their dayes: nor the adjacent Countries for Sodoms downfal. Τῶν μεγάλων ἀδικημάτων μεγάλαι εἰσὶ καὶ τιμωρίαι παρὰ τῶν Θεῶν. Herod.

As they that went before were affrighted] scil. His contemporaries and eye-witnesses of his calamity apprehended horror, so the Hebrew hath it, they took a fright: which yet was little to the purpose without faith and repentance; and unlesse their hearts fell down, when their hairs stood upright.

Verse 21. Surely such are the dwellings of the wicked] As sure as death 'tis so; and this is oft inculcated, because hardly believed. Bildad hints at Job in all this, and therefore speaks of the wicked here in the singular number; as who should say, Thou art the man. But Jobs innocency served him for an Hepeabocam Buckler.

And this is the place] that is, the state.

Of him that knoweth not God] Periphrasis impii, saith Drusius: this is the character of a graceless man. Have the workers of iniquity no knowledg? No none, that they were a button the better for. Psal.14.4

CHAP.

CHAP. XIX.

Verse 1. Then Job answered and said.]

HE replyed as followeth, to Bildads bitter, and tanting invective. His miseries he here setteth forth graphically and tragically, granting to Bildad that he was dealt with no otherwise then if he were that wicked man described in the foregoing chapter; and yet denying himself to be any such one, by his lively hope of a joyful Resurrection, such as would make a plentiful amends for all, ver. 26, 27, 28. For though Mercer make question of it, yet I am out of doubt, saith Beza, that this is the true meaning of this place. And surely the whole Scripture doth not yeild us a more notable, or a more clear and manifest testimony, to confirm unto us the Resurrection of our bodies, then this. This confession of his faith, saith Lavater, is the chief thing in this Chapter, and therefore challengeth our best attention.

Verse 2. How long will ye vex my soul?] viz. with your furious and reproachful charges & criminations? Have I not misery enough already, but you must lay more load of scorn and contempt upon me; and so go on to trouble me, by adding to my saddest sorrowes, such as pierce to the very soul? Call you this comforting an afflicted friend?

Hoccine est mœstum consolari?

How long will ye break me in pieces with words?] Words also have their weight; and if hard and harsh, Leniter volant, non leniter violant. Like maules they break the heart in pieces, like a rack they torment it, Psal. 42. 10. As with a murdering weapon in my bones, mine enemies reproached me. You shall find some (saith Erasmus) that if death be threatned can despise it; but to be belyed, reproached, slandered, they cannot brook, nor from revenge contain themselves. Job was a strong man both in faith and patience, yet put hard to it by the hard words given him by Bildad and the rest, who did rather hurt his eare by the loudnesse of their voices, then helped his heart, by the force of their reproofs. Gods servants must not strive, but be gentle, 2 Tim. 2. 23, 24. shewing all meeknesse to all men, Tit. 3. 2. Jam. 3. 17. Gentle showres comfort the earth, when dashing storms drown the seed. There is a twofold inconvenience followeth upon bitter and boisterous proceedings with a supposed offendour. First, the party looketh not so much to his own failing as to their passion. Secondly, As he is unconvinced, so they are not esteemed: but though they have the right on their side, yet they lose the due regard of their cause, and reverence of their persons.

Verse 3. These ten times have ye reproached me] i. e. oftentimes. Herein Job endured a great fight of affliction, as the Apostle stileth it, Heb. 10. 32, 33. a manifold fight, (as the word there signifieth.) Cato was two and thirty times accused publickly, and as oft cleared and absolved. Basil was counted and called an Heretick, even by those who, as it appeared afterwards, were of the same judgement with him, and whom he honoured as brethren. Dogs in a chase bark sometimes at their best friends, &c.

You are not ashamed that you make your selves strange to me.] Or, Are you not ashamed that ye harden your selves against me? Or, That ye jeer and jest at my misery? Or, That ye make Merchandise of me, and take your penyworths out of me? Beza (agreeable to our Translation) paraphraseth it thus, Ye take me up so short, as if ye dealt with a stranger and forrainer, and not with a friend. And so the word is taken, Gen. 42. 7.

Significat etiam emere, vel comparari.

Verse 4. And be it indeed that I have erred] Of humane frailty, for that there is any way of wickednesse in me (as you would have it) I shall never yeeld. But nimis angustæ res est, nusquam errare. Involuntary failings I am not free from: who knoweth the errors of his life? Psal. 19. 12. What man is he that liveth and sinneth not? It is the sad priviledge of mortality, saith one, Licere aliquando peccare, to have license sometimes to sin.

Eutherm.

Mine error remaineth with my self.] q. d. 'Tis little that you have done toward the convincing me of any error in all this time, and talk, which until ye have done, I must

I muſt ſtil remain of the ſame mind. Or thus, You ſhall neither anſwer nor ſuffer for mine errour: what need then all this heat and harſhneſſe? Not that every man muſt be left to himſelf, and let alone to live as he liſteth. Admonition is a Chriſtian duty, and the word of exhortation, muſt be ſuffered, ſharp though it be, and to the fleſh irkſome: better it is that the Vine ſhould bleed then dye. Had Job been guilty, he would or ſhould have been as Veſpaſian is reported, pudentiſſimus veri, patient of a reproof. But his friends falſly accuſed him for an hypocrite, and fell foule upon another mans ſervant, whom they had nothing to do to condemn, Rom. 14. And hence this expreſſion of his diſcontent.

Verſe 5. If indeed you will magnifie your ſelves againſt me] Or, Will you indeed magnifie your ſelves againſt me? ſcil. becauſe of mine error, as verſ. 4. which yet ye have not convinced me of? Will ye inſult over me therefore, and throw dirt upon me? Of Bonaſſus, a certain beaſt as big as an Ox, Ariſtotle reporteth, that having hornes bending inward and unfit for fight, after that he is wounded by the hunters, he flyeth for his life, and often letteth flye his dung for four yards or more, upon the dogs or men that purſue him, to their great annoyance. In like ſort deal many diſputers of this world; when they cannot make good their matter by ſtrength of Argument, they caſt upon their adverſaries the dung of calumnies, ſo ſeeking to magnifie themſelves againſt him, and pleading againſt him his reproach. Ariſt. Animal. lib. 9 cap. 45.

And plead againſt me my reproach] Affliction expoſeth a man to reproach. Where the hedge is low, the beaſt will be breaking over. See Zeph. 3. 12. with the Note there.

Verſe 6. Know, that God hath overthrown me.] Do not you therefore add affliction to the afflicted, which is ſo odious a thing to God, Pſal. 41. 2. and 69. 26. but regard the greatneſſe of mine evils, which draw theſe complaints from me that ſeem ſo immoderate to you. See Job 6. 2. Diodat.

And hath compaſſed me with his net.] Hath encompaſſed me round with affliction, that I can get out no way. An hunting term, Job 18. 8. Lam. 1. 13. Ezek. 12. 13. Hoſ. 7. 12. Bildad had made much mention of nets and grins, wherein God enſnareth and enſnarleth the wicked. Job granteth, that Gods net had encompaſſed him, but withal denyeth himſelf to be wicked, or that his friends ſhould therefore reproach him, but rather pity him. chap. 18. 8, 9.

Verſe 7. Behold I cry out of wrong, but I am not heard] Nothing is more natural and uſual then for men in miſery to cry out for help. Jobs great grief was, that neither God nor man would regard his mournes or deliver him out of the Net. God did not reſcue him, men did not right him or relieve him. His outcry ſeemeth to be the ſame in effect with that of Habakkuk the Prophet, chap. 1. 2, 3. O Lord, how long ſhal I cry and thou wilt not hear? even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not ſave? why doſt thou ſhew me iniquity, and cauſe me to behold grievance? for ſpoiling and violence are before me, and there are that raiſe up ſtrife and contention. Therefore lookeſt thou upon them that deal treacherouſly, &c. verſe 13. Thus Job, but with out an anſwer: as the Lion letteth his Whelps roar themſelves hoarſe for hunger, yea, till they are almoſt dead, ere he happileth them. Sure it is, that God always heareth his Jobs, though he doth not always anſwer in our time, and in our way. Yea it is an hearing and an anſwer of prayer (ſaith one) that we can pray, though unheard and unanſwered.

I cry aloud] Heb. I ſet up my Note; cum gemitu & ululatu, with groaning and howling. Men never pray ſo earneſtly, as in greateſt afflictions, Heb. 5. 7. Hoſ. 12. 4. then their prayers, like ſtrong ſtreams in narrow ſtreights, bear down all that ſtands before them.

Verſe 8. He hath fenced up my way, &c.] Here Job carried away, as it were, with a torrent of grief, amplifieth his miſeries by many other compariſons. And firſt of a Traveller, whom nothing ſo much troubleth in his journey as hedges and darkneſs. God, ſaith Job, hath every way hedged me out of content and comfort, ſo that though I ſeek it never ſo, I cannot find it. Gods people are oft brought into greateſt ſtraits, as David, Pſal. 31. and 142. Iſrael at the red ſea, Jehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. 20. that they may learne to depend upon the divine providence, &c.

And he hath ſet darkneſſe in my paths] I am benighted, and know not whither to go, or how to get out. Darkneſſe is full of errour and terror. A child of light may walk in darkneſſe, Iſai. 50.10. Yea, in the valley of the ſhadow of death, Pſal. 23.4. yet is he never without ſome ſpark of faith, which guideth him in the deepeſt darkneſſe, until he behold the Sun of righteouſneſſe, Light is ſowne for the righteous, &c. heavineſſe may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning, Pſal. 30. ver. 6. And as before the day breaks, the darkneſſe is greateſt: ſo here

Gen. 37.23

Verſe 9. He hath ſtript me of my glory] This is the ſecond compariſon, ab externo corporis cultu & habitu, ſaith Merlin. From the outward habiliments and habits of the body. Our King Richard the 2^d^, when he was to be depoſed, was brought forth gorgeouſly attired in his Robes royal, with a crown upon his head, a Scepter in his hand, &c. but ſoon after deſpoiled of all, and unkinged. So it fared with poor Job, ſtripped and bereft of all that he formerly gloried in, and was reſpected for, as a man robbed hath all his cloathes taken off, and is left naked. In him it appeared that mortality was but the ſtage of mutability, as one ſaith of our Henry 6. who of a moſt potent Monarch, was, when depoſed, not the Maſter of a Moſehil, nor owner of his own liberty.

Daniels Hiſt.

And hath taken the Crown from off my head] Hence ſome infer, that Job was a King, the ſame with Jobab, King of Edom, mentioned Gen. 36.34. But this is uncertaine, ſith Crown is often in Scripture taken allegorically, for Riches, Authority, Dignity, and other Ornaments. Theſe were taken from Job, yea, from off his head, See Lam. 5.16. But he had a better Crown, quæ nec eripi, nec ſurripi potuit, which could not be taken away; viz. that Crown of twelve Stars, or celeſtial graces, Rev. 12.1. together with that Crown of glory (the fruit of the former) that is incorruptible and fadeth not away, 1 Pet. 1.4. Happy Job in ſuch a Crown; and that he was in the number of thoſe few heads deſtined to ſuch a Diadem. David had (whatever Job had) a Crown of pure gold ſet upon his head, Pſal. 21. this was a great mercy to ſo mean a man, ſith beyond a Crown the wiſhes of mortal men extend not. But David bleſſeth God for a better Crown, Pſal. 103.4. Who crowneth thee with loving kindneſſe and tender mercies. And how was this ſet on his head? who forgiveth all thy iniquities, &c. verſe 3. Neither can any take away this Crown, becauſe we are kept (Gr. guarded or garriſon'd as in a Tower of braſſe, or Town of War, that is well fenced with walls and works and ſo its made impregnable) by the power of God through faith unto ſalvation, 1 Pet. 1.4.

φρουρούμενοι.

Verſe 10. He hath deſtroyed me on every ſide] Heb. He hath demoliſhed me, he hath pulled me down piece-meal, as an old houſe is taken down part by part. See Levit. 14.45. Judg. 8.17. God had made and faſhioned Jobs body together round about, chap. 10.8. and now he deſtroyeth it round about. The body of a man is a wonderful fabrick, wherein the bones are the timber-work, the head the upper-lodging, the eyes as windowes, the eye-lids as caſements, the browes as pent-houſes, the ears as watch-towers, the mouth as a door to take in that which ſhall uphold the building, and keep it in reparation; the ſtomack as a Kitchin to dreſſe that which is conveyed into it; the guts and baſer parts as ſinks belonging to the houſe, &c. All theſe were decaying apace in Job, to his thinking.

And I am gone] That is, I am as good as gone already; every day I yeild ſomewhat unto death, I am free among the dead, free of that Company.

And my hope hath he removed like a tree] He hath not left me ſo much as hope (which is the laſt comfort of the afflicted) of ever recovering here my health, wealth, and former enjoyments: but hath left me as a tree, that is plucked up by the roots, and ſo can never grow again. A Saint may be at that paſſe here in regard of his outward eſtate, that there may be to him neither hope of better, nor place of worſe. This was Cranmers Caſe.

Melch. Adam.

Verſe 11. He hath alſo kindled his wrath againſt me.] Now if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little, woe be to all thoſe againſt whom it is bent. He will ſurely heap miſchiefs upon them, he will ſpend his arrowes upon them, Deut. 32.22, 23. with Pſal. 7.12. Job felt them ſtriking in the ſides of his ſoul, even the invenomed arrowes of the Almighty; and yet this was only a Refiners fire, Mal. 3.2. or, if a conſuming fire, as Heb. 12.29. yet it was to waſte his corruptions only, to ſever the ſin which he

he hated from the Son whom he loved, to try and exercise his patience, &c. all which notwithstanding, he complaineth heavily of these spunks and sparks of divine displeasure.

And counteth me unto him as one of his enemies.] Heb. As his enemies: not as a single enemy, but a rabble of rebels, an Army of enemies, such as shal one day meet at Armageddon, their Rendevous. See chap. 13.24.

Verse 12. His troops come together] i.e. Troops of tribulations and temptations, of Pirats and Robbers, (as the Seventy have it) sickness and other sorrowes are Gods Souldiers, Matth. 8.8, 9. and they seldome come single, James 1.2. but trooping and treading on the heels of one another, Concatenatio piorum crux, a company comes. ἀφεσταται. Sept.

And raise up their way against me.] As Souldiers besieging a place cast up their Trenches and Fortifications. Vatablus rendreth it, And have beaten their way upon me; that is, saith he, tribulations have so often passed over me, that they have made a path way upon me, more transeuntium, as passengers use to do.

And encamp round about my tabernacle.] Afflictions hem me in on every side, the troops of troubles besiege me so straitly, that I can no way in all the world find relief or comfort; which now as by a strong hand, yea, as by a strong hoste, are with-holen from my soul, and so are like to be for a long season, as Sieges are many times. Heman was afflicted and ready to dye from their youth up, suffering those terrors, Psal. 88.15. Job was a man of sorrowes.

Verse 13. He hath put my brethren far from me] In their affections at least: some stuck to him but for a mischief, for they proved miserable Comforters: as did likewise Peter to our Saviour, who fled not with the rest of the Disciples, but better he had, for any good he did him. A brother is born for adversity, saith Solomon Proverb. 17.17 and although at other times there may be some unkindnesse, fratrum concordia rara est, yet in affliction and extremity good nature will work, and good blood will not belye it self: But Jobs brethren proved unkind, and grew out of kind, they got farthest from him, when his enemies had besieged him. And all this befel him not without the Lord: He hath put my brethren far from me; this was no small aggravation of the affliction, that God with-drew or with-held that assistance and influence that should have inlarged and united the hearts of his brethren unto him. See Psal. 105.25.

And mine acquaintance are verily estranged from me] Those that formerly knew me throughly, and were as well knowne of me, mine intimate friends, who knew all my heart, are now truly as strange to me, as if there had never been any such matter of Acquaintance. R. Solomon readeth it, They are cruel to me. All the brethren of the poor man hate him (saith Solomon, Prov. 19.7.) how much more do his friends go far from him? He pursueth them with words; yet they are wanting to him. This the Heathen, (as Ovid and others) heavily complain of. In the River Araxis there is reported to be a fish called Scolopidus, which at the waxing of the Moon is as white as the driven snow, and at the wayning thereof, is as black as a burnt coal. A fit embleme of a false friend: Wealth maketh many friends, but the poor is separated from his neighbour, Prov. 19.4. who therefore turneth from him as a stranger, if not against him as an enemy. Noti mei. Vulg. Necessarii mei. Tigur. Quasi esset scriptum aliter. Ἀφιλον τὸ δυσυχὲς, Thuc. Et cum fortuna statqs caditque fides. Ovid. Tempora si fuerint nubila, solus eris. Ibid.

Verse 14. My kinsfolk have failed] scil. in courtesie, as Ruths Kinsman did, Job had many kinsfolk, but few friends, and this was a great grief to him, as it was afterwards also to David, Psal. 31.11. and 38.11. and 69.8. to Heman, Psal. 88.8. and to Paul, 2 Tim. 4.14.

And my familiar friends] They whom I favoured, saith Broughton, according to Psal. 11.6.

Have forgotten me.] Out of sight, out of mind. A thing forgotten is as if it had never been. All Jobs courtesies were cast away upon these Summum birds, who had well nigh forgotten that there was ever such a man in the world as Job.

Ver. 15. They that dwel in mine house, and my maids, &c.] My Tenants or my Guests, or my Sojourners, those widowes and Orphans haply, whom he kept at his own charge chap. 31. More then this, my Maidens, those house keepers, entrusted with the keyes of the family; and that are no drudges to wash the feet of other servants, as 1 Sam. 25. 42. And for his servants of the other sex, he was as courtesly used by them too.

Verse 16. I called my servant, and he gave me no answer.] Though I lay under greatest sores and sorrowes, and called them to help me, yet such was their impudency and inhumanity, that they would not vouchsafe an answer. Considera hic quanta crux sit, saith Brentius, a sua propria familia despici & videri; Consider with me here, what an affliction it is, for a man to be despised and derided by his own family. A servants eye should look to the hands of his Master, and the eye of a maiden to the hand of her Mistress, to observe the motion thereof, and so pick out the meaning, Psal. 123. 2. Accounting their Governors worthy of all honour, 1 Tim. 6. 1. as the Centurions obsequious servants did, Matth. 8. 9. Sed sic fiunt servorum ingenia, saith Merlin here: But such is the condition of many servants now a dayes, that they will do no more then needs must, Jobs would neither say nor do.

I entreated him with my mouth.] As a suppliant to my servant, who lived upon me, but would do nothing for me, though I humbly besought him. Here we may see, saith Vatablus, that when God is angry with a man, all goeth crosse with him: It is good for us in this case, to reflect and see whether we have not served God in this sort. Alphonsus that renowned King, in a speech to the Popes Ambassador, professed that he did not so much wonder at his servants unthankfulnes and undutifulnes to him, as at his own to God.

Verse 17. My breath is strange to my wife.] The corruption of his inwards (besides the noisomnesse of his outward ulcers) made his breath strong and unwholsom. This his wife (as did that Roman Lady, who said she thought all mens breath as unsavoury as her husbands was) should have born with in a time of sicknesse especially, when she should have shewne her self an help, and not an heart-break to her husband. Famous in our Chronicles is the Lady Elsner, wife to Prince Edmund (afterwards Edmund the First) who extracted the poison out of her husbands wounds with her tongue, licking daily (whilst he slept) his rankling wounds, whereby they perfectly closed. Cambd. in Middlesex, Speed 630. And no lesse famous is the wife of Valdamus, celebrated by Ludov. Vives Lib. 2. de Christiana femina, p. 360. A young and beautiful Maid (saith he) was matched to a man stricken in years, whom after she found to have a very lothsome breath, and a diseased body, yet (out of conscience, being by Gods providence become his wife) she most worthily digested, with incredible patience and contentment, the languishing and loathsomnesse of an husband, continually visited with variety of most irksome and infectious diseases: and though friends and Physicians advised her by no means to come near him, for fear of danger and infection, yet she passing by with a loving disdain and contempt these unkind dissuasions, plyed him night and day with extraordinary tendernesse and care, and services of all sorts above her strength and ability: she was to him friends, Physician, Wife, Nurse, yea, she was Father, Mother, Brother, Sister, Daughter, every thing, any thing, to do him good any manner of way, &c.

Jam. 5. 11. Though I entreated for the Childrens sake, &c.] i. e. By the holy right of wedlock, and the fruit thereof, those dear pledges of our matrimonial good affection: Children, as they are dear to their Parents, (Charos, Plautus somewhere calleth them) so they are endearing to their parents, whose soul they are called, as if there were nothing left to the parents but the husks. This therefore was a melting argument, but it moved not Job's wife. Men may speak perswasively, but God only perswadeth.

Verse 18. Yea, young children despised me.] Fools, saith the vulgar, who are never more pleasant than when they play the Buffoons at my expence. Ungodly men some render it, wicked men. Others, the basest sort of people. And surely none so base as they that deride virtue, especially because forsaken of fortune, as one phraseth it. What a bitter jeer was that of Tobiah the servant (or, slave) the Ammonite, Neh. 4. 3? The basest can mock, as the Abjects did David, Psal. 45. 15. and the Ale-Drinkers also, Psal. 69. 12. But it is ill happens to do well, and yet hear ill. All Gods people must be ready to pass through good report, and evil report, 2 Cor. 6. 8. and every Job must reckon, that as the reproaches of men pass, not so much as a man (saith Chrysostome;) So the reproached that bears it well, is Angelis par, equal to the Angels.

I arose, and they spake against me.] I arose, sc. to rebuke them, or to pacifie them, or to pass away from them, and my back is no sooner turned, but they reviled me. Some render it, Sto coram illis, I stand before them; that is, They stay not till I am gone past, but reproached me to my face, such is their boldness and baseness: see Esa. 3. 5.

Verse 19. All my inward friends abhorred me.] Heb. All the Mortals of my Counsel. q. d. My most intimate acquaintance and associates, my highest confidents to whom I was wont to open my bosome, and with whom I maintained closest correspondency: Loe, these now abhorre me, and keep a loof off from me, yea, they apostatize from their professed friendship, and renouncing the lawes of love, they deal despightfully with me, and are turned against me. Such an one was Ahithophel to David, Psal. 55. 14, 15. Judas to Christ, Matth. 26, 23. and Bildad to Job (as some conceive that he conceited by the latter clause of this verse.)

And they whom I loved, &c.] Heb. and this man whom I loved, this bitter Bildad, that in his last speech hath so greivously galled me, who have hitherto so highly prized him. What? thou my son Bildad? This went to the very heart of him, as afterwards it did of David, when for his love they were his adversaries, when they rewarded him evil for good, and hatred for his good will, Psal. 109. 4, 5. Precious therefore and worthy of all acceptation is that advice of the Prophet Micah, chap. 7. 5, 6, 7. Trust not in a friend, put not confidence in a guide, keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lyeth in thy bosome. For the son dishonoureth the father, ... A mans enemies are the men of his own house. Look therefore unto the Lord, &c. all that trust in him, shal triumph: but for others, we may be compeld to complain with Q. Elizabeth, In Trust, I have found Treason, &c.

Καὶ σὺ τέκνον Βρῦτε.

Εὐμεσβλητον ξῶον ὁ φιλὸς.

Verse 20. My bone cleaveth to my skin.] My skin is a bag of bones. I am become a meer Skeleton, and may well cry out, O my leanness, my leanness! So bare I am grown, that little appeareth in me but skin and bones. My bones cleaveth to my skin & to my flesh, (so it may be read) that is, as once it did in my flesh, when I was well lined within. Now, alas, I lie under a miserable Marasmus; and should therefore be pitied, as being a just object of your commiseration. Isaiah 24. 16

Ossa sub incurim apparent aruda lambis.

And I am escaped with the skin of my teeth.] Escaped I am, and come off (as out of an hot skirmish) with my life, and very little else. All I have left me whole is the skin of my teeth, that is, of my gums, into which my teeth are engraffed: the rest of my body is all over of a scab. The vulgar rendreth it, My lips only about my teeth are left me untouch't. And Junius gives this gloss, Job had nothing left him but the instrument of speech. These, say some, the Devil purposely meddled not with, as hoping that therewith he would curse God. Curse him he might with his heart onely; but this would have pleased the Devil nothing so well as to hear him do it with his tongue. This is the conceit of some of the Jew-Doctors. But it is better to ascribe this escape to the good providence of God, than to the malice of the Devil.

Hoc fecisse Satanam volunt, ut voluntatem caperet. Merc.

Verse 21. Have pity upon me, have pity upon me, &c.] To him that is afflicted pity should be shewed from his friend: and to do otherwise, is to forsake the fear of the Almighty, chap. 6. 14. See the Note there. There was little either fear of God, or mercy to men, in that barbarous Bishop of Spire, who denied to Hen. 4. Emperour of Germany, (deposed after ten years reign, and hardly bestead) a poor Clerkship there in a Monastery of his own foundation, which caused the miserable Emperour to break out into these words of Job, Have pity upon me, have pity upon me ô my friends: for the hand of God hath touched me. The Papists tell us, That the souls in Purgatory cry out to their friends on earth for help on this manner, and in these terms. But this is as very a Fiction, as purgatory it self is the Popes invention; who must needs be extreme pitiless, to suffer so many souls to lye in so great torments, when as hee hath power to fetch them out at his pleasure.

Verse 22. Why do ye persecute me as God?] Is this that pitying of me, thus to presse me with reproaches, and therein to think you gratifie God, and do him good service? Know ye not, that to persecute him, whom he hath smitten, is greatest cruelty? and to talk to the grief of those whom he hath wounded, is to heap up guilt, and thereby wrath, Pſal. 69. 26, 27. When a Dear is ſhot, the reſt of the Herd puſh him out of the company. When a tree falleth, every paſſenger is ready to be pulling at it. But Gods people ſhould love as Brethren, be pitiful, be courteous, 1 Pet. 3. 8. and of ſome have compaſſion, making a difference, and others ſave with fear, pulling them out of the fire. Jude 22, 23. Thus it ſhould be: but as of old, in Egypt, one Hebrew ſmote another; blowes enough were not deale by the common adverſary, but their own muſt adde to the violence: Still Satan is thus buſie, and Chriſtians are thus malicious; that as if they wanted Perſecutours, they perſecute one another, and if (as here) they can but do it to God, that is, for God, as they miſperſwade themſelves (to vindicate his Juſtice, and to promote his glory) then they rage and are confident, as theſe friends of Job; in whom nevertheleſſe it was rather error amoris, then amor erroris; an errour of love, then any love of error.

Δευδε πασι σης ἀνθρ πᾶς ξυλιστεα.

And art not ſatisfied with my fleſh] Which is pined away with paine and grief: This contents you not, but you muſt break my bones alſo, and ſuck my blood by your contumelies and calumnies. Brentius and others apply this Text to ſlanderers, and back-biters, whom they compare to Cannibals. It is reported of Wolves, that when they have once fed upon mans fleſh, they deſiſt not, but deſire more of it. Job looketh upon his friends as ſuch man-eaters, wherein his ſorrow tranſported him too far; and whiles he was moving them to compaſſion, he ſhewes himſelfe over paſſionate.

Eſt detractoris periphraſis. Mercer. Non minus enim calumniatores homines devorant quam Scythae. Brent. in loc.

Verſe 23. Oh that my words were now written] This reiterated wiſh Job ſetteth as a Preamble to that enſuing memorable teſtimony of the Reſurrection, as a matter moſt weighty and worthy the conſideration of all ages; which therefore he wiſheth recorded in ſome publick inſtrument to all eternity: And God ſaid, Amen, to it. For not only this precious paſſage, but the whole Book of Job, ſo full of divine inſtruction preparatory to the laſt day was committed to writing (either by Moſes, or ſome other Prophets of that age, or elſe by Job himſelf after his reſtauration) and put among the Canonical Books of Scripture, concerning which David ſaith, For ever, O Lord, thy Word is ſetled in heaven, Pſal. 119. 89. And Chriſt, Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away, but not one jot or tittle, &c. Matth. 5. Not one hair of that ſacred head can fall to the earth. Thus God hath anſwered Job, ad cordium deſiderii, as a Father ſpeaketh, letting it be to him, even as he would.

Aug. Confeſſ. l. 5. c. 8.

Oh that they were printed] Or drawn out, that is, written (ſaith One) in great and Capital Letters, that every man might read them, Hab. 2. 2. for there was no Printing in thoſe dayes that we know of. The Chinois indeed tell us, that they had the Art of Printing long before. But in Europe it was not heard of till the year, One thouſand four hundred and forty. It begun to be practiced at Harlem in the Low-Countries (by Laurence Janſon, ſay ſome, by John Gertudenberg ſay others) and was perfected at Mentz, where Tullies Offices, the firſt Book that ever was printed, is ſtill kept for a Monument.

In a Book] that it might be preſerved and laid up for the uſe of poſterity, in ſome Kiriah-ſepher, or City of Books. Let them that are able, be apt and active in ſetting forth Books for the benefit of others, ſith, Paulum ſepulto diſtat inertia Celata virtus. —— He that buried his talent gave an heavy account to the Maſter, and was therefore called evil, becauſe idle ſervant. Matth. 25.

Horat.

Verſe 24. That they were graven with an iron pen, &c.] That my words were not only Scripta ſed ſculpta, written, but graven in a Rock as the Lawes of divers Nations were cut in Braſſe or Marble, and as Monuments and Epitaphs are graven on Tombs for remembrance of thoſe that are dead.

And Lead] Plumbo per ſulcos infuſo, ſaith Junius, the cuts of the Letters in Marble being filled with Lead, that they might be the more legible and durable.

In the Rock] In Marble cut out of the Rock. Golden words they are indeed that here follow, and well worthy to be written in Letters of Gold. In the Life of Ziſca (that Warlike Bohemian) it is recorded, that in the famous Monaſtery called, the Kings Court, a mile from Prague, in the walls thereof the whole Bible was moſt exquiſitely engraven in Letters of Gold.

Clark's Lives.

For ever] To laſt longer then the world laſteth. Thoſe bloody Tyrants of the Primitive times made account they had made sure work in rooting out true Religion, when they sounded the triumph before hand, and engraved the victory upon Pillars of Marble in these bubbles of words, Nomine Christianorum deleto qui Remp. everterant, &c. But Christ shall reigne, and the Church shall stand upon his right hand as a Queen in gold of Ophir, Psal. 45. 9. When all earthly greatnesse shall lye in the dust, Thy throne, O God, is for ever and ever, Psal. 45. 6. and there shall be a new succession of Saints to all perpetuity, Psal. 72. 17. His name shall endure for ever: His name shall be continued (Heb. budded) as long as the Sun, as long as the world, as long as the Word of the God, which according to Jobs wish here, shall stand for ever, Isai. 40. 8. But what meaneth the Vulgar translation here by this insignificant word Celtes? And why should Hugo seek to salve the matter, by telling us, that Celtes is a Tool wherewith Letters or Pictures are cut in the flint? Whereupon Vide quaso, mi Lector, saith Brentius. See, I pray thee, good Reader, how odly they interpret Scripture that want Learning; for neither is Celtes such a Tool, nor can it be Celtes for certe, sith the Hebrew word Lagnad doth not signifie Surely, but For ever. Celtes vox est nihili. Merc.

Primi-

Verse 25. For I know that my Redeemer liveth.] Clarissima fidei confessio, saith Brentius, a most famous Confession of his faith. Brevis & longa, tamquam aurea, est hæc Apologia, saith Another. This is Jobs short and yet long Apology, but guilden all over, and such as hath fulnes of matter in fewnesse of words. Calvin and Mercer (viri aliqui judiciosissimi) are mistaken here, when, following the Rabbins, they interpret this Text of a temporal restauration of Job to such an estate of honour and riches, as he had enjoyed in the former part of his life: this they call Jobs Resurrection and Redemption, &c. But his thoughts soared higher then so, I know, saith he; it is as if he should say, you take your selves to be the only knowing men, and as for me, Bildad hath set me among such as know not God, Chap. 18. 21. But hereby I know that I know him, 1 John 2. 3. Because I know him whom he hath sent to be Jesus Christ, John 17. 3. Not only as a Redeemer, but as my Redeemer, by a particular application of him to my self, which is the very pith and form of faith. This great Mystery of godlinesse I know, what ever else I am ignorant of; and I know it savingly, because I am secure of my interest in Christ, my Kinsman and Redeemer; and therefore I am no hypocrite or wicked man, as you would make me. Were it not for this word of possession, (Mine) the worst man alive, say the divel, might say as Job here doth; yea, repeat all the Articles of the Creed, to as good purpose as he: but that which tormenteth the divel is, he can say, Mine, to never a one of these. I know, said Job, when condemned for an hypocrite, that Christ is my Redeemer, and that this my Redeemer liveth for ever, and is for ever mine. So Doctor Taylor Martyr, when condemned for an Heretick, subscribed his last Will and Testament, in these words, Rowland Taylor, departing hence in a sure hope, without all doubting of a glorious Resurrection, I thank God my heavenly Father, through Jesus Christ my certaine Saviour. Acts & Mon.

And that he shall stand] As keeping the field when all his foes shall be his foot-stool, Psal. 110. 1. So he standeth, Rev. 10. 2. setting his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot upon the earth, (maugre all Hereticks and Anti-christs that thereof ever arise) as Lord Paramount of both.

At the latter day] Or last of all. Theodotion rendreth it, Novissimè, a general judgment of quick and dead at the last day, was in Jobs time, and afterwards by Zoroaster, and other Heathens (as Lucretius, Theopompus, Plato, Cicero, Ovid, &c.) believed and foretold. But in processe of time, this true and pure Doctrine was darkned amongst them, and when once it was extinct, Superstitions, and other vaine fopperies over-grew the greatest part of the world. The ancient tradition was, that the latter age of the world should be so filthy all over, that as it could not bee washed with water, as once, so it should be washed with fire, 2 Pet. 3. 10.

Upon the earth] Or, over the earth, to wit, in the aire. For there it is probable Christ will sit in the clouds of the aire neer unto the earth, whether the Elect shal be caught up to meet the Lord, and so shal they ever be with the Lord, 1 Thes. 4. 17. There the divels shall be subdued and sentenced, where they have ruled and plaid Rex, Ephes.

Eph.2.2, ſee Mat.24.30. ſome read it, And this (pointing to his body) ſhall ſtand up at the laſt day upon the earth.

Verſe 26. And though after my ſkin, wormes deſtroy this body.] Here he poynteth again, as doth likewiſe David. when Pſal.34.6. he ſaith, This poor man cryed, and the Lord heard him, &c. So the ancient Believers, when they came to that Article in the Creed, I believe the Reſurrection of the fleſh, were wont to add, Etiam hujus carnis, even of this fleſh, pointing to ſome naked part of their body; or elſe alluding to that of the Apoſtle, This mortal muſt put on, &c.

Wormes deſtroy this body] Heb. They deſtroy this; he ſaith not this body, quod ob deformitatem ſummam, non licerit corpus dicere, ſaith Vatablus, So worn it was, and waſted with ſores and ſickneſſes, that it could ſcarce be called a body. And yet it was not at the worſt neither, for in the grave it ſhould be worm-eaten, and ſomething more. Mihi experto credite, ſaith Auſtin, Believe me who have tryed it, open dead mens Sepulchers, and upon their heads ye ſhall find toads crawling, begotten of their brains, on their loynes ſerpents, begotten of their Rains, in their bellies wormes begotten of their bowels, &c.

Serm.43. ad frat.in erem.

Yet in my fleſh.] Hebr. Out of my fleſh, as out of a caſement.

I ſhall ſee God.] I ſhall ſee Chriſt, Chriſtum in corpore, (Auſtins wiſh) the humane and glorified body of Chriſt, who is God bleſſed for ever, as alſo the myſtical body of his Church perfectly united unto him, 1 John 3.2. To this ſenſe ſome render the Text thus, I ſhal ſee God in my fleſh, that is, I ſhall ſee Chriſt ſitting in glory, cloathed with fleſh, or in the likeneſſe of man. And here do but think with thy ſelf, (though it far paſſe the reach of any mortal thought, ſaith One) what an infinite inexplicable happineſſe it will be, to look for ever upon the glorious body of Jeſus Chriſt, ſhining with incomprehenſible beauty, and to conſider that even every vein of that bleſſed body bled to bring thee to heaven: And that it being with ſuch exceſſe of glory hypoſtatically united to the ſecond Perſon in Trinity, hath honoured and advanced thy Nature, in that reſpect far above the brighteſt Cherub. The whole verſe may be read thus, And after I ſhall awake, though this body ſhall be deſtroyed, yet out of my fleſh ſhall I ſee God. And being thus read, it is a plainer and fuller confeſſion of the Reſurrection, ſaith an Interpreter. It is common in Scripture to compare death to ſleep and Reſurrection to awaking, Dan.12.2. Pſal.17.15. The bodies of the Saints are laid in the grave, as in a bed of Roſes, to ripen and mellow againſt the Reſurrection, and they write upon their graves, as One did once, Reſurgam, I ſhall ſurely riſe again. Moſes his body hid in the valley of Moab, appeared afterwards glorious in Mount Tabor. This is matter of joy and triumph, as it was here to Job and to thoſe good ſouls who were to loſe all, Dan.12.2. and thoſe Heb. 11.35. conſidering that God by rotting would refine their bodies, and in due time raiſe them conformably to Chriſts moſt glorious body, the ſtandard. The forethought of this cheared up Davids good heart, Pſalm 16.9. and thoſe in Iſaiah, chap. 26.19. and the good people in our Saviours time, John 11.24. I know (ſaith Martha, concerning her brother Lazarus) that he ſhall riſe again at the Reſurrection, at the Conſolation, ſaith the Syriack Interpreter. Reſurrection and Conſolation then were termes equivalent. Hence that great Apoſtle, 2 Cor.4.17. For this cauſe we faint not, ſaith he; For what cauſe? Becauſe we believe, that he which raiſed up the Lord Jeſus, ſhall raiſe us up alſo by Jeſus, and ſhall preſent us with you. And the ſame Apoſtle maketh this Doctrine of the Reſurrection, the Canon of Conſolation, 1 Theſ. 4. 13,14. &c. to the end.

D. King.

Beauchama.

Verſe 27. Whom I ſhall ſee for my ſelf.] He ſpeaketh confidently, as one full aſſured of a Reſurrection; which if it ſhould not be, how ſhould there be a remuneration of the body? Say not, We cannot ſee how 'tis poſſible. See we not a yearly Reſurrection of graſſe, grain, herbs, flowers, fruits every Spring tide? Know we not that men can of aſhes make glaſſes? that a Chymiſt can of ſeveral metals mixt together, extract the one from the other, and reduce every metal to its own ſpecies or kind? Etiam animalcula quædam typi Reſurrectionis ſunt, ſaith Lavater. Some little living creatures are Types of the Reſurrection. He inſtanceth in Dormiſe, which ſleep all winter, and revive in the Spring; in Silk-wormes, which dying, leave nothing behind them but a certain excrement, which being born about in the boſomes of Lavat. in Job 14.12.

women

women, takes heat and reviveth. Wherefore if Nature do such things, shall it be held hard for the God of Nature to raise the dead? The keeping green of Noah's Olive-tree in the time of the flood, the blossoming of Aarons dry Rod, the flesh and sinewes coming to Ezekiels dry bones, what were these, but lively emblemes of the Resurrection?

And mine eyes shall behold, and not another.] Here he maintaineth the identity of his flesh and body in the Resurrection, an identity, I say, not specifical only, but numerical or individual. The self same particular body which fell, shall rise. This was denyed of old by the Marcionites, Rasidians and Valentinians (those Semi-Saddaces, as Tertullian termeth them;) and after them Eutychius Bishop of Constantinople, who (as Gregory saith) taught, that men rising again, should have ayery bodies, and not fleshly, yea more subtile then the Aire, abusing that place of the Apostle, It is sown a natural body, it is raised again a spiritual body, &c. but his book was burnt as Heretical. A spiritual body it is called, for its great strength and activity wherewith it shall be endowed, and whereby it is enabled to bear a weight of glory; as also, for that it shall have no need of food, sleep, or other natural helps, but we shall be as the Angels of God, Matth. 22. 30. yet still the same men that now we are. Let no man say with Nicodemus, How can this be? There is no difficulty to Omnipotency. Phil. 3. ult. Besides, there is a substance still preserved, even when the body is turned to dust, and this shall be raised, cleared and reunited to the soul. He that made man at first of nothing, can easily remake him of something. And what though his dust be scattered hither and thither, and mixt with that of others? The skilful Gardener having sundry sorts of seeds mixt together, can soon sever them: and shall not he who hath the whole earth in his fist discern the dust of his Saints one from another? Little balls or pickles of Quick-silver being scattered on the ground mix not themselves with any of another kind: But if any man gather them, they run together into one of their own accord; So it is here, saith a Father. Tert. de Resurrect. lib. 2. Greg. Nyssen.

Though my raines be consumed within me] Though from my skin outward to my raines inward, all be wasted, yet all shall be raised and restored. The Vulgar rendreth these words thus, This hope is laid up in my bosome; and is by Burgensis expounded thus, This is the only thing that I do most earnestly wish and wait for, viz. to see Christ in the flesh at the last day: the raynes are the seat of strong desires.

Verse 28. But ye should say, why persecute we him?] This ye shall one day surely say, Then shall ye return and discern between the righteous and the wicked, &c. Mal. 3. 18. Then shall it repent you (if you did do so now) that ye have reated and reviled me for an hypocrite, viz. when God hath cleared mine integrity, (as he did chap. 42.) or at the last day howsoever, what time there shall be a Resurrection of names as well as of bodies. Would ye hardly so doe, it would be some satisfaction. Quasi parvum putasset posse offendere. You have heard by the confession I have made, I am no miscreant, no misbeliever, for that I do hold fast the faithful Word. Nam olim dicitis cur eum persequebamur? Tigur.

The root of the matter is in me.] Or, the root of the word, the engrafted word of God, that is able to save my soul, hath taken deep root in me, Jam. 1. 21. I hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience, 1 Tim. 3. 9. this, is the Cabinet, that, the Jewel kept therein. And with what face can ye condemn such an one for a cast-away, who am sorely afflicted indeed, so that my very raines are consumed within me, my graces also haply are somewhat defloured, and it is little better with me then with a tree in winter, and as a Tyle tree, whose sap is in the root, Isai. 5. 13. But so long as the root of the matter is in me, that radical grace of faith, and such I do verily, as ye have heard, the words of truth and soberness (as some fruits of a sound faith) sure you should handle me with more tenderness, as one that hath some sap and substance in him.

Verse 29 Be ye afraid of the sword] Heb. Be ye afraid for your selves, from the face of the sword, Gods sore, and great, and strong sword, Isai. 27. 1. that hangeth over your heads as it were by a twined thred. O tremble at Gods judgements, whilst they hang in the threatnings. He that trembleth not in hearing, shall be cut to pieces in feeling, as that Martyr said, Gods stroke was smooth to the end, Ezek. 21. 13.

If

If Job be under his rod, they that persecute him, under what pretence soever, shall feel the dint of his Sword, of his deep displeasure. Now it is a fearful thing to fall into the punishing hands of the living God. And cruelty toward others, (toward his own especially) he will be sure to punish, for he is gracious, Exod. 22. 27. Fugite ergo à facie gladii, flee therefore from the face of the sword, (so the vulgar rendreth this text:) The sword is an instrument of death; it hath its name in Hebrew from laying waste; and the face, or faces of the sword shew that divine vengeance is near at hand. It is a mercy to men that God whets his Sword before he smites, and first takes hold on judgement, before his judgements take hold on us, Deut. 32. 41. Aug. in Ps. 30.

For wrath bringeth the punishment of the sword.] It is from displeased love, that God chastizeth his children; but from fierce wrath, that he plagueth his enemies: Some of these God punisheth here, lest his providence, but not all lest his patience and promise of judgement should be called into question.

That we may know that there is judgement.] Wherein they that rashly judge others shall be judged by God, Matth. 7. 1. And this Jobs friends knew well enough, but well weighed not, to fright themselves from rash censurings. He minds them therefore of their danger, and labours to prevent their sorrow, who had so much caused his. See the like in Jeremy chap. 26. 15. in our Saviour, in St. Stephen, &c. and learn to be like charitable; though your success be no better than Jobs was, upon whom, in lieu of this love they fell more foul than before; as will appear by their following discourses.

CHAP. XX.

Verse 1. Then answered Zophar the Naamathite and said.]

If a wise man contendeth with a foolish man, whether he rage or laugh, there is no rest, Prov. 29. 9. Christ piped to that crooked generation, Job mourned to them, but all to no purpose; absurd and unreasonable people will never be satisfied, or set down say what you can to them, such is their pertinacy and peevishness. Job had uttered himself in such passionate expressions as might have moved stony hearts. Sed surdo fabulam. He had set forth his own misery, begged their pity, made an excellent confession of his Faith, every word whereof had its weight, each sylable its substance: He had lastly terrified them with the threats of Gods Sword: but nothing would do. Zophar here (though he had little to say more, then what he had said chap. 11. yet he) takes occasion from Jobs last words, though full of love, to rough-hew him again, and makes as if he were necessitated thereunto for his own and his fellows necessary defence. Vatablus thinks that Zophar here maketh answer, not to the preceding words, but to those in the 12 Chapter, where Job had complained, that wicked Oppressors live commonly in greatest peace and prosperity. Whatever it is, Zophar henceforth will say no more: either he had said what he could, or was satisfied with Jobs Reply in the next Chapter: or lastly, quia laturum se operam credebat, as Mercer observeth, because he thought he should lose his labour, which no wise man would do. Tibi habent sere singula voces aliquid ponderis, Merl.

Verse 2. Therefore do my thoughts cause me to answer.] q. d. Whereas I had thought, O Job, to have spoke no more to thee, (for I see I do but lose my sweet words) thy last Comminatory expressions have altered my resolution. So nettled I am, that I must needily interrupt thee. And yet think not that I shall speak whatsoever lyeth uppermost: for I have dipped and dyed my words in my thoughts, which do now prompt me what to answer, and bid me make haste.

And for this I make haste.] Lest I should forget the particulars of thy speech, whereto I am to answer. Munster rendreth it thus, Et ob id promptitudo mea est intra me, as if Zophar had boasted of his ready elocution, as in the next verse of his ripe understanding. Some render it, For this I delight in answering. Lavat.

Verse 3.

Verse 3. I have heard the check of my reproach.] Zophar conceived himself disgraced as well as menaced by Job; and this kindled him: Some are of so testy a nature, saith one, so skittish and unquiet humour, that a little offensive breath, a disgraceful word, blows them up into rage that will not be laid down, without revenge, or reparation of their credits. Jobs reproofs were by this man construed for reproaches: and what was spoken to them all, he applieth to himself. It appeareth that he was sick of a Noli me tangere; when being touched so gently, nettle-like, he stingeth him who handled him.

And the Spirit of my understanding causeth me to answer.] This I shall do with reason and understanding, not with passion and recrimination, Spiritus Dei nec mendax, nec mordax; meekness of wisdom is a fruit of Gods Spirit: by the which, and not by his reasonable soul only, Zophar seemeth to himself to be carried on. And surely they are holy Truths all along that he uttereth, but wrested and misapplyed as to Job, whom he will needs have to be wicked, because wretched; Interim observemus, saith Lavater, mean-while let us observe, that these things; sc. the state and portion of the wicked, the greatness and suddenness of their punishments is therefore by Gods appointment so oft propounded and pressed in this whole Book (whereof this is almost the sole Argument) that we might be right in that point; fear to offend, and not fret at the wicked mans prosperity, which is but momentany. The Tigurines translate this clause thus, Tametsi me conscientia hic consolabitur; Albeit herein my conscience shall comfort me.

Verse 4. Knowest thou not this of old?] Whether Zophar intended his own Conscience or not, before, he here appeareth to Job; and secretly taxeth him of going against it, or, at least of grosse ignorance: Knowest thou not this, which every one knoweth, that is not a meer Novice, and which is proved by the examples and experience of all ages? To wit, Malis male esse, that it shall be ill with the wicked: This is a generally received maxime, and the Histories of all ages do plainly and plentifully confirm it. Hinc colligo, diligenter observanda esse, &c. Hence we may well gather, that Gods Judgements against wicked persons are to be diligently observed out of the Histories of all ages, both divine, and humane. Merlin.

Since man was placed upon the earth.] Heb. Since he placed man upon the earth; viz. in that earthly Paradise the Garden of Eden, planted on purpose for mans pleasure; where nevertheless he stayed not one night, as some gather from Psal. 49.12. but soon by his sin became like the beasts that perish, that dye of the murrain saith Junius, and so are good for nothing. Cain for like cause was cast out, the old world drowned, Sodom and her sisters consumed with fire, &c. There cannot be one instance given to the contrary of that which is here affirmed, viz. Pecoribus morticinis.

Verse 5. That the triumphing of the wicked is short.] Heb. That the shouting of the wicked is from near. it is of no long standing, but like a blaze of thorns that is quickly extinct, or as a bubble in the water that is soon down: The pleasure of sin is but for a season, Hujus sententiæ exemplum habes in Goliah, saith Brentius here, An example of this sentence we have in Goliah, 1 Sam. 17. And another in his Countrymen the Philistines, who had twice beaten the Israelites, and taken the Ark, 1 Sam. 4. but this tryumph was soon at an end: and so was that of the Jewes when they had crucified Christ, and now danced upon his grave, as the Proverb is; but he arose in despite of them, and set up his Trophies. Say that the tryumph of the wicked should last as long as life, what's that to the infinite? Punctum est quod vivimus, & puncto minus. But wicked men commonly dye before their time, as Solomon phraseth it, Eccles. 7.17. that is, by an untimely death, they live not half their dayes, Psal. 55. 25. God cuts them off, that others may live more quietly: and whiles they live, their comforts are not sincere, but mixt with many molestations: Little knoweth the world where their new shooes pinch them, as that Roman said. One little drop of an evil conscience can trouble a whole sea of the wicked mans tryumphs.

The joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.] Zophar had a strong conceit that Job was but an hypocrite, one that was wicked before God in heart, notwithstanding his fair pretences and professions of piety, and should therefore be led forth with the workers of iniquity, Psal. 125.5. as cattel led to the slaughter, or as Bulls led to the Altar, with Garlands on their hornes, and Muſick by their ſides, Act. 14. 13. but ſuddenly they feel and fall under the murthering Axe. Such is the hypocrites joy, and Zophar would he ſhould know ſo much, being ſenſible of this, that himſelf was the party in ſpeech, ſith his proſperity had ended in miſery, and God had daſhed all his comforts.

Verſe 6. Though his excellency mount up to the heavens.] Though he conceit himſelf, and would have others hold him to be more then a man, and to accord him divine honour. If his pride aſcend even up to heaven, ſo the Vulgar rendreth it. If his gifts aſcend up to heaven, ſo the Septuagint, and indeed hypocrites are ever lifted up with their gifts, as ſome Corinthians were with their waxen wings, 1 Cor. 8. 1. being enriched in all utterance and knowledge, and coming behind others in no gift, 1 Cor. 1. 7. yet were they babes at beſt, and carnal, walking as men, chap. 3 2, 3. their Religion was more in notion then in motion: They had the ſpiritual Rickets, grew big in the head, &c. as the Moon, they encreaſed in light, but not in heat. In which reſpect alſo, and for her external priviledges, Capernaum is ſaid to be lifted up to heaven, Matth. 11. 23. And the Temporary to taſte of the heavenly gift, to partake of the powers of the world to come, Hebr. 6. 4, 5.

Sen. in Thieſt. Cic. ad Attic. And his head reach unto the clouds.] Æqualis aſtris gradior, ſaith He in the Poet: and Bibulus in Cœlo eſt, ſaith the Orator. The Heathen Rhetorick is but dull ſtuff to that in this Book; and indeed in this one Chapter. An hypocrites head is oft above the clouds of heaven, when his heart is beneath the clods of the earth: Like the Eagle, which when he ſoareth higheſt of all, even out of ſight almoſt, hath his eye all the while upon his prey below. Or like the Apricock tree, which ſhoots up and leanes upon the wall, but is faſt rooted in the earth. This whole Alluſion may y be unto a tree, like that of Nebuchadnezzar, whoſe height was great, and reached unto heaven, Dan. 4. 10, 11. with 22. Or that of the Amorite, whoſe height was like the heights of the Cedars, and he was ſtrong as the Oaks, Amos 3. 9.

Verſe 7. Yet he ſhall periſh for ever like his own dung.] Then the which nothing is more filthy and deteſtable. See this exemplified in Herod, Haman, Boniface the Eight, bloody Bonner buried in a muck-hil, &c. The word rendred dung, hath its denomination from rowling, becauſe it is rolled out of doores, and ſwept out of ſight: Many inſtances hereof might be given in the priſtine and moderne Perſecutors, puniſhed with ignominious and diſgraceful ends. Siſera and Jabin periſhed at Endor, and became as dung for the earth, Pſal. 83. 10. Jeboram died undeſired. Iſai. 14. 23 Julian the Apoſtate abhorred. God hath for ſuch, a Beſome of Deſtruction.

They which have ſeen him, Where is he?] They which have ſeen him with wonder, ſhall now ſee him with horrour, when they ſee him at ſuch an under, ſuch an ebbe, ſuch a dead low water. See this exemplified in that proud Caldean, Iſai. 14. 4, 12, 16.

Tam ſubito caſu, quæ valuere, ruunt.

Verſe 8. He ſhall flee away as a dream, &c.] As a delightful dream is ſoon forgotten; ſo ſhall it be with the hypocrite. His felicity is meerly imaginary, his joy is but as the commotion of the affections in a dream, which comes to nothing, Iſai. 29. 7, 8. A man that is to be hanged next day, may dream over night he ſhall be a King. A man that ſleepeth upon a ſteep Rock, may dream of great poſſeſſions befalne him, and ſtarting for joy, may fall to the bottom, and miſchieve himſelf, Pſal. 73. 20. As a dream when one awaketh, ſo, O Lord, when thou awakeſt, thou ſhalt deſpiſe their image; that is, their painted pageant of outward pomp. Surely ſuch, of all men, walk in a vain ſhew, or in an image, Pſal. 39. 6. their ſeeming proſperity hath no tack or conſiſtence in it, themſelves and their money periſh together, Act. 8. 20.

Yea, he ſhall be chaſed away.] By the diſpleaſure of Almighty God, he ſhall be driven or rather kickt out of the world.

As

As a vision of the night.] Phasma, sive Phantasma, which passes sooner out of memory, and is more transient then a days vision.

Verse 9. The eye also which saw him, shall see him no more.] He shall be utterly out of sight, out of mind; Unkest, unkist, as the Northern Proverb hath it. See chap. 7.8,10. Where Job speaketh as much of himself, and Zophar here twits him with it: as if Sorex suo periisset indicio, Job were an hypocrite by his own confessions: so ingenious is evil will.

Verse 10. His children shall seek to please the poor.] Tenuiores sunt ipsis tenuibus, saith Junius; shall be poorer then the poorest, and full glad to comply with them, and humour them, to beg with them, if not to beg of them. A just hand of God upon Oppressors, whose work it hath been to make many poor, and now their posterity are brought to extreme poverty. Such shame consult these men to their houses, besides their sin against their own souls, Hab 2.10. See the Note there. Some read it thus, The poor shall oppresse his children; and how grievous that is, see Prov. 28.3. with the Note. A Heathen Historian observed, that Dionysius, after his death, paid deare for his Sacriledge, in the disasters that befell his children. Val. lib. 1. cap. 2

And his hands shall restore their goods.] Or, For his hands shall, &c. They should indeed restore their ill-gotten goods, though to the impoverishing of their posterity, though they left their children no more but a wallet to beg from door to door. But such are rare birds: most men will rather venture it, then be drawne, Zacheus-like, to make restitution. God must give them a Vomit, as vers. 20. or they will lay up nothing: part they will not with those murthering morsels, that riches of iniquity (Luke 16.9) they have devoured, but what they can neither will nor chuse, as being compelled to do it either by Law or force, either by justice or violence. The right owners do not alwayes receive what was by wrench or wile gotten from them: but these oppressors, or their imps are many times rooked or robbed by others as bad as themselves (as the usurious Jewes are at this day by the injurious Papists, who use them as Spunges, which they may squeeze at their pleasure:) God so disposing and ordering the disorders of men to his owne glory.

Verse 11. His bones are full of the sin of his youth.] Fowl practises have so grown up together with some sinful people, that they may say of them as the Scrupeo Quartilla did of her Virginity, that she could not remember that ever she had been a maid. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyedst not my voice, Jer. 22.21. Then thou hadst no mind to it, but now thou hast lesse, thy heart being hardned by the deceitfulnesse of sin, Heb. 3.17. Now in the froth of these youthful vanities unrepented of, breedeth that worm of an evil conscience that never dyeth. In the best, they procure much ruth, though not utter ruine. The sweet wayes of my youth (saith a man afterwards eminent for holinesse) did breed such wormes in my soul, as that my heavenly Father will have me yet a little while continue my bitter Wormseed, because they cannot otherwise be killed. Thus he. Holy David prayeth hard, Psal. 25.7. Remember not against me the sins of my youth. Austin was much in the same suit. That age of mans life is very subject to, and usually very full of sin, yea reproachful evils, Jer 31.19. Fleshly lusts that war against the soul, 1 Pet. 2.12. and like so many noisom diseases soak into the bones, and suck out the marrow, to the consumption and destruction of the whole man. Junonem meam tratam habeam si unquam me nimium in rim Virginem. Petron.

Which shall lye down with him in the dust.] that is, saith Vatablus, God will so forsake him, that he shall never repent, but shall dye in his sins, which is worse then to dye in prison, or to dye in a ditch; for they that dye in sin, shall rise in sin, and stand before Christ in sin, and how shall they be able to stand before him?

Verse 12. Though wickednesse be sweet in his mouth.] As poison swallowed in some pleasing meat or drink. Agrippina, in poisoning her husband Claudius the Emperor, tempered it in meat he most delighted in. Poison given in Wine, works more furiously, as did that Wassail the Monk drank to King John of England. That wickednesse with a witnesse here meant, is oppression, and is said to be held in the mouth, and hid under the tongue, as some think, because it is oft covered with goodly speeches, whereby he seeketh to circumvent and deceive his neighbour. Others by these expressions will have understood continuance in sin and complacency therein, rolling it under his tongue, as a child doth a piece of sugar, which he is loath to part with, and retaining it a long time in his mouth that he may taste it with more pleasure. Philoxenus wished his neck were as long as a Cranes, that he might the longer keep the taste of his sweet-meats and dainty morsels. Such is the wicked mans wish, and his practise is answerable: for under his tongue is mischief and vanity, Psal. 10.7. He licks his lips with the remembrance of his former sins, and so retaineth them in his desires, at least, whilst he reacteth former acts with delight. Thus the rebellious Israelites called to mind the Flesh-pots of Egypt, and were moved: and thus afterwards they multiplyed their whoredomes by calling to remembrance the dayes of their youth, wherein they had gone a whoring in the Land of Egypt, Ezek. 23.21.

Aristot. Ethic. l. 3. Ælian. var. hist. l. 10.

Verse 13. Though he spare it, and forsake it not.] This is the same in sense with the former verse, and the second time repeated, that Job might know, that he was the man here meant, Ut qui in malis meibus sibi placuisset, saith Merlin, as one who took pleasure in raising himself upon anothers ruines. And another good Note the same Author giveth here, viz. That as any thing is more sweet and delectable to the sensual appetite, so much the more should we suspect it, as fearing a snare laid for us therein, by that old man-slayer. Viperis latet in vepreculis. Diabolus capite blandus, dentes abscondit, caudâ ligat. Divorce the flesh from the devil, and then there is no great danger.

But keepeth it still within his mouth.] And will not be drawn to spet it out by confession, and to carry it through the dung-port of his mouth into the brook Kedron, which was the Town-ditch. Satan knowes there is no way to purge the sick soul but upwards. He therefore laboureth to hold his lips close, that the soul may not disburden it self, and God come in with his Cordials of comfort. See the Note on the former verse.

Verse 14. Yet his meat in his bowels is turned.] Soure sauce he hath at length to his sweet meats, viz. Gripes and throbs of conscience, terrors and tortures inexpressible, a greedy Vulture feeding upon his entrails (as the Poets fained of Prometheus) those Furies or hell-hags, (so much mentioned by them) as haunting evil-doers. In the transgression of an evil man there is a snare, Prov. 29.6. There is a cord to strangle his joyes with, to mar his mirth. Did not Josephs brethren experiment this? and Ahab in his house of ivory? and Belshazzar amidst his sensualities?

Prima ipsum dulcis est, sed finis amaris amarus:
Luxu verubo Venus, tristis abire solet.

The firmest cup of honey ends in the dregs of gall, even the gall of Asps. Voluptas and Augustus went yoaked together among the Romans. Did men but forecast the sad issues of sin, they durst not but be innocent.

It is the gall of Asps within him.] Gall of any sort is bitter, but that of Aspe is most poisonful and mortal. Pliny saith, that the poison of Asps is nothing else but their gall. An Asp is a kind of serpent, not known in these parts of the world. Æ. Manetho saith, That the biting of an Asp is uncurable; and others say, that it killeth without remedy within four houres space. Unto this kind of poison is sinne fitly compared; for when an Asp stingeth a man, it doth first tickle him so as it maketh him laugh, then it casteth him into a sleep, till the poison by little and little gets to the heart, after which it paineth him more then ever before it delighted him: So doth wicked mirth. It is a bitter-sweet. Bernard compareth it to the fish, which first yeildeth pleasure, and afterwards smart. Austin saith, Many devour that on earth which they must digest in hell, where they shall have punishment without pity, misery without mercy, horror without succour, mischief without measure, torments without end, and past imagination. When therefore thou art making a covenant with sin, say to thy soul, as Boaz said to his kinsman, Ruth 4.4. what time thou buyest it, thou must have Ruth with it, So, if thou wilt have the sweet of sin, thou must have the curse with it, and let thy soul answer, as he there doth, No, I may not do it, I shall marre mine own inheritance.

γλυκὺ πικρόν. Dulce acidum.

Verse 15. He hath swallowed down riches.] As wilde beasts do their prey, as the greater greater fishes do the lesser, greedily, easily, suddenly, irrecoverably, as the fire swalloweth up the fuel, as the lean Kine devoured the fat, and as the Pamphagus glutton doth his tid bits, his sweet morsels. This word, Hath swallowed, sheweth his infinite and unsatiate desire of getting and gathering riches; and that by continual gaping after more, he loseth the pleasure of what he hath already. Like as a dog at his Masters table swalloweth the whole meat he casteth him without any pleasure, gaping still for the next morsel. He knoweth no other language but that of the Horse-Leeches daughter, Give, give; or that of greedy Esau, returning from the field, as hungry as an Hunter, Gen. 25.30. Feed me I pray thee, or, let me swallow as thee, (like as Camels are fed by casting gobbets into their mouth) thy red, red, &c. Gold is no better then red earth, and cannot terminate mans appetite, Eccles. 5.10.

And he shall vomit them up again] Either by remorse and restitution in the mean time, or by despair and impenitent horror hereafter; he shall vomit them up, and together with them his vital blood and spirits: he shall bring up his very heart withall, as Judas did, together with those thirty pieces of silver, Mat. 27. 4. all his bowels gushing out, Act. 1.18. He thought to have digested his ill gotten goods, as the Estrich doth iron: but Pelican-like, he is forced to cast them up again. The Whale that swallowed Jonah found him hard meat, and for his own ease was forced to regurgitate. Think the same of this wretched Mammonist. The Septuagint interpret the Text, when they thus render it, Wealth unjustly gathered shall be vomited up again, and an Angel shall hale it out of his mouth. An evil Angel, say their Interpreters. But the Hebrew verity referreth it to God, as an act of his divine justice.

קאה Pelicanus à vomitu. Vide Plin. l.10. c.30.

Graeci elegantiùs tropo explicare.

God shall cast them out of his belly] As by a Writ of Ejectment, or rather, as by a violent purgation that shall work both wayes, Jer. 51.44. I will punish Bel in Babylon, and I will bring forth out of his mouth what he hath swallowed up, viz. the wealth of the Nations round about him. This God will take out of his belly, so that a piece of his heart shall go with it. In the last destruction of Jerusalem, some of the Jewes had swallowed their gold, that the Roman Souldiers might not have it; this was found out, and thereupon thousands of them were killed and ript up, for the gold that might be found in their stomacks and bowels. In like sort shall God deal with those covetous Caitives, that have devoured the riches of iniquity, that have suck'd in pestilential Air, as Hos. 8.7. See the Note there.

Verse 16. He shall suck the poison of Asps] That lyeth in his head, whence also it hath its name in the Original. See the Note on vers. 14. Caput aspidis fugit, saith the Vulgar. It is said of the Toad that he hath in his head a stone of great vertue called Borax. But the Asp hath nothing in his head but strong poyson. This the rich wretch shall suck. Like as he was wont to suck the blood of the poor oppressed, to eat their flesh, Psal. 14.4. and to exsecrate them.

The Vipers tongue shall slay him] Parvula causa admodum maleficium, saith Junius: His wickednesse shall prove his bane, unlesse he presently take the Antidote of Repentance whereby to expel the poysonous ayr ere it get to the vitals. Repentance is the soules best vomit, the hardest, but wholsomest Physick. It is Repentance unto life, whereas the sins of the impenitent are mortal, saith Saint John 1 ep. 5.17. or rather Immortal, as saith Saint Paul, Rom. 2.5. The hand that is here and elsewhere lifted up in threatning, Isai. 26.11. will fall down in punishing. The wages of sin is death. When the Barbarians saw the Viper hanging on Saint Pauls hand, they looked when he would fall down dead, Acts 28.4.6. The divels designe was there to have slaine Paul, but he was defeated. And Brentius doubteth that the Metaphor here used is taken not so much from Serpents, whose venome lyeth in their tongues, as from Satan, who by the Serpent in Paradise, cast our first parents into all kind of evils. Another there is, who thus descanteth upon this Text, Caput Viperis fugit. When Vipers engender, the female sucketh the head of the male, and biteth it off with great delight, then she conceiveth her young ones, which eat out her belly: So the Oppressour, getting the poor mans goods, they seem sweet unto him, but at the last his sin sucketh him out, for it biteth like a Serpent, and stingeth like an Adder, as Solomon saith of drunkennesse (which Austin calleth, dulce venenum, a sweet poyson) Prov. 23.32.

Brent. in loc.

Verse

Verſe 17. He ſhall not ſee the Rivers, the floods, &c.] that is, that plenty and abundance of all good things that cometh in to the righteous, Velut confertim, vertatim, & affatim, a confluence of all manner of comforts and contentments. Theſe the Oppreſſour ſhall have none of; for being inſatiable and vexed with the furies of an evil conſcience, they enjoy not any thing, though they abound with all things, being worſe then Tantalized: and if after his fall he ſeek to recruit himſelf, he ſhall never be able to effect it. He ſhall not ſee the Rivers, &c. The Seventy, and others after them, render it by an elegant Apoſtrophe, Ne ſpectet rivos, Let him never look after the Rivers, &c. for it will never be. He may pleaſe himſelf in hope and expectation of a better condition, but God will ſurely croſſe him. For his hoped for riches he ſhall have poverty, for pleaſure pain, for health ſickneſſe, for nouriſhment poiſon, for dignity diſgrace, for the favour of God, his wrath and hatred, for life deſtruction. A further account of the wicked mans non-enjoyment of what he had wrongfully wreſted from others, Zophar giveth us in the next verſe.

Mercer.

Verſe 18. That which he laboured for ſhall he reſtore.] (Great paines he hath taken to ſmall purpoſe) in hope to make himſelf happy, the reſult whereof is, Reddet laborem, he ſhall reſtore his labour, either by regret and remorſe of conſcience, or by Law, or by force, he ſhall be made to reſtore his ill-gotten goods, which he had laboured for even to laſſitude; for wicked men are ſore work-men, and oppreſſours are great pains-takers; κεκμηκοτες δ' πονοισι, in getting wealth unweariable.

Nazian.

And ſhall not ſwallow it down] Or if he do, as verſ. 15. it ſhall be but as the fiſh ſwalloweth the hook, or as the Whale ſwallowed Jonah, ill at eaſe till he had laid up again.

According to his ſubſtance ſhall the reſtitution be.] Hebr. According to the ſubſtance of his exchange. Opes compenſationis, the riches of his recompence, ſo the word is rendred, chap. 15. 31. The Oppreſſor is ſo infatuated, that he looks upon his curſed hoards as the reward of his labour, and rejoyceth in that whereof he hath more reaſon to repent, as Leah ſaid at the birth of her ſon Iſſachar, (but not well) God hath given me my hire, becauſe I have given my maiden to my husband, Gen. 30. 18. Felix ſvetus virtus vocatur: Dionyſius gloryed, that the Gods diſliked not his Sacriledge, becauſe they puniſhed him not preſently. But what ſaith Zophar here?

He ſhall not rejoyce therein] Or if he do for a while, yet the tryumphing of the wicked is but ſhort, ver. 5. as a blaze of thornes under a pot, or as a flaſh of lightning, which is followed by rending and roaring; he ſhall be filled with unmedicinable ſorrowes, when his Gold (his God) is taken from him, when he parteth with that whereon he had ſet his heart, and built his felicity.

Verſe 19. Becauſe he hath oppreſſed and forſaken the poor.] Hebr. Becauſe he hath cruſhed or broken in pieces. The Original word importeth (as One well obſerveth) Tyrannical Oppreſſion without mercy or moderation, without ho or hold: ſome give full ſcope to their rage and wrath, they put neither bond nor bridle upon their covetouſneſſe and cruelty: ſuch are characterized by this word.

And forſaken the poor.] Or, Left mean poor, viz. by leaving them without a livelyhood, and ſo as good as without life. A poor man in his houſe, is like a ſnail in his ſhell, cruſh that, and you kill him. They which read it, And forſaken the poor, give us this good Note, That as it is ſinful to forſake the poor, though we have never oppreſſed them, Matth. 25. 35, 36. (Not to do Juſtice is Injuſtice, not to ſhew mercy is cruelty, Mark 3. 4.) ſo to oppreſſe, and then forſake them, is far more ſinfull.

Becauſe he hath violently taken away.] Violently and in open view, in an impudent manner, He pulleth down mens houſes, but never thinketh of repairing them; ſo ſome read this Text. Let our Depopulators look to it, who build themſelves deſolate places, and deſire to live alone in the earth. This hath been noted as a great fault in our Nation. And therefore Goropius thinketh the Engliſh were called Angli becauſe they were ſo good Anglers, having skil to lay diverſe baits when they fiſhed for other mens livings.

Verſe

Verse 20. Surely he shall not feel quietnesse in his belly.] i. e. Peace in his conscience, satisfaction in his soul; but as he is still coveting more, being sick of a Dropsie or Bulimy, as it were; so he hath many inward gripings and grabbings, worse then any belly ache or sickness of the stomack: he never eateth to the satisfying of his soul, as the righteous man doth, but the belly of the wicked shall want, Prov. 13.25. His meat is so sawced, and his drink so spiced with the wrath of God, that he hath no joy of it: His belly is pained, his mind is in perpetual turmoile, whiles like a Ship laden, but not filled up, he hath enough to sink him, but not enough to satisfie him.

He shall not save of that which he desired.] Which he coveted with strong desire, and had as fief have been knockt on the head as parted with; as his Plate, Wardrobe Jewels, &c. neither can he save them, nor they him. Broughton rendreth; By that which he desired, he shall not be safe: and to like purpose, the Septuagint, Verse 21. There shall none of his meat be left.] Zophar still pursueth the Allegory of the belly; and in all, striketh at poor Job, who had scarce a bit of bread to eat, but yet was not without the hidden Manna, the feast of a good conscience, which made him say with Luther, Mendicato pane hic vivamus, &c. Let us take up with course fare here, sith we have better within, and better yet we shall have in heaven: in our Fathers house is bread enough, &c.

Therefore no man shall look for his goods.] Heb. His goods, or goodnesse. It was well said, That he that first called riches, Bona, Goods, was a better husband then Divine: But it may be thought that the most are such husbands. The common cry is, Who will shew us any good? The Lord answereth, Exod. 33.19. I will make all my good passe before thee, and I will proclaim the Name of the Lord before thee. The Prophet answereth, Mic. 6.8. He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good. viz. to do justly: and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. But most men are of his mind who said, He that will not venture his body, will never be valiant, and he that will not venture his soul, will never be rich. But what saith the Prophet? He that getteth riches, and not by right, shall dye a poor fool, Jer. 17.11. And what saith Zophar here? He shall dye a plain beggar, and leave no estate worth the looking after, or suing for: this falleth not out alwayes, but ὡς ἐπὶ τὸ πολύ, many times it doth, as is easily to be observed. Nevessa.

Verse 22. In the fulnesse of his sufficiency he shall be in straits.] The covetous man never hath a sufficiency (but is as greedily gasping still after more, as if he were not worth an half-peny) much lesse a fulnesse of sufficiency, a superfinity, a superabundance. What soever Esau pretended in his, I have enough my brother, Gen. 33.9. Jacob could indeed say truly, I have enough. ver. 11. for godlinesse only hath an autarkie, 1 Tim. 6.6. True piety hath true plenty, and is never without a well-contenting sufficiency, wherein the good man is, when in the fulnesse of straits. See it in David, 1 Sam. 30.6. in Habakkuk, chap. 3.16,17. in Paul, 2 Cor. 6.10. Phil. 4.11. he had nothing, and yet possessed all things. But that which Zophar here drives at, is to shew that the Oppressour shall be ruinated when at highest, and when he least looketh for it; as was Nebuchadnezzar, Haman, Belshazzar, Babylon the great, Rev. 18.7,8. How was Alexander the Great surprized at a Feast? Cæsar in the Senate house? many of the Emperors in their own Palaces, &c?

Every hand of the wicked shall come upon him.] Or, Of the Labourer, whose wages he hath detained. Or, of the poor oppressed, whom he hath forced to labour hard for a poor living. Broughton rendreth it, Each hand of the injured and grieved shall come upon him; and so he shall have many fists about his ears, many ready to rifle him and to pull a fleece from him.

Verse 23. When he is about to fill his belly] It appeareth by this expression, that it was belly timber wherein the wicked man placed his sufficiency, ver. 22. his felicity Si ventri bene fit, si Lateri, saith the Epicure in Horace. If the belly may be filled, the body fitted, that's all that these Lurcones, these Losels look after. Polyphemus knew no other God but his belly. There were belly-gods in Saint Pauls time, such as of whom he could not speak with dry eyes, Phil. 3.18-19. Such are compared by Clemens Alexandrinus to the Sea-asse, that hath his heart in his belly: By others to the Locust, cuſt, the belly whereof is ſaid to be joyned to his mouth, and to end at his taile: to the fiſh called Blax, that is altogether unprofitable: and to Rats and Mice, good for nothing but to devour victuals. When therefore ſuch a Pamphagus is about to fill his belly and to pamper his paunch, or otherwiſe to gorge himſelf with the full meſſes of ſins Dainties (as the Viper lives on venemous things, the Spider on Aconite, the Sow on ſwill, as Tartarians on Carrion, holding them as dainty as other men do Veniſon) then, ſaith Zophar,

God ſhall caſt the fury of his wrath upon him.] Heb. He ſhall ſend forth, &c. He will no longer keep in his judgments in the chaines of mercy, but give them their full forth upon this wicked Oppreſſor; and that even very then, when hee bids his heart make merry, and aſſures himſelfe of unchangeable happineſſe. For,

He ſhall rain it upon him (that is, reveal it from heaven againſt him, *Rom.*1.)
Matth. 24.38 while he is eating] As it befel thoſe Cormorants, *Numb.*11.33. and the old world, Luke 17. Sudden deſtruction cometh upon them, as travel upon a woman with child; Vel ut pluvia quæ ſereno cœlo inopinantes opprimit; Or as foul weather that comes unſent for, and oft unlook'd for. The Vulgar rendreth it, And he ſhall rain his wrath upon him. But this Zophar ſetteth forth in the next verſe, where he denounceth war and weapons.

Verſe 24. He ſhall flee from the iron weapons.] i. e. whiles he ſeeks to ſhun one miſchief, he ſhall fall into another: and when he thinks to run from death, he runs to it. God, who can do what he will with his own bare hand, is here brought in after the manner of men with ſword and bow, to ſhew, that both at home and afar off he can tame his Rebels. Neither boots it any man to ſtand out with God, or to ſeek to ſave himſelf by fight or flight: ſith he is that *King againſt whom there is no riſing up. Prov.*30.31. and if he be angry, no other helps can relieve us. Braſſe and iron can fence me againſt an Arrow or a ſword, but if I were to be caſt into a furnace of fire, it would help to torment me, if into a pit of water, to ſink me. Now our God is a conſuming fire, and his breath a ſtream of brimſtone, *Iſai.*30.33. Submit your ſelves therefore to God, *Jam.*4.7. Humble your ſelves therefore under his mighty hand, and he ſhall lift you up in due ſeaſon, 1 *Pet.*5. To run into God, is the way to eſcape him: as to cloſe and get in with him that would ſtrike you, doth avoyd the blow.

And the bow of ſteel ſhall ſtrike him through] Or, ſhall change him; that is, kil him: Death is our great change, and to the wicked a diſmal change; for they ſhal be killed with death, Rev.2.23. Then Balaam and his bribes, Baltaſar and his bowls, Dives and his diſhes, Herod and his Harlots, the Uſurer and his bills, the Merchant and his meaſures, &c. ſhall part aſunder for ever. But that is not the worſt of it: The word here uſed ſignifieth exciſion or cutting off, and hence that of Bathſheba, *Prov.*31.8. Bene chaloph, children of deſtruction, anſwerable to that of our Saviour, John 17. 12. A ſon or child of perdition; that is, a man devoted to utter deſtruction.

Verſe 25. It is drawn and cometh out of the body.] that is, the Arrow out of the Quiver, or the ſword out of the ſheath (as the Vulgar tranſlateth it.) By a like Metaphor the body is called the ſouls ſheath, *Dan.*7.15. But I rather take it properly: It cometh out of his body; that is, out of the wicked mans body, who is under ſuch a deep and deadly wound as Jehoram was, whom Jehu ſhot through the heart; and as William Rufus was by Walter Tirrel, who in hunting miſtook him for a Dear.

Yea the gliſtering ſword cometh out of his gall] And ſo the wound muſt needs be mortal, ſith none can come at the gall to cure it. The wicked ſhall be double ſlaine, (firſt with Gods bow, and then with his ſword) rather then he ſhall eſcape. How much better were it, to fall down as Paul did, *Rom.*7. ſlaine with the ſword of the Spirit? Bernard told his brother, a ſouldier, that becauſe he would not liſten to the word of exhortation, God would ſhortly open a way to his hard heart by his gliſtering ſword; which accordingly befel him.

Terrors are upon him] Heb. the terrible upon him; which ſome interpret of Divels or hell-hags. The Vulgar rendreth it, Then horrible nets ſhall come upon him. The word is uſed for Gyants, *Deut.*2.10. The Emins ſhall fall upon him, that is, men of fierce and cruel ſpirits. But better take it for terrors, as we render it, and ſo the ſenſe is, That the wicked when he ſees he muſt needſly dye, is ſurprized with greateſt anxieties and perplexities of ſpirit, as beholding that threefold dreadful ſpectacle, Death, Judgement, Hell, and all to be paſſed through by his poor ſoul.

men

Verſe 26. All darkneſſe ſhall be hid in his ſecret place] That is, ſaith Diodate, whereſoever he ſhall think to find a place of ſafeguard, there ſhall he meet with ſome horrible miſchance. Men that are proſcribed, and ſought for to death, uſually hide themſelves, as divers Jewes did in Privies at the laſt deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and were thence drawn out to the ſlaughter. The Duke of Buckingham in Richard 3 his time was betrayed by his ſervant Bannifter. Appianus telleth of a Roman hid by his wife, and then diſcovered by his wife to the Murtherer, to whom ſhe ſoon after alſo was married. Others render and ſenſe the words thus, The wicked ſhall come into darkneſſe, propter abſcondita, for his ſecret ſins. And others thus, All darkneſſe is laid up for his hid treaſures: that is, God, or men have taken order that hee ſhall loſe his riches as well as his life, though he hide them never ſo ſecretly.

De Bell. Civ. Rom.

R. Sol.

A fire not blowne ſhall conſume him] i.e. ſay ſome, calamities whoſe cauſes ſhall be unknowne, and ſhall proceed immediately from God. See Iſai. 30.33. Many of the Greeks interpret this Text of Hell, with its unquenchable fire, Matth. 3.12. which being created by God, and kindled by its breath, that is, by his Word, it burneth everlaſtingly. Albeit God many times puniſheth wicked men here with fire from heaven, as he did Sodom, Nadab and Abihu, thoſe Captianes of fifties with their companies, 2 King. 1. Tremellius rendreth it thus, A fire conſumeth him, non accenſum flatu, I ſay Him, not kindled by blowing, but burning of his own accord, as ſtubble fully dryed, or hurds, or ſear wood. See Nah. 1.10. with the Note.

Vt ſtipula aut ſtupa. Vt cremium aut arefactum lignum.

It ſhall go ill with him that is left.] His poſterity ſhall never proſper, but be rooted out. Eliphaz and Bildad had ſaid the ſame thing: and all to pay poor Job, whoſe family was now ruined. It ſhall ſurely go ill with him, or, He ſhall be wringed, ſaith Broughton; alluding belike to the ſound as well as the ſenſe of the Hebrew word.

Verſe 27. The heaven ſhall reveal his iniquity] Job had called heaven and earth to record of his innocency, chap. 16,17,18. This is not to do now, ſaith Zophar, for all creatures have conſpired thy ruine, and contributed thereunto, Wind, Fire, Sebeans, &c. ſo that he that hath but half an eye, may ſee thee to be a wicked perſon. Such as are wicked indeed, not only ſecundum dici, as Job, but ſecundum eſſe, as Ahab, cannot look to heaven above, or to earth beneath, without horrour to think even theſe, if other witneſſes faile, ſhall bring to light their ſecret ſinnes, and come to give teſtimony againſt them before the great Judge at the laſt day.

And the earth ſhall riſe up againſt him.] Night will convert it ſelf into Noon againſt the evil-doers: and ſilence prove a ſpeaking evidence. Earth cryed Cain guilty, the Stars in their courſes fought againſt Sisera as a Traytor and Rebel to the higheſt Majeſty, Yea, —Servi ut taceant jumenta loquentur, the Aſſe hath a verdict to paſſe upon Balaam. A Bird of the Aire ſhall carry the voice that but whiſpereth Treaſon, Eccleſ. 10.20. Yea if nothing elſe will reveal iniquity, it will reveal it ſelfe. It will prove like the Oyntment of the right hand, of which Solomon ſaith, that it wrayeth it ſelf, Prov. 27.16.

Verſe 28. The increaſe of his houſe ſhall depart] All his poſterity ſhall be deſtroyed, and ſo ſhall his proſperity too, even all at once with a ſudden ebb, in the day that God viſiteth him with his wrath and righteous judgements. All the wicked mans wealth and revenue ſhall be wretchedly waſted and embezelled by one meanes or other.

And his goods ſhall flow away] As waters. The Apoſtle ſaith, The faſhion of this world paſſeth away, viz. as a haſty headlong torrent, or as a Picture drawn upon the Ice, Thou carriſt them away (both perſons and things) as with a flood, Pſal. 90.5.

Verſe 29 This is the portion of a wicked man from God] A portion God alloweth the wicked in this life, Pſal. 17. 14. As a King when he repriveth a Traytor, alloweth him a subsistence, prisoners pitance at least. Yea, the worst of men divide the wealth and honors of the world between them for a time. Nebuchadnezzar had Tyrus as pay for his paines in Egypt. And the whole Turkish Empire is nothing else but a crust cast to his dogs, by the great house keeper of the world, saith Luther. But besides this, God hath provided a far other portion for them (saith One) and that by way of inheritance, never to be parted from them; viz. all the forementioned miseries, and many more, all torments here, and tortures in hell. This is the inheritance, Quam nunquam deserent, non unguis quam seipsos, patientur, which will stick to them as close as the skin to the flesh, or the flesh to the bones: it falls to them as the inheritance doth to the heir, chap. 27.13. and 31.2. or as the mess of meat doth to the invited Guest. Misery is the heritage of the wicked, as they are children of disobedience; and their wages as they are workers of iniquity: their present prosperity also is a piece of their punishment, Isai. 1.5. Prov. 1.32. The words of Zophar are ended. Let others reply as they please, but he hath done. Praestat herbam dare, quam turpiter pugnare. No surer sign of an evil cause then a powerlesse pertinacy.

CHAP. XXI.

Verse 1. But Job answered and said.]

DIsproving and refuting that Proposition of theirs concerning the infelicity of the ungodly by Reason, by Experience, and by Divine Authority: All which evince and evidence, that neither is prosperity a proof of mens innocence, nor adversity a mark of their wickednesse, as Zophar and his fellowes would have it. And that they might not any more interrupt him, nor think him too rough, he useth a gentle Preface, craving attention, and pressing them thereunto by many Arguments in the six first verses.

Verse 2. Hear diligently my speech] Heb. In hearing hear. The Greek hath it, Hear, hear; that is, hear me out, have so much patience with me as not to interrupt me any more, yea, hear with understanding. Let your ears and eyes meet: draw up your inward cares to your outward, that one sound may pierce both. Lay aside passion and prejudice, suffer a word of information, for it is but one word that I have to say, &c. the Hebrew is singular, and promiseth brevity. Only this one word Job would that they should heare double, scil. by an after deliberate meditation, as David did, Psal. 62.11. God hath spoken once, twice have I heard this, &c.

Gravis rationis humanae morbus est, quod plerunque soleat ea damnare quae aut non intelligit, aut non placuerit. Brent.

And let this be your consolation.] Comfort me this way at least, that you will give me the hearing. Hither you came as Comforters, but by your galling speeches you have grieved and vexed me above measure. Now make me some amends, and remembring your Office as friends, and your design, which was to condole with me, and to comfort me, hear me hardly, and this I shall take as kindly, as if in tenderest compassion you had drunke to me in a Bowle of Nepenthes, or had given me a cup of consolation, as Jer. 16.7. The Vulgar Latine rendereth it, (but not well) Hear I pray you my speech, and repent. The Hebrew word signifieth first to repent, and then to comfort, 1 Sam. 15.35. Isai. 40.1. because the penitent only, get sound comfort.

Verse 3. Suffer me that I may speak] Say that it be suffering to you to hear me (for now I see you have, as they write of some Creatures, sub in aure;) yet put your selves to the pain of hearing me, and bear me, though I am burdensome to you, though my speeches crosse the graine of your spirits. See 2 Cor. 11.1. I will promise you to speak nothing worthy of a scoff, such as was that of Theophrastus, Let him shun the talkative man who would not be put into a fit of a fever. On that of Theoph. Charact. cap. de garrul.

Ariſtotle, before whom when one having made a long and idle diſcourſe, concluded it thus, I doubt I have been too tedious unto you, Sir Philoſopher, with my many words. In good ſooth, ſaid Ariſtotle, you have not been tedious to me, for I gave no heed to any thing you ſaid. Plut. de garru. lit.

And after I have ſpoken, mock on] Heb. Mock thou on, thou Zophar, (to whom he turned his ſpeech, and very likely his eye alſo) if thou canſt find in thy heart to mock at ſo much reaſon, as I ſhall alledge in mine owne defence, I gainſtand thee not. He wanted no wit that ſaid, If a wiſe man ſpeak evil of thee, or to thee, endure him; if a fool, ſlight him. Sile, & funeſtam dediſti plagam, trouble not thy ſelf at his taunts, and thou puniſheſt him ſufficiently. Chryſoſt.

Verſe 4. As for me, is my complaint to man?] Vult dicere, ſaith Lavater, Job meaning is, that he complained not to man, but to God himſelf, who well knew his heart and his innocency, though men miſ-judged him. And this being ſo, how could he be otherwiſe then anxious and ſolicitous, ſith if a man be but to ſpeak to an earthly Prince, he will be afraid? It is ſaid of Charles the Fifth, Emperour, that he ſpake more to God then to men. Job did ſo, it ſeemeth: and this he alledgeth to the ſhame of his hard-hearted friends, who put him to it in this ſort.

Verſe 5. Mark me, and be aſtonied] Heb. Look upon me. He had ſaid before, Hear and hear, now, Behold and ſee if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow. Mark it I ſay, and ſtand amazed at it. Did you ever find any on this ſide hell ſo ſore afflicted as I am? Is it not becauſe you are not duly affected with my miſeries, that ye are ſo regardleſſe of my diſcourſe. Strange, that my ſorrowes ſhould be great enough to work aſtoniſhment, and yet not great enough to deſerve attention. O mark firſt what I ſuffer, and then what I ſpeak.

And (this once done) lay your hand upon your mouth] Be ſwift to hear, but ſlow to ſpeak: yea, ſpare to ſpeak at all in this caſe. The Greek Proverb admoniſheth men either to be ſilent, or to ſpeak ſomething that is better then ſilence. Harpocrates the heatheniſh god of ſilence, was pictured with his finger laid upon his lips.

Verſe 6. Even when I remember I am afraid] Surprized I am with a moſt formidable amazement, when I call to mind and conſider how ill (by the divine Providence) it fareth with me, how well with many wicked, and how little you pity me, or ſeek by ſound reaſon to ſettle my mind; I am ready to cry out, Oh the depth of Gods ſtupendious diſpenſations! Confer Pſal. 73. where David delivereth himſelfe to like purpoſe.

And trembling taketh hold on my fleſh] Heb. My fleſh hath taken hold on trembling. Totus horreo, Horrour hath taken hold on me, Pſal. 119. 53. ſuch as makes my body to ſhake and ſhudder. So Habak. 3. 16. with chap. 1. 3, 13. Job had called upon his friends to mark and be aſtoniſhed: here he propoundeth himſelfe to them for an example. Quod juſſit, & geſſit, as Bernard ſaith of Another. See chap. 18. 20.

Verſe 7 Wherefore do the wicked live, become old?] Vivunt, veteraſcunt, they are lively and long lived, ſo that they out-laſt many better then themſelves; being as ſound as Roches, and as vivacious as the ſnail, the property whereof is to live a long while even after the head is off, and the heart out. Of ſome creatures we uſe to ſay, that they have nine lives: of ſome wicked men it may be thought ſo, they do evil an hundred times, and yet their dayes are prolonged, Eccleſ. 9. 12. Manaſſeh raigned longeſt of any King in Judah. Pope John the 22 (that Monſter and Mortallift) lived longeſt of any Pope, and dyed richeſt. God gives wealth, health, and long life to many wicked, Nemeſitem ac ſiquis crumenam ingentem auro plenam lutrinæ injiciat, ſaith One: No otherwiſe then as when a man caſts a great Purſe filled with Gold into a Jakes. Now if any ſhall aſk, with Job, Why all this? The Apoſtle anſwereth one Queſtion by another, Rom. 9 22. What if God willing to ſhew his wrath, and to make his power known, endure with much long-ſuffering the veſſels of wrath fitted to deſtruction? What hath any man to ſay to that? And again, who knows not that the Lord hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the World in righteouſneſſe, even that day of the Revelation of the righteous judgement, Acts 17. 31. Rom. 2. 5. The Judge of the earth keepeth his petty Seſſions now, letting the Law paſſe Gaſp. Ith.

upon ſome few, reſerving the reſt till the great Aſſizes, 1 Tim. 5. 24.

Yea, are mighty in power.] Or, Prevaile in wealth, which maketh them mighty: for money is the Monarch of this preſent world, and carryeth all before it.

Verſe 8. Their ſeed is eſtabliſhed in their ſight with them] Some underſtand it of their ſeed ſowne in the fields, not blaſted or waſted, but timely gathered into their Barnes and Granaries, and ſo by Off ſpring, Germina, they taking it literally, conceive to be meant their plants, trees, flowers, fruits, all which come kindly, and grow to their minds; But better interpret it of their children and nephews, whom they have many, healthy, luſty and lively, and not unfitly compared to ſeed, as if the parents were but only the huſks: and to branches or ſprigs, becauſe they may be, and muſt be bent betime to the beſt things, before they be aged and crooked in their evil practiſes, refuſing to be rectified.

Multos, [anos, vegetos, & vivaces.

And their Off-ſpring before their eyes] This is the ſame with that before, and is repeated, becauſe a ſingular happineſſe, to ſee their children proſper as much as themſelves. This is a third time inſtanced, ver. 11.

Verſe 9. Their houſes are ſafe from fear] Seculi Latitia eſt impunita nequitia. No domeſtical diſcords, no forraign diſturbances, but peacea ble poſſeſſion and enjoyment of that they have; as much welfare as David wiſhed to Nabal, 1 Sam. 25. 5. Thus ſhall ye ſay to him that liveth (that is, that liveth proſperouſly, for that's the only life) Peace be to thee, and to thine houſe, and to all that thou haſt.

Auguſt.

Neither is the rod of God upon them] So that they ſeem to themſelves and others to be out of the reach of Gods rod. They are not in trouble as other men, neither are they plagued like other men: Therefore pride compaſſeth them about as a chain, &c. Pſa. 73. 5, 6. Vermis divitiarum eſt ſuperbia, It is hard for the rich not be high-minded, 1 Tim. 6. 17.

Plut. in Syll.

Verſe 10. Their Bull gendreth and faileth not, &c.] All things hit, and nothing miſſeth to make them happy and wealthy; they have profit and pleaſure at will, the world comes tumbling in upon them, as Townes were ſaid to come in to Timotheus his toyles, whiles he ſlept; and ſo they ſeem to be the only heires of thoſe Promiſes (Exod 23. 26. There ſhall nothing caſt their young, nor be barren in the Land. So Deut. 7. 14.) whereunto notwithſtanding they are perfect ſtrangers; Laban and Nabal for inſtance.

Verſe 11 They ſend forth their little ones like a flock] Sunt qui de eorum vitulis intelligunt recens natis, ſaith Mercer. Some underſtand it of young Calves, but better of young children, which have here their name from a root which ſignifieth wickedneſſe, naughtineſſe, to ſhew what little ones are, not Innocents, as we call them, not pueri quaſi puri; vhwO, is both a fool and a child. The firſt blanket wherein a child is wrapt, is woven of ſin, ſhame, blood and filth, Ezek. 16. 4, 6. Hence Infants were circumciſed, and their foreskin caſt away, to ſhew, that themſelves had deſerved to be ſo ſerved. Parents therefore ſhould ſtrive to mend that by education, which they have marred by propagation. Wicked parents think not on this, though they ſend out their little ones like a flock, but tend them not, keep them not from the Wolf of hel, who ſeeketh to devour them.

Nemo ſobrius ſaltat. Cic.

And their children dance] Exiliunt, vitulantur, chorea ducunt, they skip and leap up and down, as young cattle, and are taught to dance Artificially, which no ſober man will do, ſaith Cicero: And the better Dancer, the worſe man, ſaid Diogenes.

Plut, συμποσιακα σοφων.

Verſe 12. They take the Timbrel and the Harp] They take them, and are taken with them, being melted in ſenſual delights, which wiſe men ſlight. The Philoſopher told the Fidlers, that he could be merry without Muſick. Ariſtotle ſaid, Jupiter is happy, and yet no Muſician. One in Plutarch ſaith of the Scythians, That though they had no Muſick nor Vines amongſt them, yet they had God. It is here alledged as a piece of their laſciviouſneſſe and luxury, that they took or touched the Timbrel, &c. Not but that Muſick is lawful, for it is the gift of God, and a noble Art, but the abuſe of it is here noted, as likewiſe, Iſai. 5. 12. Amos 6. 5. (ſee the Note there) theſe wicked and their children lived in pleaſure upon earth (which is not a place for ſuch a purpoſe: God did not caſt man out of one Paradiſe, that he might might make himself another) James 5. 5. and were like the people of Tombuctan in Affrica, who are said to spend their whole time in singing and dancing. It is not good for men to take pleasure in pleasure, to spend too much time in it, as Solomon did, and afterwards Cleopatra. It was not simply a sin in Esau to go a hunting, but yet the more he used it, the more profane he waxed, and came at length to contemn his birth-right.

They rejoyce at the sound of the Organ.] Their mirth was merrily carnal, they did rather revel then rejoice. Their chearfulnesse did not end in thankfulnesse, their Musick made them not more heavenly-minded, as it did that late Learned and holy Mr. Esty, who when he sat and heard a sweet consort of Musick, seemed upon this occasion, carried up for the time before hand to the place of his Rest, saying very passionately, (What Musick may we think there is in heaven?) The Instrument here mentioned, hath its name (as Mercer noteth) Ab amore oblectationis, & lusu; From love, delight and sport. Amabit sapiens, cupient cæteri, saith Seneca. D. Hall Art of Div. Medit.

Verse 13. They spend their dayes in wealth.] Or, in mirth: Heb. In good. They wallow in wealth, and have the world at will, even more then heart could wish, as David phraseth it in Psalm 73. which may well serve for a Comment upon this Text. And the rich glutton for an instance. He in his life-time received his good things, and in a moment went down to the grave, Luke 16.25. True it is, that this is not every wicked mans case: for some of them live wretchedly, and dye lamentably, being held long upon the rack of a torturing Disease (as Jehoram) all which is to them no other then a Type and foretaste of hell, whither they are hasting.

And in a moment they go down to the grave.] Ad inferna, to hell, saith the Vulgar; they spend their dayes in wealth, and end their dayes in woe; their merry dance determineth in a miserable downfall. Thus that rich man dyed, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torment, &c. Luke 16.22, 23. But though the same Hebrew word signifieth hell and the grave (both which have their names from their unsatiableness, Prov. 30.15, 16) yet here, in a suitableness to what went before, the grave is to be understood, and the sense is, Dicta citius morientur, they dye easily, suddenly, sweetly, without much pain of body or trouble of mind: there are no bonds in their death, saith David, Psal. 73. They dye without much ado, like a lamb, or like a lamp, that goeth out of it self when the oyle faileth: they go quickly and quietly to the grave: some wicked persons indeed dye piece-meal by a complicate Disease, and a long lingring Death, as did Antiochus, Herod, Philip 2 of Spain, &c. Dionysius the Tyrant is said to have envyed a beast, whose throat he saw cut, because he dyed so soon. Julius Cæsar wished he might dye speedily, saith Suetonius. Pliny commendeth sudden death as the chief felicity of life. That's a good death to nature which is neither feared nor expected, yet that is the best death which hath been longest expected and prepared for. Happy is he that after due preparation, is passed through the gates of death, ere he be aware. Happy is he that by the holy use of long sickness, is taught to see the gates of death afar off, and addresseth for a resolute passage. The one dyeth like Eliah, the other like Elisha, both blessedly. Mors jucunda cujus nulla præcessit expectatio aut metus.

Verse 14. Therefore they say unto God, Depart from us.] Lest any should think, saith Merlin here, that Job speaks of such wicked as used a moderation in sinning, and (as the Historian said of the Emperour) rather wanted vice, then were vertuous. He describeth their great impiety by a rhetorical imitation, expressing the language of their heart, which is most base and blasphemous. For first they bespeak God as if he were some low-prized scoundrel, Apage, Be packing: thus they reject his acquaintance, and would be rid of his company. Perro rejiciunt Deum quatquot verbum ejus contemnunt, saith Brentius here: Now they reject God, who slight his Word, and cast his commands behind them, Psal. 50.17. Hence it follows by way of explication. Magis extra vitia, quam cum virtutibus. Tacit.

For we desire not the knowledge of thy wayes.] Lo, they professe themselves to be of the number of those, Qui ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, who are wilfully ignorant; and like not to retain God in their knowledge. Rom. 1.28. or if they professe to know him, yet in works they deny him, being abominable, disobedient, and to- very very good work reprobate, Tit. 1.16. Wicked men cannot abide God, such is their evil heart of unbelief, Heb 3.12. they get as far from him as they can, with Cain, and not only desire him to depart out of their coasts with those swinish Gergesites, but churlishly say unto him, as here, Avaunt, Room for us. They will neither have God in their heads, Psal. 10.4. nor hearts, Psal. 14.1. nor words, Psal. 12.4. nor works, Tit. 1.16. See this exemplified in those perverse Jewes, lying children, children that would not hear the Law of the Lord, which said to the Seers, see not, —Get ye out of the way, turn aside out of the path, i.e. out of this tract of truth in dealing so plainly, and reproving us so roundly, Cause the Holy One of Israel to cease before us, let us henceforth hear no more of him, Isai. 30.10,11. Now for such miscreants as these, who can say, it is otherwise then righteous, that God should regest one day upon them, Depart from me, ye wicked? (He loves to retaliate.) And that they who now say unto him, We desire not the knowledge of thy ways, should hear from him, I tell you, I know you not, Luke 13.27?

Verse 15. What is the Almighty that we should serve him?] Here the rottenesse of their hearts blistereth out at the lips of these rich wretches, these fat Bulls of Basan, such as was Pharaoh that sturdy rebel, who asked this very question in the Text, What, or Who is the Almighty, &c? Exod. 5.2. and had a large Reply made him by one plague upon another, till he was compelled to answer himself, The Lord is righteous. Forced he was to speak fair whiles held upon the Rack, if for nothing else, yet that he might get off. Such Queryings as this carry greatest contempt in them, and would lay the Almighty quite below the required duty: as if Almighty were but an empty title, and that he could do neither good nor evil, Zeph. 1.12. that it was to no purpose or profit to serve him, that the gaines would not pay for the paines, &c.

He seemeth to rehearse the very words of Pharoah. Died.

And what profit should we have if we pray unto him?] Hebr. If we meet him, viz. by our prayers, Jer. 7.16. Am. 4.12. see Mal. 3.14. with the Note. Children will not say their prayers unlesse they may have their Breakfast; nor hypocrites pray, but for some profit. They pretend sometimes to meet God, but they draw not near with that true heart, mentioned, Heb. 10.22. in seeking God they meerly seek themselves, as Spira said he did. In Parabola ovis caprae suae quaerunt; No penny, no Pater Noster. And as the Wolf in the Fable, having spelled Pater, and being bid put together, said Agnus: so when these pray, their hearts are upon their halfe penny, Ezek. 33. They follow Christ for the loaves, and serve him no longer, then he serves their turnes.

——Rara fumant foelicibus ara.

Verse 16. Lo their good is not in their hand] that is, They are not inriched by their own industry, Prudence, Piety, &c. but God hath exalted them thus, that he may bring them down again with the greater poise: So some sense the Text. Others thus, Their good is not in their hand; that is, they are not Masters of them, but are mastered by them: they are servants to their wealth, as the Persian Kings were to their Wives or Concubines, Captivarum suarum captivi: And as those stall-fed beasts in the Gospel, the Recusant Guests I mean, that had bought Farmes, Oxen, &c or rather were bought of them. ——Difficile est opibus non tradere mores. Others make this the sense, and I concur with them, These wicked rich men, buried in a bog of security, contemne God as if they had their happinesse in their own hands, and were petty-gods within themselves. But they are deceived; All is in Gods hand, who can take away their wealth when he pleaseth. These men may fall sooner then they rose, sith they subsist meerly by Gods maintenance, and he may do with his own as he listeth.

Plut.

The counsell of the wicked is far from me] I am so far from envying their prosperity, that I cannot approve of their course of life, for all their wealth. I am not of their judgment, I like not of their way. Oh my soul come not thou into their secret. Let their money perish with them (said that noble Italian Convert to a Jesuit, who tempted him with a great sum) who esteem all the gold in the world worth one dayes society with Jesus Christ, and his Holy Spirit, and cursed be that Religion for ever, &c.

Curcicium.

Verse

Verse 17 How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?] q.d. I confesse that which you say concerning Gods judgements upon the wicked to be sometimes true in this world, yet it is not so continually, nor ordinarily, but very oft their lamp is extinguished, their comforts damped, and hopes of better dashed: they are all on the sudden left in the dark, cast into straits inextricable, plunged into sorrowes inexplicable, and yet all these are but the beginning of sorrows. For Diod.

How oft cometh destruction upon them?] Utmost destruction, irresistible ruine, that comes on in manner of a black cloud, or fierce storme, undoing calamity, overflowing scourge, a tempest from which there is no covert. The Vulgar renders it thus, How oft is there an inundation upon the wicked!

God distributeth sorrowes in his anger] Gives them their lot of greatest sorrowes, as by a Line, Luke 12.46. such sorrowes as a travelling woman suffereth, or such as were those of Monsieur Mylius, an ancient Minister at Heidelberg, when taken by the Spaniard, first they abused his daughter before his eyes, and then they tyed a small cord about his head, which with truncheons they wreathed about till they squeezed out his braines. The Text implyeth that though in this world many sorrowes are to the wicked, yet these are no supersedeas to their sufferings in hell; but now they receive only a small portion or part of their punishments, there they shall be paid to the full; here they sip of the top only of Gods cup, there they shall suck up the dregs thereof, though they have eternity to the bottom. This shall be the portion of their cup, and but a portion, Psal. 11.6. Spec. bell. sac. Psal. 32.16.

Verse 18. They are as stubble before the wind] Lest any man should say, How can these things befal those that are so strongly set, & firmly built? Well enough, saith Job, for when they are best bottomed or underlaid, they are but as stubble before the wind, &c. Hæc considerandæ, saith Mercer, these things would be laid to heart, for hereby it appeareth that the wicked shall be destroyed suddenly, and certainly, certò, citò, penitus, Isa. 17. 13. That they can no more stand before a punishing God, then thistle-down before a whirle-wind, or a glasse-bottle before a Cannon-shot.

Verse 19. God layeth up his iniquity for his children] that is, the punishment of his iniquity, whilst he visiteth the sins of the fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation of them that hate him, Exod. 20.5. Neither doth this contradict that of the Prophet Ezekiel, The son shall not dye for the iniquity of his father, chap. 18.17. Nor that of the Apostle, Every man shall bear his own burden, Gal. 5. 6. for the meaning of those words is, that no man be damned for the sin of his father, nor one man for the sin of another, unlesse by commission or approbation, or some way or other he make it his own. But for temporal punishments there is none but (by occasion of others sins) may have their portion in them: and wicked parents leave Jobs Legacy to their children (see 2 Sam. 3.29.) yea though they prove to be good children, 1 King. 14.12,13. for whom God layeth up their parents iniquity in the treasures of his justice to be produced in due time.

He rewardeth him.] For every transgression and disobedience, that is, every Commission and Omission, receiveth a just recompence of reward, Heb. 2.2. God will abate him nothing.

And he shall know it.] Know it to his cost; Vexation shall give understanding: he that before this judgement came, would know nothing of the bitter effect of sin upon him and his, now hath his eyes forced open (as the blind Mole is said to have by the pangs of death) and cryes out with the Lyon in the snare, Si præsciviſſem, Oh! if I had foreknown the mischief, &c. The wicked are wise too late, the fool passeth on, and is punished: he knows not the evil of sin, till he feels it.

Verse 20. His eyes shall see his destruction.] His slaughter, saith the Greek, his breaking to pieces, saith the Chaldee: this he shall see with his eyes, the destruction of his person, and ruine of his Family. The sight of evil is a grief to see, as well as the feeling of it is a pain: and that's complete destruction which is not only felt, but seen. Zedekiah first saw all his children slain, and then had his eyes put out. Mauricius had the like woful sight, and then was stewed in his own broth by the Traytor Phocas.

And he shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty.] Heb. The scalding hot wrath, worse than that Cup of boyling Lead turned down the throat of a certain drunken man, by the command of the Turkish Bashaw. Jerusalem drank wrath to drunkenness, and had none to guide her; as a drunken man had need to have, Isa. 51. 17. The Nations were to drink it to madness, Jer. 25. 10. Babylons brats shall drink of the wine of God's wrath, Rev. 14. 10. (Poyson in wine works more furiously than in water) their irreparable ruine is set forth to the eye as it were, when Rev. 18. 21. an Angel, a mighty Angel taketh a stone, a great stone, even a milstone, which he casteth and with impetuous force thrusteth into the bottom of the sea, whence it cannot be buoyed up. Now what is a mighty Angel to the Almighty God, who hath his Name Shaddai, from destroying, as some are of opinion?

man

Verse 21. For what pleasure hath he in his house after him?] Hoc est, Omnia impiorum, etiam post mortem eorum, maledicta erunt, saith Brentius; All that belongs to the wicked shall be accursed, even after their death, though some are so desperately set upon wickeness, that they will have their swinge whatsoever come of it, either to themselves, or their children after them. Sic fere asoryoi sunt improbi, so unnatural they are many of them, that, so they may satisfie their own sinful and sensual desires, let their posterity sink or swim, let them shift as they can, they care not. Dives in Hell seemed somewhat careful of his brethren; but self-love moved him to it: for he knew well, that if they were damned, he should be double damned, because they had sinned by his example and encouragement.

ἀμὴ θανόντος γαῖα μιχθήτω πυρί. Suetonius de Tiberio.

When the number of his months shall be cut off in the midst.] Mortis periphrasis; that is, when he shall die, saith one. But that's not all. Impius moritur importune, The wicked dieth in an ill time for himself; then when it were better for him to do any thing, then to die. Many of them live not out half their dayes, Psal. 55. 25. Eccles. 7. 17. God cut off Elies two sons in one day; and further threatned their father that there should not be an old man left in his house for ever, 1 Sam. 2. 32. Hezekiah, when he thought he should die, complained that he had cut off his life like a Weaver, Isa. 38. 12. who cuts off the Web from the Thrum. But the Saints (such as he was) die not till the best time, not till that time when, if they were rightly informed, they would even desire to die.

Verse 22. Shall any teach God knowledge?] None but a presumptuous Fool will take upon him to do that: such as was Alphonso the wise (the Fool rather) who feared not to say openly, That if he had been of Gods Council at the Creation, some things should have been better made, and marshalled. The wisest men are benighted in many things; and what light soever they have, it is from the Father of Lights, whose judgements are unsearchable, and his wayes past finding out: what a madness were it therefore for any mortal to prescribe to the Almighty, or to define whom, when, by what means, and in what measure he must punish offendors? Herein Jobs friends took too much upon them; and he gives them the telling of it, wishing them to be wise to Sobriety, and not to give Laws to God, who well knoweth what he hath to do, and how to order his earthly kingdom. To disallow of his dealings, is to teach him knowledge; which is greatest sawciness.

Roderic. sanct. Hist. Hispan. p. 4. ch. 5.

Seeing he judgeth those that are high.] Excelsos in excelsis, the Angels, who are so far above us in all manner of excellencies, and yet are ignorant of the wisdom of Gods wayes, which they know but in part; for how little a portion is heard of him? Job 26. 14. His judgements therefore are rather to be adored, than pryed into: Mirari oportet, non rimari, let us rest contented with a learned ignorance.

Verse 23. One dieth in his full strength.] Iste moritur, There's one dieth in his very perfections; or, in the strength of his perfection, when he is in the Zenith, in the highest degree of earthly felicity: And he seemeth to point at some one eminent wicked person, well known to them all. Confer Eccles. 9. 2. God is pleased to do wonderful contradictory things in mans reason: so that we must needs confess an unsearchableness in his wayes. In hoc opere, ratio humana talpâ magis cæcutit, saith Brentius; In this work of his, humane reason is blinder then a Mole: Averroes turned Atheist upon it: and Aristotle was little better, as being accused at Athens and banished into Chalcis, quod de divinitate male sentiret.

Being wholly at ease and quiet.] At ease in body and quiet in minde. The common sort ask, What should ayle such a man? The Irish, What such an one meaneth to die?

Verse 24. His Breasts are full of milk, and his Bones, &c.] He is well lined within within, as we ſay, having abundance of good blood, and freſh ſpirits in his body: fat and plump, and well liking. He is encloſed in his own fat, Pſal. 17. 10. His back is well larded, and his bones are moiſtened with marrow; which Plato ſaith, is not only the ſourſe and ſeminary of generation, but the very ſeat of life. Now ſuch a ſtate of body as is here deſcribed, is no defence at all againſt death, ſaith Job: Nay, it is a preſage, and a forerunner of it many times. For ultimus ſanitatis gradus eſt morbo proximus, ſay Phyſicians; the higheſt degree of health is neareſt to ſickneſs: We many times chop into the earth before we are aware; like a man walking in a field covered with Snow, who falleth into a pit ſuddenly. Plat. in Timæ.

Verſe 25. And another dieth in the bitterneſs of his ſoul.] Heb. And this dieth with a bitter ſoul; in a ſad and ſorrowful condition: having ſuffered many a little death all his life long, (as godly men eſpecially uſe to do, being deſtitute, afflicted, tormented, ſeldom without a croſs on their backs) and then dieth not only in the ſorrows of death, but in the ſorrows of life, which to him hath been a liveleſs life, becauſe a joyleſs life. Heb. 11.

And never eateth with pleaſure.] Either becauſe he hath but Priſoners pittance, which will neither keep him alive, nor ſuffer him to die. Or, if he ſit at a full table, yet his body is ſo ill affected by ſickneſs, or his mind with ſorrow, that he finds no good reliſh in what he eateth. That it is better with any of us, ſee a mercy and be thankful.

Verſe 26. They ſhall lye down alike in the duſt, and Worms, &c.] Death and Afflictions are common to them both, as Eccleſ. 9. How then do ye pronounce me wicked, becauſe afflicted, and free among the dead, free of that company, &c?

And the Worms ſhall cover them.] Who haply were once covered with coſtlieſt cloathing. The beſt are but worms-meat: why then ſhould we pamper and trick up theſe Carcaſſes, &c?

Verſe 27. Behold I know your thoughts.] ſc. By your words; as it is no hard matter for a wiſe man to do, Prov. 20. 5. for otherwiſe, God only knoweth the heart, 1 Pet. 1. 24. Pſal. 139. 3. it is his royalty: But when men diſcover their thoughts by their diſcourſes, looks, geſtures, &c. we may ſay as Job doth here, I know your thoughts; and that by the wicked wretch deſcribed by you, my ſelf is intended: this I am well aware of, though you hover in generals, and ſpeak in a third perſon. Bartolus writeth of Dr. Gabriel Nele, that by the only motion of the Lippes, without any interance, he underſtood any mans thoughts: The like ſome ſay they can do by looks. The Italians have a proverb, That a man with his words cloſe, and his countenance looſe, may travel undiſcovered all the world over. Lib. 1. de vet. oblig.

And the devices which you wonderfully imagine againſt me.] viz. To take away, as it were by violence, my Credit and Comfort: this is the fouleſt theft; avoid it.

Verſe 28. For ye ſay, Where is the houſe of the Prince?] Ye ſay, though not in ſo many words, yet upon the matter, Where is this mans (Jobs) princely pomp and port, that but even now was ſo ſplendidous? A Prince they called Job in a jeer, and by contraries (ſaith Vatablus,) becauſe he had been rich, and ſhould have been liberal, and munificent, but had not been ſo. The Apoſtle calleth the Phariſees and Philoſophers in like ſort, Princes of this world, 1 Cor. 2. 8. Per ironiam & antiphraſin. Vatab.

And where are the dwelling places.] The Palaces, large and lofty, ut ſunt prætoria et principum ædes, as the houſes of Princes uſe to be. Lavater rendreth it, The Tabernacle of Tabernacles, as Gentlemens houſes amongſt us are called, Places, Halls, Courts, &c. Junius. Tabernaculum habitaculorum.

Of the wicked?] viz. Of Job and his Children, the eldeſt ſons eſpecially, which was blown down, chap. 1. 18. As if it might not befal a good man alſo to have his houſe plundered, burnt, his children brained, &c. They had often in their diſcourſes jerked at Jobs children.

Verſe 29. Have ye not aſked them that go by the way?] The cauſe of that their raſh judgement, Job ſheweth here to be their ignorance of things known to every ordinary paſſenger, and ſuch as whereof there are many pregnant proofes and Examples every where. Some by them that go by the way, underſtand men by experience, ſuch as have gone many voyages, &c. made many obſervations in their Travels of things remarkable: their notes are here called their tokens. By those that go by the way, others understand Abraham the Hebrew (so he is called, Gen. 14. 13. that is, that Trans-Euphratean; Or, He that passed over the River Euphrates, when he passed by the way from Chaldea to Canaan) and his Progeny Isaac and Jacob, who were passengers and pilgrims, and could tell by experience, that men greatly afflicted may be yet favoured of God, and in due time delivered. Abraham had ten sore trials, and yet the friend of God. Isaak, besides many other sharp afflictions all along his pilgrimage, was blind for above twenty years before his death. Few and evil were the dayes of the years of Jacob, his whole life almost one continuate affliction; and yet it was, Jacob have I loved. Of all this, Job likely was not ignorant, and why should his friends?

And do ye not know their tokens?] Or, Their tokens you shall not be estranged from, Broughton thus; So ye would not make their signes strange. There will be so much evidence of truth in what they say, that you will not be able to gainsay it.

Verse 30. That the wicked is reserved to the day of destruction] Here's the Passengers verdict; viz that wicked men shal scape scot-free, and flourish for a season: nevertheless their preservation is but a reservation (as Pharaoh, Sennacherib, and others have found it,) and if they flourish for the present, it is that they may be destroyed for ever, Psal. 92. 7. Others read this verse more suitably to the next, thus, That at the day of destruction the wicked is kept back, and they are carried out in the day of wrath; that is, they are oft spared when the testimonies of Gods wrath are rife against others.

Verse 31. Who shall declare his way to his face, &c?] Who shall be so bold, as to deal plainly with this rich wretch, and tell him his own? Divitibus ideo deest amicus, quia nihil deest. Great men have many flatterers, and not a few mutterers against them, but very few that will faithfully shew them their sin, and forewarn them of their danger, lest they meet with the same hard measure, that the Hares in the Fable did, who taking upon them to reprove the Lion, were torn in pieces by him for the same. Truth breedeth hatred: and although she be a good Mistresse, yet they that follow her too close at heels, may hap to have their teeth struck out. But truth, downright truth, must be spoken, however it be taken. Elias dealt roundly and impartially with wicked Ahab, Jeremy with Josiah's sons and successours, the Baptist with Herod, Christ with the Elders and Pharisees, that noble General Trajan, with Valens the Arian Emperour, telling him, That by his persecuting the Orthodox, he had lost the day, abandoning the Victory, and sending it away to the enemy.

And who shall repay him what he hath done?] q. d. Men dare not (for who will take a Lion by the beard, or a Bear by the tooth?) God will not punish him here, therefore he must needs scape unpunished. This is by Gregory fitly referred to Antichrist, who may not be admonished, and wil not be punished: but thinks to bear out his most malapert misdemeanour, because it is —factinus majoris abellæ, the fact of a great one.

Verse 32. Yet shall he be brought to the grave,] He that was erst so stern and terrible, shal shortly be laid low enough, and then leoni mortuo vel mus insultabit, Though he were such a son of Belial, that none could speak to him (as Nabal was, 1 Sam. 25. 17) yet death will speak with him, and confute this proud haughty Scorner, that dealeth in proud wrath. When death comes (saith Sir Walter Raleigh) which hates and destroyes men, that's believed and obeyed: But God, that loveth and maketh men, he is not regarded. O mighty death! O eloquent death! whom none could advise, thou art able to prevail with.

Hist. of World.

And shall remain in the Tomb] Heb. He shall watch over the heap, super tumulum cumulo frugum in arce constructo similem; as a Watch-man, there he is fixed and keeps this place. Or, He shall be watched in the Tomb.

Lavat.

Verse 33. The clods of the valley shall be sweet unto him] Here he saith the same is before, but more poetically, and is variously rendred. The Vulgar alluding to an old Poeticall Fable, readeth it thus, He shall be sweet to the sand of Cocytus, which is fained to be one of the Rivers of Hell, or an infernal Lake, so called from the moan there made by damned Ghosts, who should be glad of his arrival there. Hell from beneath is moved for him, to meet him at his coming, as 'tis said of the Assyrian Tyrant Tyrant, Isai. 14.9. Others better expound it thus. He shall taste so much bitterness whiles he treads upon the clods of the earth, that the clods under the earth shall be reckoned sweet unto him. And Oh how well pleased would he be if he might for ever lye hidden there, and never rise up again to come to judgement! And as it is with one wicked man departed, so it is with all other, whether they dyed before, or shall dye after. Caten. Graec.

Verse 34. How then comfort ye me in vain?] Sith ye apply nothing rightly to me, nor affirm nothing rightly of me, but instead of comforting me, which you came for, ye trouble me? And such are all those consolatiuncula creaturula, (as Luther finely phraseth it) petty-creature-comforts, watterish, and empty businesses, an unsubstantial sustance, as one saith of the bulrush.

Seeing in your answers remaineth falsehood.] Or, Prevarication, or double-dealing: fowle mistakes, and little lesse then malice.

CHAP. XXII.

Verse 1. Then Eliphaz the Temanite answered and said.]

ABruptly, without any Preface he sets upon Job, (as doth likewise Bildad; chap. 25.) acting the part of a spiteful Caviller, rather then of an ingenuous Accuser, reckoning and ranking just Job among the wicked, not covertly, as before, but overtly and expresly; and then thinking to salve all by an exhortation to repentance, backed with a faire promise of a full restauration. Pulcherrima paranesis, sed quid ad Jobum, saith Brentius? A very good exhortation, but ill applyed. We shall do well to take notice what a dangerous thing it is to give way to unruly passions, which like heavy bodies down steep hills, once in motion, move themselves, and know no ground but the bottom.

Verse 2 Can a man be profitable unto God?] No, neither doth Job say he can, but the contrary, chap. 21.22. Howbeit the God of glory, (as he is called, Act. 7.2. although his glory is as himself, infinite and eternal, and therefore not capable of our addition or detraction (the Sun would shine, though all the world were blind,) yet to try how we prize his glory, and what we will do for him, he hath declared that he accounteth himself made glorious by us, when we get so far as to conceive of him above all creatures.

As he that is wise may be profitable to himself?] Or, But he that is wise, &c. See Prov. 9.12. which Solomon seemeth to have taken hence. Natural reason taught Plautus to bring in a Countrey-man animating his son chearfully to follow his business thus, Thou ploweſt, harroweſt, soweſt, and reapeſt for thy self, to thee shall this labour bring in joy. The word here rendred wise, sometimes signifieth prosperous, quòd prudentibus omnia feliciter cedant, because prudent persons do usually prosper. Prudentium solicitis ferè succurritur. Isai. 54. 13.

Verse 3. Is it any pleasure to the Almighty that thou art righteous?] Num voluptas est Omnipotenti, &c? Is any thing added to his joy? Or needeth he thy manners and vertues to the making up of his perfection? Nothing lesse surely. True it is, that he solliciteth suitors, John 4. 23. and is well pleased with our performances, Psal. 51.6. But it is for our sakes, and to our benefit, and not his own. Like as the Sun when he casteth abroad his beames in the world, seemeth to receive light from some other creatures, whereas in truth they all receive light from him, and not he from them; so it is here: And as the same Sun draws up vapours from the earth, not for it self, but to render them again to the earth, to moisten and fatten it. So God, the true Sun of our souls, draweth from us our sighs and services, not for his own profit, but to rain them down again upon us in so many blessings.

Verse 4. Will he reprove thee for fear of thee?] Doth he plague and punish thee thus, for fear that in time thou maist grow so over-good, that he cannot reward thee, or so over-great, that he cannot command thee? No such matter. Others read it thus? Would he reprove thee for thy Religion? Would he come into judgement with thee? q. d. Surely, God would not deal thus ſtarſhly with thee if thou didſt truly fear him: But thou art a wicked wretch, as verſe 5. Either God puniſheth thee for thy piety or thy ſinfulneſſe. Not for the former doubtleſſe, (for piety is profitable to all things, &c.) therefore for the latter. This is Eliphaz his Argument here. But Auſtin makes anſwer (beſides what Job doth in the two following Chapters) Tract. in Joan. 124. God chaſtiſeth his beſt children ſometimes for his own glory, as John 9.3. ſometimes for their good, as namely for prevention, probation, purgation, preparation, either to the performance of ſome ſpecial ſervice, or to the receipt of ſome ſpecial bleſſing, &c.

Vox timoris ſive religionis activè ſumitur, &c. Merlin.

Vel ad demonſtrationem debitæ miſeriæ, vel ad emendationem labilis vitæ vel ad exercitationem neceſſariæ patientiæ, &c.

Will he enter with thee into judgment?] This ſeemeth to be the ſame in ſenſe with the former Hemiſtich: and then it ſhewes Eliphaz his confidence, though he were in an error.

Verſe 5. Is not thy wickedneſſe great?] Why no: God of his grace had kept Job innocent of the great tranſgreſſion, Pſal. 19.13. and that wicked one had not touched him: 1 John 5.18. ſcil. with a deadly touch; had not thruſt his ſting into him, or transformed him into ſinnes image. Had Eliphaz ever found Job to be ſuch a one as here he maketh him? Or doth he not by theſe interrogatories, cunningly come over him (in kindneſſe, as we ſay) to make him confeſſe it? Had all been true that is alledged, Jobs wickedneſſe muſt needs have been great, and his iniquity infinite. But to be accuſed is not enough to render a man guilty; for then who ſhould be innocent? Novit ſapiens ſe ad hoc ſcamma productum, ut depugnet cum iis qui maledictis alluntur, ut ventnis caprea. Cato was two and thirty times accuſed, and as often abſolved.

Tactu qualitativo. Cajetan.

And thine iniquities infinite?] Heb. There is no end of thine iniquities: and hence it is that thy miſeries are ſo many and ſo long laſting; commeruiſti tantarum ſorderibus. The wicked indeed are eternally tormented, 1. Becauſe being worthleſſe, they cannot ſatisfie Gods Juſtice in any time: 2. Becauſe they have an infinite deſire of ſinning againſt God. But neither of theſe could be truly affirmed of Job, That ſo grave a man as Eliphaz, (whom the Jew-Doctors account a Prophet) ſhould fall ſo fowle upon his innocent friend: and taking occaſion by his great afflictions onely, conjecture and conclude him ſo hainous an Offendor, cannot poſſibly be excuſed.

Conjecturâ duntaxat, non rei veritate nititur.

Verſe 6. For thou haſt taken a pledge, &c.] Bona verba, quaſo, Eliphaz. How well might Job have cryed out, as David afterwards did, Pſal. 35.11. Falſe witneſſes did riſe up, they laid to my charge things that I knew not. Here he ſtands accuſed, 1. Of inhumanitie and crueltie, 2. of Irreligion and Impiety. But he fully cleareth himſelf of both, chap. 30. and 31. Athanaſius in like ſort was falſely accuſed of Adultery in the Councel of Tyre, Anno 343. Euſtathius Biſhop of Antioch, was injuriouſly deprived for the ſame cauſe, about the latter end of Conſtantine the Great. Adultery, Hereſie and Treaſon were objected to Archbiſhop Cranmer. Parricide to Mr. Philpot, Sedition to Father Latimer; to which he anſwereth, As for Sedition, for ought that I know, me thinks I ſhould not need Chriſt, if I might ſo ſay.

Ruffin. lib. 10. c. 15.

Acts & Mon.

For nought] Or, unconſcionably, as one rendreth it: and herein lay the fault. See Deut. 24.6, 10.

And ſtripped the naked of their cloathing] If naked, how could he ſtrip them, bilde them, as the word ſignifieth? Chryſoſtom uſeth this Proverb, Nudum nec a centum viris ſpoliatur. He that is naked cannot be ſtripped by an hundred men. We alſo have a Proverb, Where nothing can be had the King muſt loſe his right. And again,

He is like to get little
Who robbeth a Spittle.

Life of the King of Sweden.

In the late Germane Wars, the Crabats, at Altroff an Univerſity, plundered the Scholars, and put poor Genus and Species to their Ranſome. Micah inveyeth againſt ſuch Canibal Princes, as pluckt the skin from the fleſh, and the fleſh from the bones of the poor oppreſſed, chap. 3.2,3. See the Note there. That which Eliphaz here chargeth Job with, but without truth, is, that he ſtript off the cloathing of the naked, that is, that finding them poor enough, he left them yet poorer: hardly having a rag to hang on their backs, through his extortion.

that

Verse 7. Thou hast not given water to the weary to drink.] But hast slain him with thirst, when thou mightest have saved him with a cup of cold water. Qui non, cum potest, servat, occidit: Not to do good (when it is in the power of a mans hand) is to do evil; and not to save a life is to destroy it, Mark 3. 4. Not robbing only, but not relieving of the beggar, was the rich mans ruine, Luk. 16. who for a cup of cold water, duely given, might have had heaven, Matth. 10. 42. But, what meant Eliphaz to charge innocent and munificent Job with such a cruelty? 1 The man was angry; and Impedit ira animum ne possit cernere verum. Horat.

2. He seems not directly to charge him with these crimes, but to urge him to consider and confess, that he could not be but a grievous sinner, who was so great a sufferer. Surely God would never handle thee so hardly, unless thou wert deeply guilty of these or the like enormities. Necesse est, ut fatearis te aut hoc, aut illud, aut omnia commisisse, &c. Junius.

Thou hast with-holden Bread from the hungry.] Bread thou hadst enough and to spare: but, like a greedy-gut Pamphagus, thou wouldst part with none, though it were to save the life, not of thine enemy (which yet thou shouldest have done, Prov. 25. 21. Elisha feasted his Persecutors, 2 Kings 6. Isaac his wrong-doers, Gen. 26. 39. by a noble revenge) but of thy fellow-friend and brother by race, place, and grace. Thou hast hidden thine eyes from thine own flesh, when thou shouldest have dealt thy Bread to the hungry, Esa. 58 7. Yea, drawn out thy soul (and not thy purse only) famelico, to the hunger-starved, and satisfied the afflicted soul, vers. 10.

Verse 8. But as for the mighty man, he had the Earth.] Heb. But as for the man of Arm, he had the Land. This the vulgar applieth to Job: as if by his power he had wrought all others out, and seated himself alone in the Land; suffering none to dwell by him, but those that he could not over-match. Others by the mighty man understand the strong and wealthy, who are said to be gracious with Job, sharing with him in his Possessions, and partaking of his Priviledges, when the poor were slighted and could not have Justice, much less Mercy. Here then Eliphaz accuseth Job of Pride and Partiality. Pauperes non dignari pane: at potentibus possessiones suas offerri, &c. Vatab.

And the honourable man dwelt in it.] Heb. Eminent, or accepted for countenance: that is, he who came commended by his wealth, friends, great alliances, honours, &c. was in great request with Job, and might easily carry any cause with him. Haec sunt peccata gravissima, quae non reputant homines, saith Vatablus, These are very great sins, though men little think of it.

Verse 9. Thou hast sent Widows away empty.] A Widow is a calamitous name, 2 Sam. 14. 5. I am indeed a Widow-woman, and my Husband is dead. As a Tree whose root is uncovered thriveth not: so it fareth with a widow. R. Jaya observeth, That in Hebrew she hath her name from dumbness, quod marito mortuo respondere non possit adversarius, et se adversus eos tueri, because now that her Husband is dead, she cannot answer her adversaries, or defend her self against them. God therefore hath taken them and their Orphans into his tuition, owning them as his Clients, and commanding all men to be good to them. These if Job had indeed sent away empty, not only not relieving their necessities, but ravishing their estates, adding the misery of poverty to that of their condition, he had surely subjected himself to the feirce wrath of God, their Patron by a specialty. Viluè desolata et derelicta nihil est humilium: et proindè peculiariter viduarum judex et vindex est Deus. Bain. in Prov. 15.

And the arms of the fatherless have been broken.] Immanis injuria, si ita res haberet, sed calumnia erat, saith Mercer. This had been a crying crime, if it could have been proved against Job, but he was not the man: Some from these words conclude him a Judge, others a King. Doubtless he was a potent person, and by his greatness could have borne out his foulest outrages, breaking through the lattice of the Laws, as the bigger Flyes do through a Spider-web. Sed alia de re infrà profitebitur, saith Mercer here: But Job shall clear himself in the following Chapters: where we shall finde him described and characthered to have been the Oracle of Wisdom, the Guardian of Justice, the Refuge of Innocency, the comet of the Guilty, the patron of Peace, and pattern of Piety, to Magistrates especially, in the wise managing aging of all publick Affairs, both of Judgement and Mercy.

Verse 10. Therefore snares are round about thee.] Flagitium & flagellum sunt sicut acus et filum. Sin and Punishment are tyed together with chains of Adamant. Eliphaz having with more earnestness than truth set forth Jobs sins, now discourseth of his snares. Four punishments he assureth him of, and every one worse than other. 1. He shall be Insnared. 2. Frighted. 3. Benighted. 4. Overwhelmed, if Repentance step not in and take up the matter, as vers 22. And tis as if he should say, Seek not after any other cause of thy Calamities than thy forementioned wickednesses: neither seek any other way to get off, than by confessing and forsaking them, that thou mayst have mercy.

And sudden fear troubleth thee.] Fear is a troublesome Passion: and sudden evils are very terrible, because they expectorate a mans abilities, and render him helpless, shiftless, comfortless. See this in Saul, who surprized with sudden horrour at his destiny read him by the Devil, fell straightway all along on the earth like an Ox, and was sore afraid, and there was no strength in him, 1 Sam. 28. 20. Job also had his fears, but then he had his cordials too, that kept him from falling under them.

Verse 11. Or darkness, that thou canst not see.] Sunt tenebræ supplicia, et damnatorum desperationes, saith Brentius here; By darkness are meant punishments temporal, and eternal. Others understand the text of blindness and confusion of minde, that can neither see the cause of trouble, nor finde an issue.

And abundance of waters cover thee] So that although thou shouldest escape the snares, out-live the fears, run away in the dark, yet how wilt thou avoid the Deluge of Destruction, the over-flowing scourge that carrieth all before it?

Verse 12. Is not God in the height of Heaven?] Some adde out of the next verse, these words, Sayest thou; making Jobs Atheistical speeches (here mimetically fathered upon him by Eliphaz) an argument of his great wickedness; as if Job should say, and so discover himself (for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh, Matth. 12.) to be of Protagoras his opinion, who doubted of a Deity: Or of Diagoras his, who flatly denied it: Or at least of Aristotles, who pent up God in heaven, and taught that he took little or no care of things done on earth. But what saith the Psalmist? (and Job was of the same minde, whatever the Jew-Doctors affirm of him to the contrary,) Our God is in the Heavens: he hath done whatsoever he pleased in heaven and in earth. The Lord is high above all Nations: and his glory above the Heavens. Who is like unto the Lord our God, who dwelleth on high: who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth? He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, &c. The eyes of the Lord run to and fro through the whole earth to shew himself strong, &c. His wrath is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. Job had frequently acknowledged and celebrated the power and providence of God, his judgements upon the wicked, his fatherly chastisements upon himself, deeply detesting all such thoughts and speeches as he is here wrongfully made the Author of.

De Diis, utrum sint, non ausim affirmare. Prot.

Psal. 115. 3. Psal. 113. 4, 5, 6, 7.

2 Chron. 16. 9.

Rom. 1. 18.

And behold the height of the Stars.] Heb. The head of the stars; those that are the very highest, and at the top of the visible heaven, the eighth heaven, beyond which some of the Ancients acknowledged not any other. Aristotle saith, That beyond the aspectable and moveable heavens, there is neither body, nor time, nor place, nor vacuum. But the scripture teacheth us, That there is beyond the Stars (how high set soever) a third heaven, a heaven of heavens, the Throne of God, and habitation of the Blessed: The starry sky is but as the brick-wall encompassing this lofty Palace, the glorious and glittering rough-cast thereof.

De cæl. text. 99.

Mercer.

How high they are.] Ut nix eò noster possit aspectus pertingere, so high that our eyes can hardly reach them. It is a wonder, that we can look up to so admirable a height, and that the very eye is not tyred in the way. Now God is far, far above the stars, omnium supremus, altissimarum altissimus, The high and lofty One that inhabiteth Eternity, Isa. 57. 17. dwelleth in light inaccessible, 1 Tim. 6. 16. such as whereof no natural knowledge can be had, nor any help by humane Arts, Geometry, Opticks, &c. How then can he see from such a distance what is here done on earth, saith the Atheist? who thinks to hide himself from God, because he hath hidden Propterea quod tantum Chaos sit inter nos et Deum. Var.

God

God from himself? Hear him else in the next verse. See also Ezek. 8. 12. and 9. 9.

Verse 13. And thou sayest, How doth God know?] A bruitish question, Psal. 94. 7, 8. and never of Jobs making. There are a sort of such miscreants as believe nothing but what they see with their bodily eyes; and indeed, for a finite creature to believe the infinite Attributes of God, he is not able to do it throughly, without supernatural grace; which therefore must be begged of God, Jam. 1. 5. that he would give us the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him, the eyes of our understanding being enlightened, &c. Ephes. 1. 17, 18. For want whereof, the wicked, blinded with sin, ask such senseless and blasphemous questions as this in the text, and those like this, Psal. 10 11. Zeph. 1, 12. See the Note there. It is a ridiculous thing, saith Pliny, to think that the highest Majesty taketh care of humane affaires; a service (doubtless) far below him, and unworthy of his greatness. Plin. l. 2. c. 7.

Can he judge through the dark cloud?] Can he discern through such a dark *mediu*m? Men cannot see God, and therefore some fools are apt to think that neither can he see them. But that Job was far from any such thought, see chap. 21. 16. 22. To blame therefore was Eliphaz to charge him with such a wickedness: and all because he had said, that in this life bad men oft prosper, and better men suffer, which yet is verum tanquam ex tripode, very true; and not at all derogatory to the divine providence. Sicut pueri vultum obvelant, putantes sese tum non conspici. Lavat.

Verse 14. Thick clouds are a covering to him.] He lyeth close hid among the clouds, and seeth nothing. But be the clouds never so thick, Christ's eyes are a flaming fire, Rev. 1. 14. And the School of Nature teacheth, That the fiery eye needeth no outward light, but seeth exsta-mittendo, by sending out a ray, &c. He will freely blot out the sins of his people as a cloud, and their transgressions as a thick cloud, Isa. 44. 22. & 43. 25. but the clouds cannot hinder him from sight of their sins; for he is All-eye: and darkness and light are both alike to him, Psal. 139. 12. A cloud may come between the body of the Sun and us: and the whole Hemisphere may be masked and over-cast as we call it, but nothing can keep God from eying and ordering all things. ὁλόφθαλμος.

And he walketh in the circuit of heaven.] Where it seemeth thou thinkest he only manageth matters and beareth rule, and not below. So indeed the Peripatetick thought, and taught. Agreeably whereunto Lysippus made Alexanders picture looking up to heaven, with this Posie, Juppiter, asserui terram mihi, tu assere cœlum.

With which picture Alexander was so delighted, that he proclaimed that none should take his picture but Lysippus. Plin. l. 6. c. 16.

Augustus also heard with delight,

Divisum imperium cum Jove Cæsar habet. Virgil. vita.

And the Great Turk, vexed at his great loss in the last Assault of Scodra, most horribly blasphemed against God, saying, That it were enough for him to have care of heavenly things, and not to cross him in his worldly actions. The Atheist here taketh it for granted, That God hath enough to do to walk from place to place in Heaven, (as Princes do in their Progress) and to order those heavenly bodies how they shall affect these lower bodies, by their light, heat, and influence, &c. Fain they would confine him to that circuit or circle (the heavens are supposed to be spharical and circular) that he might meddle no further. Fain they would perswade themselves and others, That God hath cast off the care of earthly busines, and committed all to Fate and Fortune: that many might live far more comfortable, if they were less conscientious: that it nothing concerneth God, whether men do or not do this or that, &c. Such dust-heaps as these may be easily found in every corner; for all places are full of them, and so is hell too. As for Job, the Counsel of these wicked ones was far from him, chap. 21. 16. he was the worse to think of them: whatever Eliphaz (by mistake of his meaning, at the least) thought of him. Turk. Hist. fol. 423.

Verse 15. Hast thou marked the old way?] Heb. The way of old. Broughton rendreth rendreth it, the way of the old world: of those ungodly ones before the Flood. Hereby it appeareth, say our Learned Annotatours, that Job lived before the deliverance out of Egypt. because he mentioneth the Creation and the Flood, but not that deliverance; which had he knowne, it would have assoded him an excellent Argument to prove that godly men might be in great affliction, as the Israelites were in Egypt; and his friends a plausible argument that God useth to destroy wicked men for their sin, as he did the Egyptians in the red sea.

Which wicked men have trodden.] Heb. Mortals of iniquity, or vanity. Viri nequam & nequaquam, vel nihili; Men of wickedness with a witnesse. The face of the old world was grown so fowle, that God was fain to wash it with a flood. All was out of order in family, State and Church. In the Family was found Luxury, and unlawful Marriages. In the State, Tyranny, violence, rapacity and injustice. In the Church, contempt of Gods Word, and a fond opinion that God did not order all by his Providence, but that a man might do well enough without him. Now that this was the Opinion of those Antediluvian Belialists, some have gathered from this Text, which they read thus, Wilt thou follow the old way; that is, the Tenet of those old sinners against their own souls, whom God for their damnable security and licentiousnes (the products of such a portentous opinion) buried all together in one universal grave of waters?

Intempestâ morte abrepti. Jun.

Verse 16. Which were cut down out of time] Or, Which grew full of wrinkles (as those that have long lien in the water are apt to do) and not time; that is, before that time of life that they had promised themselves on earth; or before they had fulfilled the dayes of their forefathers, who though wicked above measure many of them, yet the flood could not come, till Methuselah (the last liver of the ten Patriarks) were laid up. God cuts off some notoriously wicked betime, when in the course of Nature they might have lived longer, that they may do no more hurt, as the Gardener destroyeth young Henbane, and the Country man young Vermins.

Whose foundation was overflown with a flood] Heb. A river was powred upon their foundation. This some understand of that River of Brimstone and fire powred from heaven upon Sodom and her sisters: But better take it of those in Noahs dayes, whose foundation (that is, the earth, that foundation of mankind: or their wealth and prosperity, whereon they thought themselves firmely founded, or their lives, &c.) were overflowne with a flood; which came rushing in upon them with mighty force, and drowned the Universe. And here the Hebrewes make to be the middle of this Book of Job, wherein they reckon in all One thousand and seventy verses.

Verse 17. Which said unto God, Depart from us] Atheists, those Antediluvians were, if not Dogmatical, yet practical, such as Job had described, speaking the like language of hell, chap. 21. 14. Et malicioſè cum Eliphazus talium atheorum numero accenſet, saith Mercer. And maliciously doth Eliphaz reckon Job among those odious Atheists, so thinking to cut his throat with his owne sword, and confute him with his own words. Malice cares not how truly things are set forth, so it may gall or kill.

And what can the Almighty do for them?] that is, They asked, what can the Almighty do for them? As if God neither could nor would reward their services: as if he would do them neither good nor evil. The Seventy render it, τί ἐπάξει ἡμῖν; What will he bring upon us? q. d. He threatneth us with a flood, but when trow, and how? Let the day of the Lord come! Isai. 5. 19. Where is the promise of his coming, &c.? 2 Pet. 2. Thus they jeered when it was fitter they should have feared? but what was the issue?

Verse 18 Yet he filled their houses with good things] Heb. With good; that is, with all precious and pleasant riches, whereof he gave them both plenty and propriety, but no otherwise then as Joseph caused his cup to be conveyed into Benjamins sack the better to furnish out an Indictment against him. And as Benjamins pretended theft was held more heinous, by how much his welcome was the greater, for he had a five-fold portion: so shall it one day fare with such rich wretches, as whose bellies God filleth with his hid treasure, and whose houses he filleth top full with good things.

—Eurus

—Eutrapelus cuicunque nocere volebat. Horat.
Veſtimenta dabat pretioſa.—

Well might Eliphaz add, all things reckoned.

But (or yet) the counſel of the wicked is (or be it) far from me] See theſe words expounded, chap. 21.16. where Job hath the very ſame. Sed ea vult illi eripere Eliphaz, ſaith a learned Interpreter. But Eliphaz will needs take them away from him: and it is as if he ſhould ſay, Thou, O Job, ſeemeſt by thy words, and with thy mouth to deteſt the counſel of the wicked; but thy doings declare the contrary. Whilſt thou ſo many wayes celebrateſt the proſperity of the ungodly. To me therefore, and to all righteous men, who do heartily hate the wicked, and do ſeriouſly ſet forth Gods juſt judgments againſt them, doth this ſpeech better agree, and more truly appertaine, &c. And as for theſe righteous men, let me tell thee further,

Verſe 19. The righteous ſee it, and are glad] And as for my ſelf, The counſel of the wicked is far from me: I do therefore abominate their preſent proſperity, becauſe they ſhall ſhortly be for a laughing ſtock to all good men: The upright ſhall ſee it and be glad, and all iniquity ſhall ſtop her mouth, as ſelf-condemned, and therefore by the Saints (ſwallowed up with a zeal of Gods glory) rightly derided, Pſal. 52 6. and 58.11.

And the Innocent laugh them to ſcorn] Not out of ill will, or envy, or other corrupt affection: But 1. For the glory of God, whoſe Power, Juſtice and Goodneſſe is hereby evinced and evidenced. 2. For the good of others, who ſtumble at the proſperity of the ungodly, or elſe are eaſed of their cruelty. 3. Add hereunto, That it is never the worſe for the wicked themſelves, that God taketh them off. For if they be Elect, they repent ere they dye: as if Reprobates, they are kept hereby from adding to their ſin, and ſo to their torments, which ſhall be proportionable thereunto. Thoſe that underſtand this verſe of Noah and his ſons, rejoycing when they ſaw the reſt drowned, and themſelves preſerved, render the words thus, The righteous ſaw it and were glad, and the innocent laughed them to ſcorn. A late reverend man of God amongſt us, in a Diſcourſe of his about the benefit of a good conſcience in times of common calamity, brings in Noah and thoſe with him in the Ark, inſulting over the periſhing old world thus: Now Jubal let us hear one of your merry ſongs, pipe now, and make your ſelf merry, as you were wont in gybing at Noahs folly in making a Ship to ſaile on dry land. What aileſt thou Jubal, to howle and wring thine hands thus? Where is thy Harp and Organs now? Now the flood is come, now Noah is in his Cabbin, and the water begins to be chin-deep, tell me, O Jubal, whether building of Tents, or building of an Ark be the wiſer work? Would you not give all the ſhooes in your ſhop, all the tools in your tents, all the cattel in your flocks, to be but where Noahs dog lies? And now Sirs, you that were ſuch men of Renown, Gen. 6.4. you that were the brave Gallants of the earth, now tell me who is the fool, and who is the wiſe man now. Thus he. Piſcator takes the next verſe, Whereas (or, though) our ſubſtance is not cut down, but (or, yet) the remnant of them the fire conſumeth, to be ſpoken in the perſon of Noah, whom he makes the innocent man here mentioned; and adds, Saying, in the beginning of the next verſe; As if Noah coming out of the Ark ſhould waſh his feet in the blood of thoſe wicked; and ſay, God hath preſerved me and mine, (our ſincerity hath prevailed for our ſafety) and in his wrath deſtroyed the ungodly. But I rather concur with Tremellius, and Merlin, and others, who make this verſe coherent with, and preparatory to the following famous Exhortation to Repentance, Verſe 21, 22, 23, &c. Acquaint thy ſelf now with him, and be at peace, &c. But be ſure thou do it now, that is ſpeedily and timouſly.

Mr. Jeremy Dyke p. 183.

Verſe 20. When our ſubſtance is not cut down] that is, Whiles life laſteth, and whiles it is called to day; before death cometh: and after death, judgement: when the remnant of the wicked fire ſhall conſume. Where we have a forcible motive to repent, becauſe we muſt either turn or burn, Aut pœnitendum, aut perendum. See Act. 17.31. 2 Cor. 5.10,11. Heb. 12.28,29. Eliphaz ſeemeth here on purpoſe to have mentioned that fire wherewith wicked men ſhall be tormented at the laſt day, and before (for every mans deaths-day is his doom-day) and to have changed the person.

The remnant (or excellency) of them the fire consumeth] That it might the more effectually move men to repent, that they may be delivered from the wrath to come. And here I could willingly take up Chrysostomes wish, Utinam ubique de Gehenna disseretur! Oh that men would talk more every where of hell fire unquenchable, intolerable, and the fuel thereof made of the most tormenting temper, Isai. 30.33. It was a speech of Gregory Nyssen, He that does but hear of hell, is without any further labour or study taken off from sinful pleasures, and set upon the practice of mortification. But mens hearts are grown harder now adayes, and he that shall observe their impiety and impenitency, may well say to them, as Cato once did to Cesar, Credo quæ de inferis dicuntur falsa existimas, I believe thou thinkest all but a fable that is said concerning hell.

Juven. Sat. 2. Esse aliquos Manes, &c.
Nec pueri credunt nisi qui nondum ære lavantur.

Verse 21. Acquaint now thy self with him] Accommoda te nunc illi, assuesce cum illo. Converse with God in an humble familiarity; set him at the right hand, Psal. 16.8. be ever at his hand, Ut famulus seu accensus, as Attendant upon his person. In all thy wayes acknowledge him, and let him direct thy paths, Prov. 3.6. Ask counsel at his mouth, aime at his glory, be thou in his fear all the day long, Prov. 23.17. Account it thine happinesse to be in communion with him, and conformity to him, in all parts and points of duty. The Lord is with you, if you be with him, 2 Chron. 15.3.

And be at peace,] Return to him by repentance, from whom thou hast so deeply revolted, and against whom thou hast so shamefully rebelled. For Eliphaz here takes it for granted, that Job had estranged himself from God, and therefore could not possibly be at peace till better acquainted with him, and acquiescing in him, as the Vulgar here hath it. No creature is more fearful then a fish, flying at the shadow of a man; yet it feareth not the roaring Ocean, (which yet Lions, and other fierce creatures feare) because it is of its own nature and acquaintance. A sheep feareth not his shepherd; nor shall we God, if once acquainted with him: Peace shall be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy Tabernacles.

Acquiesce ei.

Thereby good shall come unto thee] Happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee, Psal. 128.2. A Cornucopia, a confluence of all manner of comforts and contentments shall betide thee: but then thou must humble thy self to walk with thy God, Mic. 6.8. by faith walk with God, and by reflection walk with thy self: Compone, & emenda vias tuas coram Domino, and then thou needest not say with the worldling, who will shew us any good? Psal. 4.6. for God himself will say unto thee, as once he did to Moses, when he gave him but a glimpse of himself and his glory, Ostendam tibi omne bonum, I will make all my goodnesse passe before thee, Exod. 33.19.

Verse 22. Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth] Now he speaks Job fair, whom before he had sufficiently rippled up, and rough-hewed, without mercy, or so much as truth. That which he here perswadeth him to, is to depend upon God for direction and successe in all his enterprizes; to consult with him upon all occasions, and not to do ought without his warranty and approbation. Gods testimonies were Davids delight, and his Counsellors, Psalm 119.24. All that advise not with these, must needs be without understanding, a Nation void of counsel, Deut. 32.28.

And lay up his words in thine heart.] Heb. Put his word, as the Tables were put in the Ark; mingle Gods Word with faith in thine heart, as in a vessel: Cor autem fit carneum fidei; the fleshly heart is made fleshly by faith, and capable of divine impressions.

Verse 23. If thou return to the Almighty, thou shalt be built up.] By sin men run from God, by repentance they return to him. Break off thy sins by repentance, and put away iniquity far from thy Tabernacle (for iniquity and repentance cannot cohabit, and he is no true Penitentiary, that tabernacleth not his family, that setteth not up God, wherever he hath to do) so shalt thou be built up, that is, thou shalt be restored, and all thy losses in wealth and Children shall be made up again: prosus erigeris qui jam collapsus es: thou, who are now down on all four, shalt be new set up, and made to stand in thy former strength. Only thou must return usque ad Omnipotentem, all out as far as to the Almighty, thou must not give the half-turn only as hypocrites do, but with thy whole heart, and as Joel 2. 12. see the Note there. Thus Eliphaz discourseth very well, and handsomly of the business in hand: Only he was out in this, That he looked upon Job as an impenitent person, and upon his family as ill-ordered. As also, in that he conceived that true repentance is ever rewarded with outward and inward prosperity: whereas a penitent person may continue under crosses, though God will surely save the humble, as he saith afterwards, verse 29. and, repentance can turn crosses into comforts: and like the Philosophers stone, make golden afflictions, 1 Pet. 1. 7. As scarlet pulls out the teeth of a Serpent, so this takes away the sting of a judgement. As wine draweth a nourishing vertue from the flesh of Vipers, &c.

up

Verse 24. Then shalt thou lay up gold as dust.] Which is as much as to say (saith One) thou shalt make pavements of gold; see 2 Chron. 1. 15. Psal. 68. 30. Then shalt thou have thy desire, for thou shalt be rich with content, which is worth a million, as another paraphraseth it. Beza rendreth it thus, Cast thy gold on the ground, (even that worldly pelf, wherein thou hast been wholly addicted) and let the gold of Ophir be unto thee as the pebble-stones of the brooks, (make no more account of it than of those small stones) and let the Almighty be thy tower, let him be unto thee as plenty of silver. The Scythians are said to have found in the Mines of Asmerion, more Gold than Earth. Perhaps Eliphaz here promiseth Job, that upon his return to God, his Land should have many rich veines of Gold: And so One paraphraseth this text thus; Then shall you acquit your self of all your losses, and you shall recover with usury what was taken from you: for, for barren lands which could bring forth nothing, you shall have such as in their intrails shall produce Porphyry; and in stead of those unprofitable Rocks which made a part of your Estate, you shall have fertile Mines, from whence shall issue Rivers of Gold. Agreeable wherevnto is that Exposition of Brentius, Reputatur pro pulvere aurum, pro vili pretiosum, pro fluvijs arenosis torrentes aureis lapillis ingens; Thou shalt have for Dust Gold: for vile things those that are precious: for sandy rivers, golden torrents. An hyperbolical expression. And the Gold of Ophir.] Where the best Gold grew: possibly the same with Peru, the letters only transposed. Ophir, Gen. 10. was one of the sons of Joktan, who came of Shem, from whom, saith Josephus, a Country in India abounding with Gold, had its name. Hunc aurum abundans dixerunt, quam Ophiritidem. Ophir, is here put for the Gold of Ophir: for the word Gold is not in the original.

Verse 25. Yea, the Almighty shall be thy defence.] Or, thy Gold, for the same word signifieth both Shaphar, 36. 19. because Gold is the worldly mans defence, Prov. 18. 11. though but a fancy, Zeph. 1. 18. Prov. 11. 4. Ezek. 7. 19. It is as if he should say, Either thou shalt have gold Gods plenty; or else, thou shalt have that which is better than gold, viz. God the Maker and Master of all the world, saith Junius, who rendreth the words thus; And the Almighty shall be thy treasure of Gold, and Silver, and Jewels to thee. He shall be all that heart can wish, or need require. So Antigonus, in Eunapius, being asked where his Treasure was? Answered, Where Cyrus is my friend. Let us answer, Where God is my friend. When David had said, The Lord is my portion, he subjoyned in the next verse, The lot is fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage, Psal. 16. 5, 6. When God had said to Abraham, I am thy shield, he easily slighted the King of Sodom's rich offer. And thou shalt have plenty of silver.] Heb. Silver of strengths, or of heights, that is, as the vulgar interpreteth it, argentum electum tibi, thou shalt have high heaps of silver, store of money. Godliness hath the promises of both lives: and if godly men are not always rich in this life, that godliness may be admired for it self. And they must know, that whatsoever they want in temporals, shall be made up in spirituals, according to that which follows.

Verse 26. For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty.] As in thine one-ly Portion. Thou shalt enjoy him which is the top of humane happines: solace thy self in the fruition of him, taste and see how good the Lord is, and thereupon love him dearly, Psal. 18. 1. not only with a love of desire, as Psal. 42. 1, 2. but of complacency, as Psal. 73. 25, 26. affecting not only an union, but an unity with him: and converting with him, as one may, in the mean while, in a fruitful and chearful use of his holy Ordinances.

And shalt life up thy face unto God.] Wrapping thy self in Christs righteousnes, thou shalt draw nigh to God with an humble boldnes in duty, and not doubt but he will draw nigh to thee in mercy. It is said of Luther, that he pray'd with so great reverence as unto God; and yet with so great confidence, as to his friend. Verse 27. Thou shalt make thy prayer unto him, and he shall hear thee.] Yea, though thou multiply prayers and intercessions for thy self and others (as the word signifieth, and as afterwards Job did for Eliphaz and his fellows, or else it had gone worse with them) yet he shall hear thee in all: Thou shalt, as his favourite, have the royalty of his ears, and he shall say unto thee seriously, as Ahasuerus did once to his Courtier, soothingly, The King can deny you nothing. Ille vir potuit apud Deum quod voluit, said One concerning Luther, That man could have of God whatsoever he listed. This David took (as well he might) for a singular mercy, Psal. 22. ult. Psal. 66. ult.

Melch. Ad. in vita.

Multiplicabis verba tua. Mer.

And thou shalt pay thy vows.] i. e. Thou shalt return thy thanks, and so shalt devo an holy tribute, as it were, betwixt heaven and earth. Nulla sibi a Deo nisi grata ingrediendi occasio dabitur. Thou shalt have unmiscarrying returns of thy suits; so that thou must be ready with thy praises after their prayers; for that is all thou shalt have to do. Praise waiteth for thee, O God, in Zion; and unto thee shall the vow be performed. O thou that hearest prayer, unto thee shall all flesh come, with their thanks in their hands as it were.

Psal. 65. 1, 2.

Verse 28. Thou shalt also decree a thing, and it shall be established unto thee.] God will be better to thee than thy Prayers; and prosper all thy Counsels, affect thy designes. The ungodly are not so, as is to be seen in those revolted Israelites, Jud. 2. in King Saul, and in our King John. Or if they have their designes, it is for a further mischief to them: As, if the godly be crossed, it is in mercy: like as it is storied of our Queen Isabel, that being to passe from Zeland into England with an Army, they had all been utterly cast away, had she come into the Port intended, being there expected by her enemies. But providence, against her will, brought her to another place, where she safely landed. The like is reported of Bishop Jewel, that being sought for by the Popish Persecutors, he had been caught, but that going to London, he took this way.

Mr. Clark in his Life. p. 262.

And the light shall shine upon thy ways.] That is to say, God will inspire thee with good counsel and direct him in all thine affairs, and turn thine ill counsels into good unto thee, (as the Heathens thought Minerva did to her Athenians, and as the Romans fancied of their Goddess Vesta, that she set them in their right way when they were wandering), or will shine over them with his blessing, contrary to thy complaint, Lam. 3. 7. or else

Diod.

Verse 29. When men are cast down, then thou shalt say, there is lifting up.] And that by the fames of thy Faith, the nature whereof is to gather one contrary out of another, Vita ex mortuis, affluence out of indigence, out of deepest distresses, Deus. 32. 39.) and to believe God upon his bare words, and that against sense in things invisible, and against reason in things impossible, (Quando abscondit vultum suum, quis ejus contemplabitur? Job 34. 29. Behaving and fasting of him that hath his eyes down, whereof some makes this to be the sense) shall be able out of his own experience to encourage others in misery, who likewise humble themselves. Junius rendreth this, and the following verse, When a man shall have gotten many evils, and then shall think of lifting up, then will God save the low of eyes, or him which up-lookes in his vain eyes: He will deliver it him that is pure, yea, he shall be delivered by the purity of his hands. Such encouragement shall he have to pray, and his blessing upon them, help of his shall be mercy to others, though they be none of his help, Jer. 15. 11. and 18. 24. And hence Job's intercession for his friends, and that of Noah and Daniel.

And

29. And he ſhall ſave the humble perſon.] Heb. Him that is low of eyes, as was Job at this time: and the Publican, Luk. 18. 13. An high look, and a proud heart go together, Pſal. 101. 5. And as God reſiſteth ſuch, Jam. 4. 4. 1 Pet. 5. 5. ſo he giveth grace to the humble, and not grace only, but glory too; as here, ſafety here, and ſalvation hereafter.

Verſe 30. He ſhall deliver the Iſland of the innocent.] Or. He ſhall deliver the not innocent, him that is not guiltleſs: and even ſuch ſhall be delivered for the purity of thine hands. Thus God gave Zoar to Lot, and all the ſouls in the ſhip to Paul, and the guilty Iſraelites to Moſes. See Jer. 5. 1. Or, the innocent ſhall deliver the Iſland: Or, Liberabitur va innocentis, The innocent ſhall be freed from affliction: ſo Brentius.

And it is delivered by the pureneſs of thine hands.] i. Of thy works, or by thy pure hands lifted up in Prayer. Semen ſanctum ſtatumen terræ, the Saints bear up the ſtate, Iſa. 6. 13. they uphold the pillars of the earth by their Piety and Prayers: and therefore when God is unchangeably reſolved to ruin a people, he ſilenceth his Saints, as Jer. 7. 16. or removeth them out of the world; as he did Methuſelah the year before the Flood. And as one Sinner may deſtroy much good, Eccl. 9. 18. So one Praying Saint may ſave an Iſland, a whole Country: it is delivered by the pureneſs of thy hands. It may be, the work ſticks at thee: why then is not thy ſhoulder at the wheel, when the cart is ſtalled?

CHAP. XXIII.

Verſe 1. Then Job anſwered and ſaid.]

Pin. IN defence of his own integrity, againſt Eliphaz his calumnies in the foregoing Chapter. To make Apology to every one that ſhall traduce us, Plato holdeth to be both baſe and Bootleſſe. But when ſuch a weighty man as Eliphaz ſhall lay load upon ſo innocent a man as Job, Quæ tulerit? ſomething would be ſaid in way of anſwer. Πᾶσιν ἐπιλογὸς ὑπεναντίος. Plat.

Verſe 2. Even to day is my complaint bitter.] q.d. After all mine endeavour to ſatisfie you, I am ſtill miſ-interpreted, and accounted by you my friends no better then a Malecontent and a Murmurer againſt God; albeit my laments do no way equal my torments. True it is, that Eliphaz had given him excellent counſel, chap. 22. 21. 22. &c. but it was to flatter him into the ſame errour that himſelf held; viz. that bodily and temporal ſufferings are a ſure ſign of a notorious hypocriſie. Hence Job never taketh notice of it in this reply: but begins his Apology pathetically and abruptly, and ſoon falls into an appeale to God the righteous Judge, who well knew, (though his friends would take no notice of it) that he complained not without cauſe: but the contrary.

My ſtroak is heavier than my groaning.] Moſt mens groaning is greater then their ſtroaks or ſufferings. Invalidum eſt omne naturâ querulum eſt. Some are ever whining and growling; their lips, like rufty hinges, move not without murmuring and mutinying, yea they not only creak but break, as rotten boughs do, if but a little weight be hung upon them. Or as ſome mens fleſh, which if never ſo little rubbed with a pin, it preſently ſwelleth and feſtereth. Job was none of theſe; if he groaned, as he did, (and will they deny him that eaſe of his dolour? Euphues. Lachrymæ ægritudinis ſolatium.) there was very great cauſe for it, ſuch his preſſures were greater then could be expreſſed by any ſighes or words. Senec. Ovid

Verſe 3. Oh that I knew where I might find him.] that is, God, ſo oft in his mind and mouth, that his acquaintance might eaſily know whom he meane. Apho. Plu. Weems. Jehovah (ſaith he) was a Kings 2. 14. is held by ſome to be one of Gods Attributes. And Mr. Vſher without mention of Δία, was an ordinary oath in Plato's mouth, as Suidas recordeth.

That

That I might come even to his ſeat] His Tribunal prepared for him. Great is the confidence of a good conſcience. See Gen. 20.5. 1 Pet. 3.21. But yet haec certè omnia audacius dicuntur à miſero hominicolo; this was too bold a ſpeech for a mortal creature, as God himſelf (who gave him his wiſh) will afterwards tell him, chap. 38.2. and 40.2. and contrary to that which he had before reſolved on, chap. 9.3. See the like failing in David, Pſalm 39 1,3. and 2 Samuel 6.8,9. In theſe examples of ſo good men, we may ſee how natural it is to us in affliction to riſe up againſt God; as the horſe that caſteth his Rider, and riſeth up againſt him. This the Poets ſhadowed out in their fiction of the Gyants conſpiring to pull Jove out of heaven. That which may be ſaid in favour of Job herein, is, 1. That ver. 6. he profeſſeth to plead with God in Gods ſtrength. 2. That being accuſed by his friends of ſo foule offences, he had no other way of clearing himſelf, then by appealing unto God, whoſe moſt juſt judgement he acknowledged. 3 That he durſt not have ſpoken thus boldly, but in confidence of his mercy. 4 That he would have this his controverſie with his friends, (and not his whole life) to be exactly examined and judged by God.

Venirem uſque ad ſtationem ejus. Mercer.

Hoc à pietate alienum eſt, quòd adverſus Deum præfractius, & contumelioſius loquatur quam humilitas fidei ferat. Brent.

Verſe 4. I would order my cauſe before him] I would not ſtick to approach to his Tribunal, there to plead my cauſe (not againſt him, as being the Supreme Judge, and not either Plaintiff or Defendant, but) againſt your falſe and wrongful accuſations, which undoubtedly I would diſprove and confute by many forcible and ſtrong Arguments.

Beza.

And fill my mouth with arguments] Heb. Redargutions, increpations, reprehenſions. A good Oratour will firſt rightly lay down his cauſe, ſtate the Queſtion, as we call it. 2. Confirm it with reaſons: 3. Obſerve what is ſaid to the contrary, and confute it. Job would do all this, if he might have audience: but if to God all this, Job was much miſtaken: And ſo at another time, when in a better mind he could ſay, Whom, though I were righteous, yet would I not anſwer, but I would make ſupplication to my Judge. If I juſtifie my ſelfe, mine own mouth ſhall condemne me, &c. chap. 9.15,20.

ἔλεγχοι.

Verſe 5. I would know the words that he would anſwer me] q. d. I cannot know your minds, O my friends, nor underſtand your words, which yet I believe are little to the purpoſe; But God (I know) will utter his mind plainly, and approve my cauſe which you ſo raſhly condemne. Thus John Huſſe and other Martyrs, when they could not have a faire hearing from men, appealed and applied themſelves to God, committing their cauſe to him who judgeth righteouſly.

Mercer.

Verſe 6 Will he plead againſt me with his great power?] No, for then you were in a wo-caſe. For if Gods breath blow us to deſtruction, as ſo many duſt heaps, Job 4.9. if he frowne us to death, and ſend us to deſtruction, Pſal. 80.16. What ſhall we think of his Almighty power, which none can abide or avoid? Difficile eſt contra eum ſcribere, qui poteſt proſcribere: It is dangerous dealing with him, who hath at his command thirty legions, ſaid the Philoſopher to the Emperour, who would needs crack an Argument with him. And ſhould Job dare to do it with the Lord of hoſtes, as if ſtronger then he? The thunder of his power, who can beat? The ſtouteſt men quake before him, and as the wormes when it thundreth, wriggle into the corners of the earth, ready to run, as Caligula did, under any bed, or any bench-hole.

No, but he would put ſtrength in me] Sic enim ex fidei πανοπλία perſuaſus, ſaith an Interpreter. Thus was Job perſwaded out of the full aſſurance of his faith, that God would deal with him as a loving Father, and not as a ſevere Judge: for who can ſtand before his wrath, or withſtand his will? No man ſurely can contend with God, unleſſe he put ſtrength in him, as he did into Jacob, Gen. 32. whom he upheld with the one hand, as he ſtrove againſt him with the other. This foregoing wiſh therefore of Job, hath an excellent commendation in it of his faith and integrity, yet ſo as that in ſome things it is blameworthy. For who can come to Gods Seat ſith he dwelleth in light unapproachable? neither can any one ſee God and live, Exod. 34. For this boldneſſe therefore of his he ſhall be hereafter ſharply reproved, firſt by Elihu, and then alſo by God himſelf, ſtepping forth as it were from behind the hangings, overhearing him, and ſaying, Who is this that talks thus? how now? chap. 38.2,3.

Merlin.

Verſe

Vers. 7. There the righteous might dispute with him.] There for Then; scil. when God shall put strength into him: the upright or honest man (who draweth neer with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having his heart sprinkled from an evil conscience by the blood of Jesus Christ, Heb. 10. 22.) might dispute with God, but not unlesse he have that Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Just One, to appear in the presence of God for him, Heb. 9. 24. as the Lawyer appeareth for his Client to put by and non-suit all accusations, to plead his cause, and to justifie him by the only merit of his righteousnesse and obedience. All Saint Pauls care was to be found in Christ, when sought for by the Justice of God, not having his own righteousnesse which is of the Law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, Phil. 3. 9. for sordet in conspectu judicis, quod fulget in conspectu operantis, that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is abomination in the sight of God, Luke 16. 15. They only may dispute with God, that is, in an humble and laudable manner plead with him, as did Jacob. Gen. 32. 24. and Jeremy, chap. 12. 1. who partake of Christs righteousnesse imputed and imparted; opposing to the appearances of Gods wrath the firme perswasion of his grace by the Seal of his Spirit, Et id quam hoc non est magnum! This is few mens happinesse. Aug.

So should I be delivered for ever from my Judge.] Who would quit me by Proclamation; and then I should the less care to be condemned by you my fellow-prisoners. I care not for mans day, sith he that judgeth me is the Lord, 1 Cor. 4. 3, 4. Where note, what boldnesse and confidence the upright have in God; neither shall they be herein deceived, as Job was not.

Vers. 8. Behold, I go forward.] Heb. Eastward, which is reckoned the fore-part of the world; because that eye of the world, the Sun, riseth there; and every man looketh to the rising Sun.

But he is not there.] sc. In that sort, as I desired to finde him, verse 3. he is not visible to me, he is too subtile for mine eye or sight to seize upon: his judgements also are unsearchable: and his paths past finding out. True it is, that the whole world is nothing else but Deus explicatus, a Mirrour or Theatre wherein God may be seen, yea, felt, and found out by those that are blind, Act. 17. 27. If a man hear a Sermon by night, and in the dark, though he see not the Preacher, yet he knows he is there. So Job questioned not Gods Omnipresence; but complaineth that himself was benighted, and forsaken of his hopes to be eased of his troubles, outwardly in body, or inwardly in minde: this is the judgement of the flesh, when under Affliction.

And backward, but I cannot perceive him.] For indeed he is imperceptible by bodily eyes, neither sitteth he any where in this world to decide controversies, as he shall do in the clouds at the last day, when the righteous shall look up, for their redemption draweth nigh; and the wicked shall look on and waile because of him, Terræ ululabunt, Rev. 1. 7. they shall look and lament, yea, be mad for the sight of their eyes which they shall see, as Deut. 28. 34. Luk. 21. 28.

Vers. 9. On the left hand, where he doth work.] i. e. Northward; where God is said to work; either because that in the North-part of heaven are more signes, and of more remarkable influence than in the South: or else because the Northern parts of the world are more inhabited than the Southern, because more temperate; and so there is more of God to be seen there in his works, as letters refracted in a glass. Sex gradum est speculum, quo Deum intuemur.

But I cannot behold him.] See the Note on verse 8.

He hideth himself on the right hand, &c.] He worketh not so much in the Southern parts of the world: the torrid Zone is unhabitable, &c. Yet the Ethiopian Judges were wont to keep the chief Seat for him empty, when they sate in judgement. And beside the Habassines, that large region of Nubia, had from the Apostles time, as is thought, professed the Christian Faith: though now it hath again, above an hundred years since, forsaken it, and embraced Mahumetanisme, and Idolatry. Alvarez.

That I cannot see him.] See the Note on vers. 8.

Vers. 10. But he knoweth the way that I take.] Heb. That is with me. He perfectly understandeth that there is no way of wickednesse in me, Psal. 139. 24. no sin that I do favour, allow, and wallow in: but that the way that is called Holy, is my delight and endeavour:

endeavour: that I am upright for the main, that my heart is not turned back, neither have my steps declined from his way, Psal 44. 18. I cannot see him, but he seeth me, and mine uprightness.

When he hath tryed me.] sc. With favour, and not with rigour, (for then who should abide it? Psal. 143. 2.) God promiseth to refine his People, but not as silver, Esa. 48. 10. that is, not exactly, lest they should be consumed in that fiery tryal. This David knew, and therefore prayed, Examine me, O Lord, and prove me. try my reins and my heart, Psal. 26. 2. and 139. 23.

I shall come forth as Gold.] Which is purged in the fire, shines in the water: as on the other side, clay is scorched in the fire, dissolved in the water.

Verse 11. My foot hath held his steps.] I have followed God step by step, walking as I had him for an example, and pressing his footsteps. This Job speaketh of himself, not as vaunting, but as vindicating and defending his own innocency; and as giving Eliphaz to know, that he had already done, and still continued to do as he had in the former Chapter exhorted him, verse 21, 22. Acquaint now thy self with God, &c. That's not now to do, saith Job; for my foot hath held his steps. Be at peace: I am so, saith he, for his way have I kept and not declined. Now, can two walk together, and they not be agreed? Receive, I pray thee, the Law from his mouth. What else have I done, saith Job, when as I have not gone back from the commandment of his lips? Lay up his words in thine heart; this I have done ex instituto, saith he; vel præ demenso, more than my necessary food, have I esteemed the words of his mouth. So exact a pattern of the rule was Job; so consonant to Eliphaz his good counsel. Plain things will joyn in every point one with another; not so, round and rugged things: so do plain spirits close with holy counsels; not so, such as are proud and unmortified. Let these be touched never so gently, nettle-like they will sting you. Deal with them roughly and roundly, they swagger, as that Hebrew did with Moses, saying, Who made thee a man of Authority, &c? Exod. 2. 14. Good Job was of another spirit with God, (as it is said of Caleb, Numb. 14. 24.) and followed him fully; ornavit doctrinam cœlestem piis officiis, heavenly doctrine was as the mould, and he as the metal which takes impression from it in one part, as well as another. His constant endeavour was to express God to the world, and to preach forth his vertues or praises by a sutable practise, 1 Pet. 2. 9. Gressum ejus restimis pes mens.

His way have I kept, and not declined.] sc. In excess or defect, and therefore I am no such flagitious person, as thou, Eliphaz, wouldst make of me.

Verse 12. Neither have I gone back from the commandement of his lips] i.e. Ab ipsissimo Dei verbo, from the very word of God, that sure Cynosura, which he that holdeth straightly to, may truly say, Lord, if I be deceived, thou and thy word hath deceived me. But of that there is no danger, sith the Scripture is the invariable Canon or Rule of Truth, saith Irenæus, the Cubit of the Sanctuary, the Touchstone of Errour, the divine Beam, and most exact Balance, as Austin and Chrysostom stile it: yea, the very heart and soul of God, as Gregory. And if Job lived before the word was written, yet not before the Law of Nature, and the Traditions of the Patriarchs: which whiles they remained uncorrupted, were the commandement also of Gods lips, as having been received from his very mouth, and might far better be called ipsissimum Dei verbum, than the Popes pronunciata, which Cardinal Hosius prophanely and blasphemously pronounceth to be the very Word of God.

Κανὼν τῆς ἀληθείας ἀκλινὴς.

In Reg. 3.

I have esteemed the words of his mouth more than my necessary food.] I have preferred (Heb. I have hid, or laid up, as men do precious things, as house-keepers do Provision for their Family) them before my bodily food, my daily bread: and we see what pains men take, what shift they make, Ut bene sit ventri, ut lateri, for food and raiment, and other things requisite to the preservation of this life present. Now Job knew that Gods holy word is τροφὴ ψυχῆς, as Athanasius calleth it, the Souls nourishment, and that the promises are pabulum fidei, the food of Faith, as another calleth them; that we may better want bread, than that bread of life. Hence he esteemed it more, not only than his dainties or superfluities, but then his substantial food, without which he could not live and subsist, more than his appointed portion (so some render it) set out for him by the divine Providence, which cutteth out to every man his allowance. I had rather be without meat, drink, light, any thing, every thing, thing, saith One, then that sweet Text, Come unto me all ye that are weary and heavy laden, &c. I would not for all the world saith Another, that that one verse John 17.24 [Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me, be where I am, that they may behold my glory which thou hast given me, for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world] had been left out of the Bible. And again, There is more worth (saith the same Authour) in those four Chapters, John 14, 15, 16, 17. then in all the Books in the world besides. Luther said, He would not live in Paradise without the Word; as with the Word it were no hard matter to live even in hell it self. Of old they were wont to say, It were better for the Church that the Sun should not shine, then that Chrysostome should not preach to the people. The Jewes at this day will not omit prayers for their meat or labour. They divide the day even the working-day, in three parts, the first ad Tephilla, for prayer; the second ad Tora, for the reading of Gods Law; and the third ad Malacca, for the works of their Calling. And when they have read one Section, they begin another, lest they should seem to be weary of their task. Whereas if we read but a Chapter, (not a quarter so long as one of their Sections or Paragraphs) O what a weariness is it! neither begin we till we have looked over the leaf to see how long it is, so soon sated are we with this heavenly Manna.

Selneccer. Mr. Baxters Saints everlasting Rest. p.24. *Ibid.*708. Tom. 4. Oper. Lat. p.424. Weems.

Verse 13. But he is in one mind, and who can turn him?] He is ever like himself, not mutable, inconstant or various, as men who are (as Tertullian saith of the Peacock) all in changeable colours, as often changed as moved. Gods name is, I am, Exod. 3.14. And if Pilate could say, What I have written, I have written, nothing shall be altered, how much more may the Lord, who is the same yesterday, to day, and for ever? His Decrees are immutable, his power irresistible. Some think that Job complaineth here of Gods absolute power, and little lesse then tyrannical, exercised against him an innocent person. If so, Job was surely much to blame, sith Gods absolute power is never sundred from his Justice; and it must be taken for an undoubted truth, that his judgments are sometimes secret, but alwayes just.

And what his soul desireth, even that he doth.] Id est, Cupit ac facit statim: ejus voluntas est executio; that is, He desireth and doth it forthwith; his will is present execution. It is his pleasure to lay load of afflictions upon me, but wherefore it is, I know not. But Job should have known that as God is a most free Agent, so his wil is not only recta but regula; neither may any man here presume to reprehend what he cannot comprehend.

Verse 14. For he performeth the thing that is appointed for me] He hath performed all my necessaries; so Vatablus rendreth it: 'tis the same word that was used for appointed or necessary food, ver. 12. Voluntas Dei, necessitas rei; God hath decreed thus to deal with me, and therein I must rest satisfied.

And many such things are with him] I know not but that there may be many more sufferings yet decreed to come upon me in his secret counsel. Fiat voluntas Domini. Godly people though they know not many times what the Lord will do, and how he wil deal with them, yet they always know that he is a merciful father to them, and wil order all for the best. This should content them, and keep them from chasing against God, and from nourishing hard conceits of him, or heavy conceits of themselves, as if wicked because afflicted.

Verse 15. Therefore am I troubled at his presence] At the consideration of his formidable Power and Majesty, I am troubled and terrified: troubled at my present calamities, and afraid of fiercer. This verse then seemeth to be a correction of that wish of his above verse 3. and not unlike that ch. 13.21 Withdraw thine hand far from me, and let not thine dread make me afraid. Then call thou, and I will answer, &c.

When I consider, I am afraid of him] I have alwayes imagined that as it were weakness to fear a man, so it were madness not to be afraid of God. Let me be accounted timorous rather then vere sanus.

Verse 16. For God maketh my heart soft] Methinks I feel it fall asunder in my bosome like drops of water, and dissolved with manifold afflictions; so that I am hardly able to bear up any longer: I am almost done, as we use to speak, and my heart faileth me. How should it do otherwise when God with-draweth from his the supplies of his Spirit, Phil 1.19. that Spirit of power, of love, and of a ſound mind, 2 *Tim.*1.7. Acts 20.22. ſaith that great Apoſtle. And now behold I go bound in the Spirit up to Jeruſalem, &c. Whereupon One gives this good Note, The Spirit hemmeth us about, comprehendeth and keepeth us. When a mans own ſtrength would fall looſe, this ſupernatural ſtrength ſtayeth and ſtrengtheneth it. Hence that of David, Pſal.138.3. In the day when I cryed unto thee, thou anſweredſt me, and ſtrengthenedſt me with ſtrength in my ſoul. So *Pſal.*27.14. Be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen thy heart, which elſe will melt (as did the hearts of the men of Jericho, *Joſh.*2.11) like metal melted with fire, or like ice thawed into water, and ſpilt upon the ground, which cannot be taken up again. And this is the ſoft heart Job here complaineth of: God had diſpirited him, and

Dr. Preſton.

The Almighty troubleth him] ſc. With the thoughts of his Almightineſſe. See *Pſal.*39.11. and with ſo many miſeries growing upon him. Now it is not amiſſe for Gods people thus to be melted and troubled otherwhiles: for by this meanes ſhall the iniquity of Jacob be purged, and this is all the fruit, to take away his ſin, *Iſai.*37.9.

Tot malis ingruentibus. Jun.

Verſe 17. Becauſe I was not cut off before the darkneſſe] i.e. The afflictions that now are upon me. It is a mercy to ſome to dye betime, as Joſiah, and thoſe righteous ones, Iſai. 57.1. who were taken away from the evil to come. When Gods glory was to paſſe by, he put Moſes into the hole of the rock: ſo he ſometimes doth his ſervants, till the glory of his Juſtice hath paſſed upon others.

Neither hath he covered the darkneſs from my face] i.e. He hath neither prevented my troubles by death, as I wiſhed he would have done, *chap.*3. Nor yet will he put an end to them by the ſame means: for, Mors ærumnarum requies (Chaucers Motto) Death is a reſt from trouble. To the toſſed ſoul it is as Mount Ararat was to Noah, where the Ark reſted; as Michal was to David, a means to ſhift him out of the way, when Saul ſent to ſlay him: or as the fall of the houſe was to Samſon, an end of all his ſorrowes and ſervitude.

CHAP. XXIV.

Verſe 1. Why, ſeeing times are not hidden from the Almighty.]

HEB. why are not times hidden from the Almighty? q.d. Who could think any otherwiſe, that had not been at the Sanctuary, *Pſ.*73.17. and there heard, Wo to the wicked, it ſhall go ill with him, for the reward of his hands ſhall be (ſooner or later) given unto him? *Iſai.*3.11. The Jew-Doctors conclude, (but falſly) from this Text, that Job denyed the Divine Providence. And the Vulgar Latine, to ſalve the matter and ſave Job from the imputation of Epicuriſme, takes the boldneſſe to leave out the Interrogative, Why, and rendreth it thus, The times are not hidden from the Almighty; leſt, by making it a queſtion, Job ſhould affirm, that times and events are hidden from God, or at leaſt ſhould wiſh and deſire that they were ſo. Vatablus thinketh that Job here putteth on the perſon of one that denyeth Gods Providence, or at leaſt doubteth of it: as if he ſhould ſay, Ye, my friends, ſay that nothing is hidden from God, and I now demand of you how the times, and thoſe things which are done in time, can be otherwiſe then hid from him, when as we ſee wicked men ſo to take their ſwinge in ſin, and yet, for ought we ſee, to eſcape unpuniſhed? It ſhould ſeem by his winking at wicked practiſes, that he takes no care how things are carried in this preſent world; as certainly he would do, were he diligens mundi Oeconomus, aut rerum humanarum conſcius. This indeed might ſtagger a David or a Jeremy in a paſſion, as *Pſal.*73.2. &c. *Jer.*12.1. and make a Diagoras or an Averroes, turn Atheiſt. But Job was better inſtructed in this point, as appeareth by many paſſages in this

Brent.

this Book; ſee chap. 21. 16, 22. Neither can any ſuch thing be concluded from this Text, if we take in the latter part of the verſe.

Do they that know him, not ſee his dayes?] The whole verſe ſhould be read thus; why are not times hidden from the Almighty, ſeeing they that know him, do not ſee his dayes? that is, ſith his moſt knowing ſervants could never obſerve the times and the ſeaſons (of puniſhing graceleſſe perſons here) which he hath put in his own power, Act. 1. 7. Abraham indeed (by ſpecial favour) was told that Sodom ſhould be ſuddenly deſtroyed: And Moſes could ſay, Wrath is gone out from the Lord, take a Cenſer, &c. Numb. 16. 46. As any one is more faithful and familiar with God, ſo much better and earlier doth he diſcern his judgements on the wicked, and is affected therewith. See Hab. 3. 16. with the Note. But there is no certain rule given us, by what puniſhment to conclude a man wicked, neither can we ſafely ſay at what time, or what manner and meaſure God will puniſh the ungodly in this preſent life. That of Auſtin is very right, Some wicked God puniſheth here, leſt his providence; and but ſome, leſt his patience and promiſe of judgment ſhould be called into queſtion.

Verſe 2. Some remove the Land marks] Here he inſtanceth in all ſorts of wicked perſons, with their ſeculi feritas, impunita nequitia: they go point blank againſt Gods Commandments; they pleaſe not him, and are contrary to all men; and yet who but they, ſo long as it will laſt? Some remove (or touch) the Landmarks, which the very Heathens held to be ſacred, and not once to be touched. Numa King of Romans made a Law, that if any hid or removed a Land-mark, he ſhould be ſlain by the next that met him, as a ſacrilegious perſon, or publick Peſt. Gods Law curſeth ſuch an Offendour, Deut. 27. and the Civil Lawes paſſe ſentence of death upon him. The Chaldee Paraphraſt and old Rabbins underſtand this and the following Offences, of the old world, full of rapacity and impiety. But are there not the like and worſe evils found alſo amongſt us, upon whom the ends of the world are come, in theſe laſt and worſt times, as Bernard fitly yoaketh them? Read the Catalogue and compare. Reckon alſo, that you then read or hear this Chapter aright, when applying each paſſage to your ſelves, you learn to waſh your hands in innocency, or at leaſt in teares for theſe abominations: As alſo, if ye be not offended at the proſperity of thoſe who fall into all or but ſome of theſe wickednеſſes, ſith the time is at hand when account muſt be given of all things done in the body, whether good or evil.

Inter Ethnicos Terminus numinis loco habitus eſt.

In his ultimis et peſſimis temporibus. Bern.

They violently take away flocks and feed thereon] Though they eat that on earth which they ſhall digeſt in hell. Or, and feed them; viz. openly and impudently, with as much inſolence as injuſtice, and as if they had got them by right, and not by rapine and robbery. Lavater upon the Text maketh mention of a certain Helvetian Tyrant, who violently took away the Oxen from the Plough of an honeſt Countryman, and told him that it was fit that Clownes ſhould draw the Plough themſelves, without the help of Oxen.

Verſe 3 They drive away the Aſſe of the fatherleſſe] The only Aſſe of Orphans, thoſe helpleſſe, ſhiftleſſe creatures, ſo mercileſſe are theſe abigei, which is no ſmall aggravation of their injuſtice, (ſee 2 Samuel 12. 3.) For all ſinnes are not equal, as the Stoicks once held, but lighter or heavier according to their circumſtances. To rob the rich is a great offence, but to pillage the poor is far greater.

They take the widows Ox for a pledge] Without which ſhe cannot plough: or, Her Cow, as ſome render it, without which ſhe and her children cannot live. A poor bodies livelyhood is his life (as that poor widowes was, Mark 12. 44. and the like is ſaid of the Hæmorrhoiſſe, Luke 8. 43) cruſh this ſnail in his ſhel, and you kill him. Now therefore albeit it be not unlawful to take a pledge for ſecurity in ſome caſes; yet courteſie muſt be uſed, and mercy muſt be ſhewed to Orphans, Widowes, Strangers, and ſuch like, becauſe they are Gods Clients, and he hath taken them into his ſpecial care and tuition.

Τὸν τοῦ Ἐίδη βοῦν.

Verſe 4. They turn the needy out of the way] Either to make room for themſelves as the only men. Stand back, ſay the Sodomites to Lot, Gen. 19. 9. Stand further off, ſay thoſe in Iſaiah, See Prov. 30. 14. Am. 8. 4. Or elſe, becauſe when theſe Spoilers are abroad, they beſet the wayes, and no Traveller, be they never ſo poor and needy, can paſſe freely by them; inſomuch that they are conſtrained to leave the broad beaten way, and every where to ſeek our by-wayes and unknown paſſages, to eſcape their hands.

Beza.

Junius. And the poor of the earth hide themſelves together] Leſt after their Cattel driven away, as before, themſelves, ut mancipia nexa, as ſlaves linked together, ſhould be taken and carryed away by them to ſuch baſe Offices, as are mentioned in the next verſes. Tyrants are looked upon as ſo many Comets, or Tempeſts: Attilas ſtiled himſelf, Dei flagellum, et Orbis veſtitatem, The ſcourge in Gods hand, and the worlds waſte-good: He arrogantly ſaid, That the Stars fell before him, the Earth ſhook under him, and that he would make the Inhabitants thereof wriggle into corners, as worms do into their holes when once it thundereth. We know who they were (even thoſe Worthies of whom the world was not worthy) who hunted as Partridges by their cruel Perſecutors, and driven out from houſe and home, wandred in deſarts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth, Heb. 11. 38. where they found the wild Beaſts more mild and merciful to them, than thoſe hard-hearted Tyrants.

Onagri inter feras ſunt efferatiſſimi, neque unquam manſueſcunt. Merc. Beza. Verſe 5. Behold, as wild-Aſſes in the deſart, go they forth to their work] Theſe barbarous and bruitiſh Oppreſſors, skilful to deſtroy, do live in this world, as the wild-Aſs doth in the wilderneſs, roving and rambling up and down for booty, whereunto early in the morning they prepare and harneſs themſelves, as if this were their trade and occupation whereby they muſt needs get their living. Hic labor, hoc opus, vel artificium eorum eſt, ſaith Luvater. As man goeth forth unto his work, and to his labour until the evening, Pſal. 104. 23. ſo do theſe greedy Cormorants, theſe evening Wolves (as Micah calleth them) theſe ſpoylers that deviſe iniquity, and work evil upon their beds, when the morning is light they practiſe it, becauſe it is in the power of their hands. And they covet fields and take them by violence; and houſes, and take them away, &c. Mich. 2. 1, 2. Job had ſuffered much by the Arabian ſpoylers, thoſe wild-Aſſes, who continue their old trade to this day, catching and ſnatching, vivitur ex rapto: neither can they be repelled or reſtrained by reaſon of their multitudes, and their incredible ſwiftneſs.

Fabric. in deſcrip. peregr. Hieroſol. The wilderneſs yieldeth food, &c.] Their pillage is their tillage, their rapine their revenue, whereby they maintain themſelves and theirs: as the wild-Aſs picks out a living in the deſart. But ſhall they thus eſcape by iniquity? Have they no other wayes to work? no better Mediums? Never think it: In thine anger caſt down the people, O God, Pſal. 56. 7. He will do it: for the words are prophetical, as well as optative. Treaſure of wickedneſs profit nothing, Prov. 10. 2. Mammon of iniquity, is the next odious name to the Devil, and to the Devil it will bring a man, 1 Tim. 6. 9. Engliſh Hubertus, a covetous Oppreſſor, is ſaid to have made this Will; I yield my Goods to the King, my Body to the Grave, my Soul to the Devil. Pope Sylveſter 2. is ſaid to have given his Soul to the Devil for ſeven years enjoyment of the Popedom.

And for their Children] We have a profane and falſe proverb, Happy is that Child, whoſe Father goeth to the Devil. O faithful drudge! ſaid a graceleſs Son once of ſuch a Father, who died and left him great ſtore of ill-gotten goods.

Serò colligunt. Verſe 6. They reape every one his corn in the field] The poor oppreſſed are made by them to inn their crops, and tread their vintages in the end of the year; as the Hebrew importeth, without either meat or wages, or ſo much as a cup of drink, as the eleventh verſe ſets forth: which is extreme cruelty, and ſtrictly forbidden, Deut 24. 14, 15. and order taken that the mouth of the Ox that treadeth out the corn ſhould not be muzzled, Deut. 25. 4. Quantum igitur judicium, ſaith Brentius, how great judgements of God then will light upon thoſe who do that to men of the ſame fleſh, of the ſame faith, of the ſame country with themſelves, which they ought not to do to the brute creatures they make uſe of? Quod malum in Germania frequentiſſimum eſt, Vae igitur Germaniæ. This, ſaith he, is a common ſin in Germany, woe therefore to Germany. Think the ſame of England, and take notice that this is one of thoſe crying ſins that entreth into the ears of the Lord of Sabboth, Jam. 5. 4. and he will hear, for he is gracious, Exod. 22. 27. The words are otherwiſe ſenſed by ſome: but this to me ſeemeth moſt ſutable to the ſubſequent verſes.

Verſe 7. They cauſe the naked to lodge without clothing] viz. By denying and detaining taining from them that they have earned, wherewith they ſhould provide them garments, which are ſo called, quaſi gardments: becauſe they ſerve to guard mens bodies from the injury of the weather. They cauſe them to lodge naked, becauſe they have no clothing; ſo ſome reade the text, they lay them open to the pinching cold of the night. And what a miſery it is to lye acold and wet, and not to have wherewith to keep us warm and dry, in winter ſeaſon eſpecially, who knows not? Hic diſce Deo gratias eſſe, ſaith Lavater. Here then learn thankfulneſs to God, thou that haſt not only a warm and wholeſome lodging-room, but alſo good ſtore of bed-cloaths, and thoſe of the better ſort too. Abuſe not theſe bleſſings to pride and luxury, leſt God turn in upon thee ſpoylers and plunderers, who may leave thee little enough; leave thee nudum tanquam ex mare, as they did many in theſe late ſtiredding and ſtripping times, Ezek. 25. 4. God threatneth to ſend the men of the Eaſt to dwell (as ſo many Lord-Danes) in their Palaces, and to eate their milk, &c. When the Children play with their meat, and caſt it to the Dogs, what can the Father do leſs, than bid, Take away?

Verſe 8. They are wet with the ſhowers of the mountains] Wet they are, but not at all refreſhed, as this word (here only found in the Bible) ſignifieth ſometimes among the Rabbins. Cold comfort they finde abroad; and at home they dare not abide, leſt rich men ſhould oppreſs them and draw them before the judgement-ſeats, Jam. 2. 6. or drag them to priſon for refuſing their drudgery. Hence they are forced to live in the mountains, and deſart places, in extreme miſery.

And embrace the Rock for want of a ſhelter] Like Conies or wild Beaſts, glad of any lurking place, that may keep them out of the hands of unreaſonable and wicked men. What hardſhip have many worthy men in all ages ſuffered from perſecutors and oppreſſors (in Dioteſians dayes eſpecially) driven out of houſe and harbour, and glad to take up in any hole, there to lie on the cold ſtone in ſtead of a warm bed, (as that good Dutcheſs of Suffolk, with that noble Gentleman her Husband did in the Low-countries, whither they fled from the Marian perſecution) till, as Eliah once under the Juniper, they wiſh themſelves out of the world? Iterum hic diſce gratias Deo agere, ſaith Lavater. Here again learn to give thanks to God for this great benefit, if thou maieſt ſtay at home, and not be forced to flie for thy life, or for conſcience-ſake: for home is home, as we ſay, and very deſireable: and the Apoſtle reckons it for a piece of his ſufferings, that he was ἀστατοῦμεν, and had no ſettled ſtation, no certain dwelling place, 1 Cor. 4. 11. In Loc. ἀστατοῦμεν.

Verſe 9. They pluck the fatherleſs from the breſt] What can be more to be pitied than a fatherleſs ſuckling? Who leſs to be moleſted or violenced than the Mother doing that office to her babe? In the Pariſian Maſſacre, one of the murtherers took a little one in his arms, who ſmiled upon him, and plaid with his beard; yet this barbarous wretch was ſo far from compaſſion, that he wounded it with his dagger, and ſo caſt it all gore blood into the River. The ſtory of the Infant of the Iſle of Garniſey, thrown back into the fire, out of which it had ſprawled, is well known. So is the ſavage inhumanity of that mercileſs Minervius the Popes Champion, who at Merindole in France, cut off the Paps of many which gave ſuck to their Children; which looking for ſuck at their Mothers breſts, being dead before, died alſo for hunger. Well therefore might our Saviour ſay, Beware of men, Matt. 10. 17. It had been better the Indies had been given to the Devils of hell, ſaid thoſe poor Natives, than to thoſe bloody Spaniards, who daſhed the Mother in pieces upon their Children, as once at Betharbel, Hoſ. 10. 14. Act. & Mon. Ibid. Ibid. p. 868.

And take a pledge from the poor] Miſery, which ſhould beget pity in them, begetteth but audacity, and inviteth them to ruine the poor, and fill their houſes with their ſpoyles. Some render it thus, They take the poor for a pledge; ſc. putting them to their ranſom, and mean while enſlaving them.

Verſe 10. They cauſe him to go naked without clothing] Naked and barefoot, even with their buttocks uncovered, to their ſhame, and danger; as Eſa. 20. 4. So dealt the Popiſh Biſhops with the poor Proteſtant Albigenſes, at the Rendition of Carcaſſon, in France; they let them have their lives upon condition, that both men and women ſhould go thence ſtark naked; thoſe parts that cannot well be named, being laid open to the view of thoſe Pope-holy Cruciates. Rivet. Jeſuit. vap.

And they take away the Sheaf from the hungry] Or, The handful; that little

that

that they had leazed; ſnatching the eares of corn out of their hands, and condemning them thus denuded and deſpoyled, to a death which is ſo much the more cruel, as it is tedious and languiſhing. Some reade it thus, And thoſe that carried their Sheaves, they made to go away hungery: either not feeding, or not paying their harveſt-labourers, and other ſervants. It is noted in Hiſtory as a cruelty in the Athenians, that they put an engine about their ſervants necks called κανονιον, and it reached down to their hands, that they might not ſo much as lick of the Meal when they were ſifting it.

Verſe 11. Which make oyl within their walls, &c.] See the Note above on verſ. 6. and on verſ. 10.

Verſe 12. Men groan from out of the City] viz. Under the preſſures of their oppreſſors. Thus did Jeruſalem that faithful City, when once become an harlot; it was full of judgement, righteouſneſs lodged in it; but now murderers, Iſa. 1. 21. The like did the City of Rome, when, under the Government of Marius ſet up againſt Sylla, ſhe cryed out that the remedy was worſe than the diſeaſe: and under Pompey, Calamitas noſtra magnus eſt: and under the Caſars, that the names of their good Emperours might all be ſet down in the compaſs of a ſignet-ring: and again under the Popes, that for many years together ſhe had not had the happineſs to be ruled by any but Reprobates: Heu, heu, Domine Deus, ſaith Faſciculus temporum, bitterly bewayling Romes miſery under her turbulent Tyrants, Hildebrand, Urban 2. (whom Cardinal Benno worthily calleth Turban) Boniface 8. and many other ſuch like Monſters. Of moſt great Cities it may be ſaid, as of that ſtrange vineyard in Paleſtina, Iſa. 5. 7. God looked for judgement, but behold oppreſſion (Heb. aſeab.) for righteouſneſs, but behold a cry.

Animæ confoſſorum vociferantur.

And the ſoul of the wounded (of the deadly wounded) cryeth out] ſc. For grief; and in prayer to God for eaſe.

Yet God layeth not folly to them] Deus non ponit prohibitionem, ſo one of the Rabbins rendreth it. God putteth not a ſtop to the proceedings, he puniſheth not thoſe Tyrants, who do oppreſs whole Cities, making their luſt a Law, and overbearing all right with their Volumus & jubemus: nothing at all moved with the groans of the oppreſſed City, or with the out-cryes of the wounded. Word for word it is, Deus non interponit inſulſum quid, God interpoſeth not any thing inſulſe or unſavory; that is, he ſuffereth not any croſs mean while to befal them: Yea, he ſo carrieth the matter, as if he favoured them; yea, approved and proſpered their crafty and cruel practiſes: For they live happy, obtain victories, are magnified among men, they flatter themſelves in their own eyes, until their iniquity be found to be hateful, Pſal. 36. 2. Mean while, fœlix ſcelus virtus vocatur; as the Oratour ſpeaketh, their proſperous villany is called vertue: and if any man mutter againſt them, yea, if he cry them not up, he is looked upon as a Traytor, as Thraſea that noble Roman was by Nero.

Tull. de divin. lib. 2.

Dio in Ner.

Verſe 13. They are of thoſe that rebel againſt the light] Againſt the common light of the Sun, ſay ſome, which they are ready to curſe, (as the Atlantes, a people of Ethiopia, are ſaid to do) and could wiſh extinct, that they might ſin unſeen. Others more fitly underſtand it of the light of Nature and Scripture; againſt which wicked Atheiſts riſe up and rebel, as malecontents and mutineres do againſt lawful Authority. In the poor blind Ethnicks it is to be ſeen that ſome few Principles and Notions of good and evil, right and wrong, truth and falſhood, are yet to be found in corrupt Nature: like as when Cities and great Buildings are over-thrown by War, ſome Towers, ſome Pinacles ſurvive the violence. Now ſome deſperate ſinners againſt their own ſouls, take the boldneſs to tear out theſe Principles, that might any way diſturb their courſe in ſin; and to take an order with their natural conſciences, clapping up thoſe Prophets from God, cloſe Priſoners, Rom. 1 18. till at length all that little light is loſt, that ruſh-candle quite extinct. When wine is powred out of a cup, the ſides are yet moiſt. But when it is rinſed and wiped, then remaineth not the leaſt taſte. Even ſo that glimmering of divine Light left in the natural man is ſo defaced by obſtinacy in ſin, that not the leaſt ſpark thereof remaineth. Theſe Bats have flown ſo long againſt that light, that at length they have put it out. And whereas to thoſe that live under the Ordinances, there is another light riſen, viz. that of Gods Word and works, graceleſs wretches ſhut their windows, leſt this light ſhould come in upon them, them, as the Phariſees did: they hate it becauſe their deeds are evill, ſaith our Saviour: they ſpurn and ſcorn at it, ſaith Solomon, Pro. 1. they are willingly ignorant, ſaith Peter; they wink wilfully, ſaith Juſtin Martyr; Ut liberius peccent, libenter ignorant, ſaith Bernard: they rebel againſt the light, as Balaam did when he ſet his face toward the wilderneſs, and would needs curſe howſoever. Or as Pharaoh, who ſat not down under the Miracle Moſes wrought, but ſent for the Magicians. How many are there at this day, who after conviction, get the Bit betwixt their teeth, like unruly Horſes, and run away? Joh. 3. 18.

Herodot.

They know not the ways thereof] A carnal heart is not willing to know what it ſhould do, leſt it ſhould do what it would not do. Of ſuch Bernard ſaith, that they ſeek ſtraws to put out their own eyes with. If they ſeek after Gods wayes, it is but as a coward ſeeketh after his enemy, with an hope he ſhall not finde him: So he is loth to find and fears to know, therefore he ſearcheth no further, than wil ſerve his turn, and the little light he hath, he putteth not under a buſhel, but under a dunghil. Woe be to theſe rebels, theſe Soliſuga, that refuſe or abuſe Goſpel-light. Turks and Pagans ſhall have an eaſier judgment. It had been better for them not to have known the way of righteouſneſs, ſaith Peter, then after they have known it, &c. 2 Epiſt. 2. 21. Gravis eſt lux conſcientiæ, ſaith Seneca, but gravior eſt lux Evangelii, ſay we: if this light be hated by any, it is meerly becauſe it ſtands in the light of their wicked wayes, as the Angel did in Balaams way to his ſin. Feſtucam quærunt ut oculos eruant.

Nor abide in the paths thereof] They have no ſtability, nor ſettledneſs in well-doing. They follow not on to know, but ſoon give over the purſuit and practiſe of holineſs, not caring to adde to Faith Vertue, and to Vertue Knowledge, &c. Hoſ. 6. 3. 2 Pet. 1. 5.

Verſe 14. The murderer riſing with the light] Betimes, whiles it is yet darkiſh: for here Job ſheweth how thoſe that do evil hate the light, and take the fitteſt opportunities for a diſpatch of the deeds of darkneſs, daily digging deſcents down to Hell, and haſtening thereto, as if they feared it would be full before they come thither. They ſpend therefore the whole day in wicked pranks and practiſes, proùt videtur commodum, as ſhall ſeem beſt for their purpoſes, interdiu latrones, nocte fures agunt. By day they do what miſchief they may in woods and deſarts: at night they return into the City, and there play the theeves, hoping to do it un-obſerved. Thus every ſuch one may better ſay then that Ancient did, Totum tempus perdidi, quia perdite vixi, I have loſt all my time, by ſpending it looſely and baſely: I have been too faithful a drudge to the Devil, whom Chriſt calleth a murtherer; and Tertullian calleth Furem Veritatis, a thief of the Truth. Two notable Theeves of Naples, (whereof one was called Pater-noſter, and the other Ave-Maria) had murthered an hundred and ſixteen ſeveral perſons, at ſeveral times and in divers places. Theſe were worthily put to a cruel death by the Magiſtrate: who poſſibly might by his connivence and ſlackneſs in doing his office, be himſelf guilty of ſome of thoſe murders: ſith, to reſtrain juſtice, is to ſupport ſin: and not to correct, is to conſent to the Crime. Hemingius maketh mention of a Felon, who was indicted of ſeven murders: while the Judge was ſtudying what grievous puniſhment ſhould be inflicted upon ſuch a bloody villain, an Advocate ſteps to the Bar, and pleading for him, proved, That the Judge was guilty of ſix of the murders: for that the Felon was not put to death for the firſt offence. Bernard. Joh. 8. Rain. de Idol. Rom. præfat.

Killeth the poor and needy] Without Authority, (ſuch as Magiſtrates have to kill Malefactors, and Souldiers in a lawful Battel to kill their Enemies: Sum Talbotti pro occidere inimicos meos; this blunt boiſterous ſentence was written upon the renowned L. Talbots Sword, whileſt he warred in France) and without any preſent neceſſity for his own lawful defence, as Exod. 2. 22. when he muſt either kill or be killed: provided that he endeavour firſt to ſave himſelf by flight if poſſibly he can: For that Tenet of Soto, a Popiſh Caſuiſt, is the moſt falſe, That it is lawful for a man in his own defence to kill another, becauſe it is a ſhame to flie. And that alſo of Navarrus, that for a box on the ear, it is not unlawful to kill another, for the recovering of his honour. Speed. Quia fuga eſt ignominioſa. Ad honorem recuperandum.

And in the night is as a thief] That is, is a very thief: for this ut, is magis expreſſivum veritatis, as Mercer ſpeaketh, he would not ſeem to be, but yet is an arrant arrant thief, ending the day with theft, which he began with murder. How these two sins go commonly coupled, see Hos. 4.2. and Isai. 13.16.

Verse 15. The eye also of the Adulterer watcheth.] Observeth, expecteth, and longeth till it cometh. Ut videas illum non peccare infirmitate sed malitiâ, saith Vatablus; This sheweth, that he sinneth not of infirmity, but of forethought, malice and wickednesse; which he plotteth and plotteth (as the Scripture phraseth it) purveying for the flesh, Rom. 13. ult. putrifying alive, under a tabes of impure lusts, and daily perishing therein, as Tiberius at Capreæ, by his own confession. This beast was not ashamed of his detestable filthinesse; as being a most impure and impudent defiler of other mens beds. But the Adulterer here spoken of, seeks the covert of the twilight, and another of a disguise. He putteth his face in a secret place (so the Hebrew hath it) wrapping it in his cloak, or getting on a Vizzard, which (saith he) shall render me unknown, and none eye shall see me. For as for Gods eye, either he conceits him blind, or presumes him indulgent, not doubting of an easie and speedy pardon. This is charged upon David, 2 Sam. 12.10. Because thou hast despised me, &c. viz. in thinking to sin secretly, not considering mine All-seeing eye, not caring though I looked on, &c. therefore shall all come to light, verse 12. Sin secretly committed, shall bee strangely discovered: yea, perhaps the sinner himselfe shall confesse his sinnes, as Judah: So sooner or later, God wil bring every work into judgement, with every secret thing, Ecclesiastes 12.14. See also Ecclesiasticus 23.

Quotidie perire me sentio. Suet.

Verse 16. In the dark they dig through the earth, &c.] Heb. He digs through houses; i.e. the Adulterer doth, to come at his Strumpet, with whom he had agreed upon a place of meeting for that evil purpose, and in whose bosome by night (the dark and black night, as Solomon calleth it, Prov. 7.9) he spareth not to bury his name, substance, soul and carcasse, whilst they glut their unclean desires by the savour of the darknesse. This is a bitternesse beyond that of death, Eccles. 7.26. But the divel presenteth his Butter in so Lordly a dish, that the soul spies not the hammer and nail in his hand, till he have driven it into the Temples. Roger Mortimer, who digged that hole at Nottingham Castle, and was afterwards hanged at Tiburn, (a just reward of his Ambition and Uncleannesse) had the experience of this.

They know not the light] i.e. They brook it not, but run full butt against it, because it discovereth and disquieteth them. See on ver. 13.

Verse 17. For the morning is unto them as the shadow of death] i.e. They are in deadly fear lest the light should bewray them, and expose them to condigne punishment. How fearful was Judah of being shamed, after he had thus sinned, Gen. 38.23? And how forward to save his credit by sending his Kid by the hand of that hang by Hiram? That young man in Terence was sore ashamed to be seen in the Eunuchs garment, a token of his Uncleannesse; whereas to have done the deed did nothing so much trouble him. But the children of light hate and shun sin more for the filth that is in it, then for the fire that is in it: the blacknesse of that coal offendeth them more then the heat of it. Plato condemneth the Poets for setting forth Jupiters Adulteries, whereby the people were drawn to the like wantonnesse; and for saying, it were no matter though men did commit sin, so they could hide it. Si non caste, tamen caute, say the Popish Shavelings, who are sometimes taken in the manner, as was that carnal Cardinal Cremonensis, the Popes Legat here, in Hen. 8. dayes, and Dr. Wilson Dean of Windsor in the Raign of Queen Mary, apprehended in Adultery, and for the same deprived of all his Spiritual Livings by Cardinal Pool. Pope John the twelfth, being taken abed with another mans wife, was killed immediately by her husband. In Germany a Gentleman of note and his Harlot, were served in like sort, as Luther relateth. So was Rodualdus the Eighth, King of Lumbardy, and Sergius a King of Scotland. Of all these, and many more ejusdem furfuris, it may well be said, as here, that being noted and notified, they were in the terrors of the shadow of death. Which death to escape,

Ter. in Eun.

Ὡς λυσιτελεῖ τὸ ἁμαρτάνειν ἐὰν λανθάνῃ.

Acts & Mon. fol. 1065. Ibid. 1905. Barns Funccius Lub. Coloq.

P. Mel. Chron. Lang. Chron.

Verse 18. He is swift as the waters] He stayes not long in a place, but flies away swiftly (like the River Tigris, swift as an arrow out of a bow) to avoid punishment. Heb. He is light upon the face of the waters. The meaning is (saith One) they are as a light a light thing upon the ſtreams of water running ſwiftly, and carrying it away with ſpeed. Some, that it is ſpoken in reſpect of their ſwift paſſing on from one wickedneſſe to another, or their never being ſettled after ſuch wickedneſſe committed, but alwayes ready to be overturned as a ſhip that is unballaſted, and ſo to be drowned in the ſea.

Their portion is curſed on the earth] Cain-like, they wander up and down, à corde ſuo facti fugitivi; but their ſin will ſurely find them out; neither can they run out of the reach of Gods rod, &c. This Job ſaith, leſt any ſhould gather from what he had ſaid before, that it ſhould be alwayes well with the wicked, and ill with the godly. Some take it curſe-wiſe thus, Let their portion on earth be accurſed, neither let them turn themſelves to the Vineyards; ſcil. either to dreſſe them, or to taſte of the fruits of them.

He beholdeth not the way of the Vineyards] That is, ſay ſome, to run away by them, which were common wayes to Cities, but by ſome other obſcure by-way that he may not be found. In Vineyards ſomething is to be done at all times, that way therefore they take not, leſt they ſhould be diſcovered and puniſhed. Beza rendreth it, He turneth not into the way (that is, the nature) of the Vines, which by cutting and pruning, ſprouteth out, and becometh more profitable. Others ſenſe it far otherwiſe. The conciſe brevity and ambiguity of the words, together with the change of number, hath cauſed a cloud upon them.

Verſe 19. Drought and heat conſume the ſnow waters] Here alſo brevity hath bred obſcurity. Snow waters as they are more ſubtile, ſo they ſooner ſink into the dry earth; ſo dye the wickeds, quickly and eaſily. See chap. 21. 13, 31. There are that read the whole verſe thus, In the drought and heat they rob, and in the ſnow waters; they ſin to the grave; that is, they rob (and run into other flagitious practiſes) in all weather, Summer and Winter, and never give over till they dye. They perſiſt in their ſins (ſaith Calvin) wherein they have been nuzzelled up, even to their grave. This is a good ſenſe. Luther tells of one filthy Adulterer, ſo ſet upon that ſin, that he was heard to utter theſe abominable words, If I were ſure to live here for ever, and that I might ſtill be carried from one Brothel-houſe to another, I would never deſire any other heaven then that. Væ dementiæ, & impietati. This beaſtly man breathed out his wretched ſoul betwixt two harlots. Once I knew a moſt odious Adulterer of ſeventy years old (ſaith another great Divine) who having waſted his fleſh and ſtate with harlots, and lying neer death, was requeſted thus, Potter, call upon God; he replyed with his ordinary oathes, Pox and Wounds, is this a time to pray? I knew, (ſaith a third Reverend man) a great ſwearer, who coming to his death-bed, Satan ſo filled his heart with a madded and enraged greedineſſe after ſin, that though himſelf ſwore as faſt and as furiouſly as he could, yet (as though he had been already among the banning and blaſphemies of hell) he deſperately deſired the ſtanders by to help him with Oathes, and to ſwear for him. Athenæus reporteth of one covetous Mammoniſt, that at the hour of his death, he devoured many pieces of Gold, and ſewed the reſt in his coat, commanding that they ſhould be all buried with him. And our Chroniclers write of King Edward 1. that he adjured his ſon and Nobles, that if he dyed in his Expedition againſt Bruce King of Scots, they ſhould not interre his Corps, but carrie it about Scotland, till they had avenged him on that Uſurper.

Theat. Hiſt. pag. 568.

M. Dan. Reg.

Mr. Bolton.

Dan. Hiſt. 201

Verſe 20. The Womb ſhall forget him] Some read it, The merciful man forgetteth him; ſcil. becauſe himſelf was mercileſſe. Or becauſe he was a trouble to the world, and a common Peſt, therefore good men are glad to be ſo rid of him; and in ſtead of ſighing over him, ſay, Let the worm feed ſweetly on him, 'tis well he is gone, as he lived wickedly, ſo he dyed wickedly; let him be no more remembred or honourably mentioned, but moulder away, and fall as a rotten tree. Others interpret the words of the ſudden and eaſie death of the wicked, thus, The womb ſhall forget him; that is, ſaith Beza, being once dead, neither his mother nor his wife do bewail and lament his death, becauſe without that pain and torment, that many ſuffer when they depart the world.

The wormes ſhall feed ſweetly on him] Moritur impunitus, he maketh the worms a feaſt with his fat Corps (as Dr. Taylor Martyr made account to have done, if buried in Hadley Church-yard) and feels no pain.

He ſhall be no more remembred] And this is reckoned up as a piece of his happineſs See Eccleſ. 8.10. with the Note there.

And wickedneſſe] that is, the wicked perſon, that crooked piece that can hardly ever be ſet ſtraight again.

Shall be broken as a tree] As a rotten tree blown down by the wind.

Verſe 21. He evil intreateth the barren that beareth nit] Who had more need to be comforted, then further afflicted. But Homo homini Daemon. Jacob and Elkanah loved and comforted their wives under this croſſe. The Vulgar rendreth it, He hath fed the barren, whereupon ſome expound it of wicked mens feeding Whores, and maintaining them for their pleaſure; keeping them barren, that they may keep their beauty.

And doth not good to the widow] i. e. Doth her much hurt; for not to do good, is to do evil, Mark 3.4. He hath afflicted his barren wife, and evil intreated the poor deſolate widow his mother. What marvel then if the womb forget him, &c. if his wife bewail not ſo unkind an husband, nor his mother ſo unnatural a ſon, as verſ. 30 Thus Beza here.

Verſe 22. He draweth alſo the mighty with his power.] i. e. He hath brought them by force under his girdle, and compelled them to do him homage and ſervice.

He riſeth up.] In the fulneſſe of his might, as a King againſt whom there is no riſing up, Prov. 30.31.

And no man is ſure of life] Which the Tyrant taketh away at his pleaſure. Or thus, The Tyrant himſelf, after he hath made all cock-ſure, as he may think, is not yet ſure of his owne life, dare not confide in his beſt friends: Dionyſius for inſtance, and our Richard the third. The Hebrew is, And he is not ſure of life.

Verſe 23. Though it be given him to be in ſafety] Heb. It is given him to be in ſafety, whereon he reſteth. His ſafety and proſperity was given him for a better purpoſe; but (as if God had hired him to be wicked) he abuſeth it to creature confidence, leaning too hard upon the arm of fleſh.

Yet his eyes are upon their wayes] Nevertheleſſe God proſpereth them (according to Pſal. 34.11.) Or, as others ſenſe it, God eyeth their wicked wayes, and deſigneth them to deſtruction. And the next verſe ſeemeth to make for this Interpretation.

Verſe 24. They are exalted for a little while] Or, They are exalted, but within a little while they are not. This former part of the verſe needeth no Expoſition, ſaith an Expoſitor. And as for the later Velut friti-ſpica ſuccidun tur. Trem. ex Varr.

They are taken away as all other, they are cut off as the tops of the ears of corn] It may be underſtood of the like violence, wherewith Tyrants ſhall be cut off, by which they have cut off other mighty and great men: as Thraſibulus King of Mileſians by ſtriking off with his ſtaff certain ears of corn, and Tarquin King of Romans by doing the like to certain Poppies in his Garden, ſignified their minds to have diverſe chief men beheaded: which was accordingly accompliſhed. So Mithridates King of Pontus, by one Letter cauſed the death of fourſcore thouſand Romans, trading throughout Aſia. Now God loveth to retaliate, as hath been ſaid before. See it exemplified in Adonibezeck, Agag, Haman and others.

Val. Max.

Verſe 25. And if it be not ſo now, who will make me a Lyar?] Quis eventietur me? Who ſhall diſprove or confute what I have affirmed? viz. That God doth many things, the depth whereof we cannot fathom, and that he lets wicked men many times ſpend their dayes in pleaſure, and end them without much pain. This I will abide by, and I would fain ſee the man, qui audeat & poſſit, who can and will maintain the contrary.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXV.

Verſe 1 Then anſwered Bildad the Shuhite, and ſaid.]

A Pithy and ponderous ſpeech he here maketh, though little to the purpoſe; for he quite digreſſeth from the queſtion in hand concerning the wickeds flouriſhing, and Saints ſufferings, and chuſeth to ſing the ſame ſong with his fellowes, concerning the power and Purity of God above all Creatures. See Job 4.18. and 15.15. Some men are of that mind, that they will never be ſaid or ſet down, but ſtrive to have the laſt word. This was Peters vanity and the reſt of the Diſciples, Matth. 26.35. which our Saviour winked at till time ſhould confute them, as it alſo did ſoon after.

Verſe 2. Dominion and fear are with him] God is therefore to be feared, becauſe Lord over all. If an earthly King be ſo Dread a Soveraign, if an apparition of Angels hath ſo amazed the beſt men, who would not fear that King of Nations, ſith to him doth it appertain? Jer. 10.7. God is greatly to be feared in the Aſſemblies of his Saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are round about him, Pſal. 89.7. Power and terror are with him, ſo the Vulgar hath it here. He that is able to deſtroy both body and ſoul in hell, is ſurely to be feared, yea therefore to be feared, Matth. 10. 28. If ſervants ſhould fear their Maſters becauſe they have power over the fleſh, Col. 3. 23. what ſhould we do, ſith he can ſooner undo us, then bid it be done?

He maketh peace in his high places.] Or, Among his high perſons, thoſe heavenly Courtiers the Angels and Saints. By an unchangeable Decree God keepeth all perſons and things in the heavens, both viſible and inviſible in a moſt firm and quiet condition, ſo that there is no claſhing, but an happy harmony amongſt them. He appeaſeth (ſaith One) the differences of the Elements, and obligeth them to force their own inclinations, to preſerve the quiet of the world. He ſhakes all the heavens with ſo much evenneſſe, that in the contrariety of their motions they never diſorder themſelves. Finally, He maintaines peace amongſt the Angels, and tempering his Juſtice with his Goodneſſe, he makes himſelf equally loved and feared of thoſe bleſſed Spirits. Therefore Job did ill (ſaith another Interpreter) to offer to make a diſturbance there, (as Bildad at leaſt conceited he did) where there was all peace. Senault. Mayer. Job 23.4.

Verſe 3. Is there any number of his Armies?] God is Lord of Hoſtes: and (as the Rabbins well obſerve) he hath his upper forces and his lower forces, as his Horſe and Foot ready preſt. The upper are here chiefly meant, viz. the Angels and Stars, as appeareth by the Context. An eſt numerus expeditorum? ſo Brentius rendreth it; Tremellius, turmariorum, of his Troopers? they are innumerable, and yet no variance amongſt them: this is admirable. The Army of Niniveh was quiet, no falling out nor complaining in their hoſtes, therefore did their King march on, paſſe through, Nahum. 1.12. The Turks Military Diſcipline at this day, is beyond that of all other Nations in the world beſides; yea beyond that of the old Greeks or Romans. There is no quarrelling heard at any time amongſt their many ſouldiers, no nor any words at all. Perpetuum ſilentium tenent ut muti, ſaith Cuſpinianus: There is perpetual ſilence kept, and moſt ready obedience yeelded to the dumb ſignes and noddings of their Officers. But all this is nothing to that in heaven. Of Gods Hoſtes, together with their number, order and obedience: ſee my Treatiſe called, the Righteous Mans Recompence pag. 868.869. Cuſp. de Caeſ. p. 475.

And upon whom doth not his Light ariſe?] that is, his Sun, that Prince of Planets, but ſervant of the Saints, (as his Name importeth) whoſe going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it, and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof, Pſalm 19.6. It is called, His Light, becauſe as he made it, ſo he gathered into it as into a Veſſel, that firſt light, which before was ſcattered here and there in the heavens. Some there are that underſtand this Text of the light of Gods Omniſcience, Merlin. others of his Benificence: Quis eſt quem non ſuperet luce bonitate ſua? Who is it whom he overcometh not with the light of his goodneſſe: Surely all the good that is in the Creature is but a ſpark of his flame, a drop of his Ocean.

Verſe 4 How then can man be juſtified with God?] Homo frivolus, ſo the Tygurines tranſlate: How can frivolous man, ſorry man, Morbis mortique obnoxius, Man ſubject to diſeaſes and death, how can ſuch a man, ſo mortal and miſerable, a maſſe of Mortalities, a Map of miſeries, a very mixture and compound of dirt and ſin, be juſtified with God? How can he be perfect of himſelf without the gift of grace, without an Advocate with the Father, Jeſus Chriſt the Juſt One, who alone is the propitiation for our ſins, 1 John 2.2. Rom. 3.25. who is made unto us of God, wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, &c. 1 Cor. 1.30?

Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman?] And therefore born in ſin and under a curſe, the ſign whereof appeares in the womans bearing and bringing forth, Gen. 3.6. Our whole Nativity is impure. Hence in the Law it is commanded, that the woman ſhould be unclean ſeven dayes, that the child ſhould be circumciſed on the eighth day; and that the mother ſhould remain three and thirty dayes in the blood of her Purification, Levit. 13. For by Nature we are all children of wrath: and That which is born of the fleſh, is fleſh. Neither can any one bring a clean thing out of an unclean, Chap. 14.4. See the Note there. Surely as a ſlave begetteth a ſlave, ſo doth a ſinner beget a ſinner. Hence we are loathſome to God, as a toad is to us, becauſe poiſon is in the nature of it. Infantes ergo non ſunt inſontes; Infants are not Innocents, though we commonly call them ſo, becauſe free from actual ſin, they having not yet ſinned after the ſimilitude of Adams tranſgreſſion, as the Apoſtle expreſſeth it, Rom. 5.14. But the firſt ſheet or blanket wherein they are covered, is woven of ſin, ſhame, blood and filth, as may be ſeen Ezek. 16.4,6. This ſhould teach us modeſty and lowly-mindedneſſe.

Unde ſuperbit homo cujus conceptio turpis?

Verſe 5. Behold even to the Moon, and it ſhineth not.] i.e. Either deſcend in thy thoughts from the higheſt Orbs as low as the Moon: Or elſe aſcend from Gold, Gems, Jewels, and other Orient reſplendent Creatures, as high as the Moon and Stars, and comparing them with the ſurpaſſing Majeſty of God, thou ſhalt find no more beauty or brightneſſe in them then is in a lump of earth, or clod of clay: thoſe heavenly Lights will appear to be as ſo many ſnuffs. Or if thou canſt diſcover no ſpots and blemiſhes in them, yet God can, without the help of any ſuch Perſpective Glaſſes as Galileus gat him, to diſcry mountains in the Moon. Some think it was by Moon light that this ſpeech was uttered, and therefore the Moon is mentioned. But as the Moon is confounded, ſo the Sun alſo is aſhamed when the Lord of hoſtes wil diſplay the beams of his glory, Iſai. 24.23. and 60 19. There is a Learned Interpreter who thus paraphraſeth the Text: Conſider, that by reaſon of the Fal of man, the very creatures, that in themſelves are ſinleſſe, yea the very Moon and Stars (that are ſo far from earth, and ſo neer to heaven) have contracted defilement, and are blemiſhed: ſo that with God, for mans ſake, and by mans ſin, even they are not accounted free from pollution in his ſight: Thus he. The viſible heavens are defiled by our ſins, and muſt therefore be purged by the fire of the laſt day; as of old the Veſſel that held the Sinne-Offering was to be broken if earthen, or to paſſe the fire, if of better Metal.

Mr. Abbot.

Yea, the Stars are not pure in his ſight] What ever they are in ours. A thing that I ſee in the night may ſhine, and that ſhining proceed from nothing but rottenneſſe. There is a comparative imperfection and impurity in the Stars and Angels, chap. 4.18.

Verſe 6. How much leſſe man that is a worm] He ſaith not, as a Worm, but a Worm it ſelf. So Pſal. 22. I am a worm, and no man; nullificamen hominis, as Tertullian ſomewhere phraſeth it. David in the Arabick ſignifieth a Worm (ſaith One) to which he may ſeem in that Pſalm to allude. The word here rendred a worm, ſignifieth a ſmall worm bred in cheeſe or fleſh, a Mite, a Maggot. Others ſay, it ſignifieth rottenneſſe, which hath no ſtrength. Hereby man convinced of his infirmity, vanity, vanity and impurity ſhould learne Virium ſuarum vanitatem agnoſcere, to give glory to God, and to take ſhame to himſelf.

Vermis parvus in carne aut caſeo naſcens, Exod. 16.24.

And the Son of man which is a worm] Lumbricus, quo vix quidquam contemptius nominari poteſt; So vile and abject a creature is man: The greater is Gods mercy to look upon ſuch a walking dunghil: Learn hereby to know God and thy ſelf, which is the higheſt point of heavenly wiſdom.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſe 1. But Job anſwered and ſaid.]

BIldad had vexed him with his impertinencies and ſuperfluous diſcourſes of Gods Attributes, as if Job had denied them, or doubted of them, which was far from him, witneſs this Chapter. He therefore rippleth up Bildad with a continued ſmart irony, in the three next following verſes, letting looſe the reines to his juſtly conceived grief and indignation, and invading his adverſary with theſe ſharp queſtions by way of wonderment.

Verſe 2. How haſt thou helped him that is without power?] q. d. Full well haſt thou done it, ſurely. (See a like irony Mark 7.9. and 1 Cor. 4.8,10) Thou art a very goodly comforter, and with a great deal of Wiſdome thou haſt framed thy diſcourſe to my preſent neceſſity. Thou lookeſt upon me as a poor, forlorn, ſtrengthleſſe, fruitleſſe creature. Thou ſhouldſt therefore have ſet thy ſelf to ſupport me and ſhore me up, by uttering not only commoda, ſed & accommoda, things true and profitable, but things fit and ſutable to my diſtreſſed condition. Thou haſt ſpoken much of the Majeſty and purity of Almighty God (wherein I well accord thee) but theſe are words of terror, ſuch as I can hardly bear. Of ſtrong Phyſick we ſay, Quòd nec puero, nec ſeni, nec imbecillo, ſed robuſto conveniat, That it is not for children, or old folks, or weak ones, but for the ſtronger ſort; it is not for every complexion and ſtate. So neither is every diſcourſe for all ſort of people. It is a ſingular skill to be able to time a word, Iſai. 50.4. and to ſet it upon its wheels, Prov. 25.11. to declare unto a man his righteouſneſs, which not one of a thouſand can tell how to do it like him, Job 33.23. to ſeek to find out pleaſant words, ſuch as have both goads and nailes in them, Eccleſ. 12.10,11. (to prick them on to duty, and to faſten them to the right, as pales are to their railes) to divide the Word of God aright, 2 Tim. 2.25. and to give every one his portion in the due ſeaſon, Matth. 24.45. Not as he in the Emblem, who gave ſtraw to the dog, and a bone to the Aſſe. The good Word of God, if well applyed, is profitable to all things, as is here hinted; ſcil. to help the powerleſſe, to ſave the ſtrengthleſſe, to counſel the ignorant, and to ſet forth things as they are, that there may be no manner of miſtake; but then it muſt be wiſely handled, and the help of Gods holy Spirit muſt be implored, verſe 4. that it may be a Word of reconciliation, a favour of life unto life, 2 Cor. 2.16. and 5.19. and whatſoever elſe is ſaid in commendation of it, Pſal. 19.7,8,9,10. Mercer interpreting this verſe and the two following, Hæc de Deo accipio, ſaith he: Theſe things I underſtand concerning God, and it is as if Job had ſaid to Bildad, O how bravely helpeſt thou him that is weak, and pleadeſt for him that is forlorn, as if God wanted thy patronage and defence! No queſtion but thou art a man fit to adviſe him, and to ſet him in a courſe that he cannot otherwiſe hit on: This is a good ſenſe alſo. But what meant Brentius to bring in Job blaſpheming here, as thus, Quem juvas? impotentem? ſalvas brachium invalidi? Cui conſulis? inſipienti? &c. Whom helpeſt thou, O God? the impotent? ſaveſt thou the arm of the ſtrengthleſſe? Whom counſelleſt thou? the ignorant? &c. q. d. Surely thou ſhouldſt do ſo by promiſe, and it would well become thee to do ſo by me: But (alaſſe) thou doſt nothing leſs; and hence it is, that I ſtill ſtick in the bryers, &c. Upon this

gloſs gloſs wee may write as the Canoniſts do ſometimes, Falſa, or, Hic non credo.

Verſe 3 How haſt thou counſelled him that hath no wiſdom?] q. d. Thou lookeſt upon me as a fool and an Atheiſt; but this thou doſt with far greater folly: for I am not the man thou takeſt me for, but can ſay as much for God as thy ſelf, and more too: and if I were ſuch as thou wouldſt make of me, I might ſo continue for any help I ſhould have by thy counſel. The like hereunto we may ſay to the Papiſts and other Seducers, who pretend to tender our good, to counſel us for the beſt, and to wiſh our ſalvation.

And how haſt thou plentifully declared the thing as it is?] Heb. the Eſſence, or the Reaſon, or the naked truth: q.d. What ado haſt thou kept to tell me, no more then I knew before? wherein thou haſt fairly loſt thy labour, and miſſed of thy deſign, if ever thou intendeſt to counſel and comfort me: Very wiſely haſt thou done it, I muſt needs ſay for thee.

Verſe 4. To whom haſt thou uttered words?] And as thou thinkeſt, words weighty, and worthy of all acceptation, when in truth there is no ſuch matter: Bubbles of words they are, and big ſwolne fancies, ſed cui bono? What tack is there in them? and to what good purpoſe are they? Melanchon makes mention of a certain good man, who reading Ariſtotles Diſcourſe concerning the Rainbow, conceited thereupon many ſtrange ſpeculations, and wrote to a friend that he had far outdone Ariſtotle in that matter. But coming afterwards to the Univerſity, and diſputing there upon that Subject, he was found to be utterly out in thoſe fancies of his, which indeed were no better then a ſublime dotage.

Manl. loc. com. 536.

And whoſe ſpirit came from thee?] Or, Came out of thee? Was it by Gods Spirit that thou ſpakeſt, or thine owne rather? For there is a ſpirit in man, but the Inſpiration of the Almighty giveth them underſtanding, Job 32.8. Job would not have Bildad think and term his diſcourſes to be divine Inſpirations, or ſuch admirable pieces, rare ſayings, being but vulgar and ordinary buſineſſes. Muncer the arch Anabaptiſt wrote a Book againſt Luther, wherein he boaſteth much of the Spirit, and of Prophetical Light, accuſing Luther for unſpiritual, and one that ſavoured nothing but carnal things. The Antinomians uſe to call upon their hearers to mark; it may be they ſhall hear that which they have not heard before, whenas the thing they deliver after ſo promiſing a preface, is either falſe, or what is taught ordinarily by others. Some read the words thus, Whoſe Spirit admired thee? for the ſpirit goeth as it were out of it ſelf after thoſe things it admireth. The Hebrewes expound it thus, Whoſe Spirit haſt thou quickned, or confirmed by theſe thy words? Who is the wiſer or the better for them? Quam animam per hæc feciſti? What ſoul haſt thou gained to God by thy Doctrine? Confer *Gen.*12.5. the ſouls which they had made, that is, brought to the true fear and ſervice of God.

Scult. Ann. pag. 238

Verſe 5 Dead things are formed from under the waters] Here Jobs tongue, like a ſilver bell, begins to ſound out the great things of God far better then Bildad had done, beginning at the bottom, and declaring that nothing is bred or brought forth, whether animate or inanimate, fiſh or other things in all the vaſt and deep Ocean, but it is by his decree and power. The Septuagint or Vulgar, for dead and lifeleſs things, render Giants, and underſtand thereby Whales, thoſe huge Sea Monſters formed under the waters.

Abbots.

And the Inhabitants thereof] That is, ſaith One, other fiſhes in general, which are in the Seas where thoſe Whales are: For there is that Leviathan, and there are creeping things (that is, ſmaller fiſhes) innumerable. And in particular certaine little fiſhes that are noted alwayes to ſwimme with the Whales, as Guides of their way, that they may not unawares coming into muddy places, be miered there. Ariſtotle calleth them Muſcles; Pliny, Muſticets.

Verſe 6. Hell and deſtruction are before him] Here beginneth a Magnifical and ſtately deſcription of the Majeſty of God; and 1. from his Omniſcience; 2. From his Omnipotence. For the firſt, Hell and deſtruction are before him: Not the grave only, but the neathermoſt hell, that moſt abſtruſe part of the Univerſe, and moſt remote from heaven, Gods Court. Of hel we know nothing ſave only what the Scripture ſaith of it in general, that there is an hell, and that the pains of it are endleſſe, eaſe-leſſe, and remedileſſe, &c. but God only knoweth who are in hell, and who is yet to be hereafter hurled into it. It is the Saints happineſſe that to them there is no ſuch condemnation. *Rom.*8.1. that over them this ſecond death hath no power, Rev. 20.6. That if hell had already ſwallowed them up (as they ſometimes when deſerted feel themſelves to be in the very ſuburbs of it) it could no better hold them, then the whales ſtomack could do Jonas. Luke 22.31. Satan hath deſired to have them, ſcil. to hell, but that he ſhall never have; for they are the Redeemed of the Lord, ſaved from the wrath to come, and may triumphingly ſing, Death, where is thy ſting? Hell, where's thy victory? &c.

leſſe,

And deſtruction hath no covering] that is, Hell the place of deſtruction, the Palace of King Abaddon, (ſo the Divel is called, *Rev.*9.11) and ſo hell is called in this Text, becauſe thereinto are thruſt all that are deſtined to deſtruction, all the brats of fathomleſſe perdition, ſuch as was Judas the Traytor, who went to his place, and all wicked ones, who ſhall ſurely be turned into hell; with all thoſe that forget God, Pſal.9 17. This place is not covered, ſaith Ferus here, but open to God, for whomſoever he will caſt thereinto.

Verſe 7. He ſtretcheth out the North over the empty place] Heb. Over Tohu. Ariſtotle ſaith, that beyond the moveable heavens, there is neither body, nor time, nor place, nor vacuum. But on this ſide of the heaven there are bodies, time, place, and as it may ſeem to ſome, an empty place: for ſo the Air is here called, over which, and not over any ſolid matter, for a foundation, God hath ſpread and ſtretched forth the heavens which are here called the North, becauſe they are moved about the North-Pole, and beſides the North is held the upper part of the world, according to that of Virgil, De cœlo text. 99

Mundus ut ad Scythiam Riphæaſque arduus arces
Conſurgit; premitur Libya devexus ad auſtros.

Hence it is here put for the whole heaven, which held up by the Word of Gods power, without any other props, leaneth upon the liquid Aire, the Aire upon the earth, and the earth upon nothing.

And hangeth the earth upon nothing.]

Terra pila ſimilis, nullo fulcimine nixa, Aere ſublato tam grave pendet onus. Ovid.6. Faſtor.

The earth hangs in the midſt of heaven, like Architas or Archimedes his Pigeon, equally poiſed with his own weight. Of this great wonder, the Philoſophers after much ſtudy, can give no good reaſon, becauſe ignorant of this, that God hath appointed it ſo to be, even from the firſt Creation, *Pſal.*104.5. *Heb.*1.2. The Poets fable, that Atlas beareth up heaven with his ſhoulders: but we confeſſe the true Atlas, viz. the Lord our God, who by his Word alone beareth up heaven and earth: And it is here fitly alledged as an Argument of his Almightineſſe. The greatneſs of this work of God, appeareth hereby, ſaith Merlin, that men cannot ſpread aloft the thinneſt curtaine, abſque fulcro, without ſome ſolid thing to uphold it. This is the very finger of God Ariſtotle himſelf admireth it. *De Cal.l.*2.*c.*13

Verſe 8. He bindeth up the waters in his thick clouds] Heb. Clouds, which yet have their name from thickneſſe, becauſe they ariſe from Aire condenſed. In theſe God bottleth up the rain, and there keepeth it in by main ſtrength (as the word ſignifieth) though thoſe veſſels are as thin, and thinner then the liquor that is contained in them. This duly weighed, were enough to convince an Atheiſt, eſpecially if he conſider how

The cloud is not rent under them] And ſo cauſeth a cataclyſme to drown the earth; as ſometimes at ſea eſpecially, great hurt is done this way among ſhips, by a ſpout, as Mariners call it, the Greeks ἐυδύλα, and the Dutch Een wolckenbruch, or Heavenbreach, viz. when clouds cleave aſunder, and diſcharge themſelves all at once, for a great miſchief to mankind. Now that God thus binds up theſe heavy vapours, and keeps them in the clouds as a ſtrong man in a Cobweb, till brought by the winds whitherſoever he pleaſeth to appoint them, they drop upon the earth by little and little, to make it fruitful; this is a wonderful work of God, and ſhould bring us to the knowledge of his Power, Wiſdom and Goodneſſe, Rom. 1.19,20. ſee Job 38. 37. Jer. 5.22.

Verſe 9 He holdeth back the face of his Throne] i.e. Of heaven, Iſai. 66.1. which he eſtſoons overcloudeth and muffleth up or maſketh, with a vail: myſtically, by the Face of his Throne, we may underſtand the knowledg of his glory; for this is held from us ſo in this world, that we cannot perfectly know him as he is, but muſt content our ſelves with a learned ignorance, 1 Joh. 3.3. Here darkneſs is, and will be under his feet, Pſal. 18.9.

And ſpreadeth his cloud upon it] It is fitly called, his cloud, becauſe 1. It is his handy-work, Pſal. 18.11. Gen. 9.14. Job 28.26,27. and 37.15,16. and 38.9. Pſa. 104.5. His Sun draweth up thoſe vapours, which being thickned in the middle Region of the aire, by the cold encompaſſing and driving them together, become a cloud. 2 He uſed it of old as a ſign of his glorious Power, and gracious preſence with his people, Exod. 13.21. and 16.10. 2 Chron. 5.13,14. And as a figure of Chriſts guiding and protecting his Church through the wilderneſſe of this world, Iſai. 4.5,6. 3. He ſtill rideth in ſtate upon the clouds, Iſai. 19.1. Chriſt was by a cloud coached up to heaven, Act. 1.9. and ſhall come in like manner, Apoc. 1.7. and 10.1. We alſo ſhall then be caught up in the clouds to meet the Lord in the Aire, and ſo ſhall we ever be with the Lord, 1 Theſſal. 4. 17. —O mora! Chriſte veni.

Trem. Verſe 10. He hath compaſſed the waters with bounds] Decreto circinavit ſuperficiem aquarum: He hath as it were with a pair of Compaſſes drawne a circle about the ſea, that it may not paſſe to drown the earth. Confer chap. 38.8,10,11. Pſal. 33.7. and 89.10. and 104.9. Prov. 8.29. So he drew a circle round about the earth, Prov. 8.27. doing all with infinite Wiſdome, Pondere, menſura, numero, &c. He founded the earth not upon ſolid Rocks, but fluid waters. And that it floteth not upon them, nor is ſhaken with them (as oft as there is a tempeſt in the Ocean that begirteth it) neither yet is overflowed by them, this is the wonderful work of God. Ariſtotle in his Book De Mirabilibus, admireth it, and acknowledgeth Gods providence, which elſewhere he denyeth. Terminum aquis preſcripſit, ſaith Job here. And this either he had from Moſes, Gen. 1.10. or, if he lived before Moſes, as it is moſt likely he did; he had it, as he had many other things, by tradition from the Fathers. Saylers tell us, that as they draw nigh to the ſhore, when they enter into a haven, they run as it were down hill. And yet men are ſaid to go down (not up) to the ſea in ſhips, Pſal. 107.23. See a reaſon hereof in this Text, and Pſal. 104.96. An vero non ſtupendum eſt? ſaith Lavater. But is it not a wonderful thing, that ſo fierce an Element, ſo huge a maſſe of waters, toſſed by the winds, ſhould be bounded and bridled by ſands, confined and kept within their preſcribed place and ſhore? Eſpecially if the water be (as ſome affirm) ten times bigger then the earth, the air then the water, the fire then the air.

Until the day and night come to an end] Heb. Until the conſummation of light with darkneſſe; that is, till time ſhall be no more, till the end of the world, when all things ſhal be let looſe to devaſtation, and the ſea ſhall overflow the Land again, as that then it ſhall, ſome would gather from this Text.

Verſe 11. The Pillars of heaven tremble] i.e. the Angels, ſay ſome, who tremble out of conſcience of their own comparative imperfections. The beſt of Saints on earth, ſay others (according to Gal. 2.9. Rev. 3.12. Prov. 9.1,2.) who tremble at Gods Word, Iſai. 66.2. and have many concuſſions by afflictions. But better underſtand the Firmament of heaven, Hag. 2.6,7. Matth. 24.29. The Powers of heaven ſhall be ſhaken, they ſhall quake with the loud check of his Thunder claps. Or the high and mighty mountaines whereon the heavens ſeeme to reſt, as on ſo many pillars, ſhaken by Earth-quakes, and ſometimes with great aſtoniſhment removed out of their places.

And are aſtoniſhed at his reproof] As all the beaſts of the field are at the roaring of the Lion; Ut quis à gravi & magna poteſtate vire, objurgatus, tremit & exhorreſcit ſolicitus eſt, as a ſlave chidden by a Prince trembleth, and is aghaſt. Lavat.

Verſe 12. He divideth the ſea with his power] i.e. With his ſtrong winds cauſing tempeſts; ſee the like Iſai. 51.15. ſo that it lyeth as it were in ridges, the top of one wave wave far from another, Jer. 31.35. That was a strange thing that is reported to have fallen out at London the last week. On Munday Aug. 14. 1654. by reason of the great winds the Tide was so low in the Thames, that boyes waded over it from the one side to the other, the old Watermen affirming, they never saw it so before.

Sever. Proceed. of State affairs, p. 4033.

And by his understanding he smiteth through the proud] Heb. Pride, or Rahab, which is oft put for Egypt; as Psal. 87.4. and 89.10. Isai. 51.9. whence some would have Pharaoh meant: others the Divel: others, the Whale dashing against a Rock, or driven to shore where he is taken: others, the proud waves of the sea, as chap. 38.11. disabled by God to stir more; as a man mortally wounded, is to fight longer. An instance hereof we have in the history of Jonas, and another in the Gospel, Mat. 8. and 14. As God is powerful enough to raise stormes, so he is wise enough to lay them again, Psal. 107.25,29.

He hath the sea in as great awe as a Giant hath a Pigmee.

Verse 13. By his Spirit he hath garnished the heavens] Spiritus ejus cœli sunt ipsa pulchritudo. By his Spirit the heavens are beauty it self, so Vatablus rendreth it. That Three is One, and One in Three, wrought in the Creation; see Psal. 33.6. By the Word of Jehovah were the heavens made, and all the hoste of them by the breath of his mouth: where Ruach, his Word and his Spirit, are noted to be the Maker of the world; so Gen. 1. The Heathens had some blind notions hereof, as appeareth by Plutark, who reporteth that in Thebe a Town of Egypt they worshipped a God whom they acknowledged to be immortal: but how painted they him? In the likenesse of a man blowing an egg out of his mouth; to signifie that he made the round world by the Spirit of his mouth. Upon the heavens especially, God hath bestowed a great deal of skill and workmanship, as appeareth, Heb. 11.10. and Psal. 8.3. where heaven is called, The work of Gods fingers; a curious divine work: a Metaphor from them that make Tapestry. Garnished it is with Stars, as a Palace is with stately Pictures, besides the inward beauty which is unconceivable. There is something of a Saphir in the Hebrew word here rendred Garnished, and Revel. 21. search is made through all the bowels of the earth to find out all the precious Treasures that could be had, Gold, Pearles, and precious Stones of all sorts, and what can these serve to? only to shadow out the glory of the walls of the new Jerusalem, and the gates and to pave the streets of the City? See also Isai. 54.11,12.

Adoravit, decoravit, pulchre fecit. Hinc nbo.

Plut. de Isid. & Osirid. Var. de re rust. lib. 2. c. 1.

His hand hath formed the crooked Serpent] Enixa est, peperit, hath brought forth as by birth, hath formed the most deformed and dreadful Creature in the earth. Or those flaming Dragons flying in the Aire (Meteors I mean.) Or the Constellation in heaven called the Dragon, betwixt the two Beares, and not far from the North-Pole (Draco sane maximum & maxime conspicuum in cœlo sidus, &c.) Or lastly, those sea-Dragons, the Whales, which Mercer thinketh most likely to be here meant: and compareth Isai. 27.1. Psal. 104.26. Job 40.20. Neither need we wonder, saith he, that the beginning of the verse is of heaven, and the end of the sea: for Job would shew and set forth two admirable works of God, in two extremes of the world, viz. in heaven above, and in the waters under the earth. His power and Wisdome shineth every where in the Creatures, neither can a man easily look besides a miracle. Job therefore insisteth not long upon particulars, but as one lost in the Labyrinth of Admiration at so great things, he thus shuts up

Verse 14. Lo, these are parts of his ways] Or rather, Particles of his Works: Extrema sunt viarum ejus, so the Tigurines translate it: these are the outmost limbs or utmost parts of them, the Ectypa, as Saint Paul calleth it, that which may be known of God, ver. 19. Manifested, Rom. 1.19,20. as the Sun may be seen in the water after a sort: but in vera, as the Schooles speak, in the Circle where it runs, we are not able to behold him: so something of God may be seen in his Works in his Word, his work parts we may see and live, as Moses, Exod. 33. His train in the Temple, Isaiah 6.6.

Quam exiguam istam portionem audivimus de illo?] Heb. What a Whisper, or Word of a thing is heard of him? As when one heareth the latter end only of a sentence, that which the echo resoundeth, and no more; it is but a whisper, that we can know, we are as narrow mouthed vessels: Ye are not able to receive (saith Christ to his Apostles, John 16.12. and to the people he spake by to you, saith he) more.

Parvam stillam audivimus de illo. Vulg. Exiguum sonum audivimus de illo. Sept. Paucum de pauca stillam & tenuem admodum audivimus. Merc.

as they were able to hear, Mark 4. 33. and not as he was able to have ſpoken. In Epiſt. ad Ambroſ. Loquimur de Deo non quantum debemus, ſed quantum poſſumus, ſaith Gratian the Emperor, We ſpeak of God, not ſo much as we ſhould, but ſo much as we can. We prophecy but in part, and what wonder, ſith we know but in part, 1 Cor. 13. In humane things, the wiſeſt men have profeſſed, that the greateſt part of what they knew, was the leaſt of that they knew not: how much more in things divine? By no expreſſions do we ſo fully ſet forth God, ſaith Scaliger, as by thoſe which ſet forth our ignorance. Our faireſt Eloquence concerning God, is our ſilence, ſaith learned Hooker.

But the thunder of his power, who can underſtand?] Heb. Of his powers; that is, his powerful thunder: which whilſt Alladius King of the Latines would by certain Engines (that he had made him) imitate, he juſtly periſhed by a Thunderbolt from heaven; his houſe alſo, wherein he had attempted ſo to do, was conſumed with fire from heaven, as Dionyſ. Halicarn. and Oroſius teſtifie. Some by thunder here, underſtand Gods aſtoniſhing preſence and utterance of himſelf. Others, his force and grandeur, his notable and thundering exploits, which ſhine all the world over, and to which if all that have been inſtanced ſhall be compared, they will appear to be but as a few heat drops to a great ſhowre of raine. He that ſhall go about to declare them, ſhall be forced to ſay with the Poet,

Lucret. Claudicat ingenium, delirat linguaque, mensque.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſe 1. Moreover Job continued his Parable, and ſaid.

IT was Zophars turn, and Job waited a while, as it was fit, to ſee whether he, or any other of them would take up the bucklers again againſt him, which when they did not, (as hearing his high expreſſions concerning Gods Power and Providence, and haply having now a better opinion of him then before) he aſſwageth his grief by defending his innocency, and maintaining his opinion, in the five following Chapters. Here he is ſaid, after ſome reſpit, to reaſſume his Parable, which hath its name in Hebrew from Lording it, and bearing ſway, Becauſe allegories and figurative ſpeeches bear away the beſt, as they ſay, from plainer Diſcourſes, are more gladly heard, more read, ſooner underſtood, and better remembered. The word rendred continued, is in the Original, added to his ſpeech; importing either, that he ſpake now with a courage, as we ſay, and with a greater Emphaſis, as having ſilenced his adverſaries; or that he uttered himſelf in an higher ſtile, and his matter were Maſter-pieces, Maximi momenti, Speeches of ſpecial precellency and predominancy, ſuch as might well challenge a throne in the minds of all men.

משל Sermo figuratus principatum tenet, ac vulut dominatur.

Verſe 2. As God liveth, who hath taken away my judgement] Job well knew the Nature and end of an Oath, which is to put an end to all ſtrife and controverſie among men, Heb. 6. 16. For more Authority ſake therefore to his enſuing Diſcourſe, as taking God to witneſſe in a matter of ſo great moment, and that his friends might the better believe him, he doth well not to begin his ſpeech with a private oath, (for a publick is that which is taken before a Magiſtrate, who upon juſt cauſe may exact it) which, do it ſparingly and warily uſed, is not unlawful, as appeareth by the example of Jacob and Laban, Boaz and Ruth, Jonathan and David, Saul, to help the truth, in neceſſity, and when the other party will not otherwiſe be ſatisfied. But what meaneth Job to ſay, that the God, whom he ſo ſolemnly taketh to witneſſe, had taken away his judgement? Can the righteous Judge do otherwiſe then right? Or doth not the ſinner know that he is puniſhed leſſe then his iniquities deſerved? Job was at preſent under a ſore temptation, and hard preſſed, preſſed out of meaſure above ſtrength, he ſpake unadviſedly with his lips, and is afterwards barely told of it by Elihu, chap. 34.5 The beſt faith, if long tryed, may flag and hang the wing. Moſes at Meribah, David at Gath, Elias under the Juniper, ſufficiently ſhew, that every new man is two men: that the fleſh eſtſoones luſteth againſt the ſpirit, and that the beſt may have their outburſts; yet ſo, as that the ſeed of grace ſtill abideth in them, and ſome way ſhewes it ſelf; Job here for inſtance. He complaineth of Gods ſeverity, but ſtormeth not againſt him. He bluſtreth, but he blaſphemeth not. He holdeth himſelf hardly dealt with by God; and yet whilſt he ſo ſolemnly ſweareth by him, he thereby acknowledgeth him a witneſſe of his conſcience, a Patron of Truth, a Lover of Right, an Avenger of Perjury, and laſtly, the Authour and Arbiter of his life, which he reſolveth rather to let go then his Innocency: He can do nothing againſt the truth, but for the truth, 2 Cor. 13.8.

And the Almighty, who hath vexed my ſoul] Heb. Hath imbitered. Job ſhould have remembred, that bitter potions bring ſweet health, and that τὸ πικρὸν μικρὸν, the bitterneſſe would ſoon be paſt: but he remembred only (at preſent) the affliction and the miſery, the wormwood and the gall, Lam. 3.19. Now no affliction (but eſpecially ſoul-affliction) for the preſent ſeemeth joyous, but grievous: nevertheleſs afterward it yeeldeth the peaceable fruit of righteouſneſſe unto them which are exerciſed thereby, Heb. 12.11. But patient Job wanted patience to wait for that. Adeo nihil eſt in nobis magni, quod non queat minui; ſuch failings are found in the very beſt.

Verſe 3 All the while my breath is in me] Periphraſis vitæ, —Dum ſpiritus hos regat artus; Whiles I have an hour to breath, I will hold to this Oath of mine: neither may you ever hope to diſpute me out of mine integrity. Life is deſcribed by breath, which when it faileth, the man dyeth, 1 Kings 17.17. Pſal. 146.4. Iſai. 2.22. Ceaſe ye from man whoſe breath is in his noſtrils, every moment ready to puff out. What is man (ſaith Nazianzen) but ſoul and ſoil, breath and body, a puff of wind the one, a pile of duſt the other; no ſolidity in either? Jovinian the Emperour, was choaked with the ſmoak of charcoal. Pope Adrian with a flye, getting into his throat as he gaped. The Cardinal of Lorrain was lighted to his Lodging, and to his long home both at once by a poiſoned Torch. Defer not (ſaith One) ſith at the next puffe of breath thou maiſt blow away thy life. Eutrop. Oroſ.

And the ſpirit of God is in my noſtrils] He ſeems to allude to Gen. 2.7. or ſome tradition of the Fathers to like purpoſe. Acts 17.25. God giveth to all life and breath, and all things. And again, verſe 28. In him we live, and move and have our being, Wherefore let every thing that hath breath praiſe the Lord, Pſal. 150. ult. Yea, let every breath (as ſome read it) praiſe the Lord. Let it be as the ſmoak of the Tabernacle, as Pillars of Incenſe aſcending up to heaven. Tam Dei meminiſſe opus eſt, quam reſpirare. Chryſoſt.

Verſe 4 My lips ſhall not ſpeak wickedneſs] Which I ſhould do, ſhould I, contrary to that which the Spirit of God witneſſeth to my conſcience, through a fained humility confeſſe, that I have been wicked. Let Gods dejected ſervant take heed, leſt by the temptation of Satan, and the miſgivings of their own evil hearts of unbelief, they be drawn to bely the work of Gods ſpirit in them, and to hold themſelves utterly void of grace, becauſe not indued with ſuch and ſuch meaſures of grace. Learn to diſtinguiſh between imbecility and nullity: ſhew your ſelves faithful in weakneſſe, though but weak in faith. There is an allowance to gold, with which it may paſſe: neither is it to be caſt aſide, becauſe it wanteth ſome graines, and hath a crack. Nec vitium vejicimus ei ſi facem habeat, ſaith Spinam. God ſeeth nothing amiſſe in that man whoſe heart is upright. 2 Chron. 15.17. He layes the finger of mercy on the ſcars of his peoples ſins, as that Limner in the Story. He will not cruſh, but cheriſh that worm Jacob. Spin. de inſtitut. Chriſt.

Nor my tongue utter deceit] No, for that were to ſpeak wickedneſſe, yea, to ſpeak your ſelf wicked. For the remnant of Iſrael, ſhall not (by betraying the truth) do iniquity, nor ſpeak lies: neither ſhall a deceitful tongue be found in their mouth, Zeph. 3.13. For he ſaid, Surely they are my people, children that will not lye ſo he was their Saviour, Iſai. 63.8.

Verse 5 God forbid, that I should justifie you.] scil. By saying as you say; viz. that I am an hypocrite, and secretly guilty of some foule practises, for which I thus grievously suffer. I know nothing of this Nature by my self. God forbid, Absit, res profana sit mihi. The Hebrew word signifies, a profanation, or profane thing. It was the same they used, when they rent their cloathes at blasphemy.

Till I die, I will not remove my integrity.] My perfection some render it; and so God accounteth it, when the bent, frame and tendencies of the heart are for him, though the mans wants be many and great. This Job knew, and would hold to. Let not the Divel baffle us out of our integrity.

Mordicùs tenebo Verse 6. My righteousnesse I hold fast.] As with tooth and nail, yea, though it be to the losse of my teeth, as it befel that valiant Sir Thomas Challoner, who, Camb. Eliz. 66 served, when he was young, under Charles 5, in the Expedition of Algier, where being shipwrack't, after he had swum till his strength and his armes failed him, at the length catching hold of a Cable with his teeth, he escaped, not without the losse of some of his teeth.

And will not let it go.] scil. Upon your perswasions or suspitions, so long as the bird in my bosom continueth singing.

My heart shall not reproach me so long as I live.] His heart must needs reproach him who habitually doth evil, what good shew soever he doth make before men; and though he hide his wickednesse with no lesse subtle sleights, then once Rachel did the Idols, Rahab the Spies. Conscience is Gods Spye, and mans Overseer. Ita Author, Judex, Vindex: neither is a body so torn with stripes, as a mind with remembrance of evil actions. This Job knew, and would therefore keep his conscience cleare. This was also Saint Pauls greatest, both care, Acts 24.16. and comfort, 2 Cor. 1.12.

Verse 7 Let mine enemy be as the wicked.] q. d. I need with my greatest enemy no greater hurt, then to be as the wicked, for then he is sure to be wretched. So far am I from saying, that God favoureth the wicked, or that he alwayes suffereth them to escape unpunished.

And he that riseth up against me, as the unrighteous.] Or, froward and perverse. This is the same again in other words: and it is well noted to be a popular manner of speaking, wherein when men expresse an abomination of a thing, they wish it to their enemies; taking it for granted, that the power of malice is so great, that no man can expresse it in the wish of any particular evil. See the like phrase, 2 Sam. 3 32 1 Sam. 25.26. Dan. 4.19.

Verse 8. For what is the hope of the hypocrite, &c.] Here Job proveth himself to be no hypocrite, by his and their different character and carriage, especially under affliction. Though God kill Job, yet he will trust in him; but what is the hope of the hypocrite, &c? He that maketh a bridge of his own shadow, must needs fall into the brook. The common hope thinks it takes hold of God; but it is but as a child that catcheth at the shadow on the wall, which he thinks he holdeth fast in his hand, but soon finds it otherwise: so shall the hypocrite at death, his hope shall be then as the yeelding up of the Ghost, and that is but cold comfort. Whiles he was in health, and had all well about him, he nourished strong hopes of Gods favour, and the rather because he gained and gathered wealth apace. So bladder-like is the soul that is filled with earthly vanities, though but wind, it growes great, and swells in high conceitednesse: but if pickt with the least pin of piercing grief, (how much more when struck with death's dart) it shriveleth to nothing, and is ready to say as one rich wretch did on his death-bed, Spes & fortuna valete; Life and hope adieu to you both at once.

Though he hath gained.] Or, When he hath brewed sorrow; raking together Res, vires, quicquid undequaque potest. See this notably exemplified in that rich fool, Luke 12. whose life and hopes ended together.

Or when God taketh away his soul?] Extrahet, Shall pull it out by violence, as a sword out of its sheath, when God shall make a breach upon their Citadel: come upon them by forcible entry, turn them out of their cottages of clay by vi & violentia, cut them in twain, as he did that evil servant, Matth. 24. tear their bodies and souls asunder, as a man teareth the bark from the tree, or the shell from the fish, leaving it naked. Where then shall be the high hopes of the Hypocrite? And O what a dreadful shreek giveth his guilty soul then, to see it selfe lanching into an infinite Ocean of scalding lead, and to consider that it must swim naked in it for ever?

it

Verse 9. Will God hear his cry] Here's another distinctive Note betweene a hypocrite and an honest man. As many are said in Daniel to cleave to the better side by flattery, so many false signes will come in, and flatter a man (when he is in health and prosperity) and give their testimony, speak the same thing that true evidences do, but this will not alwayes hold.

When trouble cometh upon him?] Then the hypocrite will cry, and make pitiful moans, as a prisoner at the Bar begs for his life. Then Joab and Adonijah will run to the hornes of the Altar, who till then little cared to come there. But with as ill successe they cry to God as Saul did, 1 Sam. 28. 15. and as other of Davids enemies did, Psal. 18. 41. For either God answereth them not at all, Ezek. 21. 2, 3. Or selfe he answereth them according to the Idols of their hearts, Ezek. 14. gives them bitter answers, as Judges 10. 13, 14. Or if better, it is for the good of others, and for a further mischief to themselves, that he may snatch away his owne and be gone, Hos. 2. 9. and that he may consume them after he hath done them good, Jos. 24. 20. their preservation proveth but a reservation.

Verse 10. Will he delight himself in the Almighty?] viz. When trouble cometh upon him, as in the former verse. No, this is Christianorum propria virtus, a practise that none can skill of but Gods people, saith Hierome, to rejoyce in tribulation, and then to continue instant in prayer (Rom. 12. 12) for deliverance, with some confidence grounded upon former experience. Crux enim iis innotescit, saith Bernard. Together with the Crosse, they have an unction from the Father: annointed they are with that Oyle of gladnesse, the Spirit of glory and of God, which refresheth even them; and refresheth them amidst all their sorrowes and sufferings: and hence their delight in the Almighty, yea though he frown and lay upon them, as he did upon Job, with his own bare hand. Not so the hypocrite; for why? he hateth God in his heart, as doth every evil doer, John 3. 20. Est enim talium pœna Deus, ipse quidem ut est: at quid in libris eum invisum? God is light, and therefore hated as a punishment to such intricate night-birds. He is holinesse, but the hypocrite filthinesse, as his name also importeth: How then can he delight himself in the Almighty? What complacency can there be, where is such an utter contrariety? They that love the Lord, hate evil, Psal. 97. 10. but so doth not any hypocrite: leaveit he may, but not loath it. Part with it he may (as Jacob did with Benjamin, lest otherwise he should starve, or as Phalaiel with Michal, lest he should lose his head) but his heart is glued to it still, he hath a mouths mind to be doing, if he durst. Finally, He is without faith, and therefore without joy and peace of conscience. And so for his Spider-web of hope, a little wind blowes it down. The world hath his heart, and so the love of the Father cannot be in him, 1 John 2. 15. He leaneth upon the Lord, and saith, Is not the Lord amongst us, Mic. 3. 11.? yet is he rooted in the delights of life: Like as the Apricock tree leaneth against the wall, but is fast rooted in the earth.

Bernard. 1 Pet. 2. 14

Will he always call upon God?] Heb. In every time? No, not scarce at any time. Indeed as beggars have learned to cry, so have some hypocrites to pray. Isai. 26. 16. They have powred forth a prayer, when thy chastening was upon them. When he slew them, then they sought him, and they returned and enquired after God, Psal. 78. 34. But this was only a prayer of the flesh for ease, and not of the Spirit for grace. They spoke God fair (as the Divel did Christ) only to be rid of him. Thus Pharaoh when on the rack, roared out a confession, and called for a Prayer. Paul in danger of death hangs on the hornes of the Altar. The Captivated Jews fasted and prayed for seventy years, to get off their chaines, rather then their sins, Zech. 7. 5. which Daniel therefore reckoned lost labour, chap. 9. 13. Yea many wicked men, though in prosperity they have some short-winded wishes, (such as was that of Balaam, Numb. 23. 10. wherewith compare that of David, Psal. 26. 9. and see a difference) or perhaps are able by strength of wit and memory to pray handsomely: yet in adversity they set their mouths against heaven, howle like Wolves, and howle upward, they curse their King and their God, and look upward, saith Isaiah, chap. 8. 21.

8.21. they murmure and mutiny, as the Israelites in the wilderness, they banne and blaspheme, as did that Israelitish womans son, Lev. 14.11. and Micahs mother, Judg. 17.2. A Parrot may be taught to talk like a man (Histories tell us of one at Rome that could repeat the whole Creed) but let him be but beaten, and he returnes to his own natural harsh voice. So an hypocrite, while all goes well with him, may seem very devout at his Orisons, but lay thy hand upon him (saith Satan to God concerning Job, presuming thereby to prove him an hypocrite) and he will curse thee to thy face, chap. 2.5. But say he be somewhat better conditioned (as they call it) and for a while pray to God for ease and help; yet he will not pray alwayes, he will not persevere in prayer, follow on to pray, wait upon God for an answer, and be content to want it, if God see good to deny it. He cannot draw nigh to God with a true heart (such a heart as is well satisfied, if God may be glorified, though himself be not gratified) in full assurance of faith, Heb. 10.22. Which is, saith Brentius, Orationis medulla, the marrow of prayer. Hence Saint James calleth it, the prayer of faith, chap. 5.15. Afflictions cause a Saint to seek out Gods Promise, the Promise to seek Faith, Faith to seek Prayer, and Prayer to find God, to find him at length, for he is a God that hideth himself, Isai. 45.15 But what saith faith? I will wait upon the Lord that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him, Isai. 8.17. See this exemplified in the woman of Canaan, who fetcht Christ out of his retiring room by the force of her faith, Mark 7.24. and prayed on, though denied. She would not be said nay, or sit down either with silence or sad answers, but shewed her self a woman of a well knit resolution, such as could credere invisibilia, sperare dilata, & amare Deum se offendentem contrarium, as Luther speaketh: Believe things invisible, hope for things deferred, and love God when he shewes himself most angry and opposite. Now this the hypocrite (who is an Infidel) cannot skil of. He is short spirited and cannot hold out in prayer, cannot (as our Saviour taught by that Parable, Luke 18.1.) alwayes pray, and not faint, manuum fortes, as sluggards do in work, or Cowards in War. Oratio est res ardua, & magni laboris, saith Luther. Prayer is a hard work, and a man must tug at it and stick to it, as Jacob did, who wrestled and raised dust, as the Hebrew word signifieth: he held fast, and hung on, yea he held with his hands when his thigh was lamed. Let me go (saith God bespeaking his own liberty) No, thou shalt not, saith Jacob, unlesse thou blesse me. Lo, such is the generation of them that seek God in sincerity, of them that seek thy face; this is Jacob, Psal. 24.6. One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that I will seek after, saith David, Psal. 27.4. If his suit had not been honest, he would never have begun it: But being so, he will never give it over till he hath prevailed: he will pray till he faint, and then to it again, Psal. 119.81, 82. Rejoycing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer, Rom. 12.12. So doth not the hypocrite, for want of an inward principle. If God come not at a call, he is out of patience, and ready to say with that profane Prince, 2 Kings 6.33. Behold this evil is of the Lord, and what should I wait for the Lord any longer? Away to the Witch of Endor, to the god of Ekron. Flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta movebo. This Job would not do, and therefore no hypocrite.

Verse 11. I will teach you by the hand of God] That is, by the help of God, cum Deo, or considering the hand of God, what is in the hand of the Lord (so the Septuagint) what things he is wont to do by his power, and what are his usual proceedings, his actual and effectious providence, Act. 4.28.

Deo juvante & subministrante facultates. Vat.

That which is with the Almighty I will not conceal] Neque celabo, ut rei divinæ comparatæ fas est, so the Tigurines translate. Envious Masters use to hide from their Scholers the best and chiefest part of their skil. It is reported of that spotted beast the Lynx, that knowing that his urine will congeal into a precious Stone, and so stand man in stead, of pure envy, when he pisseth, he maketh a hole in the ground to cover it. Cardan speaking of one that had a Receipt that would suddenly and certainly dissolve a Stone in the bladder, and dyed not imparting his skill to any one, I doubt not, saith he, but that man went to hell, quod moriens, ars ejus quam moriturus noverit, because he envied his skil to those that survived him. Job was none such: but what he knew of Gods mind and manner of dealing (which hath no certain Law, nor invariable rule, but dependeth upon his own pleasure) he was ready to impart to his friends, who measured Gods actions by a wrong rule.

Verse

Verse 12. Behold, all ye your selves have seen it] And can say as much to it, as I can in these, sc. that God afflicteth good men as well as bad, &c. Ecce autem cum vos omnes speculationibus (theologicis) operam dedistis, quare tam vanas opiniones habetis? So the Tigurine translation hath it; that is, But behold, whereas all ye have spent your time in (theological) speculations, how is it that ye have taken up such vain opinions? The Hebrew runs thus, Behold, you all have seen, or are seers, (and he that is now called a Prophet, was before-time called a Seer, 1 Sam. 9. 9.) ye are knowing men, and of great experience, why then do ye go against your own knowledge, by speaking vainly and vilely notwithstanding?

Why then are ye thus altogether vain? Heb. And why is this, that ye are vain in vanity? sc. Whilest ye assert that Gods love may be known by prosperity, and his hatred by adversity; and whilest ye conclude me an hypocrite because afflicted? for so they had all done with one consent. Bildad, chap. 8. 13. Eliphaz, chap. 15. 34. and Zophar, chap. 20. 5. When as yet Job had given sufficient proof to the contrary: The matter was clear enough; but they did dark speech, for the honor, obscure it: this was a vanity of vanities; and Job tells them as much.

Verse 13. This is the portion of a wicked man with God] q. d. So ye say, and so I say too: for herein I will not deny to comply, and to chime in with you. Zophar had said the same in effect, and used the self same expressions that Job here doth, chap. 20. 29. See the Notes there. But must Job therefore be an hypocrite, though he continue to hope, and pray, and delight in God amidst all his miseries, vers. 8, 9, 10? Negatur. He had spoken much before of the wicked mans prosperity: now to prevent mistakes, he discourseth largely of his punishment, and how ill he beareth it.

And the heritage of oppressours, &c.] Of fierce and formidable tyrants, that are a terrour to others. These are the rewards they shall receive from the God of Recompenses, the Almighty, who can well enough deal with them, and delights to get him a name in their just destruction.

Verse 14. If his children be multiplied, it is for the sword] As were Ahabs seventy sons for instance, 2 King. 10. 1. whom he had begotten after that God had threatned to root out his posterity. He therefore, as it were to cross the Almighty, gives himself so much the more luxuriously to the work of Generation: but this was Ephraim like) to bring forth Children to the murtherer, Hos. 9. 13. See the fate of Abimelech and his forty brethren, slain at the shearing-house, in the ninth Chapter.

And his offspring] Heb. His issues, or egressions, his shoots or branches, his pledges, so Marcus readeth it.

Shall not be satisfied with bread] i. e. Shall be pined and famished, which their wicked Parents, by heaping and hoarding, sought to prevent, but it could not be: and this shall be a more cruel kinde of death than the former, Lam. 4. 9. Drusus the son of Tiberius Nero was put to this death, so was our Richard the second at Pomfret Castle, Sanders that Tray-town in Ireland, and many others. Tacit.

